THE HINDU CODE

20959
340/86

THE HINDU CODE

BEING

A CODIFIED STATEMENT OF HINDU LAW

WITH A COMMENTARY THEREON

AND

RELEVANT ACTS ANNOTATED

Bharti Bhawan Library
Allahabad.

BY

SIR HARI SINGH GOUR

M.A., D.LITT., D.C.L., LL.D.,

OF THE INNER TEMPLE, BARRISTER-AT-LAW,
AUTHOR OF THE LAW OF TRANSFER IN BRITISH INDIA, AND OF THE PENAL LAW OF BRITISH INDIA.

FOURTH EDITION:

(REVISED AND RE-WRITTEN)

NAGPUR
THE CENTRAL BOOK DEPOT
1938

PRINTED AT THE MADRAS LAW JOURNAL PRESS,
MYLAPORE, MADRAS.

PREFACE.

In preparing the present edition of this work I have taken care to see that every obsolete case and principle is omitted and to enable me to do so without giving the edition the appearance of patch work I had practically to re-write the entire work, condense it in parts, annotate all its sections, add to them wherever necessary, and generally to see that the work was up to date in every detail.

This work was never intended to be a jumble of cases but a synthesis of the current law for which I had to read, digest and analyse several thousands of cases, both reported and unreported, reconcile them where possible, reject them if they appeared to have overlooked some settled principle or were otherwise inconsequential. In doing so I have had to practically re-write the entire work, but I shall not grudge the stupendous labour spent upon it, if I have succeeded in elucidating the law where it was contradictory or obscure and in filling up some of its lacunæ by reason and logical deduction which both Brihaspati and Gautam enjoin as the true mirror of equity.

1st June, 1938.

H.S.G.

Bharti Bhawan Library
Allahabad.

TOPICAL CONTENTS.

	Pages.
List of Abbreviations	xix-xxii
Bibliography	xxiii-xxv
Glossary	xxvii-xxxiii
Table of Cases cited	xxxv-cv
Table of Acts, Regulations and Statutes ...	cvii-cviii
General Introduction	1-46
Chapter.
I.—Operation and Extent of the Hindu Code ...	47-87
II.—Customary Law	88-107
III.—Marriage	108-158
IV.—Affiliation and Legitimacy	159-164
V.—Adoption	165-275
VI.—Minority and Guardianship	276-317
VII.—Law of Maintenance	318-354
VIII.—The Joint Family	355-467
IX.—The Trading Joint Family	468-488
X.—Debts and Alienations	489-506
X-A.—Joint Family Debts and Alienations ...	507-524
XI.—The Father's Debts and Alienations	525-564
XII.—Dayabhag Joint Family	565-570
XII-A.—Family Arrangement	571-584
XIII.—Partition	585-672
XIV.—Re-union	673-679
XV.—Impartible Estates	680-721
XVI.—Trusts, Benami Transactions and Powers ...	722-736
XVII.—Alienations, Grants and Gifts	737-751
XVIII.—Wills	752-772
XIX.—Construction of Gifts and Wills	773-802
XX.—Religious and Charitable Endowments ...	803-884
XXI.—Law of Survivorship	885-895
XXII.—General Principles of Inheritance	896-917
XXIII.—The Mitakshara Inheritance to Males... ...	918-988
XXIV.—The Dayabhag Succession	989-1019
XXV.—Woman's Estate	1020-1084
XXVI.—Reversioners and their rights	1085-1125
XXVII.—Stridhan	1126-1173
XXVIII.—Supplementary Provision	1174-1175
Appendix	1179-1207
General Index	1209-1277

SECTIONAL TABLE.

CHAPTER I.

OPERATION AND EXTENT OF THE HINDU CODE.

SECTION.		PAGE.
1.	Short title: Local extent: Meaning of "Hindu"	47
2.	Lex Loci	68
3.	Persons subject to lex loci: Law applicable to migrants: Law of origin defined	73
4.	Law applicable to converts	79
5.	Effect of apostacy	83
6.	Hindu Law when applicable to non-Hindus	86

CHAPTER II.

CUSTOMARY LAW.

7.	Custom defined	88
8.	Nature of custom	89
9.	Custom cannot override express law	90
10.	Invalid custom	96
11.	Pleading and proof of custom	99
12.	Proof and disproof of custom	102
13.	Usage defined	107

CHAPTER III.

MARRIAGE.

Customary Marriage.

14.	Marriage defined: Brahma: Asur: Betrothal	108
15.	Effect of breach of contract to marry	111
16.	Right to marry: Infant Marriage	113
17.	Polygamy: Polyandry	115
18.	Prescribed ceremonies unnecessary	116
19.	Sub-caste—Intercaste Religious Marriages	123
20.	Remarriage of the wife: Presumption of the death of the husband...	127
21.	Widow Remarriage	129
22.	Marriage expenses	130
23.	No valid marriage within prohibited degree...	131
24.	Invalid marriages	136
25.	Avoidance of marriage	137
26.	No judicial separation or divorce permitted: No dissolution for apostacy, degradation or loss of caste	140
27.	Mutual rights and obligations upon marriage...	144
28.	Proof and presumption of marriage	151

Statutory Civil Marriage.

29.	Statutory civil marriage when valid	155
30.	Saving of other marriages	156

CHAPTER IV.

AFFILIATION AND LEGITIMACY.

31.	Children defined	160
32.	Presumption of legitimacy	161
33.	Children's right of maintenance	163

CHAPTER V.

ADOPTION.

SECTION.		PAGE.
34.	Adoption defined	165
35.	Who may adopt	166
36.	Adoption by the wife	175
37.	Adoption by delegated authority	176
38.	Adoption by the widow	178
39.	Dravid Widow's adoption	185
40.	Maharastra Widow's adoption	191
41.	Husband's mandate...	192
42.	Form of authority	193
43.	Construction and limits of authority	196
44.	Successive adoptions	202
45.	Adoption by co-widows	203
46.	Adoption by fraud, etc.	204
47.	Widow's estoppel	207
48.	Legal limitation on the widow's adoption	207
49.	Which estate may be divested by adoption	212
50.	Power to give in adoption	212
51.	Qualification for adoption	215
52.	Ceremony of adoption	225
53.	Motive immaterial	229
54.	Factum Valet	229
55.	Conditional adoption	231
56.	Dvamushyayan adoption	233
57.	Rights of Dvamushyayan	235
58.	Proof of adoption	235
59.	Effect of void adoption	248
60.	Effect on natural family	250
61.	Rights in the adopted family	253
62.	Time when the rights arise: Relating back of rights when adopter a woman	255
63.	Adoptee's rights limited by awas son	259
64.	Agreement not to adopt invalid: No specific relief in adoption ...	261
65.	Effect of acquiescence on an invalid adoption	262
	Customary Adoptions.
66.	Jain adoption	264
67.	No right to collateral succession	265
68.	Kritrim adoption	266
69.	Incidents of a Kritrim adoption	268
70.	Rights of Kritrim son	270
71.	Saving of other adoptions	270

CHAPTER VI.

MINORITY AND GUARDIANSHIP.

Of Minority.

72.	Age of majority	277
73.	"Guardian" defined	278
74.	Four classes of guardians	279
	(1) Of Natural Guardians.
75.	Natural guardian	279
76.	Marriage and loss of caste no disqualification	284
77.	Natural guardian's right	287
78.	Transfer by guardian when voidable	290
79.	Natural guardian may contract or compromise	294
80.	Personal contract by guardian	296
81.	Karta or guardian of coparcenary	298
82.	Husband his wife's guardian	299
	(2) Of de facto Guardians.
83.	Powers of a de facto guardian	300
84.	Guardian must act as such	303

SECTION.		PAGE.
	(3) Of Testamentary Guardians.
85.	Father's power to appoint guardian by will	305
	(4) Of Certificated Guardians.
86.	Appointment or declaration of a guardian by court	307
87.	Joint guardians of person and property	311
88.	Court's jurisdiction when limited	311
89.	Right to custody	313
90.	Appointed guardian supersedes others	314
91.	Minor's privilege is personal	314
92.	Minor's liability under decree	315
	CHAPTER VII.
	LAW OF MAINTENANCE.
93.	Personal obligation to maintain certain relations	319
94.	Husband's conversion immaterial	323
95.	Mistress's right to maintenance	323
96.	Manager's duty to maintain	325
97.	Maintenance of disqualified heir	328
98.	Widow's right to maintenance	328
99.	When widow disentitled to maintenance	332
100.	Widow's right of residence	333
101.	No forfeiture on loss of caste	336
102.	Amount of maintenance	336
103.	Change of maintenance	339
104.	Priority of debts	341
105.	Maintenance a personal right	342
106.	Maintenance cannot be defeated by gift or devise	343
107.	Charge for maintenance	344
108.	Suit for maintenance	346
109.	Parties to a maintenance suit	351
110.	Maintenance decree	352
111.	Limitation for recovery	353
	CHAPTER VIII.
	THE JOINT FAMILY.
112.	Joint family: Father: Son: Issue: Coparcener	359
113.	Ancestral property defined	360
114.	Joint property defined	363
115	Self-acquired property defined	372
116.	"Legal necessity" and "Benefit": Spiritual and Secular ...	382
117.	"Spiritual legal necessity" and "Spiritual legal benefit" defined ...	383
118.	"Secular legal necessity" defined	388
119.	"Secular benefit" defined	394
	Incidents of a Joint Family.
120.	Constitution of a Hindu family...	397
121.	"Coparcenary" and "Coparcener" defined	398
122.	No coparcenary by contract	402
123.	Disqualified coparceners	403
124.	Loss of coparcenary rights	404
125.	Incidents of coparcenary right	409
126.	Alienation of Coparcener's share	414
127.	Right of coparcener's alienee	421
128.	Presumptions re joint family and joint property	426
129.	Coparcener's acquisition presumed joint	435
130.	Alienation of coparcenary property by consent	440
	Management of Joint Family.
131.	Coparcenary manager	442
132.	Manager's powers	443
133.	Coparcener's liability for Manager's debt	458
134.	Manager's alienation voidable only	460
135.	Equity arising on partial necessity	461
136.	Manager's customary gifts	463
137.	Manager's fraud	467

CHAPTER IX.

TRADING JOINT FAMILY.

SECTION.		PAGE.
138.	Ancestral Trading family	468
139.	Father's alienation for family business: Effect of an alienation by the manager	477
140.	Trade in partnership with an outsider: No privity with an outsider: Relation of members inter se: Effect of death of the Manager: Recovery of losses	478
141.	Family interest matter of evidence	480
142.	No presumption of jointness	480
143.	Conflict of laws	481
144.	Liability of coparcener for family debts	481

CHAPTER X.

DEBTS AND ALIENATIONS.

145.	"Debt" and other terms defined	489
146.	Liability for personal debt	492
147.	Debts of husband and wife	503
148.	Rule of Damdupat	503

CHAPTER X-A.

JOINT FAMILY DEBTS AND ALIENATIONS.

149.	Joint family debts	507
150.	Bona fide transaction with manager	510
151.	Effect of invalid transfer	514
152.	Powers of other managers	515

Onus of Proof: Presumptions.

153.	Onus of proof in certain suits by or against a coparcener... ...	516
154.	Suit by coparcener to recover property sold in execution of decree against manager	517
155.	Sale of coparcenary property not presumed to pass interest of co-parcener	518
156.	Decrees against the manager when enforceable against coparcener ...	519
157.	Joinder of parties	523

CHAPTER XI.

THE FATHER'S DEBTS AND ALIENATIONS.

158.	Illegal and immoral debts defined: Antecedent debt defined ...	526
159.	Father's additional power to transfer	526
160.	Son's liability defined	552
161.	Liability of divided son for debts and alienations of the father ...	554
162.	Liability of after-born son	555
163.	Liability of grandson and great-grandson for debts of their ancestor...	555

Onus of Proof: Presumptions.

164.	Onus of proof in certain suits by or against the son	557
165.	Suit by son to recover coparcenary property sold in execution of decree against father	560
166.	Decree against father when enforceable against son	561
167.	Sale of coparcenary property not presumed to pass the interest of the son	562
168.	Protection of bona fide transferee	563
169.	Saving clause and bar of other claims	563

CHAPTER XII.

DAYABHAG JOINT FAMILY.

170.	Dayabhag family with father as head	566
171.	Other Dayabhag families	567
172.	Effect of individual acquisitions	569

CHAPTER XII-A.

FAMILY ARRANGEMENT.

SECTION.		PAGE.
173.	Family arrangement: Family defined	571
174.	Form	574
175.	When a family arrangement may be set aside	576
176.	Whom it binds	583

CHAPTER XIII.

PARTITION.

177.	Partition defined	587
178.	Form	596
179.	Father's right of partition	598
180.	Persons entitled to partition	600
181.	Co-widow's right to partition	604
182.	Female sharers on partition	607
183.	Partial partition	611
184.	Distribution of shares	620
185.	Acts occasioning separation	626
186.	Proof of separation	626
187.	Parties to partition: Inclusion of Property	636
188.	Defences to a partition suit	642
189.	Mode of partition	646
190.	Mutual non-liability to account	648
191.	Provisions for debts, maintenance and ceremonies	651
192.	Equities on distribution of shares	654
193.	Implied covenants on partition: Waiver of right	657
194.	All property placed into hotchpot	661
195.	Presumption of complete partition: Limits of the presumption ...	662

Re-opening of Partition.

196.	Right of absent and disqualified coparceners to repartition ...	665
197.	Right of after-born son	668
198.	Decree for partition...	670

CHAPTER XIV.

RE-UNION.

199.	Re-union	673
200.	Partition after reunion	676
201.	No writing necessary	676
202.	Succession amongst re-united relations	677
203.	Burden of proving re-union	679

CHAPTER XV.

IMPARTIBLE ESTATES.

204.	"Impartible estate" defined	681
205.	Inalienable estate defined	683
206.	Origin of impartible and inalienable estate	684
207.	No impartibility by contract	699
208.	Relation of an inalienable estate to impartible estate	700
209.	Incidents of an impartible estate	703
210.	Holders debts	708
211.	Acquisitions and accretions	709
212.	Property is presumably partible and alienable	711
213.	Limits of inalienability	712
214.	Succession to impartible estate	713

CHAPTER XVI.

TRUSTS, BENAMI TRANSACTIONS AND POWERS.

215.	Form of trust	723
216.	Object of trust	724
217.	Insurance by husband for benefit of wife	724
218.	Benami transaction defined	726
219.	Benami transfer	726

SECTION.		PAGE.
220.	When benami transaction illegal	728
221.	Presumptions in benami	729
222.	Power defined	734

CHAPTER XVII.

ALIENATIONS, GRANTS AND GIFTS.

223.	Definition of Property	738
224.	Alienation defined	741
225.	Alienations subject to Hindu Law	741
226.	Grant defined	742
227.	Hindu Gift and devise subject to Hindu Law	742
228.	Grant how made	744
229.	Who may make a gift	746
230.	Gift how made	748
231.	A Gift or devise to unborn person	748
232.	Gift or devise to female relations	749
233.	Conditional gift or devise	749
234.	Gift in contemplation of death	751

CHAPTER XVIII.

WILLS.

235.	"Will" and "codicil" defined	753
236.	Who may make a will or codicil...	756
237.	Form of will	758
238.	Execution and Proof of will	760
239.	Correction, Alteration and Revocation of will	762
240.	Subsequent invalidity of wills	765
241.	Void will	765
242.	Burden of proof	768

CHAPTER XIX.

CONSTRUCTION OF GIFTS AND WILLS.

243.	Deed includes will	774
244.	Construction of Indian deeds	774
245.	Grant or bequest conveys grantor's entire interest	776
246.	Void gift and devise	779
247.	A Gift or devise to a persona designata	780
247-A.	Gift to Joint donees, devisees	780
248.	Gift to a class	781
249.	Construction of wills	782
250.	Extrinsic evidence when inadmissible	786
251.	When extraneous evidence admissible	787
252.	Construction of words and technical terms	788
253.	Construction must be uniform	795
254.	All words must be considered	796
255.	Construction against intestacy	798
256.	Subsequent events ignored	798
257.	Effect of operative part	800
258.	Probate	800

CHAPTER XX.

RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS.

259.	Definitions: Beneficiary: Debutter property: Dedication: Endowment: Pujari: Manager: Worshipper...	804
260.	Dedication: Partial or complete	809
261.	Certainty of subject and object: Doctrine of Cypres	813
262.	Kinds of endowments: Religious: Charitable: Public: Private...	818
263.	Form of an endowment	823
264.	Subject of endowment	827
265.	Endowment in favour of non-existing object...	828
266.	Vesting of the endowments	828
267.	Operation of endowment	829
268.	Illusory and void endowment	829
269.	Invalid endowment	831

Section.		Page.
270.	Endowment when revocable	832
271.	Who may be appointed manager	833
272.	Appointment of the manager	835
273.	Succession of the manager	838
274.	Manager's rights and duties	841
275.	Shebait's rights	848
276.	Rights and duties of joint managers	849
277.	Manager's power of alienation	850
278.	Limitation for possession or to set aside improper alienations ...	861
279.	Manager's office how far transferable	867
280.	Removal of manager	870
281.	Rights and duties of beneficiaries	873
282.	Idol's right of suit	874
283.	Judicial control	875
284.	Suit maintainable: Previous sanction when necessary: Sanction when dispensed with	878

CHAPTER XXI.

Law of Survivorship.

285.	Saving of Dayabhag succession	886
286.	Survivorship in impartible estates	886
287.	Right of survivorship	886
288.	Survivorship amongst heirs	890
289.	When coparcenary property devolves on heirs	891
290.	Survivorship amongst sons, daughters and co-widows	891
291.	Devolution of undivided property	892
292.	Non-liability of survivors for debts	894
293.	Survivor's right of suit for debt	894
294.	Survivorship determined by contract or conduct	895

CHAPTER XXII.

General Principles of Inheritance.

295.	Course of inheritance cannot be altered	900
296.	Heir's right personal	902
297.	Time of vesting	904
298.	Effect of vesting	904
299.	Divesting of inheritance	905
300.	Spes successionis	906
301.	Preference of the whole blood	907
302.	Illegitimacy a bar	907
303.	Murderous and inimical heir	908
304.	Lunacy or idiocy as a disqualification	909
305.	Disqualification of women	911
306.	Unchastity a disqualification	912
307.	Succession on exclusion of disqualified heir	914
308.	Outcasts not disqualified	915
309.	Persons subject to the Succession Act	916

CHAPTER XXIII.

The Mitakshara Inheritance to Males.

310.	What property is subject to inheritance	918
311.	"Propositus" and "Last full owner" defined	918
312.	"Sapinda" defined: Samanodak: Bandhus	919
313.	Compact series of heirs: Other heirs	924
314.	Right of Issue: Succession of illegitimate son	928
315.	Statutory rights of widow: Son's widow: and Son's son's widow ...	935
316.	Mitakshara Widow	935
317.	Daughter's statutory right: Under the Mitakshara	938
318.	His Daughter's son	941
319.	His Mother	943
320.	His Father	944
321.	His Brother	945
322.	Nephew	946
323.	Order of succession amongst Samanodaks	956

Section.		Page.
324.	Heritable bandhus	959
325.	Order of succession amongst Bandhus	964
326.	Special female heirs in Bombay...	980
327.	Madras female heirs	982
328.	Hermit's heirs	986

CHAPTER XXIV.

The Dayabhag Succession.

329.	"Sapinda" defined	990
330.	"Sakulya" defined	990
331.	Heritable property	991
332.	Deformity as a disqualification	991
333.	Dayabhag heirs	996
334.	Order of succession among Sapindas, etc.	1004

CHAPTER XXV.

Woman's Estate.

335.	Quality of a woman's estate	1022
336.	Restriction on woman's estate	1023
337.	Estate of joint heiress	1033
338.	Accretion	1034
339.	Testamentary incapacity	1043
340.	Incidents of a woman's estate	1044
341.	Valid alienation of the estate	1047
342.	When heiress is a ward of Court	1065
343.	Surrender of woman's estate	1065
344.	Alienation voidable	1072
345.	Alienation of whole estate with consent of all reversioners: Alienation with the presumptive reversioner's consent: Consent binds representatives	1072
346.	Meaning of consent	1076
347.	Alienation for partial necessity...	1083

CHAPTER XXVI.

Reversioners and their Rights.

348.	Reversioner defined...	1086
349.	Reversioner's interest	1086
350.	No declaration by reversioner of his rights	1092
351.	Prevention of waste, improper act and alienation	1093
352.	Reversioner's suit	1097
353.	Burden of proof	1104
354.	Improper alienation	1105
355.	Succession of reversioners	1106
356.	Reversioner's rights on succession	1107
357.	His liabilities	1109
358.	Debts of the heiress	1109
359.	Wrongs of the heiress	1111
360.	Decree against the heiress	1112
361.	Limitation to avoid an alienation	1121
362.	Limitation for possession	1121

CHAPTER XXVII.

Stridhan.

363.	"Stridhan" defined	1127
364.	What property is stridhan	1130
365.	Meaning of stridhan in Bombay: Technical and non-technical stridhan	1143
366.	Husband's control	1144
367.	Disposal by will	1146
368.	Succession to maiden's stridhan	1146
369.	Succession to Stridhan of woman with children	1148
370.	Succession to Stridhan of issueless woman	1151
371.	Devolution of Sulk	1156
372.	Devolution of certain other Stridhans	1157

SECTION.		PAGE.
373.	Dayabhag succession of Sulk and Anvadheyak	1158
374.	Dayabhag devolution of Stridhan	1159
375.	Succession to childless woman	1161
376.	Heirs to property given by the father	1162
377.	Heirs to Yautak	1162
378.	Disqualified heirs	1163
379.	Inheritance by illegitimate children	1164
380.	Female heir's estate in Stridhan	1170
381.	Heirs take in severalty	1173

CHAPTER XXVIII.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONS.

382.	Shastras subject to equity	1174
383.	Rule in cases not expressly provided for	1174
384.	Res Judicata	1175

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

A.	...	Allahabad (Indian Law Reports).
A. C. J.	...	Appellate Civil Jurisdiction.
A. & E.	...	Adolphus & Elli's Reports (1834-1841). (N. S.) (1841-1852).
Agra.	...	Agra High Court Reports.
A. L. J.	...	Allahabad Law Journal (1904—).
A. I. R.	...	All India Reporter (Nagpur 1922—).
Arub.	...	Arubler's Reports (1737-1784).
App. Cas.	...	Law Reports Appeal Cases.
Atk.	...	Atkin's Reports (1736-1754).
A. W. N.	...	Allahabad Weekly Notes.
B.	...	Bombay (Indian Law Reports).
B. & Ad.	...	Barnewall and Adolphus' Reports (1830-1834).
B. & Ald.	...	Barnewall and Alderson's Reports (1817-1822).
B. & C.	...	Barnewall and Cresswell's Reports (1822-1830).
B. & S.	...	Best and Smith's Reports (1861-1866).
Bac. Ab.	...	Bacon's Abridgment.
Beav.	...	Beavan's Reports (1838-1866).
B. H. C. R.	...	Bombay High Court Reports (1862-1875).
Beng. S. R.	...	Bengal Select Reports.
Bing.	...	Bingham's Reports (1822-1834).
Bing. N. C.	...	Bingham's New Cases (1834-1840).
B. L. R.	...	Bengal Law Reports (1868-1876).
B. S. D. A.	...	Bengal Sadar Diwani Adalat Reports.
Bl. Comm.	...	Blackstone's Commentaries.
Bom. L. R.	...	Bombay Law Reporter (1899—).
B. P. J.	...	Bombay Printed Judgments (1869-1898).
Br. C. C.	...	Brown's Chancery Cases (1778-1794).
Brow. & Lush.	...	Browing and Lushington's Reports.
Bur. L. R.	...	Burmah Law Reports.
Bur. L. T.	...	Burmah Law Times.
C.	...	Calcutta (Indian Law Reports).
Camp.	...	Campbell's Reports (1807-1816).
C. B.	...	Common Bench Reports (1845-1856).
C. B. (N. S.)	...	Common Bench (New Series) (1856-1865).
C. & J.	...	Crompton and Jervis' Reports (1830-1832).
Ch.	...	Chapter.
C. L. J.	...	Calcutta Law Journal (1905—).
C. L. R.	...	Calcutta Law Reports (1877-1883).
C. & M.	...	Crompton and Meson's Reports (1832-1834).
C. M. & R.	...	Crompton, Meason and Roscoe's Reports (1834-1835).
C. & P.	...	Crompton and Payne's Reports.
Ch. C. C.	...	Cases in Chancery (1660-1668).
Ch. R.	...	Reports in Chancery (1616-1712).
Co. Litt.	...	Coke upon Littleton.
Coll.	...	Colles (House of Lords) (1697-1714).
C. & P.	...	Carrington and Payne's Reports (1823-1841).
C. L. J.	...	Calcutta Law Journal.
C. P. L. R.	...	Central Provinces Law Reports (1866-1904).
C. P. D.	...	Law Reports Common Pleas Division.
Cowp.	...	Cowper's Reports (1774-1778).
Cr. J.	...	Crompton and Jervis' Reports (1830-1832).
Cr. M.	...	Crompton and Meason (1832-1834).
Cr. M. & R.	...	Crompton, Meason and Roscoe's Reports (1834-1836).
C. W. N.	...	Calcutta Weekly Notes (1896—).
D. & C.	...	Deacon and Chitty's Reports (1832-1835).
De. G. & J.	...	De. Gex. and Jone's Reports (1862-1865).
D. M. & G.	...	De. Gex. Macnaghten and Gordon's Reports (1851-1857).
De. G. & S.	...	De. Gex. and Smale's Reports (1846-1852).

Datt. Ch.	...	Dattak Chandrika.
Datt. Mim.	...	Dattak Mimamsa.
De. G. F. & J.	...	De Gex. Fisher and Jone's Reports (1859-1862).
De. G. J. & S.	...	De Gex. Jones and Smith's Reports (1862-1866).
De. G. M. & G.	...	De Gex. Macnaghten and Gordon's Reports (1851-1857).
Dick.	...	Dicken's Reports (1550-1798).
Dig.	...	Morley's Digest.
Doug.	...	Douglas's Reports (1778-1785).
Dowl.	...	Dowling's Reports (1830-1840).
Dowl. (N. S.)	...	Dowling's Reports (New Series) (1841-1842).
Dowl. & L.	...	Dowling and Lound's Reports (1843-1849).
Dr.	...	Drewry's Reports (1852-1859).
Dr. & W.	...	Drewry and Warren's Reports (1841-1843).
Drew.	...	Drewry's Reports (1852-1859).
Drew. & S.	...	Drewry and Smale's Reports (1859-1865).
Durn. & E.	...	Durnford and East Reports (1785-1800).
East.	...	East's Reports (1800-1812).
E. & B.	...	Ellis and Blackburn's Reports (1852-1858).
E. B. & E.	...	Ellis, Blackburn and Ellis' Reports (1858).
E. (Edn.)	...	Edition.
E. and E.	...	Ellis and Ellis' Reports (1858-1861).
Eq. Ca. Ab.	...	Equity Cases Abridged (1853-1855).
Esp.	...	Espinasse's Reports (1793-1807).
Ev. A.	...	Evidence Act (I of 1872).
Exch.	...	Exchequer Reports (1848-1856).
Ex. D.	...	Law Reports Exchequer Division.
F. B.	...	Full Bench.
Finc.	...	Finch Reports (1673-1681).
Free.	...	Freeman's Reports (Ch.) (1660-1706).
Giff.	...	Giffard's Reports (1857-1865).
Hare.	...	Hare's Reports (1841-1853).
H. & C.	...	Horlstone and Coltman's Reports (1862-1866).
H. & M.	...	Hemming and Miller's Reports (1862-1865).
H. & N.	...	Hurlstone and Norman's Reports (1856-1862).
H. B. L.	...	Henry Blackstone's Reports (1788-1796).
H. L.	...	Hindu Law.
H. L. C.	...	Clark's House of Lords Cases (1847-1866).
Hals. L. E.	...	Halsbury's Laws of England.
Holt. N.	...	Holt's Nisi Prius Reports (1815-1817).
Holt. Eq.	...	Holt's Nisi Equity Reports (1688-1711).
I. C.	...	Indian Cases (1909—).
I. D. (O. S.)	...	Indian Decisions (Old Series: 14 Vol.) (1776-1856).
Imp. Gaz.	...	Imperial Gazetteer of India.
Ir.	...	Irish.
Ir. Eq. R.	...	Irish Equity Reports.
I. J.	...	Indian Jurist.
I. J. (N. S.)	...	Indian Jurist (New Series).
I. L. R.	...	Indian Law Reports (1876—).
J. & H.	...	Johnson and Hemming's Reports (1859-1862).
Jur. (N. S.)	...	Jurist (New Series) (1855-1856).
Kay. & J.	...	Kay & Johnson's Reports (1854-1858).
Keen.	...	Keen's Reports (1836-1838).
Keb.	...	Keble's Reports (1661-1679).
Kn.	...	Knapp's Reports (P.C.) (1829-1836).
L.	...	Indian Law Reports—Lahore Series (1920—).
Leon.	...	Leonard's Reports (1553-1615).
L. J.	...	Law Journal Reports (1823-1831).
L. J. (N. S.)	...	Law Journal Reports (New Series).
L. J. Ch.	...	Law Journal Chancery.
L. R.	...	Law Reports (1866—).
L. R. Ch.	...	Law Reports Chancery.
L.R. C. P.	...	Law Reports Common Pleas.
L. R. Eq.	...	Law Reports Equity Cases.
L. R. Ex.	...	Law Reports Exchequer.
L. R. E. L.	...	Law Reports English and Irish Appeals.
L. R. H. L. C.	...	Law Reports House of Lords Cases.
L. R. I. A.	...	Law Reports Indian Appeals.
L. R. Q. B.	...	Law Reports Queen's Bench Cases.

L. T.	...	Law Times Reports.
Lit.	...	Literally.
M.	...	Madras (Indian Law Reports).
Macn.	...	Macnaughten.
Mar.	...	Marshall's Reports (1814-1816).
M. & A.	...	Montagu and Ayrton's Reports.
May.	...	Mayukh, i.e., Vyavahar Mayukh.
Mit.	...	Mitakshara.
M. & C.	...	Mylne and Craig's Reports (1835-1841).
M. and G.	...	Macnaghten and Gordon (1849-1851).
Man. and G.	...	Manning and Granger (1840-1844).
M. H. C. R.	...	Madras High Court Reports.
M. and K.	...	Mylne & Keene's Reports (1832-1835).
M. and P.	...	Moore and Payne's Reports (1828-1831).
M. I. A.	...	Moore's Indian Appeals (1836-1872).
M. L. J.	...	Madras Law Journal (1891—).
M. L. W.	...	Madras Law Weekly.
M. & S.	...	Maule and Seleoyn's Reports (1813-1817).
M. & W.	...	Meeson and Welby's Reports (1836-1847).
Mad.	...	Maddock's Reports (1815-1822).
Mcq.	...	Mcqueen's House of Lords Cases (1851-1852).
Mac. & G.	...	Macnaughten and Gordon's Reports (1849-1852).
Marsh.	...	Marshall's Reports (1813-1816).
Mer.	...	Merivale's Reports (1815-1817).
Mont.	...	Montagu's Reports (1829-1832).
Mood.	...	Moody's Chancery Cases (1824-1844).
Moo. P. C.	...	Moore's Privy Council Reports (1836-1862).
Moo. P. C. (N. S.)	...	Moore's Privy Council (New Series) (1862-1865).
My. & Cr.	...	Mylne and Craig's Reports (1835-1841).
My. & K.	...	Mylne and Keene's Reports (1832-1835).
N. L. J.	...	Nagpur Law Journal (1918—).
N. L. R.	...	Nagpur Law Reports (1905—).
N. & M.	...	Neville and Mannin's Reports (1832-1836).
N. & P.	...	Neville and Perry's Reports (1836-1838).
N. S.	...	New Series.
N. W. P. H. C. R.	...	North West Provinces High Court Reports (1866-1875).
O. A.	...	On Appeal.
O. C.	...	Original Civil Jurisdiction.
P.	...	Indian Law Reports—Patna Series (1917—).
P. C.	...	Privy Council.
P. D.	...	Law Reports Probate Division.
P. L. R.	...	The Punjab Law Reporter.
P. R.	...	Punjab Record.
Pat.	...	Patna.
Pat. L. J.	...	Patna Law Journal.
Pat. L. W.	...	Patna Law Weekly.
Phill.	...	Phillip's Reports (1841-1849).
P. Wms.	...	Peere William's Reports (1695-1736).
Q. B.	...	Law Reports Queen's Bench.
Q. B. D.	...	Law Reports Queen's Bench Division.
R. & M.	...	Russell and Mylne's Reports (1829-1831).
Reg.	...	Regulation.
Russ.	...	Russell's Reports (1826-1829).
S.	...	Section.
Sarv. Inh.	...	Sarvadhikari on Inheritance.
S. B. E.	...	Sacred Books of the East.
S. C.	...	Select Cases.
S. D. A.	...	Sudder Dewany Adaulat Reports.
Sch. & Lef.	...	Schoales and Lefroy's Reports (1802-1806).
Sel. Rep.	...	Select Reports.
Skt.	...	Sanskrit.
Sm. and Giff.	...	Smale and Giffard's Reports (1852-1857).
Sm. L. C.	...	Smith's Leading Cases.
Stark.	...	Starkie's Reports (1815-1822).
Str. H. L.	...	Strange's Hindu Law.
Suth.	...	Sutherland.
Sw.	...	Swanston's Reports (1818-1819).
T. R.	...	Term Reports (1785-1800).

T. L. R.	...	Times Law Reports.
Taunt.	...	Taunton's Reports (1807-1819).
Vaugh.	...	Vaughan's Reports (1865-1874).
Vern.	...	Vernon's Reports (1681-1720).
Ves.	...	Vesey's (Junior) Reports (1789-1817).
Ves. Sen.	...	Vesey's (Senior) Reports (1746-1755).
Vid.	...	Vidyaneshwar.
Vol.	...	Volume.
W. & B. H. L.	...	West and Buhler's Hindu Law.
W. N.	...	Law Reports Weekly Notes.
W. R.	...	Weekly Reporter.
W. & T. L. C.	...	White & Tudor's Leading Cases.
Willes	...	Willes' Reports (1737-1760).
Y. & C.	...	Young & Colleyer's Reports (1834-1842).
Y. & C. C. C.	...	Young & Colleyer's Chancery Cases (1841-1844).
Y. & J.	...	Young and Jervis' Reports (1826-1830).
Y. & C. Ex.	...	Young & Colleyer's Exchequer Reports (1826-1830).
Yad.	...	Yadnavalkya.
§	...	Paragraph.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PAGE.

Amir Ali's Mohamedan Law ... 915
Angiras, M. N. Dutt's Trans... 35
Antiquities of India ... 325
Apastamb. 35, 43, 141, 985, 1020
Aristotle, Politics ... 8
Assembly Debates. 1183, 1184
Ashtak ... 165
Atri (Minor Smritis) ... 33, 35
Baden Powell's Land Systems in British India. 686, 688, 690
Balam Bhat ... 133, 134
Bannerjee, Marriage and Stridhan. 1145, 1153, 1154, 1155, 1160, 1163
Baudhayan. 22, 23, 24, 137, 160, 990, 1020, 1024, 1167
Bhadrabahu Samhita ... 264
Bhattacharya's Hindu Law. 133, 134, 929, 976, 978, 1015, 1154, 1157
Brihaspati 35, 501, 508, 585, 608, 949, 1021
Carnegy's Notes on the Races and Tribes and Castes of Oudh ... 67
Castus ... 14
Census of India ... 14
———Baluchistan ... 14
Cochin Tribes and Castes, Vols. I & II ... 10
Colebrooke's Digest. 6, 39, 145, 198, 319, 936, 993, 1008, 1056, 1159, 1160, 1161, 1162
———Miscellaneous Essays ... 13
Cruse's Digest ... 741
Cunningham's Hindu Law ...588, 1157
Daksha (Minor Smritis) ... 33, 35
Darwin's Descent of Man ... 2
Dattak Chandrika. 40, 160, 166, 167, 171, 172, 175, 191, 213, 224, 234, 235, 556, 602, 621, 622, 933
Dattak Mimamsa. 40, 160, 165, 167, 168, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 219, 223, 226, 234, 235, 251, 254, 260, 273, 277, 556
Dayabhag of Jimutvahan. 37, 43, 63, 132, 145, 168, 185, 260, 277, 320, 329, 373, 374, 405, 407, 416, 478, 507, 508, 556, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 586, 599, 601, 604, 653, 673, 674, 678, 750, 890, 892, 896, 907, 908, 911, 914, 929, 930, 931, 932, 936, 940, 943, 955, 962, 964, 965, 973, 976, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 999, 1001, 1004, 1007, 1008, 1009, 1011, 1012, 1013, 1014, 1015, 1018, 1024, 1025, 1051, 1052, 1063, 1128, 1131, 1135, 1137, 1139, 1140, 1142, 1143, 1144, 1154, 1156, 1158, 1159, 1160, 1161, 1162, 1163, 1168

PAGE.

Dayakram Sangrah. 320, 623, 936, 942, 943, 1014, 1016, 1018, 1025, 1077, 1141, 1160, 1161, 1162, 1163, 1164
Dayatattwa. 587, 1160, 1161, 1162
Dayavibhag ... 587, 611
Devala ... 1143
Ethnographic Survey of Bombay, 1909, No. 134 ... 11
Ethonography ... 1
Equity Jurisprudence, 2nd Edition ... 658
Fatwai-i-Alamgiri ... 41
Fearne, Contingent Remainders 1085
Gait's Census Report ... 10
Gaius ... 5
Gautam. 10, 20, 21, 35, 43, 131, 132, 133, 160, 445, 504, 588, 601, 939, 1020, 1148, 1151, 1156, 1162, 1167, 1174
Genenis, XII-19 ... 19
Ghose's Hindu Law ... 40, 1174
Golap Shastri's H. Law ... 1154
Gour's Hindu Code, 2nd Edition. 10
Gour's Hindu Code, 3rd Edition. 55, 56, 131, 134, 135, 209, 215, 220, 230, 237, 275, 319, 417, 601, 608, 734, 777
Gour, Law of Transfer (6th Edition). 47, 99, 290, 342, 426, 502, 513, 523, 539, 572, 574, 641, 657, 680, 684, 702, 713, 719, 728, 738, 739, 744, 748, 751, 771, 781, 817, 906, 1084
Gour's Penal Law. 151, 153, 271, 910, 994
Gulab ... 10
Halsbury's Laws of England. 101, 166, 571, 573, 1085
Hardutt ... 134
Harit ... 35
History of Animals ... 8
Hunter's Roman Law ... 4
Hull's Constitutional History ... 720
Ilbert's Government of India, 2nd Edition ... 48
Imperial Gazetteer of India ... 14
Indian Penal Code ... 97
Institutes ... 43
Jaimini ... 44
Jarman on Wills ... 796
Jolley's Tagore Lectures, pp. 103, 104 ... 611
———Translation of Mitakshara ... 599
Justinian ... 5
Katyayan. 35, 608, 936, 1108, 1131
Kautilya's Artha Shastra ... 1174

PAGE.

Kaustubh Samskar ... 131, 136
Kerr's Fraud ... 582
Kings, XV-3 ... 1, 10
Kullak ... 134
Likhit (Minor Smritis) ... 33, 35
Lindlay Partnership ... 479
Leviathan ... 1
Lyall's Asiatic Studies ... 67
MacNaughten's Hindu Law. 136, 219, 270, 620, 929, 988, 1109, 1150
Madan Ratna Pradip ... 623
Madhaviya ...134, 1140
Mahabharat ... 10
Mahanirvan Tantra ... 748
Maharnava ... 24
Maine's Ancient Law ... 2, 355
————Early Law and Custom ... 21
Mandlik, Hindu Law. 36, 38, 134, 136, 137, 171, 336, 407, 482, 493, 527, 621, 993, 1145, 1157
Manu. 10, 11, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 34, 35, 46, 55, 131, 134, 136, 137, 139, 140, 141, 144, 145, 160, 170, 183, 205, 215, 229, 233, 234, 250, 276, 277, 279, 283, 307, 319, 320, 322, 325, 328, 372, 373, 378, 404, 406, 444, 501, 504, 525, 537, 552, 556, 586, 589, 598, 607, 608, 622, 639, 643, 662, 663, 665, 666, 668, 676, 677, 680, 714, 746, 805, 907, 913, 919, 920, 921, 922, 925, 929, 930, 933, 936, 940, 942, 945, 948, 949, 956, 957, 966, 982, 985, 986, 990, 992, 1129, 1130, 1143, 1145, 1149, 1150, 1153, 1155, 1157, 1160, 1162, 1163, 1164, 1167
Max Muller, Ancient Sanskrit Literature ...12, 13, 14
————Chips from a German Workshop. ... 17
————Six Indian Systems of Philosophy ... 44
Mayne, Hindu Law (7th Edition). 44, 611, 219
Mayukh. 38, 43, 136, 191, 215, 220, 235, 251, 319, 320, 324, 328, 336, 365, 374, 384, 407, 416, 501, 556, 587, 601, 623, 673, 676, 678, 679, 740, 911, 924, 925, 932, 936, 939, 942, 943, 944, 945, 947, 948, 949, 951, 956, 957, 960, 984, 993, 1018, 1021, 1024, 1025, 1054, 1071, 1130, 1131, 1143, 1144, 1550, 1153, 1156, 1157, 1175
Mitakshara. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 40, 43, 51, 63, 70, 131, 132, 133, 134, 146, 172, 232, 235, 251, 320, 321, 324, 328, 329, 360, 365, 372, 373, 378, 382, 399, 400, 401, 403, 405, 407, 412, 416, 440, 442, 443, 449, 466, 468, 493, 527, 565, 566, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 598, 599, 600, 601, 607, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 626, 651, 665, 666, 667, 668, 673, 677, 678, 746, 747, 805, 896, 902, 907, 908, 910, 911, 912, 914, 920, 921, 922, 924, 925, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 936, 938, 939, 942, 943, 944, 945, 947, 948, 949, 952, 953, 955, 956, 957, 959, 960, 976, 978, 984, 985, 987, 992, 1006, 1011, 1021, 1022, 1025, 1028, 1076, 1141, 1142, 1143, 1144, 1145, 1146, 1148, 1149, 1150, 1151, 1152, 1155, 1156, 1157, 1163, 1164, 1171, 1175
Mitra's Joint Family and Partition ... 587, 656
Morley's Digest. 1048, 1049, 1135
Narad. 7, 51, 132, 136, 137, 138, 141, 319, 325, 330, 373, 378, 388, 390, 445, 482, 490, 492, 503, 527, 552, 556, 587, 601, 651, 653, 676, 746, 936, 985, 992, 993, 1020, 1021, 1131, 1135, 1145, 1150, 1164, 1165
Nand Pandit Vaijayanti ... 942
Nirnaysindhu ... 942
Odyssey, IX ... 1
Paithinasi ... 131
Parashar. 35, 134, 913
Parijat ... 134
Peery's Older Cases ... 64
Philips and Trevelyan's Hindu Wills ... 829
Plato's Republic ... 8
Plutarch's Lives: Licurgus ... 8
————Alcibiades... 8
————Cato the Younger ... 8
Rattigan's Digest of Civil Law, Punjab ... 73
Rig Veda. 13, 14, 67, 1020
Samwart ... 35
Saraswati Vilas. 587, 601, 936, 1140
Sarcar's Adoption, 2nd Edition. 40, 58, 168, 172, 173, 228
————Hindu Law. 1012, 1160
Sarvadhikari on Inheritance. 37, 922, 929, 942, 960, 967, 976, 978, 991, 1011, 1015, 1016, 1017
Selections from Educational Records (Macaulay) ... 44
Shephard's Touchstone ... 745
Sacred Books of the East series (S. B. E.)—
Vol. II. 10, 24, 25, 26
Vol. XIV ...22, 23, 24
Sankh ... 35
Shatatap ... 35
Smith's Early History of India... 34
Smriti Chandrika. 329, 373, 501, 556, 601, 611, 612, 623, 653, 676, 678, 692, 955, 1011, 1024, 1131, 1141, 1144, 1151, 1153, 1154, 1156, 1158
Spiegil, Eranische Alterthumakunde ... 15
Steel's Law of Castes. 59, 62, 63, 936, 1155
Strange (Sir T.) Hindu Law. 538, 599, 611, 929, 1155
Straig's Equity Jurisprudence... 634
Strange's Manual ... 1106
Tylor, Primitive Culture, Chapters I, III, IV, XI, XII ... 3

	PAGE.
Taylor, Early History of Mankind, Chap. VI ...	3
Trevelyan's, Hindu Law ...	165
Tribes and Castes of Bengal, Vol. I ...	2
Vol. II ...	1
Ushanas ...	35
Vidyaneshwara's Text ...	611
Vasisth. 35, 40, 43, 51, 131, 132, 133, 137, 145, 160, 165, 178, 213, 226, 260, 405, 556, 746, 922, 1167
Vicero, Prodowos ...	6
Vedas. 15, 586, 1141
Virmitrodaya. 373, 556, 586, 587, 608, 611, 623, 679, 932, 943, 966, 967, 1019, 1024, 1135, 1140, 1141, 1142, 1143, 1156
Vishnu. 24, 35, 132, 160, 320, 390, 482, 492, 503, 552, 556, 601, 608, 746, 805, 922, 936, 942, 1020, 1021
Vishnu Puran ...999, 1161
Vivida Ratnakar ...	936
Vivad Chintamani. 71, 673, 933, 942, 960, 1011, 1024, 1030, 1144, 1156
Vrihat Manu. 134, 251, 936
Vyas. 33, 34, 35, 416
Vyavastha Chandrika ...	1157
————Darpan. 58, 330, 334, 608
West and Buhler, Hindu Law. 35, 217, 612, 613, 621, 936, 961, 1154, 1155, 1156
Wilkins, Modern Hinduism ...59, 66, 67
Williams on Executors (9th Edition) ...	795
Williams, Religious Thought and Life in India ...	67
Wilson's Works ...	260
Yadnavalkya. 7, 16, 35, 38, 58, 63, 131, 132, 136, 213, 233, 286, 320, 360, 373, 390, 403, 405, 406, 482, 493, 549, 552, 598, 601, 607, 608, 620, 622, 653, 673, 676, 677, 740, 746, 913, 914, 919, 922, 929, 932, 936, 940, 942, 949, 959, 986, 1142, 1151, 1152, 1162, 1167
Yajurveda ...	165
Yama (Minor Smritis) ...	35

GLOSSARY.

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Adhyagnik ..	अध्यग्निक ..	Presents given to the bride before the nuptial fire (Adhi-before, Agni-fire).	A species of stridhan. See S. 364 (8) (i) (a), post.
Adhyavahanik.	अध्यवाहनिक ..	Presents given to the bride at the time of the bridal procession (Adhi near or during, Avahnik procession).	Ditto. See S. 364 (8) (i) (b).
Angiras ..	आङ्गिरस ..	Writer of a Dharmashastra ..	He flourished before Yadnavalkya and is mentioned by him in his Smriti in Acharadhaya, Sloke 4. For a recent redaction of the work, see § 121.
Anvadheyak.	अन्वाधेयक ..	Gifts by stranger (Anva other outsider, dhayak what is given, gift by another).	A species of Stridhan. See S. 364 (10), post.
Aparaditya Dev.	अपरादित्यदेव ..	Name of a king of the Silahara dynasty one branch of which reigned in Jhana the other in Panola near Kolhapur in Konkan in the Bombay Presidency.	He flourished either at the time of Vijnaneshwar or subsequent to him. See Sarvadhikari, pp. 381-387.
Aparark ..	अपरार्क ..	Writer of a Dharmashastra ..	Mayne in para. 26 says that his work is of paramount authority in Kashmir, which, however, appears doubtful.
Apastamb ..	आपस्तम्ब ..	Do. ..	Translated in 2 S.B.E. See §§ 73-76.
Apavidha ..	अपविद्ध ..	Son deserted or disowned by the parents.	One of Manu's twelve sons, No. 11, § 55. Now obsolete.
Asahaya ..	असहाय ..	Writer of a Dharmashastra ..	..
Asahaya Vijnaneshwar.	असहाय विज्ञानेश्वर	..	..
Ashvalayan..	आश्वलायन ..	Name of a Smriti writer ..	..
Atharv Veda.	अथर्ववेद ..	The fourth Veda ..	See § 35.
Atri ..	अत्रि ..	Writer of a Dharmashastra ..	He is mentioned by Yadnavalkya in Acharadhya.

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Auras ..	औरस ..	Son by married wife of the same caste, Legitimate son.	One of Manu's 12 kinds of sons. See § 55.
Ayautak ..	अयौतुक ..	See Yautak ..	See § 1141.
Baudhayan ..	बौधायन ..	Writer of a Dharmashastra ..	His work is translated in 14 S.B.E. series, p. 62. See §§ 73-86.
Bharuchi ..	भारुचि ..	Do. ..	..
Bhashya ..	भाष्य ..	Commentary ..	..
Bhrigu ..	भृगु ..	Name of a sage who revealed to the people the doctrines of Manu.	See Manu, Chapter 1, Sloke 59. Probably a compiler of Manu.
Bhrigusanhita.	भृगुसंहिता ..	Bhrigu's recension of Manu ..	..
Brihaspati ..	बृहस्पति ..	Writer of a Dharmashastra ..	His work is translated in 33 S.B.E. series. See §§ 109-111.
Brihat ..	बृहत ..	Great wise { Often used to distinguish the various writers of Dharmashastras described as Vridh-old; Brihat-senior; — Laghu-junior.	..
Budh ..	बुध ..
Chandeshwar Thakur.	चण्डेश्वरठाकुर ..	..	Author of Vivad Ratnakar; and authoritative work of the Mithila School.
Daksh ..	दक्ष ..	Writer of a Dharmashastra ..	..
Dattak ..	दत्तक ..	Son by adoption ..	One of Manu's twelve sons (No. 10), § 55. See Ch. V.
Dattak Chandrika.	दत्तकचन्द्रिका ..	A work on adoption Dattak-adoption, Chandrika-moonlight.	A work on adoption. See §§ 145, 235, post.
Dattak Mimamsa.	दत्तकमीमांसा ..	A work on adoption (author-Nand Pandit). (Lit. Dattak-adoption, Mimamsa-inquiry).	A work on adoption. See §§ 145, 235, post.
Dayabhag Daya Vibhag.	दायभाग दाय विभाग	Partition of heritage (daya-what is given hence inheritance; and bhag or vibhag-partition).	A treatise on the Law of Inheritance by Jimutvahan. See §§ 137-139, post.
Deval ..	देवल ..	A writer of a Dharmashastra ..	He flourished probably prior to Brahaspati.
Dharanidhar.	धरणीधर ..	A commentator on Manu ..	..

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Dhareshwar.	धारेश्वर ..	King of Dhar ..	He is mentioned by Yadnavalkya in Acharadhaya, Sloke 5.
Gautam ..	गौतम ..	A writer of an old Dharmashastra.	Translated in 2 S.B.E. See §§ 64-72, post.
Govindraj ..	गोविन्दराज ..	A commentator on Manu ..	..
Gudhaj ..	गूढज ..	Son by adultery ..	One of Manu's twelve sons (No. 9), § 55.
Harit ..	हारित ..	Writer on Dharmashastra (Brihat Harit-Harit, the senior).	He is mentioned by Yadnavalkya in Acharadhaya, Sloke 4. See § 63 post.
Hiranya Keshin.	हिरण्यकेशिन ..	Lit. " Golden haired" ..	A School forming a subdivision or Apastamb. See Apastamb 2 S. B. E. Introduction.
Jeemut Vahan.	जीमुत वाहन ..	Author of Dayabhag ..	He probably flourished in the fifteenth century. See §§ 138-139 post.
Kalpataru ..	कल्पतरु ..	Dharmashastra. (Kalp-desire, Taru-a tree—a Wishing tree).	A work written by Lakshmidhar sometime between the 12th and 14th century.
Kamalakar ..	कमलाकर ..	Dharmashastra (Kamal-lotus, Akar-cluster, mine, treasure.)	Name of the Author of Nirnayasindhu and Kinad Tandava : flourished in the 13th century.
Kanin ..	कानिन ..	Son of unmarried daughter ..	One of Manu's twelve sons (No. 4), § 55. Now obsolete.
Karavir ..	करवीर ..	A Minister of Har Sinha Deva King of Mithila.	..
Kashyap ..	काश्यप ..	A writer ..	His date is not fixed : but flourished after Brihaspathi.
Katyayan ..	कात्यायन ..	A writer	Do.
Krita ..	क्रीत ...	Son purchased ..	One of Manu's twelve sons (No. 5), § 55. Now obsolete.
Kritrim ..	कृत्रिम ..	Son made ..	One of Manu's twelve sons, § 55, now in vogue in Mithila. See Ss. 67-69.
Kshetraja ..	क्षेत्रज ..	Son begotten on one man's wife by another man who was appointed by the husband or other kinsman for that purpose.	One of Manu's twelve sons (No. 8). See § 55. Now obsolete.

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Kulluk Bhatt.	कुल्लुक भट्ट ..	Best known commentator on Manu.	..
Kulluk Dharma-sar.	कुल्लुक धर्मसार	Epitome of Kulluk's Commentary on Manu.	..
Lakshmi-dhar.	लक्ष्मी धर ..	Author of Kalpataru (q.v.) ..	..
Likhit ..	लिखित ..	Shankh and Likhit were joint authors. (Likhit-what is written —a pen-name).	They are mentioned by Yadnavalkya in Achara-dhaya, Sloke 5.
Manu ..	मनु ..	He is the first lawgiver said to be a Magadh or Mithila Brahmin.	See §§ 50-62.
Mayukh ..	मयूख ..	Lit. a ray or beam (of the Sun) Vyavhar Mayukh is the chapon Vyavhar or duty.	See §§ 140-141, post.
Medhatithi ..	मेधातिथि ..	A commentator on Manu ..	Flourished before Vidnya-neshwar.
Mitakshara ..	मिताक्षरा ..	A commentary on Yadnavalkya Smriti by Vidyaneshwar. (Mit-few, measured, Akshar-letters, i.e., concise treatise).	See §§ 129-136, post.
Mitra Misra.	मित्र मिश्र ..	Author of Virmitrodaya. A work of the Benares School. Written in the 16th century.	..
Nand Pandit.	नन्द पण्डित ..	Author of " Dattak Mimamsa" ..	See § 147, post.
Narad ..	नारद ..	A writer on Dharmashastra ..	Translated in 33 S. B. E., §§ 104, 108, post.
Nilkanth ..	नीलकण्ठ ..	Author of Vyavhar Mayukh ..	See § 140, post.
Parashar ..	पराशर ..	Paramount authority in the Kalinga. His work on law is lost, though extracts from it are cited in the commentaries. His date is not settled.	..
Paunarbhava.	पौनर्भव ..	Son of a twice married woman ..	One of Manu's twelve sons (No. 12), § 55.
Prajapati ..	प्रजापति ..	Lit, Praja-subjects ; and pati-lord, master ; "Lord of the People"; A king.	..
Pratap Rudra Deo.	प्रतापरुद्रदेव ..	King of the Kakataya Dynasty of Warangal. Said to be the author or Saraswati Vilas, a work of authority in the Madras Presidency. He flourished in the 4th century.	..

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Putrika-putra.	पुत्रिका पुत्र ..	Son of appointed daughter ..	One of Manu's twelve kinds of sons (No. 7), § 55.
Rigveda ..	ऋग्वेद ..	The first Veda (Rikh-Hymn and Veda-knowledge—Hymnbook).	See § 35, post.
Sahodhaj ..	सहोढज ..	Son of a wife who had conceived and delivered of a son before her marriage.	One of Manu's twelve sons (No. 5), § 55.
Samvart ..	संवर्त ..	Name of a writer on Dharmashastra.	He is mentioned by Yadnavalkya in Acharadhaya, Sloke 4.
Sam Veda ..	सामवेद ..	Third Veda (Sam-song, Veda-knowledge).	See § 35, post.
Saudayik ..	सौदायिक ..	Lit. Sau-love, dayik-offering—Love-offering.	A species of stridhan. See §§ 2631-2648, post.
Shankh ..	शंख ..	Name of a writer (Sankh-conch)..	..
Saraswati-vilas.	सरस्वती विलास ..	A work (Saraswati-goddess of learning, vilas-sport or amusement—"Sport of the Goddess of learning").	..
Shatatap ..	शातातप ..	A writer on Dharmashastra mentioned by Yadnavalkya in Acharadhaya, Sloke 5.	..
Shaunak ..	शौनक ..	An author more known to lawyers for having prescribed particular ceremonies on adoption.	..
Smriti-chandrika.	स्मृतिचन्द्रिका..	Lit. Smriti-tradition, Chandrika-moonlight. Name of a work on Dharmashastra by Devanand Bhatt also called Deva or Devanna Bhatt.
Srikar ..	श्रीकार ..	Name of an author ..	..
Subodhini ..	सुबोधिनी ..	Lit. Su-good, bodh-knowledge. A commentary.	..
Sulk ..	शुल्क ..	Bride-price ..	A species of stridhan. See § 2642, post.
Svayamdatta.	स्वयंदत्त ..	Son self-given ..	..
Upanishad ..	उपनिषद् ..	Metaphysical chapter of the Vedas.	..
Ushanas ..	उशनस् ..	Name of an author on Dharmashastra.	He is mentioned by Yadnavalkya in Acharadhaya, Sloke 4.
Ushan ..	उषन् ..	A writer ..	Ditto.

Bharti Bhawan Library, Allahabad.

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Ushanas Sutras.	उशनस्सूत्राणि ..	Sutras of Ushanas .. Author of Vivad Chintamoni.	..
Vachaspati Misra.	वाचस्पतिमिश्र ..	An authoritative work of the Mithila School. He flourished in the beginning of the fifteenth century.	..
Vaidyanatha Dikshitiyam.	वैद्यनाथ दीक्षितीयम् ..	Name of work ..	..
Vaishnav ..	वैष्णव ..	Worshippers of the God Vishnu—A sect founded by a Ramanuj.	See §§ 323-327, post.
Vasishth ..	वसिष्ठ ..	Name of an author on Dharmashastra.	Translated in the 14 S.B.E., Pt. 2. See §§ 90-97.
Veda Vyas ..	वेदव्यास ..	Lit. " the diameter of the Vedas." Said to be the name of the compiler of the Vedas ; the author of Mahabharat and a number of Puranas.	..
Vidnyaneshwar (also written Vijnyaneswar).	विज्ञानेश्वर ..	Lit. Vidya-learning, Iswar-master (of). Author of the Mitakshara.	See § 130.
Viramitrodai.	वीरमित्रोदय ..	Lit. Vir-brave, mitra-the Sun, also the name of a King udai-rise "Rise of the brave Mitra." Name of a work.	See § 142.
Vishnu ..	विष्णु ..	Name of a law book called after the God Vishnu.	Translated in 7 S. B. E.
Vishvarup ..	विश्वरूप ..	Lit. Vishva-universe ; rupa-appearance (having the appearance of the universe). Author of a commentary on Yadnavalkya Smriti.	..
Vivad Chandra.	विवाद चन्द्र ..	"The moon on discussion" from Vivada-discussion and Chandra-the moon. Name of a work of the Mithila School.	A work supposed to be prepared by Laxmi Devi, though it bears the name of her nephew Misaru Misra as the writer—See 1 Colebrooke's Digest Preface P. XX. See § 144, post.
Vivad Chandrika.	विवादचंद्रिका ..	"Moon-light on discussion."(Vivad-discussion. Chandrika-moonlight) name of a work.	..
Vivad Chintamani.	विवाद चिन्तामणि	"Antidote against anxiety regarding discussion." (Vivad-discussion, Chinta-anxiety, Mani-antidote.)	See § 144.

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Vivad Ratnakar.	विवाद रत्नाकर . .	"Ocean of discussion ;" from Vivad discussion and Ratnakar-ocean.	A work of the Mithila School composed by Chandeshwar. See § 144, post.
Vriddha Shatatap.	वृद्ध शातातप	Vridha-old, senior ; Shatatap-the senior.	Author of Prataparudriya.
Vyas ..	व्यास ..	'Diameter' A writer on Dharmashastras.	..
Vyavahar Chintamani.	व्यवहार चिन्तामणि	"Antidote against anxiety regarding legal matters."	Another work of Vachaspati Misra.
Vyavahar Mayukh.	व्यवहार मयूख	See Nilkanth. "A ray of light" (on matter of law).	..
Vyavahar Nirnai.	व्यवहार निर्णय	Decisions on legal topics ..	..
Yadnavalkya or Yajnavalkya.	याज्ञवल्क्य ..	Name of a smritikar ..	See §§ 112-120, post.
Yajur Veda.	यजुर्वेद ..	Yajus a sacrifice; Veda-knowledge "A book containing the sacrificial formulas or rituals."	See § 12, post.
Yama ..	यम ..	Name of a writer, author of a Dharmashastra mentioned by Yadnavalkya in Acharadhaya, Sloke 4 and quoted by Vashisth.	..
Yautak ..	यौतुक ..	Yu. to join. Nuptial presents made at the time of marriage, as distinguished from Ayautak, that is those made before or after the marriage. A species of stridhan.	See § 2639, post.

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

PAGE

A

A. G. v. Abdul Kadir .. 871
A. G. v. Bechambers .. 813
A. G. v. Brown .. 817
A. G. v. Corporation of Rochester. 821
A. G. v. Haberdashers Co. .. 814
A. G. v. Hormusji. 796, 797, 798
A. G. v. Hawkins. 494, 496
A. G. v. Mayor of Bristol .. 821
A. G. v. Punjabai .. 871
A. G. v. Skinner's Co. .. 821
A. G. v. Strangman .. 816
Abala Kondama v. Kandasamy .. 510
Abaambai v. Raja Mathna .. 184
Abbot v. Middleton .. 796
Abbot v. Weekly .. 95
Abdul v. Mirathayar .. 436
Abdul v. Sona .. 100
Abdul Aziz v. Appayasami. 521, 522
Abdul Aziz v. Mahbub Singh .. 1181
Abdul Cadar v. Turner .. 82
Abdul Gani v. Sheikh Nizam .. 506
Abdul Hussain v. Habibullah .. 99
Abdul Hye v. Mozaffar. 492, 501
Abdul Kadur v. Turner .. 57, 64
Abdul Karim v. Abdul Razak. 142, 145
Abdul Karim v. Badruddeen .. 612, 617, 636
Abdul Karim v. Ram Kishore .. 558, 562
Abdul Latif v. Abdul Huq .. 730
Abdul Mazid v. Saraswati. 450, 473, 474, 480, 488, 516
Abdul Rahim v. Mira Mayor .. 439
Abdul Rahman v. Bure Khan .. 172
Abdul Rahman v. Jadunandan .. 454
Abdul Rahman v. Sukh Dayal .. 293
Abdul Rahman v. Yar Mahammad. 882
Abdul Wahab Khan v. Tilakdhari. 628, 630
Abdulla v. Ramdas .. 315
Abdulla v. Ram Lal .. 1080
Abdulla v. Sunda .. 90, 270
Abed Ali v. Asagar Ali .. 730
Abdur Rahim v. Halimabai .. 68, 73
Abdur Rahim v. Mhd. Barket Ali. 877, 878
Abdur Rahim v. Syed Abu Mohomed .. 880
Abdur Rahim v. Narayan Das .. 862
Abdur Rahman v. Hussain. 476, 487
Abdur Rahman v. Mhd. Barket Ali. 879
Abhai Churn v. Mangal. 69, 673, 678
Abhal Charan v. Mangul Jana .. 70
Abhay Chandra v. Pyari Mohan.. 444, 568, 650

PAGE

Abhay Churan v. Attarmoni .. 1108
Abhesang v. Raisang .. 1080
Abhiram v. Shyama Charan. 827, 830, 852, 853, 857, 859, 867
Abhoim v. Shyama .. 397
Abhoya v. Ram Kinnar .. 1071
Abhoy Chunder v. Piari Mohun .. 448
Abilak Roy v. Rubbi .. 450
Abinash v. Harinath. 1081, 1089, 1097, 1098, 1100
Abinash v. Probodh .. 1107
Abu v. Amin .. 641
Abu v. Khatu Bai. 68, 80, 82, 83
Abraham v. Abraham. 57, 79, 80, 81, 82 409, 697, 905
Abraham Servai v. R. Muthirian. 652
Acha Ranganaki v. Acha Ramanuja. 112, 495
Achal Ram v. Hazim Husain .. 239
Achal Ram v. Udai Pratab. 707, 717, 721
Achan Kuar v. Thakurdas .. 1078
Acho v. Acho .. 284
Achru v. Merchant .. 305
Achut v. Manjunath .. 1120
Achutaramayya v. Ratnajee. 477, 538, 551
Adams v. Otterback .. 107
Adayapa v. Rudrava. 934, 940
Addoyto v. Woojan .. 321
Adeyapa v. Rudrava .. 1167
Adhar v. Sudesra .. 951
Adhar Chandra v. Kirtibash. 288, 301, 303
Adhar Chandra v. Nobin Chandra. 376, 378
Adhibai v. Cursandas. 329, 336, 337, 338
Adhikesavan v. Gurunatha .. 459
Adhiranee v. Shona Molee .. 341
Adi v. Dukharan .. 631
Adi Deo v. Dukharan. 630, 1102
Adikesavan v. Gurunatha .. 415
Adieppa v. Tontappa .. 1067
Adinarayan v. Venkata .. 449
Adit Narayan v. Mahabir. 959, 960, 961, 963, 965, 971, 975, 976, 978
Adiveva v. Chanmall .. 989
Adivi v. Nidamarty .. 262
Administrator-General v. Anandachari. 66, 117, 140, 141, 142, 143, 145, 146
Administrator-General v. Talbehari .. 839
Adrishapa v. Guru Shiappa .. 90, 99
Adusumilli v. Adusumilli. 187, 188, 191
Advayappa v. Rudrava .. 1149
Advyappa v. Rudrava .. 1164
Advi v. Fakirappa .. 252
Advocate-General v. Damothar .. 818

	PAGE
Advocate-General v. Devakar	58
Advocate-General v. Hormasji.	784, 797
Advocate-General v. Jimabai	64
Advocate-General v. Lumba Bai	80
Advyapa v. Rudrava	913
Afzal Khan v. Abdul Rahman	422
Afzalkhan v. Ghulam Kasim	691
Afzul Khan v. Kasim Khan	721
Aghora Nath v. Girish Chunder	449
Aghore Nath v. Kanvini	797
Agri v. Vishnu	883
Ahaji v. Ganabai	318
Ahmad v. Ramlal	636
Ahmed v. Bai Bibi	1096
Ahmed v. Rahiman	895
Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy	64, 65, 82, 98, 362
Ahollya v. Muckee Lonee	330
Ahmedbhoy v. Petit	377
Aili v. Aidew.	913, 1011
Ainthu v. Khakhar	511
Aiti v. Aidew.	63, 913
Aiyaswarya v. Sivaji	1041
Aiyavier v. Subramania	598
Aiyyagari v. Aiyyagari.	422, 423, 424, 657
Ajab Singh v. Mana	927
Ajabh Singh v. Nanabav.	236, 239, 243
Ajaba v. Ramalingam	744
Ajhola v. Digambur	312
Ajuddia v. Mahabir	317
Ajudhia v. Ram Sumer.	912, 974
Ajodhia Prasad v. Mt. Seenjhabi.	1105
Ajodhya v. Mahadeo.	611, 615, 649
Ajoodhya v. Manohar	603
Akam Ali v. Mohamed	730
Akbar Ali v. Faiz Bukshi.	731, 732
Akhil Chandra v. Girish Chandra	292
Akhoy Chander v. Kalapahar.	167, 168
Akhoy v. Haridos	989
Akkanna v. Venkayya	1030, 1036, 1041, 1042, 1043
Akkanna v. Venkatadri	1134
Akkava v. Sayadkhan.	1076, 1078
Akoba v. Sakharam	1115
Akoral v. Boreanee.	914, 944
Akshay v. Hari Das.	674, 997, 1014, 1018
Alagappa v. Mangathai.	280, 805
Alagappa v. Sivarama Sundara	869
Alagappa v. Vellian.	444, 454, 476
Almadi v. Udit Narayan	730
Alameli v. Numberumal	1135
Alamuri v. Raghava.	494, 496
Albela v. Jaimmal	946
Albrecht v. Bathee.	287, 308
Albrecht v. Jellamma.	280, 311
Alhadmoni v. Gokoolmoni	1012
Ali v. Mohmud Ali	729
Ali Hossein v. Ali Hossein	661
Ali Saheb v. Shabji	506
Ali Kanna v. Venkayya	1133
Alkajikar v. Naru	312
Allahabad Bank v. Bhagwan Das.	471, 546
Allah Rakhi v. Mhd. Abdur Rahim	863
Altaisingh v. Haku	539

	PAGE
Alukmonee v. Banee Madhub.	1115
Alur v. Venkata	621
Amam Singai v. Chaitulal	679
Amar Chandra Kunda v. Sebak Chand Chowdhury	561
Amanchi v. Amanchi	173
Amarjit v. Alguchape	1149
Amarendra v. Sanatun Singh	192, 202, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 277
Amarpal Singh v. Chhabraj	317
Amarsi v. Dayal	597
Amava v. Mahadganda.	59, 79, 210, 265
Amba v. Shrinivasa.	300, 302
Ambalal v. Ambalal	770
Ambalam v. Bartle	864
Ambabai v. Govind.	59, 76, 79, 932, 933
Ambabai v. Ramchandra	347
Ambal Avana v. Sri Meenakshi.	835, 854
Ambalal v. Bihar Hosiery Mills	487
Ambaidas v. Naraindas	506
Ambalika v. Arpana.	900, 901, 902
Ambika v. Dwarka	255
Ambika Dat v. Sukhmani.	590, 631
Ambo v. Ganga Sahai.	282, 284
Ameena v. Radhabinode	1027
Ameer Singh v. Khan Singh	1135
Ameerchand v. Mayasingh	655
Ameeroonissa v. Ashrufoonissa	726
Ameer Hasan v. Mhd. Ejaz Hussain	571
Amibai v. Musso	1135
Amirchand v. Ghasita	433
Amir Chand v. Ram	98
Amir Malik v. Kahan Chand	532
Amirthayyan v. Ketharamayyan	199, 200, 796, 797
Amritolal v. Surnemani.	736, 743
Amjad Ali v. Moniram.	1061, 1062
Anuna Kannu v. Appu.	320, 567
Ammanna v. Satyanarayana	187, 190, 210, 211
Ammarniammal v. Periasami	607
Amraj v. Sambhu	477
Amratlal v. Bapubhai	111
Amraj Singh v. Shambhu	388, 396, 550, 551
Amrit v. Bindsri.	1122, 1123, 1124
Amrit v. Gauri	633
Amrit v. Lakhee Narain.	922, 972
Amrit v. Manik.	301, 303, 329, 903, 994
Amrit Rao v. Abaji	678
Amrit Rao v. Govind.	613, 616
Amrit Rao v. Mukund Rao.	428, 631
Amrit Narayan v. Gaya Singh	579, 1086, 1087, 1088, 1116
Amrita Lal v. Manick Lall	326
Amrito Lal v. Surnomoyee	176, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199
Amritolall v. Rajoneekant	942, 1011, 1122
Amrithayyan v. Kalka	784
Amriteswara v. Murugappa.	879, 882
Amrut v. Mukund.	612, 615, 638
Amrut v. Thagan.	950, 1185
Amulya v. Kalidas	201
Anadi Bai v. Kashibai	210
Anand v. Prankisto.	642, 643, 644

PAGE.

Anand Kishore v. Daiji .. 630
Anand Kunwar v. Court of Wards. 1073, 1096, 1098, 1099
Anand v. Rajendra .. 817
Anand Mohan v. Govind .. 214
Anand Rao v. Administrator-General. 644, 758
Anand Rao v. Durgabai .. 505
Anand Rao v. Ram Das .. 883
Anand Rao v. Wasant Rao. 426, 1183
Anand Rav v. Ganesh. 236, 242, 243
Ananda v. Bhoju Lal .. 850
Ananda v. Indra Bhusan. 1071, 1080
Ananda v. Nownit .. 71 359, 360, 888, 902, 903, 911, 929, 977
Ananda Mohan v. Gour Mohan .. 720, 1087, 1091, 1092
Ananda Prashad v. Ambika Prashad. 335, 339
Ananda Bibi v. Nownit Lal .. 977
Ananda v. Bhojalal .. 850
Anandachari (In re) .. 116
Anandappa v. Totappa .. 293
Anandi v. Hari. 943, 1150
Anandi Bai v. Kashi Bai .. 210
Anandi Bai v. Rajaram .. 1045
Anandi Bai v. Subba Bai .. 663
Anandi v. Harlal .. 769
Anandi Bai v. Hari. 615, 664, 679, 943
Anandilal v. Chundree Bai .. 324
Anandrao v. Joti .. 597
Anandrao v. Vasant Rao .. 434
Anand Rao v. Wasant Rao. 404, 406
Anandrav v. Shankar .. 874
Ananta v. Damodhar .. 631
Ananta v. Ramabai. 171, 995, 1001
Anant v. Gopal .. 412
Anant Ram v. Channulal. 257, 476
Anant Ram v. Collector. 442, 510, 516
Anant Singh v. Durga Singh .. 90, 103, 945, 946
Anant Singh v. Kalka Singh .. 889
Ananthaya v. Vishnu. 163, 321
Anant Krishna v. Prayag Das .. 847
Ananthanarayana v. Kuttalam .. 871
Anathaya v. Vishnu .. 413
Anantoo v. Ram Prasad .. 532
Anantoo v. Ram Rup .. 1077
Anantu v. Ram. 526, 535
Anath v. Bipin .. 484
Anath Nath v. Mackintosh .. 644
Andale v. Secy. of State .. 270
Angammal v. Venkata. 913, 1149, 1163
Angamuthu v. Kolandavellu. 457, 476
Angamuthu v. Ramalinga .. 838
Angamuthu v. Varatharajulu. 1064, 1067
Anglesay v. Hatherton .. 106
Angus v. Dalton .. 92
Anivilla v. Cherla .. 378
Ankamma v. Ramanappa .. 138
Anjona v. Prahlad .. 138
Anmole Kuer v. Kanila Dut .. 895
Annabhat v. Sivappa. 477, 486
Annabhat v. Shivappa. 486, 551, 554, 555
Annadana v. Konammal .. 698

PAGE.

Annad v. Prankisto .. 604
Annagouda v. Bhausaheb .. 1082
Annaji v. Jaggu .. 1068
Annaji v. Chandrabai .. 1135
Annaji v. Narayan .. 871
Annaji v. Vasudev .. 911
Annamalai v. Annamalai .. 927
Annamalai v. Murugasa. 355, 471, 516
Annamalai v. Muthukaruppa .. 848
Annamalai v. Subramanian. 377, 430, 481
Annamah v. Mabbu .. 251
Annapagauda v. Sangadigyappa .. 294, 296, 298, 455
Annapurnamma v. Appayya. 185, 187
Annapuranamma v. Venkamma .. 940
Annapurni v. Collector. 174, 175, 176
Annapurnabai v. Durgapa .. 516
Annapurni v. Forbes. 114, 175, 254
Annapurni v. Swaminatham. 342, 349
Annasami v. Ramkrishna .. 99
Annasami v. Sivagamy .. 220
Annasamy v. Tandavaraya .. 932
Annaya v. Ammakha. 834, 835
Annaya v. Sidaya .. 973
Annayyan v. Chinnan. 930, 931
Annoya v. Chunan .. 1169
Annund Lal v. Guru Narain .. 682
Anokh Singh v. Sapuran .. 543
Anooragee v. Bhugobutty .. 526
Antagi v. Dattaji .. 255
Antamma v. Kaveri .. 90
Anue v. Rattayya .. 188
Anude Koonwar v. Khedoo Lal .. 431
Anund Chand v. Bunoja .. 414
Anund Chunder v. Teetooram .. 1013
Anund Moyee v. Gopal Munder .. 342
Anund Moyun v. Lama .. 430
Anundee v. Khedoolall .. 628
Anundi Bai v. Hari .. 640
Anundomoyee v. Mohendra .. 1059
Anupnarain v. Mahabir .. 1118
Anurago v. Darshan .. 593
Anwar Hossain v. Secy. of State .. 765
Anyaba v. Daji .. 1096
Aodjhya v. Mahadeo. 611, 615
Apaji v. Gangabai .. 339
Apaji v. Ramchandra. 599, 600
Aparna Debi v. Shiva Prasad .. 710
Appa v. Babaji .. 731
Appaji v. Mohan Lal. 924, 926
Appa v. Ranga .. 645
Appana v. Nagid .. 740
Appandai v. Bagubali. 72, 964, 966, 967, 970, 971, 974, 975, 989
Appanienger v. Alameloo .. 186
Appanna v. Narasinga. 879, 882
Apparao v. Gopala. 1130, 1131
Appavu v. Susaiudayan .. 66
Appayya v. Vengu. 223, 225
Appibai v. Khimji. 137, 138
Appoovier v. Rama Subba Aiyan. 664
Appovier v. Rama. 587, 588, 590, 592, 593, 612, 626, 629, 630, 631, 632, 659
Arab Ali v. Mohmud Ali. 436, 730
Arasami v. Chinna .. 749
Ariabudra v. Dorasami .. 548

	PAGE
Ariyaputri v. Alamelu ..	1033
Arjan Singh v. Indar Singh.	1061, 1063
Arlapa v. Narsi ..	98
Armory v. Delamirie ..	606
Arumilli v. Arumilli.	73, 259, 261, 602, 622
Arumilli v. Subbarayadu.	448, 649, 650
Arumith v. Arumith ..	39
Arshad Ali ..	157
Arumugha v. Ranganatha.	643, 644
Arumuga v. Viraraghava.	146, 147, 300
Arunmayi v. Mahendra ..	801
Arumugam v. Ammi ..	793
Arumugam v. Pandigam ..	293
Arumugam v. Sabapathi ..	450
Arumugam v. Tulukanum ..	115
Arumugam v. Vellaichami.	303, 304, 314
Arumugham v. Muthu.	532, 533
Arunachala v. Chidambara.	289, 301, 303
Arunachala v. Sampurnathachi ..	465
Arunachalla v. Vythialinga ..	457
Arunachala v. Zamindar of Sivagiri ..	805
Arunachellam v. Arunachellam ..	130
Arunachellam v. Venkatachallappa.	805, 808, 865
Arunachallan v. Vellaya ..	1097
Arunagiri v. Ranganaki.	940, 1165, 1166
Arundad v. Kuppammal ..	188
Arur Singh v. Mangal ..	117
Arura v. Shivdev ..	1046
Asad Ali v. Haidar Ali ..	342
Asanand v. Tulsanbai.	505, 506
Asaram v. Ratan Singh ..	293
Asa Debi v. Bashi Ram.	344, 346
Asaram v. Hari Singh ..	871
Asaram v. Jagannath ..	641
Aseme v. Krishna ..	804
Asgar v. Akbar Husain ..	636
Asgar Ali v. Mahabhat Ali.	111, 112
Ashabai v. Haji Tyeb.	64, 1157
Asha Bibi v. Ma Kya Yin.	80, 716
Ashanullah v. Kali Kinkar ..	646
Asharbi v. Ishri ..	910
Asher v. Whitlock ..	606
Ashidbai v. Abdulla.	580, 637, 641
Asraf Ali v. Mhd. Nurjjana ..	879
Ashrafi Kuar v. Jai Narain ..	312
Ashrafi Kunwar v. Rupchand.	175, 246, 264, 265
Ashrufooddowlah v. Hyder Hossein ..	162
Ashutosh v. Dourna ..	809
Ashutosh v. Chidam ..	388
Ashutosh v. Doorgachurn.	699, 790, 811, 812
Ashutosh v. Chidanimandal ..	1089
Ashutosh v. Lukhemonia ..	563
Asita v. Nirode.	622, 739
Asita Mohon v. Nirode Mohun.	39, 58, 69, 90, 174, 261
Askaur v. Sawan Singh ..	120
Assignee v. Bidya Sundari ..	79
Assignee v. Ramchandra.	546, 547
Assur v. Ratan Bai ..	262
Asutosh v. Tarapada ..	481
Asudebi v. Bashi Ram ..	343
Athikesavalu v. Ramanujam ..	110
Athvulla v. Gouse ..	883
Atmaram v. Baji Rao.	51, 63, 595, 652, 925, 958
Atmaram v. Banku Mal.	111, 146
Atmaram v. Bhila ..	316
Atmaram v. Bholagir ..	90
Atmaram v. Godhu Ram.	404, 407
Atmaram v. Lala ..	901
Atmaram v. Madhavarav ..	432
Atmaram v. Madho Rao ..	228
Attar Singh v. Thakur Singh.	360, 363, 367, 376
Attorney-General v. Fishmongers Co. ..	819
Attorney-General v. Pearce ..	815
Atul Krishna v. Lalanandaji ..	532
Audippa v. Nallendran.	284, 285
Audh Kumari v. Chandra Dai ..	1149
Aunjona Dasi v. Prahlad Chundar ..	113
Aurabinda v. Monorama.	864, 1122, 1124
Authikesavalu v. Ramanujam.	116, 119, 150, 151, 1152
Avudai v. Ramalinga ..	980
Avayambal v. Kamalambal ..	375
Aviswarya v. Sivaji ..	1034
Aviswarvanandaji v. Sivaji.	1130, 1133
Awadh Ram v. Mahbub Khan ..	535
Ayancheri v. Acholathil ..	869
Aya Butti v. Raj Kishen.	903, 904
Ayaboti v. Raj Krishna ..	127
Ayiswary v. Sivaji.	1146, 1150, 1170
Ayiswarya v. Sivaji	930, 689
Ayyadorai v. Solai Ammal.	246, 1017
Ayyagari v. Ayyagari ..	419
Ayyarani v. Niladaichi ..	261
Ayyasami v. Gurusami.	487, 498
Ayyavu v. Niladatchi ..	260
Azamanila v. Kavinari ..	64
Azimat Singh v. Kalwant Singh ..	597
Azimut v. Hurdwaree ..	731
Azizunnisa v. Tasadduq ..	794
Azizuddin v. Legal Remembrancer.	830
Azkaur v. Savan Singh ..	120

B

Baba Din v. Bansraj ..	482
Baba Din v. Honsraj ..	487
Babai Rao v. Luxman Das.	809, 847
Babaji v. Bagirathi Bai ..	216
Babaji v. Balaji ..	1144
Babaji v. Dattu ..	433
Babaji v. Dhuri ..	450
Babaji v. Kashi Bai.	590, 631
Babaji v. Krishnaji.	289, 389, 395
Babaji v. Laxman Das.	806, 846
Babaji v. Sheshgiri ..	312
Babaji v. Vasudev.	413, 421
Babana v. Jagat Narain ..	609
Babanna v. Parawa.	262, 615
Babu v. Bolo ..	327
Babu v. Dadjirao ..	448
Babu v. Krishnarav ..	1088
Babu v. Official Assignee.	675, 679

	PAGE
Babu v. Ratnoji ..	365
Babu Rani v. Rajendra ..	780
Babu v. Sukka ..	833
Babubhi v. Syamlal ..	366
Babu Singh v. Lal Kuer ..	417
Babu Singh v. Bihari Lall ..	535
Babulal v. Tuma ..	427
Babulal v. Nanku Ram.	920, 923
Babulal v. Nanuk ..	963
Babu Lal v. Kashmiro.	534, 536
Babu Motising v. Durgabai ..	179
Babur Ali v. Sookeea ..	304
Babu Ram v. Mahadeo Ram ..	536
Baboo Nund Kumar v. Moulvi Razunddeen ..	893
Babu Singh v. Behari Lal.	557, 559
Babu Singh v. Rameshwar.	1081, 1082
Babusami v. Narayan ..	973
Bacha Singh v. Chaterpal ..	930
Bachchan Singh v. Kamta Prasad.	293
Bache v. Dharam Das ..	1088
Bachha v. Jugman.	70, 72, 1161
Bachha v. Jugmohan.	70, 1115
Bachan Singh v. Kamta Prasad ..	282
Bachiraju v. Venkatappada ..	70, 72, 463, 464, 502, 943, 1024
Bachoo v. Dharam Das ..	363
Bachoo v. Khushaldas ..	464
Bachoo v. Mankore Bai.	201, 255, 258, 602
Bachoo v. Nagindas.	70, 73, 253
Bacry v. Butlin ..	770
Badam v. Madho Ram ..	532
Badamea v. Fatima Bai ..	126
Badding v. Oliver ..	575
Badhawa v. Hira ..	597
Badhawa v. Sochat ..	910
Badar Rahim v. Badsa Mia ..	876
Badree Lal v. Kantee Pal ..	526
Badri v. Bhugwat ..	610
Badri v. Saraswati ..	1090
Badri Das v. Ratan Lal ..	447
Badri Prasad v. Madanlal ..	535
Badul Singh v. Chuttur Dharee.	432, 433
Bageshar Rai v. (Mt.) Mahadei.	584
Bagot Ali v. Hazari ..	535
Baghirathi v. Ananta ..	332
Bahadur Singh v. Bevi Bahadur ..	183
Bahadur v. Ram Bahadur ..	581
Bahadur v. Prash Nath ..	837
Bahadur Singh (In re) ..	183
Bahadur Singh v. Balchand ..	684
Bahadur Singh v. Mohar Singh ..	907, 927, 1090
Bahadur Singh v. Sultan Husain..	1028, 1072, 1105
Bahadur Singh v. Viru ..	162
Bahanna v. Parava ..	189
Baharilaji v. Rajbai ..	332
Bahurani v. Rajender ..	371
Baiher v. Lakshmana ..	889
Bahoo Lall v. Juma ..	604
Bahore v. Lookain ..	214
Bahru v. Bhuran Singh ..	397
Bahubai v. Manchhabai ..	1149
Bahu Singh v. Rameshwar ..	1073
Bai Appaji v. Khimji ..	330
Baibaiji v. Bai Santok.	64, 99, 103

	PAGE
Baibu v. Lakshmana ..	498
Baidya Nath v. Har Datt ..	864
Bailey v. Harris ..	801
Bai Diwali v. Moti ..	126
Bai Gulab v. Juvanlal ..	123
Bai Kesarra v. Shivasangi ..	715
Baiher Krishna v. Lakshmana.	426, 887
Baiji v. Jamna Das ..	817
Baiji v. Santok ..	82
Baij Nath v. Kedar Nath ..	712
Baij Nath v. Rattan Lal ..	200
Baij Nath v. Shamboo.	223, 275
Baij Nath v. Tej Bali ..	371, 414, 704, 707, 715
Baijnath v. Bissen ..	1059
Baijnath v. Emp., ..	284
Baijnath v. Mahabir.	892, 941, 942
Baij Nath v. Ratan Lal ..	193
Baijnath v. Tej Bali Singh ..	706
Baijun v. Brij Bhookun ..	1110, 1112, 1113, 1119
Bai Kashi v. Jamnadoss.	123, 126
Baikunta v. Kali Charan ..	246
Baikunta v. Kasinath ..	1161
Baisnav v. Kishore ..	801
Bai Kunthi v. Adhar Chandra ..	302
Bai Jina v. Kharwa ..	145
Bai Jivi v. Narsingh ..	150
Bai Kesser Bai v. Hansraj ..	53, 70
Bai Mach Bai v. Hir Bai ..	80
Bai Nani v. Chuni Lal.	223, 225
Bai Premkuar v. Bhika ..	146
Bai Ugri v. Patel (Vatel) Purshottam.	128, 142
Bai Vigli v. Nansa Nagar.	141, 144
Baja Khan v. Birju ..	646
Bajai Bahadur v. Indarpal ..	1042
Baji Rao v. Paika.	931, 932
Bajrangi v. Manokarnika.	902, 941, 1066, 1075, 1076, 1077, 1080
Baker v. Sutton ..	804
Baker Ali v. Anjuman ..	927
Bakhtawar v. Bhagwana.	1080, 1092, 1101
Bakubai v. Manchhabai.	993, 994
Bal v. Shrinivas.	226, 228
Balabai v. Mahadu.	215, 224, 225, 229
Balabux v. Rukhmabai.	433, 594, 616, 662, 663, 664, 673, 674, 675, 679
Balagir v. Dhonegir ..	174
Balagobind v. Narain Lal ..	419
Balagovind v. Ram Kuar ..	1033
Balaji v. Ganesh ..	421
Balaji v. Keshowji ..	444
Balaji v. Maina.	692, 964
Balaji v. Nana.	444, 455
Balak Ram v. Amir Chand ..	226
Balakee v. Court of Wards.	362, 363
Balakidas v. Keshavlal ..	892
Balakrishna v. Muthuswamy.	444, 448, 449, 568, 650
Balkinson v. Kunjilal ..	74
Balakrishna v. Raju.	663, 664
Balamba v. Krishnayya ..	725
Balamma v. Pullayya.	902, 903, 983
Balappa v. Chambasappa ..	295
Balaram v. Ramchandra.	437, 612, 617, 633, 636

PAGE

Balarami v. Pera .. 274
Balas Kunwar v. Deoraj, .. 726
(See Bilas Kunwar v. Deoraj.)
Balasawmy v. Venkatasamy .. 857
Balasubrahmanya v. Subbayya. 964, 975, 976
Balbhadra v. Bhawani .. 1096
Baldeo v. Bhagawanti .. 607
Baldeo v. Gobind .. 836
Baldeo v. Jumna. 538, 539
Baldeo v. Mahabir .. 1026
Baldeo v. Mathura .. 913
Baldeo v. Moburak Ali. 449, 450
Baldeo v. Shamlal. 444, 447
Baldeo Prasad v. Raja Fateh Singh .. 1054
Baldeo v. Somessur .. 508
Baldeo v. Udal Singh .. 574
Bal Gangadhar v. Sakwar Bai .. 801
Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas Pandit. 176, 200, 204, 207
Balgir v. Dhondgir. 62, 114
Bal Gobind v. Narain Lal. 415, 417, 498, 547
Balgobind v. Hirumanee .. 1100
Balgobind v. Ram Kumar. 1098, 1100
Bali v. Girji .. 595
Bali v. Husani .. 766
Bal Kishen v. Ram Narain. 590, 599, 603, 627, 631, 663, 664, 679
Balkrishna v. Ramkrishna .. 594
Balkrishna v. Gopal .. 505
Balkrishna v. Hari .. 617
Balkrishna v. Hiralal. 462, 1051, 1083
Balkrishna v. Janardhan .. 491
Balkrishna v. Lakshman .. 70, 943
Balkrishna v. Maro .. 456
Balkrishna v. Municipality of Mahad .. 476
Balkrishna v. Muthusamy. 516, 649
Bal Krishna v. Raju .. 616
Bal Krishna v. Ramkrishna. 588, 590, 616, 961, 968
Balkrishna v. Savitribai. 231, 901, 902, 929
Balkrishna v. Uttar Narayan. 232, 233
Ballab Kant v. Kishenpria .. 200
Ballia v. Emp .. 63
Ballin v. Ballin. 795, 796
Balraj v. Mahadeo .. 755
Bal Rajaram v. Maneklal .. 533
Balsukhram v. Lallubhai .. 341
Balu v. Lahoo Sambhaji. 212, 713, 718, 765, 905
See Balu v. Sambhaji .. 212
Balsundaram v. Kamakshi .. 1140
Balubai v. Tanu Bai .. 606
Balugri v. Valel Purshottam .. 142
Balusami v. Narayana. 966, 967, 969, 970, 971, 972
Balusu v. Balusu .. 127
Baluswamy v. Venkataswamy. 808, 839
Balvantrav v. Purushotam. 740, 1029
Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao. 70, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 79, 1032
Balvantrao v. Bayabai. 219, 230
Balwantrao v. Purushottam .. 1030

PAGE

Balwant Rao v. Puranmal .. 865
Balwant Singh v. Clancy. 420, 453, 501
Balwant Singh v. Ram Kishore. 71, 747
Balwant Singh v. Mt. Kesar Kuer. 511
Balwant Singh v. Roshan Singh. 164, 321
Bamundoss v. Mt. Tarinee. 183, 255, 258, 259, 989, 1010
Banamali v. Arjun Sen .. 73
Banarsi Das v. Sumat Prasad .. 264
Bandam v. Bandam .. 1158
Bandamoo v. Wazir Singh .. 631
Bandaru v. Bandaru. 215, 219, 227
Bandhu Prasad v. Dhirai .. 299
Banee Madhub v. Bhagaobuty .. 431
Bannarjee v. Sita Nath .. 807
Banga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore. 513, 514, 1077, 1079, 1080
Bangaramma v. Bramhaze .. 319
Bangaru v. Vigoyamachi .. 340
Bangbutty v. Radha Kissno .. 1033
Bangu Bai v. Subai .. 347
Bani Ram v. Man Singh .. 549
Banka Behari v. Raj Kumar .. 731
Bankey Lal v. Durga Prasad. 547, 551, 554, 555, 651, 652
Banke Lal v. Shanti Prasad .. 1188
Bank Rai v. Bilse .. 342
Bank of Bombay v. Raghunathji. 470
Bank of Hindustan v. Premchand. 1123
Bannoo v. Kashi Ram .. 429
Bannu v. Kashiram .. 433
Banseedhur v. Bindeseree. 276, 282
Bansee Lal v. Achadh .. 453
Bansidhar v. Ganpatlal .. 290
Bansidhar v. Ganeshi. 912, 984
Bansi Dhar v. Lachmi .. 942
Bansidhar v. Lalta Prasad .. 481
Bansilal v. Govindlal .. 820
Bansolochan v. Jagannath .. 1104
Banwarilal v. Daya Sunker. 293, 460
Banwari Lal v. Mahesh. 463, 547
Banwari Lal v. Sheo Shankar .. 419, 420, 425, 456, 499
Bapiraju v. Ramchandra .. 877
Bappu v. Anna Malai. 418, 459
Bapu v. Kashinath .. 1150
Bapu Rani v. Rajendra .. 778
Bapuji v. Dattu .. 994
Bapuji v. Gangadhar .. 505
Bapuji v. Mansukhram .. 411
Bapuji v. Pandurang .. 669
Barabi v. Deb Kamini .. 614
Barada Prasad v. Krishna Chandra. 1109
Barahi v. Dekhamini .. 604
Barati v. Deb Kamini .. 617
Baramanund v. Chowdhary .. 622
Baramanund v. Krishna Charan .. 261
Barandeo v. Rupnarain .. 536
Barbonicoal v. Gokulanand .. 881
Barkatunnissa v. Fazal Haq .. 315
Barandeo v. Meltugh. 281, 282
Barodo v. Hemdata .. 853
Barmappa v. Ujjanagauda. 166, 168
Baroda Prosad v. Gajendra Nath. 303
Barot v. Barot .. 246
Barot v. Muli .. 801
Barry v. Butlı .. 772

	PAGE
Baruck Chunder v. Huro Sunker.	263
Barugapalli v. Nendigaw ..	615
Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank ..	474
Basangauda v. Rudrappa ..	944
Basangavda v. Basangavda. 1050,	1071
Basansa Sen v. Aghore Nath ..	1194
Basanta v. Chedilal ..	307
Basanta v. Jogendra. 69, 70, 674,	675
Basanta v. Kamikshya. 276, 430, 1131, 1135, 1159,	1161
Basant v. Narayaniah ..	310
Basant Kumar v. Ram Shankar. 1023, 1024,	2027
Basanta v. Lala Ram Shankar ..	73
Basanta v. Mohesh ..	410
Basant v. Muna ..	763
Basdeo v. Gharib Das ..	840
Basdeo v. Sri Kishen ..	860
Basant Kumar v. Lala Ram. 91, 103, 157, 277, 571,	618
Basant Singh v. Bhagwan Kuar ..	822
Basappa v. Fakirappa. 1075, 1078,	1081
Basantrav v. Mantappa ..	91
Basappa v. Gurulingawa .. 235,	944
Basant Singh v. Brij Raj. 215, 219,	265
Basappa v. Rayava. 914, 930, 934,	944
Basappa v. Shidramappa. 184,	204
Basava v. Lingangauda. 61, 90, 100, 101, 232, 234,	235
Basha v. Indar Kunwar ..	231
Basini v. Rupsingh ..	339
Basha v. Jugmohan ..	1155
Bashebi v. Makhanlal ..	59
Bashetiappa v. Shivlingappa. 214, 215, 229, 230,	267
Bashambar v. Amarnath ..	76
Bashikar v. Thalukdar ..	882
Bashist v. Bindeswari ..	130
Basoo v. Basoo ..	199
Baswa v. Bhagwan Koer ..	821
Bassanta v. Manikshya ..	1162
Basudeo v. Gopal ..	246
Basudeo v. Jugal Kishore ..	859
Bastard v. Smith ..	92
Basvant Rao v. Mautappa ..	712
Basvant v. Malappa ..	230
Bassanta v. Motilal. 231, 646,	655
Batakrishna v. Gopal Krishna. 596,	599
Bataji v. Vasudeb ..	413
Batas Koer v. Lachman Singh. 224,	225
Batchu v. Vajula ..	295
Bati Maharani v. Collector ..	294
Batoolal v. Ekstrand ..	311
Bawa v. Bishen ..	757
Bawan Das v. Chiene ..	576
Bawani v. Ambabay ..	249
Bayabai v. Bala. 179, 181, 184, 226, 236,	242
Bayana v. Dinkar ..	953
Bazayat Hoosain v. Dooli Chand.	344
Bazloor v. Shumsoonissa. 147, 148, 149,	150
Beanfort (Duke) v. Berty ..	275
Becha v. Mouthina ..	329
Becha v. Mothini ..	339
Becharam v. Thakoormonee ..	689
Bechur v. Lukmee ..	1029
Bechar v. Lakshmi ..	1030
Behari Lal v. Shiv Narayan ..	864
Beem Churn v. Heeralall ..	176
Beema v. Jamasjee ..	740
Beenchurn v. Heeralall. 741,	792
Beerchunder v. Neelkissen ..	90
Beer Chunder v. Raj Coomar. 319, 341,	342
Beer Pertab v. Rajendra Pertab. 371, 693,	707
Bee Pertab v. Rajunder. 721,	747
Beg v. Alladitta ..	103
Beharee v. Madho Pershad ..	437
Beharee Lall v. Mewa Koonwar ..	580
Beharilal v. Daud Husain ..	1117
Behari v. Ganga ..	801
Behari Lal v. Hukamchand ..	415
Beharilalji (Shri) v. Rajbai ..	342
Behari Lal v. Kailas Chandra. 250, 251,	405
Behari Lal v. Madho Lal ..	1066
Behari Lal v. Mhd. Muttaki ..	866
Behari Lal v. Sat Narain ..	561
Behari Lal v. Shib Lal. 234,	235
Behary Lal v. Juggo. 801,	1146
Bejay Bahadur v. Bhupindra ..	927
Bejoy v. Girendra. 580, 1051, 1061, 1067,	1101
Bejoy Gopal v. Krishna. 1047,	1051
Bejoy Gopal v. Nil Ratan. 1047,	1051
Bejoy Krishna v. Ashutosh ..	567
Belas Kore v. Bhawanee ..	430
Bell v. Wardell ..	95
Bemola Dossee v. Mohun Dossee. 341, 470,	482
Benares Bank v. Hari Narain. 474,	477
Bendoj v. Sita Ram ..	817
Benee Madhub v. Bahgoobuty ..	435
Bengal Insurance Co. v. Velayammal ..	725
Benimadhab v. Basdeo ..	557
Beni Madho v. Jagat Singh ..	1080
Beni Parshad v. Gur Devi. 620,	664
Beni Pershad v. Puran Chand. 522,	1026
Bene Prasad v. Hardai Bibi. 49,	126
Beni Ram v. Man Singh. 388, 393, 394,	542
Benode v. Shashi Bushan ..	120
Benode v. Sita Ram ..	830
Bepin Behari v. Atul Krishna. 151,	153
Bepin Behari v. Durga Charan ..	1081
Bepin Behari v. Lal Mohan. 568, 604,	607
Ber Narain v. Teencowria ..	427
Besant v. Narayaniah. 286, 287, 306, 307,	309
Berdeo v. Mhd. Yyusal ..	397
Bessesur v. Luchmessur Singh. 437,	457
Bethel v. Hilyard ..	9
Beti Kuar v. Janki Kuar. 608, 609,	610
Beukot v. Jeshankar ..	758
Bey v. Alla Ditta ..	73
Bhabati v. Sonodra ..	1037
Bhabangana v. Horendra. 801,	950
Bhadia v. Bhaji. 69, 70,	983
Bhabul Das v. Bholanath ..	1031
Bhabut Daee v. Bholanath ..	1132

PAGE

Bhabataran v. Behari .. 827
Bhagaban v. Praparna .. 171
Bhagaban v. Ram Praparna. 994, 995
Bhagbat v. Grija. 526, 527
Bhagabati v. Kalicharan. 775, 782, 787
Bhagabatti v. Kannailal. 328, 329, 342, 345, 748, 749, 1133
Bhagabati v. Sohodra. 76, 1038
Bhagabatti v. Bhola Nath. 1037, 1039, 1041
Bhagaraja v. Adapalli. 396, 397
Bhagat Mal v. Abdul Karim .. 559
Bhagat Ram v. Sahib Devi .. 344
Bhagat Singh v. Santi .. 129
Bhagbut v. Huro Gobind .. 435
Bhagbut Prasad v. Girja Koer. 517, 560, 561, 562
Bhagabut Pershad v. Gerja Koer. 520, 522, 559
Bhageshar v. Mahadei .. 581
Bhagbutli v. Bholanath .. 1043
Bhagirathi v. Anantha .. 341
Bhagirathi v. Dwarka .. 327
Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Ram. 388, 391, 392
Bhagirathi v. Kunhujirao. 1030, 1033
Bhagirathi Bai v. Baya. 940, 982, 1149
Bhagirathi Bai v. Ravji .. 340
Bhagirathi Bai v. Sadashivrao .. 379
Bhagoji v. Bapuji .. 631
Bhagni v. Maharaj Singh .. 929
Bhagu .. 157
Bhagwanlal v. Divali .. 1145
Bhagwan v. Krishnaji .. 421
Bhagwan Deen v. Myna Bai. 604, 605, 606, 1029, 1171
Bhagwan v. Digbijai Singh .. 1181
Bhagwan v. Ujagar. 412, 442, 456, 1073
Bhagwan v. Warubai .. 38
Bhagwan v. Kalashankar .. 762
Bhagwana v. Ramchand .. 300
Bhagwan v. Krishnaji. 415, 418
Bhagwan Baksh v. Mahesh Baksh. 162
Bhagwan Das v. Gajadhar .. 1161
Bhagwan Das v. Mahadeo. 395, 396
Bhagwandas v. Rajmal. 59, 79, 101, 177, 194, 264
Bhagwan Das v. Ramul .. 265
Bhagwan Devi v. Nibal Chand .. 902
Bhagwandeen v. Myna Bai. 69, 70, 71, 72, 891, 936, 937, 951, 1034, 1040; 1128, 1135, 1139, 1160
Bhagwan Din v. Ajudhia .. 1139
Bhagwan Koer v. Bose. 48, 57, 59, 60, 63, 79, 80, 1192, 1194
Bhagwan Kunwar v. Mohan Singh. 430, 1139
Bhagwan Singh v. Bakshiram .. 450
Bhagwan Sing v. Bechavdos .. 802
Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh. 39, 40, 70, 73, 215, 217, 222, 223
Bhagwan Singh v. Gurdial Singh .. 273
Bhagwan Singh v. Kewall Kunwar. 325
Bhagwan Singh v. Prem Singh .. 552
Bhagwan Singh v. Ujagar Singh. 1056
Bhagwani v. Khushiram .. 64
Bhagwani Kunwar v. Mohan Singh .. 1139

PAGE

Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu. 83, 84, 915, 1181
Bhagwanti v. Mami Ram .. 340
See Bhagwat v. Nivratti. 494, 1048
Bhagwat Rao v. Punja Ram .. 1026
Bhagwanta v. Sukhi. 1089, 1097
Bhagwat Bhaskar v. Nivaratti. 509, 1049, 1054
Bhagwat Dayal v. Ram Ratan .. 403
Bhagwati Koor v. Dhanukdhari. 1064, 1067, 1069, 1071
Bhagwat Prasad v. Murarilal .. 196
Bhagwat Sahai v. Bepin Behari. 410, 639
Bhagwat v. Viralli .. 1059
Bhagwati v. Bhagwati .. 595
Bhagwati v. Jagdam .. 1118
Bhagwati v. Jardan .. 1087
Bhagwati v. Murarilal .. 1123
Bhagwati v. Ram Jatan. 1048, 1063
Bhagwanti v. MacDonald & Co.. 510
Bhaidas v. Gulab. 792, 794, 1033
Bhairon v. Saran Rai .. 410
Bhai Narindar v. Achal Ram .. 718
Bhajat Ram v. Sahib Devi .. 343
Bhala v. Parbhu. 493, 496, 509, 544, 1058
Bhalton Prasad v. Ram Chandra. 282
Bhan v. Budha. See Bhau v. Budha. 44
Bhan v. Narasagonder .. 193
Bhanga v. Din Mahomed .. 1167
Bhanga Chandra v. Jagatkishore. 516, 517
Bhanrao v. Gangi .. 609
Bhaoni v. Maharaj Singh. 119, 929
Bharat v. Mhd. Mahbub Ali .. 436
Bharat Singh v. Jeaboha Lal .. 414
Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei. 331, 341, 342, 346
Bharat Singh v. Sheo Bodh Lal .. 420
Bharmangavda v. Rudrapgavda. 1024, 1025, 1032
Bharmappa v. Bharmagauda .. 993
Bharmappa v. Ujjan .. 993
Bharvani v. Timmanna .. 844
Bhasba v. Indar Kunwar .. 193
Bhashist v. Bindesware .. 609
Bhaskar v. Mahadev. 1024, 1054, 1129, 1144, 1632
Bhaskara v. Narayanasamy .. 858
Bhasker v. Vijalal. 451, 455, 509
Bhaskari v. Bhaskaran .. 447
Bhaskori v. Bhaskaram .. 444
Bhau v. Budha .. 427
Bhau v. Gopala. 494, 497, 1058
Bhau v. Govind .. 1115
Bhau v. Narasagouda .. 207
Bhaurao v. Radhabai .. 595
Bhau v. Raghunath. 110, 1023, 1032, 1135, 1144, 1145, 1171, 1172
Bhau Nanaji v. Sundaribai .. 90, 92
Bhau Saheb v. Ramgauda. 252, 1073, 1076, 1082
Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath. 295, 296, 298, 304
Bhawani v. Chait Ram .. 1080
Bhawani v. Deo Raj. 713, 718
Bhawani v. Himmat Bahadur. 1058, 1059
Bhawani v. Juggernath. 448, 449, 615

	PAGE
Bhawani v. Omchiena ..	471
Bhawani v. Ram Dei.	146, 149, 557
Bhawani Prasad v. Juggernath.	497, 649
Bhawat v. Nivrathi ..	388
Bhaya Dirgui v. Pande ..	104
Bhayalal v. Churaman.	164, 322, 941
Bhayalal v. Sunderia ..	322
Bhayah Ram v. Bhyaha Ugur Singh	50, 70
Bheknarain v. Januk Singh ..	517
Bhekhari v. Sri Ramchandra.	630, 806, 809, 820, 822, 824
Bhem Singh v. Luchho ..	287
Bhikaji v. Yeswantrav.	519, 520
Bhikhabai v. Purshottam.	414, 415, 417, 758
Bhikji v. Jagannath ..	1096
Bhikno v. Chamela ..	284
Bhikno v. Chamelakoer.	307, 308, 309, 313
Bhiko v. Chandra.	279, 280
Bhikubai v. Mahadhevi ..	331
Bhikubai v. Hariba ..	331
Bhiku v. Buttu ..	444
Bhiku v. Puttu ..	447
Bhikya v. Babu ..	940
Bhim Singh v. Ram Singh ..	532
Bhima v. Dhulapa.	151, 162
Bhimabai v. Gurunath Gouda.	191, 192, 207, 208, 209
Bhimacharya v. Ramacharya.	1151, 1157
Bhimappa v. Basawa ..	189
Bhimareddi v. Bhaskar ..	1061
Bhimawa v. Sangawa.	203, 210
Bhimrao v. Ganga ..	184
Bhimrao v. Punjab Rao (1935) ..	73
Bhimal Dass v. Choonee Lal ..	621
Bhirgu Nath v. Narsingh ..	460
Bhirjee Nath v. Narsing.	420, 547
Bhishwanthrao v. O. R. ..	545
Bhittoo Kanwar v. Kesho Prasad.	104
Bhoba Tarini v. Peary Lall ..	339
Bhobunessuree v. Gouree Dass ..	995
Bhogaraju v. Adapali ..	1081
Bhogaraju v. Adapalli.	1061, 1087, 1116
Bhogabati v. Sohodra ..	1036
Bhola v. Chandi ..	1100
Bhola Nath v. Ajoodhia ..	437
Bhola Nath v. Bhagabatti ..	1037
Bhola Nath v. Emperor.	124, 126
Bhola Nath v. Ghasi Ram ..	602
Bholanath v. Kartick Kissen.	537, 555
Bhola Nath v. Sabitra ..	909
Bhola Umar v. Kausilla.	333, 1204
Bholar v. Emp. ..	63
Bholi v. Chimni ..	349
Bholu Umar v. Kausilla.	130, 936, 937, 1023
Bhoobun v. Hurish Chander.	750, 792
Bhoobun v. Mudden ..	1025
Bhoobun Mayee v. Ramkishore.	194, 196, 197, 200, 201, 208, 210, 257, 1023
Bhoobun Mohini v. Hurrish Chunder ..	793
Bhoobunessuree v. Gouree Dass ..	171
Bhoolee Singh v. Neemo ..	741
Bhoogaraju v. Addenath ..	1048
Bhoorun v. Sahebzada ..	558
Bhoteotarini v. Peary Lal ..	1135
Bhowani Prasad v. Juggernath ..	576
Bhuban Mohini v. Kumudbala.	436, 730
Bhubaneshwar v. Brojo Nath ..	810
Bhuggabutty v. Goroo Prosonna.	739, 809, 812, 813, 824, 892, 1021
Bhuggat Singh v. Boodho ..	273
Bhugobutty v. Domun ..	427
Bhuggobutty v. Jogendra ..	825
Bhugwan v. Luchmee ..	1044
Bhugwandeen v. Myna Baee.	1002, 1009, 1024, 1025, 1033, 1126
Bhupendra v. Amarendra ..	194
Bhujagonda v. Babu ..	167
Bhujanga v. Ramayamma.	1134, 1135
Bhujanga Rao v. Maloji Rao.	371, 757
Bhujangouda v. Bala Bokare ..	193
Bhupal v. Tavanappa.	328, 600
Bhupati Nath v. Ramlal.	748, 805, 812, 816, 828
Bhupendra v. Amarendra ..	1027
Bhupendra v. Goonendra.	1134, 1159
Bhup Kounwar v. Balleer Sahai.	817
Bhup Singh v. Beharilal.	421, 507, 537, 558
Bhup Singh v. Chedda Singh ..	657
Bhup Singh v. Jai Ram.	900, 901
Bhup Singh v. Jhumman Singh ..	1002
Bhup Singh v. Luchman ..	332
Bhura v. Bansrai.	449, 458
Bhura v. Ramrao ..	1063
Bhurmchand v. Rajmohishee ..	407
Bhushan Rao v. Subbayya ..	1058
Bhutnath v. Secy. of State.	145, 1167
Bhuttacharjee v. Puddomookhee.	340
Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhayah Ugar Singh ..	967
Bhyrobee v. Nub Kissen.	903, 1012
Bhyroochund v. Russomunee ..	623
Bhyrub v. Nubo Chunder.	342, 343, 349
Bidhata v. Ramcharihat ..	641
Bidhu Mudhi v. Satishchandra ..	350
Bidya Prasad v. Bhupnarain ..	548
Bihari Lal v. Sat Narain.	546, 547
Bijia Gopal v. Krishna Mahishi ..	1028
Bijoy v. Nil Ratan ..	1105
Bijoy Gopal v. Girindra Nath.	384, 1075
Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna.	1072, 1105, 1106, 1107, 1122
Bijoy v. Ranjit ..	197
Bijoya v. Unpoorna ..	1024
Bijai Miser v. Kali Prasad ..	659
Bijra v. Puraj Sundari ..	754
Bika Singh v. Lachman Singh ..	522
Bikramjeet v. Phoolhas ..	631
Bilash Konwar v. Bhawanee.	401, 430
Bilas Kunwar v. Dasraj.	439, 725, 726, 727, 729, 730, 733
Bilaso v. Dina Nath.	608, 609
Bimala v. Tarasundari ..	449
Bimbla v. Mohun ..	452
Bimola v. Dangoo.	1009, 1070
Binda v. Kaunsilia.	144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150

	PAGE
Bindaji v. Mathurabai.	299, 305, 313, 458
Binda Kuar v. Bhonda Dass	.. 495
Binda Kuar v. Lalita Prasad	.. 1092
Bindu Kuar v. Lalita Prasad.	238, 267
Bind Bahadur v. Returaji	.. 1107
Bindeshri Prasad v. Balakha	.. 708
Bindo v. Sham Lal.	282, 283, 284, 308
Bindoo v. Bolie	.. 1095
Bindra v. Mathura	.. 679
Bindu v. Bugli	.. 308
Bindu v Bugli	.. 263
Bindu v. Kausilia	.. 141
Binode v. Purdhan.	939, 940
Binodji v. Mathura	.. 280
Binodini v. Susthes	.. 940
Bipro Pershad v. Renadeyee	.. 427
Bipradas v. Sadhan Chendra	.. 744
Birajim v. Luchmi Narain	.. 72
Birbhadra v. Kalpataru	.. 260
Birdhi Chand v. Mariain Bi	.. 282
Bireshar v. Ambica Charan	.. 302
Bireswar v. Ardha Chandar.	226, 227
Bireswar v. Kamal Kumar.	1110, 1113
Birkett (In re)	.. 800
Bisan Daval v. Jaiseri.	961, 1052
Bisewar v. Bhagabati	.. 636
Bishahar v. Fateh Lal	.. 341
Bishambar Nath v. Amar Nath.	576, 581
Bishamber v. Fatehlal.	289, 487
Bishamber Das v. Gobind Das	.. 85
Bishambhar v. Kanshi Parshad	.. 637
Bishambhar v. Sudasheeb	.. 453
Bishambhar Nath v. Sheo Narain.	481
Bishen Dayal v. Jaiseri	.. 973
Bishenchand v. Asmaida.	574, 624, 645, 667, 750, 755, 782
Bishen Chand v. Nadir	.. 847
Bishen Dass v. Sirdar Dial Singh.	496
Bishen Perkash v. Bawa Misser.	375, 747
Bisheshar v. Ram Prasad.	643, 699
Bisheshur v. Mata Golam.	52, 145, 913, 1164, 1167
Bishen Singh v. Amir Chand	.. 273
Bishen Singh v. Kidar Nath.	481, 485
Bishmanalli v. Gangadaer	.. 360
Bishnath v. Chandrika.	795, 1033
Bishni v. U. Hamchand	.. 474
Bishnath v. Ramchurn	.. 172
Bishunath v. Sheo Bahadur	.. 220
Bissessor Ram v. Rama Kant	.. 553
Bishwanath v. Kayasth Trading Co.	.. 482
Bishwanath v. Ram Prasad	.. 1046
Bissessur Lall v. Luchmessur.	362, 437, 450, 485, 518
Bissonath v. Bamasoondery	.. 793
Bissonath v. Bindesari	.. 532
Bisunath v. Ramnath	.. 1046
Bissumbhur v. Suorodhuny	.. 429
Bistobehari v. Baijnath	.. 1096
Bisto Pershad v. Radha.	1131, 1141, 1161
Bistoprea v. Basoodeb	.. 719
Biswanath v. Durga	.. 1057
Biswanath v. Jagdip Narain.	432, 442, 511
Bishwanath v. Gajadhar	.. 361
Biswanath v. Khantomni	.. 1095
Biswanath v. Ram Ratan	.. 1049
Biswanath v. Shorashibala.	124, 126
Bishwanath Singh v. Jugal Kishore	.. 273
Biswanath Singh v. Kayastha Trading Corporation	.. 478
Blasson v. Blasson	.. 668
Blewett v. Tregonning	.. 94
Bobbaldi v. Eramma	.. 265
Bobha v. Bobha	.. 1090
Bodhu v. Goli	.. 1058
Bodī v. Venkataswamy	.. 705
Bodhyarayan v. Omrao	.. 914
Bodh Singh v. Ganesh	.. 437
Bodhrao v. Nursingh	.. 648
Bodhu Narain v. Omrao	.. 904
Bodo Mal v. Kishni Bai	.. 70
Boidyanath v. Durga Churn	.. 1011
Boolchand v. Janoke	.. 123
Boolechand v. Janakee	.. 142
Bolee Singh v. Bussunt.	270, 272
Boma Nath v. Rajonimoni	.. 331
Bolwant Rao v. Baji Rao	.. 174
Booma Sundree v. Bama Soondu-ree	.. 1100
Boomad Lall v. Dawkee Nundun.	280, 380
Bonnerji v. Sita Nath.	852, 856
Bono v. Bolee	.. 362
Bose v. Bhagwan Koer	.. 59, 60
Bosvile v. Attorney-General	.. 162
Boyse v. Rossborough	.. 768
Brahmappa v. Papama	.. 1154
Brahma Sastri v. Sumitramma.	187, 188
Braja Bhukan v. Bichan	.. 994
Brajalal v. Jiban Krishna.	1007, 1076 1113
Braja Sundari v. Luchmi	.. 821
Bramhadin v. Ram Lakhan	.. 296
Branomoye v. Kristo	.. 1116
Bray v. Fromont	.. 479
Brendow v. Sundrabai.	702, 801
Brickwood v. Young	.. 655
Bridger's Case	.. 854
Briggs v. Wilson	.. 494
Briks	.. 795
Brigalal v. Jiban	.. 1110
Brijbhukandas v. Ghashiram.	299, 305
Brij Bhukan Das v. Damodar	.. 305
Brijbhukhanji v. Gookulootanji	.. 220
Brij Gopal v. Girindra Nath	.. 384
Brij Indar v. Janki Koer.	1136, 1138, 1139, 1146, 1168
Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Rani Janki Koer.	371, 446, 1136, 1138, 1146
Brijlal v. Jaishi Ram	.. 449
Brij Lal v. Sura	.. 734
Brijlal v. Suraj Bikram	.. 735
Brij Kishore v. Harbans	.. 731
Brij Kishore v. Radha Gobind	.. 1017
Brijnandan v. Bidya	.. 501
Brijnath v. Srigopal	.. 427
Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad.	327, 442, 499, 526, 527, 532, 534, 536, 558, 1062
Brijokishoree v. Sreenath.	194, 1103

PAGE

Brijrai v. Sheo Dan .. 645
Brij Raj v. Sheonondon Singh. 621, 623, 758, 760
Brijraj Singh v. Sheodon Singh .. 598
Brij v. Sheoraj .. 942
Brinda v. Radhika. 328, 329, 347, 348
Brinda v. Kanhailal .. 328
Brindaban v. Chundra Kurmokar. 116, 151
Brindaban v. Jamna .. 501
Brindaku v. Chandra Kumar .. 138
Brindavana v. Radhamani. 57, 58, 929
Brinjnandan v. Bidya Prasad .. 119
Brinkley v. A. G. .. 9, 157
Broadbent v. Wilks .. 94
Brocklebank v. Thompson .. 92
Brojendra v. Prosunna Kumar .. 293
Brojendra Nath v. Lalit Mohan. 639, 641
Brojo Kishore v. Srinath. 946, 948, 1106
Brojo Mohan v. Gouree. 902, 903, 946, .. 948
Brojo Mohun v. Hurro Lal .. 873
Brojomayee v. Trilokhomohini .. 828
Brojo Nath v. Jugeswar .. 1113
Brojosoondery v. Luchmee .. 826
Bromley v. Bromley .. 149
Broughton v. Mercier .. 763
Broughton (In the goods of) .. 763
Brown v. Brown .. 765
Bua v. Gunga .. 597
Buchi v. Jagapathy .. 1029
Budansha v. Fatma Bi .. 145
Budawa v. Gurdit Singh .. 320
Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh. 39, 924, 926, 948, 950, 952, 967
Budh Sagar v. Bishnu Sahai .. 994
Budh Singh v. Niradharan. 877, 878
Budha v. Sahadra .. 996
Budha Kuar v. Sahodia. 914, 915
Budha Mal v. Bhagwan Das. 432, 631
Budhu Singh v. Kawalnuin .. 414
Budree v. Choonilal. 877, 878, 879, 882
Budree Lall v. Kantoo Lall .. 559
Buggobun v. Prancoomaree .. 505
Bujraj v. Bhyropersand .. 894
Bukshun v. Doolhin .. 290
Bulakdas v. Keshoolal .. 892
Bula v. Bhagan .. 284
Bulakee v. Indurputtee .. 631
Bulakhi Das v. Keshav Lall. 912, 1024, 1033
Buldeo v. Jumna. 111, 112
Buldeo v. Mohamaya .. 111
Bullub Kant v. Kishenpria .. 170
Bullubh Sen v. Omesh Chunder .. 1092
Bunia Hussain v. Haji Unisa .. 705
Bunseedhur v. Bindesree. 283, 290
Bur Singh v. Uttam Singh. 769, 772
Buraikchutter v. Greedharee Singh. 442
Burjari v. Bha Gana. 90, 101
Burugapalli v. Nandigam. 660, 661
Bury v. Philpot .. 162
Buth v. Nur Mahammad .. 272
Buta Singh v. Dial Singh .. 225
Buzloor v. Shumsoonnissa .. 726
Byinath v. Ramoodin. 421, 422, 423, 657
Bykant v. Kisto Soonderee .. 200
Bysack v. Cossinath. 366, 1057

PAGE

C

C.F.R. v. Mansfield .. 162
Callicart v. Eyskene .. 814
Callisher v. Bischoffsheim .. 573
Callychurn v. Bumggobutty .. 277
Cannu v. Bhagwati .. 629
Carleton v. Leighton 667, 1092
Cartwright v. Cartwright .. 769
Carve v. Long .. 814
Cassinaut v. Huroosoondry 1009, 1048
Cassumbhoy v. Ahmadbhoy. 427, 437, 633
Cave v. Mackenzie .. 276
Chabildas v. Ramdas 367, 375
Chadwick v. Manning .. 263
Chahman v. Smith .. 92
Chaggan v. Ramchandra .. 312
Chainsukh v. Parbati .. 273
Chaita v. Madan .. 684
Chaiko v. Janaki .. 247
Chakouri v. Ganga Prosad 533, 541
Chakradhar v. Shah Kant. 1037, 1139
Chakradhuj v. Beer Chunder .. 120
Chalakonda v. Chalakonda. 271, 362, 375, 379, 401, 1164
Chalamayya v. Varadayya. 449, 451, 452, 458, 476
Chalam Ram v. Kishen Chand .. 486
Chala Ram v. Kishan Chand .. 484
Challa v. Challa. 274 275
Challa v. Pallury. 231, 232, 1069
Challagundla v. Madalli 1099, 1103, 1121
Chamali Kuar v. Ram Prasad .. 547
Chaman Lal v. Doshi Ganesh. 965, 975, 977, 1030
Chamchandra v. Subash Chunder 866
Chamanlal v. Parvati .. 1030
Chamar v. Kashi .. 938
Chamaru v. Sona Koer .. 1067
Champa v. Official Receiver. 335, 343
Champat v. Shiba 1153, 1154
Chanchal v. Chiman Lal .. 1054
Chanchamma v. Subbaya 274, 275, 280
Chand v. Jagat Settani .. 72
Chand Huree v. Narendra Narain. 438
Chand Mal v. Kalyan Mal .. 501
Chanda v. Akbar .. 273
Chanda Singh v. Mela .. 98
Chandan v. Ishri .. 1130
Chandan Mal v. Wasindi .. 63
Chandamia v. Saligram .. 23
Chandar Kishore v. Dampat .. 404
Chandar Shekhar v. Kundan Lal. 643, 699
Chander v. Murat Singh .. 605
Chandeshwar v. Bisheswar. 215, 221, 254
Chandi Charan v. Dulal Chandra 833
Chandi Charan v. Haribola .. 818
Chandika v. Widow .. 535
Chandika v. Munakunwar. 76, 696, 947
Chandra v. Jajarabai. 258, 905
Chandra v. Gojrabai .. 212
Chandra v. Shyamkumari .. 548
Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath .. 70 110, 139, 1140, 1152, 1164, 1166, 1168, 1169

PAGE

Chandrabhagabai v. Kashinath. 327, 330, 333, 1030
Chandrabhagabai v. Parmeshriamma .. 328
Chandra Deo v. Mata Prasad. 453, 489, 518, 535, 557, 558
Chandra Kumar v. Narpat Singh 236, 239, 241
Chandrakunwar v. Chaudhiri Narpat Singh .. 105
Chandra Kunwar v. Rukmir .. 324
Chandra Mala v. Mukta Mala .. 228
Chandra Nath v. Nil Madhab .. 105
Chandra Nath v. Ramjoi .. 1137
Chandra Shekhar v. Raj Kunwar.. 240, 244
Chandrasekharudu v. Bramhanna 166, 173
Chandrashwar v. Bisheshwar. 71, 267, 268
Chandrika Baksh v. Mana Kunwar. 90, 104
Chandrika Ram v. Narain Prosad. 489, 543
Chand Singh v. Mela. 120, 122
Chandu Lal v. Mukandi. .. 535
Chandu Lal v. Rampat. 806, 820
Chanirappa v. Daurva .. 280
Chandvirgouda v. The District Magistrate .. 320
Charanjit v. Telu Mal .. 395
Charitram v. Nathi .. 142
Charjo v. Ainath .. 1185
Charjo v. Dinanath .. 1185
Charu Chunder v. Nobo (Nobe) Sundari. 500, 993, 1163
Charu Chandra v. Satish Chunder. 1162
Charusila v. Mrinalini. 1042, 1132
Chaturbhuj v. Gobind Ram .. 49
Chat Narain v. Ratan .. 771
Chatranarayan v. Uba.
See Chatranarayan v. Uma Kunwari. 1051, 1089, 1162
Chatur Bhuj v. Chaterjit. 816, 828
Chavan v. Ramsarup .. 1105
Chander Nath v. Ramjoi .. 733
Chaturbhooj v. Dharamsi. 365, 366, 402
Chaturbhuj v. Govind Ram .. 551
Chedambaram v. Ma Nyein. 808, 916
Cheetha v. Miheen Lall. 427, 430, 437, 633
Chelam v. Seeni .. 728
Chela Ram v. Ishar Das .. 1038
Chela Sami v. Chelasami .. 364
Chelikani (Raja) v. Chelikani. 363, 1128, 1171
Chelikani v. Rajah Suraneni. 967, 972
Chelikani v. Vencata. 911, 972
Chelikhani v. Appa Rau. 376, 764
Chelimi v. Subhamma .. 595
Chellammal v. Ranganatha .. 932
Chellamuthu v. Muthudayar .. 439
Chenchamma v. Subbaya .. 271
Chengama v. Munisami .. 624, 666, 668, 669
Chennappa v. Ramappa. 200, 204

PAGE

Chenayya v. Gurunatham. 455, 456
Cherry v. Cherry .. 150
Chet Ram v. Ram Singh. 526, 533, 556
Chetticolum v. Venkatachella .. 220
Chetty v. Chetty .. 126
Chavil Behari v. Gulzarimal .. 559
Cheyt Narain v. Bunwaree. 626, 630, 640
Chhagan Lal v. Bapubhai .. 348
Chhagan Lal v. Raj Coomar .. 741
Chhagan Ram v. Motigauri .. 1090
Chhajju Gir v. Dewan 61, 62
Chhakauri v. Ganga Prasad. 489, 490, 491, 527, 538, 540, 543, 549
Chhannu v. Raj Kuar .. 1133
Chhato v. Bilto .. 455
Chholi Ram v. Narayan .. 486
Chattarpal Singh v. Natha .. 537
Chaubey v. Bindeshri .. 491
Chhatra Kumari v. Mohan Bikram Shah .. 848
Chhatukurmi v. Rajaram .. 913
Chhiddu v. Naubat. 1025, 1026, 1040, 1126, 1129
Chhidu Singh v. Durga Dei. 1089, 1103
Chhokori v. Ganga .. 526
Chhotahbai v. Chandra Basak .. 845
Chhotabhai v. Dadabhai .. 595
Chhotabhai v. Juanchandra .. 813
Chhotalal v. Mahakore .. 598
Chhote Lal v. Chandrabhan .. 244
Chhotiram v. Narayan Das. 442, 453
Chander v. Murat Singh .. 1033
Chidambara v. Koothaperumal .. 517
Chidambara v. Swaminathan .. 765
Chidambaram v. Gouri Nachiar. 497, 590, 670
Chidambaram v. Meenakshiammal. 1040, 1045
Chidambaram v. Muthu .. 616
Chidambaram v. Nachiar .. 631
Chidambaram v. Rajeswara .. 847
Chidambaram v. Ramaswami. 305, 455, 456
Chidambaram v. Veerappa .. 305
Chidambaramma v. Hussainamma. 1044, 1088
Chidambaranatha v. Nallasiva. 859, 860
Chiddu v. Durga .. 1089
Chimabai v. Mallappa .. 207
Chiman Lal v. Hari Chand. 90, 264, 265, 272
Chiman Lal v. Narmada .. 145
Chiman Rao v. Rambhau .. 797
Chimnaji v. Dinkar. 442, 494, 497, 1027, 1048, 1058
Chinarama Krishna v. Minatchi .. 253
Chindamoni v. Mohesh Chander .. 1168
Chinna v. Ganga .. 455
Chinna v. Kumara .. 126
Chinna v. Pedda .. 222
Chinna v. Sada Barka .. 452
Chinna v. Suriya .. 618
Chinna v. Tegarai .. 98

PAGE.

Chinna Pillai v. Kalimuthu. 421, 423, 424
Chinnasami v. Ramasamy .. 211
Chinna Swamy v. Kunja Pillai, .. 73
Chinnaku v. Utam .. 1034
Chinnammal v. Venkatachala. 961, 975, 984, 985
Chinnaswami v. Appaswami. 1007, 1066, 1067, 1069, 1071, 1081
Chinnaswamy v. Kunja. 72, 948, 952
Chinnaveerayya v. Lakshmi. 1089, 1099
Chinna Venkata v. Hindu R.E.Bd. 822
Chinnaya v. Collector .. 467
Chinnaya v. Gurunatham. 294, 296, 509
Chinnayya v. Perumal .. 535
Chinnu v. Kalimuthu. 414, 423, 634, 637
Chintaman v. Dhondo .. 820
Chintaman v. Nowlukho. 89, 90 581, 611, 615, 685, 688, 693, 721, 872, 893
Chintaman v. Ramchandra .. 801
Chintaman Rao v. Kasinath .. 559
Chintamani v. Satyabadi .. 510
Chintu v. Dhondu. 231, 244, 247
Chiranji Lal v. Bankey Lal. 526, 532
Chiranji Lal v. Kartar Singh .. 547
Chira Singh v. Girraj .. 1124
Chironji v. Punam .. 282
Chirukara v. Chirukara .. 320
Chiruvolu v. Chiruvolu. 942, 1087, 1089, 1103
Chithambara v. Koothaperumal .. 535
Chitko v. Janaki. 213, 232
Chitnavis v. Nathu-Sao. .. 544
Chittab v. Goura .. 607
Chittar Kunwar v. Goura .. 605
Chokalingam v. Mayandi. 857, 860
Chotalal v. Manohar. 841, 845, 846
Chokkey Singh v. Jote Singh .. 430
Choonee Lal v. Jussoo .. 1030
Chooney v. Ram Kinkur .. 1047
Choora v. Busuntee .. 903
Chorodee Parmessur v. Hanooman. 267
Chotalal v. Mandhar .. 873
Chotay Lal v. Ganpat .. 554
Chotay Lal v. Chunno Lal. 59, 79, 937, 939, 941, 1024, 1025, 1026, 1040, 1126, 1128, 1171, 1172
Chote Lal v. Chunnoo Lal. 890, 1135
Chottoo v. Jemab .. 1095
Chotum v. Ameer Chand. 146, 150
Choudhari Manohar Lal v. Amano. 574
Chouturaya v. Saheb Purhulad Syn. 164, 321, 601, 929
Chowdhrani v. Tariny Kant .. 439
Chowdhury Sureshwar v. Maheswrani .. 1070
Chowdree Parmessur v. Hunooman. 266
Chuaturya v. Sahub. 929, 940
Chuckun Lall v. Poran Chunder. 357, 649
Chudasama v. Parbat Singh .. 638
Chukkun Lal v. Lalit Mohun .. 791
Chuman v. Gopi .. 1048
Chummun v. Praupat .. 610
Chumun Lal v. Gunput Lall. 323, 385, 392, 1051
Chund v. Kishenmunee .. 1160

PAGE.

Chundammal v. Nadamuni .. 1063
Chundar v. Kundanlal. 615, 644
Chunder Kant v. Bungshee .. 1009
Chunder Kant v. Nund Lal .. 411
Chunder Koomar v. Dwarkanath. 1100
Chunder Nath v. Har Narain. 614, 617
Chundi Churn v. Sideshwari .. 743
Chundro Sekhur v. Nobin Soondur. 78
Chundulal v. Rampat Mal .. 823
Chundro v. Buksh Ali .. 425
Chunia v. Girdharlal .. 214
Chuni Lal v. Gunput Lall .. 1063
Chuni Lal v. Jusso .. 1054
Chuni Lal v. Mulid .. 792
Chuni Lal v. Surajram. 110, 112, 119, 151, 1155
Chunna Lal v. Swami Prasad .. 583
Chunilal v. Swami Prasad .. 571
Chunne Lal v. Mokshada .. 802
Chunni Bai v. Girdhari .. 177
Chuoturya v. Sahub Purhulad .. 57
Chuoturya v. Gopi Sahu. 387, 463, 464, 465, 1054, 1063, 1131, 1135, 1141
Chuttan v. Ramchand .. 225
Chuttan Lal v. Kallu .. 555
Chuton Das v. Vundran Das .. 1123
Chuttan Lal v. Kollu .. 537
Chuttar v. Wooma .. 1096
Clark (In re) .. 286
Cleavar v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assurance Co. .. 908
Codea v. Appuhamy .. 635
Coffey v. Coffey .. 149
Colgan v. Administrator-General .. 749
Collector v. Debnath .. 447
Cook v. Claywarth .. 579
Collector v. Hari. 740, 854, 859
Collector v. Hurdai .. 523
Collector v. Jagatchunder .. 988
Collector v. Krishnanath .. 740
Collector v. Lakamani. 689, 696
Collector of Madura v. Mootu Ramalinga. 102, 178, 180, 181, 185, 186, 187, 188, 208, 209
Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ramsundar. 706, 715, 720
Collector of Madura v. Muttu Ramalinga. 39, 44, 50, 51, 53, 69, 70, 72, 73, 186, 187, 189, 255
Collector of Madura v. Veeracannu. 707
Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Vencata. 72, 382, 384, 986, 1022, 1025, 1028, 1029, 1045, 1048, 1050, 1051, 1052, 1053, 1075, 1106, 1162
Collector of Surat v. Dhirsingi. 166, 177, 215
Collector of Tirhoot v. Huropershad. 183, 266, 267, 269, 270, 272
Collector of Than v. Krishnanath. 950
Coloquhoun v. Smither .. 112
Commissioner of Income-tax v. Gomedally .. 398
Commissioner v. Zemindar of Chemudu .. 705
Commissioner of Stamps v. Stephen. 734

PAGE.

Comara Singh v. Mahtab Koonwar. 179
Connelly v. Woolrich .. 110
Constable v. Tufnell. 761, 766
Constantine v. Constantine .. 796
Cook v. Claywarth .. 579
Cook v. Wright. 186, 573
Coomara v. Venkateswara 342, 412
Coomar Krishna v. Woopendra. 750, 751
Cooper v. Backett .. 763
Cooverje v. Dewsey .. 522
Cope v. Cope .. 162
Cope Kishen v. Hemchunder .. 413
Corea v. Appuhamy. 635, 636
Cory v. Cory. 574, 579
Cossinath v. Hurrpsondry. 386, 393, 568, 1029, 1049, 1050, 1095

See also Cassinath v. Hurrosondry.

Coucha v. Coucha .. 490
Court of Wards v. Kupulmun .. 994
Court of Wards v. Mohessur. 1130, 1131, 1137
Court of Wards v. Venkata .. 757
Covaly v. Collector .. 986
Cox v. Hickman. 479, 480
Craig v. Lamorense .. 769
Crease v. Barett. 106, 927
Cullen v. Elkins .. 801
Curdial Singh v. Bhagwan Devi. 1146
Cursandas v. Vundravandas. 817, 1122

D

Dhalakandawa v. Kandaswamy .. 1104
Dadajee v. Witlal .. 639
Dadaji v. Ruckma. 116, 144, 145
Dada Sahib v. Gajraj Singh. 572, 573
Dadoba v. Krishna .. 635
Dagadu v. Sakhubai .. 664
Dagree v. Pacoti .. 66
Dai v. Purshotum 322, 328
Daikat v. Appaji .. 296
Daji v. Daji .. 505
Dakar Temple Committee .. 874
Dal Bhanjan v. Kariman .. 582
Dal Bahadur v. Bijai Bahadur .. 242
Dalchand v. Soonder .. 902
Dalel v. Ambika .. 337
Dalgon v. Parsidh .. 1100
Dalkoor v. Paubas .. 606
Dal Sukhram v. De Breton .. 538
Dalal Kunwar v. Ambika Pratap Singh. 337, 1053
Dalchand v. Soonder .. 902
Dalgan v. Parsidh .. 1100
Dalglish v. Guzuffer Hussain .. 107
Dalip v. Ganpat. 59, 97, 930
Dalip Kuer v. Fatti .. 122
Dalip Singh v. Kundan Lall. 434, 456, 544
Dalip Singh v. Nowal Kunwar .. 735
Dalip Singhkar v. Sheonandan .. 494
Dalipa v. Dallu .. 80
Dal Singh .. 157
Dall Singh v. Dini .. 905
Dalpat v. Bhagwan .. 1144

PAGE.

Dalpat Singhji v. Baisinghi. 179, 322
Dalsukharam v. De Breton, .. 539
Dal Sukhram v. Lallu Bhai. 333, 334, 335
Dalton v. Angus .. 92
Damodar v. Bhat. 470, 480
Damodar v. Bhogilal .. 872
Damodaram v. Bansilal .. 480
Damodar v. Damodar .. 415
Damodar v. Dayal. .. 303
Damodar v. Purmandas .. 1030
Damodar Das v. Dayabhai. 777, 784 788, 797
Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das .. 859
Damodar Das v. Uttamram. 444, 446, 609, 647, 649, 739, 867
Damodarji v. Collector of Banda. 39, 73, 220
Damodhardass v. Vishendass. 470, 476, 600, 602, 611
Damodur v. Senabutty. 72, 608, 609, 1063
Dana v. Mahesh. 941, 942
Danakoti v. Bala Sundara .. 191
Danappa (In re) .. 280
Danesh v. Tafir .. 157
Danno v. Darbo .. 1149
Danna v. Darbo .. 939
Daraga Raj v. Basdeo .. 1059
Daraisami v. Nandisami. 282, 415
Daraswami v. Thangasamy .. 316
Darbari v. Govind Ram .. 1103
Dareys (In re) .. 252
Darnby v. L. C. & D. Ry. C. .. 263
Darsu Pandey v. Bikramjit .. 547
Daryai Singh v. Narpat Singh. 125, 126
Dasaradhi v. Jodmoni .. 450
Dashrathi v. Bipin Bihari .. 1101
Dasi Bai v. Ishvardas .. 686
Dasai Himatsingsi v. Bhavabhai. 495
Dasrath v. Danvir Singh .. 219
Dasratha v. Narasa .. 456
Dassa v. Navasimha .. 830
Dasu v. Venkatasubramania .. 760
Datla v. Gattem .. 360
Dattaji v. Kalbha .. 1108
Dattaram v. Vinayak .. 291
Dattatraya v. Gangabai. 969, 972, 980, 984
Dattatraya v. Mathabala. 931, 934
Dattatraya v. Mathu. 907, 930
Dattatraya v. Rukhmabai. 347, 354
Dattatry v. Vishnu .. 559
Dattatraya v. Govind. 250, 251, 252, 404 405
Datti v. Datti. 98, 930, 931
Datto v. Pandurang. .. 180
Daudkhan v. Gobinda .. 636
Daulat v. Champa. 332, 341, 346, 351
Daulat v. Ramlal .. 166
Daulat v. Sankatha Prasad. 461, 1051
Daulat Ram v. Mehrchand. 485, 521
Daulat Rao v. Govind Rao .. 416
Daulata v. Meghu .. 350
Daulta Kauri v. Meghu .. 326
Davitaram v. Narayanarav .. 649

	PAGE.
Davloba v. Payagavdha.	.. 658
Davud v. Ram Krishna	.. 415
Dawlat Rao v. Govind Rao	.. 70
Dawlatram v. Naraindas	.. 1157
Dawood v. Vallubdas.	504, 506
Dawson v. Small	.. 800
Daya v. Natha	.. 323
Daya Shankar v. Hublal	.. 317
Dayaba v. Radhabai	.. 230
Dayabai v. Chunilal	.. 993
Dayabhai v. Parvati	.. 314
Dayal v. Narain Das	.. 138
Dayal Das v. Savitri Bai.	38, 1144, 1157, 1165
Dayal Kunwar v. Ambika Pratab.	1053
Dayamani v. Srinibash.	1046, 1051
Daya Moyi v. Lalit Mohan	.. 1110
Dayamayi v. Sankar	.. 850
Daya Ram v. Sohel Singh	.. 100
Dayawati v. Kesoribai	.. 324
De v. Sheonath	.. 664
De Soneza v. De Soneza	.. 845
De Souza v. Waman Rao	.. 562
Deba Nand v. Anandamani.	280, 305
Debee Sahai v. Sheosankar	.. 1025
Debee v. Sree Kishen	.. 687
Debee Pershad v. Phool Koeree.	594, 631
Debendra v. Brojendra.	358, 757
Debendranath v. Nagendranath	.. 1103
Debi v. Doulta	.. 331
Debi Das v. Bipro Charan	.. 1111
Debi Dat v. Jadu Rai	.. 535
Debi Dayal v. Bhan Pertap	.. 1048
Debi Dayal v. Bhup Pertab.	1058, 1061 1062
Debi Lal v. Nand Kishore.	391, 415
Debi Mangal v. Mahadeo.	1022, 1025, 1040, 1126, 1129, 1130, 1135, 1137, 1167
Debendra v. Haridas	.. 646
Debi Pershad v. Thakur Dial.	886, 888
Debi Prasad v. Golap.	1064, 1066, 1069, 1072, 1074, 1076
Debi Prasanna v. Harendra.	1154, 1161, 1164
Debi Raj v. Shiv Ram	.. 548
Debi Sahai v. Sheo Shankar Lal.	70, 1128, 1129, 1171
Debi Saran v. Doulata	.. 350
Debindra v. Hari Das	.. 646
Deedchand v. Chandkhan	.. 315
Deela v. Toofanee.	430, 437, 633
Deen Dyal v. Jugdeep.	415, 419, 420, 422, 423, 450, 488, 492, 498, 508, 515, 518, 520, 523, 614
Deepo v. Gobinda	.. 1009
Debrus v. Abdur Rahman	.. 820
Debrus v. Kazee Abdul Rahim	.. 876
Dehomoyee v. Juggessur	.. 277
Delanney v. Pranbari	.. 1158
Deldluney v. Pranbati	.. 1141
Denonath v. Hurry Narain.	426, 427
Deo v. Dwarkanath	.. 593
Deoji v. Sambhu	.. 1120
Deo v. Kuppu	.. 972
Deo v. Leicester	.. 797
Deo Kinandan v. Brijnandan	837
Deo Kishen v. Budh Prakash.	139, 140, 601, 905, 994
Deokore v. Amrit Ram	.. 920
Deo Konwar v. Umba Ram	.. 146
Deo Narayan v. Agyan Ram.	360, 426, 428, 432
Deoratan v. Deoki	.. 820
Deoba v. Babia	.. 541
Deodhari v. Bhup Naran	.. 500
Deoki v. Jwala Prasad	.. 1098
Deoki v. Kala	.. 598
Deoki Singh v. Anupa	.. 635
Deonandan v. Udit Narayan.	1105, 1106
Deosaran v. Deoki.	820, 824
Deonarain v. Ganga Singh	.. 537
Deputy Commissioner v. Anseri	.. 1078
Deputy Commissioner v. Jagiwan.	741
Deputy Commissioner v. Kanjan Singh.	461, 462
Desai Ranchhodass v. Rawal Nathu Bhai.	100, 101, 104
De Thoren v. Attorney-General	.. 153
Dev Gopal v. Vasudev	.. 670
Deva Singh v. Ram Manohar	.. 450
Devarayan v. Muthuraman.	111, 539
Devasigamani v. Palaniappa.	853, 857
Devi v. Mangal	.. 946
Devidas v. Vada Ram.	553, 554
Devi Bhai v. Dayaboy	.. 945
Devi Persad v. Gunwanti.	326, 327, 329, 339, 362
Devi Raj v. Shiv Ram	.. 548
Devi v. Daulata	.. 320
Devi Prasad v. Thakur Dayal	.. 896
Devji v. Shambhu	.. 1118
Devkore v. Sanmukhram.	333, 334, 335
Devokore v. Amrit Ram.	927, 956, 957, 958
Devloba v. Reganda	.. 659
Devshankar v. Motiram	.. 817
Deynath v. Muthoor Nath	.. 1017
Dhada Sahib v. Mahamed Sultan.	425
Dhadabai v. Narayan	.. 415
Dhalip Kuar v. Fatti	.. 59
Dhami Ram v. Man Kour	.. 273
Dharmraj v. Soni Bai.	264, 265, 266
Dhan v. Rama	.. 212
Dhan Bibi v. Lalan Bibi	.. 143
Dhan Devi v. Mahan	.. 793
Dhanna Mal v. Parmeshri Lal.	251, 252, 1149, 1150, 1172
Danabali v. Pratapmull.	608, 610
Dhanpat v. Mahosh Nath.	303, 365
Dhanpat Ram v. Prem Singh.	.. 306
Dhanrup v. Govind.	942, 943
Dhanraj v. Soni Bai.	175, 213, 215, 219
Dhanukdhari v. Rambirich.	388, 394, 416, 443
Dharam Chand v. Amba	.. 360
Dharam Das v. Dharam Das.	877, 878

PAGE.

Dharam Das v. Nand Lal. 333, 930, 938
Dharam Das v. Sadho .. 840
Dharam Das v. Amulyadan .. 358
Dharam Kanwar v. Balwant Singh. 243, 245, 247
Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh. 189 196, 1114
Dharam Singh v. Angan Lal .. 547
Dharjit v. Siria .. 532
Dharma v. Ram Krishna. 216, 220, 230
Dharma v. Sakharam .. 933
Dharma v. Sanbaran .. 930
Dharma Das v. Amulyadhan. 444, 447
Dharma Das v. Gosta. 826, 827, 833
Dharmapuram v. Virapandujam. 910, 987
Dharam Prakash v. Kalavati .. 245
Dharoo v. Court of Wards .. 427
Dharup Nath v. Gobind .. 169
Dheeraj v. Govt. of Bengal .. 92
Dhiraj Singh v. Mangal Ram .. 1110
Dhirendra v. Chandra. 730, 731
Dhodyela v. Malanaik .. 932
Dholidos v. Fulchand. 110, 112
Dhondi v. Radhabai. 1023, 1030, 1032
Dhondo v. Appaji. .. 261
Dhondo v. Gonesh. 127, 169
Dhondo v. Gopala .. 598
Dhondshet v. Ravi. 504, 505
Dhondu v. Gangabai. .. 1032
Dhondu v. Jaganath .. 71
Dhondu v. Narayan .. 504
Dhondu Bai v. Laxman Rao .. 788
Dhondu v. Mishrilal .. 1110
Dhoolubo v. Jeevee .. 1030
Dhoorjeti v. Dhoorjeti. 1026, 1088, 1092
Dhopo v. Ramchandra. 449, 454
Dhulabhai v. Lala .. 604
Dhulipalla v. Nadipalli. 484, 486
Dhuncooverbai v. A.G. .. 834
Dhunookdhari v. Gunpat Lall. 362, 428 437
Dhupnath v. Ramcharita .. 343
Dhuram Das v. Shama Soondri. 427, 428, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 729
Dhurnidhur (In re) .. 147
Dhurrum Singh v. Kissen Singh. . 876
Dhurup Nath v. Gobind .. 127
Dial Das v. Dhianun . .. 114
Dias v. Delivera .. 755
Dig Daji v. Bhatan .. 960
Digambar v. Bhisangir .. 840
Digambar v. Motilal. 1015, 1016
Digambari v. Dhanukmari. 332, 351
Dildar v. Bhowani. 639, 648, 670, 671
Dilipati Singh v. Kashinath .. 937
Dilraj Kuari v. Bikeswar .. 909
Dilraj Kuari v. Rikheswar .. 601
Dinesdale v. Dinesdale .. 375
Din Tarini v. Krishna .. 754
Dina v. Karam Chand .. 98
Dina Nath v. Hrisikesh .. 1102
Dina Nath v. Sadashiv .. 99
Dinabhandu v. Chamiruddi .. 846
Dinagarasami v. Babatgasami .. 502

PAGE.

Dinabai v. Nusserwanji .. 787
Dindaji v. Bhatan Lall .. 960
Dinakar v. Appaji. 456, 509
Dinkar Rao v. Chandan Lal .. 231
Dinkar Rao v. Vharan Lal .. 221
Dinakarasami v. Bhaskarasami .. 713
Dino Nath v. Chundi. 63, 989, 990
Dinomani v. Brojomohini .. 104
Dinonath v. Gopal Churn. 254, 259, 261, 1033
Dinonath v. Harish .. 1052
Dintarini v. Ambica Prosad .. 1160
Dipa v. Lakshmi .. 756
Ditcham v. Voral .. 9
Dittor Koer v. Harku .. 605
Diveah v. Koond Luta .. 1092
Diwali v. Bechardas .. 375
Diwali v. Patel. 778, 780
Diwali (Bai) v. Moti. 126, 138
Diwakar Rao v. Chandan Lal. 231, 236 237, 238, 240, 241
Diwan Ram Bijai v. Indarpal. 436, 439
Dnyaneshwar v. Anant .. 603
Dnyanu v. Tanu .. 204
Doe v. Biggs .. 797
Doe v. Davies .. 796
Doe v. Doorgapersaud .. 282
Doe v. Fallows .. 802
Doe d. Juggomohon v. Sanon Coomar .. 120
Doe d. Kissen Chunder v. Baidam. 59
Domab Singh v. Hirondi Bai .. 126
Doman v. Prokash Lal. 614, 615, 636
Doolee Chand v. Wooma Sankur .. 555
Doolichand v. Brojo Bhookun .. 1092
Doorga v. Doorga. 687, 707, 719
Doorga v. Janaki Pershad. 922, 973
Doorga v. Soorendra. 168, 203
Doorga Pershad v. Kundun. 590, 592 593, 627, 630, 631
Doorga Purshad v. Seo Prosad .. 816
Doorganath v. Ramchander. 516, 826, 827, 829, 830, 853, 854; 857, 867, 868
Dorab Ally v. Abdool Azeez .. 301
Doraisami v. Nandisami .. 293
Doorga v. Tejoo. 1131, 1135, 1137
Doraiswamy (In re) .. 1123
Dorasami v. Chinna .. 189
Dorga Dayee v. Poosun Dayee .. 1030
Dosaradi v. Jadumoni .. 459
Dose v. Krishna .. 351
Dose Thimmamma v. Krishna .. 344
Dossee Monee v. Ramchand .. 438
Dost Mohamed v. Nazir Ali .. 854
Dost Mahomed v. Mh. Shariff .. 1189
Doulat v. Ramlal .. 173
Dowlut v. Burma Deo. 939, 940
Dowlut v. Govind .. 940
Daulat Rao v. Govind Rao .. 940
Doulatram v. Naraindas .. 1157
Drigpal v. Harihar .. 1080
Drobo v. Tarachand .. 427
Dualip Kuar v. Fatti .. 126
Dube v. Srinibos .. 868

PAGE.

Duguppa v. Venkataramayya. 413, 421
Duke of Leeds v. Amherst .. 263
Dukharam v. Lachmun .. 987
Dular Koeri v. Dwarka Nath. 145, 146, 148, 149, 609
Dularam v. Badal Das. 415, 639
Dulari v. Mulchand .. 940
Dulari v. Vallubhdas .. 111
Dulhin Parbati v. Baji Nath. 607, 1023, 1034
Duleep Singh v. Sree Kishoon .. 542
Dunachand v. Dwarkanath 229
Dundappa v. Bhimava. 940, 1165
Dungar Singh v. Maid Kunwar .. 1139
Dunnaye v. White .. 579
Darbar v. Khachar. 527, 538
Durga v. Ganesh .. 379
Durga v. Chanchal .. 868
Durga v. Dunichand .. 790
Durga v. Nulanund .. 305
Durga Baksh v. Brij Raj .. 240
Durga Charan v. Khorda & Co. .. 732
Durga Charan v. Raghu Nath. 92, 101, 104
Durga Dat v. Ganesh Dat .. 375
Durga Deb v. Gita .. 1033
Durga Dat v. Gita. 605, 606, 607
Durga Dat v. Rameshwar Singh. 346, 392, 682, 683, 693, 700, 701, 702, 705, 706
Durga Dei v. Balmukund .. 635
Durga Devi v. Ramyan .. 103
Durga Devi v. Shambu Nath .. 229
Durga Nath v. Chintamani. 560, 607, 708, 991, 1009, 1010, 1025, 1029, 1033
Durganath v. Ramchandra .. 832
Durga Prasad v. Damodar Das .. 444
Durgaprasad v. Jewdhari. 388, 392, 461, 462, 512
Durga Prashad v. Kesho Prashad .. 554
Durga Prasad v. Pran Krishna. 436, 439
Durga Sundari v. Ram Krishna .. 1044
Durga v. Kanhaiya Lal. 232, 257
Duri v. Jadpatri. 595, 644
Durjendra v. Purendra. 410, 655
Durrapsing v. Buzzurdhun .. 1155
Durryao Singh v. Dari Singh .. 635
Durvasula v. Durvasulla .. 379
Durriao v. Dari .. 712
Dufto v. Pundrang .. 201
Duvursubha v. Kakuturn .. 416
Duyanu v. Vishnu .. 293
Dwarka v. Krishna .. 360
Dwarka Das v. Krishna .. 537
Dwarkadas v. Rikhiram .. 863
Dwarka Nath v. Barindra .. 672
Dwarka Nath v. Bungshi Chundra. 359, 444, 450, 451, 567, 568, 651, 652
Dwarka Nath v. Mahendra Nath. 994
Dwarka Nath v. Sarat Chandra. 71, 110, 1146, 1151, 1155
Dwarka Prasad v. Jai Bahram .. 692
Dwarka Prasad v. Jamna Das .. 362

PAGE.

Dwarka Ram v. Jhulai Pande .. 461
Dwarkaram v. Bakshi Purnow Persad Singh. 462, 513, 516, 517
Dwarkanath v. Denobundhoo .. 994
Dwarkanath v. Gopee Nath .. 411
Dwarkanath v. Jannobee. 739, 850
Dyanoba v. Radhabai .. 181

E

E. v. Lazar .. 52
E. v. Madan Gopal .. 116
E. v. Sat Narain. 1129, 1135
E. v. Umi .. 128
E. I. Co. v. Kamachee .. 714
E. I. Co. v. Syed Ali .. 371
Earl de la Warr v. Miles .. 106
Edelstein v. Schuler .. 106
Edwards v. Jenkins .. 98
Ekoba v. Kashiram .. 946
Ekradeshwari v. Homeshwar. 323, 326, 330, 336, 337
Ekradeshwar Singh v. Janeshwari. 105, 643, 682, 693, 719
Elahya v. Kanha. 173, 270
Elayalwar v. Namberumal. 843, 882
Elington's Case. 854, 879
Elkins v. Culan .. 787
Elwood v. Bulluk .. 96
Emery's Estate (Re) .. 799
Emurtee v. Nirmul .. 53
Endori v. Venkata Chainula .. 342
Endowed Schools Act (In re) .. 873
Endowed Societies Act (In re) .. 836
Eshan Kishore v. Hurish Chunder. 206, 230, 267
Eshan v. Manmohini .. 740
Enid Brown v. F. Y. Moody .. 787
Eshen Chunder v. Sama Churn. 100, 353, .. 358
Eshwari Bhuwaneshwari v. Brojo Nath .. 804
Ethirajulu v. Mukunthu .. 778
Ex parte Chomney .. 485
Eyre v. Countess of Shaftesbury. 305

F

Faez Bax v. Fakiruddin .. 731
Fagwa v. Budhram .. 691
Faizuddin v. Reju .. 636
Fakir Chand v. Dara Ram .. 548
Fakir Chand v. Daya Ram .. 390
Fakir Chand v. Moti Chand .. 546
Fakir Ganda v. Ganji. 124, 125, 150
Fakirappa v. Fakirappa. 933, 935
Fakirappa v. Saritrawa .. 179
Fakirappa v. Yellappa. 928, 929
Fakuruddin v. Acheni. 871, 876
Fani Bhusan v. Fulkumari .. 780
Fanindra v. Administrator-General. 816, 819

PAGE.

Fanindra v. Rajeswar. 67, 76, 173, 248, 249, 250, 1155
Fannyamma v. Manjayya .. 246
Farid v. Mitho .. 311
Fakira v. Gopilal .. 1037
Faquir Chand v. Sant Lal .. 415
Fateh v. Imanuddin .. 363
Fathe Singh v. Shera Singh .. 320
Fatesangji v. Desai .. 740
Fatesangji v. Harisangji .. 64
Fatesangji v. Kaliyanrayaji .. 740
Fatima v. Rani .. 282
Fatima v. Gulabnabi, .. 1190
Fazle v. Anath Bandhu. 831, 832
Fazulbhoy v. Sadarnund .. 537
Felaram Roy v. Bagalanan Banerjee. 462, 1040, 1051, 1058, 1083
Fatesingh v. Thakur Rukmini .. 1078
Field v. Field .. 146
Fikirchand v. Motichand .. 146
See Fakir Chand v. Motichand.
Finch v. Finch .. 765
Fish v. A.G. .. 800
Fitch v. Rawling .. 95
Fithick v. Juggut Mohini .. 993
Flower v. Sadler .. 540
Forbes v. Git. 784, 797
Forbes v. Meer Mahomed .. 702
Forth v. Chapman .. 795
Freeman v. Phillips .. 106
Fugulia v. Vettor .. 1053
Fuhoob Singh v. Khoman .. 929
Fulbati v. Maheshwari .. 704
Fultan v. Andrew. 771, 772
Fulkumari v. Buah Singh .. 284
Futtick v. Juggut .. 994

G

Gabriel v. Valliammaiammal. 151, 154
Gadadhar v. Balvant .. 619
Gadadher v. Chandrabhagabati. 1031, 1146
Gadadhar v. Ghanshyam Das .. 562
Gaddam v. Anam Hanuman .. 973
Gadha Nandan v. Abdul Rahman. 425
Gadgappa v. Apaji .. 304
Gadeppa v. Apaji .. 1108
Gadin v. Gadian. 616, 663, 664
Gadigi v. Vamajee .. 550
Gaja Bai v. Shahajirao. 38, 1152, 1154
Gajadahar v. Gauri Shankar. 559, 961, 962
Gajadhar v. Hari Singh .. 672
Gajadhar v. Jadubir. 517, 560, 562
Gajadhar v. Jagannath. 494, 496, 504, 544, 1058, 1059
Gajadhar v. Gauri Shanker .. 54
Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla. 333, 938
Gajadhar v. Parbati. 1123, 1124
Gajanan v. Kashi Nath. 224, 225
Gajapathi v. Gajapathi. 72, 577, 578, 601, 605, 606, 633, 1033

PAGE.

Gajapat v. Bhagawan .. 841
Gajapati v. Pusapati .. 1034
Gajender v. Sardar Singh. 428, 631, 632, 635
Gajindra v. Harihar .. 443
Gajendranath v. Mathuranath. 690, 693, 795
Gambirmal v. Hamirmal .. 1095
Ganap v. Subbi. 388, 1050
Ganapa v. Subi Sanna .. 1061
Gulab Das v. Collector .. 686
Ganpat v. Gopalrao .. 624
Ganpati v. Krishnappa .. 214
Ganapati v. Savthri. 870, 873
Ganapathi Aiyar .. Sivamalai Goundan .. 802
Ganapathi v. Subramanyam .. 595
Ganda v. Chatar Puri .. 839
Gandhi v. Jadeb. 948, 982, 1025, 1032, 1130, 1147, 1172
Gane Bhive v. Kane Bhive. 427, 437
Ganee v. Ram Gopal .. 876
Ganela v. Khwaja Mahommed .. 99
Ganesh v. Ajudhit .. 1153
Ganesh v. Bokil .. 230
Ganesh v. Gewesh .. 610
Ganesh v. Govind Rao .. 637
Ganesh v. Keshavrav. 854, 859
Ganesh v. Lalmuthu. 1099, 1100
Ganesh v. Nil Kamal .. 1075
Ganesh v. Ragho .. 127
Ganesh v. Ramchandra .. 801
Ganesh v. Woghu .. 953
Ganesh v. Yemunabai .. 326
Genesh Chunder v. Lal Behary .. 787
Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Thakurani. 431, 628
Ganesh v. Moheshur .. 89
Ganesh Lal v. Babulal. 658, 660, 661
Ganesh Gir v. Fatechand .. 899
Ganesh Prasad v. Jot Singh .. 540
Ganeshom v. Saraswati Bai .. 642
Ganesh Rai v. Deo Saran .. 562
Ganesha v. Gopala .. 191
Ganesha v. Tuljaram .. 317
Ganesh Row v. Tulja Ram. 455, 537
Ganeshi v. Darshan .. 104
Ganeshilal v. Khetra Mohan. 388, 390, 392
Ganeshilal v. Surajmal .. 278
Ganga v. Chandrabhaga. 236, 909, 915
Ganga v. Ghasita. 913, 1103, 1149, 1167
Ganga v. Khushal .. 395
Ganga v. Kausilla. .. 285
Ganga v. Pirthi Pal .. 464
Ganga Baksh v. Jagat Bahadur .. 750
Ganga Bai v. Ananta .. 274
Ganga Bai v. Janki Bai .. 335
Gangabai v. Bandhu. 932, 933
Gangabai v. Fakirgouda. 430, 634
Gangabai v. Hari .. 1087
Gangabai v. Krishnaji .. 345
Gangabai v. Sitaram. 326, 650
Gangabai v. Thavar Mulla .. 64

	PAGE.
Gangabai v. Vamanji.	375, 440, 747
Gangadai v. Gopaldas	.. 229
Gangadhar v. Chandrabhaga	.. 1029
Gangadhar v. Doraisami	.. 864
Gangadhar v. Hira Lal.	254, 255, 256, 1152, 1154
Gangadhar v. Ibrahim	.. 934
Gangadhar v. Parashram.	405, 636
Gangadhar v. Prabhudha.	1067, 1070
Gangadhar v. Yelu	.. 913
Gangadharudu v. Durvasulu	.. 375
Gangadharudu v. Narasammah	.. 379
Ganaganarayan v. Balram	.. 127
Ganga Narain v. Tiluckram	.. 207
Gangao v. Beni	.. 951
Ganga Prasad v. Budh Sen	.. 240
Ganga Pershad v. Shumbhoonath	997, 1013
Gangappa v. Subbu	.. 1080
Ganga Prasad v. Hara Kanta.	281, 312
Ganga Prasad v. Ramasrey	.. 284
Ganga Ram v. Amir Chand	.. 226
Gangaram v. Ballia.	151, 961, 984
Ganga Sahai v. Hira Singh.	247, 907, 948, 951, 952, 964
Ganga Sahai v. Kesri	.. 729
Ganga Shahai v. Lakhraj.	51, 126, 220, 221, 246
Gangayya v. Venkatarayaliah.	468, 471, 478, 479, 640
Gangi v. Atmaram	.. 1190
Gangi v. Tammi.	452, 453, 823, 824, 827
Gangod v. Sham Gir	.. 597
Gangopodhaya v. Sarboma	.. 1171
Gangu v. Chandrabhagabai.	99, 909, 913, 914
Ganna v. Beni	.. 989
Gannulal v. Rashi Ram	.. 930
Gannu Singh v. Bhogwati Koeri	.. 429
Ganpat v. Annaji.	468, 469, 475, 641
Ganpat v. Balmakund.	429, 476
Ganpat v. Bindeshri	.. 1116
Ganpat v. Bisessor Lal	.. 303
Ganpat v. Gopal Rao.	599, 603, 624, 642, 665, 666, 669, 670
Ganpat v. Munnilal.	349, 350 482, 487, 492,
Ganpat v. Ram Chunder	.. 1033
Ganpat v. Secy. of State.	439, 986, 1151, 1153, 1154,
Ganpat v. Supdu	.. 596
Ganpat v. Tulsiram.	385, 386, 388, 391, 392, 393, 1052
Ganpati v. Savithri.	231, 232
Ganpatibhatta v. Ramkrishnabhatta	1122
Ganpatrao v. Anopram	.. 846
Ganpathi v. Savitri	.. 874
Ganpatrao v. Kanhayalal.	415, 423, 881
Ganpatrao v. Shivprasad	.. 334
Gannu v. Bhagwati	.. 632
Gansavant v. Narayan.	476, 519
Gansham Das v. Saraswati	.. 996
Gantapalli v. Gantapalli.	146, 149
Ganu Lal v. Kashi Ram.	930, 932

	PAGE.
Ganu Singh v. Jangi Lal.	426, 890
Garikipati v. Garikipati	.. 1102
Garuda v. Narella.	490, 539, 540, 874
Garuva v. Rangammal	.. 1096
Garurudhwaj v. Suparandwaj.	90, 99 694, 695, 696, 697, 927
Garuswami v. Gopalswami.	482, 487
Gaura v. Chumman	.. 904
Gaura (Mt.) v. Lal Singh	.. 979
Gauri v. Chandramani	.. 343
Gauri v. Rukko.	903, 951
Gauri Churn v. Sita	.. 937
Gauri Dat v. Guru Sahai	.. 1099
Gauri Shankar v. Atmaram.	619, 641, 664
Gauri Shankar v. Manrai.	966, 972
Gauri Shankar v. Nidu Singh.	901, 987, 988
Gaurishankar v. Gopaladas	.. 481
Gauri Sahai v. Rukko	.. 951
Gauri Shanker v. Sheonandan.	494, 496, 535, 574, 1058
Gaya Dei v. Tulsa Dei	.. 1033
Gayaprasad v. Murlidhar	.. 554
Gaya Prasad v. Girja Shankar.	609, 610
Gazanfer Ali v. Kaniz Fatima	.. 151
Gazi v. Sukru	.. 138
George v. George	.. 790
George v. Jesson	.. 127
Ghalla v. Palury	.. 1067
Ghanashyam Das v. Hardei	.. 987
Ghansham v. Badiya	.. 1059
Ghansham v. Saraswati Bai	.. 661
Gharibullah v. Khalaksingh.	287, 299, 311, 312, 388, 390, 392, 442, 451, 457
Gharusila v. Mrinalini	.. 1042
See Charusila v. Mrinalini
Ghasi Ram v. Binia	.. 304
Ghasita v. Mazvia	.. 314
Ghasita v. Wazira.	.. 314
Ghasitey v. Harprasad.	415, 418
Ghasili v. Umraj Jan	.. 271
Ghatraput v. Grindra	.. 930
Ghazaffar Ali v. Kaniz Fatema	.. 162
Ghazi v. Sukru	.. 117
Ghela Bhai v. Hargovan.	52, 689
Ghegammal v. Govindsawmy	.. 1059
Ghelabhai v. Javer.	1110, 1114, 1115
Ghisao v. Gajraj Singh.	900, 901
Ghosal v. Ghosal.	57, 66, 82, 83, 633, 876, 887, 899
Ghose Lal v. Badri Singh.	663, 664
Ghulam Hussain v. Fattch	.. 272
Ghunaji v. Tulsi	.. 984
Gill v. Naradarashavayya,	.. 641
Girappa v. Ningapa.	260, 261
Giranna v. Honama.	330, 339
Girdhar v. Gaya Prasad	.. 702
Girdhar v. Krishna Dutt	.. 631
Girdhari v. Neeldher	.. 111
Girdhar v. Sri Krishna	.. 590
Girdharee Singh v. Koolahul	.. 99
Girdhari Lal v. Gobind Ram	.. 496
Girdharee Lall v. Bengal Government	.. 922

	PAGE.
Girdhari Lal v. Government.	70, 960, 961, 972, 977, 986, 1152
Girdharilall v. Kantoo Lal.	255, 390, 461, 499, 500, 518, 519, 526, 559, 560, 638
Girdhari Lal v. Muddun Thakur	565
Girdhari Lal v. Secy. of State	.. 972
Girdhari v. Madhowdas.	735, 872
Girdharji v. Romanlalji.	835, 837
Giribala v. Srinath	.. 1110
Girikipali v. Rattamma	.. 1103
Giriraj v. Kazi Hamid Ali	.. 291
Girimallappa v. Kenchva.	909, 968
Girish Chandra v. Mhd. Shagde..	126
Girjanund v. Sailajanund.	354, 846, 858
Girja Bai v. Babu Lal	.. 1137
Girja Bai v. Sadasiv.	587, 588, 589, 590, 592, 593, 626, 631, 664, 671
Girja Bai v. Venkabesh	.. 70
Girja Nath v. Upendra Nath	.. 304
Girja Shankar v. Murlidhar	.. 741
Giraj Singh v. Hargobin	.. 101
Girraj Singh v. Raghubir	.. 501
Girwar v. Makbunessa.	444, 457, 459
Gitabai v. Balaji	.. 1092
Gita Bai v. Shivabakas.	62, 101, 114
Giyavna v. Kandasami.	808, 840
Gnalimetla v. Bolluzu	.. 1062
Gnanabhai v. Srinivasa.	501, 502
Gnanambal v. Ammalu	.. 764
Gnanasambanda v. Velu.	808, 837, 839
Gnanasambanda v. Velu Pandaram.	808, 837, 839, 852, 859, 869
Gnanendra v. Surendra	.. 846
Goatley v. Jones	.. 734
Gobardhan v. Jasadamoni	.. 145
Gobardhan v. Onoop Roy	.. 1043
Gobardhan v. Rutu Roy	.. 731
Gobind v. Abdul Qayyan.	633, 1088
Gobind v. Baldeo	.. 1102
Gobind v. Debendra.	827, 833
Gobind v. Gomti	.. 914
Gobind v. Inayat	.. 778
Gobind v. Khunnilal.	1114, 1115, 1117
Gobind v. Lakhram	.. 1054
Gobind v. Mohesh.	1004, 1005, 1007
Gobind v. Radha.	74, 75
Gobind v. Ramchunder	.. 741
Gobind v. Woomesh	.. 1016
Gobind Chunder v. Doorga Persaud	.. 427
Gobind Dass v. Ranchord	.. 1062
Gobind Prasad v. Mahesh Chunder.	1012, 1016
Gobinda v. Dinanath	.. 1124
Gobinda v. Radha	.. 364
Gobind v. Ram Charan.	689, 692, 840, 855
Gobindamani v. Shamlal	.. 1096
Gobindan v. Camahchand	.. 264
Godavaribai v. Saguna Bai	.. 339
Gogeswar v. Ramchandra	.. 785
Gogirnath v. Jaikishen	.. 1059
Goheenkrist v. Gunga Persaud	.. 724
Gojabai v. Shahajirao.	70, 151
Gokal Chand v. Hukum Chand.	376, 378, 379, 381, 471, 498, 1183
Gokalchand v. Mangal Sen	.. 802
Gokal Das v. Chandi Bai	.. 615
Gokaran v. Sham Lal	.. 1083
Gokharam v. Sham Lal	.. 462
Goki Bai v. Lakshmi Dasi.	332, 339, 341
Gokool v. Issur.	817, 818
Gokulanand v. Iswar	.. 1099
Gokoolanund v. Wooma Daee	.. 216
Gokuldas v. Rambux	.. 775
Golab v. Hunsee	.. 739
Golab v. Prosonno	.. 847
Golab v. Shib Sahi	.. 1099
Golab v. Thakorlal.	306, 756
Golab Koonwar v. Collector.	328, 329
Golamee v. Juggessur	.. 117
Goluckchunder v. Oblia	.. 342
Goluckchunder v. Obita	.. 342
Gonda Koer v. Oodey Singh.	1132, 1142, 1149
Gonjakarta v. Nabinchandra	.. 423
Good v. Colyer	.. 759
Goodwin v. Roberts	.. 106
Gookul v. Issur	.. 816
Goolap v. Phool	.. 1029
Goolab Singh v. Kurun Singh.	1059, 1096, 1098
Gulab Singh v. Puran Singh	.. 1081
Goormukh v. Goomanee	.. 972
Goornee v. Oomrao	.. 903
Gooroo Das v. Saratchunder	.. 791
Gooroodass v. Bejoy	.. 411
Goroo Churn v. Golukmonee	.. 366
Gooroo Churn v. Kylash	.. 1014
Gooroo Gobind v. Anund Lall.	997, 1001, 1004, 1005
Goroogobind v. Hurecmaduh	.. 1009
Goor Persad v. Sheodeen	.. 498
Gooroo Pershad v. Debee Pershad.	437
Gooroova v. Narainaswamy.	757, 758
Goosami Sri Girdharji v. Roman Lalji	.. 838
Goshaeen v. Pursotum	.. 1107
Gopalchand v. Hukamchand	.. 374
Gopal v. Dhungazee	.. 995
Gopal v. Gour Monee	.. 1069
Gopal v. Hari Das.	1075, 1076
Gopal v. Hanmant.	59, 61, 92, 101, 222
Gopal v. Issur	.. 814
Gopal v. Jawand	.. 430
Gopal v. Jawand Singh	.. 363
Gopal v. Kenaram.	675, 679
Gopal v. Khande Rao	.. 433
Gopal v. Kunwar Singh	.. 831
Gopalchand v. Kunwar Singh	.. 417
Gopal v. Maheshri	.. 92
Gopal v. Nainu	.. 946
Gopal v. Narayan.	166, 173
Gopal v. Raghunath.	683, 701, 708, 709, 712
Gopal Prasad v. Raghunath	.. 713
Gopal v. Ram Chandra.	1130, 1162
Gopal v. Vishnu.	178, 215, 220, 229
Gopalakrishna v. Venkatanaraso.	130

	PAGE.
Gopala Krishnamaraju v. Venkata-naraswaju ..	653
Gopala Krishnayya v. Gopalan.	471, 547
Gopalam v. Gopalaraghavulu ..	261
Gopalam v. Venkataraghavulu.	261, 622
Gopalasami v. Arunachelam ..	164
Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan.	263
Gopalsami v. Chinnasami ..	890
Gopal Chunder v. Kartickchunder.	777
Gopal Chander v. Hari Dass ..	1076
Gopal Chandra v. Kadambini ..	327
Gopala Chariar v. Sanu Reddi ..	1063
Gopal Das v. Badri Nath ..	444
Gopal Dass v. Kerparam ..	859
Gopaldas v. Johan Das ..	533
Gopalji v. Manbirbi ..	1052
Gopalla v. Narayana ..	1054
Gopal Lal v. Purna Chandra.	821, 827, 880
Gopal Narain v. Kuddomutty.	456, 509
Gopalnarain v. Muddomutty ..	296
Gopal Rao v. Berar Manufacturing Co. ..	826
Gopal Rao v. Sita Rao ..	932
Gopalrao v. Trimbakrav ..	20
Gopalswami v. Arunachalam.	193, 887
Gopalta v. Venkatanarasa.	391, 392
Gopee Kishen v. Hemchundr ..	414
Gopi Krish v. Ganga Pershad.	427, 435, 436, 437, 438, 633, 726
Gopee Lal v. Bhagwan Dass.	437, 633
Gopee Lall v. Chandrabolee.	166, 200, 247
Gopinath v. Gooroo ..	833
Gopessur (In re) ..	770
Gopee v. Jaldhara ..	778
Gopibai v. Lakshmidas ..	330
Gopikabai v. Dattatraya.	318, 339, 340, 352
Gopi Kishen v. Gopi Kishen ..	273
Gopi Krishna v. Mt. Jabbo.	123, 125, 126
Gopimal v. Pannalal ..	264
Gopinath v. Dethi Cloth Mills ..	881
Gorachand v. Basanta ..	615
Gorakhpur v. Ramsunder ..	663
Gordhan v. Chunnilal.	814, 816
Gordhan Das v. Ram Goverbai.	782, 787
Gordon v. Gordon.	574, 576, 577, 579, 583
Gosaien v. Kishanmunnee. See Gossain v. Kishenmunnee ..	1161
Gosain Rambharti v. Mahant Surajbharti.	99, 114
Gosal v. Amarchand ..	451
Gossain v. Kishenmunee ..	1135
Gotha Ram v. Moobita ..	146
Gottepati v. Gottepati ..	316
Goundan v. Krishnamachari ..	414
Gour Mohan v. Mohan Mohan ..	850
Gour Nath v. Annopoorna ..	996
Goura v. Chummun.	255, 537
Gourah v. Gajudhar ..	312
Goureepershaud v. Jymala ..	203
Gouri v. Chandramani.	333, 334
Gouri v. Gopal ..	1066
Gouri v. Tirumaya ..	1102
Gauri Bai v. Gaya Bai ..	1067
Gouricharan v. Sita.	130, 931
Gourishankar v. Atmaram.	615, 636
Govarammal v. Manikammal ..	1185
Goverdhan v. Piare ..	995
Goverbai v. Kalli Bai ..	749
Goverdhan Das v. Laloomal.	231, 232
Goverdhangir v. Vishingir ..	806
Government v. Ganga.	140, 141, 143, 145
Government v. Gosvani ..	740
Government v. Kahanrai ..	740
Govind v. Abdul Qayyam ..	1059
Govind v. Chandra ..	605
Gobind Chandra v. Radha Kristo.	570
Govind v. Daulat.	110, 1152
Govind v. Khunnmal.	633, 995
Govind v. Krishnaji ..	1058
Govind v. Moro.	312, 600
Govind v. Naraindas ..	1188
Govind v. Radha Ballabh.	323, 569
Govind Prasad v. Chattarbhuj ..	433
Govind v. Savitri ..	1151
Govindnath v. Govindchander ..	427
Govinda v. Thayammal.	1080, 1090, 1097 1103
Govind v. Savitri ..	578
Govind Nath v. Gulalchand.	265, 277
Govind Singh v. Baldeo Singh ..	1083
Govinda v. Nandu ..	1106
Govind v. Lakhram ..	1064
Govinda v. Ramcharan.	776, 798
Govind v. Chandrabhaga ..	1033
Govinddan v. Muta ..	935
Govinda v. Rindabai ..	227
Govindrao v. Sitaram ..	371
Govindarazulla v. Devarabhotla.	130, 653
Govindaswamy v. Kannammal ..	772
Govindarasulu v. Devarabhotla.	391, 392
Govindayyar v. Dorasami.	224, 225, 227, 228
Govinddass v. Muta ..	935
Govindnath v. Govind Chunder ..	427
Govindan v. Sankaram ..	585
Govindoss v. Official Assignee ..	677
Greeder v. Troyluck ..	578
Greedharee v. Nundkishore.	808, 839
Greedharee v. Romanlaljee ..	873
Greig (In re) ..	756
Greender v. Troyluck ..	574
Greeschund v. Sumbhoo ..	340
Grenville v. Tyler ..	763
Grey v. Minethorpe ..	796
Grey v. Walker ..	480
Grish Chunder v. Dabea ..	510
Grays Minaro (In re) ..	305
Grose v. Amritamayi.	393, 1031, 1032, 1076
Guddati v. Ganpati.	97, 277, 1168
Gudimetla v. Bollozu ..	1054
Guga v. A. G. ..	345
Gugappa v. Tayawon ..	892
Gulappa v. Tayava ..	1032
Guiram v. Lal Behari ..	847
Gujjalapadi v. Gujjalapadi ..	433
Gujju Lal v. Fateh Lal ..	104

PAGE.

Gulab v. Jivan Lal. 124, 125
Gulab v. Phool .. 935
Gulabhai v. Subbaydesgi .. 875
Gulabchand v. Fulhar .. 112
Gulab Kuar v. Bansidhar .. 342
Gulbai (Re) 283
Gulabi v. Asaram .. 493
Gulappa v. Taywa. 1130, 1137, 1144
Gulbandi v. Munni Lal .. 643
Gulbandi v. Manni Lal .. 699
Guljar v. Mohanlal .. 581
Gullans. (In re) .. 799
Gul Mohammed v. Wazir Begum. 84, 285
Gumanan v. Jehangira .. 1087
Gunamani v. Debi Prasanna. 1154, 1164
Gunabhai v. Srinivasa .. 492
Gunda Narain v. Umatchunder .. 493
Gunesh v. Nil Komal .. 966
Gunesh Chunder v. Kamal Roy .. 967
Gunga v. Gharith .. 913
Gungeshwar v. Durga .. 993
Gun Joshi Sagoona. 332, 333
Gunga Mya v. Kishen Kishora.. 253
Gunga Pershad v. Brijjessuree .. 253
Gunga Pershad v. Phool Singh .. 301
Gunga Pershad v. Shamboonath. 1010, 1011
Gungaram v. Bellia .. 949
Guni Govind v. Anand Lal .. 1016
Gunja v. Ghasita .. 1164
Gunnappa v. Sankappa .. 173
Gunnaiyan v. Kamatchi. 375, 377, 648
Gunomani v. Devi .. 255
Guntupalli v. Guntupalli .. 1121
Guraditta v. Dharimal .. 895
Guran Ditta v. Pokhas Ram .. 523
Gurbacha v. Bujha .. 273
Gur Charanlall v. Badri Narain .. 362
Gurdaru Das v. Mohan Lal .. 541
Gurdhar Das v. Sri Krishna .. 626
Gurdi Metla v. Bollozu .. 386
Gurdit Singh v. Sher Singh .. 817
Gurdyal v. Kaunsilla .. 341
Gurivi v. Chinnamma. 1033, 1146
Gurja v. Mohersingh. 299, 312
Gurlinga v. Rama .. 126
Gurlingapa v. Nandapa. 421, 424
Gurlingappa v. Ramappa. 415, 423
Gur Nank v. Jai Narain. 1114, 1117
Gurnarain v. Guzzarilal .. 415
Gur Narayan v. Sheolal Singh. 442, 730, 733, 1078, 1082
Gur Pershad v. Dhani Bai .. 708
Gursarn v. Mohan Lal. 541, 543
Gurucharya v. Bhimacharya .. 432
Gurn Das v. Matilal. 127, 169
Gurudayal v. Kaunsila .. 357
Guru Govind v. Anandlal. 902, 1008, 1015
Gurulal v. Gajaja .. 664
Gurulingaswami v. Ramalakshmamma. 73, 214, 247, 263
Gurumuksh v. Mitta .. 995
Gurumurthi v. Gurummal. 361, 365, 366
Guru v. Nafar. 1035, 1038, 1043

PAGE.

Gurunathan v. Addepally .. 541
Gurunath v. Krishnaji. 1025, 1032
Gurunditta v. Mt. Diwani .. 1185
Guru Prosad v. Nafar Das. 688, 1039, 1044, 1129, 1135
Guru Rao v. Secretary of State. 702, 742
Gurusami v. Chinna .. 499
Guru Sami v. Gopalaswami. 514, 517
Gurusami v. Pandia .. 709
Gurusami v. Sivakami .. 788
Guru Savank v. Narayan .. 358
Guruswami v. Senabatti .. 685
Guruvappa v. Thimma .. 450
Guruvajammah v. Rangaswamy. 813
Guruvayya v. Dattatraya .. 476
Gutha v. Rama Katayya .. 1104
Gyanananda v. Kristo .. 858
G. V. Narasimha Rao v. Nagapathi Subbarao .. 257
Gyana v. Kandasami .. 832
Gyanendro v. Lobongomunjori .. 1096

H

Habibullah v. Nayah Khanam ... 730
Habibur v. Ashita ... 617
Habzoonissa v. Pulury ... 1047
Hadi v. Parbati ... 1133
Hafzoonnissa v. Radhhabinode (also Padhabinode) ... 1107 Haidri v. Narindra. 321, 324
Haimunchull v. Ghunsheam ... 182
Haji Ismail (In re) ... 64
Haji Noor Mahomed v. Macleod... 477
Haimun v. Gunsheam ... 179
Haimam Singh v. Lal Rudra ... 430
Haji Osman v. Haroon ... 80
Haji Osman v. Haroon Salleh ... 64
Hajiokhan v. Initea Juddin ... 411
Haker v. Mathabsingh ... 122
Hakim v. Jagat Singh ... 98
Hakma v. Meman ... 506
Halima v. Asibai ... 1030
Hall v. Darby Sanitary Authority. 815
Hall v. Hall. 149, 767, 768
Hall v. Nottingham ... 95
Hall v. Warren ... 796
Hamandas v. Mayadas ... 488
Hamangini v. Kedar Nath ... 323
Hamidmiya v. Nagimdas ... 859
Hamlyu v. Talisher Distillery ... 75
Hanamman v. Timannbhat ...84, 146
Hancower v. Hancower ... 274
Hanuman Pershad Pandey v. Babooee ... 452
Hanooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee ... 1106
Hanuman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee. 452, 516
Hanuman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee ... 383
Hanuman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee. 388, 390, 510, 561
Hanhayalal v. Hamid Ali ... 846
Hanuman Pershad Panday v. Mt. Babooee. 444, 459

	PAGE
Hanuman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee	... 557
Hanumant v. Bhimacharya.	166, 173, 261, 414
Hanumant v. Bhimacharya	... 174
Hanumant v. Ganesh.	489, 499, 527, 538, 539, 540
Hanumant v. Sonadhari.	541, 549
Hanuman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee.	289, 290, 292, 301, 302, 303, 304
Hansbutti v. Ishri Dutt.	1036, 1037, 1038, 1039
Hanso Pathak v. Harmandil	... 1183
Hanuman v. Bhaganti.	1116, 1122, 1123
Hanuman v. Daulat	... 535
Hanuman v. Ganesh Prasad	... 314
Hanuman v. Jofa Kunwar	... 1098
Hanuman Singh v. Nanuk Chand.	559
Hanumandas v. Valabhadas.	423, 613, 619
Hanumant v. Bhimacharya	... 360
Hanumant v. Sanadhari.	393, 394
Hanumantamma v. Rani	... 274
Hanmantapa v. Jivubai	... 375
Hanumat v. Sonadhari	... 541
Hanwata v. Padam	... 765
Har Bahadur v. Chand Raj.	124, 126
Har Bhagwan v. Hukam Singh.	909, 940
Har Dayal v. Radhan	... 341
Hargawan v. Baijnath	... 1087
Har Govind v. Collector.	689, 691, 703, 715
Har Hari Baksh v. Bharat	... 544
Har Kishore v. Thakur Dhan	... 914
Har Narain v. Bishambhar	... 609
Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari.	788, 790, 791, 804, 809, 810, 811, 812
Har Pershad v. Amar Dayal	... 927
Har Prasad v. Bakshi	... 455
Har Prasad v. Kewal	... 886
Har Sankar v. Lal Raghuraj Singh	... 243
Har Saran v. Nandi.	333, 938
Har Shankar v. Lal Raghuraj Singh	... 247
Haradhun v. Issur Chunder	... 1102
Haran Chunder v. Harro Mohan.	224, 225
Harbaksh v. Dal Bahadur	... 710
Harbans v. Atra	... 63
Hardan Das v. Sunder	... 1189
Hardei v. Bhagwan Singh.	581, 1089, 1117
Hardeo Bux v. Jawahir Singh	... 371
Hardi Narain v. Ruder Perkash.	405, 422, 613, 614
Hardi Narain v. Rudet Perkash	... 415
Hardi Narain v. Urdeb Perkash	... 420
Harduari v. Gomi	... 756
Harduari Lal v. Gomi	... 306
Hardwar v. Ram Milan	... 376
Harek Chand v. Bejoy Chand.	254, 255
Harendra Nath v. Shibo	... 765
Hargawan v. Baijnath	... 1026
Hargobind v. Dharam Singh	... 321
Hargrace v. Hargrace	... 161
Hari v. Bajrang.	461, 1052
Hari Charan v. Kaula Rai	... 449
Hari v. Damodar	... 1144
Hari v. Ganapatrav.	614, 615, 640, 661
Hari v. Gokuldas	... 476
Hari v. Lakshmi	... 614
Hari v. Minakshi	... 1115
Hari v. Radhika	... 929
Hari v. Sant Prasad	... 550
Hari v. Venkata	... 614
Hari v. Vital.	606, 1034
Hari Baksh v. Babu Lal.	615, 616, 643, 662, 664
Haribhat v. Damodarbhat	... 1024
Haribhai v. Mathur.	934, 946
Hari Das v. Ram Das	... 550
Hari Das v. Narotam	... 448
Hari Das v. Prem Nath	... 640
Hari Das v. Raja Ram	... 834
Hari Das v. Velji	... 364
Hari Dayal v. Grish Chunder.	69, 1172
Hari Gopal v. Gokaldas	... 457
Hari Har v. Jang Bahadur	... 989
Hari Kishen v. Kashi Pershad.	1075, 1077, 1078
Hari Kishore v. Thakur Dhan	... 944
Hari Krishana v. Umesh Chandra	... 316
Hari Kumari v. Mohun Chandra	... 1057
Hari Lall Mallick (In re)	... 505
Hari Mohan v. Sourendra Nath.	447, 450, 455, 802
Hari Prasad v. Sourendra	... 511
Hari Ram v. Jitam Ram	... 314
Hari Shankar v. Ram Sarup	... 747
Hari Das v. Bamachurun	... 1076
Hari Das v. Baroda	... 342
Hari Das v. Devkuwar	... 366
Hari Das v. Devkuarbai	... 366
Haria v. Kanhaya	... 124
Haridas v. Narotam	... 649
Hari Das v. Manmath Nath	... 217
Hari Das v. Manmatha	... 225
Hari Das v. Pran Nath	613, 614, 615
Haridas Sanyal v. Pran Nath Sanyal	... 636
Harigir v. Anand Bharati.	114, 174, 178, 272
Harihar v. Dasarathi	... 1122
Harihar v. Harendra	... 895
Harihar Baksh v. Bharat	... 496
Harihar Pershad v. Bholi Pershad.	376, 456
Harihar Prasad v. Kesho Prasad.	710
Harihar Prasad v. Ram Daur.	960, 961, 979
Harihar Prasad Singh v. Kesho Prasad Singh	... 711
Harikishen v. Kashi Pershad.	514, 1079
Hari Lal v. Bai Rewa	... 246
Harilal v. Gordhan	... 303
Harilal Mallick (In re)	... 505
Harilal v. Nagar	... 506
Harilal v. Panvalavadas.	1029, 1030
Harish Chand v Atir Mohamed.	910, 987
Harish Chunder v. Nufur Chunder.	432
Hari Singh v. Ram Singh	... 595
Hariyappa v. Deputy Commissioner	... 549
Harku Singh v. Nanda Kuar	... 326
Harmobh v. Mandil	... 1032

	PAGE
Harman v. Partalu	... 283
Harmange v. Ram Gopal.	386, 1054, 1057
Harnabh v. Mandil	... 175
Harnath Pershad v. Mandil Dass.	265
Harnath v. Mandal Dass	... 103
Haro v. Paragauda	... 544
Haroli v. Bhagwan Singh	... 1082
Haroon Mahomed (In re).	255, 257, 477
Harpal v. Bishan	... 707
Harpal v. Haralal	... 535
Harbal v. Lakraj	... 719
Harpal Singh v. Lekhraj	... 1089
Har Prasad v. Kewal	... 125
Harpershad v. Sheo Dayal	... 100
Haris v. Brown (also Harris).	789, 791
Harrosoondery v. Cowar	... 262
Harry Shankar v. Krishnorao	... 1143
Harta v. Kanhya	... 120
Harwood v. Baker	... 770
Harwood v. Tooks	... 1092
(also Kadi)	... 581
Hasan Bibi v. Fazal Kadir	... 583
Hashein Sab v. Sasakha	... 607
Hashim v. Abdul Rahman	... 101
Hassamal v. Ghulam Mahomed	... 85
Hassainmian v. Collector	... 876
Hassan Ali v. Nagammal	... 265
Hastings v. Gonsalves	... 82
Haurgovind v. Collector	... 707
Hayes v. Harendra	... 1080
Hazara v. Samita	... 946
Hazarilal v. Ram Lal.	620, 662
Hazarimal v. Abani Nath.	537, 559
Hazarimal v. Aliani	... 706
Hazura v. Chand	... 395
Heane v. Rogers	... 239
Heera Singh v. Buryar Singh	... 253
Heald v. Walls.	575, 579
Heera v. Bidyadhur	... 633
Heeralal v. Bidyadhur	... 437
Heeralal v. Kaunssilah.	341, 342
Heeranath v. Burm Narain Singh.	715
Heeranand v. Ozeerun	... 741
Helan Dasi v. Durga Das.	574, 576
(also Helan v. Durgadas)	... 644
Hema v. Ajoodhya	... 329
Hema Ram v. Chhatta	... 554
Hemabaee v. Punjeabhaee	... 271
Hemadri v. Ramanikanta	... 614
(also Ramani)	... 639
Hemanchull v. Maharaj Singh	... 939
Hemangini v. Kedar Nath.	345, 567
Hemangini v. Nobin Chand	... 788
Hemanta v. Sudhanon	... 778
Hemchand v. Tara	... 1058
Hemchandra v. Motilal.	368, 566, 569
Hemchunder v. Sarnamoyi.	1067, 1069, 1071, 1096, 1907, 1123
Hemchunder v. Sarnamoyi	... 1026
Hemichunder v. Sarnamoyi,	... 1072
Hemlutta v. Goluk Chunder	... 1024
Hemnanth (In re)	... 280
Hamraj v. Nathu.	294, 388
Hemraj v. Topen	... 488
Heonee v. Dhuram	... 633
Heranath v. Ram Narain	... 714
Her Prasad v. Kewal	... 124
Hetnarain v. Modnarain.	574, 577, 578
Hidait v. Afzull.	881, 882
Hill v. Crook	... 795
Himmat v. Bhawani.	507, 509
Himmat Bahadur v. Bhawani	... 1059
Himmat Singh v. Ganpat Singh	... 412
Himulla v. Pudoo	... 903
Hingeston v. Sidney	... 817
Hira v. Dharmo	... 273
Hira v. Hanaji	... 142
Hira v. Hansji	... 139
Hira v. Hardab Singh	... 220
Hira v. Jowala	... 112
Hira v. Radha	... 274
Hiralal v. Tripura	... 1169
Hira Ram v. Udhi Ram	... 415
Hira Singh v. Gunga	... 600
(also Manglan)	... 434
Hira Singh v. Vir Singh.	950, 957, 958
Hiralal v. Chandrabali	... 542
Hiralal v. Tripura.	117, 145, 1140, 1164, 1166, 1167, 1168
Hiranath v. Ram Narayan	... 721
Hiraram v. Udharam	... 535
Hirabai v. Gorbai	... 6, 99
Hitendra v. Rameshwar.	521, 1130
Hitendra v. Sukhdev	... 463
Hiran v. Sohan.	1115, 1117
Hitendra Singh v. Rameshwar	... 1134
Hitendra Singh v. Rameshwar Singh	... 436
Hoblyn v. Hoblyn	... 573
Hobibur v. Ashita	... 614
Hollash Kooer v. Kassee	... 632
Holmes (In re)	... 541
Honamma v. Timannabhat.	330, 331, 995
Honda Ram v. Desu Ram	... 469
Hook v. Administrator-General	... 1175
Hoolab Singh v. Kurum Singh	... 192
Hoolas Kunwar v. Mansingh	... 615
Hoolah Kooer v. Kuasee Prashad.	628
Hoorsbai v. Sooleman	... 1140
Hormusji v. Cowasji	... 501
(also Dhanbaiji)	... 801
Horonath v. Indra	... 1059
Hosbanna v. Devanna	... 609
Hoshnagi v. Jaimal Singh	... 273
Hossein v. Mahanta	... 852
Hossein Ali v. Bhagwan Das	... 858
Hotchand v. Manghanmal.	601, 994
Hoymobatty v. Keroona	... 343
Hoymobutty v. Sreekushen.	731, 732
Huchrao v. Bhimrao	... 234
Huebat Rao v. Govindrao	... 231
Hukumchanda v. Maharaj	... 881
Hukum Chand v. Sital Prasad	... 1130
Huloodhun v. Goorod	... 641
Humphreys v. Polak	... 282
Hunchangonda v. Kellava	... 920
Hunooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee	... 517
Hunooman Pershad v. Babooee	... 558
See Hanooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee	... 469
Hunooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee.	287, 512, 513, 514, 776, 851

PAGE

See Hanooman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee ... 1059
Hunsraj v. Keserbai. 1135, 1144
Hunsraj v. Monghibai. 1144, 1080
Hunter v. A. G. ... 817
Hunter v. Bullock ... 800
Hurlal v. Hari Singh ... 1104
Hurgovind v. Collector ... 704
Hur Parshad v. Sheo Dayal ...88, 107
Hurpershad v. Sheo Dayal ... 371
Huradhan v. Muthoranatha. 236, 237, 238
Hurday Narain v. Rooder Perkash. 518, 522, 523
Hurdial v. Kali Ram. 120, 126
Huree v. Mutho ... 115
Hureehur v. Judoonath ... 101
Huri Das v. Ramachurn. 994, 1006, 1012
Huri Dayal v. Grishchunder. 1129, 1136
Hurnarain v. Arvur Singh ... 543
Huro Mohun v. Anlak Monee ... 1055
Huro Pershad v. Shib Shunkar ... 75, 78
Hur Soonduree v. Chundermony... 214
Hurr Dayal v. Girishchunder ... 1025
Hurrinath v. Mothoor Mohun ... 1116
Hurronath v. Randhir ... 1059
Hurromohun v. Auluck Monee. 385, 392
Hurrosoondery v. Rajessuree. 904, 905
Hurosoonduree v. Doorga Doss ... 430
Hurry Doss v. Dossee ... 1094
Hurry Doss v. Rungunmoney ... 607
Hurry Doss v. Upoornath. 1026, 1095
Hurry Mohun v. Gonesh ... 1110
Hurry Mohun v. Gonesh Chunder. 287, 288, 294, 1050, 1062
Hurry Mohun v. Shonatun. 1129, 1135
Hurry Mohan v. Sonatun ... 1162
Hurry Mohan Roy v. Nayantara... 338
Hurry Nath v. Upoornath ... 607
Hurry Shankar v. Krishnarao ... 1157
Husaini v. Rustam. 148, 149, 150
Husen v. Rajaram ... 293
Husen v. Rajaram ... 302
Hushen Sab v. Basappa ... 608
Hussain v. Chin Chong ... 776
Hussain Sahib v. Hassan Sahib... 64
Hussainbhai v. Bansilal. 949, 964
Husan v. Raja Ram ... 293

I

Ibrahim v. Ahsanullah. 900, 902
Ibrahim v. Ibrahim ... 64, 78
Iburamsa v. Theruvenkatasami. 420, 424, 460, 497, 612, 613, 614, 616, 618, 619
Ichnu v. Saudagar ... 272
Ihsadin Hasan v. Panna Lal ... 127
Ikbal Narain v. Suraj Narain ... 639
Illata v. Illata ... 320
Illias v. Bulagichand ... 1191
Imam v. Balamma ... 334
Imambundi v. Matasuddi. 151, 293, 294, 301, 908
Imamuddin v. Liladhar ... 476
Imin v. Ibrahim ... 863
Immudipattam v. Subramania. 708, 709
Imperial Bank v. Maya Devi ... 464

PAGE

Imrit Koonwar v. Roop Narayan. 232, 236, 1117
Inam Din v. Hassan Bibi ... 143
Inamullah v. Aisha Bi ... 439
Inananjan v. Adormoney. 856, 859
Inda v. Jehangir ... 246
Indar v. Jaipal. 175, 202, 734
Indar v. Jewa. ... 97
Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad. 388, 393, 394, 395
Indar Narayan v. Nank Chand ... 559
Indor Sen v. Harpar. 707, 708, 719
Indar Singh v. Fateh Singh ... 861
Indar Singh v. Sarju Singh. 456, 494, 496, 544
Indat Shai v. Shiam Bahadur ... 364
Inder Coomar v. Doolal ... 427
Inder Singh v. Thakur Singh ... 153
Inderun v. Ramaswamy. 115, 116, 124, 125, 126, 137, 152, 152, 154, 321, 322, 929, 940
Indi v. Gaina. 282, 283
Indirarani v. Akshaykumar. 774, 776
Indoji v. Kothapalli ... 376
Indra Narain v. Onkarlal ... 801
Indor Kuar v. Mangaram ... 1059
Indar Kuar v. Lalla Prasad ... 1061
Indra Kuar v. Abdool. ... 1117
Indromani v. Behari Lal. 227, 230
Indu Bhushan v. Sailaja. 638, 639
Indur Chunder v. Radha Kishore. 303, 304
Indur Bux v. Sheonaresh ... 1054
Indra Narain v. Sarbasova. 1067, 1105
Indurj v. Chundemun. 805, 829
Ingaredai v. Lakshmanwa ... 149
Infants (In re) ... 281
Iniai Ram v. Muson ... 182
Inspector Singh v. Kharakh Singh. 476, 478
Ireland v. Livingstone ... 98
Ishani v. Ganesh ... 388
Ishrappa v. Krishna ... 421
Ishri Dutt v. Hansbutti. 1023, 1031, 1032, 1034, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1038, 1039, 1041, 1089, 1130, 1132
Ishri Singh v. Baldeo Singh ... 707
Ishri Singh v. Baldeo Singh. 107, 713, 721
Ishwar v. Janki. 1098, 1100
Ishwar Chander Surma (In re) ... 280
Ishwar Dadu v. Gajabai. 192, 208, 906
Ishwari Prasad v. Babu Nandan. 1061, 1119
Ishwari Prasad v. Rai Hari Prasad ...58, 226
Ismail v. Hafiz ... 733
Ismail v. Jagannath ... 1080
Ismail v. Wasudeo ... 731
Israel v. Shamsher ... 410
Issur Chunder v. Ranee ... 995
Iswar v. Khitishchandra, ... 821
Iswardhari v. Narsingh ... 425
Itcha v. Nilmani ... 1010
Ittappan v. Manavikrama ... 410

J

Jabedali v. Prasanna Kumar ... 1072

	PAGE
Jabha v. Mehtab	... 995
Jadav Bhai v. Multan Chand	... 947
Jaddo Kunwar v. Sheo Shankar	... 519
Jadia v. Baldeo	... 656
Jadomoney v. S. Mukerjee & Co.	1076
Jado Singh v. Ranee	... 555
Jadoonath v. Basunt Coomar.	151, 1162
Jadoonath v. Bishonath	... 1026
Jadoonath v. Brinonath	... 603
Jadrell v. Jadrell	... 375
Jadub v. Benodbehary	... 678
Jadubansi v. Asman	... 1034
Jadubansi v. Mahpal.	1104, 1198
Jadumani v. Kheytramohan	... 334
Jadunath v. Bishambar	... 919
Jadunath v. Bhabuti	... 599
Jadunath v. Ramnarain	... 1042
Jadunath v. Sitaramji.	814, 836
Jadu Nath v. Thakur Sitaramji.	810, 811, 812
Jadunath v. Bassant	... 1130
Jafar v. Ibrahim	... 821
Jafar v. Mhd. Khan	... 946
Jaffar v. Aji	... 682
Jafri Begum v. Ali Raza.	643, 699
Jag Sahu v. Radha Kishun	... 517
Jayabandh v. Rajendra	... 608
Jagabhai v. Virbhukhandas	... 476
Jagabandh v. Rajendra	... 608
Jagabhai v. Vijbhukhandas	... 476
Jagadamba v. Bibbootibhoshan.	571, 584
Jagadamba v. Dakhina.	236, 242, 244
Jagadamba v. Wazir Narain.	709, 720, 1134
Jagadamba v. Wazir Narain.	696, 710
Jagadindra v. Hemanta.	739, 806, 809, 811, 838, 847
Jagadindra v. Romanlalji	... 837
Jagadindra v. Madhusudan	... 801
Jagannath v. Narayan	... 157
Jagannath v. Akali Dassia	... 58
Jagannath v. Gangoo	... 974
Jagannadhan v. Vighneshwararudu.	1023, 1044, 1046
Jagannadha v. Papamma	... 232
Jagannatham v. Venkata	... 414
Jagannath v. Abdullah	... 229
Jagannath v. Bidyanand.	61, 62, 168, 906, 910
Jagannath v. Champa.	912, 950
Jagannath v. Chunilal	... 299
Jagannath v. Dibho	... 1087
Jagannath v. Jugal Kishore.	540, 541
Jagannath v. Mannulal	... 444
Jagannath v. Mirza	... 298
Jagannath v. Narayan.	110, 1140, 1143, 1150, 1157, 1158, 1159, 1165, 1166, 1167, 1168
Jagannath v. Ram Bharosa.	181, 191, 199
Jagannath v. Ranjit Singh.	110, 801, 1152, 1154, 1155
Jagannath v. Sher Bahadur.	907, 944
Jagannath v. Sita Ram.	492, 498
Jagannath v. Tripura	... 1167
Jagannath v. Tulsi Das	... 535
Jagannath v. Viswesan	... 552

	PAGE
Jagannatha v. Kunja Behari.	183, 202, 539, 787
Jagal Kishore v. Jatendra.	1112, 1116
Jagar Nath v. Lalta Prasad	... 291
Jagannadhan v. Vighneswardu	... 1058
Jagannath v. Bibi	... 854
Jagannath v. Ram Bharosa	... 754
Jagarnath v. Shama Pandey.	415, 498
Jagarnath v. Surajdeo	... 1030
Jagatpol v. Jageshwar	... 921
Jagat Chandra v. Biswa Mahar	... 951
Jagat Narain v. Sheodas.	... 692
Jagat Narain v. Muthura Das.	294, 388, 396, 478
Jagat Ram v. Mohesh	... 1092
Jagdanand v. Kessubnund	... 1018
Jagdeo v. Raja Kuar	... 802
Jagdish Bahadur v. Sheo Pertab Singh	... 699
Jagdish v. Sheo Partab.	50, 714, 716, 902
Jagdishprasad v. Ambashankar	... 470
Jageshwar v. Pandurang	... 222
Jogeswar v. Ramchandra.	376, 778
Jaggamoni v. Nilmoni	... 823
Jaggeshwar v. Jaggatdhari	... 802
Jagmohan v. Prag Aher	... 396
Jag Mohan v. Proyag	... 1139
Jag Mohan Singh v. Sri Nath	... 794
Jagmohan Das v. Ally Das	... 875
Jagmohan Das v. Kunwar Singh.	647, 664
Jagmohan Das v. Mangaldas.	402, 410, 747, 896
Jagmohan v. Sri Nath	... 744
Jagnnath v. Kunj Behari.	162, 282
Jago v. Oodel.	301, 303
Jagunath v. Ramabhind.	283, 371
Jagodumba v. Rahinee	... 435
Jagomohan v. Sarodemayee	... 608
Jagun Koer v. Raghoonundun	... 481
Jahabhai v. Rustomji	... 476
Jahan Singh v. Hardat Singh	... 562
Jai Bansi v. Chattar Dhai	... 837
Jai Indra v. Dilraj Kuar	... 392
Jai Nand v. Mt. Paran	... 327
Jaint Singh v. Gosain	... 1100
Jai Narain v. Prag Narain.	448, 476, 486, 662, 664
Jai Ram v. Musain	... 182
Jaisinghpal v. Bijoy Pal	... 224
Jai Singh v. Bijai	... 225
Jai Singh v. Darbara Singh	... 1003
Jaikisondas v. Harkishendas.	110, 111, 151, 153 ,1155
Jaikumar v. Gauri Nath	... 540
Jainadi v. Kanshi Ram	... 941
Jainarain v. Bhagwan	... 1051
Jaineshwari v. Ugneshwari	... 767
Jaipal v. Indur Bahadur	... 1091
Jairam v. Atmaram	... 617
Jairam v. Kessowjee	... 1135
Jairam v. Nathu.	609, 653
Jairam v. (Sheo) Shanker	... 543
Jairam v. Vessowjee	... 795
Jaiwanti v. Gajadhar	... 283
Jaiwanti v. Nagridas	... 876
Jajyamp v. Kamakshi	... 72
Jalandhar v. Jhavala	... 835

	PAGE
Jalbhai v. Manoel ...	82
Jalindranath v. Nagendranath ...	967
Jalli v. Banwari Lal ...	663
Jallidar Singh v. Ram Lal ...	447
Jamadar (In re) ...	273
Jambagathachi v. Mannarsami ...	299
Jamelah v. Paqul Ram ...	93
Jamiyatram v. Jamma ...	892
See Janiyatram v. Jamna ...	1032
Jamiyatram v. Parbhu Das ...	552
Jammabai v. Raychand ...	215
Jamma Bhai v. Balkrishna ...	332
Jamma Prasad v. Ram Pratap ...	361
Jamna v. Machul Sahu. 318, 322, 338, 341, 342
Jamna v. Nain Sukh. 517, 518, 535
Jammna Bai v. Gonda Ram ...	79
Jamna Devi v. Mul Raj. 143, 145
Jamna Prasad v. Ram Partap ...	402
Jamna Prasad v. Durga Devi ...	576
Jamnabai v. Khimji. 814, 816, 939
Jamnabai v. Raychand. 174, 177, 229
Jamnabai v. Vasudeo ...	510
Jamnadas v. Gordhandas ...	752
Jamoona Dassya v. Bama Soondari. 166, 277, 1089
Jamshedji v. Soonabai ...	804
Jamuna Bai v. Jahur Mal, ...	265
Jamunabai v. Sidney ...	817
Jamuna Prasad v. Ram Padarath.	1031
Jan Ali v. Ram Nath ...	876
Jana v. Rakhma. 907, 948
Janaki v. Q. E. ...	144
Janaki v. Mathuranath ...	1033
Janki v. Rai ...	182
Janki v. Nand Ram. 325, 326, 237, 360, 361
Janaki v. Narayanasami. 1007, 1026, 1043, 1092, 1093, 1094, 1098, 1099, 1103
Janki v. Sadasheo ...	179
Janaki Ram v. Nagamani. 376, 402
Janakisetty v. Miariyala. 1040, 1129, 1130, 1135, 1137
Janardan v. Khilish Chandra ...	309
Janardhan v. Anu ...	1027
Janardhan v. Gopal. 171, 994, 995
Janda Lal v. Dhirendra ...	506
Jandub v. Benodebehary ...	1014
Janeshwara v. Ogneshwari ...	772
Janglubai v. Jetha. 1146, 1151
Jangahyir v. Sheo Raj Singh ...	217
Jang Bahadur v. Rana Uma Nath. 571, 572, 584
Janki v. Debi Prasad ...	1066
Janki v. Nand Ram. 567, 967
Janki Bai v. Shrinivas ...	329
Janki Bai v. Sundra. 1024, 1032
Janki Das v. Sanchi Ram ...	325
Janki Nath v. Jamini Kanta. 416, 425
Janki Nath v. Janki Nath. 367, 369
Janki Nath v. Mothura. 605, 607, 1010
Janki Prasad v. Dwarka Prasad ...	710
Jankiram v. Venkiah ...	220
Jankiram v. Nogamani ...	376
Janmajoy v. Keshah Lal ...	127
Janunk v. Raghunandan ...	500
Janokee v. Gopaul. 229, 834
Janoki Nath Mothura Nath. 568, 604, 1034
Janumajoy v. Keshudilal ...	169
Jarean v. Vetha ...	1114
Jasoda v. Lal Mohan ...	566
Jasoda v. Sheo Pershad ...	890
Jasoda Lal v. Balaram. 436, 730, 731
Jasodha Bibi v. Parmanand. 861, 864
Jaswanti v. Tej Narain. 560, 559
Jaswantsanggi v. Fatesangji ...	82
Jatha v. Venkatappa ...	1115
Jatikar v. Mukunda. 250, 740, 964
Jathu v. Venkatappa. 907, 1118
Jatindranath v. Nagendranath. 924, 973
Jati v. Mukunda ...	869
Jati Lal v. Beni Madho ...	576
Jatti v. Banawari Lal. 594, 673, 679, 616, 664, 663
Jatti v. Banwari Lal. 433, 663, 674, 679
Javerbai v. Kabli Bai ...	735
Javitri v. Genden Singh. 1006, 1090
Jawahir Singh v. Giayan Singh ...	355
Jawalar, v. Gayam Singh ...	370
Jawala Buksh v. Phalune Singh...	1138
Jawahir Singh v. Mohanlal ...	559
Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash...	193 491, 533, 536
Jawalar (or Jawahar) v. Pardumant. 341, 553, 554
Jawalita Lal v. Jaran Lal ...	76
Jawalaram v. Hari Kishen ...	1063
Jay Narain v. Kisun Dutt ...	634
Jaya Madhab v. Manjunath ...	1160
Jayanti v. Alamelu. 329, 332, 333, 335, 336, 341, 346, 494
Jayanti v. Mangamma ...	510
Jaykisto v. Nittyanund. 341, 469, 474 476, 484
Jeapes v. Jeapes ...	149
Jaytara v. Ramhari. 330, 350
Jeban Krishna v. Briju Lal ...	1152
Jeebnath v. Court of Wards. 960, 1168
Jee v. Audley ...	799
Jeetnath v. Lokenath ...	718
Jeevanbhai v. Manordas. 505, 509
Jeewan v. Putto ...	354
Jeewun v. Sona ...	1135
Jogendra v. Phami Bhushan ...	1136
Jeladi v. Ponduri ...	291
Jenka v. Dharma ...	929
Jenkins v. Harvey ...	107
Jenkins v. Robertson ...	858
Jeolal v. Loke Narayan ...	635
Jeoraj v. Sheo Kuar. 227, 265
Jeram v. Manphal ...	272
Jeram v. Veerbai. 1115, 1117
Jesoda v. Sheo Pershad ...	886
Jethanand v. Kewal Ram ...	590
Jethibai v. Putlibai ...	296
Jewa v. Karm Buksh ...	272
Jeyangaruluvaru v. Durani ...	882
Jeyangaruluvaru v. Sri Hati ...	847
Jhabbu Singh v. Ganga Bishan...	299
Jhandu v. Tarif ...	1101
Jhari Koeri v. Bijai Singh ...	1120

	PAGE
Jharula v. Jalandher.	835, 1116
Jhitibai v. Tejmal	... 289
See Jhijibai v. Tejmal	... 235
Jhitbai v. Tajmai.	297, 472, 476
Jhummana v. Tiloki.	1112, 1123, 1124
Jiamuttlah v. Ramonikant	... 104
Jiban Krishna v. Brojo Lal.	1113, 1120
Jihan Singh v. Hardat Singh.	517, 560
Jiji Amba (Ex parte)	... 1096
Jijiamba (In re)	... 1103
Jijoyiamba v. Kamakshi (also Ramakshi).	237, 606, 937, 1033
Jinuk Kishoree (Mt.) v. Raghunandan	... 518
Jinwarsa v. Gunwant Rao.	423, 518
Jitan v. Bhagwan	... 1002
Jitan v. Manbarta	... 439
Jivabhai v. Vadilal	... 600
Jivanlal v. Kallumal	... 223
Jivani v. Jivu	... 217
Jivi v. Ramji.	347, 348, 351
Jiwan v. Dit	... 90
Jiwan v. Harnam Das	... 172
Jiwan Bras v. Myindra	... 73
Jiwan Das v. Janki	... 298
Jiwan Mal v. Jamna Das.	268, 273, 275
Jiwani v. Mala Ram	... 282
Jnanendra Nath Ray (In re)	... 155
Joa Ram v. Surasti	... 435
Joadhi (also Joahi) v. Basdeo.	806, 814, 846
Jogdamba v. Secretary of State.	70, 903
Jodhi Bai v. Basdeo	... 874
Jodoonath v. Briji Nath	... 604
Jodoonath v. Brojonath.	338, 607, 608
Jodrell v. Jodrell	... 573
Joga v. Salleyya	... 579
Jogdamba v. Bibhootibhooban	... 572
Jogdeo v. Raja Kuar	... 802
Jogat Chandra v. Biswa Mahar...	405
Jogendra v. Baladev.	612, 620, 637, 405
Jogendra v. Fulkumari	... 603
Jogendra v. Harry Das.	144, 145, 146, 147, 148
Jogendra v. Jagabundhu.	612, 613, 614, 615, 640
Jogendra v. Funindro	... 543
Jogendra v. Kalicharan	... 687
Jogendra v. Nityanand.	403, 601, 642, 719, 891, 932, 933
Jogendra v. Phani Bhusan.	1025, 1172
Jogendra v. Srish Chandra.	612, 640
Jogendra Nath Mukherji v. Jugobandhu Mukherji	... 636
Jogendro v. Funindro	... 457
Joges Chandra v. Prasanna Kumar.	574
Jogeshchandra v. Nrityakali.	212, 214
Jogeshwar v. Bhushan	... 572
Jogi Radir v. Chinnabbi	... 409
Jogeswar v. Panch Kuari	... 111
Jogeswar v. Ramchandra	... 782
Joggendronath v. Rajendronath	... 1096
Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram.	442, 449, 453, 516, 533, 559
Jogiban v. Deo Shankar	... 1054
Jogo v. Dodal	... 276
Jogobhandu v. Rajendra	... 608
Jogodishuri v. Kailash Chandra	... 670
Jogul Kishore v. Jotendra	... 1116
...ogundro Nundini v. Hurry Das.	144
Johari v. Kylaso	... 972
Joharmal v. Chetram	... 484
Johnson v. Clark.	102, 106
Johnson v. Lawson	... 927
Johnston v. Mattia	... 759
Johnstone v. Gopal Singh	... 428
Johurra v. Sreegopal.	333, 335, 341, 452, 470, 473, 474, 476, 482, 485
Jokharmal v. Eknath	... 537
Jotilal v. Durani	... 944
Jones v. Roe	... 1092
Jones v. Williams	... 815
Joohoodar v. Pularvarti	... 479
Joshi v. Assan.	284, 285, 311
Josy Assan (In re)	... 310
Joshytasam (In re)	... 307
Joti Lal v. Beni Madho.	579, 1092
Jotish Chandra Narain v. Radhik Chandra	... 643
Jotish Chandra v. Rathika	... 642
Jotilal v. Durani	... 944
Jouresend v. Carne	... 804
Jowahir v. Kailassoo	... 922
Jowahra v. Akbar Hussain	... 873
Jowala Buksh v. Dharum Singh...	440
...owala Buksh v. Dharum Singh.	440. 1124
Jowalaram v. Harikishen	... 1063
Jowar Dhari v. Narsingh	... 633
Joy Chunder v. Bhyrub Chunder.	168, 199, 201
Joy Chunder v. Bippro Churn	... 411
Joy Deb v. Huroputty	... 834
Joy Narain v. Grish Chunder.	497, 499, 590
Joy Narain v. Joy Narain.	513, 514
Joy Kishore v. Panchoo.	253, 255, 1154
Joykisto v. Nityanund.	288, 289, 484
Joytara v. Ramhari	... 333
Judoonath v. Bassunt.	1131, 1137
Judoonath v. Bussunt.	1135, 1162
Judoonath v. Bishonath	... 1026
Judubansee v. Asamn	... 1034
Jugal Kishore v. Jotendra.	1112, 1113, 1119, 1120
Jugal Kishore v. Tudasi Ram	... 470
Juglal v. Audh Behari	... 502
Jugat Narain v. Collector	... 1015
Jugendro Nundini v. Hurry Doss.	144, 147
Jugger Nath v. Odhiranee.	332, 342
Juggessur v. Radro Narain.	295, 298, 852
Juggoessur v. Nilambar	... 393
Juggodumba v. Puddomey	... 846
Juggomohun v. Nema Dossee	... 92
Juggomohan v. Neemoo Morton...	565
Juggomohan Ghoshe v. Manickchand	... 107
Juggonoronath v. Rajendranath	... 1096
Juggunath v. Doobo.	418, 453
Juggurnath v. Kishen	... 868
Juggutt Mohini v. Sokheemony...	832
Jugmohan Das v. Mangal Das.	361, 362, 366, 448

	PAGE
Jugodumba v. Rohini.	437, 633
Jugomohun v. Saroda Moyee.	604, 609
Jugul Kishore v. J. M. Tagore	... 562
Jugul Kishore v. Lakshman.	823, 841, 845
Jugut Narain v. Collector	... 1015
Juhabai v. Rustamji	... 476
Jukni v. Q. E.	... 141
Jullesur v. Uggur Roy.	962, 964, 1024
Jumma Das v. Kunwar Bai	... 1151
Jumoona v. Ramasoondari.	170, 176
Jamoona v. Bamasoondari, see Jamoona v. Ramasoondari	... 184, 185, 213, 1089, 1096
Jamoona v. Gokool	... 1097
Jumoona Pershad v. Dignarain	... 450
Jung Bahadur v. Uma Nath	... 571
Junmejoy v. Russomoyee.	385, 392, 1056, 1057
Jannan v. Nila Kandan	... 869
Junoda v. Nehrulal	... 280
Junnappa v. Chimmaya	... 464
Juro Ram v. Gobind	... 872
Jusourn v. Pirthichand	... 460
Jussoda v. Lallah Nettya Lall	... 281
Juswant Singh v. Dooleechand	... 270
Jawala Nath v. Kulloo.	199, 1102
Jwala Prasad v. Bhuda Ram	... 484
Jwala Prasad v. Janki	... 645
Jwala Prasad v. Sukhdeo	... 1039
Jwala Prasad v. Udit Nath.	415, 425
Jwala Singh v. Sardar.	58, 929
Jymunee v. Ramjoy	... 903

K

K. v. Greenwhill	... 314
Kabswara v. Nataraj	... 873
Kachi v. Kachi.	713, 716, 717, 902
Kachoo v. Khushaldas	... 193
Kachubai v. Krishnabai	... 597
Kadakkrai v. Nadakkannu	... 1117
Kadar v. Kadar	... 274
Kadeerun v. Lallun	... 732
Kadungoth v. Kadungoth	... 606
Kagal Gaupaya v. Munjappa	... 522
Kahan Das (In re)	... 48
Kaiher Singh v. Roop Singh.	272, 289, 388, 396, 397
Kailasa v. Pannukannu.	284, 455
Kailasam v. Natarajan.	829, 845
Kailash v. Bitto.	606, 607
Kailash v. Girija.	1109, 1118
Kailash v. Kaahi	... 593
Kailash v. Nityanand.	612, 640
Kailash Chandra v. Bijoy Chandra.	244
Kailash Chandra v. Karuna.	1007, 1076
Kailasnath v. Biswanath	... 1031
Kailasnath v. Parasakthi.	119, 154
Kailasnath v. Vadivansii	... 1134
Kailasagir v. Kishorgir	... 910
Kaika Persad v. Mathus	... 957
Kalawati v. Dharam Prakash.	193, 200
Kajigar v. Maru	... 299
Kajikar Lakshmi v. Maru Devi	... 312
Kakarla v. Venkata	... 101
Kaki Narasamma v. Venkataraju.	339
Kalamo v. Raja of Shivgunga	... 707
Kalapagathachi v. Ganpathi	... 345
Kalappa v. Akkoppa	... 502
Kalavagunta v. Kalavagunta.	97, 112
Kalidas v. Nathu	... 476
Kalee Kishen v. Juggat Tara	... 501
Kalee Pershad v. Bhoirabee.	1013, 1015
Kaleepersaud v. Kupoor	... 337
Kalgavada v. Somappa.	220, 252
Kali Baksh v. Ram Gopal.	184, 1104, 1105
Kali Charan v. Kiranbala.	614, 616
Kali Das v. Krishna Chandra.	360, 668, 669, 905, 906, 993
Kali Kanta v. Gouri Prasad	... 638
Kali Kanta v. Surendra Nath	... 832
Kali Komul v. Uma Shunker.	253, 254, 261
Kali Krishna v. Raghunath	... 502
Kali Krishna v. Secretary of State.	103
Kali Perhsad v. Anand Roy.	687, 688, 701, 920, 997
Kali Prasad v. Ram Ratan	... 595
Kali Sankar v. Nawab Singh	... 418
Kalian v. Ramachandar.	948, 952
Kaliapa v. Deivasigamani	... 290
Kalicharan v. Bageshra	... 1099
Kalicharan v. Bangshi	... 868
Kalidas v. Gor Parjaram.	843, 874
Kalidas v. Kanhya Lal	... 750
Kalidas v. Subbamma.	279, 280, 310, 960
Kalika Sahoy v. Gouree Shunkur.	630
Kalimuthu v. Ammamuthu.	718, 965, 969, 974
Kalisahu v. Kedermal	... 730
Kalisunker v. Koylash Chunder	... 113
Kalka v. Budree	... 909
Kalka Prasad v. Mathura Prasad.	927, 955, 956
Kalkasing v. Sheoraj Singh	... 1058
Kallapa v. Venkatesh	... 421
Kallati v. Palat	... 585
Kalliappa v. Deivasigamani	... 201
Kallipada v. Durgapada	... 1175
Kallu.	151, 153
Kallu v. Faiyaz Ali	... 1110
Kallu v. Nur Mahi	... 172
Kallue v. Bet Singh	... 63
Kally Prosonna v. Gopee Nath	... 749
Kalreddi v. Kadiyala	... 802
Kalu v. Barsu.	452, 467
Kalu Kishan v. Juggat Tara	... 501
Kadu v. Kashi Bai	... 323
Kalu Ram v. Piari Lal	... 273
Kalub Hossein v. Meherum	... 882
Kalush Chandra v. Bijay Chandra.	244
Kalyanraiji v. Mofussil	... 97
Kalyan Singh v. Dharam Singh	... 726
Kalyan Singh v. Pitambur	... 293
Kamakhya v. Khushalchand	... 780
Kamakshi v. Chakrapany.	440, 465
Kamakshi v. Chidambara.	600, 602
Kamakshi v. Nagarathnam.	115, 401, 1166
Kamakshi v. Ramasami.	274, 293
Kamal Kumari v. Norendra.	573, 576, 580

	PAGE
Kamala v. Bhagirathi	... 1147
Kamalakshi v. Nagarathram	... 1164
Kamala Kant v. Madhoji.	428, 435
Kammalammal v. Visvanathoswami.	621
Kamavadhani v. Joyse	... 1031
Kambinayani v. Kambinayani	... 1117
Kamepella v. Venkataswamy	... 595
Kameshwar v. Benimadhao	... 1104
Kameswar v. Run Bahadur.	105, 1050
Kameswara v. Veeracharly.	236, 392, 653
Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubha.	552, 554
Kamikhaprasad v. Srimati Jagadamba Dasi	... 1051
Kamikhya Nath v. Hari Charan.	802, 1044
Kambinayan v. Kambinayan	... 1117
Kaminey Money Bewah (In re).	1164, 1166, 1169, 1170
Kamini v. Asutosh.	835, 836
Kamini v. Krishna	... 1104
Kamini v. Promotho	... 858
Kamini Dasi v. Chandra.	325, 326, 327, 566, 567
Kamla Prasad v. Lalsi	... 1063
Kamla Prasad v. Murti Manohar	... 1155
Kamla Prasad v. Nathni	... 442
Kamla Kant v. R.H.N. Graimee...	414
Kamlesra v. Jarai Kasaundan	... 84
Kamona v. Hurro Lall	... 802
Kamta v. Bhagirath	... 442
Kamta Prasad v. Indomati	... 725
Kamta Prasad v. Sidh Narain	... 547
Kamulammal v. Visvanathswami...	932, 933
Kanabi Ram v. Biddya Ram	... 280
Kanagasabhai v. Ponnusami	... 305
Kanaye v. Anund Lall	... 505
Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi.	1151, 1153, 1154, 1158
Kanammal v. Virasami	... 243
Kanchava v. Grimallappa	... 909
Kandaiya v. Chokkammal.	249, 274
Kandarpa v. Akshayah	... 782
Kandrapmohan v. Akshayachandra.	839
Kandarpa Mohan v. Akshay Chandra	... 838
Kandasami v. Akkammal	... 1100
Kandasami v. Doraisami.	598, 599, 627, 631
Kandasami v. Rajagopalasami	... 320
Kandasami v. Rajagopalasami	... 1058
Kandasami v. Somaskanda.	440, 441, 442, 451, 460
Kandasamy v. Velayutha.	420, 424
Kandukuri v. Kandukuri	... 187
Kanha Lal v. Paul Sahu	... 631
Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal.	571, 574, 581, 583, 584, 1091, 1118
Kanhai Ram v. Biddya Ram.	139, 310
Kanhi Ram v. Amri	... 1139
Kanhialal v. Debi Das.	437, 564
Kanhaiya Lal v. Gaura.	604, 608, 607, 610
Kanhaiya Lal v. Gaura.	551, 536, 607,
Kanhaiya Lal v. Niranjan Lal.	536, 551
Kanhaya v. Naurang	... 244
Kanhyalal v. Satiya	... 220
Kanikipati v. Racherla.	295, 288
Kanimai v. Kishna	... 541
Kanku v. Jadav.	1118, 1119
Kandesra v. Jorai	... 280
Kannammal v. Virasami.	243, 244
Kanni Ammal v. Ammakannu.	605, 606
Kannu v. Amrithammal.	462, 1083
Kannu v. Parvaty	... 392
Kanri v. Ammakannu	... 1047
Kanshi Ram v. Shankar Das.	435, 437
Kanta Mohini v. Nanchora	... 335
Kantai v. Ameri	... 1109
Kanti Chandra v. Ali-i-Nabi.	581, 854
Kanu Ram v. Kashi Chandra.	1026, 1066 1069
Kapur Chand v. Narainjan.	258, 261
Karalicharan v. Ashutosh	... 994
Karam Singh v. Bir Singh	... 849
Karamali v. Rahimbhoy.	315, 316
Karam Chand v. Bulchand	... 505
Karamsi v. Karsandas	... 250
Karan Singh v. Bhup Singh	... 558
Karam Singh v. Surender Singh	... 406
Karbasappa v. Kallava.	349, 350
Kareti v. Kareti	... 1067
Karim v. Pardhan	... 1052
Karimuddin v. Gobind.	356, 388, 393, 554, 626, 633, 1040, 1044, 1045, 1059, 1061
Karistoromoney v. Narendra Krishna	... 380
Karm Chand v. Ram Labhay	... 452
Karuppyee v. Ramaswami.	... 930
Karoonamoyee v. Administrator-General	... 337
Karsandas v. Gangabai.	364, 366, 398, 337
Karsandas v. Ladkavalu	... 198
Kartar Singh v. Harjimal	... 541
Kartic v. Protap	... 927
Kartic Chunder v. Gour Mohun.	386, 393, 1054, 1055, 1057
Kartic Chandra v. Rurdranandagir.	846, 860, 871, 872
Karun v. Jai Cundra	... 1073
Karuppa v. Irulayee	... 1068
Karuppa v. Kumarasami	... 932
Karuppayee v. Ramaswami.	931, 932, 939
Karuppai v. Sankaranarayanan.	363, 376, 891, 1150, 1173
Karuppan v. Bulokan	... 599
Karuppan v. Veriyal	... 499
Karuturi v. Karuturi	... 261
Kasamsha v. Baban Rao	... 73
Kasam v. Jagawad	... 70
Kasam v. Jarawar	... 631
Kasear Bai v. Hunsraj	... 1137
Kasee v. Goluck Chunder	... 1017
Kaseeram v. Gendhenee.	146, 147
Kasem v. Jorawar Singh	... 590
Kaser Bai v. Valab	... 151
Kashee v. Raj Gobind	... 1015
Kashee Chunder v. Gour Kishore	... 1135
Kashee Nath v. Khettur Monee	... 325
Kasheen Monee v. Kasheen Soonduree	... 242
Kashee Pershad v. Bunseedhur	... 252

PAGE

Kashee Shuree v. Ganesh Chunder. 343
Kasheeshuree v. Greesh Chunder. 175, 254, 827
Kasheeshure, v. Krishnakaminee. 827
Kashi v. Chidumbarnath ... 808
Kashi v. Jamnadas. 125, 325
Kashi Bai v. Moreshwar. 952, 981
Kashi Bai v. Sita Bai. 981, 982
Kashi Bai v. Tatia ... 229
Kashibai v. Tatta ... 575
Kashibai v. Tatya 571, 572
Kashi Nath v. Chimnaji. 457, 476, 749
Kashi Prasad v. Akleshwar ... 297
Kashi Prasad v. Indar Kunwar. 1038
Kashi Ram v. Amri. 1131, 1138
Kasho Prasad v. Madho Prasad... 346
Kasi Hasan v. Sagun ... 873
Kasim v. Sudhindra. 853, 859
Kassurbai v. Shivajiram ... 351
Kasturi v. Lote. 940, 1165
Kasturi v. Ponnalal ... 117
Kasturibai v. Shivajiram. 330, 339
Kasuri v. Ivamiry ... 418
Katama Nachiar v. Raja of Sivagunga. 371, 611, 615, 620, 886, 887, 892, 893, 902, 903, 935, 1098, 1106, 1113, 1114, 1116, 1151
Kattama v. Rajah of Sivaganga... 427
Katma Natchiar v. Raja of Shivgunga ... 893
Katama Nachiar v. Srimut Raja Moottoo see Kata Nachiar v. Raja of Sivagunga ... 72
Katma Nachiar v. Doraisinga ... 892
Kattama v. Doraisinga. 740, 939, 943, 1096
Kathaperumal v. Venkabai ... 1053
Katama Nachiar v. Doraisinga ... 891
Kattama v. Dorasagar. 993, 1025
Katham v. Govindarajulu ... 389
Katreddi v. Kadiyala ... 802
Kattama v. Doraswamy. 72, 940
Katteeran v. Gendhenee ... 300
Katuna v. Jaichandra ... 1015
Katika v. Shiv Nandan ... 396
Kaveramma v. Vishnu ... 414
Kaval Nain v. Budhusingh. 587, 591, 593, 594, 643, 671, 995
Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh ... 603
Kawasji v. Sirinbai ... 146
Kayarohana v. Subbaraya ... 995
Kedar v. Amrita Lal ... 1076
Kedar v. Atul ... 816
Kedar v. Romoni ... 593
Kedar Nath v. Jatindra ... 1124
Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh. 370, 574, 578, 590, 594, 644
Kedari v. Atmarabhat ... 506
Kedarnath v. Ammutlal ... 1076
Kedarnath v. Hemangini ... 567
Kedarnath v. Jai Narayan ... 599
Kedarnath v. Protab Chunder ... 926
Kedegan v. Periyan ... 618
Keerut Singh v. Koolahul Singh. 935, 1025, 1049
Keerutnarain v. Bhoobunesree ... 221
Keserbai v. Valab ... 944

PAGE

Keheram v. Gendheree ... 142
Keir v. Leeman ... 540
Kelan v. Durga ... 995
Kelar Nath v. Jatindra ... 1125
Kelapps v. Venkatesa ... 413
Kelly v. Kelly ... 148
Kemblal v. Ajodhya ... 1047
Kenchava v. Girimallappa. 669, 908, 909, 915, 960, 961, 964, 965, 968, 971, 973, 974, 1175
Kenchàwa v. Ningappa. 177, 215, 227
Kenni Ammal v. Ammakannu ... 606
Keri Kotitani v. Moniram. 581, 905, 914, 936, 1011
Keri v. Moneeram ... 230
Kenekrao v. Gurrao ... 649
Kenerbai v. Valab Raoji ... 924
Kessowji v. Hurjiwan ... 540
Kermatullah v. Kermatulla ... 581
Kerry Kolitaney v. Moneeram ... 86
Kerwick v. Kerwick. 726, 727, 728, 733
Kesahram v. Nandkishore ... 676
Kesar (Bai) v. Ganga. 299, 300
Kesarbai v. Hunsraj. 1153, 1154, 1156, 1161
Kesar Singh v. Secretary of State. 49, 959, 962, 979
Kesaree v. Samardhan ... 129
Kesari v. Ganga Sahai ... 952
Kesarbai v. Shivasangji. 251, 252
Keser Bai v. Valab ... 944
Keshar Lal v. Jaga Bhai ... 947
Keshao Das v. Amardas ... 808
Keshav Rao v. Nathravati ... 572
Keshav v. Doulat Khan ... 303
Keshav v. Daulat Ram ... 301
Keshav v. Govind ... 210
Keshav v. Maruti. 1039, 1040, 1042, 1132, 1133, 1134
Keshav v. Vimayak ... 741
Keshava v. Bhagerathi ... 834
Keshava v. Lakshminarayana ... 1100
Keshavdas v. Amaradas ... 805
Kesheo v. Jaganath ... 302
Kesheo Prasad v. Sheopargush ... 1103
Kesho Dutt v. Ram Sundar ... 535
Kesho Prasad v. Chandrika Prasad. 1063, 1072, 1105, 1106, 1120
Kesho Prasad v. Siv Saran ... 708
Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheo Prasad. 1098, 1099
Keshow v. Noor ... 154
Keshublal v. Radharaman ... 1105
Kesmay v. Gandi ... 142
Kesree v. Samardhan. 120, 932
Kesser Bai v. Monghibai ... 1153
Kesserbai v. Hunsraj. 38, 1135, 1151
Kesserbai v. Valab Raoji. 944, 950
Kessowji v. Hurjivan ... 540
Kesub Chunder v. Bishnu ... 1014
Keval Bhagwan v. Ganpati ... 531
Kewal Ram v. Isri Bai ... 340
Keyake v. Yedattil ... 869
Khabhel Rahman v. Gobind ... 550
Khagindra v. Nanak Chand. 537, 539
Khairajmal v. Daine ... 562
Khairajmal v. Parmeshwar ... 562

	PAGE
Khairu v. Fakir Chand ...	124
Khakro v. Jhoomucklall ...	341
Khalilal v. Govind Prasad ...	535
Khandacharya v. Govindacharya.	981, 982
Khanderao v. Balkrishna ...	1190
Khandu (In re) ...	724
Khandubai v. Pirbhai ...	363
Khandubhai v. Balwant Rao ...	657
Khanta Moyee v. Hridayanendra.	572
Kharaj Narain v. Janki ...	420
Kharidar v. Dayakrishna.	471, 473, 479
Kharshet v. Kepohad ...	764
Khashalal v. Administrator-General.	766
Khasidar v. Dayakishan ...	473
Khatabai v. Mahomed Haji ...	64
Khater Monee v. Kishen Mohun ...	300
Khatri v. S. S. ...	864
Khazana Mal v. Jagannath ...	449
Kheodroo v. Deo Ranee ...	689
Khem Koer v. Jai Koer ...	912
Khembar v. Umai Shankar ...	129
Khemkar v. Umai Shankar.	129, 141, 324, 412
Khetra v. Aswini Kumar ...	484
Khetter v. Ganga ...	793
Khetter v. Hari.	867, 868
Khettermoni v. Kadambini.	908, 909, 913, 936
Khetterpal v. Khelal ...	639
Khettramani v. Kashinath.	323, 325, 326, 327, 239, 566
Khettramoni v. Shyama Churn.	1093, 1197
Khilut Chunder v. Koonj Lall ...	428
Khinji v. Morarji ...	782
Khodabhai v. Bahadur.	943, 944, 947
Khodeeram v. Rookhinee ...	987
Khogendra Narain v. Santo Lal...	1054
Khooderam v. Rookhine ...	168
Khoorshed v. Nubee Fatima.	641, 671
Khooshal v. Bhugwan ...	113
Khub Lal Singh v. Ajodhya.	1049, 1050, 1054, 1055, 1057
Khublal v. Modhya ...	1053
Khub Singh v. Kunj Behari ...	387
Khudi Ram v. Bonwari Lal ...	300
Khuggender v. Sharupgir ...	987
Khulroo v. Saraswati ...	1033
Khunni Lal v. Govind Krishna.	81, 83, 84, 580, 626, 644, 916, 1112, 1181
Khush Waqt v. Jagannath.	403, 1117
Khurgad v. Debe ...	972
Khurshedi v. Khurshedi ...	150
Khusalchand v. Bai Mani.	117, 138
Khushaldas v. Mulibai ...	679
Kidar Nath v. Nathu Mal ...	1108
Kifayatullah v. Mahabir Prasad...	657
Kilambi v. Tirumala.	378, 465
Kindabai v. Anacha ...	1024
King's Proctor v. Daines ...	754
Kinji v. Narsi ...	113
Kirpal v. Sukurmoni ...	1009
Kirpi v. Ramjas ...	944
Kisan Singh v. Moreshwar ...	450
Kisar v. Gunga ...	300
Kisaree v. Samaradhan ...	129
Kishan v. Sheo Pattan ...	1152
Kishanlal v. Lachmichand.	596, 644
Kishan Lal v. Nathu ...	415
Kishan Lall v. Garurudwaj ...	659
Kishen v. Bhagwan ...	559
Kishen Gir v. Burgeet Roy ...	1077
Kishen Komulsingh v. Janokee.	430, 633
Kishen Mohan v. Khetter Moni ...	300
Kishen Munee v. Oodwunt.	255, 259
Kishen Prasad v. Har Narayan Singh.	444, 454, 456, 457, 473, 476, 485
Kishen Prasad v. Tipan Pershad.	535, 558
Kishnee v. Kheabe Ram ...	1102
Kishore Singh v. Gahena Bai.	684, 700
Kishori v. Mundra.	376, 778
Kishori Lal v. Bhusai ...	1105
Kishori Lal v. Chunnilal.	183, 235, 236, 239, 241, 242
Kishori Mohun Ghose v. Moni Mohun.	336, 338, 607, 608, 609
Kistna v. Venkata Lakshmi ...	616
Kissen v. Javallah.	72, 976
Kishori v. Girdhari ...	639
Kiwasji v. Moti ...	291
Koduthio v. Medu ...	1047
Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sunder Das.	532, 547
Kopurchand v. Narainjainall ...	255
Kojeyadu v. Lakshmi.	913, 940, 1164, 1167
Kokaralapudi v. Kannukuri ...	1092
Kokilambal v. Sundarammal ...	808
Kokilasari v. Rudranand.	807, 837
Kola v. Muthayammal ...	605
Kolandaya v. Vedamutu ...	1080
Kolhu v. Bel Singh ...	293
Komalambal v. Krishnasamy.	595, 627, 631
Komini v. Asutosh ...	839
Komul Mones v. Alhadmonee ...	1103
Konammal v. Annadana.	662, 665, 706, 720, 877, 892
Konekrav v. Gurrav ...	650
Konjbeharee v. Gyadeen ...	427
Kondappa v. Subba ...	456
Konolappa v. Subha.	497, 774, 1049, 1058, 1059
Konvidi v. Venkataswami ...	262
Koobai v. Ramabai ...	322
Koobur v. Jan Khansama ...	146
Kooer Goolah Singh v. Rao Kuran Singh ...	1097
Kooldeep Narain v. Government ...	688
Kooldeep Narain v. Rajbunsee ...	282
Koomud Chunder v. Seetakanta...	78, 972
Koomul v. Seetakanth ...	912
Koondoo Nath v. Dheer Chunder...	104
Koonerrav v. Gurraw ...	661
Koonj Beharee v. Khetur Nath ...	428
Koonj Beehari v. Premchand ...	1146
Kopilnath v. Government ...	690
Kora v. Boreani ...	938
Korab v. Pancham.	231, 232
Kota Balabhadra v. Khetra Doss.	415, 424, 425
Kotasseri v. Kanholi ...	856
Kothama v. Doraisingha ...	1094
Kothandarama v. Subbiar ...	913

	PAGE.
Kotta v. Btngari ...	710
Kothesheri v. Vallotil ...	476
Koul Nath v. Jagrup ...	375
Koyaloji v. Shiva ...	429
Koylasnath v. Gyamone ...	904
Krishayya v. Narsimham ...	612
Krishanama v. Veeravelli ...	736
Krishan Das v. Dwarka Das ...	782
Krishananda v. Raja Ram ...	450
Krishendra v. Debendra ...	684
Krishna v. Balammal. 142,	150
Krishna v. Bayaji ...	1144
Krishna v. Bhagaban. 316, 343,	344
Krishnabihari v. Sarojinee ...	924
Krishna v. Broja. 226,	350
Krishna v. Hemaja ...	583
Krishna Kali Sunkar. 834,	836
Krishna v. Krishnasami. 443,	450
Krishna v. Laldhari ...	869
Krishna v. Muthulakshmi ...	394
Krishna v. Nagamani ...	294
Krishna Singh v. Nurdin ...	73
Krishna v. Paramashri. 234,	235
Krishna v. Ramamurti ...	316
Krishna v. Sambasiva ...	1982
Krishna v. Sami. 587, 602, 624, 665, 667, 668, 669,	670
Krishna v. Secretary of State ...	1015
Krishna v. Sinnaponnu ...	332
Knishna v. Sukhas ...	857
Krisna v. Venkatarama. 970, 971,	974, 976
Krishna v. Vasudev. 449, 450, 451,	516
Krishna v. Radha ...	541
Krishna Ayyangar v. Venkatarama.	965
Krishna Bai v. Notan Das ...	816
Krishna Chandra v. Ratan Ram. 387, 388,	397
Krishna Deb v. Krishna Deb ...	779
Krishna Dhoni v. Bhagowan ...	294
Krishna Kumari v. Rajendra Badadu. 802, 1035,	1043
Krishna Ram v. Lakshmana ...	498
Krishna Rao v. Benabai. 793,	795
Krishna Rao v. Court of Wards...	701
Krishna Rao v. Raja of Pittapur. 188,	686
Krishnabai v. Babaji ...	338
Krishnabihari v. Sarojenee. 1158,	1161
Krishnabhat v. Kapalibat ...	740
Krishnadhan v. Sanyasi Charan. 477, 483, 486,	487
Krishnagiri v. Shridhar. 840,	988
Khishnai v. Shripati. 1153,	1156
Krishnaji v. Balaji ...	505
Krishnaji v. Gajanan ...	740
Krishnaji v. Hanmareddi ...	360
Krishnaji v. Moro. 362, 368,	379
Krishnaji v. Pandurang. 38, 70,	945
Krishnaji v. Shankaram ...	452
Krishnalal v. Nandeshwar. 595, 610,	1040
Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma.	298
Krishnamurthi v. Krishnamurthi. 232, 233,	257
Krishnamurthi v. Parvathi ...	314
Krishnamurthi v. Sundermurti ...	652
Krishnamurthi v. Seetama ...	366
Krishnan v. Sankara ...	854
Krishnanund v. Raja Ram ...	473
Krishnappa v. Ramaswamy ...	360
Krishnarav v. Ramrav ...	255
Krishnarav v. Shankarrav ...	212
Krishnasami (In re) ...	397
Krishnaswami v. Avaya ...	822
Krishnasami v. Raja Gopala. 446,	642
Krishnasami v. Ramasami. 553,	554
Krishnaswami v. Pulukarappa ...	595
Krishnaswami v. Raghubali ...	971
Krishnaswami v. Ramachandra Rao.	744
Krishnasami v. Samaran. 843,	873
Krishnayya v. Gnoravayya. 650, 676,	678
Krishnayya v. Lakshmipathi. 185,	186, 190
Krishnayya v. Pichamma. 973,	975
Krishnayyan v. Muttusami. 930,	933
Krishnier v. Lakshmiammal. 992,	1090
Kristayya v. Narasimham ...	617
Krishnayya v. Raja of Pittapur. 185,	207
Kristo v. Asutosh ...	609
Kristo v. Hem Chunder. 1110, 1113,	1120
Kristo Kissor v. Kadermoye ...	284
Krishnaya v. Surya Rao. 186, 190,	232
Kristo Kissore v. Neoghy Kadermoye. 278, 280,	283
Kristo Moyee v. Prosonno ...	1110
Kristodhone v. Nandarani ...	740
Kristoromoney v. Norendro ...	800
Kristraya v. Venkataramayya. 678,	679
Kshitish Chandra v. E. ...	125
Kshirode Chunder v. Sarode Prasad.	1190
Kuar Sen v. Mamman ...	92
Kubera v. Tirai ...	285
Kudappa v. Rongala ...	1080
Kudatamma v. Narasimha. 464, 465,	1063
Kudomee v. Jotteram. 139, 140, 141,	144
Kulachandra v. Bama Sundari ...	1041
Kulada Prasad v. Haripada. 78, 79, 80, 81, 554, 663,	905,
Kulada Prasad v. Hari Prosad ...	69
Kulammol v. Visvanatha ...	932
Kuldip Sahai v. Ram Bhugawan. 76, 533,	550
Kuleda v. Jageshar. 341,	351
Kullyanessuree v. Dwarka Nath ...	320
Kulponath v. Mewah Lal. 627,	631
Kumar Gangadher v. Kumar Hiralal ...	53
Kumarappa v. Vanangamudi ...	663
Kumarappa v. Manavala ...	101
Kumarappa v. Saminatha ...	405
Kumarswami v. Jaksh. 821,	823
Kumarasami v. Palanyappa. 455,	456
Kumarasami v. Subramania. 723,	1117
Kumaravelu v. Virana. 944,	984
Kumari (In re) ...	116
Kumari v. Golab ...	870
Kumla v. Gooroo ...	565
Kumla v. Muneeshanker ...	334
Kumud v. Tripura. 854,	861
Koomud Chunder v. Seetakanth. 74,	75, 78
Kumud Lal v. Jogendra ...	793
Kunbali v. Keshava. 377, 510, 520,	523

	PAGE.
Kunchi v. Ammu ...	412
Kundan Bibi v. Sree Narayan ...	544
Kundan Lal v. Beni Prasad.	301, 303
Kunhamed v. Kunhanbi ...	380
Kunj Bihari v. Narain.	435, 516, 834
Kuneey v. Saheba ...	830
Kunj Behary v. Premchand ...	1135
Kunjalal v. Narasamba ...	505
Kunjan Chetti v. Sidda Pillai ...	446
Kunjlal v. Venkatarama ...	506
Kunnilal v. Govind.	584, 915, 995
Kunwar Bahadur v. Madho ...	929
Kupil Rai v. Radha Prasad ...	97
Kuppa v. Singaravelu.	150, 164, 321
Kuppa Gurukal v. Dorasami.	870, 997
Kuppan v. Munde Kotha ...	846
Kuppusami v. Jayalakshmi ...	737
Kuppusami v. Venkata Lakshmi ...	227
Kuppuswami v. Husala ...	615
Kupur v. Sebak Ram ...	1054
Kur Ali v. Mawaz Khan ...	172
Kurdaram v. Hinibhai ...	1135
Kureen Chand v. Odung ...	948
Kuri v. Bhanna Mal ...	312
Karuppa v. Sankara Narayanan...	1149, 1154
Kurrutulain v. Nuzleat ...	801
Kurukundi v. Vanrupai ...	558
Kuran Singh v. Tyzali ...	972
Kuruthedattee v. Mele ...	995
Kushal Chand v. Ibrahim ...	506
Kushi Bai v. Mura Khan ...	1064
Kustoora v. Monohur ...	687
Kustur Bhavani v. Appa ...	255
Kusum Kumari v. Dasrathi.	668, 955
Kusum Kumari v. Satyaranjan.	60, 213
Kuta v. Kuta ...	675
Kutti v. Radakrishna.	950, 961, 983, 984, 1024, 1062
Kutti v. Kunhi Pathumma ...	862
Kuttusheri v. Vallotill ...	457
Kuverji v. Babai ...	247

L

Labh Singh v. Gurcharan ...	102
Lachan Bai v. Babai ...	949
Lachan Koer v. Anant Singh ...	1124
Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath Ram ...	1125
Lachhmi Chand v. Lachho.	1064, 1088
Lachho v. Gopi ...	769
Lachimeshwar Singh v. Manowar...	410
Lachman v. Debi Prasad ...	379
Lachman v. Chinnathambi ...	316
Lachman v. Kanhaya ...	275
Lachman v. Kanchuran ...	1132
Lachman v. Khunnulal ...	556
Lachman v. Mardan Singh ...	129
Lachman v. Partap ...	126
Lachman v. Rupchand ...	277
Lachman Das v. Nanakchand.	649, 651
Lachman v. Sawan Singh.	120, 515
Lachman Koer v. Madaree Lall ...	542
Lachman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh.	420, 532, 535, 561
Lachman Rai v. Akhar Khan.	103, 104
Lachmi v. Durga ...	583
Lachmi v. Debi Prasad ...	375
Lachmi v. Mt. Parbati ...	197
Lachmi Narain v. Kanji ...	561
Lachmi Narain v. Mailro ...	1100
Lachmi Narain v. Shamsunder ...	1111
Lachmi Narayan v. Balaram ...	280
Laxinarayan v. Gootha Raman ...	806
Lachmi Prosad v. Jagmohan.	386, 1057
Lachu v. Dalsings ...	122
Lackheenarain v. Madhoosoodan ...	277
Ladooiah v. Sanvaby ...	1107
Lahar Puri v. Puram Nath.	836, 837,
Laison v. Laison ...	744
Lajwanti v. Safachand.	1037, 1039, 1131
Lakhi v. Bhairab ...	995
Lakhi Priya Bhairab Chandra.	1012, 1015
Lakhmichand v. Anandi.	340, 417, 581, 935
Lako v. Lachman ...	345
Lakshmamma v. Kameswara.	597, 598
Lakshman v. Gopal.	637, 658
Lakshman v. Jamnabai.	362, 366, 375, 379
Lakshman v. Ramachandra.	415, 622, 623, 649, 652, 661, 755
Lakshman v. Sarasvatibai ...	332
Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai.	335, 341, 342, 344, 345, 351, 820
Lakshi v. Subramanya ...	756
Lakshmana v. Siva ...	938
Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada.	950, 967, 968, 972, 983, 984
Lakshmanaswami v. Rangamma ...	869
Lakshmappa v. Ramava.	220, 230, 249, 322
Lakshmi v. Anantharama.	1098, 1184
Lakshmi v. Baijnath ...	816
Lakshmi v. Hari Ram ...	77
Lakshmi v. Hira ...	776
Lakshmi v. Kalian Singh.	125, 126
Lakshmi v. Murari.	821, 872
Lakshmi v. Subramanya.	231, 232, 257, 757
Lakshmi v. Vaijnath ...	816
Lakshmi v. Ganjat ...	755
Lakshmi Bai v. Ganpat.	644, 673, 674, 675, 692, 1025, 1030, 1032
Lakshmi Bai v. Jagrave ...	984
Lakshmi Bai v. Jayaram.	979, 1156
Lakshmi Bai v. Madhavrav ...	353
Lakshmi Bai v. Rajali ...	199
Lakshmi Bai v. Ramachandra.	177, 220
Lakshmi Bai v. Sarasvati Bai ...	179
Lakshmiah v. Kothandarama.	439, 729, 732, 733
Lakshmiamma v. Subhammal ...	348
Lakhmi Chand v. Gatto Bai.	59, 175, 265, 330, 414, 935
Lakshmichand v. Khushaldas.	302, 473
Lakshmi Narain v. Sumarni ...	1172
Lakshmindra v. Raghavendra ...	854
Lakshminarayan v. Dasu.	386, 387, 1051, 1053, 1054
Lakshpati v. Rambodh Singh ...	1100
Lala Jagan v. Mathura Prasad.	182, 363
Lakupati v. Rambodh ...	1098
Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad ...	440

PAGE.

Lal Bahadur v. Bijai Bahadur ... 236
Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiyalal. 370, 375, 376, 434, 533, 535
Lal Behari v. Administrator-General. 839
Lal Behary v. Thacomonee ... 505
Lal Das v. Lala ... 595
Lal Das v. Motibai. 366, 369
Lal Gajendra v. Lal Matharnath ... 90
Lal Gopal v. Khorooriah Zemindari ... 298
Lal Harihar v. Bajrang. 235, 250, 919
Lal Kunwar v. Chirangi Lal. 235, 236, 241
Lal Khraj v. Harpal ... 700
Lal Ram Singh v. Deputy Commissioner. 372, 776
Lal Sheo Pertab v. Allahabad Bank ... 1040
Lal Singh v. Girdhari Das. 559, 1157
Lal Singh v. Jagraj Singh. 519, 562
Lala v. Harisingh ... 99
Lala Bahadur v. Kanhaya Lal ... 1183
Lala Amarnath v. Achan Kuar. 458, 472
Lala Govind v. Dawlat ... 145
Lala Narain v. Lala Ramanuj ... 297
Lala Parbhu Lal v. Mylne ... 182
Lala Ram v. Raghubir Lal ... 415
Lalasoonder v. Harikrishna ... 1102
Lalchand v. Manohri ... 1029
Lalchand v. Mt. Thakur Devi. 98, 108
Lalchand v. Nandlal ... 830
Lalchand v. Narhar ... 302
Lalchand v. Swarnamoyi. 569, 570
Lali v. Murlidhar. 246, 250
Lalit Chandra v. Baikantha ... 801
Lalit Mohan v. Brojendra Nath. 833, 836, 869
Lalit Mohan v. Chukkunlal. 788, 791, 792
Lalit Mohan v. Dayamoyi. 1110, 1118
Lalit Mohan v. Manoranjan ... 730
Lalit Pandey v. Sridhar ... 1051
Lalita v. Sitaram. 962, 964
Lalita Devi v. Ishardas ... 414
Laliteshwar v. Rameswar. 719, 906
Laljeet v. Rajcoomar. 637, 661, 1026
Laljeet v. Ramcoomar. 599, 611, 614, 615
Lalji v. Keshowji ... 257
Lalji v. Kurki ... 1112
Lall Bahadur v. Kanhaiyalal ... 426
Lall Behary v. Thacomonu ... 505
Lall Mahabeer v. Mt. Kundan ... 79
Laha Beharee Lall v. Lalla Madho Persaud ... 430
Lalla Futtah Bahadur v. Mt. Pranputter ... 1095
Lalla Prasad v. Parsansingh ... 1059
Lalla Sreedhur v. Lalla Madho Pershad ... 428
Lallubai v. Cassibai. 24, 145, 919, 924, 961, 967, 979
Lallubhai v. Ganpati ... 950
Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai. 214, 902, 921, 936, 937, 938, 944, 949, 956, 961, 966, 967, 979, 1156
Lallu Singh v. Gur Narain ... 726
Laloo v. Laloo ... 942
Lalta Prasad v. Darshan Singh .. 1048

PAGE.

Lalta Prasad v. Mahadea. 464, 595
Lalita Prasad v. Gojadhar ... 554
Lalti Kuar v. Ganga Bishem ... 329
Lalu v. Fatteh Singh ... 273
Lalu Dayal v. Lalu Gopal ... 889
Lata Prasad v. Mahadeo ... 757
Latchumammal v. Gangammal ... 598
Latifan v. Moorti ... 163
Latifunessa v. Abdul Ruchman ... 1190
Latur Rai v. Bhagwan Das. 1052, 1133
Lavett v. Lavett ... 767
Lawton v. Campion ... 575
Laxman v. Lahanabai ... 1190
Laximi v. Lakshmidas ... 327
Laximon v. Muller Rao ... 363
Laxman v. Bhau ... 1172
Laxman v. Bhavan Singh ... 258
Laxman v. Radhabai ... 258
Laxman v. Malhar Rao ... 379
Laxman Rao v. Mahar Rao ... 380
Laxman v. Vinayak. 422, 426, 457, 889
Laxmi v. Shrinivas ... 234
Laxmi Bai v. Shri Krishna ... 235
Laxmi Bai v. Vishwanath ... 331
Laxmibai v. Sambhu ... 327
Lakshminarayana v. Dasu. 1055, 1056
Laxmindra Thortha v. Raghavendra ... 847
Laxmipal v. Venkatesh ... 98
Laxmipat v. Venkatesh. 70, 234, 339
Leathes v. Newett ... 100
Leelanund v. Monorunjan ... 687
Leigh v. Dickson ... 655
Lekhraj v. Harpal. 714, 719
Lekkea v. Ganga Govinda ... 75
Lekraj v. Mahpal ... 103
Lekhraj v. Vishudas ... 654
Lenga v. Penguri ... 146
Leonard v. Leonard ... 579
Leslie v. Leslie ... 150
Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill ... 315
Levett v. Levett ... 768
Lititagar v. Suraj Bai ... 150
Lindsay v. Lindsay ... 534
Lingamuthu v. Ramanayya ... 650
Lingappa v. Esudasan. 57, 321, 931
Lingayya v. Kanakamma. 329, 350
Lloyd v. Deakin ... 127
Lochan v. Babai. 608, 611, 911, 962, 964
Lochun v. Nemdharee. 376, 604
Lockwood v. Wood ... 92
Loganada v. Ramaswami ... 1044
Login v. Princes Gouramma ... 78
Lok Nath v. Amar Nath ... 987
Lokenath v. Shamasoondaree ... 254
Lokhur v. Dulare ... 1039
London and Country Council v. Bermondessay Bioscope Co. ... 1204
London Corporation v. Cox ... 100
Longford v. Purdon ... 770
Lopez v. Lopez. 57, 82, 126, 181, 633
Lord Dunraven v. Llewllyn ... 106
Lord Gilford in Bysack v. Cossinath ... 1057
Lord Rivers v. Adams 98, 106
Lowji v. Mithabai ... 973

PAGE

Luchemeswar v. Manowar ... 641
Luchman v. Mohunlall ... 269
Luchmichand v. Anand ... 331
Luchman Singh v. Sarnam ... 433
Lachman Kunwar v. Manorath Ram ... 1139
Luchman Lal v. Kanhayalal ... 235
Luchmanen v. Siva Prakasa. 469, 470, 476, 487
Luchmee v. Rookmanee. 836, 873
Luchman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh. 415, 547
Luchmeedhar v. Eqbal Ali ... 514
Luchmee Kooar v. Fatteh Singh... 532
Luchmi Koer v. Raghu Nath. 151, 153
Luchmi Narain v. Janki Das ... 618
Luchmi Narain v. Kunjilal ... 415
Luchmun v. Girdur. 517, 535, 558
Luchmun v. Mohun Lall. 228, 266
Luchmun Chunder v. Kalli Churn Singh. 1135, 1137, 1138, 1166
Luchomun v. Debee Pershad ... 929
Lukmee v. Umar Chand ... 283
Lukmeeram v. Khooshabe ... 1058
Lukshman v. Ramchandra ... 417
Lallubhai v. Mankuverbai ... 734
Lundley Raboonscroft ... 454
Lunkuru v. Birji ... 231
Lutchmanen v. Siva Prokass See Luchmanen v. Siva Prakasa. 267
Lutchmeeput Singh v. Sadaulla ... 98
Lutchman Pal v. Mahan Pal ... 267
Luximan v. Mullar ... 642
Luxmon Rao v. Mullar Rao ... 633
Lyde v. Mynn. 683, 1092

M

Ma Gyi v. Ma Me .. 726
Ma Hla Ma v. Ma Hla Bow .. 1194
Ma Me Gale v. Ma Sayi .. 271
Ma Shwe v. Mg. Po ... 650
Ma Ngme Yiu v. Maung Po Taw. 112
Ma Shwe Yin v. Ma Shwe Nyun. 275
Ma Wun Di v. Ma Kin. 151, 152
Ma Yait v. Maung Chit Maung .. 57
Mabna v. Chan .. 85
Machh Bai v. Hira Bai. 78, 192, 275
MacKenzie v. MacKenzie .. 145
Macleod v. Manikchand. 475, 476, 477
Mada Abdulla v. Ram Lal .. 1071
Madub v. Saratkumari .. 827
Madan v. E. .. 125
Madan v. Erlandi .. 92
Madan Gopal v. Sati Prasad. 536, 543
Madan Lal v. chiddu .. 420
Madan Mohan v. Baikanta .. 643
Madan Mohan v. Puran Mal. 1071, 1081
Madan v. Purshotham ... 886
Madan Mohan v. Purshottam. 201, 212, 669
Madan Mohan v. Rajah Ali ... 410
Madanji v. Tribhuwan. 902, 904, 1023, 1032
Madar Mohan v. Akharyar .. 1116

PAGE.

Madari v. Har Dayal .. 317
Madari v. Malki .. 1100
Maddala v. Vadapalli .. 883
Maddumala v. Lakshman .. 902
Madhab v. Sarat Kumari .. 830
Madharav v. Gangabai .. 336
Madhasookh v. Budree .. 747
Madhav v. Shiddaya .. 1029
Madhav Ram v. Dave. 949, 961, 1025, 1032
Madhav Rao v. Balabhi .. 839
Madhavarayya v. Tirthasami .. 1146
Madhavrav v. Atmaram .. 969
Madivalappa v. Subbappa .. 891
Madho v. Bindessury .. 947
Madho v. Janki. 70, 950, 971, 983, 985
Madho Das v. Kamta Das. 62, 63, 840
Madho Ram v. Jaya Singh .. 414
Madhoprasad v. Dhamlaj .. 1063
Madho Prasad v. Meherban Sing. 414, 415, 419, 420, 422, 423, 425, 515, 517, 631
Madho Prasad v. Ramrattan. 853, 859
Madho Rao v. Kesho Rao. 76, 79
Madhusudan v. Bhan .. 451
Madhu Sudan v. Debigobinda .. 183
Madhu Sudan Mohendra .. 1077
Madhusudan v. Ramji .. 345
Madhu Sudan v. Rooke. 1105, 1106, 1046, 1072
Madhusudan v. Ishwari Dayi .. 499
Madhusudan v. Keshtabai. 709, 712, 713
Madhwa v. Venkataramanjulu .. 504
Madras Doveton Trust Rund (In re) .. 842
Magania v. Prem Singh .. 143
Magli v. Ludli. 1129, 1139
Magmram v. Kasturbhai. 851, 857, 860
Mahabaleswar v. Ramachandra .. 305
Mahabalya Timaya. 421, 604
Mahabat Singh v. Baddan Singh.. 697
Mahabeer v. Kundun. 592, 627, 630, 631
Mahabir v. Ambika Prasad .. 482
Mahabir v. Amla Prasad. 474, 478
Mahabir v. Basudev. 500, 540, 541, 542, 563
Mahabir v. Mahadeo .. 1188
Mahabir v. Moheswar. 515, 517, 522
Mahabir Pershad v. Adhikari .. 1122
Mahabeer v. Joobha .. 458
Mahabir Pershad v. Moheshwar. 520, 521, 1104, 1122, 1125
Mahabir v. Radha .. 1184
Mahabir Persad v. Ramyad Singh. 515
Mahabaleshwar v. Durga Bai .. 180
Mahabaleshwar v. Ramchandra. 280, 294
Mahabaleshwar v. Subramanya. 251, 252, 406, 1115
Mahadav v. Atmaram .. 371
Mahadei v. Baldeo .. 406
Mahadeo v. Benenwar .. 512
Mahadeo v. Bhawani. 639, 889
Mahadrao v. Gangabai .. 338
Mahadeo v. Karia Bharali. 851, 859, 861

PAGE.

Mahadeo v. Mata Prasad. 570, 605, 1078, 1082, 1091
Mahadeo v. Sheokaran. 1107, 1109
Mahadev v. Lakshman. 600, 602
Mahadev v. Loshmun .. 299
Mahadev v. Neelamani .. 1052
Mahadeva v. Rama. 372, 380, 392
Mahadevi v. Padranath .. 374
Mahadevi v. Pammakka .. 412
Mahadu v. Bayaji .. 231
Mahalaya v. Timmaya .. 413
Mahaidei v. Bahu .. 377
Mahalana v. Thaker Prasad .. 1140
Mahalakshmamma v. Ramaswami. 1064
Mahalakshmamma v. Suryanarayan. 676, 679
Mahlakshmamma v. Venkataratnamma. 332, 341
Mahalakshmi v. Nagappaya. 780, 782
Mahalinga v. Vencoba. 882, 883
Mahalingam v. Natasen .. 640
Mahamad Ismail v. Gour Prashad. 291
Mahammad v. Shamsunnissa .. 100
Mahamaya v. Haridas. 92, 98, 99, 696
Mahamed v. Haji .. 646
Mahamed Umar v. Man Kuar .. 333
Mahamed Yusuf v. Hargovandas. 802
Mahmmad Imam Ali v. Hussain Khan .. 102
Mahammadinissa v. Bachelor .. 580
Mahamooda v. Nainoo .. 1190
Mahanand v. Dasreth .. 312
Mahandli v. Baldeo. 1114, 1117
Mahanath v. Barhamdeo .. 460
Mahant v. Khande Rao .. 910
Mahantwa v. Gangawa. 124, 125
Mahaprasad v. Nageswar .. 1099
Maharaj v. Paresh Nath .. 304
Maharaj Bahadur v. Seth Hukum Chand .. 833
Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh. 500, 557, 559, 569
Maharaja Mahteb v. Government. 82
Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkatramanjulu. 422, 423, 424, 497
Maharaja of Bobbili v. Zemindar of Chundi .. 1110
Maharaja of Bobbili v. Zemindar of Cochin .. 1109
Maharaja of Jeypore v. Vikrama Deo .. 693
Maharaj Kishen v. Hargobind .. 479
Maharaj Sai v. Reclarnath .. 679
Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram. 120, 166, 167, 170, 178, 189, 211, 229, 932, 933, 973
Maharaja Udai Pratab v. Maharaja Kumar Jagat Mohan .. 689
Maharajulangaru v. Puntilu .. 704
Maharana v. Thakur Pershad. 1166, 1168
Maharani Hiranath v. Baboo Ram Narayan .. 105
Maharani Hiranath v. Baboo Bwon Naram Singh .. 696
Maharani v. Thakur Prasad. 1164, 1169

PAGE.

Mahasabha v. Anna Sohan Lal .. 339
Mahasunder v. Ram Ratan Prasad. 801
Mahatab v. Saimal .. 946
Mahatab Chand v. Tej Chandra .. 821
Mahbub v. Abdul Rahman. 641, 661
Mahbub v. Patasu .. 687
Mahbub Ali v. Bharat. 227, 730
Mahendra (Raja) v. Jokha Singh. 90, 99
Mahendra v. Kailash .. 1051
Mahendra Nath v. Girish Chandra. 1143, 1159, 1161
Mahesh v. Dirgapal .. 336
Mahesh v. Taruck .. 168
Mahesh Lal v. Busunt .. 492
Mahesh Partab Singh v. Dirgpal Singh .. 337
Mahesher v. Ratnasingh .. 1058
Maheshwar v. Kishun Singh. 535, 558
Mahimchandra v. Hara Kumari .. 809
Mahoda v. Kuleani. 393, 1016
Mahomed Siddick v. Haji Ahmed. 366
Mahomed v. Mahomed .. 396
Mahomed v. Shoma .. 385
Mahomed Ali v. Jhao Lal .. 549
Mahomed Ashruf v. Brijessuree. 385, 392
Mohomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar. 574
Mahomed Buksh v. Hosseini .. 1105
Mohomed Khazin v. Ali Sughir .. 822
Mahomed Riasat v. Hasin Banu. 1122
Mahomed Shamsool Hooda v. Shewuk Ram. 377, 1069
Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed. 64
Mahran v. Quarutullah .. 1123
Mahru v. Moti .. 168
Mahtab Singh v. Badan Singh. 684, 695. 696
Mailathi v. Subaraya. 73, 76
Majibunissa v. Abdul .. 831
Majijan v. Dhadeen .. 882
Makund v. Jagannath .. 228
Makhan Lal v. Gayan Singh. 385, 392, 396, 1048, 1052, 1061
Makhoda v. Nundelal .. 326
Makund v. Bala Krishna .. 626
Makundlal v. Manmohini .. 1171
Makyin Mya v. Mysit Han. .. 1194
Malan v. Jewan. 912, 950
Malan v. Kishore Chand .. 1040
Malak Chund v. Hira Lal .. 415
Malgauda v. Babaji. 178, 182
Malika Sahoy v. Gouree Sunkur. 626
Mallan v. Dundapa .. 242
Mallan v. Paramatma Das .. 493
Mallan v. Purshothama. 371, 699
Mallappa v. Gangava. 215, 224
Mallangi v. Venkatasubbammah .. 242
Malappa v. Subbayya .. 1113
Mallesam v. Jugala. 500, 548
Mallika v. Ratanmani .. 869
Mallikarjum v. Sridevamma .. 824
Mallikarjuma v. Durga Prasad. 349, 612, 687, 902
Malratijun v. Amrita .. 1124
Mami v. Subbarayar .. 191
Mamma v. Mamma .. 671

	PAGE.
Mana v. Rama	.. 107
Manally v. Naidelinga	.. 882
Manaya v. Shanmuga	.. 613
Manbahal Rai v. Gopal	.. 535
Mancha v. Naratam Das.	362, 375, 379, 427
Mancharam v. Dattu.	609, 610
Mancharam v. Pranshankar.	99, 646, 647, 856, 868
Manchershaw v. Ardeshir	.. 723
Mandakini v. Arunbala	.. 798
Mandaram v. Mandaram	.. 1167
Mandatam v. Mandatam	.. 1170
Mandecheri v. Thachangat	.. 821
Mandelswara v. Prayag	.. 708
Mandhar v. Lakshmi Ram	.. 739
Mandit Koer v. Phool Chand	.. 59
Maneklal v. Keshav.	1023, 1027
Mangal v. Rukmini	.. 322
Manga v. Sihan	.. 273
Mangal v. Varto	.. 938
Mangal Das v. Raila Ram	.. 911
Mangala v. Dinanath.	333, 334, 335, 345
Mangalasami v. Raja of Ramnad.	.. 857
Mangaldas v. Abdul Razhak	.. 64
Mangaldas Shallesh v. Bechal	.. 578
Mangalji v. Rambhaoo	.. 794
Mangat v. Sihan	.. 647
Manghernlal v. Vithal Ram	.. 689
Mani v. Zabbo	.. 138
Mangtu v. Towala	.. 802
Mangaya v. Shanmuga	.. 419
Manila v. Bhagwathi	.. 420
Manibhai v. Shankar Lal	.. 1144
Manickammal v. Murugappa.	848, 863
Manik Bai v. Gokul Das.	220, 252
Manik Lal v. Bijoy Singh	.. 730
Manikechander v. Yagat Satlani.	295
Maniklal v. Manchushi	.. 866
Manika v. Ellappa	.. 351
Mahikbai v. Govind	.. 262
Manikam v. Ramalinga	.. 1087
Manikchand Golecha v. Jagat Settani	.. 59
Manikha v. Sobagia	.. 350
Manikka v. Soubagiammal	.. 349
Manikyamala v. Nand Kumar	.. 212
Manilal (In re)	.. 1129
Manilal v. Bai Rewa.	1132, 1144
Manilal v. Bai Tara.	333, 335, 343, 344
Maniram v. Rupchant	.. 864
Manjama v. Padmanabhayya	.. 1071
Manjamma v. Seshagiri Rao.	274, 1072
Manjanatha v. Narayana.	615, 621, 625, 676
Manjappa v. Lakshmi	.. 329
Manjaya v. Shanmuga.	420, 421, 423, 424, 616
Manjunath v. Shankar	.. 868
Mankamma v. Balkishan.	775, 778
Manki Kunwar v. Kundan Kunwar.	939
Mankuar v. Lachman	.. 1093
Manmatha v. Rohili	.. 1093
Manmohan v. Mt. Raindee	.. 731
Manmohini Dasi v. Balak Chandra.	323
Manna Lal v. Kaku Singh.	346, 515
Mani v. Purat Singh	.. 1154
Mannox v. Greener	.. 790
Manohar v. Bhupendra Nath.	740, 742, 804, 805, 806, 809, 820, 828, 835, 837, 838, 839, 847
Manohar v. Lakmi Rao	.. 845
Manohar v. Lakhmiram.	824, 841, 846
Manohar v. Peary Mohan	.. 837
Manoharlal v. Banarsidas	.. 220
Manokarni v. Haripada	.. 1090
Manorama v. Kali Charan.	819, 825
Man Singh v. Nawlakhbati.	376, 887, 937, 1066, 1068, 1070
Mansa Ram v. Nanak Chand	.. 1189
Mansha v. Juwan Mal	.. 322
Manshadevi v. Jiwanmal	.. 332
Manshauna v. Ma Chin Jaw	.. 801
Mantappa v. Baswuntrao.	574, 576, 577, 578
Marappa v. Rangasami	.. 547
Mararji v. Neubai	.. 814
Marcer v. Sigo	.. 797
Mari v. Chinnamal.	609, 610, 611, 950, 903 972, 973
Marian v. Kadir	.. 636
Marian v. M. Ibrahim	.. 730
Marina v. Doddisetti	.. 130
Maroti v. Laxman.	251, 252, 405
Marquis of Salisbury (In re).	311, 312
Marrao v. Sitaram	.. 421
Martand Rao v. Malhar Rao.	92, 692, 697, 698
Marlin Cashin v. P. J. Cashin	.. 582
Marudaji v. Doraisami.	929, 934
Marudanathu v. Strinivasa.	1066, 1069
Marugappa v. Nagappa	.. 230
Marudappa v. Collector.	964, 967
Marugappa v. Polaniyandi	.. 599
Maruthappan v. Niraikulthan	.. 543
Maruti v. Babaji.	518, 522, 562, 657
Maruti v. Rama.	658, 659
Maruti v. Vishvanath	.. 433
Maruti v. Lilachan	.. 450
Marya v. Shivabhagya	.. 1154
Marya Pillai v. Shivabhagyathachi.	1153
Masitullah v. Domodar.	359, 360, 390, 525, 555, 556, 572, 601, 1083
Masulipala v. Cavcli	.. 1058
Mata Din v. Amad Ali.	301, 302
Mata Din v. Sheik Amed.	292, 293
Matappudayan v. Ammani.	543, 1135
Mata Prasad v. Devi Sukhlain.	1082
Mata Prasad v. Nageshar.	1098, 1116, 1197
Matangini v. Gogendra.	146, 320
Matangini v. Joykali	.. 86
Matangini v. Ram Ratton.	85, 333, 914, 936, 937, 1023
Matgaru Coal Co. v. Shragers, Ltd.	617
Mathab Bose v. Soodha	.. 430
Mathaya v. Tinnevelly	.. 484
Mathew v. Brise	.. 275
Mathlai v. Maung Po	.. 280

	PAGE.
Mathkrishna v. Ramchandra ..	818
Mathosri v. Sivaji ..	1153
Mathura v. Durgawati ..	894
Mathura v. Esu ..	274
Mathura v. Ganga Ram ..	1040
Mathura v. Raj Kumar.	532, 535
Mathura v. Rukmini ..	894
Mathura Das v. Narain ..	775
Mathura Das v. Srikissen ..	273
Mathura Nath v. Lakhi Narain ..	837
Mathura Prasad v. Ram Chandra.	562
Mathurasawmy v. Bangarammal ..	562
Matilal v. Girischandra ..	671
Mati Shah v. Gandharp Singh ..	1091
Matichand v. Kunwar Kalika.	436, 730
Mathu v. Dorasinga ..	890
Matungini v. Ram Ratton.	85, 130, 936, 937, 1047, 1204
Matha v. Udayana ..	707
Maung Man v. Dermo.	125, 126
Maya v. Rishen ..	946
Maya Devi v. Ramchand.	117, 283
Mayana Bai v. Uttaram.	931, 996
Mayait v. Maung Chit Maung ..	87
Mayana Bibi v. Banku Behari ..	302
Mayandi v. Chokalingam ..	397
Mayaram v. Motiram ..	1030
Mayor of Lyons v. Advocate-General.	814, 815
McDowell v. Ragava.	541, 542, 840
McGarth (In re) ..	286
Medai v. Narain ..	1051
Medai v. Veerabudra ..	541
Medai Dalvoi v. Nainar Tevan.	462, 1083
Medai Delavoy v. Medai Delvoy.	1068
Meenakshi v. Appakutti.	932, 933
Meenakshi v. Krishna ..	460
Meenakshi v. Immudi ..	522
Meenakshi v. Muniandi.	63, 930, 1165 1166, 1167, 1168, 1169
Meenakshi v. Rama.	326, 327, 329
Meenakshi v. Somasundaram.	837, 849
Meenatchee v. Chetumbra ..	747
Meenatchi v. Rajan ..	1088
Meeraw v. Girijanundan ..	1122
Meghu Raj v. Ram Khelawan ..	1101
Meherbai v. Manganchand ..	875
Meherban v. Sheo Kumar ..	902
Mein Gale v. Ma Kin ..	329
Mela Mal v. Gori ..	458
Mela Singh v. Gurdas.	270, 272, 275
Melgirappa v. Shivappa ..	1058
Mellore v. Surre ..	1097
Mendava v. Jaganath ..	664
Mercer v. Denne.	92, 93, 94, 100, 101, 106
Mersy & Co., Trustees v. Gibbs ..	852
Metarm v. Thanjooram ..	146
Metharam v. Rewchand.	363, 364, 376, 1183
Mehesh v. Ugrakant ..	1101
Mewa Kunwar v. Hulas Kunwar.	1088
Mewa Singh v. Basant Singh.	626, 641
Mg Po Kin v. Mg Po Shin.	643, 729, 730
Mg Scin v. Ma Pan ..	1175

	PAGE.
Mg Po v. Mg Shwe ..	676
Mhalsabai v. Vithoba.	173, 214, 220
Mhd. Abdul Ghani v. Fakhar Sohan ..	787
Mhd. Afzal Khan v. Ghulam Kasim.	692, 707
Mhd. Afzal Khan v. Abdul Rahaman ..	423
Mhd. Askri v. Radha Ram ..	445
Mhd. Ashruf v. Brijassuree ..	1055
Mhd. Hussain v. Krishna Nandan.	360, 361, 365, 376, 716, 764, 887, 890, 914, 941
Mhd. Habibullah v. Safdar Hussain ..	865
Mhd. Mizamilullah v. Mithulol ..	417
Mhd. Mahbub Ali v. Bharat.	436, 730
Mhd. Umar Khan v. Mhd. Niazudin.	172, 270, 271
Mhd. Yusuf v. Govindas ..	64
Mhd. Zahoor Ali v. Rutta Koer ..	353
Mi Me v. Mi Shwa Ma ..	120
Midnapore Zemindari Co. v. Appasami.	1087, 1188
Mikandi v. Jamni ..	936
Milathai v. Subbaraya ..	904
Mile v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co.	573, 574
Milechamp v. Johnson ..	94
Millard (In re) ..	145
Miller v. Runga Nath.	388, 442, 453
Mills v. Colchester Corporation.	93, 95
Mina Kumari v. Bejoy Singh.	727, 730
Minakshi v. Imnuddi.	522, 526
Minakshi v. Kanaka Ramayya ..	517
Minakshi v. Ramanada.	215, 217, 222
Minakshi v. Vikappa ..	555
Minakshi v. Virappa.	414, 666
Minakshi v. Visvanatha ..	764
Mir Azmat Ali v. Mahmud-ul-Nissa ..	113
Mirabivi v. Vellayanna ..	107
Mirga Pana Saiad Sadik ..	291
Malanji v. Tribhuwan.	1025, 1032
Mirza Sadiq Husain v. Mhd. Karim.	1028, 1106
Mithi Bai v. Maher Bai.	436, 798, 802
Mitta v. Neerunjun.	641, 868
Mitter v. Ranganath ..	568
Mitarsen v. Magbul Husain.	411, 915, 1181
Mittevi v. Peduli ..	838
Mitendra Singh v. Rameshwar ..	562
Modan Lal v. Chidda ..	460
Muttyan v. Sangilivira ..	526
Miya Valiulla v. Sayad Bava ..	882
Modho Prasad v. Meherban ..	493
Modhoosoodun v. Jadub Chunder.	276
Modi Malappa v. Subbayya ..	1113
Mohamad v. Yech ..	315
Moggridge v. Thackwell ..	799
Moghli v. Lodhi ..	1131
Mohamed Ali v. Saraswati Debya.	314
Mohammad Sadiq v. Lamte Ram.	659
Mohamad Sidick v. Ahmad ..	82

PAGE.

Mohamed Arif v. Saraswatie 315
Mohamida v. Pitchey .. 495
Mohamaya v. Haridas .. 869
Mohan v. Gordhan .. 887
Mohan v. Kashi .. 1139
Mohan v. Madhusudan .. 837
Mohan v. Purho .. 1139
Mohan Das v. Krishnabai. 925, 948, 966, 967, 975
Mohan Lal v. Amrat Lal. 90, 91, 97
Mohanlal v. Balmukund .. 501
Mohan Lal v. Bala Prasad. 497, 499
Mohan Lal v. Siromonee. 1009, 1077
Mohan Singh v. Dalpat Singh.. 927
Mohanund v. Banimotab .. 1059
Mohanund v. Nafur Mondal. 287, 288, 303
Mohananda v. Baikantha .. 1066
Mohar Singh v. Het Singh. 816, 828
Moharaja of Bobbili v. Kamiнayani .. 708
Moharanee v. Naddu Lall .. 1103
Mohendro v. Ashutosh .. 641
Mohendra v. Girischandra .. 1141
Mohendra v. Shamsunnessa. 1116, 1117, 1118, 1124
Mohendro v. Rookinny .. 242
Mohesh v. Moylash .. 872
Mohesh Chunder v. Chunder Mohun. 600
Mohesh v. Satrughan .. 717
Mohesh Chunder v. Satrughan .. 695
Mohesh v. Chunder .. 993
Mohesh v. Goswami Banwari Lal.. 537
Moheshur v. Kishun Singh .. 444
Mohidin v. Shiv Lingappa .. 92
Mohin Chunder v. Kashi .. 1129
Mohim Chander v. Kashi Kant. 1131, 1138
Mohima Chander v. Durga Monee. 145
Mohiuddin v. Soyududdin. 806, 812
Mohna Mal v. Mala Mal. 234, 235
Mohini Mohun v. Rashbehari. 1035, 1044, 1135, 1143
Mohmoodu v. Nainoo .. 1191
Mohomed Riasat v. Hasim Banu. 1124
Mohomed Ashruf v. Brijessuree. 1052
Mohoosoodun v. Tabub Chunder. 281
Mohroo v. Gansoo. 630, 636
Mohun v. Mati .. 168
Mohun Pershad v. Kishen Mohun. 1155
Mohun Singh v. Chumun Rai .. 929
Mohunee v. Mohuna .. 972
Mohunkoomar v. Zoramun .. 1046
Moidin v. Ambu .. 377
Mokoond v. Nobodip .. 284
Mokoond Lal v. Nobodip Chunder. 311
Mokoondlal v. Nobodip. 308, 310
Mokund v. Bissessuree .. 1155
Mokundo v. Bykunt .. 254
Mokhoda v. Nand Lall. 322, 330
Mokhan Lal v. Goyan Singh .. 1063
Molivahtoo v. Mamoobai .. 229
Mollon v. Court of Wards .. 480
Mondakini v. Adinath. 184, 197, 203
Mondaram v. Manduram .. 1140

PAGE.

Monekbai v. Kalingapa .. 952
Moneya v. Felix Slym .. 281
Mitil Bouli v. Bhagwan .. 403
Monevie Sayyad v. Bebee Ultaf. 726
Monemotho Nath Dey v. Oonanthnath .. 173
See Monmotho Nath v. Onathnath.
Monghi Bai v. Nagu Bai .. 325
Monghi Bai v. Pragji 772
Moniram v. Keri. 70, 251, 332, 902, 903 914, 935, 939, 1023, 1024, 1025; 1044, 1047
Moni Ram v. Keri Kolitani .. 250
Monji Lal v. Chandrabati. 114, 139, 146, 157, 162, 908
Monohar Das v. Tarina Charan .. 879
Monmotho Nath v. Onathnath. 40, 168
Monorama v. Kalicharan .. 829
Monoram v. Keri Kolitani .. 935
Monsoor Ali v. Ramdayal .. 277
Mooktareshee v. Woomacharan .. 552
Moola v. Nundy .. 55
Moolchand v. Chota Devi. 601, 906
Moonji Lal v. Chandravati. 285, 287
Moonshee Buzloor Raheem v. Shamsoon Nissa .. 145
Moosabhai v. Yakubhai .. 864
Moosalakant v. Kotamarti. 280, 281, 305
Moosa v. Hari Abdul .. 1152
Moosee Haji v. Haji Abdul Rahim. 110
Moosa Haji v. Paji Abdul .. 116
Moothooramohan Roy v. Soorendra. 277
Moothoosawmy v. Lutchmydavummah .. 215
Mootia v. Uppea. 251, 252
Mootilal v. Bai Kasi .. 340
Mootsuddee v. Parvati .. 273
Morarji v. Administrator-General. 124
Morarji v. Nembai .. 817
Moro v. Ganesh. 429, 629, 657, 658, 660
Moro v. Ganesh .. 399
Moro Narayan v. Balaji. 255, 258
Moris v. Davies. 151, 152, 153, 154, 162, 288
Morris v. Bishop .. 806
Morrison v. Verchoyele. 288, 289, 341, 455, 470, 473, 474, 475, 476, 481, 482
Moru v. Hanso .. 1072
Morun Mose v. Bejoy Kishto. 224, 253
Motee v. Modoosoodun .. 253
Motee Dass v. Modoosoodun .. 853
Mothuramohun v. Soorendra .. 183
Mothooranath v. Eusuff. 962, 964
Moti v. Lal Das .. 1066
Moti v. Kaulya .. 537
Moti Lal v. Punjaji .. 450
Moti Lal v. Kundan Lal. 728, 730
Moti Lal v. Rati Lal. 1135, 1146
Moti Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal 1151, 1153
Moti Shah Chandharp .. 1119
Motichand v. Chandra Bai .. 321
Motichand v. Mangalmal. 600, 618
Motichand v. Kunwar Kalika .. 600
Motilal v. Karrabuddin .. 498

	PAGE.
Motilal v. Kashi.	347, 349
Motilal v. Eastern Mortgage, etc. Co.	.. 1087
Motisahu v. Dwarka	.. 470
Motivahoo v. Purshotam	.. 439
Motivahu v. Mamubai.	734, 735, 748, 749, 816, 817
Moult v. Halliday	.. 106
Mountain v. Benett	.. 765
Mrijrai v. Sheodam	.. 628
Mrinalini v. Abinash	.. 1095
Munni Bibi v. Triloki Nath	.. 1116
Muchoo v. Arzoon.	53, 145, 146, 280
Muddun Gopal v. Khikhinda.	367, 368, 369, 370, 424, 994
Muddun Gopal v. Ram Baksh.	375, 402, 500, 747, 896
Muddun Lal v. Konnel.	824, 827, 830
Muddun Thakur v. Kantoo Latt.	517, 560
Mudobun v. Kishen	.. 987
Muhammad Imam Ali v. Hussain.	370
Muhammad v. Mankuar	.. 130
Muhammad v. Hussain.	716, 718
Muhammad Imam Ali v. Hussain Khan	.. 103
Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano	.. 99
Muhammad Niazuddin v. Mhd. Umar Khan	.. 172
Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niazuddin	.. 246
Muhammed v. Mithu Lal	.. 421
Muhammed Salim v. Sadaruddin.	100
Mukerjee v. Manohar	.. 736
Mukerji v. Afzool Beg.	643, 699
Mukha v. Qabza	.. 974
Mukhoda v. Kullcani	.. 1054
Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Narzuddin	.. 246
Mukhoda v. Nundo Lall	.. 351
Mukta v. Dad	.. 1122
Mukthveerappa v. Ponnuswami	.. 283
Mukund v. Purnea	.. 895
Mukund v. Balkrishna.	44, 426
Mukunda Dev v. Jagannath	.. 221
Mukund v. Jogesh	.. 636
Mukunda v. Jogesh Chandra.	612, 625
Mukandi v. Jamni.	909, 936
Mukunda v. Manmohini	.. 940
Mukund v. Manmohini	.. 1010
Mukundo v. Leuranx.	617, 639
Mula v. Maharaja	.. 940
Mula Bai v. Maharaj Singh	.. 1033
Mula v. Partab.	129, 937
Mula v. Paratap	.. 937
Mulchand v. Bai Mancha	.. 1146
Mulchand v. Bhudia.	126, 138, 283
Mulchand v. Mancha	.. 755
Mulchand v. Sadhu Singh	.. 470
Mulhayya v. Minakshi	.. 252
Mulji v. Gomti.	111, 112
Mulji v. Ujam.	330, 339
Multani v. Lala Mal.	950, 983
Mulu v. Shando	.. 122
Mulugu v. Mudigonda.	1066, 1071
Mumtaz Jahan v. Mannulal	.. 1189
Mun Mohinee v. Soodamonee	.. 430

	PAGE.
Munda v. Timmaju	.. 624
Mundachera v. Achuthan	.. 823
Munia v. Puran.	1129, 1135
Munia v. Ramasami	.. 548
Munibibi v. Trilok Nath	.. 1175
Municipal Council v. Foster	.. 1124
Muniswami v. Kuthi Moopan.	552, 553, 554
Muniswami v. Mathuruthammal.	363
Munna v. Kabutra	.. 319
Muni Lal v. Shiama	.. 125
Munshi v. Tirloka Nath	.. 1113
Munshi v. Bhagwani	.. 122
Munshi Lal v. Devi	.. 1057
Munshi Lal v. Shiv Devi.	386, 387, 1054
Munshi Lal v. Sohanlal.	415, 417
Munshi Ram v. Govinda	.. 624
Munugarra v. Munugarra	.. 1066
Muonye v. Lomun	.. 427
Murajalli v. Ramasami	.. 548
Murari v. Jayana.	295, 304
Murari v. Mukand.	626, 628, 629, 630
Murari v. Tayana	.. 288
Murari Lal v. Kundan Lal	.. 250
Murari Lal v. Saraswati	.. 308
Murarji v. Parbatibai.	600, 994
Murarji v. Parvatibai	.. 993
Murarrao v. Sitaram	.. 425
Murli v. Jay Singh.	911, 995
Murli Das v. Manicka.	69, 76
Murlidhar v. Diwanchand	.. 811
Murlidhar v. Harilal.	292, 312
Murlidhar v. Ramnath	.. 659
Murtaza Husain v. Yasin Ali.	710, 711
Murudappa v. Collector	.. 984
Murugappa v. Ayyadoray.	415, 419
Murugappa v. Kalava	.. 184
Murugappa v. Nagappa	.. 206
Murugappa v. Ponnuswami	.. 550
Murugappa v. Rangaswami	.. 857
Murugayi v. Viama	.. 1047
Murugayi v. Viramakali.	333, 957
Murugayya v. Palaniyandi	.. 654
Murugesami v. Manickavasaka.	516, 859, 860
Musiligadu v. Nannigadu	.. 440
Mutaiyala v. Buradagunta	.. 1123
Mutasadi Lal v. Kundan Lal.	178, 182, 183, 193, 194, 198
Muteeram v. Gopal.	285, 392, 1102, 1105
Mutha v. Sellathammal	.. 1137
Muthammal v. Kamakshy	.. 331
Muthappanarayan v. Ammani	.. 72, 1129
Muthayya v. Minakshi	.. 252
Muthia v. Periannan	.. 821
Muthiala v. Budhagunta	.. 1115
Muthisami v. Masilamani.	116, 117, 139
Muthu v. Chinnasawmy.	552, 554
Muthu v. Dora Singh.	72, 1121
Muthu Gangathara	.. 876
Muthu v. Gopalan	.. 412
Muthu v. Ponnusawmy	.. 671
Muthu v. Shunmoogatha	.. 830
Muthu Kannu v. Paramsami	.. 401

PAGE.

Muthu Karuppa v. Shellathammal. 49, 114, 434, 1134, 1135
Muthu Ram Krishna v. Mari Muthu .. 403
Muthu Veerappa v. Ponnuswami. 276, 285
Muthukannu v. Paramasami .. 274
Muthukumara v. Udayan .. 380
Muthuraman v. Ponnusawmy .. 644
Muthuranian v. Ettappasami .. 555
Muthusami v. Angayakannu .. 457
Muthuswami v. Annamalai. 294, 303
Muthusami v. Bangarammal .. 683
Muthusami v. Chunnammal. 426, 498, 890
Muthusami v. Govindasami .. 576
Muthusami v. Masilamani. 52, 67, 139
Muthusami v. Meenammal. 893, 994
Muthusawmy v. Muttukumara. 971, 973
Muthusami v. Muttu Kumarasami. 952 966, 972
Muthusami v. Simabedu. 922, 961, 964, 967, 974, 975, 977
Muthusami v. Simambeda .. 970
Muthusami v. Sreemethanithi .. 857
Muthusamy v. Venkatasubba .. 321
Muthusami v. Narayana .. 310
Muthuswami v. Muthukumarasami. 964
Muthuvadugunadha v. Periasami. 718, 902, 934, 941
Muthevilayya v. Parasakti .. 995
Muthuvelayuda v. Parasakthi .. 171
Muthuveera v. Vaithilinga. 1080, 1087
Muthiah v. Virammal .. 341
Mutyala v. Mahbat .. 553
Mutta Vaduganadha v. Dorasinga. 1171
Muttammal v. Vengalakshmi .. 944
Muttayan v. Sangili .. 499
Muttayan v. Zamindar of Sivagiri. 376
Muttayan Chettiar v. Sangilivira. 527, 551
Muttayan v. Virapandia .. 376
Mutteram v. Gopal .. 1055
Muttevilaya v. Parasakti .. 15
Muttu v. Dora Sinha. 704, 943, 1024, 1022, 1025, 1128, 1158
Muthu v. Dora .. 943
Muttukannu v. Paramasami 1164, 1168
Muttumaran v. Lakshmi .. 747
Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami. 965 967, 971, 974
Muthusami v. Siniambedu. 965, 970
Muthusami v. Venkateshvara. 164, 342, 412
Muttuvaduganada v. Periasami.. 943
Muttuvaduganatha v. Periasami. 934, 943
Muzi Hassan v. Sagun .. 806
Muzaffar v. Ghulam .. 550
Mya Das v. Saw Un .. 273
Myna Bai v. Ootaram .. 1103
Myna Bai v. Uttaram. 57, 931, 946, 1163, 1164, 1165, 1166, 1169
Myna Bayee v. Ootarar .. 931

N

Naba Kishore v. Harinath. 966, 1067
Naba Kishore v. Upendra Kishore. 1130, 1034, 1041, 1046 1132, 1133, 1134
Naba Kumar v. Bhabasundari .. 1050
Nabin Chunder v. Guru Prasad. 1026, 1122
Nabin Chandra v. Hem Chandra. 1120
Nabin Chunder v. Ramesh Chunder. 503, 507
Nabindra v. Sitaram .. 417
Naba Kishore v. Hari Nath .. 1081
Nachiappa v. Chinnayasami .. 708
Nachiappa v. Rangasami. 907, 948, 1060, 1068
Nachiappa v. Sivasubramaniya Pandya .. 888
Nada v. Nur Muhammad .. 172
Nadri v. Kura .. 941
Nagabhushanam v. Seshammagaru. 166, 173
Nadai v. Nainar .. 461
Nagalinga v. Subramania .. 72
Nagalinga v. Subhiramaniya .. 519
Nagalutchmee v. Gopoo .. 751
Naganna v. Rajya .. 319
Nagam and Churee v. Gopo Nadargia .. 414
Nagamma v. Virabadra. 326, 350
Nagammal v. Chokki .. 331
Nagammal v. Shankarappa .. 168
Nagappa v. Brahdambal. 462, 709
Nagappa v. Subha .. 173
Nagar v. Khare .. 937
Nagar v. Ramappaya .. 830
Nagat Kumaru v. Markanath Ammal .. 1043
Nagarampalli v. Nagarampalli.. 188
Nagendra v. Amarchandra. 449, 487
Nagendra Nandini v. Binoy Krishna. 918, 920
Nagendrabala v. Panchanom .. 1112
Nagendra Nath v. Rabindra Nath. 852
Nagesh v. Garu Rao .. 942
Nageshar v. Ganesha. 432, 450, 631, 633
Nagina Singh v. Sunder .. 311
Nagindas v. Bachoo. 18, 70, 39, 253, 254, 256, 259, 261, 602, 1151
Nagindas v. Mhd. Yusuf .. 414
Nagubai v. Monghibai. 73, 324, 325
Nagur v. Khare .. 937
Naikram v. Soorujbuns .. 1100
Nailanna v. Ponnal .. 950
Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan .. 805
Nagendra v. Benoy Krishna .. 1164
Nairoju v. Peroobai .. 780
Najibulla v. Nadir. 172, 272
Najibuddin v. Mir Hosan .. 878
Najimuddin v. Abdul Hamid .. 79
Nakammal v. Munnaswami .. 1024
Naku v. Raghava .. 412
Nalini Kanta v. Sarnamoyi. 637, 638, 640
Nallaikumaru v. Markathammal.. 1146
Nallana v. Ponnal. 904, 912, 949, 972, 983
Nallappa v. Balammal .. 603

PAGE.

Nallatambi v. Mukunda. 747, 891
Nalle Kandiyail v. Chatu .. 412
Nalluri v. Kamepalli. 271, 274
Namankal v. Har Bhagwan. 462, 1083
Namasevayam v. Annamalai. 117, 130
Nammalwar v. Thayarammal .. 145
Namoni v. Modhun Mohan. 517, 518, 519, 522, 526, 527
Nana v. Haree .. 757
Nana v. Appa .. 413
Nana v. Jogilal .. 994
Nana v. Manobai .. 1029
Nana v. Rama .. 335
Nana v. Ramchandra. 885, 890 929
Nanabhai v. Janardhan. 117, 279, 280
Nanabhai v. Nathabai. 613, 614, 639, 640
Nanaji v. Sundrabai .. 941
Nanakchand v. Munnalal .. 265
Nanak Gir v. Kishan Kaur .. 983
Nana Narain v. Huree Punth .. 375
Nana Nyan v. Mg. Vya .. 641
Nanak Singh v. Sant Singh .. 1052
Nandan Prasad v. Ajudhia Prasad. 295 296
Nandalal v. Dhirendra .. 505
Nandlal v. Kumar Arun Chandra. 851
Nandlal v. Kalipada .. 641
Nandlal v. Umari .. 551
Nandan v. Ajudhia .. 130
Nandi v. Harikishen .. 287
Nandan Prasad v. Abdul Aziz .. 453
Nand Kishore v. Bhra. 663, 664
Nand Kishore v. Paroo .. 495
Nand Kumar v. Radha .. 1116
Nand Ram v. Mangalsi. 661, 662
Nand Rani v. Krishna Sahai .. 385
Nandi Singh v. Sita Ram .. 800
Nanhi v. Gauri Shankar. 912, 950, 972
Nanhi v. Nathu .. 77
Nani v. Chuni Lal .. 224
Nanilal v. Nutbehari .. 481
Nanjayal v. Shanmuga .. 497
Nanji v. Sundrabai .. 89
Nanjudar v. Kishmagaraja .. 415
Nanki v. Gauri Shankar. 744, 944
Nanomi Babuasin v. Madhun Mohun. 520, 562
Nanti Chundar v. Bisheshwar .. 287
Narasimham v. Narasimham .. 929
Naragunty v. Vengama. 427, 428, 688
Naragunty v. Venkatachalapathi. 713
Narainddin v. Arunadak. 717, 757
Narain v. Chandi Din. 957, 960
Narain v. Gopal. 166, 174
Narain v. Hamraji. 907, 948
Narain v. Mohan Singh .. 1204
Narain v. Loknath. 567, 582
Narain v. Mahanga .. 675
Narain v. Mannalal .. 1034
Narain v. Rakhal. 125, 126, 1009
Narain v. Political Agent .. 516
Narain v. Chandihin .. 958
Narain v. Srikashan .. 546

PAGE.

Narain v. Roodur .. 823
Narain v. Tulsiram .. 70
Narainbati v. Ramdhari. 734, 1003
Narainbai v. Ramchod. 404, 413
Narain Das v. Ram Prem .. 479
Narain Dass v. Mahtab .. 322
Narain Das v. Ralli Bros.. 469, 484
Narain Das v. Tirlok Tiwari. 52, 141, 145, 1164, 1167, 1169
Narain Mal v. Kooer Narain .. 255
Narain Sami v. Arunachala .. 757
Narainswami v. Ratnasabapathi. 382, 383
Narain Singh v. Sada Kaur .. 1039
Naraini v. Chandi .. 972
Narasamma v. Mangamma. 964, 974
Narasamma v. Mangammal .. 904 961, 968, 975
Narasammal v. Balaramacharlu .. 253
Narasanna v. Gangu. 1169, 1170
Narasappa v. Bharmappa .. 941
Narasimappa v. Chinnakeanchappa .. 254
Narasimha v. Golab .. 857
Narasimah v. Parthasarathy. 175, 197, 198, 203, 204, 205, 251, 782, 787
Narasimha v. Narsimha. 928, 929
Narasimha v. Rangayya. 198, 204
Narasimharao v. Antai .. 556
Narasimham v. Nadhavaradwja. 1026
Narasingerji v. Raja Panganti .. 787
Narsimha v. Venkata .. 1025
Narasinh v. Venkatalingum. 466, 824, 825
Narayan v. Anaji .. 437
Narayan v. Balaji .. 255
Narayan v. Bholagir .. 1108
Narayan v. Chandra .. 876
Narayan v. Bhubcen Mohini .. 838
Narayan v. Challan. 654, 655, 656
Narayan v. Chengalasuma .. 1100
Narayan v. Chintaman .. 859
Narayan v. Chubban .. 647
Narayan v. Dharma .. 302
Narayan v. Dhudabai .. 537
Narayan v. Govind .. 939
Narayan v. Gunga Ram .. 504
Narayan v. Gungaji .. 657
Narayan v. Jadunath .. 1133
Narayan v. Krishna. 439, 630
Narayan v. Jaganath .. 500
Narayan v. Lakshman. 1147, 1160, 1167
Narayan v. Lakshmi .. 935
Narayan v. Lal Ramesh .. 735
Narayan v. Laving. 97, 128
Narayan v. Loke Nath .. 705
Narayan v. Luxmeebai .. 285
Narayan v. Manohar .. 939
Narayana v. Muthiah. 415, 418
Narayan v. Nana. 70, 90, 175, 176, 214, 444, 448, 617, 618, 649, 863
Narayan v. Nathaji. 424, 646
Narayan v. Pandurang. 519, 612
Narayan v. Pechiammal 495
Narayan v. Political Agent .. 450
Narayan v. Rama. 1077, 1103
Narayan v. Raja Ram .. 449

	PAGE.
Narayan v. Ranga	99
Narayan v. Roodur Narain	739
Narayan v. Satyaji	505
Narayan v. Shankar Sah.	423, 625, 676
Narayan v. Tarakumar	719
Narayan v. Tirlok	913
Narayan v. Veerappa	653
Narayan v. Waman.	982, 1173
Narayan Rao v. Ramabai.	330, 332 334, 338, 341, 347, 350, 351, 354
Narayana v. Chengalamma	371
Narayana v. Ramalinga	392
Narayana v. Venkata Ramana	456
Narayanji v. Bhagwandas	456
Narayanswami v. Esa.	492, 494
Narayanan v. Kaman	377
Narayanaswami v. Irulappa	847
Narayanasami v. Mangammal	189
Narayanasami v. Periathambi	730
Narayanasami v. Samidas.	496, 544
Narayanasami v. Ramasami.	231, 232
Narayanasawmi v. Kumarasawmi.	850
Narayanasawmy v. Kuppusami.	70, 212, 214
Narayanaswami v. Ramaswami	257
Narayanaswami v. Rama Ayyar	1068
Narayanaswami v. Tirumal	613
Narbadabai v. Mahadeo.	329, 344, 345, 349
Narendra v. Dinanalli	274
Narendra v. Raicharan.	296, 455
Narendra v. Nalini	354
Narendra v. Ram Govind	162
Narendra v. Saroda Kanto	639
Narendranath v. Kamalbasini.	778, 787
Narhar v. Dirgnath.	339, 340
Narhar v. Narain.	343, 435
Narmada v. Bhagwantraj	1129
Narmada v. Mahadeo.	328, 342, 343
Naro v. Paragawda.	423, 424, 537, 547
Narottam v. Narsandas	375
Nar Sanna v. Gunga.	1164, 1166, 1167
Narogoniall v. Venkatachalapati.	717
Narottam v. Narsodas	144
Narsappa v. Bharmappa.	141, 142, 942
Narsappa v. Sakharam.	943, 1029, 1032
Narsinha v. Anantha	870
Narsingh v. Durjan	836
Narsingh v. Lalji.	500, 548
Narsingdas v. Narain Dass	438
Narsingh Rao v. Mahalakshmi	1043
Narsinha v. Veerabhadra.	609, 905, 1029
Narsimham v. Venkatasubamma	326
Narumayya v. Tiruvengadathan.	145
Nasaratullah v. Majibullah.	643, 699
Nasir Hussain v. Mata Prasad	750
Nasirul Haq v. Fyazur Rahman	1092
Nash v. Morley	815
Nashi Lal v. Babulal	657
Nasir Khan	157
Nataraja v. Kailasam.	840, 879
Nataranjan v. Muthia Chetty.	321, 322
Natasayyam v. Ponnusami.	388, 390, 500, 541

	PAGE.
Natchiarammal v. Gopalkrishna	341
Natesa v. Rama.	289, 584
Natesa v. Rathai	417
Nath v. Bhag Singh	157
Natha v. Chotelal	124
Natha v. Jamni	1115
Natha Lal v. Baboram	1033
Natha Nathuram v. Menta Chotalal	929
Nathabai v. Ramchoddas	473
Nathaji v. Hari	220
Nathaji v. Sita Ram	452
Nathumuni v. Parthsaradi	932
Nathu v. Keshawji.	58, 874
Nathu v. Kundan Lal	491
Natukhee Chowdhary	685
Nathu v. Nai Bahu	1123
Nathu Rai v. Din Dayal	394
Nathu Ram v. Chhagan.	288, 295
Nathuram v. Shoma	294
Nathu Singh v. Gulab Singh	246
Natukhar v. Chowdhary Chintamun	99
Natvarlal v. Ranchod.	195, 196
Nauli v. Kheri	64
Nauranjilal v. Ramcharan.	850, 866
Navalram v. Nandkishor	1032
Navroji v. Perozbai.	66, 83, 778, 780
Nawab Ray v. Bhugbutte	165
Nawabuddin v. Kami.	360, 362
Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Karamani Industrial Bank, Ltd.	702
Navaneethakrishna v. Collector	1132
Navanti Lal v. Purshottam	300
Nazir Begam v. Raghunath.	383, 572
Nearam v. Andaram.	972, 980
Neelkaunt v. Mune	623
Neel Kisto v. Beer Chunder.	91, 426, 427, 428, 714
Neelwa v. Gurshiddappa	214
Nehaldas v. Prabhatchandra	1017
Negendra v. Benoy	1149
Nellmoney v. Ganga Narain	427
Nellai Kumarul v. Marakathammal.	1062, 1137, 1146
Nelliappa v. Punnawanam	871
Negendra Nath v. Kawal Baisine	774
Nelliyappa v. Thangamma.	882, 883
Nelson v. Dahl	106
Nemichand v. Radha Ballabh	504
Nem Roy v. Nem Roy	597
Nerendra v. Dina	1150
Nepelbala v. Sittikanta.	66, 81
Neroda v. Bulanath	311
Newaz Khan v. Alam Kohan	595
Newton v. Liddiard	239
Nga Pure v. Michan	801
Nga Tingyi v. Nga Twe Aung	435
Nhanee v. Hureeram.	491, 542, 543
Nhiku v. Pattu	413
Niadri v. Kura	941
Niamai v. Nira	90
Niamat Ali v. Yad Ali	872

PAGE.

Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal. 434, 461, 462, 473, 481, 482, 487, 488, 1083
Niaz Ali v. Ahmad Din .. 272
Nidhamani v. Saroda Pershad. 248, 249
Niddha Lal v. Collector. 340, 341
Nigareddi v. Lakshman .. 324
Nihalchand v. Sasson .. 596
Nihal Devi v. Kishore Chand. 477, 616, 663, 664
Nihal Devi v. Shib Dial .. 335
Nihalkhan v. Hur Churn. 1043, 1133
Nihala v. Bhuti .. 100
Nihali v. Kanak Singh .. 937
Niladri v. Chaturbhuj .. 851
Nilkant v. Narayan. 284, 926
Nilakandan v. Padmanabha .. 64
Nilamani v. Radhamani. 892, 924
Nil Madhab v. Bishumber. 234, 235, 237, 240, 937
Nilmadhab v. Jotindra .. 909
Nilmoni v. Bakranath. 687, 701
Nilmoney v. Gunga Narain. 437, 633
Nilmoney v. Hingu Lall. 323, 327, 705
Nilmoni v. Soorendra .. 897
Nimaye v. Jagendro .. 825
Nimbalkar v. Jayavantrav .. 230
Ningawa v. Ramappa .. 247
Nirad Mohini v. Shibdas. 99, 688, 867
Niranjan v. Shiv Prasad .. 1038
Nirmala v. Deva Narayan .. 1031
Nirman v. Fateh Bahadur .. 998
Nirunjun v. Padaruth. 62, 63
Nirvanaya v. Niranaya. 28, 289, 294
Nisar v. Dhuniwant .. 933
Nisar v. Kewar .. 930
Nishi v. Ashutosh 345, 351, 801
Nistrani v. Makhanlal .. 353
Nitrapal Singh v. Jaipal Singh. 90, 105, 694, 696
Nitto Kissore (Sreemutty) v. Jogendra Nath. 336, 337, 339, 340
Nizamuddin v. Anandi Prasad.. 291
Nobin Chandra v. Krishna Barana. 459
Nobin Chandra v. Khedar Nath. 388, 394
Nobin Chunder v. Janardhan. 74, 75, 77
Noble v. Durell .. 97
Nochat v. Kallor Ali .. 425
Noferdoss v. Modhu Sundari .. 1066
Nogendra v. Benoy Kishna. 810, 828, 913, 1163
Nogendra Nath v. Rabindra Nath. 859
Nollatambi v. Mukunda .. 376
Nomasivaya v. Savagami .. 1058
Noring Das v. Rai Narain Das .. 380
Norman v. Thompson .. 580
Norton v. Freeker .. 494
Nowab Ray v. Bhuguthee .. 273
Nowbat Singh v. Lad Kooer. 111, 112
Nowlasee v. Lalloee .. 449
Nowrat v. Trimbuk .. 499
Nowrutton v. Baboo Bonree .. 458
Nritya Gopal v. Mani Chandra.. 853
Nufur v. Ram Koomar .. 1024
Nugender v. Raminee .. 1113
Nuho Gopal v. Amrit .. 340

PAGE.

Nullit v. Bagola .. 995
Nund Kishore v. Ram Tewary.. 1087
Nund Koomar v. Ruzeeoodeen. 365, 376
Nundlal v. Tapeedas .. 154
Nundram v. Chotoo .. 427
Nundram v. Kashee Paude .. 268
Nunko Lal v. Sohadra .. 283
Nunkoo Singh v. Purm Dhun Singh .. 222
Nunsingh v. Narain Das .. 437
Nur Baksh v. Rukum Singh .. 291
Nur Singh v. Bhuttan Lal .. 165
Nurbibi v. Mohran .. 283
Nuronath v. Goda Kolita .. 430
Nur Mahomed v. Kessumal .. 730
Nutbehari v. Nani Lal. 368, 371, 382

O

O. A. Khatubai v. Abu. 80, 82
Oatway Hertsler v. Oatway .. 845
Obala Kondama v. Kondasamy. 517, 1093, 1104
Obeliselti v. Atyam .. 443
Obseri v. Bawa Balmukandass .. 822
Obhoy Chunder v. Pearee Mohun. 448, 649
Ockford v. Barelli. 574, 575
Odhar Chandra v. Kirtibash .. 303
Official Receiver v. Chaiman Lal.. 471
Official Receiver v. Ramachandrappa .. 471
Official Assignee v. Ramchandra.. 471
Official Assignee v. Swornam .. 401
Official Liquidator v. Jamna Prasad. 526, 532
Ojoodhya v. Ramsarun .. 747
O'Keefe v. Casey .. 305
Olati v. Varadarajulu. 1026, 1089
Omar Hayat v. Devi Das .. 301
Om Prakash v. Moti Ram. 471, 546
Omrit Koomari v. Lukhee Narain. 961, 967, 972
Oodey Chand v. Dhunmonee .. 1096
Oodey Singh v. Phool Chand. 1039, 1062, 1108
Oolagappa v. Arbuthnot .. 695
Oomo Dutt v. Hunooman. 658, 660
Oomra Singh v. Mahtab Koonwar. 179
Ooman Dutt v. Kunhia Singh. 266, 267
Ooman Dutt v. Kunhia. 269, 270
Oorhya v. Rajoo .. 948
Oriental Life Assurance Co. v. Vanteddummal .. 725
Oseri v. Bawa Balmukundass .. 879
Oseri v. Bawa .. 873

P

Packiriswami v. Doraswamy ... 601
Padala v. Madavarapa. 497, 613, 614
Padam v. Suraj ... 89
Padam Kumari v. Suraj Kumari. 124
Padam Lal v. Tek Singh ... 794
Padam Singh v. Subransai. 609, 610
Padarath v. Ram Narain ... 1105

PAGE.

Padam Lal v. Teksingh ... 791
Padma Krishna v. Nagamani ... 295
Padma Kumari v. Court of Wards. 69, 208, 264, 265, 977, 1076, 1184
Padmamani v. Jagadamba. 605, 606, 614, 640
Padamraj v. Gopi Kison .. 487
Padmarav v. Fakira. 236, 237, 238
Padorjmar v. Ramrav. 203, 246
Pagalia v. Vettor ... 611
Padmanand v. Hayes ... 743
Pahaladi v. Luchmunbutt. 637, 638
Pahalwan v. Janki .. 495
Pahalwan v. Jiwan. 472, 1064
Paigi v. Sheonarain. 145, 146, 147, 149
Pakhar Singh v. Dulari ... 577
Pakiriswami v. Doraswami ... 398
Palani v. Kuppuswami ... 152
Palani v. Masakonan. 414, 421, 614, 855, 856, 857
Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkata. 590, 594, 615, 695
Palaniappa v. Daivasikhamony. 101, 847
Palaniappa v. Official Assignee. 484
Palaniappa v. Sreenath. 382, 383, 394 395, 397 453, 839, 850, 857
Palaniswamy v. Vanjiammal ... 191
Palchur v. Palchur ... 771
Palku v. Budh Singh ... 311
Pallamraju v. Bapanna ... 895
Pallard v. Rouse ... 283
Pallayya v. Ramavadhanulu. 466, 824
Palukkavandy v. Periakaruppa ... 450
Pammayah v. Kandosamy ... 847
Panachand v. Manohar Lal. 384, 1057, 1054
Panamchand v. Narayan ... 1059
Pancha v. Bindeswari ... 101
Panchanun v. Shib Chunder ... 612
Panchappa v. Sanganbasawa. 333, 937
Panchapkesa v. Kanaka. 324, 333, 926
Panchhanund v. Lalshan ... 1130
Panchabala v. Jotindranath. 900, 901
Panchkuari v. Mode Lal ... 859
Panchakshari v. Venkatratnam. 848
Pankhabati v. Nomihal Singh ... 1090
Pandara v. Karutha ... 855
Pandaya v. Pali. 321, 929
Pandewa v. Venkatesh ... 669
Pandharnath v. Gobind. 1028, 1030, 1170, 1172
Pandu v. Abdul Kadar ... 1090
Pandu v. Goma. 415, 420
Pandurang v. Bhaskar. 413, 423, 535, 604, 654, 657
Pandurang v. Vinayak ... 763
Pangal Ram v. Jaimangal ... 572
Pannalal v. Bamasundari ... 1061
Pannappa v. Pappuviengar ... 1197
Panon v. Goma ... 604
Panyam v. Ramalakshmama ... 208
Papamma v. Appa Ram. 214, 215
Papamma v. Appa Rao. 247, 251, 262, 263

PAGE

Paparayudu v. Rattamma ... 1102
Papaya v. Ramana ... 853
Parasanna Venkatachella v. Collector ... 866
Parash Ram v. Sobba Ram ... 601
Parasuramayya v. Venkata ... 243
Paras Ram v. Gian Chand ... 449
Paras Ram v. Sherjit ... 411
Parasram v. Lakshmichand ... 360
Parat v. Mehta ... 971
Parbati v. Aimuddia. 614, 617, 638, 639
Parbati v. Baijnath ... 1031
Parbati v. Chandragopal ... 713
Parbati v. Chandrapal. 90, 101, 941
Parbati v. Jagadish Chunder. 74, 75, 101, 380, 693, 711, 718, 719
Parbati v. Maharaj. 615, 663, 664, 679
Parbati v. Mahadeo. 320, 329, 330, 331
Parbati v. Nanihal Singh. 590, 593, 595
Parbati v. Ram Prasad. 738, 938, 1139
Parbati v. Ram Barun. 817, 818
Parbati v. Ram Prasad. 1027, 1139
Parbat Dasi v. Baikunth Nath. 435, 436 437, 438, 631
Parbhu v. Jwala ... 679
Parbhu Dayal v. Latta Das ... 988
Parbhu Lal v. Mylne. 246, 1051
Parbutty v. Mudho ... 98
Parbutty v. Purno Chander ... 104
Parbutty v. Sudabut ... 427
Pareman Dass v. Bhattu. 490, 533, 540, 541, 542
Pareshmani v. Dinanath. 669, 688, 903 905, 914
Paresram v. Murari 413
Parichat v. Zalim Singh ... 321
Parji v. Mangla ... 1204
Parker v. Telgate ... 770
Parmadube v. Mahadeo ... 312
Parmanand v. Krishna ... 635
Parmappa v. Shidappa. 945, 1154, 1156
Parmanand v. Sheocharan. 223, 260
Parmarandas v. Parbhudas ... 976
Parmesari v. Girdhari ... 883
Parmeshar v. Anardan ... 728
Parmeshar v. Bisheshar ... 189
Parmeshri v. Mhd. Syed ... 92
Parmeshwar v. Gobind. 444, 448, 449, 648, 649, 650
Parmeshwar v. Rai Krishan ... 512
Parmessur v. Hunooman Chowdhree. 268, 270
Parnashashi v. Kalidhan. 380, 381
Parot v. Mauta ... 974
Parreelal v. Bukhoreelal ... 427
Parsani v. Ghareeb Dass ... 790
Parshotam v. Venichand. 264, 265
Parshotam v. Keshavlal. 1033, 1135
Parshotam Rao v. Janki ... 376
Parson v. Somli. 376, 891, 1149, 1151
Parsotam v. Dat Gir. 852, 853, 854, 855
Parsotam v. Jagannath. 594, 663, 664
Parsotam v. Janki Bai ... 402
Partab v. Tilakdharee ... 375
Partab Singh v. Bohra ... 537
Partab Singh v. Dalip Singh ... 660
Partapa v. Altar Singh ... 1102

	PAGE
Parvathi v. Ganpat Rao ...	322
Parvathi v. Thirumalai. 612, 719, 930, 932, 933, 934,	974
Parvathi v. Saminathan ...	246
Parvati v. Ainuddeen ...	613
Parvati Dayabahai. 1080,	1082
Parvati v. Govind. 1087,	1093
Parvati v. Kisansingh ...	334
Parvati v. Shrinivas. 332, 341,	346
Parvati v. Tarwadi ...	327
Parvati Bai v. Catru. 330, 334, 347,	349
Parvati Bai v. Vishvanath ...	233
Parvatibayamma v. Ram Krishna Ram. 243, 244, 245,	263
Patel Vandravan v. Patel Manilal. 93,	96
Pateshuri v. Bhagwati ...	894
Patesh Singh v. Thakur Rukmini.	1091
Pathumma v. Raman 85,	408
Patnimal v. Manohar Lal ...	935
Patra v. Srinivas ...	465
Pathya v. Venkamma ...	275
Pauliem v. Pauliem. 362, 375,	379
Paxton v. Courtenay ...	98
Pearse v. Pattinson ...	814
Peary v. Narendra. 847, 848,	854
Peary Lal v. Chandi Charan. 390,	541
Peari Lal v. Khachar ...	549
Peary Lal v. Sunder ...	557
Peary Mohan Mukherjee v. Monohar. 865, 870,	871
Pedamuthu v. Appu. 902,	903
Pedda v. Bangari. 714,	718
Pedda Amani v. Zemindar of Marungapuri ...	161
Peda Venkanna v. Shrinivasa ...	553
Peddamuthlaty v. Timma Reddy. 247,	263
Peddayya v. Ramalingam. 405,	406
Peel v. Dharee. 836,	837
Pekram v. Somanchi ...	756
Pelham v. Gregory ...	726
Pem Singh v. Partab Singh ...	557
Penhall v. Elwin ...	575
Penta v. Mudiya. 640,	641
Pereireswell in Sefton v. Hopwood.	770
Perbai v. Mohimal ...	802
Peria Karuppai v. Arunachellam..	370
Periasami v. Periasami. 371, 707, 719,	935
Periasanu v. Seetharama ...	548
Periya v. Aiyappa ...	730
Perkash v. Rameshwar ...	705
Pershad v. Gangamonee ...	427
Persad v. Raj Koover ...	388
Persab v. Guruppa ...	760
Pershad Singh v. Mahearee ...	929
Pertab Narain v. Subhao ...	763
Persee v. Persee ...	573
Perumal v. Ramalinga ...	464
Perumal v. Udagiri ...	691
Peterson v. Shave ...	283
Pethasari v. Sendasami. 1133,	1137
Pethepermal v. Muniandy ...	731
Pethee Lal v. Dayamind ...	850
Pettachi v. Sangili. 521,	522
Petumdoss v. Ramdhone ...	1064
Pewand Bai v. Chetan Lal ...	730

	PAGE
Phaggan v. Buta ...	946
Phani Singh v. Nawab Singh ...	410
Pharma Das v. Amulyadhan ...	567
Phatambi v. Haji Musa. ...	870
Pheku v. Gena Lal ...	1030
Phillips v. Homfray. 550,	1111
Phoolbas v. Lalla Jogeshur. 620,	665
Phool Chand v. Rughoobuns ...	1050
Phoolcoer v. Dobee Pershad ...	1001
Phool Koer v. Devi Pershad ...	394
Phukar Singh v. Ramjit Singh ...	1129
Phulbati v. Farman ...	1069
Phul Chand v. Gokerdhan ...	220
Phul Chand v. Jodha. 1059,	1060
Phulchand v. Man Singh ...	453
Phuljihari Koer (In re) ...	592
Phul Kuari (In re) ...	590
Phundan v. Srimatarya ...	816
Phundum v. Arya ...	818
Phundo v. Jangi Nath. 222, 224,	225
Piare v. Ghasi Ram ...	452
Piare Lal v. Ramchand ...	415
Piari Lal v. Mait Mills ...	448
Pichai v. Ranganadham ...	895
Pichappa v. Chokalingam. 478, 481,	488
Pichumayyan v. Subbayyan ...	221
Pictum v. Jaykishan ...	757
Piers v. Piers. 151, 152,	154
Pilu v. Babaji ...	1080
Pindiprolu v. Pindiprolu. 1087,	1088
Piroj Shah v. Mani Bhai. 643, 684, 691, 699,	712
Pirsab v. Gurappa. 232,	238
Pirthee Lal v. Doorgalal ...	82
Pirthi Singh v. Bhola ...	98
Prithee Singh v. Sheo Soondaree...	75
Pirthee Singh v. Raj Kower. 329, 330, 334, 339, 349,	351
Pirthee Singh (Raja) v. Rani Raj Kooer ...	332
Pirthisingh v. Manchand ...	551
Pitambar v. Jogjiran ...	539
Pitambar v. Nishi Kant ...	77
Pirthu Rai v. Jawahir ...	641
Pirthi Pal v. Jawahir Singh. 448,	648
Pitamsingh v. Ujagar Singh. 376, 444,	454
Pitchai Pal v. Jorahia. 409,	413
Pitts (In re) ...	909
Plukar v. Ranjit ...	1024
Pokhan Dusadh v. Mt. Manoa. 950,	1185
Pohulmal v. Noroomal ...	130
Pokhpal Singh v. Chhidu Singh ...	537
Polepeddi v. Polepeddi ...	1097
Poli v. Narotum ...	1149
Pondara v. Karutha ...	854
Pollaya v. Ramavadhanulu ...	745
Pollard v. Rouse ...	307
Ponnappa v. Pappuvayyangar ...	747
Ponnumbala v. Periyanan. 850, 853,	858, 859
Ponnusami v. Dorasami ...	66
Pool v. Secretary of State ...	598
Poolchund v. Raghoobuns ...	1102
Poona v. Nirpal Singh ...	271
Pooran Mul v. Toolsi ...	119
Poorendra v. Hemangini. 338, 607,	608, 609

	PAGE
Poorga Pershad v. Sheo Prasad ...	739
Popat v. Damodar ...	1110
Poorun v. Kashessuree ...	834
Protal and Laub (In re) ...	798
Porter (In re) ...	754
Porter v. Lopes ...	671
Postlewaite v. Freeland ...	106
Poteswari v. Rudra Narain ...	693
Pottaravy v. Audimulu. 617,	618
Powell v. Kempton Park Race Course ...	1204
Prafulla v. Bhabani ...	1064
Prafulla v. Bhat ...	1068
Prafulla v. Birendra ...	1064
Prafulla v. Jagendra ...	1170
Prafulla v. Jagendranath ...	824
Prafulla v. Ram Prasad ...	825
Prag Das v. Girdhar Das ...	316
Prag Lal v. Rameshwar. 415,	417
Pragnarain v. Heeralal ...	624
Prakashchandra v. Subodh Chandra. 820, 821,	846
Pralhed v. Mahadeo ...	73
Pramada v. Poorna. 847,	852
Pramade v. Krishna ...	736
Pramatha Nath v. Pradhyamna. 647, 806, 835, 836, 837, 846, 850,	874
Pramath Nath v. Suprakash ...	744
Pramila v. Chandra Shekhar ...	940
Pran Shunkar v. Pran Koonwar ...	904
Pran Vullabh v. Dookitu ...	252
Pramatha v. Bhuban ...	1101
Pranchandra v. Karunamay ...	290
Prandhur v. Ramchander ...	1155
Prangopal v. Chandra Mohan ...	193
Pranjivan v. Bhikhi ...	938
Pranjiwan Das v. Devkuarbai ...	1427
Pranjivan Das v. Ichharam. 649, 661,	676
Pranjivan v. Reva. 428, 437, 633, 674, 675, 678, 777,	941
Pranjivan Das v. Dankuvarbai ... 1030,	1032
Pranjivan Das v. Deo Kuar ...	1032
Pran Kishen v. Mathoora ...	638
Prakishen v. Bhugwattee ...	1025
Pran Kissen v. Mt. Bhagwatee ...	1171
Prankissen v. Noyanmoney. 1025, 1137,	1172
Prankisto v. Bhageerutee. 334, 345, 428,	434
Prankoonwar v. Deokoonwar. 322,	328
Prannath v. Kashi ...	633
Prannath v. Kashinath. 427,	437
Pran Krish v. Surathchandra ...	1090
Prannath v. Surit. 1006, 1008,	1012
Pran Nath v. Surrut Chunder. 1004,	1015
Prasanna Deb v. Bengal Duars Bank 867,	869
Prasad Das v. Jagannath ...	822
Prasanna Kumar ...	728
Prasanna v. Surat Soshi ...	1161
Prasara v. Rangaraja. 188, 190,	191
Pratab Bahadur v. Tilukdharee ...	569
Pratapchunder v. Jagadish ...	704
Pratab Chandra v. Brojonath. 253, 254, 258, 602,	876
Pratap Bahadur v. Chitpal Singh.	458
Pratap v. Joy monee ...	1071
Pratapmull v. Dhanabati ...	609
Pratap Narain v. Triloknath ...	1116
Pratap Singh v. Agar Singh. 183, 209, 210, 211,	212
Pratab Singh v. Bohra ...	555
Pratap Singh v. Dalip Singh ...	609
Pratap Singh v. Jagadesh Chunder ...	712
Pratab Singh v. Keshav Lal ...	676
Pratapa v. Kishoro ...	187
Pratapgavri v. Mul Shankuer ...	993
Pratab Singh v. Agarsingji ...	261
Prattipati (In re). 1131,	1138
Prawn Kissen v. Ram Sundaree ...	631
Prayad v. Kriparam ...	808
Prayag v. Kasi ...	549
Prayag Narain v. Ajudhia ...	392
Prayal v. Kriparam ...	840
Preag Singh v. Ajoodya ...	260
Preaj Narain v. Ajodhya Pershad.	1063
Premchand v. Hulaschand ...	566
Premdai Koer v. Jagu ...	652
Prem Devi v. Shambhu ...	240
Premkumar v. Bhalapage. 145,	149
Prem Kuar v. Banarasi Das. 279, 280,	281
Premkuvar v. Bhika ...	319
Prem Lal v. Bhag Chand ...	1039
Premmoyi v. Preonath. 1104, 1107, 1108,	1112
Prem Nath v. Hari Ram. 806,	824
Premsukh v. Ram Bhujawan ...	394
Prithilal v. Doorgalal. 305, 415, 417, 442,	549
Premo v. Sheo Nath. 822,	823
Prithee Singh v. Sheo Sundaree...	101
Prit Koer v. Mahadeo. 363,	427
Promoda Kumar v. Madan Mohan.	730
Promotho v. Nagendra ...	338
Promotho v. Nagendra Bala. 339,	348
Promotha Nath v. Anukul Chandra.	837
Promode Kumar v. Kali Mohen...	436
Prosonna Kumar v. Sri Kantha ...	263
Prosonno v. Golab. 847, 850, 852,	857
Prosonno Kumar v. Zaroda Prosonno ...	853
Prosunno Kumari v. Gulabchand. 850,	851
Prosunno v. Koonjo ...	873
Prosunno v. Saroda ...	857
Prosunno v. Umedur ...	1110
Provabati v. Sarojini ...	744
Public Prosecutor v. Kannammal...	97
Pudai Ram v. Baijnath ...	535
Puddo Kumari v. Jugut Kishore...69,	253
Puddolabh v. Ram Gopal ...	882
Puddum Mookhee v. Rayee Monee.	327
Pudiava v. Pavanasa ...	993
Pudma Kumari v. Court of Wards.	256
Pudmavati v. Doolar Singh ...	78
Pudo Monee v. Dwarka Nath ...	1133
Pudum Singh v. Oodey Singh. 179, 182, 192, 194, 236, 239, 240, 242,	654
Pujari v. Goundan ...	621
Pujari v. Subramania ...	833
Pulin Chandra v. Bholai Monolal.	1072
Pulliah v. Varadarajulu. 454,	455

	PAGE
Pulukkavandey v. Periyakaruppa.	470, 474
Puncha v. Bindeshri ...	869
Punchakshara v. Pattammal ...	337
Punchanun Mullick v. Shib Chunder Mullick ...	636
Punchanund v. Lolshan ...	1024
Punchanun v. Shibchunder ...	617
Punchoomoney v. Trailokya ...	794
Punjab Singh v. Ramatar ...	550
Punkhtali v. Nani Lal ...	495
Punna v. Radha Kissen ...	401
Punna Bibe v. Radha Kissen.	347, 354
Punyabrata v. Monmoha ...	1194
Puran v. Beja ...	97
Puran v. Darson ...	832
Purandar v. Tulsa ...	769
Puranlalji v. Rao Bihari ...	758
Puran Das v. Duli Chand ...	1078
Purandas v. Jai Narayan ...	1050
Puran Das v. Shiromani ...	821
Puran Dei v. Jai Narain.	386, 392, 393, 1052, 1054, 1057
Puranlalji v. Rao Behari Lal ...	834
Purappavanalingam v. Nullasivan.	446
Pura Sundara v. Biraj Napani ...	1135
Puravia v. Poonochi.	821, 822
Purbar v. Kachar ...	549
Purmessur v. Hunooman ...	267
Purnachandra v. Gopal.	806, 994
Purna Chandra v. Sarojini.	607, 608, 609, 610
Purna Sashi v. Kalidhan.	581, 900, 901, 902
Puro v. Sulakhan.	983, 984
Purshotam v. Vasudev.	255, 256, 375
Purshotam v. Purshotam.	9, 112, 113
Purshottam v. Atmaram.	612, 615, 619, 620, 640
Purushottam v. Brindavana ...	279
Purushottam v. Rakhmabai.	231, 232
Purushottam v. Ramrao ...	534
Pushottam v. Sheo Shanker ...	532
Purushotam Das v. Mani.	114, 139, 140, 149
Pushpavati v. Raghaviah.	348, 349
Putlabai v. Mahadu.	214, 280
Puttulal v. Parbati.	39, 40, 70, 73, 224, 225
Puttoolal v. Raghubir.	417, 420, 453

Q

Q. v. Bahadur Singh ...	119
Q. v. Bezonji ...	280
Q. v. Marimuthu ...	145
Q. v. Ram Dutt ...	105
Qomrao v. Mankoonwer ...	164

R

R. D. Cromartie v. Radha Damodar ...	851
R. v. Clarke ...	283
R. v. Karson ...	97, 141
R. v. Lady Portington ...	819
R. v. Marimutee ...	142
R. v. Nash ...	282
R. v. Saddlers' Co. ...	316
R. v. Sambhu ...	141
Rabutti v. Shibchunder ...	1033
Rachava v. Kalingappa.	944, 981, 999
Rachandra v. Kondayya ...	554
Radha v. Amar ...	940
Rachli Bai v. Hirbai ...	172
Radha v. Bachhaman ...	610
Radha v. Durga ...	1075
Radha v. Kanhaiya ...	1064
Radha v. Kour ...	1096
Radha v. Narasimha ...	200
Radha v. Nauratan ...	1061
Radha v. Raj Kuar ...	930
Radha Bai v. Anant Rao ...	707
Radhabai v. Nanarav ...	376
Radha Churn v. Kripa Sindhu.	433, 590, 614
Radha Kanta v. Bipro Das.	613, 614
Radhakant v. Nazina.	363, 364
Radha Kishan v. Harikishan.	607, 608, 609
Radha Kishen v. Bakhtowar ...	1100
Radha Kishen v. Raja Ram ...	940
Radha Kishen v. Ram Mundul ...	1070
Radha Kishen v. Jug Shahu.	383, 571, 572
Radha Kissen v. Nauratan ...	1177
Radha Krishna v. Bisheshwar.	731, 1129, 1135
Radha Mohun v. Hardar Bibi ...	39, 40
Radha Mohun v. Jadoomonee ...	833
Radha Mohun v. Rama Dass ...	1102
Radha Pershad v. Talook Raj Kuar.	396, 397
Radha Prasad v. Ranee Moni ...	254
Radha Ram v. Amar Chand ...	570
Radhabai v. Chinnaji.	873, 882
Radhabai v. Ganesh ...	232
Radhabai v. Ragho ...	329
Radham v. Phoolkoomaree ...	427
Radhamadhab v. Radhabullab ...	242
Radha Madhab v. Rajendra Prasad .	198, 1057
Radhamani v. Alakajeswari ...	1033
Radhanath v. Tarucknath.	643, 699
Radharam v. Ganguram ...	417
Radharam v. Kushi Ram ...	1046
Radha Syam v. Joy Kaw ...	1075
Radi v. Gobinda ...	932
Radhi Bai v. Vessanamal ...	286
Radhi Lal v. Balwant Ram ...	913
Radhika v. Dharma.	428, 435
Radhika v. Nilamani ...	935
Ragavendra v. Jayaram.	135, 136, 225
Ragendra v. Raghonath ...	928
Raghava v. Narayanasami ...	758
Raghavalu v. Kausalya ...	1130
Raghoba v. Ziboo ...	447
Raghoji v. Laxman ...	686
Raghoji Rao v. Lakshman Rao ...	380
Raghoo v. Kassy ...	740
Raghoonath v. Luckhun ...	604
Raghubans v. Bhagwant ...	350
Raghubanund v. Sadhu Churn.	259, 630, 631

	PAGE
Raghubar v. Akhtar	461
Raghubar v. Bhakara	1101
Raghubar Dayal v. Ramdulare.	628, 630, 929
Raghubar Dayal v. Rani Dulare	87
Raghubir Singh v. Moti.	620, 645, 675 626
Raghunand v. Bunnker	626
Raghunadha v. Brozo.	188, 189, 255, 330
Raghunandan v. Mahabir.	591, 664
Raghunandan v. Mahadeo	863
Raghunandan v. Parmeshwar.	562
Raghunandan v. Sheo Nandan	659
Raghunath v. Bank of Bombay.	288, 341, 484, 485, 487, 498
Raghunandhan v. Harmosji	480
Raghunath v. Basudeo	551
Raghunatha v. Damodra.	130, 467
Raghunath v. Gobind.	417, 467, 831
Raghunath v. Kansalya	1086
Raghunath v. Laxmibai.	936, 1204
Raghunath v. Kashinath	449
Raghunath v. Mahadev	368
Raghunath v. Munnan.	950, 972, 983
Raghunath v. Ruheem	395
Raghunath v. Sri Naraim.	450, 572
Raghunatha v. Aravamuthu	730
Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay.	289, 295, 454, 482, 487
Raghunathji v. Shah Lal.	806, 846
Raghupati v. Tirumalai	1100
Raghuraj Singh v. Debi Singh	710
Raghuvendra v. Bhima	895
Rahi v. Govind.	70, 97, 128, 141, 164, 321, 322, 930, 933, 940
Rahimat Bai v. Hirbai.	57, 64, 99, 101, 104
Rahmat v. Salamat	410
Rahmed Bibi v. Rokeya Bibi	143
Rai Shadi Lal v. Lal Bahadur	382
Raja v. Subbaraya	255
Rai Bishen Chand v. Asmaida	775
Raj Bajrang v. Rameshwar	571
Rai Manickchand v. Madho Ram	99
Rai Upendra v. Hemchandra	748
Raiamoyee v. Troylukho	784
Raichurn v. Suroopchunder	1046
Rai Kumar v. Rani Maharaj	729
Railukhee v. Gokool	305
Rains v. Buxton	651
Raisahm v. Pranishen	903
Raj Babalu v. Shyama	913
Raj Bahadur v. Bishen Dayal	82
Rajbans v. Karya	836
Rajchunder v. Buboram	1059
Raj Chander v. Dhunmunee	1070
Raj Chander v. Gokul Chand.	78, 1075
Raj Chunder v. Isser Chunder	890
Raj Chandra v. Sheshoo.	385, 392, 1053
Raj Coomar Lall v. Bissessar.	57, 58, 175, 223
Raj Coomaree v. Gopal Chander	646
Raj Coomaree v. Nobocoomar	249
Raj Kishen Singh v. Ramjoy	697
Raj Kishore v. Gobind.	69, 358, 718, 1006, 1013, 1073
Raj Kishore v. Madan Gopal.	376, 557
Raj Lukhee v. Gokul.	1048, 1056, 1059, 1075, 1095, 1097
Raj Lukhee Debea v. Gokoolchunder	384
Raj Narain v. Heeralal	621
Raj Narain v. Universal Life Assurance Co.	247
Raj Radha Kishen v. Bishweshar	730
Raj Roop Singh v. Buldeo Singh.	552, 553
Raja v. Bhimrao	994
Raja v. Krishna Bhat	99
Raja v. Subharaya.	222, 261, 622
Raja Bahadur v. Indarpal	1130
Raja Bullubh v. Oomeshchunder	1076
Raja Chelikani v. Raja Chelikani	896
Raja Dei v. Umed Singh.	1071, 1080, 1100
Raja Gopal v. Nathu.	236, 247
Raja Gopal v. Veeraperumal	551
Raja Lakshmi v. Katyayan	1115
Rajalakshmi v. Suryanarayan	691
Raja Nugandur v. Raghunath	105
Raja of Deo v. Abdullah	728
Raja of Kalahasti v. Achigadulu.	708, 713
Raja Madhusudan v. Khestabasi.	683, 701
Raja of Ramnad v. Sundara.	1041, 1134
Raja Ram v. Bhata	840
Raja Ram v. Gopal.	504, 505
Raja Ram v. Tevary	747
Rajaram v. Luxmi	845
Raja Ram v. Luchmun.	424, 537
Raja Ratan Singh v. Ram Beni Bee	337
Raja Venkata v. Raja Suranemi	404
Raja Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah.	868, 869
Rajab Ali v. Wajir Ali	293
Rajabala v. Shyama	912
Rajagopala v. Raman	483
Rajagopalam v. Kasivasi	867
Rajagopalachariar v. Sami Reddi.	221, 1063, 1078
Rajah Venkata v. Rajah Surenani.	951
Rajah Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah.	99, 808, 852, 864, 867, 890
Rajalakshmi v. Suryanarayana.	92, 93
Rajambal v. Shanmuga	219
Rajamma v. Ramkrishnayya.	372, 380
Rajammal v. Authiammal.	754, 756, 759, 760
Rajamoyee v. Troylukho.	723, 788, 816
Rajan v. Basuva	247
Rajangam v. Rajangam	623
Rajaninath v. Nitalchandra	931
Rajani v. Nitaichandra.	37, 100
Rajani Kanta v. Abinash Chandra.	289
Rajanikant v. Sajani Sundari	337
Rajani Kant v. Sajani Bundain	326
Rajappa v. Gangappa.	961, 966
Rajaram v. Ganesh.	647, 692, 780, 867, 868
Rajarav v. Nanarav	342
Rajarathnasami v. Anji.	663, 664
Raje Vyankatarav v. Jayavantrao.	126 230
Rajendar v. Ramchunder	644
Rajender v. Pulto Soondry	340

	PAGE
Rajender v. Shamchand.	643, 689, 809
Rajendra v. Abdul Hakim ...	539
Rajendra v. Brojendra.	612, 661, 836
Rajendra v. Jogendra.	761, 762
Rajendra v. Raghubans.	900, 907
Rajendra v. Raj Coomari.	814, 816
Rajendra v. Satischandra ...	699
Rajendra Nath v. Peary Mohan.	321, 391 1044, 1062
Rajendra Prasad v. Gopal Prasad.	58, 192, 193, 196, 198, 223, 224, 225
Rajendro v. Saroda Soonduree.	166, 167, 184, 185
Rajendro Nath v. Jogendranath.	242, 243, 244
Rajeppa v. Gangappa ...	970
Rajeshwar v. Gopeshwar.	841, 845, 856, 867, 868, 869
Rajeshwar v. Sundara ...	351
Rajeswara v. Virapratapali ...	710
Rajeswari v. Subramama ...	834
Rajkishen (Raja) v. Ramjog ...	92
Rajkishen Singh v. Ramjoy.	692, 700, 703, 707
Rajgopalam v. Kasivasi ...	866
Raj Kishan v. Gobind ...	1005
Raj Krishna v. Bepin ...	838
Raj Kumar v. Janki ...	693
Rajkumar v. Mirza ...	297
Rajkumar Nohodeh v. Birchandra.	120, 1041
Rajlakshmi v. Katyayani ...	1117
Rajnikanta v. Jaga Mohan ...	366
Rajni Kanta v. Abinashchandra.	288
Rajomoyee v. Tooylukho.	739, 810
Rajpali v. Sarju Bai.	571, 1184, 1185
Raju v. Ammani.	72, 1025, 1157
Raju v. Nagammal ...	232
Rajunder v. Bijoy.	574, 576, 577, 578, 582, 644
Rajunder v. Shamchand ...	812
Rajwant Prasad v. Ram Ratan ...	316
Rakhaldas v. Indubala.	415, 423
Rakhmabai v. Joterao ...	620
Rakhmabai v. Keshav ...	1122
Rakmabai v. Radhabai.	70, 180, 209, 670
Rakmabai v. Tukaram.	944, 949
Ralla v. Manglam ...	311
Ralla Ram v. Atmaram ...	547
Ralla Ram v. Malawa Ram ...	888
Ram v. Basudeo ...	942
Ram v. Bishen ...	946
Ram v. Lachman ...	492
Ram v. Loorindas ...	912
Ram Autar v. Mumtaz Ali.	316, 317
Ram Autar Singh v. Chowdhuri Nursingh ...	283
Ram Bansee v. Soobh Koonwar ...	117
Ram Baran v. Kamla Prasad.	955, 956, 957, 972
Ram Bahadur v. Mahant Ganesh.	575
Ram Baran v. Rajwanti ...	956
Rambhadra v. Virbhadra ...	448
Ram Bhal v. Lakshman ...	255
Ram Bigawan v. Nathu Ram ...	512
Ram Bhujawan v. Nathu Ram ...	383
Ram Bijai v. Jagat Pal ...	168
Ram Bilas v. Lal Bahadur ...	101
Ram Brahma v. Kedarnath ...	874
Ram Bromo v. Kaminee ...	78
Ram Bunse v. Soobh Koonwaree.	276, 283
Ramchandra v. Atmaram ...	640
Ramchandra v. Maharaja Birendra.	277
Ram Chandra v. Ram Chandra.	1023, 1122
Ram Chandra v. Ram Krishna ...	837
Ram Chandra v. Sagunabai.	338, 339
Ramchandra v. Damodhara ...	413
Ramcharan v. Bhagwan Das ...	491
Ram Charan v. Rakhol ...	844
Ram Charan v. Van Haltaru ...	503
Ram Chander v. Brojonath ...	301
Ram Chunder v. Ganga Gobind.	386, 392, 1054
Ram Churn v. Protap ...	883
Ramchurn v. Jussoda ...	344
Ram Coomar v. Jogender.	810, 826
Ram Das v. Baldeodasji ...	987
Ram Das v. Braja Behari ...	492
Ram Das v. Chabildas.	584, 644
Ram Das v. Chandra Dassia.	47, 69, 74 76
Ram Das v. Vria Behari ...	502
Ram Dayal v. Ajudhia ...	535
Ram Dyal v. Magnee.	962, 964
Ram Dayal v. Maynee ...	1013
Ram Dayal v. Mithoo Lal ...	1064
Ram Dayal v. Moti Ram ...	454
Ram Dayal v. Sumar Singh ...	1039
Ram Dayal v. Uttim Matho ...	640
Ram Dei v. Suraj Baksh ...	535
Ram Dei Kunwar v. Abu Jafar ...	1083 1122, 1123
Ram Deo v. Gopal Koeri ...	525
Ram Deo v. Gopi ...	556
Ram Deo v. Ram Rathi ...	555
Ramdhan v. Parbati ...	850
Ram Dhan v. Prayag ...	827
Ram Dhan v. Ramji Das.	449, 486
Ram Gopal v. Apina Kunwar ...	771
Ram Gopal v. Dhirendra ...	450
Ram Gopal v. Luchminarain.	472, 477
Ram Gopal v. Narain Chandra.	1131, 1159, 1162
Ram Gopal v. Sib Kissen ...	818
Ram Gopal v. Tulsi Ram ...	574
Ram Ghulam v. Kailash ...	546
Ram Ghulam v. Nand Kishore ...	554
Ram Ghulam v. Ram Behari.	363, 428
Ram Harakh v. Ishar Dat ...	101
Ram Haree v. Trihee Ram ...	619
Ram Huree v. Vrihee Ram ...	675
Ramjagadamba v. Wazir Narain.	704
Ram Jesh v. Chand Mandal ...	130
Ram Joshi v. Lakshmi Bai ...	605
Ram Jowaya v. Amrit Ram ...	654
Ram Kali v. Gopal Dei.	1148, 1149, 1150 1172
Ram Kali v. Kedarnath ...	1122
Ram Kali v. Jamna ...	920
Ram Kanai v. Narayan ...	825
Ram Kanye v. Collychurn ...	505
Ram Kewal Singh v. Ram Kishore Das.	386, 393, 1054, 1056

	PAGE
Ram Khalawan v. Ram Naresh ...	383
Ram Kisan v. Ganga Ram ...	457
Ram Kirpal v. Rupkuari ...	1175
Ram Kishan v. Chedi Rai. 494, 544,	1058
Ram Kisan v. Damodhar ...	423
Ram Kishan v. Medh Singh ...	937
Ram Kishen v. Medle Singh. 130,	937
Ram Kishore v. Bhubunmoyee ...	565
Ram Kishore v. Jainarayan. 219,	424, 497
Ram Koowar v. Ummur. 903,	904
Ram Kore v. Jamnadas ...	283
Ramkrishna v. Gaundan ...	1140
Ram Krishna v. Hari ...	240
Ram Krishna v. Kausalya. 1044,	1064, 1066.
Ram Krishna v. Padama Charan...	847
Ram Krisha v. Ramchand ...	480
Ram Krishna v. Ratanchand. 452,	458
Ram Krishna v. Sham Rao. 201,	210
Ram Krishna v. Subbanna. 136, 274,	275
Ram Krishna v. Tripurabai. 255,	1123, 1158
Ram Krishna v. Vinoyak ...	519
Ram Kuber v. Ram Dasi. 346, 444,	490
Ram Kumar v. Jogender ...	865
Ram Kumari (In re). 52, 57, 115,	140, 143, 145
Ram Kuwar v. Bhagawanta ...	330
Ramkuwar v. Ram Dai. 327, 341,	342
Ramkuari v. Trikiram ...	678
Ram Lakshmi v. Sivanath ...	99
Ram Kumari v. Jai Narayan ...	405
Ram Lal v. Bidhu Mukhi ...	331
Ram Lal v. Debi Dat.	631, 632
Ram Lal v. Lakhmichand. 289, 452,	468, 473, 474, 475, 481, 482, 484, 485, 488
Ram Lal v. Kanailal ...	775
Ram Lal v. Kunwar Rajpal ...	1056
Ram Lal v. Secretary of State ...	791
Ram Lochun v. Rughoobur ...	661
Ram Mohanlal v. Mulchand ...	614
Ram Nundan v. Janki Koer. 391, 707,	716, 721
Ram Narain v. Mhd. Hadi. 732,	1043
Ram Narain v. Makhana ...	595
Ram Narain v. Peary ...	1135
Ram Narain v. Partun Singh. 365,	891
Ram Narain v. Pan Kuar. 673,	674
Ram Narain v. Ramson ...	833
Ram Narayan v. Ram Saran ...	686
Ram Naresh v. Sadhu Saran ...	584
Ram Nath v. Bulagi ...	559
Ram Nath v. Chiranji Lal.	477, 481, 483, 487
Ram Nath v. Durga. 69, 913, 914,	1166
Ram Nath v. Goturam. 448, 649,	652
Ram Nath v. Kusum Kumari. 435,	516
Ram Nath v. Ram Harakh ...	417
Ram Niranjun v. Prayag. 582, 583,	1092
Ram Odhar v. Ram Monohar ...	1067
Ram Lal v. Lakhmichand ...	287
Ram Pargash v. Dahan Bibi. 63,	916, 1181
Ram Parkash v. Anand Das. 805,	834, 839, 871
Ram Parson v. Kalab Husain ...	636
Ram Peari v. Hari Dutt ...	609
Ram Pershad v. Lakhpati. 590, 626, 627,	628, 631, 632
Ram Persad v. Mukundi ...	1188
Ram Pershad v. Sreechurn. 362,	875
Ram Pershad v. Sreemuttee ...	830
Ram Pertab v. Fooli Bai. 288,	295
Ram Piari v. Krishna ...	778
Ram Prasad v. Babu Lal ...	144
Ram Prasad v. Rattan Chand. 469,	477
Ram Prasad v. Subu Bai ...	70
Ram Rao v. Kutiya ...	957
Ram Rao v. Raja of Pittapur. 693,	703, 704
Ram Rao v. Yeshvant Rao. 688, 696,	707
Ram Ratan v. Basant Bai. 388, 390,	494, 544
Ram Ratan v. Kamala Prasad. 958,	973
Ram Rattan v. Gangu Prasad ...	534
Ram Ratan v. Lachman Das. 450,	550
Ram Ratan v. Subhan ...	894
Ram Rau v. Raja Ram ...	247
Ram Rekha Singh v. Ganga Prasad.	533, 535
Ram Sahai v. Kewal Singh. 522,	523
Ram Sahye v. Laljee. 400, 601,	904
Ram Samugh v. Bikramjit ...	639
Ram Saram v. Raghu Nandan ...	847
Ram Saran v. Mangal Singh ...	535
Ram Saran v. Ram Narain ...	686
Ram Sarup v. Maya Shankar ...	730
Ram Sarup v. Nadir Mal ...	961
Ram Sarup v. Ramday ...	1121
Ram Sarat v. Hitanandan. 1053,	1055
Ram Shankar v. Ganesh ...	1088
Ram Sewak v. Baldeo ...	895
Ram Shewak v. Sheo Gobind. 1110,	1123
Ram Sia v. Bua. 963,	979
Ram Singh v. Bhani. 1122,	1123
Ram Singh v. Bhant ...	944
Ram Singh v. Bhim ...	1123
Ram Singh v. Bhugwan ...	280
Ram Singh v. Sobha Ram ...	548
Ram Singh v. Tursa. 626, 631,	633, 634
Ram Singh v. Ugar Singh. 953, 960,	965
Ram Soonder v. Ram Sahye. 328, 601,	994
Ram Soondur v. Taruck Chunder...	850
Ram Sumran v. Gobind ...	1063
Ram Sumran v. Shyam Kumari. 1028, 1044,	1117, 1118
Ram Sundar v. Barham Deo ...	420
Ram Swarup v. Basdeo ...	942
Ram Tutvel Singh v. Biseswar. 304,	1138
Ram Tuhul Singh v. Biseswar ...	494
Rama v. Daji. 1115,	1117
Rama v. Dhondi. 257, 259,	1067
Rama v. Narayanasami ...	1117
Rama v. Rajagopaul ...	650
Rama v. Ranga. 386, 387, 1054,	1056
Rama v. Viswanatha ...	456
Rama Adhal v. Ran Mondhel ...	1064
Rama Reddi v. Ganji Reddi ...	970
Rama Rau v. Raja of Pithapur. 106, 327, 328, 502, 691, 705, 719,	757
Rama Rau v. Raja Rau ...	263
Rama Row v. Kuttiya. 926, 958, 973,	1090

	PAGE
Ramabai v. Ganesh	... 342
Ramabai v. Harnabai.	993, 995
Ramabai v. Ramachandra	... 730
Ramabai v. Rangrav	... 1096
Ramabai v. Trimbak.	326, 328, 329, 330, 338, 339
Ramachand v. Audaito	... 112
Ramachand v. Utamchand	... 646
Ramchandra v. Bhimrao	... 505
Ramchandra v. Harischandra	... 251
Ramachandra v. Krishnarao	... 299
Ramchandra v. Mulji	... 229
Ramchandra v. Nagamuthu	... 1067
Ramachandra v. Radha.	503, 504, 1058
Ramachandra v. Savitribai.	342, 345
Ramchandra v. Subbu Bai	... 1166
Ramacharan v. Harihar	... 705
Ramchandra v. Sham Rao	... 212
Ramachari v. Saraswati.	171, 184, 1115
Ramacharya v. Anantacharya.	612, 636
Ramachunder v. Chabbu Lal	... 647
Ramadhar v. Sudeshra	... 1185
Ramadhuri v. Bisheshar	... 631
Ramagowda v. Bhausaheb	... 1091
Ramai v. Trimbak	... 322
Ramaiengar v. Secretary of State.	549
Ramajogoyya v. Jagannath	... 1064
Ramajagayya v. Jagannadhan.	296, 297, 298
Ramakanta v. Shamanand.	93, 94, 95
Ramakkal v. Ramasami.	607, 931, 937, 1033, 1034
Ramakrishna v. Parameshwara	... 645
Ramakrishna v. Narayan.	539, 551,
Ramakottayya v. Viraraghwayya.	1076
Ramkrishna v. Ratanchand	... 510
Ramkrishna v. Parameshwar	... 210
Ramakrishna v. Rukmavati	... 1041
Ramkristo v. Bhageerutee	... 435
Ramalakshmi v. Sivanatha.	50, 51, 93, 100, 680, 681, 714, 718
Ramalal v. Akhoycharan.	124, 126
Ramalinga v. Muthayyam.	393, 550
Ramalinga v. Muthu	... 539
Ramalinga v. Narayana.	433, 463, 464, 593, 612, 626, 654
Ramalinga v. Pakshi Khanapure.	643
Ramalinga v. Pavadai.	930, 932, 933, 935
Ramalinga v. Parvathathammal	... 1064
Ramalinga v. Virupakshi.	643, 644, 699
Ramalingam v. Sivachidambara.	324, 466, 748
Ramalingam v. Vythilingam.	745, 840
Ramamani v. Kulanthai.	125, 163, 189
Ramamirtham v. Ranganathan.	642, 777
Raman v. Jajivan Das	... 1151
Ramanadan v. Vava.	831, 854
Ramanand v. Raj Kishore	... 69
Ramanand v. Ramsaran.	1041, 1042, 1060
Ramanand v. Surgiani	... 944
Ramananda v. Raikishori.	912, 913, 914
Ramananda v. Taikishori	... 1166
Ramanandan v. Rangammal.	332, 333, 335, 341, 345, 346
Ramanand v. Raghunath	... 371
Ramanarasu v. Buchamma.	149, 324
Ramanath v. Rajamni.	331, 339
Ramanath v. Kusumkamini.	569, 570
Ramanatham v. Subramanian	... 895
Ramanathan v. Murugappa.	444, 445, 446, 836, 849, 850
Ramanathan v. Yegappa.	257, 469, 470, 471, 478
Ramanayya v. Rangappayya	... 498
Ramangavda v. Shivvaji	... 136
Ramanuja v. Mauraj Kuar	... 791
Ramappa v. Arumugath.	912, 949, 961, 984
Ramappa v. Sithammal	... 929
Ramarayudu v. Sitalakshmanna.	329, 345
Ramasami v. Alagirisami	... 613
Ramasami v. Appavu	... 104
Ramasami v. Mangai Karasu	... 1031, 1058
Ramasami v. Narasamma	... 944
Ramasami v. Sabu Kai	... 1115
Ramasami v. Subramania	... 650
Ramasami v. Sundaralingasami.	92, 120, 125, 126, 716, 718
Ramasami v. Ulaganatha.	500, 548, 559
Ramasami v. Vengidusami.	464, 465, 611, 1058
Ramasami v. Venkatarama.	420, 425
Ramasami v. Venkatasami.	677, 678, 880
Ramasami v. Virasami	... 555
Ramasamy v. Chinnan	... 749
Ramasar v. Raghubar	... 293
Ramasaran v. Tekchand.	601, 1009
Ramasundaram v. Savundrathammal	... 834
Ramaswami v. Nachiappa.	1070, 1072
Ramaswami v. Ramaswami.	1087, 1088
Ramaswami v. Venkatesan	... 679
Ramaswami v. Veerappa	... 798
Ramaswami v. Venkataramanaiyan.	232, 415
Ramaswamy v. Mumandy.	663, 664
Ramavati v. Manjhari.	329, 333, 341, 350
Ramayya v. Venkataratnam.	457, 500
Rambai v. Jogan	... 620
Rambhabai v. Tota Ram	... 63
Rambhajan v. Gurucharan	... 1091
Rambharti v. Surajbharti	... 910
Rambhat v. Lakshman	... 759
Rambhat v. Timmayya.	111, 112
Rambhojan v. Gircharan	... 763
Ramchand v. Uttamchand	... 692
Ramchander v. Chhedalal	... 314
Ramchander v. Tohfah Bharti	... 460
Ramchandra v. Bapu	... 199
Ramachandra v. Dinkar	... 597
Ramchandra v. Gopal.	136, 216, 217
Ramchandra v. Hanmanaik.	325, 929, 931
Ramchandra v. Kakutnoi	... 1123
Ramchandra v. Kandayya.	484, 552, 553, 554
Ramchandra v. Kasinath	... 853
Ramchandra v. Krishnarao	... 312
Ramchandra v. Krishnaji	... 660
Ramchandra v. Mudeshwar	... 693

	PAGE
Ramchandra v. Murlidhar	... 212
Ramchandra v. Mulji	... 180
Ramchandra v. Muluvan	... 346
Ramchandra v. Narayan	... 246
Ramchandra v. Parameswaram	... 878
Ramchandra v. Ranjit Singh.	246, 330
Ramchandra v. Raikishori	... 913
Ramchandra v. Sakharam	... 688
Ramchandra v. Tukaram	... 615
Ramchandra v. Venkatrao.	686, 718
Ramchandra v. Vinayak.	133, 912, 918, 920, 923, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 966
Ramcharan v. Gaya Prasad.	455, 456
Ramcharan v. Govinda	... 856
Ramcharan v. Harihar	... 693
Ramcharan v. Jasodha.	343, 618
Ramcharan v. Kauleshar	... 410
Ramcharan v. Naurangilal.	823, 851, 852, 859
Ramcharan v. Rakbal	... 807
Ramcharanlal v. Rahim Baksh.	964, 966, 970, 971, 974, 975
Ramchod v. Ajoobai	... 995
Ramchurn v. Nanhoo.	855, 859
Ramconnoy v. Johur Lall	... 505
Ramcoomar v. Ichamayi.	323, 1061, 1110
Ramcoomar v. M. C. Queen	... 866
Ramdas v. Mohesur	... 852
Ramdhan v. Beharee	... 940
Ramdhan v. Dalmir Puri.	62, 988
Ramdhan v. Parbati	... 851
Ramdhari v. Permanund	... 1109
Ramdheen v. Ram Ruttun	... 282
Ramdhin v. Mathura Singh.	1082, 1092
Ramdin v. Bisheshar.	593, 671
Ramdulal v. Joymoney	... 1135
Rame Reddi v. Gangi Reddi	... 961
Ramesh Chandra v. Elahi Buksh	... 78, 79
Rameshwar v. Arjun Singh	... 705
Rameshwar v. Durga	... 540
Rameshwar v. Ganpati.	950, 1100
Rameshwara v. Kalpu Rai	... 532
Rameshwar v. Balraj	... 756
Rameshwar Singh v. Jibendar Singh.	692, 701
Ramessur v. Ishan Chunder	... 850
Rameshwar v. Lachmi Prasad	... 375
Rameswar v. Provabai	... 1110
Rameshra v. Kalpu Rai	... 526
Ramgowda v. Bhau Saheb.	1072, 1073, 1076, 1105, 1106
Rami v. Rangamma	... 190
Rami Reddi v. Gangi Reddi.	918, 964, 966, 967, 975
Ramikhya v. Hari Charan	... 802
Ramjee v. Anandappa	... 79
Ramjan v. Chand Mandal	... 392
Ramji v. Chinto	... 1119
Ramji v. Durga	... 1040
Ramji v. Ghammu.	192, 210
Ramji v. Lachlu	... 840
Ramkishen v. Beli Ram	... 312
Ramkishen v. Srimutee.	255, 259
Ramkishore v. Bhoobunmoyee	... 221
Ramkishore v. Jagannath	... 114
Ramkishore v. Kalli Kanto	... 1112
Ramkore v. Jamnadas	... 117
Ramkrishna v. Laxmi Narayan	... 173
Ramkrishna v. Sham Rao	... 413
Ramkrishna v. Ratanchand	... 510
Ramkumar v. Jogender	... 809
Ramkumari v. Radhabai	... 210
Ramlakshme v. Sivanath	... 88
Ramlagan v. Nandipat	... 866
Ramlal v. Haran Chandra	... 506
Ramlal v. Kanai Lal	... 746
Ramlal v. Laxmichand.	287, 382, 341, 482, 1064
Ramlabhai v. Durga Das	... 284
Ramlal v. Sitabai.	574, 575
Rammal v. Kakal	... 802
Ramman v. Ram Gopal	... 535
Ramnath v. Durga	... 84
Ram Nath v. Gotu Ram	... 654
Ram Nath v. Rajanimoni	... 329
Ramnatham v. Yagappa	... 479
Ramnathan v. Murugappa	... 850
Ramoni v. Ramgopal	... 755
Ramnathan v. Muthia	... 307
Ramnundan v. Janki.	719, 902
Rampabhai v. Durgadas	... 282
Rampardip v. Salig Rai	... 588
Ramparkash v. Anandas.	808, 835
Rampargosh v. Dhan Bibi	... 913
Rampartab v. Foolibai.	341, 469, 472, 475
Rampat v. Durga.	861, 912
Rampeari v. Bhogis.	211, 212
Ramphal v. Pammati.	912, 974
Ramphal v. Tulu Kuari.	1071, 1075, 1080, 1092
Ramphul v. Deg. Narayan.	437, 633
Rampiyari v. Mulchand.	53, 1033
Ramprasad v. Lakhpati.	429, 593, 594
Ramprasad v. Babulal	... 944
Ramprasad v. Court of Wards.	656, 1140, 1168, 1169
Ramprasad v. Sububai	... 110
Ramprasad v. Subu.	142, 913, 1167
Ramprasad v. Ramkisan	... 822
Ramrao v. Yeshwant	... 90
Ramsaran v. Rakhal	... 113
Ramsaran Singh v. Mahabir Sewak Singh	... 120
Ramsebuk v. Ramlal.	468, 470, 472
Ramsia v. Bua	... 976
Ramsewak v. Jamuno Prasad	... 1110
Ramsurn v. Rakhal	... 113
Ram Swarup v. Basdeo	... 942
Ramundoss v. Tarinee	... 182
Ramyad v. Rambihari.	1098, 1100
Rana Mahtab Singh v. Badan Singh.	693, 696
Ranbijai v. Bisheskar	... 993
Ranbijai v. Jagat Pal	... 600
Ranchoddas v. Rewal	... 941
Ranchhod v. Manmohandas	... 459
Ranchod v. Ajoobai	... 994
Ranchood v. Jayanti	... 834
Ranchordas v. Parvati Bai.	813, 1120, 1122, 1123, 1124
Randan v. Beharee	... 892

	PAGE
Ranga v. Balaji	... 505
Ranga Bai v. Bagirath Bai	... 178
Ranga Rai v. Bala	... 864
Ranga Rao v. Ranganayaki	... 1121
Rangammal v. Echammal.	326, 327
Ranganaiki v. Ramanuja.	282, 283
Ranganatha v. Narayanasami.	433, 663. 664
Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti.	174, 184, 205, 226
Ranganmani v. Kashi Nath	... 649
Rangappa v. Kamti.	1066, 1069, 1074, 1075, 1078, 1082, 1101
Rangasami v. Nachiappa.	1064, 1066, 1067, 1068, 1071, 1075, 1076, 1080
Rangasami v. Krishnayan.	423, 424
Rangasami v. Ranga	... 869
Rangasami v. Sundararamanjulu.	599, 643
Rangasayi v. Nagarathanamma.	602, 944
Rangaswami v. Sundararajulu	... 645
Rangathai v. Nelli	... 349
Rangathayee v. Nellmunisami	... 337
Rangayya v. Subramania	... 419
Rangayya v. Thanikachalla.	547, 995
Rangil Bhai v. Vinayak	... 1059
Rangu v. Laxman	... 676
Ranjit Singh v. Amullya Prasad.	447, 450, 451, 590
Ragit v. Radha.	...933, 938
Rangit Singh v. Koer Gujraj Singh	... 593
Rango v. Chindo.	657, 658, 660
Rango v. Mudyeppa	... 169
Rango v. Yamunabai.	328, 330
Rangopal v. Tulsiram	... 575
Ranga v. Sinhaji	... 350
Ranga Reddi v. Narayana	... 294
Rangubai v. Bhagirathi Bai	... 214
Rangubai v. Gopal	... 310
Rangubai v. Subaji	... 350
Rani v. Khogendra	... 960
Rani Ranjan v. Ram Narain	... 104
Rani Dhun v. Kishen	... 992
Ranika v. Jamma	... 1040
Ranika v. Janina	... 903
Ranjani Kant v. Sajani	... 336
Ranjan v. Palaniyandi	... 1073
Ranjeet Ram v. Mhd. Waris	... 1057
Ranjit Lal v. Bijoy	... 197
Ranjit Singh v. Gujrat	... 163
Ranjit Singh v. Narayansingh	... 267
Raoji v. Kunyilal	... 321
Ranjit Singh v. Jagannath	... 70
Ranjit Singh v. Koer Gujraj Singh	... 589
Ranku v. Hukmi	... 614
Ranmal Singhji v. Vadilal.	295, 298, 304 455
Ranodip Singh v. Parameshwar	... 548
Ranoji v. Khandoji.	930, 933
Ranysremity v. Rani Koond	... 1075
Rao Balwant Singh v. Rani Kishori	... 51
Rao Biraj Singh v. R.	... 672
Rao Giraj Singh v. Rani Raghubir.	548
Raoji v. Anant.	608, 609, 610, 636, 742
Rao Prasad v. Chhote Munne	... 324
Raoji v. Laksh Bai	... 229
Rashbihari v. Jai Percash.	416, 419, 426
Rashid v. Sherbanoo	... 64
Rashiklal v. Radha	... 1139
Basil Singh v. Balwant Singh.	1113, 1114, 1116
Rashmoni v. Soorjakanta.	287, 288, 326
Raston v. Moti Singh.	1058, 1063
Rasul v. Saran.	130, 333, 1047
Ratan v. Nathu Singh	... 157
Ratcheputty v. Rajunder	... 75
Ratanchand v. Ananda Bai	... 58
Ratan Lal v. Brijbhukan	... 491
Ratanlal v. Jaideo	... 484
Ratansi v. Umerbai	... 943
Rathna v. Tiruvenkata	... 741
Ratna v. Krishna	... 996
Ratna v. Narayanaswami	... 752
Ratnam v. Govindaragulu	... 448
Ratnamala v. Kamakshya	... 339
Ratnamari v. Akilandammal	... 354
Ratnamasari v. Aikalandammal	... 246
Ratnasabba v. Ponnappa	... 977
Ratnase v. Amerbabai	965, 1030, 1062
Rattanchand v. Ghasita	... 597
Ravaneshwar v. Chandi Prasad.	713, 888
Ravichand v. Somal	... 836
Ravji v. Gangadhar	... 413
Ravji v. Lakshmi Bai.	231, 232, 244, 245, 246
Ravji v. Sakuji	... 933
Ravji v. Vasudeo	... 853
Rawan Prasad v. Radha	... 657
Rawnson (In re)	... 494
Ray Radha v. Nan Ratan	... 1115
Raya v. Gopal	... 448
Rayadur v. Rayadur	... 376
Rayaningaru v. Venkata	... 903
Rayawa v. Shivayaogappa	... 334
Raybould v. Turner	... 847
Raynor v. Mussorie Bank	... 723
Reade v. Krishna	... 287
Reed v. Harris	... 764
Reed v. Jackson	... 106
Reg. v. Karson	... 128
Regella v. Mimushakari	... 1110
Retki v. Lakpati.	228, 242
Retoo v. Lalljee	... 1099
Revettcarnac v. Jivabai	... 1038
Rewan Pershad v. Radha.	904, 905
Rhodes v. Rhodes.	611, 615, 765
Rice v. Gordon	... 802
Rokhai Rai v. Sheo Pujan Singh	... 1108
Rindabai v. Girdharlal.	310, 982
Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh.	245, 1089, 1112
Riwun Persad v. Radha	... 427
Roberts v. Roberts	... 578
Rabinson v. Natumol.	432, 574
Robindra v. Chandicharan.	881, 887
Rohin Singh v. Hodding	... 410
Rojomoyee v. Troyluckho	... 1077
Roma Nath v. Rajomoni	... 330
Romon v. Hurrolal	... 455
Ronno v. Lakshmi	... 337
Rookmonee v. Krishno	... 762
Roop Dhare v. Narain	... 732

	PAGE
Roop Singh v. Buldeo Singh.	527, 552
Roopchurn v. Anundlal	... 1017
Rooplaul v. Lakshmi	... 599
Rotramma v. Seshachalam	... 329
Roshansingh v. Balwantsingh.	164, 321, 601
Rowther v. Rowther.	79, 80, 81, 91, 94
Roy Mukhun Lall v. Stewart.	394, 395
Rozario v. Ingles	... 162
Rudra Pratap v. Nirman Protap.	693, 698
Rukabai v. Ganda Bai	... 340
Rukhlal v. Chunilal	... 260
Rukshma v. Rango Bai	... 337
Rukhman v. Kirpa	... 664
Rukhmani v. Kesav Lal	... 1034
Rukmani Ammal v. Chari	... 149
Rukhab v. Chunilal	... 59, 78
Rukhni v. Kadarnath	... 1013
Rukhut v. Chunilal	... 261
Rukmabai v. Jai Pal.	1034, 1041
Rukman v. Gungaram	... 1143
Rukmani v. Muthammal	... 291
Ruliyat (Bai) v. Jeychand	... 138
Rumchordas v. Parvatibai.	817, 1122
Rumea v. Bhagee.	892, 937,
Rungabhai v. Paurusami	... 280
Rungama v. Atchama.	166, 189, 250, 254, 255, 256
Rungo v. Yamunabai	... 351
Runganaigum v. Namesevoya	... 224
Rangamma v. Ramanadha	... 168
Rungaswami v. Nachiappa.	... 1092
Ranjit Singh v. Basanta	... 870
Rungun v. Kassinath	... 568
Runjeet v. Mhd. Waris.	56, 386, 392. 396, 1055
Runjeet Singh v. Madud Ali	... 430
Runjeet Singh v. Narain Singh	... 224
Rup Chand v. Basantna.	469, 471
Rup Chand v. Jamju Prasad.	60, 100, 220 264, 265
Rup Chand v. Lalu	... 86
Rup Chand v. Rakhamabai	... 210
Rup Narain v. Gopal.	217, 222, 223, 248, 900, 901, 1081
Rup Narain v. Junko	... 869
Rup Ram v. Iswar	... 1059
Rup Ram v. Rewti.	743, 1066, 1071
Rup Singh v. Baisni.	697, 711, 712, 714, 721
Rup Singh v. Bhabuti.	642, 643, 644, 684
Rup Singh v. Pirbhu Narain Singh	...90, 701
Rupa v. Sardar Merza.	915, 916, 1181
Rupan Rai v. Subh Karan	... 594
Rusi Mendli v. Sundar Mendli.	675, 679
Russell v. Russell	... 145
Russic Lal v. Purushmonee	... 1010
Russoobai v. Zoobkha Bai	... 944
Rustam v. Dinkar	... 671
Rustomji v. Nurse	... 550
Rusul Jehan v. Ramsarun	... 937
Rusum v. Dasarthi	... 360
Rutcheputty v. Rajendra.	71, 72, 359, 360, 929
Ruttun Singh v. Chundar	... 323
Ruvee v. Rupshankar	... 231
Rychurn v. Peary Monee.	901, 1087

S

	PAGE
Sabadur v. Rajwanta.	145, 147
Sabapathi v. Somasundaram.	360, 537, 757
Sabapathi v. Thandavaroya	.. 419
Sabapathy v. Ponnusamy	.. 466
Sabba Prasad v. Dharam Kirti.	.. 639
Subhadi Lal v. Govind Singh	.. 540
Saboo Sidick v. Ally Mahomed	.. 64
Sabnis (In re)	.. 723
Sabo Bewa v. Napesun	.. 244
Saboo v. Ayeshabai	.. 332
Sabta Prasad v. Dharmi Karti	.. 627
Sachindra Kishore v. Rajani	.. 1124
Sachit v. Budhua	.. 1114
Sacrabai v. Maganlal See Sakrabai v. Maganlal.
Sadabart v. Foolbash.	414, 453, 547, 886
Sadalai v. Gomathi	.. 1034
Sadananda v. Baikuntha.	632, 678
Sadanand v. Bonomalee	.. 352
Sadanund v. Soojoo	... 360
Sadasheo v. Jaikrishna.	70, 979
Sadashiv v. Dinkar.	559, 560
Sadasiva v. Hajee Fakir	.. 487
Sadashiv v. Hari.	220, 231, 241
Sadashiv v. Trimbak	.. 645
Sadasuk v. Kisan Pershad.	446, 450
Sadasoak v. Ramchander	.. 864
Sadat Ali v. Hara Sundari	.. 1110
Sadayappa v. Ponnama	.. 498
Sadholal v. Murlidhar	.. 278
Sadhu v. Baldeodasji	.. 910
Sadhu v. Brahmadeo.	396, 456
Sadu v. Baiza.	601, 932, 933
Sadu v. Rani	.. 637
Sadulla v. Bhana Mal	.. 456
Safuran Umar v. Emna	.. 64
Sagat v. Dwarka	.. 755
Saguna v. Sadasiv.	907, 964, 965, 968, 969, 971, 975, 985
Sahadur v. Rajwanta	.. 53
Sahal Singh v. Salik Ram	.. 426
Sahdeo v. Kusum Kumari.	63, 67
Sahib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad	.. 329
Sahodra v. Ram Babu	.. 1185
Sahoo Sidick v. Ally Mahommed	.. 64
Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh.	358, 453, 489, 494, 515, 516, 517, 527, 532, 535, 571, 851, 1049
Sailabala v. Baikuntha Nath	... 1048
Saimanand v. Har Lal	.. 1110
Saithri (In re).	281, 284, 286, 287, 311, 1048, 1063, 1064
Sai Shachari v. Ram Kishori	.. 346
Sailendra Nath v. Sarai Kumar.	.. 730
Saiyid Mahammad v. Jamad Husain	.. 657
Saiyid Mahomed v. Parbati	.. 1106
Sajendar v. Gour Mohan	.. 883
Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali.	184, 1104

PAGE.

Sakharam v. Balkrishna. 967, 973, 975
Sakharam v. Janki Bai. 326, 1062
Sakharam v. Madan. 238, 597
Sakharam v. Motiram .. 312
Sakharam v. Hari .. 637
Sakharam v. Sitabai. 679, 943, 1022, 1032
Sakharam v. Thama .. 1068
Sakhawat v. Abu Said. 643, 699
Sakhbir Singh v. Mangisar Rao.. 219
Sakrabai v. Magan Lal. 295, 468, 469, 472, 473, 475, 482, 484, 485, 488, 496, 1048, 1064, 1109, 1110
Sakyabati v. Bhawani. 1089, 1103
Sala Mahomed v. Janbai .. 771
Salaimalai v. Sokammal .. 185
Salem Town Bank v. Ramaswamy. 553
Salemma v. Lachmana. 1136, 1140
Salhianama v. Savanathanabayi ... 809
Saligram v. Lutta Parshad .. 526
Salikram v. Janku .. 312
Sallamat Khan v. Bhagwat ... 577
Saltrappayyar v. Periasame .. 877
Saltiraju v. Venkataswami .. 183
Salsbee Partab v. Bahadur .. 435
Salu v. Hari. 322, 324
Samalbhai v. Someshvar. 483, 484
Samangouda v. Bharmangouda .. 660
Samat v. Amrao. 907, 945, 946, 948
Sambanda v. Narasambandapandara .. 859
Sambanda v. Velu .. 867
Sambasiva v. Ragava. 312, 1122, 1123
Sambasiva v. Ramaswami. 202, 1070
Sambasiva v. Venkateswara .. 1032
Sambasiva v. Visvam .. 1033
Sambasivam v. Secretary of State. 985
Sambu Chandra v. Kartick Chandra. 989, 1019
Samboo v. Narain. ... 261
Samdani v. Kamala Kanta. 312, 313
Samdas v. Sahib Debi .. 433
Sami v. Ponnammal .. 517
Sami Ayyangar v. Ponnammal .. 535
Sami Row v. Elivatha .. 310
Saminadha v. Thangathani. 376, 890, 891
Saminatha v. Angammal. 973, 980
Saminatha v. Manikharami. 1031, 1040
Saminatha v. Purushottama .. 859
Saminatha v. Sellappa. 839, 845, 854
Samu v. Swaminatha .. 455
Samudrala v. Samudrala .. 678
Sana Moyee v. Secretary of State. 1156
Sangili v. Mookan .. 671
Sanjivi v. Jalajakshi .. 97
Sanka Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burmah. 288, 289, 290, 414, 470, 476, 484, 485
Sankamurti v. Chidambara .. 847
Sankar v. Babaji .. 505
Sankar v. Bejoy .. 1046
Sankar v. Hardeo .. 410
Sankaran v. Narasimhulu .. 471
Sankaralinga v. Official Receiver. 422, 426, 810
Sankaralinga v. Rajeswara. 841, 843, 847

PAGE

Sankaralingam v. Subhan. 97, 98, 139, 141
Sanku v. Puttamma .. 642
Sanlu Ram v. Dadan Bai .. 1058
Sanmukh v. Jagarnath .. 1051
Sansar Chand v. Shanti .. 340
Sant Kumar v. Deo Saran. 892, 942, 1114, 1115, 1117
Sant Singh v. Mula .. 231
Santala v. Badaswari. 63, 67, 937
Santappayya v. Rangappayya. 214, 244, 245
Santok Singh .. 151
Santosh v. Gera. 46, 47
Santosh Kumar v. Ganesh .. 1062
Santu Ram v. Dodan Bai .. 1059
Sanual Das v. Saiyid Ali .. 507
Sanyasi v. Krishnadhan. 298, 477, 478, 480, 482, 483, 486
Sanyasicharan v. Asutosh. 484, 485
Saodamini v. Administrator-General. 1023, 1031, 1034, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1039, 1041, 1042, 1043, 1044, 1046, 1130, 1132, 1133
Sarab Sukh v. Gooroo .. 825
Sarabjit v. Inderjit. 93, 101, 104, 289, 346, 692, 696, 710
Sarada Charan v. Durgaram. 455, 456
Saradu v. Mahananda .. 565
Saradindunath v. Sudhirchandra. 770
Sarado v. Tincowry .. 762
Sarju Prasad v. Ramsaram .. 415
Sarappalli v. Fota .. 104
Sarasuti v. Mannu. 321, 933, 940
Saraswati v. Kashi Ram .. 322
Saraswati v. Kathirama .. 941
Saraswati v. Nandan ... 353
Saraswati Bai v. Waman Rao .. 440
Sarat Chandra v. Charusila. 1043, 1044, 1045, 1133
Sarat Chandra v. Forman. 284, 287
Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder. 247
Sarat Chandra v. Mahapet .. 617
Saratji v. Ramjay .. 1064
Sarbachand v. Chandi Singh .. 597
Sarda Prasad v. Rama. 196, 201, 203
Sarda Prosad v. Mahanand Roy.. 570
Sardar Nissar Ali v. Mhd. Alikhan. 775
Sardar Shah v. Haji .. 293
Sardar Singh v. Ajit Singh .. 537
Saraj v. Desa ... 6, 20
Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari Lal. 383, 384, 385, 386, 1028, 1029, 1048, 1054, 1055, 1056, 1057, 1058
Sarda Sundari v. Gobind .. 126
Sardul Singh v. Partab Singh .. 320
Sareshwar v. Mohesh .. 1069
Sariatulla v. Pran Nath .. 107
Sarodasoondery v. Tincowry .. 238
Sarola Dassi v. Bhuban Mohak. 332 609, 610
Sarya Prasad v. Gulabchand .. 501
Sartaj Kuar v. Deoraj Kuar. 91, 693, 701, 702, 703, 704, 706, 712, 902
Saroj Kuari v. Desraj Kuar .. 683

	PAGE.
Sarju Bala v. Jyotirmayee ..	794
Saroo v. Bani ..	980
Sarup Chand v. Pani.	608, 609
Sarup Singh v. Jassi ..	224
Sarvothamma v. Govinda ..	648
Sasankar v. Gopi ..	202
Sarya Prasad v. Gulabchand ..	501
Sarothana v. Govinda ..	649
Saroda Prasad v. Mahananda ..	569
Saravana v. Muttayi ..	392
Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin ..	297
Sasanka Bhushan v. Gopi Ballav..	787
Sashi Bhusan v. Hari Narain.	609, 610, 615
Sashi Bhushan v. Hari ..	1026
Sashi Bhusan v. Rajendra ..	1161
Sashi Bhushan v. Jadu Nath ..	314
Sashi v. Jagoti ..	705
Sasibala v. Chandra ..	778
Sasbheddai v. Boolaram ..	428
Sasimun v. Shib Narayan.	1040, 1043, 1131
Sastry v. Sembecutty.	151, 152, 153, 154
Satchidanandam v. Subbaraju ..	428
Sat Narain v. Bihari Lal.	471, 484, 526, 546, 561, 889
Sat Narain v. Sri Kishen.	546, 547
Satgur v. Raj Kishore.	651, 1124, 1125, 1139
Sathappayyar v. Periasami.	821, 822, 879, 881, 882
Sathapathier v. Sivanurayama.	423, 424
Sattinama v. Saravantabayi ..	813
Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya.	320, 330, 331
Satyabhema v. Jatindra Mohan ..	1190
Sati Prasad (Raja) v. Manmatha.	89
Satiadama v. Saranbagi ..	114
Satis Chunder v. Chunder Kant.	293
Satis Chandra v. Haridas ..	1161
Satish Chunder v. Mahabali.	1166, 1169
Satrucherla v. Satrucherla ..	675
Sattiraju v. Venkataswami.	205, 206
Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal.	576, 577, 578, 580, 583, 596, 614, 615, 670, 671, 1115
Satya Sri v. Kartik ..	857
Satyalakshmi v. Jagannadhan ..	1071
Satyabhama v. Kesavacharya ..	329
Satyanarayana v. Mallayya ..	296
Savitri Bai v. Anandrao ..	707
Savitri Bai v. Bhao Bhat ..	994
Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai.	144, 318, 319, 322, 323, 326, 329, 330, 332, 336, 338, 339
Savitri (Srimati) v. Mrs. F.A. Savi.	867, 869, 1104, 1105
Sawanmal v. Pinnumal.	469, 476
Sayad Mahammad v. Fatteh Muhammad ..	768
Sayyuduzhur Ali v. Ultai Fatima.	728, 730, 733
Scales v. Key ..	93
Scarle v. Rawduis ..	796
Scott v. Tyler ..	802
Seals v. Key ..	101
Secretary of State v. Dadi ..	731
Secretary of State v. Girja Bai..	688
Secretary of State v. Joyti Prasad ..	737
Secretary of State v. Kamachee.	410, 693, 710, 711, 714
Secretary of State v. Laxmi Bai.	688
Secretary of State v. Puran Singh.	687
Secretary of State v. Rangasamy.	626, 634
Secretary of State v. Rashidlal Huq ..	380
Secretary of State v. Shahman..	1170
Seeni v. Angamuthu.	130, 466
Seerja v. Kore Nath Baksh Singh.	342
Seeta Ram v. Fukeerchand ..	1015
Seethai v. Nachiar.	903, 944
Seetaram v. Dhunock ..	229
Seetharama v. Official Receiver ..	547
Seetharamanna v. Appiah ..	294
Seetharamamma v. Subranarayana.	189, 193, 194
Seetla Sahai v. Thakur Din.	414, 454
Sefton v. Hopwood ..	767
Segu v. Segu ..	595
Sekkara v. K. Ramoraju ..	1132
Selby v. Robinson ..	95
Sellam v. Chinnamal.	605, 606
Sellappa v. Suppan.	396, 709, 715
Sellappaswamy v. Manikaswamy..	840
Sellappa v. Sellappa ..	706
Sengamalam v. Logambal ..	776
Sengamalathammal v. Velayuda.	1028, 1129, 1130, 1149, 1158, 1171
Seoratan v. Gour Behari ..	427
Serumah v. Palathan.	100, 715
Seshadri v. Ranga.	841, 844
Seshamma v. Subharayudu ..	349
Seshammal v. Soondarajeingar ..	834
Seshammali v. Munisami ..	130
Seshapa v. Jagapa ..	432
Seshan v. Veera ..	476
Seshayyar v. Saraswati.	184, 1045
Sespuri v. Dwarka.	114, 126
Seth Lakhmichand v. Anandi ..	758
Sethurama v. Uonnammal ..	977
Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar.	643, 646, 647, 682, 692, 822
Setrucherla v. Setrucherla.	444, 445, 650
Shedilal v. Lal (Pal) Bahadur.	363, 426, 427, 428, 440
Shadi v. Anup Singh ..	44
Shefiqunnissa v. Shahan Ali ..	427
Shah Balidas v. Chudasama ..	505
Shah Khanam v. Kaladhar ..	99
Shahdeo v. Kusum.	64, 133
Shah Dev Singh v. Lajwanti ..	663
Shahu v. Hapoja ..	309
Shaliq Ram v. Charanjit Lal ..	744
Shyam Bhai v. Purushottam Das.	338
Sham Behari v. Ram Kali.	1150, 1154, 1172
Sham v. Kishun ..	951
Sham Chandra v. Gadadhar ..	303

	PAGE.
Sham Dai v. Birbhadra.	973, 974, 976, 1054
Sham Das v. Umeerdin	.. 288
Sham Devi v. Ram Nath	.. 838
Sham Devi v. Mohan Lal	.. 330
Shamlal v. Amarendra	.. 731
Shamlal v. Bindo.	279, 280
Shamlal v. Joharilal	.. 730
Sham Lal v. Banna.	341, 346, 351
Sham Lall v. Radha	332, 927
Sham Koer v. Dab Koer.	1124, 1125, 1139
Sham Kuar v. Gaya Din	.. 1150
Sham Koer v. Rupenkoer	.. 1122
Sham Narain v. Raghoober	.. 452
Sham Rai v. Goverdhan	.. 750
Sham Rathi v. Jaichla	.. 1066
Sham Shivendra v. Janbi Kuar.	252, 750, 752, 777
Sham Singh v. Santabai	.. 280
Sham Singh v. Shanta.	177, 213, 285
Sham Sundar v. Achankuar.	384, 472, 579, 1026, 1078, 1087, 1092
Shama Charan v. Kumed Dasi.	418, 425, 454
Shama Chundra v. Godadhar	.. 294
Shama Soonderee v. Jardine Skinner & Co.	641, 648, 670
Shambhu v. Gyan	.. 1032
Sham Narain v. Court of Wards.	403, 946
Shambhu Prasad v. Mahadeo	.. 1122
Shambu Chandra v. Kartick Chandra.	990, 991
Shamcharran v. Abhiram.	825, 857
Shamdas v. Savitribai.	608, 1135
Shamkuar v. Mohananda	.. 458
Shamnugger Jute Factory v. Ram Narain	.. 411
Shamrathisingh v. Kishen Pershad.	470, 476
Shamyarlal Purshotham v. Dakoor Temple Committee	.. 843
Shamu v. Babu.	403, 933
Shanakrahawa v. Babaji	.. 505
Shankar v. Bechu Ram	.. 396
Shankar v. Hardeo	.. 637
Shanker v. Kashinath.	907, 947, 948, 964
Shankar v. Ramrao	.. 212
Shankar v. Savitri.	199, 226
Shankar v. Sheonandan	496, 544
Shankar v. Umabai	.. 725
Shankar v. Raghoba	.. 951
Shankar v. Ummer	.. 460
Shankar v. Gowri Prasad	.. 449
Shankar Narayan v. Tangaratana	366, 428
Shankar v. Venkapa	.. 854
Shankar Baksh v. Hardeo.	446, 648, 649, 691, 950
Shankar Singh v. Lal Bahadur.	.. 1038
Shankar Sahai v. Bechu Ram	.. 550
Shankuar v. Gayadin	.. 253
Shankaralingam v. Subban	.. 144
Shanmugam v. Mira	.. 648
Shanmugam v. Krishnaveni	.. 274
Shanmugha v. Kayappa	.. 1082
Shantaram v. Waman.	620, 692
Shantee v. Abhai Singh	.. 361
Shanti Kumar v. Rama Ayyar	.. 1064
Shantilal v. Munshilal	.. 595
Sharifa v. Munakan	.. 314
Sharatchandra v. Dwarkanath	.. 875
Shashi Bhushan v. Jotindra	.. 640
Shashankabhooshan v. Brijendra Narain	.. 204
Shaw v. Halifax Corporation	.. 821
Shanti Kumar v. Mukundlal.	1066, 1079
Sheebsunker v. Manak Chunder	.. 277
Sheo Bai v. Gowreenund	.. 328
Sheikh Ghasit v. Pancham Singh.	1110, 1118
Sheikh Muhammad v. Ramachandra.	302, 1105, 1106
Sheikehand v. Hiralal	.. 452
Sheokoat Hossain v. Sasi Kar	.. 1059
Sheo Buksh v. Putteh Singh	.. 623
Sheo Churn v. Goodur	.. 103
Sheo Deo v. Dwarka Das	.. 267
Sheo Dayal v. Jagannath	.. 536
Sheo Dyal v. Judoonath.	329, 380, 588, 604, 608, 610, 631, 636, 1026
Sheo Dyal v. Lalta Prasad.	633, 671
Sheo Govind v. Ram Adhin	.. 301
Sheo Gobind v. Sham Narain.	378, 661
Sheo Kuar v. Jeoraj	.. 227
Sheonandan v. Damodar	.. 1046
Sheo Nandan v. Munni	.. 980
Sheo Narain v. Janaki Prasad	.. 610
Sheonandan v. Pransingh.	930, 931
Sheo Narain v. Kanurao	.. 1117
Sheo Narayan v. Khurgo	.. 1115
Sheo Narayan v. Mata Prosad.	725, 728
Sheo Narayan v. Nathia	.. 560
Sheo Nundun v. Ghunsam	.. 312
Sheo Parsan v. Ramnadhan.	1092, 1093, 1094, 1175
Sheo Pershad v. Dedab Singh	.. 412
Sheo Pershad v. Saheb Lal.	470, 474, 481, 485
Sheo Pertab v. Allahabad Bank.	1021, 1025, 1085, 1126, 1129, 1130, 1170, 1171, 1172
Sheo Prasad v. Aya Ram	.. 836
Sheo Prasad v. Balwant Singh.	533, 536
Sheo Prasad v. Saheb Lal.	481, 485
Sheoraj v. Rambux	.. 601
Sheo Ram v. Man Raj	.. 620
Sheo Ram v. Sheoratan.	496, 1058
Sheoratan v. Bhirgaon.	226, 227, 228
Sheoratan v. Ram Pragash	.. 876
Sheo Sahai v. Omed	.. 942
Sheo Shankar v. Jadoo Kumar.	456, 457, 519, 523, 562
Sheo Shankarlal v. Debi Sahai.	1021, 1025, 1040, 1126, 1128, 1129, 1130, 1136, 1172
Shoe Shankar v. Ram Shewak.	516, 852
Sheo Singh v. Dakho.	59, 60, 79, 175, 902, 935, 1032
Sheo Singh v. Lakha Singh	.. 658

	PAGE.
Sheo Singh v. Raghubans ..	691
Sheosoonaary v. Pirthee Singh.	358, 718, 1013
Sheobarat v. Bhagwati ..	973
Sheodan v. Balkaran ..	594
Sheokuar Bai v. Jeoraj.	264, 265, 1121
Sheolochan v. Saheb Singh.	1035, 1036, 1038, 1130, 1141
Sheonarain v. Babulal ..	488
Sheopal Singh v. Basant Singh.	535, 559
Sheoraj v. Nukchedi ..	458
Sheoram v. Sheoratan.	756, 758
Sheotahal v. Arjun ..	396
Sher Bahadur v. Ganga Baksh.	66, 793, 795
Sher Singh v. Sham Kuar ..	319
Sherajooddeen v. Horelsingh ..	431
Shere v. Bishop ..	799
Shere Bahadur v. Dario ..	371
Sheshagiri v. Girewa ..	621
Sheshagiri v. Rama Rau ..	617
Shewak Ram v. Bhowani ..	1108
Shibbi (Mt.) v. Johir Singh ..	331
Shib Chandra v. Dup Ken ..	1082
Shibditta v. Bela ..	126
Shib Das v. Nandlal ..	1185
Shib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad.	329, 333, 336, 338
Shib Koeree v. Joogun ..	1102
Shib Lakshan v. Tarangini ..	794
Shib Nath v. Alliance Bank.	496, 544, 559
Shib Sabitri v. Collector.	762, 765
Shib Sahai v. Saraswati.	963, 980
Shib Saran v. Kesho Prasad ..	1039
Shib Shankar v. Soni Ram.	1027, 1089
Shib Suhaye v. Nursing ..	614
Shibaprasad v. Prayag Kumari.	364, 367, 703, 704, 705, 706, 709, 710, 711, 715, 886
Shibbessuree v. Beckwille ..	853
Shibessoree v. Mothooranath.	397, 806, 853, 857, 859
Shibi v. Jodh Singh ..	331
Shibo Kooree v. Joogun Singh.	183, 269, 430
Shibosoondery v. Rakhal Dass ..	437
Shiddappa v. Pandurang ..	1108
Shidhojirao v. Nikojirao ..	90
Shidramappa v. Nilavabai.	951, 955, 982, 984
Shidhojirao v. Naikoji ..	99
Shimbhu v. Gayachand.	98, 1032
Shinappaya v. Rajamma.	149, 320
Shingappaya v. Rajamma ..	319
Shiv Singh v. Dakho ..	265
Shiv v. Virappa ..	612
Shiv Dyal v. Ram Jiwaya ..	598
Shiv Golam v. Barran Singh.	428, 432, 434
Shivanath v. Tulshi.	488, 547
Shivappa v. Rudrava.	197, 204, 600
Shivji v. Datu.	211, 649
Shiv Surya v. Audinarayana ..	190
Shivji Rao v. Vasant Rao.	405, 406, 421, 425
Shivamurtappa v. Virappa.	603, 612 617, 618, 624, 640, 641, 661, 666, 669, 670
Shivram v. Sheridhar ..	692
Shiyali v. Calve ..	182
Shome Sankar v. Rajesar.	930, 933, 946
Shookmoy v. Manohari.	448, 444, 643, 790
Shosinath v. Krishna.	225, 226, 227
Shree Mahant Kishora v. The Coimbatore, etc., Co. ..	114
Shree Nath v. Radhanath ..	864
Shreepada v. Sripada.	1090, 1096
Shree Shankar v. Ram Shewak ..	293
Shri Balusu v. Shri Balusu ..	237
Sri Ganesh v. Keshavram ..	702
Shridhar v. Hiralal.	112, 119
Shrikrishna Das v. Nathu Ram.	461, 999
Srinivas v. Balwant ..	246
Shrinivas v. Hanmant.	246, 1097
Shrinivas v. Thiruvengada.	414, 448
Shrinivashabmant v. Gurunath ..	670
Shripad v. Vithal.	224, 225
Shri Raghunadha v. Sri Brozo ..	602
Shri Ram v. Hari Sheran ..	609
Shri Raman v. Shree Gopal.	444, 445, 446
Shrish Chandra v. Maima Chandra.	615, 619
Shumbhu v. Gayanchand ..	103
Shukuntala v. Kaushalya ..	1185
Shumshere (Raja) v. Dilraj Koorwar.	182, 234
Shunker v. Shunkerjee ..	224
Shunmugan v. Subha Reddi ..	459
Shunmugaroya v. Manikka ..	769
Shunmugha v. Kovappa.	679, 1087, 1091
Shushee Mohun v. Aukilchandei.	427
Shyam Bhai v. Purushottam Das.	338
Shyamcharan v. Sricharan ..	251
Shyam Narain v. Jadu Nath ..	1132
Shyam Narain v. Suraj Narain.	552, 557, 558, 559
Shyam Sunder v. Jagannath.	460, 491
Shyama v. Naba ..	818
Shyama Bai v. Purushottam Das..	333
Shyama Charan v. Prafulla ..	262
Shyamadas v. Radhika ..	607
Shyabalal v. Saudamini ..	230
Shyama Charan v. Sagun ..	806
Shyamanand v. Rama Kanta.	194, 693, 927
Shyamlal v. Bijay Narain.	502, 586
Sib Chunder v. Treeporah.	892, 1011
Sibbosoondery v. Bussomuty ..	610
Siddappa v. Pandurang ..	1083
Siddessury v. Janardan.	318, 322, 330, 350, 351, 567
Siddheshwar v. Deokali.	546, 561
Sidh Gopal v. Beharilal ..	572
Siddick v. Mhd. Hushum ..	303
Sidessur v. Doorga ..	168
Siddessury v. Janardan ..	354
Sidlingappa v. Sidava.	146, 320

	PAGE.
Sigu v. Segu ..	671
Sikhamani v. Ammani ..	593
Sikherchund v. Dulputty ..	458
Sikhi v. Venkatasamy.	324, 325
Simmani v. Muthammal.	930, 938, 940, 1149
Simbhu Nath v. Golap Singh.	520, 521, 522, 561, 563
Simbunath v. Gulab Singh ..	518
Simpson (In re) ..	239
Simpson v. Bachman ..	503
Sinammal v. Administrator-General.	98, 139, 140, 141, 145
Sinde v. Sinde ..	740
Sindigi v. Sindigi.	194, 248
Singa v. Venkataramana ..	599
Singa Pillai v. Ayyaneri ..	728
Singam v. Draupadi.	1050, 1102
Singa Iyer v. Venkatramier ..	615
Singamma v. Vingamuri ..	225
Singaracharia v. Krishnaswami.	882
Singaramma v. Vinjamuri.	226, 227, 228
Sinnammal v. A.G.	139, 140, 141
Sinnachami v. Ramasamy ..	212
Sinthayee v. Thanakapudayan.	331, 349, 354
Sir Mohan v. Brij Behari ..	396
Sir Mohan v. MacGregor ..	644
Sirajut Haq v. Imamuddin.	823, 828
Sipal v. Madho ..	947
Sita v. Deonath ..	955
Sita Bai v. Ram Deo ..	1089
Sita Bai v. Ramachandra.	350, 351
Sita Baksh v. Gajraj ..	929
Sita Bux v. Jagat Pal ..	496
Sita Devi v. Gopal Saran.	59, 157
Sita Dasi v. Our Sahai ..	1092
Sita Devi v. Gopi Saran ..	320
Sita Ram v. Beni Prasad ..	551
Sitaram v. Ganpat ..	931
Sitaram v. Harihar ..	539
Sita Ram v. Zalim Singh ..	559
Sita Saran v. Jagat.	1099, 1100
Sitabai v. Bapu.	192, 1101
Sitabai v. Ganpat ..	931
Sitabai v. Govind Rao ..	181
Sitabai v. Ramachandra Rao.	146, 148
Sitabai v. Wasant Rao.	1131, 1143, 1156, 1157
Sitanna v. Viranna ..	1164
Sitanath v. Haimabutty ..	320
Sitaram v. Aheeree ..	115
Sitaram v. Beniprasad ..	471
Sitaram v. Dulam.	1031, 1040, 1041
Sitaram v. Hurihar.	186, 204, 206, 230
Sitaram v. Khandu ..	1120
Sitaram v. Laxman.	129, 130, 905, 913, 935
Sitaram v. Lachman ..	100
Sitaram v. Manmohan ..	650
Sitaram v. Sitaram ..	834
Sitaram v. Varihai ..	537
Sitaram v. Viranna ..	1060
Sitaram Bhat v. Sitaram ..	99
Sitaramasami v. Midatana.	517, 557, 558

	PAGE.
Sitha Bai v. Radha Bai ..	314
Sitla Baksh v. Gajraj ..	929
Sitla Bux v. Jagat Pal ..	544
Sita Baksh v. Gajraj Singh ..	946
Sital Prasad v. Bansidhar ..	629
Sital Singh v. Kalka Singh ..	571
Siva v. Palani ..	1115
Siva Subramania v. Pirama ..	1070
Sivagnana v. Kesalarama ..	406
Sivasubramanya v. Subramaniam.	902
Sivanga Zemindar v. Lakshmana.	376
Sivarama v. Bagavan ..	154
Sivaramayya v. Venkata ..	1190
Sivarama v. Veerappa ..	151
Sivaramamurti v. Venkayya.	423, 425
Sivasami v. Sevugan.	442, 446
Sivasinga v. Minal.	142, 214, 940, 941, 1164, 1166, 1169, 1179
Sivasubramania v. Krishnammal.	90
Sivaya v. Munisami ..	291
Sivayya v. Rami Reddi.	876, 882
Skinner v. Naunihal Singh ..	775
Shinner v. Orde.	283, 286, 307
Slatterie v. Pooley ..	241
Smith v. Smith ..	151
Sabapati v. Somasundaram ..	555
Sobhaddi v. Gobind ..	910
Sobhandramma v. Varahalaxmi.	336, 349
Sobhanadri v. Sriramulu.	294, 296, 349, 455, 509
Sobharam v. Makdu.	537, 555
Sobunslal v. Harbanslal ..	375
Sodlie v. Sleersingh ..	126
Sohai Ram v. Ramlal ..	188
Sohan v. Hiran ..	1117
Sohan Lal v. Atal Nath ..	295
Sohan Lal v. Durga ..	937
Sohodra v. Roy Jung ..	1047
Sohoni v. Rajkumar ..	1190
Soiru v. Narayan.	449, 450, 516
Sokkanada v. Sokkanadha.	257, 357, 471, 477, 478, 479
Solaimalai v. Sokkammal ..	201
Solomon v. Abdool ..	583
Solukhna v. Ramdolal.	179, 182, 200, 201
Soman Koeri v. Goshain ..	497
Somariya v. Bhularya ..	57
Solem Town Bank v. Ramaswami.	552
Somappayya v. Kanugappayya ..	114
Somangowda v. Bhurmogodda ..	433
Somashekhararaja v. Subhadramaji.	60, 184, 227
Somashekhar v. Mahadeo.	74, 220
Somesundar v. Muragappa ..	557
Somasundara v. Duraisami ..	176
Soma Sundar v. Ganga Bissen ..	379
	346, 351
Somasundaram v. Vaithilinga.	910, 987
Some v. Dhondu ..	448
Someshwari v. Maheshwari ..	709
Somruddin v. Abdul Hussein ..	1191
Sonaluxmi v. Vishnu Prasad.	60, 115
Sonam v. Narasimhulu ..	406
Sonatan v. Ratan.	74, 75

PAGE.

Sonatun v. Juggat Soondaree. 790, 809, 810, 811, 812
Sonet Koer v. Himmut .. 986
Soni Bai v. Dhanraj. 219, 227, 230
Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal. 1059, 1089
Sonu v. Dondu. 294, 304
Soobraniah v. Nataraja .. 923
Soobh Piarthee Lal v. Soobah .. 280
Soodasum v. Lokenath .. 148
Soogunchand v. Gopalgir .. 62
Sookheemoney v. Mohendro. 830, 988
Sookragi v. Government .. 371
Soonkoro v. Soonkoro .. 240
Soona Mayna v. Soona Navena .. 802
Soonder v. Bennud .. 303
Soondar v. Gadadhar. 176, 193, 195, 237
Soondur v. Kishoreelal .. 242
Soonder Narain v. Bennud Ram. 282, 283
Soorendranath v. Heeramonee. 74, 75, 89, 761, 903, 926, 967
Soorja Koer v. Nath Baksh Singh. 341
Soorjemoney v. Denobhundoo. 377, 749, 750, 786, 788, 900, 1031, 1042, 1132
Soorjemoney v. Brojendra .. 358
Soorjoo v. Krishnan. 390, 1058, 1062
Soorta v. Kanaka .. 222
Sooryudu v. Hanumayya .. 1130
Sootrugun v. Sabitrya. 236, 237, 238
Sorolab v. Bhoobun Mohun .. 604
Soshi v. Ganesh .. 411
Soshi Kumar v. Chandra Kumar. 363
Sctan Ram v. Parduman .. 458
Sowdaminee v. A.G. See Saodamini v. Administrator-General.
Soudaminey v. Jogesh Chunder. 607, 1010
Soundara v. Saravana .. 537
Soundararajan v. Arunachalam. 98, 432, 591, 634, 931, 932
Sounya v. Kandasami .. 1123
Sountharapandian v. Periaveru. 253, 254
Sourendra v. Hari Prasad .. 71
Sourimuthu v. Pavadai .. 420
Southey v. Somerville .. 800
Sowbagia v. Manika .. 351
Speight v. Gaunt. 841, 842
Spencer v. Chesterfield (Earl) .. 305
Sravan v. Kashiram .. 578
Srenarain v. Lallut Narain. 268, 269
Srenath v. Probodh .. 318
Sreeman v. Gopichunder. 727, 731
Sreeman Chunder v. Gopal Chunder .. 731
Sreemutty v. Sibchunder .. 775
Sreenarain v. Bhya Jha. 179, 270, 272, 973, 1030, 1150
Sri Narain v. Raghubans .. 559
Sreenath v. Monmohini .. 427
Sreenath v. Ruttun .. 1059
Sreenath v. Surbo. 1148, 1159
Sreenevassein v. Sashymmal .. 220
Sreenivasammal v. Vijoyammal .. 772
Sreepati v. Krishnachandra .. 833
Sreeram v. Puddomookhee .. 340
Sreeramulu v. Kristamma. 1047, 1122, 1123

PAGE.

Sreeramulu v. Sreeramulu .. 258
Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu. 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 70, 73, 166, 230
Sri Chand v. Suraj Kuar .. 430
Sri Gajapati v. Maharani .. 1033
Sri Chidambara v. Manikam .. 823
Sri Gajapathi v. Sri Gajapathi .. 57
Sri Ganesh v. Keshavrav. 103, 809
Sri Gobind v. Brij Kumar .. 632
Sri Gopal v. Amba Debi .. 380
Sri Gopal v. Radha Binode. 824, 825, 827, 870
Sri Kanchumarthi v. Kanchumarthi .. 202
Sri Krishna Das v. Nathu Ram. 511, 960, 1083
Sri Mohan v. Brij Behary. 385, 392, 1053, 1059, 1061, 1064, 1148
Sri Mohan v. MacGreegar .. 642
Sri Narain v. Raghubans Rai. 543, 559
Sree Narayan v. Kishen Soondery. 281
Sri Pal v. Surajbali. 1025, 1026, 1129, 1130
Sri Pratab Chandra Deo v. Sri Raja Jagadish Chandra .. 719
Sri Raja Bommadevara v. Naganna. 319, 330
Sri Raja Viravara v. Sri Raja Viravara. 698, 712
Sri Raja Venkatta v. Sri Chandra. 251
Sri Rajah Venkata v. Sri Rajah Rangayya. 250, 251, 406
Sri Ram v. Inchi .. 128
Sri Ram Janki v. Jagadamba. 1023, 1040, 1140
Sri Ranga v. Srinivasa. 595, 648
Sri Thakurji v. Nanda Ahir 417, 418
Sri Thakur Ramkrishna v. Ratanchand. 470, 474
Sri Virada v. Sri Brozo. 185, 186, 191, 201, 207, 208, 258
Sridhar v. Kalipada. 1133, 1143
Srimati Nrityahoni v. Lakhan .. 730
Srinath v. Probodh Chunder. 338, 339, 638, 667
Srinath v. Prosunno Kumar .. 1122
Srinibash v. Monmohini .. 786
Srinivas v. Balwant .. 219
Srinivasa v. Dandayudapani .. 942
Srinivasa v. Evalappa. 430, 807, 802, 845, 848, 852, 872
Srinivasa v. Krishnasamy .. 634
Srinivasa v. Kuppan. 72, 252
Srinivasa v. Kuppuswami .. 532
Srinivasa v. Lakshmi. 326, 330, 337, 338
Srinivasa v. Municipal Council .. 543
Srinivasa v. Rangasami. 185, 187, 190, 207, 868, 972
Srinivasa v. Thiruvengadatha .. 649
Srinivasa v. Tiruvengada. 130, 652, 653
Sripal Singh v. Prodyot Kumar .. 561

PAGE.

Sripat Sing v. Prodyot Kumar. 499, 500
Sripat Chander v. Rajah Jagadesh. 704
Sripat Singh v. P.K. Tagore .. 562
Sripathi v. Kunderam (Khudi Ram). 808, 829, 832, 836
Sriram v. Hari Charan .. 609
Sriramulu Ramayya. 217, 224, 225
Srirangammal v. Sandammal .. 316
Sriramulu v. Andalammal .. 1067
Srish Chandra v. Mania Chandra. 614
S. Tabb Ali v. S. Abdool .. 1166
Stapilton v. Stapilton. 572, 574
Stokes v. Lewis .. 495
Stewart v. Stewart .. 578
Stockby v. Parsons .. 1092
Stockby v. Stockby .. 574
Stokes v. Lewis, .. 495
Strimuttu v. Dorasinga .. 1071
Sturla v. Freccia .. 106
Suba Singh v. Sarafraz Kunwar. 907, 918, 948, 952, 965, 967
Subarao v. Mahadevi .. 422
Subapati v. Thandavaroya .. 419
Subba Row v. Ananthanarayana. 614
Subba v. Annatha .. 612
Subba v. Changalomma. 712, 1095
Subba v. Doraisami .. 765
Subba v. Maula .. 609
Subba v. Naikar. 466, 467, 1065
Subba v. Venkatrama. 415, 418, 993, 995
Subba Rao v. Mahalakshmamma. 274
Subba Rao v. Krishnamachari .. 414
Subba Reddi v. Alagammal. 612, 663
Subba Reddi v. Chengalamma .. 1045
Subbaiya v. Mhd. Mustappa .. 851
Subbamanick v. Sankara .. 232
Subbamma v. Adimoorthappa .. 187
Subbalakshmi v. Narayan .. 1067
Subbammal v. Avudayammal. 1058, 1114
Subbarami v. Ramamma. 757, 758
Subbaraya v. Chellappa .. 939
Subbaraya v. Devandra .. 539
Subbaraya v. Ramaswami. 84, 86, 145, 913, 995, 1164
Subbarayar v. Subbammal .. 177
Subbarayudu v. Kotayya .. 869
Subbarayudu v. Subbanna .. 305
Subbarayulu v. Ratnam .. 533
Subbaroya v. Rajagopala .. 460
Subbayya v. Bhawani. 146, 320
Subbayya v. Chirumamella .. 1155
Subbayya v. Rangayya .. 80, 81
Subbe Goundan v. Krishanamachari. 414, 420
Subbamma v. Veerayya .. 1190
Subbhana v. Venkatakrishnan .. 1115
Subbi v. Ramkrishna .. 1121
Subbiah v. Gundlapudi 366
Subbiah v. Rangaia .. 270
Subbiah v. Thulasi .. 640
Subbuchetti v. Arunachalam. 571, 572, 584
Subedar v. Bhikam .. 951
Subhaluvammal v. Ammakutti .. 230
Subha Goundan v. Krishnamachari. 442, 460, 547

PAGE.

Subha Rau v. Ram Rau .. 617
Subhanarayana v. Narendra .. 296
Subbaraya v. Kamu 371
Subbaraya v. Kylasa. 972, 973
Subhaiaya v. Manika .. 671
Subharaya v. Mudali .. 1135
Subharaya v. Rajaram .. 644
Subharaya v. Ramasami. 141, 142, 1166, 1167, 1168, 1169, 1170
Subbarayar v. Subbammal .. 229
Subharaya v. Subhakka .. 322
Subbharayudu v. Kottaya .. 869
Subharayulu v. Kamalavallithayaramma .. 329
Subhadrama v. Narasimhaswami .. 320
Subharazu v. Venkataratnam .. 619
Subhayya v. Chellamma. 437, 843
Subhayya v. Ramchandra .. 633
Subbayya v. Surayya. 375, 437, 633
Subhayyar v. Mhd. Mustapha .. 859
Subharamanya v. Ammayee. 280, 284, 285, 309
Subramania v. Arumuga. 294, 295, 296, 455
Subramania v. Arunachelam. 608, 1035, 1129, 1131, 1132, 1133, 1137, 1139, 1140, 1143, 1149, 1172
Subramania v. Chidambara. 396, 397
Subramania v. Gopala. 390, 543, 544
Subramania v. Kaliani. 329, 342, 349, 543, 544
Subramania v. Lakshmana .. 822
Subramania v. Muthummal .. 349
Subramania v. Muthuswamy .. 72
Subramania v. Nagathana. .. 860
Subramania v. Padmanabha. 420, 460, 618, 619, 1102
Subramanyam v. Parameshwaram. 275
Subramania v. Rakku .. 895
Subramania v. Ramachandra .. 636
Subramania v. Ranga .. 969
Subramania v. Ranganath. 960, 970
Subramania v. Rathnavelu. 907, 930, 931, 945, 966, 1030, 1146
Subramania v. Sabapathi. 533, 552, 554, 1170
Subramania v. Sadasiva. 558, 559
Subramanyar v. Sheik Ghamu. 1190, 1191
Subramania v. Venkataramier .. 550
Subramaniappan v. Subramaniayyan .. 450
Subramaniam v. Vembammal. 340, 341
Subramanian v. Somasundaram .. 219
Subramania v. Siva. 713, 714, 717, 718
Subramanya v. Valu. 144, 321
Subramanyam v. Venkamma. 188, 191
Subrao v. Mahadevi. 419, 426, 492, 498, 889
Subrao v. Radha. 58, 218
Subroya v. Krishna .. 342
Subraya v. Nagappa .. 532
Subrayudu v. Kamalavathi .. 652
Sucaram v. Kalidas .. 289
Suchi v. Harnandhan Singh .. 295

PAGE.

Suchit v. Budhna .. 1116
Sudalai v. Gomati .. 607
Sudaminee v. Jogesh Chunder .. 568
Sudanund v. Bonomallee. 168, 254, 255, 256, 623, 747
Sudanund v. Soorjoo. 623, 747
Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu. 367, 397, 398, 400, 402, 403
Suddentannissa v. Najada .. 86
Sudhamani v. Surat Lal .. 794
Sudindra v. Budan .. 870
Sugden v. Lord St. Leonards .. 765
Sugeeram v. Juddoobun .. 1102
Suja Chand v. Hemraj .. 362
Sujan Devi v. Jagir Mal. 973, 980
Sukbir Singh v. Mangeistar .. 76
Sukh Dei v. Kedarnath .. 768
Sukh Dial v. Mani Ram .. 634
Sukh Dial v. Ram Ditti .. 323
Sukhadakanta v. Joginikanta. 447, 450, 451, 567, 568
Sukhmayee v. Manoranjan .. 1000
Sukhamoni v. Ishan Chunder .. 455
Sukhari v. Bhawani .. 1099
Sukhbasi v. Guman Singh. 126, 231, 247
Sukhdeo v. Bhulai .. 1115
Sukhdeo v. Jhapat. 518, 533
Sukhdeo v. Madhu Sudan .. 527
Sukhdevdoss v. Mt. Choti Bai .. 207
Sukhram v. Uderam. 321, 574
Sukkho, v. Ramcharan .. 125
Sukhlal v. Bapu .. 505
Sukhlal v. Bishambhar. 740, 869
Sukmoi v. Shashi Bhushan .. 460
Sukumari v. Ananta. 171, 227
Suleman v. Lachman .. 1135
Suleman v. Perichevla .. 1077
Sulin Mohan v. Rajakrishna. 1107, 1108
Sultan Begam v. Debi Prasad .. 1195
Sultan Singh v. Bahadur .. 670
Sultan Singh v. Hashmat .. 292
Sunatbhai v. Someshvar .. 481
Sumbochunder v. Ram Durga .. 1014
Sumbo Chunder v. Narain. 253, 254, 256
Sumbuchunder v. Gungachurn .. 1015
Sumera v. Mormuket. 584, 596
Sumer v. Liladhar .. 549
Sumitra Bai v. Hirbaji .. 1064
Summani v. Mullammal .. 72
Sumrun Thakoor v. Chunder. 607, 608, 609
Sumsuddin v. Abdul .. 1092
Sumundra v. Kale Charn .. 634
Sumurun Singh v. Khedun Singh .. 105
Sunder v. Bennud Ram .. 280
Sundar v. Bansidhar .. 944
Sundar v. Parbati. 605, 606
Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen. 621
Sundar Lal v. Chittar Mal .. 450
Sundar Lal v. Kulla Ram .. 818
Sundara v. Krishnamurti .. 616
Sundarabai v. Jayavant. 505, 506
Sundarabai v. Shiv Narayana. 391, 392
Sundaram v. Krishnasami. 464, 1063

PAGE.

Sundaralingasami v. Ramasami .. 468
Sundaramayya v. Sitamma. 463, 464, 465, 466, 1063
Sundaran v. Ramasami .. 1147
Sundarambal v. Yagavana Gurakkal. 558, 833, 834
Sundaramma v. Kamakotiah. 596, 663
Sundarammal v. Ameenal. 915, 1181
Sundarammal v. Venkatasubier. 253, 254
Sundararajam v. Arunachalam .. 595
Sundaraja v. Pattanathusami. 294, 295, 298
Sundaresa v. Krishnamoorthy .. 391
Sundaresa v. Subramania .. 872
Sundaresan v. Viswanada .. 847
Sundari v. Nemye. 145, 1167, 1169
Sundari v. Pitambari. 84, 86, 141, 143, 145, 913, 914, 1166
Sundari v. Subramania .. 130
Sundarlal v. Brijlal .. 417
Sundarlal v. Raghunandan. 422, 426, 540, 549, 550, 889
Sundarmani v. Gokulanand .. 283
Sudarsanam v. Narsinhulu. 404, 589, 631
Sunder v. Shiaman .. 302
Sunder Bahu v. Monhur .. 605
Sunder Das v. Baldoe Singh .. 264
Sundra v. Arunachalam .. 590
Sundarabai v. Hanmant .. 223
Sundarabai v. Shivnarayan .. 130
Sundaram v. Krishnaswami 378
Sundarendra v. Doorgasundari .. 834
Sundrammal v. Rangasami. 962, 969, 970, 973, 975, 984
Sunimani v. Mullammal .. 72
Suntosh v. Gera Pathuch .. 300
Superandhwaj v. Garuradwaj. 92, 694
Suppamal v. Collector .. 830
Suptu v. Sakharam .. 454
Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Prasad. 395, 401, 410, 415, 416, 419, 420, 422, 440, 441, 442 452, 457, 488, 492, 498, 500, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 526, 528, 559, 560, 561, 562, 613, 614, 747, 1159
Suraj Bhan Singh v. Sah Chain Sukh. 461, 462
Suraj Deo Narain v. Ramdewan. 1161
Suraj Jote v. Attar Kumari. 60, 130, 936, 937, 938, 1204
Suraj Mal v. Nathwa. 1093, 1196
Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain. 587, 588 590, 591, 593, 595, 626, 628, 634, 651, 671
Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal. 369, 370, 379
Suraj Pal v. Gajraj. 616, 663, 664
Suraj Prasad v. Gulab Chand. 442, 443
Suraj Prasad v. Makhan Lal .. 537
Surajmani v. Rabi Nath .. 1033
Surampalli v. Surampalli. 141, 330, 351
Suraneni v. Suraneni .. 631
Surat Laksmiah v. Kothandarama. 436

PAGE.

Surayya v. Annapurnamma .. 1090
Suraya v. Lakshminarayana .. 948
Surbomingola v. Mohendranath .. 817
Surbessur v. Gossain Doss. 432, 447, 629
Surendra v. Doorgasoonderi. 191, 834
Surendra v. Hari Mohan .. 410
Surendra v. Kalachand. 231, 256
Surendra v. Rani Dasai .. 763
Surendra v. Sailaja. 176, 200
Surendra Krishna v. Ishwar Bhubaneshwari. 809, 812, 817, 821, 833
Surendra Nath v. Atul Chandra. 295, 297
Surendra Nath v. Brindavan .. 535
Surendra Nath v. Hiramani. 74, 101
Surendranath v. Ashutosh. 910, 995
Sures Chandra v. Lalit Mohan.. 794
Surressur v. Mohesh Rani. 581, 1030, 1064, 1067, 1070, 1071, 1082
Sureya Rao v. Suryanarayana.. 1072
Suriya Rao v. Raja of Pittapur. 81, 261, 262, 793, 901
Suraj Kunwari v. Har Narayana. 790
Surja Prasad v. Golab Chand .. 535
Surja Prasad v. Khwahish Ali .. 456
Surja Prasad v. Raj Mohun .. 425
Surjan Singh v. Sardar Singh. 921, 927
Surjokant v. Mohesh Chunder. 254, 255
Surjyamoni v. Kali Kanta. 145, 146, 147, 150, 157, 395
Surjamoni v. Rabinath .. 794
Surnani (Raja) v. Surnani (Raja). 893
Surju Prasad v. Ram Saran .. 418
Surnomoyee v. Secy. of State. 142, 1169
Surti v. Narain Das. 600, 993
Surendrakrishna v. Iswar Bhubaneswari .. 832
Surya v. Lakshminarayana .. 952
Suryanarayana v. Balsubramania. 336, 343, 344
Suryanarayana v. Patanna .. 686
Suryanarayana v. Sammanna .. 642
Suryanarayana v. Tammanna. 404, 407
Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana. 196, 198, 199
Swaminatha v. Swaminath .. 1078
Swamirayachari v. Heirs of Mudgalachari .. 433
Swamiyar v. Chhokalingam. 600, 602
Swinfen v. Swinfen .. 772
Syed Delijan v. Bila Akhtari. 876, 878
Syad Taffazzool v. Raghoonath.. 405
Syed Habibur Rasul v. Ashita .. 613
Syed Kasam v. Jorawar Singh. 434, 626, 671
Syed Munir .. 157
Syud Ali v. Gopal Dass .. 101

T

Tada Bulli v. Gangireddy .. 476
Tada Bulli v. Tada Bulli .. 650
Tadibojina v. Debha Kutti .. 1140
Taff Vale v. Amalgamated Society. 852
Tagirchand v. Sant Lal. .. 422

PAGE.

Tagore v. Tagore. 173, 336, 339, 380, 581, 666, 691, 699, 712, 720, 729, 735, 740, 743, 748, 749, 757, 775, 776, 787, 800, 814, 819, 839, 900, 901, 902, 904, 907, 908, 1142
Tahaldai v. Gaya Pershad. 944, 973, 976
Tahboonissa v. Sham Kishore .. 854
Taij Singh v. Kousilla. 84, 995
Takait v. Basanta. 145, 146
Talak Chand v. Jitammal .. 494
Talemand v. Rukmina. 333, 334, 343
Taliwar Singh v. Phulwan Singh.. 623
Tammireddi v. Gangireddi. 448, 455, 476, 482, 487, 649, 745, 748, 824
Tandavarayya v. Valli Ammal .. 452
Tandayuthapani v. Raghunath .. 593
Tangirala v. Manikya .. 834
Tani v. Rikhi Ram. 960, 973
Tanistry Case .. 98
Tapayya v. Ram Krishna .. 1029
Tappo v. E. (1937). 130, 1204
Tara v. Krishna. 940, 941, 1149, 1167
Tara v. Reele .. 444
Tara Kiran v. Hari Kishan .. 443
Tara Kolmu v. Kripa Moyee .. 231
Tara Kumari v. Chaturbhuj. 626, 714
Tara Mohun v. Kripa Moyee. 254, 257, 260
Tara Munee v. Devnarayan. 179, 182 215
Tara Munee v. Mottee. 271, 1166, 1169, 1170
Tara Naikin v. Nana Lakshman. 97, 274
Tara Sundari v. Saroda Charan.. 342
Tarachand v. Afzal Beg .. 641
Tarachand v. Nabinchandra .. 762
Tarachand v. Pudum. 678, 679
Tarachand v. Reeb Ram. 402, 448, 652, 892
Tarachurn v. Joy Narain. 428, 435
Taraghanand v. Board of Trade. 1204
Taraikakya v. Radhasundaree .. 912
Tarakesswar v. Shoshi. 782, 907
Tarkeswari v. Sashishekhareswar .. 380
Tarakumari v. Narayan .. 719
Taramonee v. Lukheemonee .. 1010
Tarchand v. Reeb Ram .. 104
Taranath v. Lakshmi .. 850
Tarinee v. Bamun Das .. 259
Tarinee v. Sharoda. 189, 214
Tarini Prasad v. Bhola Nath. 494, 1052, 1058, 1059
Tarini Charan v. Debendralal .. 661
Tarokessur v. Soshi. 750, 800
Tarrireddi v. Gangireddi .. 476
Taruk Chunder v. Hurro Sunker.. 247
Tarunginee v. Dwarkanath. 341, 342
Tataram v. Ramcharan .. 280
Tatawa v. Basawa .. 1149
Tatayya v. Rammakrishnamma. 1048, 1051, 1052, 1053, 1056, 1057, 1063
Tauck Chunder v. Joodhesser .. 569
Taruk Chander v. Jodeshur .. 434
(See Taruk Chunder v. Joodhesser) 428

	PAGE.
Tayammal v. Seshachalla.	166, 170, 184, 205, 238
Teeluk Chunder v. Shama Churn.	168, 906, 910
Teencowree v. Dinanath	.. 1150
Tegh Indar Singh v. Harnam Singh	.. 609
Tehlkuar v. Amarnath	.. 1104
Tej Protab v. Champa.	590, 591, 604, 631
Tejo Bibi v. Murlidar	.. 852
Tejabai v. Mohanlal	.. 220
Tejpal v. Ganga	.. 291
Tekait v. Basanta	.. 141
Takhu v. Waliah	.. 946
Teku v. Busti.	173, 910
Tellis v. Saldhana.	57, 66, 80, 81, 82, 83, 633
Tewari Raghunath v. Subhadra	.. 252
Thackersey v. Harbhun.	836, 841, 845, 873
Thadi v. Moola	.. 419
Thadi Ramamurthi v. Moola Kamial	.. 890
Thakoo v. Ganga Prasad.	1135, 1142
Thakoorain v. Mohanlal.	922, 972
Thakoor Rai v. Deyel Baluk Ram.	1021, 1022, 1024, 1025, 1029, 1040, 1126, 1128, 1152, 1153, 1154, 1171
Thakro v. Ganga.	1130, 1143
Thakro v. Goran	.. 1129
Thakur Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram.	71, 151, 1135
Thakur Din v. Seetla Sahai	.. 417
Thakur Prashad v. Bhagbatti.	323, 609
Thakur Prasad v. Mt. Dipa.	1078, 1103, 1117, 1056
Thakur Ram Krishna v. Ratarichand	.. 470
Thakur Rudra Pratab v. Nirman Prasad	.. 694
Thakurain v. Mohun Lall	.. 922
Thakur Ishri Singh v. Thakur Badeo Singh	.. 754
Thakurji v. Nanda Ahir.	414, 415, 442
Thakurmani v. Dai Rani	.. 1034
Thakusi v. Ganda Mall	.. 395
Thal Kuar v. Amar Nath	.. 1054
Thalagara v. Thalagara	.. 251
Thaman Singh v. Jit Singh	.. 231
Thamardas v. Gani	.. 335
Thammanina v. Akarapu.	475, 484
Thandavaraya v. Shunmugam.	444, 445, 446
Thandavan v. Valliamma	.. 597
Thandayuthapani v. Raghunatha	.. 671
Thangam v. Suppa.	600, 602
Thangathanni v. Ramu	.. 623
Thanikachala v. Alamelu	.. 436
Thankur Titnath v. Loknath	.. 99
Thapita v. Thapita.	115, 141, 143, 145
Tharat Karim v. Bal Kuar	.. 728
Thattan v. Mangalath	.. 850
Thaung v. Ma Than	.. 787
Thangathanni v. Ramu.	228, 229, 230
Thayalambal v. Krishna	.. 1140
Thayammal v. Annamalai.	151, 903, 1158
Thayammal v. Kupanna.	279, 280, 284, 293, 294, 301
Thimappaya v. Lakshminarayana.	455
Thirumalachariar v. Andal	.. 971
Thomas v. Thomas	.. 635
Thompson v. Thompson	.. 149
Thomson v. Shakespeare	.. 814
Thuboo v. Khoob Lall	.. 656
Thukku Bai v. Attavar	.. 1194
Thuppan v. Hucheri	.. 844
Thwa v. Ma Baw	.. 298
Tibeck v. Phoolman	.. 1058
Tika v. Mahabir	.. 664
Tikait v. Malhjyi	.. 550
Tikam Chand v. Sudarsan	.. 450
Tikan Singh v. Dhan Kunwar	.. 152
Tikaram v. Shama Charan	.. 1122
Tikaram Purshottam v. Natha Daji	924
Tilak Chand v. Jilamal	.. 296
Tilukchand v. Soudamini	.. 495
Timama v. Amchimani	.. 620
Timancharyan v. Balacharya	.. 376
Timmappa v. Mahalinga.	642, 647
Timmappa v. Parameshriamma	.. 328
Timumoni v. Nibarun	.. 940
Tirath Ram v. Kahan Devi.	254, 973, 1028
Tirbeni v. Mhd. Umar	.. 601
Tirbhuvan v. Rameshar	.. 246
Tirthamayi v. Atikulla	.. 436
Tirumalachariar v. Andal Ammal.	965, 966, 970, 971, 973, 974
Tirumamagal v. Ramaswami.	993, 994
Tirupatiraju v. Venkayya.	1106, 1117
Tirupayna v. Malidi	.. 302
Tiruvambala v. Pandaram.	808, 871
Tiruvengadath v. Sriniwasa	.. 870
Tiruvengalam v. Butchayya	.. 197
Toolsidas v. Madan	.. 231
Toolsey v. Luckymoney	.. 1161
Toolseydas v. Premji	.. 904
Topammal v. Menghomal	.. 475
Torit Bhoosum v. Tara Prosonno.	636, 637
Tosharpal v. District Judge	.. 541
Totan v. Ballabhaji	.. 943
Totawa v. Basawa	.. 939
Tottempudi v. Tottempudi	.. 375
Trailakhya v. Radhasundari	.. 913
Trailokyanath v. Chintamony	.. 428
Treelochun v. Raj Kishen	.. 961
Trembak Das v. Nagindas	.. 92
Tricum v. Khemji	.. 883
Trigge v. Lavallee	.. 575
Trikam v. Natha	.. 950
Trikum Das v. Haridas	.. 817
Trimmappa v. Mahalinga	.. 689
Trilochun v. Umesh.	1076, 1101
Trimbak v. Gopalshet	.. 452
Trilocan v. Raja Kishen	.. 964
Trimbak v. Lakshman.	647, 682, 853, 856
Trimbak v. Narayani	.. 646
Trimbak v. Pandurang.	424, 604, 657
Trimbak v. Sheikh Gulam	.. 762

PAGE.

Trimston v. Dalton .. 766
Trinidad Ashphalt Co. v. Coryat. 239
Tripoora v. Gopal Nath .. 660
Tripura v. Harimati. 1166, 1167
Tripurambha v. Venkataratnam. 210, 212
Tryankesar v. Basant Kumar .. 679
Trope v. MacDonald .. 801
Taffazul Hossein v. Raghunath .. 342
Tukaram v. Babaji .. 126
Tukaram v. Bapu .. 892
Tukaram v. Gunaji .. 145
Tukaram v. Narayan. 70, 1147, 1151
Tukaram v. Ramchandra. 260, 295, 297
Tukaram v. Yeen. 1068, 1080
Tularam v. Tulshi Ram. 396, 551
Tularam v. Shyam Lal .. 75
Tuljiram v. Mathhradas. 949, 961, 1024, 1025, 1029, 1030, 1032
Tulsa Bai v. Bhagwat Prasad .. 1123
Tulsamma v. Guntupalli .. 366
Tulsidas v. Vaghela. 294, 303
Tulshi Prasad v. Jakmohanlal .. 1059
Tulsi Ram v. Babu .. 537
Tulsi Ram v. Behari Lal. 58, 70, 71, 179, 182
Tuni Orain v. Leda Orain .. 91
Turner v. Hallard .. 798
Turner v. Meyars .. 9, 114
Turner v. Thompson .. 9
Tyson v. Smith. 94, 95, 96

U

Uajirao v. Vasanrao. 404, 421, 425, 552, 614
Uchhap v. Lakhan .. 638
Uda v. Imamuddin .. 247
Udai Chunder v. Ashutosh. 497, 1048, 1049, 1052, 1058
Udai Dat v. Ambika Prasad .. 1063
Udai Raj v. Bhagwan .. 761
Udaram v. Rama. 497, 498, 613
Udaram v. Ranu .. 413
Uddaram v. Sonkabai .. 323
Udaya v. Jadablal. 565, 682, 693, 700, 701
Udaram v. Bannu .. 422
Udaya Muthier v. Shenmughan .. 555
Ude Singh v. Mt. Daulat Kuar. 319, 348, 351
Udit Narayan v. Ranglal .. 442
Udu v. Durgadin .. 1093
Uji v. Hathi Lalu. 52, 97, 128
Ujiar v. Tilochan .. 63
Ulfat Rai v. Tej Narayan .. 461
Ullee, (In re) (53 L.T.). 321, 711
Umabai v. Bhaire .. 993
Umadoyi v. Gokoolanund .. 216
Umaid v. Udoi .. 920
Umaid Bahadur v. Udaichand. 923, 963, 971, 972, 974
Umamoyi Dasi v. Raja Janki .. 802
Umakant v. Martand .. 454

PAGE.

Uman Prasad v. Debi Prasad .. 957
Uman Parshad v. Gandharp. 727, 730, 731
Umar-baksh v. Dhanda .. 172
Umar Hayat v. Devi Das .. 293
Uma Shankar v. Aisha Khatun. 369, 1139
Uma Shankar v. Bai Ratan .. 433
Umashankar v. Nageswari. 966, 967, 969, 971, 972, 974, 975, 976, 977, 989
Uma Shunker v. Kali Komal. 253, 254
Uma Sundari v. Benode Lal. 613, 639
Uma Sundari v. Saurobinee. 182, 183
Umatorupagam v. Palanarayana .. 629
Umayorupagam v. Palnarayana. 592
Umbica Prasad v. Ram Sahay .. 521
Umdobi v. Mahomed Sarwar .. 65
Umed v. Goman .. 561
Umed v. Khushalbhai. 621, 622
Umed v. Nagindas. 111, 112, 113
Umra v. Mhd. Hayat .. 162
Umrao v. Badri .. 482
Umrao Kuar v. Sarabjit Singh .. 1151
Umrao Singh v. Lachman Singh. 575
Umrit v. Kidernath .. 338
Umrithnath v. Goureenath. 92, 360, 697
Umrit Kowaree v. Kider Nath .. 330
Umrott v. Kulyandos .. 1030
Underwood v. Wing .. 127
Unnamalai v. Official Assignee .. 319
Unni v. Kunchiamma .. 293
Unnopoornah v. Bhoobun .. 1026
Unnopoorna v. Ganga .. 552
Upadrastha v. Divi .. 686
Upendra v. Bindeseri. 644, 1117
Upendra v. Mhd. Faiz .. 639
Upendra v. Nobo Kishore. 1036, 1039, 1040
Upendra v. Thanda .. 903
Upendra Lal v. Hemchandra. 735, 739, 816, 817, 828
Upendra Nath v. Bhupendra Nath. 730
Upendra Nath v. Shibadasi .. 1105
Upendra Nath v. Umesh Chunder. 366
Upooroop v. Vandhee .. 452
Urjun Singh v. Ghunsiam .. 89
Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh. 430
Utharankat v. Utharankat .. 350
Utma Kuar v. Bhagawanta .. 314

V

V. E. A. R. M. Firm v. Mg. Ba. 462
Vachoora v. Vachoora .. 275
Vadilal v. Sheikhushal. 476, 478, 480
Vadlamudi v. Vadlamudi. 1064, 1066
Vadrevu v. Ryali. 187, 188, 221, 222
Vaduganadha v. Dorasinga .. 941
Vaidyanatha v. Aiyasamy. 433, 620, 653, 662, 668
Vaidyanatha v. Savithri .. 258
Vaidyanath v. Swaminatha. 881, 882
Vaikuntam v. Kallapiran. 112, 130, 296, 325

PAGE.

Vairavan v. Srinivasachariar. 876, 885
Vaishno Ditti v. Rameshri .. 103
Vaithinatham v. Gangarazu. 110, 112, 539
Vaithinath v. Tyagaraja .. 871
Vaithinatha v. Vaithinatha. 85, 730
Vaithilinga v. Ayyathorai. 915, 1181
Vaithilingam v. Muragalan. 227, 247
Vaithilingam v. Murugaian. 262, 263
Vaithilingam v. Natesa .. 230
Vaithilinga v. Srirangathanni .. 1116
Vaithilinga v. Srirangath. 1122, 1125
Vaithilinga v. Vijayathammal. .. 135
Valinaksha v. Rajnikanta .. 1181
Vallabha v. Madusudanan .. 102
Vallabh Ram v. Hariganga. 70, 993, 1163
Valu v. Ganga. 146, 330, 331
Valubai v. Govind. 226, 228
Vamanji v. Atmaram .. 614
Vaman v. Krishnaji .. 172
Vaman v. Vasudev. 604, 1190
Vandravan v. Manilal .. 172
Vanjapuri v. Panchamuthu .. 604
Vanks v. Goodfellow .. 769
Vappuluri v. Garinalla. 656, 1064
Varadaperumal v. Ardaneri .. 888
Varadarajan v. Srinivasa Rao. .. 532
Varadayya v. Munusamy .. 883
Varaguna v. Murugappa .. 708
Varjiban v. Ghelji. 1075, 1081
Vassonji v. Chanda Bibi. 775, 1026
Vasudeo v. Ramachandra .. 189
Vasudev v. Bhagwan .. 505
Vasudev v. Krishnaji .. 559
Vasudevan v. Secy. of State. 75, 76, 79, 89, 141, 234 1025
Vathiar (In re) .. 66
Vato v. Rowshun. 590, 592
Vatsalabai v. Vasudev .. 574
Vatsavava v. Venkatapathi .. 787
Vetu Koer v. Rawshun Singh .. 590
Vayidinada v. Appu .. 217
Vedachela v. Ranganatham. 72, 974
Vedachela v. Subramania. 39, 960, 961, 964, 965, 966, 967, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975
Vedanayaga v. Vendammal .. 53
Vedammal v. Vedanayaga. 53, 909, 913
Vedanayaga v. Vedammal. 99, 909
Vedathusri v. Commissioner of Income-tax .. 398
Vedavalli v. Mangamma .. 228
Vedilal v. Shah Khushal. 468, 471, 476
Veera v. Padmanabha .. 980
Veera Basavaraja v. Balasurya. 186, 188, 191, 208
Veerabhadra v. Marudaga. 1059, 1060, 1110
Veeranna v. Sarasiratnam .. 271
Veeranna v. Sibamma .. 322
Veeraperumal v. Naraina. 215, 225, 227
Veerasurappa v. Errappa .. 683
Veeraraghava v. Kota Reddi. 1041, 1043, 1133
Veerayya v. Gangamma. 903, 942, 1090, 1103

PAGE.

Vellaichami v. Mamundi .. 1156
Vellanki v. Venkata. 181, 188, 191, 200, 229, 943, 950
Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan. 163, 321, 322, 401, 601, 930, 931, 932
Vellappa (In re) .. 1062
Vellaswami v. Shivarama .. 772
Velu v. Kumaravelu .. 641
Vembu Iyer v. Srinivasa .. 289
Vemi v. Nallappa .. 551
Vemulapallai v. Maganti. 295, 302
Venalal v. Parajaram. 949, 961
Venkatachala Reddiar v. Venkatachella .. 327
Venell v. Veness .. 9
Vengamuthu v. Pandaveswara. 872, 874, 879
Veni v. Nellappa .. 591
Venjapuri v. Panchamuthu .. 595
Venka v. Lakshmi .. 539
Venkamma v. Sitamma .. 353
Venkamma v. Jonalagadda .. 206
Venkamma v. Savitramma. 281, 282
Venkamma v. Subramaniam .. 204
Venkamamidi v. Venkamamidi. 254, 260, 261
Venkappa v. Fakirgowda .. 232
Venkareddi v. Hanmant Gouda. 1134, 1144
Venkata v. Bhassyakarlu. 449, 642
Venkata v. Court of Wards. 255, 256, 366, 693, 712
Venkata v. Lakshman .. 935
Venkata v. Lakshmi .. 111
Venkata v. Narasingappa. 1045, 1047
Venkata v. Narayana .. 687
Venkata v. Papayya .. 236
Venkata v. Parthasarathy .. 254
Venkata v. Ponnusami .. 871
Venkata v. Purshottam. 600, 903, 994
Venkata v. Rangayya. 197, 204, 205, 251, 252
Venkata v. Subhadra. 177, 215, 225
Venkata v. Surenani. 972, 983, 984
Venkata v. Tuljaram .. 317
Venkata v. Uddagiri. 682, 683
Venkata v. Veerabhadrappa .. 1136
Venkata v. Venkata. 902, 1037, 1064, 1132, 1134, 1135, 1138, 1146
Venkatachalam v. Rama .. 130
Venkatachalam v. Visvanatha .. 712
Venkatachalapati v. Subharayadu. 874
Venkatacharyalu v. Mohana .. 540
Venkatacharyulu v. Rangacharyulu .. 116
Venkatacharyulu v. Venkata. 138, 527
Venkatachella v. Chinnaya .. 619
Venkatachella v. Parvatham. 97, 164, 930
Venkata Chella v. Thathammal .. 723
Venkatagiri v. Chandra. 971, 974
Venkatagiri v. Subharayadu .. 455
Venkata Krishnamma v. Annapurnamma .. 188

PAGE.

Venkatakrishnayya v. Lakhminarayan .. 110
Venkatalakshmamma v. Mohan .. 490
Venkatammal v. Andyappa. 333, 334, 341, 343, 346
Venkata Narasimha v. Subba Rao. 233 256
Venkatanarayan v. Somaraju .. 459
Venkatanarayana v. Subbamal. 196, 414, 421, 891, 1073, 1090, 1098, 1099, 1103
Venkatapathi v. Venkat Narasimha. 598, 593, 599
Venkatappanayanim v. Thimmanayyanim .. 901
Venkatarama v. Bappamma .. 188
Venkatarama v. Bhujanga. 1025, 1149, 1158, 1172
Venkatarama v. Bongowda .. 961
Venkatarama v. Maruthappa .. 436
Venkatarama v. Meeralaboi. 414, 421, 614
Venkatarama v. Senthivelu .. 561
Venkataramana v. Kastuviranga. 859
Venkataramadas v. Pachigolla .. 1136
Venkataramanya v. Venkatramna. 517, 937
Venkataramayya v. Seshamma .. 428
Venkatramayya v. Krishnayya .. 677
Venkataramanna v. Brammanna .. 684
Venkataramiah v. Subramaniam .. 498
Venkataramma v. Damodaram .. 836
Venkatarayudu v. Shivarama Krishnayya. 546, 591, 648, 653, 654
Venkata Rao v. Tulija Ram. 423, 497, 1082
Venkatarayar v. Srinivasa. 843, 870
Venkatasami v. Muthusami .. 283
Venkatasami v. Palaniappa. 470, 477
Venkataswami v. Sathiraw .. 277
Venkatasan v. Ethirajammah .. 284
Venkatsubba v. Ananda Rao .. 1029
Venkatasubramanian v. Thayarammah. 961, 962, 984, 1154
Venkata Surya v. Court of Wards. 701, 704, 707
Venkatav v. Mahadev .. 312
Venkateshwar v. Adinarayan .. 952
Venkateshwar v. Manikayammal .. 600
Venkatramanaya v. Venkatramana. 535
Venkatadri v. Parthasarathi .. 787
Venkattummal v. Andhuppa .. 332
Venkayya v. Lashmayya. 612, 614, 619, 636, 640
Venkayya v. Venkata. 305, 306
Venkayyama v. Venkatara .. 942
Venkayyamma v. Venkata. 890, 1024, 1033, 1090
Venkyamma v. Venkatramamma... 887
Venkayyamma v. Venkataramanayamma. 376, 763, 764, 887, 890, 937, 942, 1151
Venkiah v. Guraviah .. 891
Venkoba v. Ranganayaki. 376, 775
Venkoji v. Vishnu .. 1050

PAGE.

Venkopadhaya v. Kavari. 349, 354
Venkoylapatti v. Nagendla .. 275
Venku v. Muttukannu. 97, 1166
Venku v. Mahalinga. 271, 274, 401, 402, 996, 1164, 1168
Venkureddi v. Venkureddi .. 424
Venugopala v. Ramanadhan. 491, 538, 541, 549
Verabhai v. Bai Hiraba. 172, 183, 211
Verabhai Ajubhai v. Bai Hiraba. 273, 941
Veraprashiya v. Santanraja .. 199
Verge v. Somerville .. 821
Verumah Valia v. Ravi Varmah .. 859
Vesonji v. Chonda Bibi .. 1132
Vibhudapriya v. Lakshmindra .. 856
Vidyanatha v. Swaminatha. 845, 879
Vidyagavri v. Harandas. 155, 156
Vidyapurna v. Vidyanidhi. 808, 841, 842, 845, 854, 859, 870, 871
Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami. 742, 805, 808, 824, 828, 839, 848, 850, 852, 857, 859, 862, 864, 867
Vigneswara v. Bapayya .. 456
Vijaya v. Sripathi .. 340
Vijayasangh v. Shiv Sangh. 191, 192, 207, 208, 212, 229
Vijiarangam v. Lakshuman. 154, 177, 1028, 1124, 1129, 1130, 1145, 1151, 1155, 1172
Vijbhukhan v. Dayaram .. 461
Vigli v. Magan .. 432
Vijli v. Prabhalakshmi .. 975
Vikrama v. Vikrama. 1036, 1043, 1133
Vinayak v. Govinda. 1075, 1081
Vinayag v. Gopal. 643, 712
Vinayak v. Govindrao. 232, 257, 765
Vinayak v. Lakshmibai. 70, 924, 950, 1024, 1029, 1030, 1032
Vinayak v. Laxman .. 1040
Vinayak v. Ramkrishna .. 937
Vinayak Rao v. Vidyakar .. 1108
Vinjamanpati v. Vadlamanti .. 554
Vira v. Valappil .. 853
Viranwali v. Kundanlal .. 1098
Viraragava v. Ramalinga. 215, 221
Viraramamurthi v. Singaravelu. 164, 321
Virasami v. Subba Ram .. 864
Virasvami v. Appasvami. 115, 320
Virasangappa v. Rudrappa. 58, 98, 128, 129, 1025, 1129, 1130, 1172
Virayya v. Hanumanta. 217, 224, 225
Virrappa v. Muthusami .. 296
Virupaksha v. Ganab .. 1024
Virupakshappa v. Nilgangava. 265, 299, 313, 457
Visalakshi v. Sivaramien. 231, 232, 599
Visalatchi v. Annaswamy. 329, 330, 331
Visalatchumi v. Subbu Pillai. 751, 778
Vishnu v. Ganesh .. 698
Vishnu v. Gangadhar .. 651
Vishnu v. Govind .. 597
Vishnu v. Krishnan. 223, 247
Vishnu v. Manjamma. 146, 326, 331, 350, 353
Vishnu v. Ramachandra .. 432

PAGE.

Vishvanath v. Rabibai. 227, 238
Vishvanath v. Krishnaji. 673, 674
Vishweshwar Prasad v. Surya Rao. 555
Vishwanath v. Narayan .. 1055
Visvanath v. Doraisami. 402, 931, 996
Visvanatha v. Kamulu .. 719
Visvanathan v. Saminathan. 111, 154
Visvanathaswamy v. Rama. 882, 932
Visvasankar v. Kasi .. 652
Visva Sundara v. Soma Sundara .. 221
Viswesra v. Varahanarasimham. 377
Vitha v. Devi Das .. 283
Vithabai v. Balwant Rao .. 757
Vithabai v. Pandu .. 930
Vithal v. Aman .. 99
Vithal v. Balu. 1151, 1154
Vithal v. Ganpath Rao .. 972
Vithal v. Prahlad. 609, 610
Vithal v. Shivappa. 473, 478
Vithal Das v. Nand Kishore .. 499
Vithal Rao v. Vithal Rao .. 447
Vithalrao v. Ramrao. 907, 948, 951, 964
Vithal v. Yamunabai .. 572
Vithappa v. Savithri. 871, 892, 1033, 1054
Vithoba v. Bapu .. 181
Vithoba v. Hariba .. 654
Vithoba v. Govind .. 649
Vithoba v. Labsingh. 31, 63
Vithoba v. Sakharam. 292, 315
Vithu v. Govinda. 130, 333, 936, 937, 1047
Vithu v. Mendri. 1083, 1102
Vitla v. Yamenamma. 417, 957
Vitta Tayamma v. Chata Kondu. 130, 931, 936
Vrijibhukan Das v. Parbati .. 1024, 1025
Vitta v. Chatakandu. 130, 936 937, 1204
Viranjibandas v. Yamuna .. 412
Vrijbu Kundas v. Parvati .. 1032
Vrijbhukandas v. Dayaram .. 1108
Vundravandas v. Cursandas. 817, 1123
Vuppulurayana v. Garimulla .. 1050
Vuppuluri v. Garimilla. 386, 387, 1048, 1052, 1054
Vyas v. Vyas. 217, 244
Vyadhiswara v. Srinivasa .. 723
Vyasacharya v. Venkubai .. 232
Vyrecherlu v. Dasiraju .. 731
Vysathnatha v. Yeggia .. 890
Vythilinga v. Viyayathammal .. 92
Vythina v. Yeggia .. 891
Vyathinath v. Yeggia .. 363

W

Wadhawa Shah v. Ratanchand .. 484
Waghela v. Shekh Masludin. 296, 297
Wahid v. Sajet .. 413
Wahid Ali v. Tori Ram. 1036, 1039, 1041, 1043, 1133
Wajbun v. Kadir Buksh. 455, 456
Walbai v. Heerbai. 216, 217, 222, 296, 509

PAGE.

Waliul Hasan v. Gopal .. 1081
Wallace Sitha Bai v. Wallace Radha Bai .. 303
Wallingford v. Mutual Society .. 207
Walsh v. Trevanial .. 797
Walter v. Everard. 298, 1193
Walters v. Woodbridge .. 854
Waman v. Balaji .. 99
Wamanji v. Atmaram .. 661
Warrender v. Warrender .. 9
Wasudeo v. Venkatesh .. 38
Watson & Co. v. Ramchand. 410, 626. 641, 825, 829
Weir v. Crum Brown .. 815
Welch v. Phillips .. 765
Wellesley v. Duke of Beaufort .. 282
Westby v. Westby .. 572
Wethered v. Wethered .. 1092
Whole v. Booth .. 802
White v. Bisto Chunder .. 451
Williams (In re) .. 800
Williams v. Gonde .. 767
Williams v. Williams. 573, 574, 757
Wing v. Angrave .. 127
Wiseman v. Raper .. 158
Wooma Daee v. Gokoolanund. 224, 234 235, 1149
Woomesh Chunder v. Rashmohini. 768, 769, 772
Wright v. Carter .. 766
Wright v. Moldgate .. 162
Wycherley v. Wycherly .. 575

Y

Yadao v. Namdeo. 180, 181, 191, 207, 208, 209, 404, 405, 906
Yadu Nath v. Sita Ramji .. 790
Yag Narain v. Girish Chunder .. 590
Yamuna v. Dhamee Lal .. 244
Yamna Bai v. Nanabai .. 332
Yamna Bai v. Narayan. 145, 146, 148, 149
Yamuna Bai v. Balshet .. 246
Yamuna Bai v. Lagmanna .. 702
Yamuna Bai v. Manubai. 326, 328
Yamuna Bai v. Narayan
See Yamna Bai v. Narayan.
Yanumala v. Yanumala .. 893
Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda. 327, 347, 348, 349, 354, 705, 716
Yasobadra v. Somanthabadran .. 650
Yekeyamian v. Agniswarian .. 537
Yelumalai v. Srinivasa .. 423
Yelamanchili v. Yelamanchili .. 130
Yellappa v. Desayappa .. 296
Yellappa v. Tippannah. 430, 432
Yellavajhulu v. Yellavajhulu .. 993
Yenumala v. Yenumala .. 399
Yenumula v. Ramandara .. 721
Yerukola v. Yerukola. 664, 865
Yeshodabai v. Lal Talobashet .. 320
Yeswanta v. Antu .. 1069
Yetchuri v. Yetchuri .. 576
Yeshwantrao v. Kashi Bai .. 324

PAGE.

Yethirajulu v. Mugunthu (Mukunthu). 377, 735, 872

Z

Zaburdust v. Udurman.
See Zuberdust v. Uduman.

PAGE.

Zambaco v. Cossavetti .. 1097
Zemindar of Karvatnagar v. Subbraya. 682, 691, 692
Zipru v. Bomtyya. 930, 933, 934
Zuburdust v. Udurman. 527, 552
Zunkari v. Budhmal. 59, 104

TABLE OF ACTS, REGULATIONS AND STATUTES
(CHRONOLOGICALLY TABLED)

PAGE.

IMPERIAL ACTS.

Act of 1811, (Marriage of Lunatics Act) ... 114
XXI of 1850 (Caste Disabilities Removal Act or Lex loci Act or the Freedom of Religion Act). 42, 53, 55, 57, 63, 82, 83, 84, 156, 284, 915, 938
XI of 1852 ... 876
XV of 1856 (Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act). 42, 129, 332, 333, 914, 936, 937, 943, 1011, 1123
XV of 1859 ...740, 1122
XXVII of 1860 ... 1044
VII of 1863 ... 876
XI of 1863 ... 876
XX of 1863 (Religious Endowments Act). 43, 803, 808, 849, 876
XVII of 1864 ... 884
X of 1865 (Indian Succession). 66, 81, 377, 743, 750, 770, 786, 795, 798
XXI of 1866 (Native Converts Marriage Dissolution Act). 53, 141, 143, 556, 808
XXVII of 1866 ... 808
XXVIII of 1866 ... 808
XXVIII of 1867 ... 842, 849
I of 1869. 193, 690, 744, 759
IV of 1869 ... 66, 143
VII of 1870 (Court Fees Act)..758, 1192
XXI of 1870 (Hindu Wills Act) ... 195, 204
XIX of 1871 ... 1123
XXIII of 1871 (Pensions Act). 672
I of 1872 (Evidence Act). 89, 99, 101, 127, 236, 315, 316, 381, 432, 438, 659, 697, 757, 908, 927, 1090
II of 1872 ... 157
III of 1872 (Special Marriage Act). 42, 129, 166, 408, 600
IX of 1872 (Contract Act). 96, 115, 295, 296, 415, 492, 505, 506, 575, 576, 577, 579, 580, 582, 725, 831, 832, 841, 842
XV of 1872. 66, 155, 156
X of 1873 (Oaths Act) ... 79
III of 1874 (Married Woman's Property Act) ... 725
IX of 1875 (Majority Act). 110, 117, 182, 756
I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act). 111, 113, 261, 262, 290, 415, 1090, 1093, 1096, 1099, 1101
II of 1882 (Trust's Act) ... 367

PAGE.

V of 1881 ... 278
XXVI of 1881 (Negotiable Instruments Act) ... 43, 486
II of 1882 (Trusts Act). 271, 344, 391, 513, 578, 722, 724, 729, 733, 739, 824, 841, 849, 1038
IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property Act). 43, 332, 333, 342, 343, 344, 372, 422, 489, 492, 501, 505, 506, 513, 563, 570, 574, 579, 683, 703, 706, 711, 713, 719, 720, 738, 743, 744, 745, 760, 761, 831, 832, 866, 906, 912, 1026, 1033, 1087, 1106, 1108
XI of 1882 (Savings Act) ... 880
IV of 1886 ... 1197
VII of 1887 (Suits Valuation Act) ... 1192
XV of 1887 ... 1123
XVI of 1890 (Charitable Endowments Act). 808, 818, 819, 863, 884
VIII of 1890 (Guardian and Wards Act). 43, 147, 170, 278, 279, 288, 300, 303, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 313, 314
IV of 1893 (Partition Act). 588, 604, 646, 655
XV of 1895. 680, 681, 691, 709, 900, 901
X of 1897 (General Clauses Act). 739, 759, 1192
XIV of 1897 (Short Titles Act).915, 1192
V of 1898 (Criminal Procedure Code) ... 148
II of 1899 (Stamp Act) ... 193, 755
III of 1901 ... 588, 866
III of 1907 (Provincial Insolvency Act). 679, 887, 1088, 1920
V of 1908 (Civil Procedure Code) 147, 315, 316, 351, 426, 492
IX of 1908 (Limitation Act)... 150, 294, 296, 348, 349, 353, 496, 583, 698, 848, 851, 861, 865, 866, 1096, 1097, 1121, 1123, 1138
XVI of 1908 (Registration Act). 193, 238, 574, 575, 578, 596, 597, 676, 823
III of 1909 (Presidency Insolvency Act). 502, 546, 567, 889, 1088
VII of 1909 (Anand Marriage Act) ... 122, 158
III of 1911 ... 176
IV of 1912 (Lunacy Act) ... 143
XIV of 1916 ... 748
XV of 1916 (Hindu Disposition of Property Act) ... 737
X of 1918 ... 506
IV of 1920 ... 866
V of 1920 (Provincial Insolvency Act) ... 546

PAGE.

XIV of 1920 (Charitable and Religious Trusts Act). 43, 837, 849 863, 877, 879, 880, 884
XXX of 1920 ... 45
XXXVIII of 1920 (Devolution Act) ...884, 1197
VIII of 1921 ... 743
XIII of 1923 ... 725
XXIX of 1923 (Civil Procedure Amendment Act). 60, 86, 120, 166, 1192, 1193
X of 1925 ... 894
XXXIX of 1925 ... 760
XXXVII of 1926 ... 759
XII of 1928 (Hindu Inheritance Removal of Disabilities) Act. 42, 43, 175, 403, 909, 992
I of 1929. 849, 862, 864, 866, 1187
II of 1929 (Hindu Inheritance Amendment Act) ... 43, 949
XI of 1929 ... 43
XVIII of 1929 (Succession Amendment Act). 738, 759, 763, 772
XIX of 1929 (Child Marriage Restraint Act). 109, 110, 114
XX of 1929. 574, 738, 741, 777
XXI of 1929 ... 574, 749
XXX of 1930 (Hindu Gains of Learning Act). 43, 373, 374, 379, 380, 381
IX of 1932 (Partnership Act) 469, 475, 478, 479, 480, 487, 495
XVIII of 1937 (Hindu Women's Right of Property Act). 43, 401, 587, 899, 911, 938
XXVI of 1937 (Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Application Act) ... 64

LOCAL ACTS.

BENGAL ACTS.

IX of 1870 ... 1070
IX of 1879 ... 136
VIII of 1885 (Tenancy Act) ... 89
V of 1897 ... 558, 817
VII of 1912 ... 176

BOMBAY ACTS.

V of 1862 ... 588
VII of 1866 (Bombay Hindu Heirs Relief Act). ... 43, 556
V of 1879 ... 588, 617
VI of 1888 ... 588
I of 1903 ... 176

BURMA ACTS.

XIII of 1898 (Burma Laws Act). 1188

CENTRAL PROVINCES ACT.

XVIII of 1881 (Land Revenue). 588
XXIV of 1899 (Court of Wards Act) ... 176

PAGE.

II of 1917. 588, 617, 690

MADRAS ACTS.

II of 1864 ... 588, 617
I of 1866 ... 588, 617
I of 1876 ... 588, 617
IV of 1886 (Malabar Marriage Act) ... 120
I of 1902 ... 176
II of 1904. 689, 690, 709, 712

ORISSA, BENGAL ACT.

IX of 1879 ... 176

PUNJAB ACTS.

IV of 1872 ... 73
XVII of 1887 ... 588, 617
II of 1903 ... 176

N. W. P. ACTS.

XII of 1881 (Rent) ... 97

U. P. ACTS.

III of 1901 ... 617
IV of 1912 ... 176

REGULATIONS.

XXXVI of 1793 (Bengal) ... 686
II of 1802 (Madras) ... 617
XXV of 1802 (Madras) ... 617
XIX of 1810 (Bengal) ... 948
VII of 1817 (Madras). 803, 876, 986
XI of 1825 (Bengal) ... 73
VII of 1832 (Bengal) ... 83
III of 1877 (Bombay) ... 504
I of 1886 (Assam) ... 588, 617
I of 1888 (Ajmere) ... 176
X of 1910 (Bengal) ... 876

STATUTES.

1 Edw. VI C. 14 ... 819
9 Geo. II C. 36 (Mortmain Act). 819
26 Geo. II C. 33 ... 8
13 Geo. III C. 63 ... 41
21 Geo. III C. 70 ... 48
39 and 40 Geo. III C. 79 ... 48
51 Geo. III C. 37 ... 9
53 Geo. III C. 155 ... 884
4 Geo. IV C. 76 ... 8
1 Vict. C. 26 (English Wills Act 1837) ... 798
19 and 20 Vict. C. 119 ... 8
47 and 48 Vict. C. 68 (Matrimonial Clauses Act, 1884)... 150
53 and 54 Vict. C. 16 ... 819
61 and 62 Vict. C. 58 (Marriage Act) ... 117

GENERAL INTRODUCTION.

I

Genesis of Aryan Institutions.

1. The true prototype of the institutions peculiar to Hindu Law is to be found in the primeval tribal customs which are the common stock of all sections of the Indo-European race. The law of joint Hindu family, of adoption, marriage and succession is not the peculiar feature of archaic Hindu Law. It was part of the customs of the ancient Greeks, Romans and other nations who claim their descent from the common parent race. The system of Hindu Law is, indeed, not a peculiar feature of the Aryan races. It is to be found up to the present day in countries such as China and Japan, though somewhat modified by the force of modern circumstances. The joint family is but the natural outcome of the gregarious instinct of man. Indeed, in one sense there are joint families even among certain classes of lower animals. They play a necessary part in the growth of civilization and the development of society. But the joint families, as now known to the Hindus, are not the joint families as known to their primeval progenitors. To them a family meant a body of men united for purposes both offensive and defensive, to which were necessarily attached a number of women as dependant serfs. It was both natural and necessary that this band of men should have a leader, and what can be more natural than that, in such a society, respect should be paid for age, for with age went experience and, with experience, wisdom. The oldest male would naturally become the leader of such a flock. This is then the genesis of the patriarchal society which, in its primitive and rude simplicity, may still be observed in several remote parts of India, such as, e.g., amongst the Santals[1] the Oraons, the Bhils and other aboriginal hill tribes. Writing about the Oraons Sir H. Risley, in his Ethnography, describes their custom of promiscuous intercourse between the sexes outside the totem as quite common, with the result that pregnancies often occur before marriage which is then performed and the wife is then expected to lead a virtuous life.[2] Such was the order of the Cyclops described by Homer in his Odyssey.[3]

State of Nature.

2. In this primitive state of Nature, idealized by the modern man as the golden dawn of history, there was little to choose between the grim battle for life, which the human hunter fought, and his animal prey upon which he subsisted. For, as Hobbes has pointed out, the primitive state of human society was not that of universal peace but one of indiscriminate war, and even when men were not actually engaged in war, their condition was at all times one of armed neutrality.[4] This state of insecurity from without necessarily dictated the assurance of the society within. The tribal units were too loosely

(1) Ethnography, p. 248.
(2) 2 Tribes and Castes, p. 141.
(3) Odyssey, IX, 12.
(4) See Leviathan, Ch. XIII.

formed and unwieldy for a strict discipline in detail, which necessitated their splitting up into smaller groups held together by the combined forces of personal and sexual affinity, and dictated by the natural instincts of self-preservation. Strangers would be freely admitted into this social group. The modern social order is thus the result of modified promiscuity.[1]

Primitive State of Society.

3. The formation of hordes and the formation of familial groups are the two facts which mark the dawn of history. But which of them preceded the other is a question upon which the ethnologists are still at variance.[2] But it is not only possible for the two units to come into existence in response to local conditions, but it is equally possible for both of them to co-exist at the same time and in the same place. This will be evident if regard is had to the fact that a tribe in its original form is distinguished from a caste by the fact that its basis is political rather than economic or social and that the impelling demand of social necessity may equally be combined with political exigency. To these causes might be added other adventitious causes leading to the formation of tribes and families side by side.

Female Infanticide.

4. One thing is certain. The ancient nomadic groups all practised female infanticide. Daughters were an incumbrance to the people who had every moment to turn their strength to account in defence of their property and person, while grown-up women afforded an attraction for hostile attacks, enhancing the worries of an insecure existence. Each primitive group depended for its necessary supply of women upon women-stealing, for which marauding excursions were frequent and are immortalized by the legend of the founder of Rome. That such wife-hunting expeditions were common long after the Hindus had established a settled social order is evident from the forms of marriages described in the law books to which particular reference will be presently made. This practice had a far-reaching effect upon the history of the Aryan people. They appear to have early discovered the evils of consanguinous inter-breeding which, in many cases, afforded ample ocular demonstration of transmitted maladies and deformities. Exogamy was, therefore, not only the acknowledged necessity but became the prevailing rule. But in this way, some of the groups became sufficiently large to dispense with exogamy: Endogamy then took its place and thus arose the notion of a gens and gentiles, self-centred and self-contained, who all claimed descent through males from a common ancestor. It was a further bond for cementing the ties of association.

The mimetic faculty of man traceable to his simian ancestry would play a conspicuous part in shaping all groups after settled model, once it was well formed and its utility sufficiently demonstrated. There would also be the equally natural egoism, that pride of self, or something like self, which accounts for the continuance of clans, castes and races. But here again one must not lapse into the danger of a too wide generalization. For while it is true that the Aryan gens, such as that of the Hindu, the Greek and the Roman type, trace their ancestry in a continuous agnatic line, there are instances on record of groups, such as the so-called aborigines of Australia or the American islands, among whom kinship is traceable exclusively through the female parent. These grouped; they marked their bodies with a common mark or "totem" to preserve their clannish identity and members of the same group never intermarried. This "totem" became a symbol of great cohesive value. People of the same "totem" will often travel long distances to assist their fellow-totems. But kinship so created is naturally apt to become confused in course of time, and even where it is not so, it naturally yields the palm to the agnatic group, which represents the flower of its masculine strength and mind, whose exploits and achievements would naturally out-distance the cognatic clans.

(1) Maine's Early Law and Custom, Ch. VII, p. 200.

(2) See Maine's Ancient Law, Ch. V; Early Law and Custom, Ch. VII, p. 214; Ch. VIII, p. 216; Darwin, 2 Descent of Man, p. 362.

Ancestor Worship.

5. This fact accounts for the ancestor worship, as to which Sir John Lubbock wrote: "Although descent among the lowest savages is traced in the female line, I do not know of any instance in which female ancestors were worshipped." The worship of female ancestors marks yet another stage in the evolution of society. Here again, the genesis of the custom is laid in the dawn of history. The savage races believed in the continued existence of their dear departed dead who had assisted them in life, and who, they fondly believed, could not do otherwise after their death. The primitive conception of a great warrior, leading the same life and following the same occupation before and after death led to the funeral offerings of food, clothing and weapon. These rites and beliefs of a by-gone age still linger in several parts of Europe and have survived the combined attacks of science and the testimony of reason.[1] Those who were most endeared in life offered their utmost homage to the vanished spirit, and the test applied by the Dayabhag for determining the heirs thus becomes at once intelligible. Those were the nearest of kin who offered the largest obsequial feasts. That these should be confined to the priestly class of Brahmins, is only due to their sacerdotal influences. They were the scribes of old and naturally placed their class interest before the public weal. But it marks a later epoch in the development of society. As adoption was necessary to strengthen the patriarchy, so ancestor worship was persisted in to preserve its identity. The two institutions, now peculiarly Hindu, have thus persisted in the march of ages.

The law of inheritance is only a necessary corollary of the ancestor worship. Those who performed the obsequial rites were naturally the offspring of the deceased. By a confusion of cause and effect, ancestor worship and inheritance became a part of the established usage of classic antiquity. Those who conferred the utmost benefit upon the deceased were admitted to preferential claim for participation in his worldly effects. The mediæval Christian Church made the one a condition precedent to the other, and upon it, it founded the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court in which all movable and personal property of the deceased vested in the first instance, before it could be distributed; and this jurisdiction, extended over executors in the case of wills and administrators in the case of intestacies, has descended to the modern Court of Probate.

Law and Religion.

6. One special feature of the archaic society was the blending of law with religion without there being a clear line of demarcation between the two. All passed under the garb of religion and the executive being weak this was very advantageous, as it tended to ensure implicit obedience by hushing all doubts and silencing all dissent and opposition. "The first great step in the progress of law is when the distinction between acts that are harmful to human society and acts that may not be so, but are hateful to supernatural beings, is thoroughly grasped . . . for this distinction lies at the root of all legal development."[1] On these points, early societies had everything to learn and necessarily, the lesson was acquired slowly and imperfectly. Even now, the classification of wrongs and offences or sins and crimes is not satisfactory. Judged by this test, Hindu Law, never emerged out of its pristine infancy, and its social development, as portrayed in its law, remains far behind that of the earliest Roman Institutions as seen in the Twelve Tables, promulgated about 500 B.C. The fact is that Hindu Law took the turn suitable to the genius of the people, as the Grecian and Roman Laws overtook the fast developing republican genius of the people. Consequently, while their early laws furnish close analogies, which are to be expected by reason of common ancestry, their later developments furnish matters only for contrast rather than for comparison.

(1) Tylor, Primitive Culture, Chs. I. III, IV, XI, XII; Mankind, Ch. VI. Early History of

The Laws of Solon.

7. The early development of Hellenic culture on account of the emancipation of the people from the thraldom of priestcraft gives to the laws of Solon, promulgated in 594 B.C., a comparative modernity which is not found in the laws of Apastamb and Baudhayan, who promulgated their Sutras about the same time. The laws of Solon, inscribed on wooden tablets arranged in pyramidal blocks turning on an axis, announced to the people the distinction between civil law and religious duty. They show the struggle that was still raging between religious fears and civic liberty. To allay the fears of the superstitious, Solon is said to have invited Crete, reputed to possess the power of magic. He performed certain rites, which appeased the superstitious Athenians, offering, it is said, even a human sacrifice to allay their fears. He curtailed the extravagant funeral expenses, released the pledged lands from their incumbrances and repealed the law which enabled the creditor to enslave his debtor, that had led debtors to sell even their own children. He substituted property for birth as a qualification for citizenship and divided citizens into four classes. All the highest offices were reserved for the first class, the second and third performed military duties. The people were given a democratic constitution. The Archons retained their judicial powers, but appeals were allowed to the Senate and the Areopagus, which were popularly elected bodies.

Early Roman Law.

8. Under the Republic established in 509 B.C., the people became divided into two classes—the patricians and the plebians, and though both possessed theoretical equality, the patricians in fact enjoyed all the powers and emoluments of office. But the plebians were not long in asserting themselves. The first thing they forced the patricians to do was to define the constitution which led to the codification of the customary law which was published to the people on twelve bronze tables, known as the Laws of the Twelve Tables which are the foundation of the whole fabric of Roman Law. Of these, the first two tables prescribe the procedure for the trial of cases. They provide for the hearing of both sides, and for an ex parte decree against the absent party. The third table prescribes a mode of execution. The debtor was to be made over to his creditor in bondage. The latter might bind him with thongs or with fetters which were not to weigh more than 15 pounds. The creditor must provide a pound of bread a day for the maintenance of his debtor, who could, moreover, live on his own means. The maximum period of his bondage was sixty days, during which he was brought in three times before the prætor who publicly proclaimed his debt. After the third market day, he could be put to death or sold beyond the Tiber, and if there were several creditors, they might cut and divide amongst themselves the several portions of his body. The fourth Table permitted parents to put to death their deformed children. They had the power of life or death over their legitimate children. The fifth table codifies the law of guardianship and inheritance. All women except the vestal virgins were always to remain under the guardianship of their agnates. The pater familias could will away his property, in the absence of which, the property devolved upon his suii heres, failing which the agnate and the gentile succeeded. By the Prætorian edicts these terms were explained to mean as follows:—(1) Suii heres—Children and grandchildren by son. (2) Agnates—Statutory heirs. (3) Gentiles—Cognates and husband and wife. It will be noted that women were not excluded since brothers and sisters equally participated in their patrimony.

(1) Hunter's Roman Law, 1063.

9. The history of Roman Law commences with a family which, from a legal point of view, consisted of a head ruler or patriarch, called the pater familias and the junior members, who were absolutely subject to his despotic sway. His own sons had no rights in the family and could possess no property of their own. All they acquired became his. He possessed the supreme power of life and death over them. Accordingly, he usually destroyed all the elder female children excepting only the eldest. This power was revoked by an edict of Constantine (218 A.D.) which also curtailed the power of sale permitting only the poor to dispose of their new-born babies, reserving to them, however, the right of redemption.

Adoption in Roman Law.

10. In this state of society, the adoption or affiliation of children was a matter of course. In early times, adoption was known as arrogatio and required the sanction of the pontiff and the people in their comitia curiata, in accordance with the following formulæ addressed to the person about to be arrogated, and to the people:—

To the person to be arrogated. "Do you formally agree that Lucuis Titius shall have power over you, as over a son, the power of life and death?"

To the people. "Is it your will, your order, Quirites; that Lucuis Titius be, by right and statute a son, as if by birth, the child of Titius and his mater familias, and that Titius should have over him the power of life and death?"

Law prohibited the adoption of an only son, while the arrogator could not adopt unless he was married, childless and of sixty years of age, or if, on account of illness or other reason, there was a probability of his dying childless. In early law, women could not be arrogated; but later on, their adoption was sanctioned. A person of any age could be adopted. The arrogator might adopt one as his son, grandson, great-grandson, granddaughter or great-grand-daughter. The old juridical character of adoption was to bring the adoptee within the potestas of the pater familias. Justinian permitted adoption but allowed the natural father to retain the potestas. He also simplified the procedure by allowing adoption to be completed by a declaration in writing, made before a magistrate.[1] At first, women could not adopt as they had no potestas, but Diocletian and Maximian relaxed this restriction in A.D. 29. Adoption could not be repeated. The adopted son succeeded to his father in case of intestacy.

(1) Gaius, I-99; Just. I-II-1.

Greek Adoption.

11. The Greeks also practised adoption. But while the primary object of their adoption was to ensure that some one should make the proper sacrifices and offer the funeral cake, the underlying principle of a Roman adoption appears to have been to strengthen the family and to avoid its extinction by securing an heir.[1]

Roman and Hindu Systems Compared.

12. It would be thus seen that while both the Hellenic as well as the Roman Laws, in their inception furnish many interesting and close analogies to Hindu Law, their early secularization and rapid development makes the relationship look like that of a child to a grown-up man. In regard to the law of inheritance, however, the Roman and the Hindu systems retained close association for a longer period. But the point of divergence between them was also equally striking. Under Hindu Law, the institution of the joint family has a peculiar significance. But the Roman joint family resembled more a Dayabhag family than the one contemplated by the Mitakshara. The patria potesta excluded the law of coparcenership. At the same time, in both the systems, inheritance is inextricably connected with the performance of obsequial rites. Both the Romans and the Greeks inherited the tradition of their forefathers that life in some form persists after death, and that the dead needed the same nourishment and comforts as the living. The performance of the obsequies was a concern of the State, as much as that of the individual. For the disconsolate spirit not only inflicted the family but also the State as an abettor of the family, if it suffered it to do wrong.

13. But the early secularization of Roman Law led to restrictions upon lavish expenditure on funerals and the tenth Table is directed towards the curtailment of all such expenditure. It restricted mourners to three, and flute-players to not more than ten in number. "Women shall not tear their cheeks nor indulge in wailing." "No person shall have more than one funeral, or more than one bier." "Gold shall not be burned or buried with the dead, except such gold as the teeth have been fastened with." Both the Greeks and the Romans generally cremated their dead, as do the Aryan Hindus, but while burial has supplanted cremation in the Western countries till its modern revival, the twice-born Hindus still cremate their dead, though like the Romans, the Vedic Hindu both buried and cremated their dead, and it appears that of the two, burial was more common.[2] But this mode of disposal is now exclusively confined to the Shudras.

Secularization of Law.

14. The one outstanding difference between the two branches of the Aryan family, migrated in opposite directions, is in their mental outlook on life. The one migrating to the East were meekly submissive to the usages which they continued to regard as records of divine wisdom, while the others threw the divine influence into the background, and secularized their laws, which they modified with the growing earnestness of the age. Ethnologists have not adverted to this radical distinction which has produced such far reaching results.

---

(1) Vicero, Pro Domo, 13, 15; Dig. 1; 7, 15, 20.

(2) Cf. the funeral hymn in Rig. Veda, X-18.

Status of Women.

15. The primitive man had to wage war with his fellow-men whose savage instincts for spoil and strife rendered existence precarious and in the case of women and children, impossible. Alliances and family groups were naturally formed, in which the wives, sons and slaves came under the sway of the adult men of whom the eldest, usually the father, became soon recognised as the headman and leader. The idea of property was then in its embryo, and his dependents and belongings were alike his property without any distinction. The virile ruled the weak, and as women and sons were weak and defenceless, he afforded them protection in return for their services. It was so even in the advanced state of Hellenic culture, where the growing freedom of women was curbed by Solon, who prohibited them from going abroad with more than three changes of apparel, and a limited quantity of provisions, and passing through the streets at night otherwise than in a carriage with a light carried before them. This heralded the curtailment of further liberties, resulting, in later years, in the introduction of a semblance of purdah amongst them.

16. This condition continued for long ages and when the Hindu Smritis were written it was the prevailing practice. Wives, sons and slaves fell into the general category of this property, and could own no property of their own. Accordingly, Manu says: "A wife, a son, and a slave are devoid of property: whatever they acquire become his whose they are."[1] "Even when some order was established, their position of positive dependence continued undisturbed, and the courts were disinclined to interfere with the parental control which had led to the establishment of peace. So in a Smriti, cited in the Mitakshara, it is said: "Even when there is a cause of dispute between preceptor and pupil, between husband and wife, between father and son, between master and slave, no action is maintainable." The infusion of religious ideas into the fabric of society merely gave to it a new reason and an added solemnity. The wife became even more dependent upon her husband who continued to be her Swami or master. The father was free to sell his children, and as such, he sold his daughters in bondage or marriage. The Asur form of marriage was thus the precursor of the Brahma form, in which the daughter was to be gifted to the bridegroom. But in either case, it was transfer, whether by sale or by gift, and little distinguishable from the transfer of a chattel such as a goat or a cow. The patria potestas was transferred by marriage to the husband. She still continued to be a chattel, and as the husband was himself a dependent in the family of his father, his acquisition of her was an acquisition of and for the family who could use her for her primary purpose of procreation. This enabled them to use her independently of her own volition, which did not count, for she was foredoomed to lifelong dependence upon her husband and his relations. "The younger brother of the husband, a sapinda, or a sagotra, being anointed with clarified butter, and with permission of the guru, may go to a sonless widow, when in season, with the desire of raising a son."[2] If the wife is withdrawn after marriage, the delinquent is punishable for theft[3] and the punishment of a thief is that his head be cut off.[4] This was the stage of development when the earlier Smritikars, ending with Yadnyavalkya described the status of women.

(1) VIII-416.
(2) Yad. 1-68.
(3) Yad. III, 68, Narad, XII-80; 81; See § 15 post.
(4) Narad, XII, 32.

17. This property in women, sons and slaves was no peculiar feature of the Hindu system, for it is equally shared by the ancient Greeks[1] and Romans who sold or lent their wives to their friends either for pleasure or procreation.[1] So Plutarch defended this course on the ground of eugenics and Lycurgus, similarly, defended it on the ground that the children were not so much the property of the parents as of the State, which was interested in seeing that they were begotten by the best men in it. As such, Socrates is said to have lent his wife, Zantippe, to his young disciple and friend, Alcibiades, and Cato not only lent but presented his wife to Hortensius with the consent of the lady's father. That this practice was quite common and became extended to the Egyptians, Persians, Assyrians, and the Babylonians, and became the current of the Indo-Aryan thought is apparent from the records of contemporary history. Lycurgus justified it on the ground that if people took the trouble to improve the breed of dogs and cattle, why should they not take the trouble of improving their race. The presentation of wives of older men to younger people for procreation was thus defended upon national grounds.[2] The practice of Niyog in India was the remote echo of the system of the social usage here described.

18. The Athenian law permitted divorce on condition that the wife appeared in person and presented her bill before the Archon, when the husband was free to seize her person and carry her off if he liked.[3] This marks the second stage in the improvement of women's status, though it is still that of a chattel in her husband's household—her sole purpose being still regarded as that of procreation to strengthen his household.

19. The law of marriage has passed through two stages; in its inception, it was regarded as a sacrament, and was, as such, controlled by the Church, who enforced their domination over the laity by controlling the rites incident to births, marriages and deaths. The revolt of the people against this priestly privilege, in Europe, belongs to the History of the Renaissance; in India, the bulk of the people are still under its yoke, though it has been, in some measure, relieved by the Legislature.

20. In England, marriage was a sacrament subject to ecclesiastical control which was materially relaxed by the passing of the Parliamentary Act (known as Lord Hardwicke's Act, 1753),[4] repealed and superseded by the Marriage Act, 1823,[5] and amended by several later Acts,[6] the effect of which is to transform marriage into civil contract, which might be solemnized before a lay official, appointed as the Registrar of marriages. It is now so viewed in most of the countries of Europe, America and Japan; and as all ships flying their national flags carry the laws of their own country with them up to within 3 miles of its coast it follows that a civil marriage might be contracted by an Indian, not only in Europe, America and Japan, but also on board the ships of those countries within three miles of the harbour. And since civil marriage takes no account of the religion or caste of the contracting parties, a Hindu may equally contract a civil marriage. Such marriage is monogamous

(1) Plato's Republic, Bk. IV, C. 3; Bk. V, C. 7 (2 Bohn's Ed.), pp. 107, 141; but see contra Aristotle, Politics, II, C. 2; Hist. Animals, IX-i.

(2) Plutarch's Lives—Lycurgus (Ward Lock), p. 36, Cato the Younger, pp. 538, 539. Ib., Lycurgus, p. 36; see, to the same effect, Plato's Republic, Bk. IV, C. 3; Bk. V, C. 72 (Bohn's Ed.); pp. 107, 141; contra Aristotle, Politics, II, Ch. 2; Hist. Animals, IX-i.

(3) Ib., Alcibiades, p. 144.

(4) 26 Geo. II, C. 33.

(5) 4 Geo. IV, C. 76.

(6) e.g., Marriage and Registration Act, 1856 (19 and 20 Vict., C. 119).

and is free from all communal restrictions. Being monogamous it is valid everywhere. It was so held in a case in which an Englishman had married a Japanese lady in Japan according to the law of Japan. The Probate Court declared the marriage to be good in England and everywhere else.[1]

21. Marriage is, sometimes, defined as the act, ceremony, or process by which the relationship of the husband and wife is constituted. Under English Law, marriage is a contract between a man and a woman by which they naturally promise to marry one another, the promise of each being the consideration for the promise of the other.[2] In other words, the English notion of marriage implies a mutual contract, which naturally implies that the contracting parties are sui juris. Consequently, a minor cannot be sued on such contract, even if ratified after coming of age,[3] though he or she may sue thereupon the other party, if major.[4] That marriage is not a contract for consideration in the normal sense of the term will be apparent if it is remembered that the parties to a contract are entitled to determine their rights and duties, whereas in marriage every resulting right and duty is fixed by the law.

22. In both these respects Hindu Law differs, since the marriage of Hindus needs and implies no mutual promise, and no theory of consideration underlies it to make it a binding contract. It is in the nature of a gift by the father of his daughter to the husband. The daughter has no choice, she need not consent, and may not even be conscious of the nature of the act and its effect upon her life, and she cannot refuse to live with her husband howmuchsoever she might detest him.

23. Under the English Law, both lunacy[5] and impotency[6] at the time of marriage render the marriage void; but under Hindu Law, neither would seem to be a bar to marriage unless the lunacy of the husband had prevented him from accepting the bride at the time of the marriage ceremony or understanding its nature.[7]

24. The meaning of marriage differs in different countries. In Christendom, it means a monogamous marriage, being a voluntary union for life of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others.[8] In India, a marriage has a different meaning, in that in case of the Hindus, it need not be voluntary and it may be polygamous, and if custom permits polyandrous, while in the case of Mahomedans, there is a marriage called the mutah, which need not be for life at all. But inter-national law respects the personal law of all nations, and if a marriage was contracted in any form, recognized by the personal laws of the parties, the Court will give effect to it.[9] A polygamous marriage is a good marriage, though it may not be recognized by the law of Christian countries. English Law recognizes divorce; Hindu Law now treats it as impossible. Polyandry would be treated as unthinkably immoral in Europe. It is customary in Malabar and was not unknown, though it was not customary in ancient India.

---

(1) Brinkley v. Attorney-General, 15 P.D. 76.
(2) Venell v. Veness, 4 F. & F. 344.
(3) Ditcham v. Worral, 5 C.P. 410.
(4) Purushotam Das v. Purushotam Das, 21 B. 23.
(5) Marriage of Lunatics Act, 1811, (51 Geo. 3, C. 37) Turner v. Meyars, I Hag. Con. 414.
(6) Turner v. Thompson, 13 P.D. 37.
(7) Maunjilal v. Chandrabati, 38 C. 700 (706) P.C.
(8) Warrender v. Warrender, 2 C.L. & F. 488 (530); Brinkley v. A.G., 15 P.D. 76.
(9) Bethel v. Hilyard, 38 Ch.D. 220.

Polygamy.

25. As the marriage under Hindu Law is a sacrament so it was in ancient Rome, where it could be put an end to by the husband, though not by the wife, barrenness being a sufficient cause for divorce. But public opinion soon rallied to the support of the wife who could divorce her husband with equal ease. In Rome, marriage commenced as a sacrament and ended as a loose and voluntary contract which could be determined at the will of either party. As in ancient and modern India, so in ancient Greece and Rome, early marriage was customary. In Greece, which lived for the worship of beauty, marriage never attained the same dignity as it did in Rome.

Early Marriages.

26. Polygamy was, from the earliest times, prohibited both in Greece and Rome,[1] but concubinage was common and customary and upto the tenth century, it was regarded as a secondary marriage. The children of such unions were classed as natural offsprings of concubinage, as distinguished from the spurious breed of adultery, prostitution and incest. Polygamy was also permitted and practiced by the ancient Egyptians.[2]

Polyandry.

27. Polyandry, though probably unpopular, was not wholly unknown in ancient India. The Mahabharat furnishes one well-known instance of Draupadi, wife of the five Pandavas, whose marriage is there described as "divinely arranged,"[3] and the fixing of whose hours to live with the five brothers was directed by Narad.[4] The custom is still alive, though decadent in several localities, and amongst scattered communities in the Punjab, and the Himalayan and its submontane tracts. It, probably, owed its origin to the scarcity of woman and was kept alive by the craving for male offspring, to which must be traced the practice of the levirate or Niyog, which the Shastras uphold till the widow is the mother of one or two sons.[5] Polyandry is still customary amongst certain castes in Cochin[6] and on the Malabar Coast, though with social development it is being slowly abandoned. The Nairs practised polyandry of the maternal type until quite recently, and it has left an indelible trace on their law of succession in that the Nairs still trace their descent through the female.[7]

Prohibited Marriages.

28. Ancient law contains no prohibition against incestuous marriages. Abraham had espoused his half sister[8] while in Egypt, the marriage of uterine brothers and sisters was admitted as a customary, and even a favoured alliance. As such Cleopatra had to marry her younger brother, though it led to endless misery. Greek custom allowed marriage between half-brothers and half-sisters when not descended from the same mother. The Spartan might espouse the daughter of his father, and the Athenian that of his mother, and the nuptials of an uncle with his niece were applauded at Athens as a happy union of the dearest relations. But the Roman lawyers prohibited these incestuous alliances and laid down the rules of prohibited degrees for marriage. And later jurisprudence has more or less copied those restrictions. Under Hindu Law, the prohibited degree has been extended much further beyond the Roman Law.

---

(1) 2 Gulab, XLIV.
(2) 1 Kings XI-3.
(3) Mahabharat, Adi Parvas, v. 118 (Dutt's Tr.), Vol. I, p. 13.
(4) Ib., v. 120 (Dutt's Tr.), Vol. I, p. 13.
(5) Gautam XVIII-8; 2 S.B.E. 268, but see Manu LX-52.
(6) 1 Cochin Tribes and Castes, 161, 173, 182, 209, 301, 346.
(7) Gait's Census of India (1911), Vol. I, Pt. I, S. 294.
(8) Genesis XII-19.

29. The relation of guardian and ward, or to quote the Roman words, of tutor and pupil, occupies an important place in the Institutes and the Pandects. Roman Law condemned females to the perpetual tutelage of their parents, husbands or guardians; a sex, created to please and obey, was never supposed to have attained the age of reason and experience. This is her place in Hindu Law, for says Manu, "Their fathers protect them in childhood; their husbands protect them in youth; their sons protect them in age; a woman is never fit for independence."[1] As regards males, Roman Law placed all youths upto their fourteenth year in charge of their tutors and afterwards upto the twenty-fifth year in charge of a curator. The tutor held a public office. Without his consent no act of the pupil could bind him to his own prejudice, though it might oblige others for his personal benefit.

Guardian and Ward.

30. Unnatural vice infected all ancient society, and it grew with the increase of wealth. Marriages became unpopular, so much so that in 131 B.C. the censor Metellus urged marriages as a patriotic necessity. The position of a married woman among the Romans compared favourably with her position in Greece. In both countries, she was no doubt subordinate to her husband, but while, in Greece, the wife looked after and performed other menial offices, in Rome, the wife was the mistress (domina) of her household. In Greece, women lived in seclusion and appeared only veiled in public. In Rome, the wife appeared at religious services, at meals, in the theatres and even in the courts.

Women's Position Compared.

31. In both countries, while polygamy was prohibited, concubinage took its place, and the offspring of such an alliance were not treated as illegitimate. As compared to this, the Hindu wife occupies by no means an unfavourable position. With her, marriage is a lottery as it was with the ancient Greeks. But the position of a Hindu wife in the household is more that of the domina than of a dependent. She is entitled to own and hold separate property. She succeeds to the separate estate of her husband, in the absence of male issue, though her right is restricted to the enjoyuent of the estate without impairing it, except in the case of legal necessity. But with all this, although the position of her Western sister has immeasurably improved in recent years the status and lot of the Hindu wife have remained unaltered for over 3,000 years.

II

32. The History of Hindu Law falls into three epochs (i) from the earliest time down to the writing of Mitakshara (1300 B.C.-1150 A.D.), (ii) from the Mitakshara to the establishment of British rule (1150 A.D.-1772 A.D.), and (iii) the third from that date onwards which marks its modern development by the British Courts.

33. As the four Vedas are regarded by the Hindus as the main repository of all their laws, sacred and secular, a brief reference to them is necessary in order to assign them their proper place in the legal literature which is ever growing and changing with the progress and altered condition of society.

34. Vedic Epoch.—All Hindu sacred literature is divided into the main groups—the Shruti and the Smriti, the former being synonymous with the Vedas; while

The Shruti and the Smriti.

(1) Manu IX-3, V-148, IX-2.

the latter comprises most of the early post-vedic literature which has, by its antiquity acquired the halo of sacredness. The words Shruti (which means heard) and Smriti (which means remembered), though now used as conveying a secondary meaning, really point to a time when writing was unknown, and the sacred lore had to be memorized to be preserved for posterity. The Sruti matter was embodied in set forms of language, mostly in metre, so that the words could be recited and sung. The Vedas have become so known because of their antiquity when literature was scanty and the Aryan could devote more time to memorize the very words, instead of only the substance and purport, which he commenced to do as soon as his memory became loaded with the fast accumulating traditions of custom and conduct, which knit together the ancient Aryas in spite of their scattered settlements and lengthening distances. These were the Smritis which represented the substance though not the text of the compiler.

The Vedas.

35. All laws of the Hindus are nominally traceable to the Vedas which are the only records of direct revelation.[1] Originally, there was only one Veda—the Rig Veda; but, later on, it put forth other shakhas or offshoots, due to differences in ceremonial observances and readings of the original unwritten Veda after the introduction of writing, and the three main branches became known as (1) the Rig Veda Samhita, containing now 1017 verses, (2) Yajur Veda Samhita, (3) Sama Veda Samhita, to which was subsequently added (4) the Atharva Veda. These main branches put forth other offshoots which were designated either shakhas or charanas, each in turn giving rise to a collection of its hymns, tradition and precepts, as understood by the schools, which have come down to us as the Dharma Shastras ascribed either to some god, or sage, or a princely patron, or to the school of which it was the approved manual. The Vedas contain a collection of hymns in two parts, one touching the sacrifice, the other touching the Supreme being or Brahma. The latter portion is called the Upanishad, and appears to have been added after the ceremonial section later on. As there are three branches of the ceremonial, the Veda is, for the better performance of its sacrifices, divided into three books; the Rig Veda, Yajur Veda and Sama Veda which were really the records of ceremonies as performed by three priestly families, namely, Hotri, Adhvaryu and the Udgatri. The Atharva Veda is not used for solemn sacrifices and is very different from the others, as it teaches only expiatory, preservative, or imprecatory rites.

36. From their very nature the Vedas cannot be expected to contain any legal precept, nor in fact do they contain any. They may, therefore, be dismissed from consideration. But the following ethnological facts, deducible from them are interesting to the lawyers, presenting as they do a vivid portrait of ancient manners, which constituted the then laws, regulated the lives of the people and which are the parent of all laws of the present day.

Vedic Society.

37. An examination of the four Vedas brings to light the following facts. The oldest of them all, the Rig Veda, was composed when the Aryan immigrants had settled down in the Punjab and had reached as far South as Ambala. They were struggling for mastery of the Gangetic plain, which they obtained by the time the Atharv Veda was composed. It mentions the Provinces of Magadh (Behar) and the Angas (Bengal). The Rig Veda mentions "the five tribes" which, though in political alliance with one another, did not always preserve their amity. The tribe was the political unit, scattered over a number of settlements comprising an aggregate of villages and ruled by a king, who was ordinarily hereditary, though occasionally elected by the districts of the tribe. There were no taxes, the king being maintained by voluntary offerings by his people. The basis of Vedic society was the patriarchal family. The Indian patriarch (Grihapati) wielded the same power over his family as did the patriarch in Rome. His power was strictly limited by the will of the people, expressed in the tribal assembly (Samiti). As such, he possessed no greater power than the pre-republican Roman King.

(1) Consequently they alone constitute the Shruti or what was directly heard (i.e., revelation), as distinguished from the Smriti or what was remembered (i.e., tradition). Even the Vedic Sutras belong to the latter class—Max Muller's A.S. Lit.—49.

38. The social life, reflected in the Vedas, is closely analogous to the contemporary life of the Western settlers. The patriarchal family was well established. The father possessed the right to sell or kill his sons. The price of a son was a hundred cows. Adoption was legal. So Viswamitra had adopted Ajigarta who had left his home owing to parental cruelty. He adopted other sons as well. Polygamy was practised then as now. Viswamitra had a hundred sons. Education was confined to the Aryas, who afterwards comprised the three higher castes. Women were left in ignorance. The practice of Sati was common and extolled as the highway to heaven.[1] Education was purely religious. The Aryans were harassed by the Dasyus who stole their cattle and plundered their grain. They even stole their women. Life was otherwise simple and uneventful. The Arya was religious first and religious last. His government was a theocracy. Consequently, his leisure and spare wealth were spent in elaborate sacrifices, some of them lasting a whole year. Cattle were killed in sacrifice and their flesh eaten. There are traces of the practice of Niyog which was common to all ancient Aryan races.

39. The earlier Vedas contain no reference to any caste. They only refer to the Aryas and the Dasyus, the former being the Aryan immigrants and the latter the aboriginal natives of the country. The latter are also at times described as Shudras. The Vedas were composed when the Brahmanical ascendency over the people had not only become established in India,[2] but when his lust for pelf and political power had also been gratified. He had already obtained precedence over the Kshatriya kings: "The king before whom there walks a priest, lives well-established in his own house; to him the earth yields for ever, and before him the people bow of their own accord."[3] There is a whole class of hymns in praise of gifts (called Danastuti) received from princely patrons.

Vedic Religion.

40. The gods of the Vedic pantheon were the Varun (Rain),[4] Agni (fire),[5] Indra (the thunderbolt) who "is greater than all,"[6] Soma the king of the world,[7] Mitra,[8] (the sun) Aryaman[9] and the other forces of nature; but above them all stood the Supreme God whom the Vedic sage invokes as "my father." "That One breathed breathless by itself; other than it nothing

(1) Rig Veda, cited in 1. Cole, Mis. Essays, p. 116.
(2) Max Muller's A.S. Lit. 242.
(3) Rig Veda, IV, 50-7.
(4) Ib. II, 2710.
(5) Ib. II, 1-9.
(6) Ib. X-86.
(7) Ib. IX-59.
(8) Ib. I-162.
(9) Ib.

since has been." That One breathed and lived, it enjoyed more than mere existence; yet its life was not dependent on anything else, as our life depends on the air which we breathe. It breathed breathless. "Then call Him Indra, Mitra, Varun, Agni; the He is the well-winged heavenly Garutmat; that which is One the wise call it in many ways; they call it Agni, Varun, Matarisvan."[1] As Max Muller observed: "Even in the invocation of their innumerable gods, the remembrance of a God, one and infinite, breaks through the mist of an idolatrous phraseology, like the blue sky that is hidden by passing clouds".[2] "Language blushes at such expressions, but her blush is a blush of triumph."[3]

Hindu Caste.

41. Hindu Law cannot be understood without reference to caste,[4] a division of the people into four graded classes which is determined by their birth and remains unaltered through life. Hindu Society is divided into two main castes: (1) The Dwijas or twice-born, and (2) the Antyajas, (Shudras) or the servile people. This distinction is observed throughout Hindu Law, both ancient and modern. There is often one law for the regenerates and another for the Shudras. But, on many points, the former are subject to many disabilities from which the latter are free. In the confusion of castes created by the policy of the foreign rulers, who for the first time, established a secular rule free from the control of the hierarchy, the question of caste at times presents difficulties. It is specially so in view of the general social upheaval, created by the impact of Western thought and the consequent abandonment by the regenerates of the customary rituals, and the claim of some of the Shudra castes to the position of Dwijas. The question of caste has thus a foremost place in the historical survey of Indian law, but it is a subject at once so stupendous and complicated that nothing but only a succinct resume can be attempted here.

Origin of Caste.

42. A tribe in its original form is distinguished from a caste by the fact that its basis is political rather than economic or social. The members believe that they all have a common origin, but what holds them together is the community of interest and the need of mutual defence; and aliens who are willing to throw in their lot with the tribe are usually freely admitted. The Hindu literature, both legal and religious, teems with allusions to caste from very early times. The Vedas, however, contain no reference to caste, though it is alluded to in the Purushasukta,[5] which is considered to be a modern interpolation, though the earliest Sutras of Apastamb and Baudhayan take its existence for granted. But caste in their time was in a fluid state. They mention only four castes, which, according to the Census Report of 1921, have now multiplied to nearly 2,400, though the last decennial Census Report notes a growing tendency towards their consolidation.[6] In Burma caste is so little known that the Burmese language possesses no word for it,[7] while, in the extreme West, Mr. Hughes-Buller records that when a Hindu in Baluchistan is questioned about his caste he "will often describe himself by the name of the tribal group to which he holds himself attached."[8] It may then be premised that caste, as such, is peculiar to the India dominated

(1) Rig Veda, VI-164, 46.
(2) A.S.L. 288.
(3) Ib., 289.
(4) From Port. Castus, pure.
(5) Rig Veda, X-90.
(6) (1931) Census Report, 1 § 182 pp. 430, 431.
(7) 1 Imperial Gazetteer of India, Ch. 6, p. 330.
(8) Baluchistan Census Report, 1901, cited in 1 Imp. Gazetteer, Ch. 6, p. 330; Risley's Census Report, 1901, S. 851.

by the priestly Brahmins. Manu allegorically traces its origin to the anima mundi (the supreme soul) Brahma, who "produced by a thought a golden egg," "in which" he himself was born as Brahma, who for the sake of the prosperity of the worlds, caused the Brahman, the Kshatriya, the Vaishya and the Shudra to proceed from his mouth, his arms, his thighs and his feet and allotted to these their distinctive duties. The Brahman was enjoined to study, teach, sacrifice, and receive alms; the Kshatriya to protect the people and abstain from sensual pleasures; the Vaishya to tend cattle, trade, to lend money and to cultivate land, while for the Shudra was prescribed the duty of service of the three groups.

43. But this follows the favourite method of exposition of a fact by its reference to the divine law. The fact is that caste in Egypt and Persia[1] was functional, but in India, it took its root owing to the difference in colour between the Aryan invaders and the aborigines of India. Thus a Vedic Hymn thanks Indra for having killed the Dasyas and "protected the Aryan colour."[2] Caste in its inception was synonymous with colour and the term Varna means nothing more. But in later years, it became multiplied. As the functions multiply with the development of society, the occupations became multiplied. Other forces have since contributed to its multiplication such as (i) the tribal groups, (ii) functions or occupations, (iii) sects comprising a small number of castes which commenced life as religious sects, founded by philanthropic enthusiasts, proclaiming the equality of their followers, (iv) cross-breeding, (v) racial tradition, (vi) migration, as where two persons of the same caste migrating to different localities become members of distinct castes discontinuing all connubial connection with each other, (vii) changes of custom, to which might be added, (viii) language, (ix) the worship of different gods, (x) the eating of different food, (xi) other social or religious habits, (xii) pride or prejudice, and (xiii) totemism. The growth of the caste instinct must have been greatly promoted and stimulated by certain characteristic peculiarities of the Indian intellect, its lax hold on facts, its indifference to action, its absorption in dreams, its exaggerated reverence for tradition, its distinctions, its pedantic tendency to press a principle to its furthest logical conclusion, and its remarkable capacity for imitating and adopting social ideas and usages of whatever origin.

44. While the Vedas contrast the Arya with Dasa, calling the wife of the Arya, Aryapatni, and that of a Dasa, Dasapatni, in later years, the term Arya became transferred to the first three castes, the rest being relegated to the servile caste. But caste as the corner-stone of modern Hinduism had not then become prominent. Indeed, the very term, Hindu, was unknown to the Smritikars. It owed its origin to the river "Sindhu" (Sanskrit for river) par excellence. The river Indus was then the natural Western boundary of the Aryan settlers. It appears that the word Sindhu was corrupted by the Persians into Hindu and the term Hindusthan was coined to designate the country where those people lived.

45. The Smritis follow the tripartite division of the Vedas[3] but their three parts deal with three branches of Dharma or duty, viz., (1) Achar (i.e., ceremonies), (2) Vyavahar (i.e., Social duty which includes legal obligations) and (3)

Shastric Social Polity.

(1) Spiegel, Eranische Alterthumakunde, III, 54-670.
(2) III, 34, 9.
(3) Divided into three parts, viz., Samhita, Brahmana and Aranyak.

Prayaschit i.e., expiation). The society assumed and commended throughout including the Mitakshara is a society in which wealth counts for nothing and life of religious asceticism is all in all. All Hindu philosophy is pessimistic. Life is not a gift but an ordeal. It cannot be enjoyed but must be endured. Life is an evil and in the cycle of years the present age is the worst. The end of life is the end of all worldly torments and a step hastening to Nirvan or cessation of reincarnations and an absorption into the Divine Spirit which is the be all and the end all of existence.[1] It is the Supreme beatitude.[2] To quicken this state what is required is the practice of austerity.

46. The love of life prolongs life. Its prolongation lengthens the span that separates it from Nirvan. Life is an illusion (Maya). Who cherishes an illusion? The Aryan is, therefore, enjoined to divide life into four stages as a compromise between this stern doctrine and his mundane attachments. An Aryan boy is at birth no better than a Shudra. Before reaching a certain age[3] he must undergo the Upanayan[4] ceremony which makes him a twice-born. He must then study the Vedas under his Guru. His pupilage lasts till then, after which he attains the status of a householder. As such, he must strive for, and accumulate, no wealth. He must marry but the purpose of marriage is merely to raise a male offspring. For the rest he must adhere to, and perform, his appoined duties: "Sacrificing, studying, and giving alms are appointed for the Vaishyas and Kshatriyas, and to the Brahman, there are, in addition, receiving gifts, assisting others to sacrifice and teaching the Vedas. To the Kshatriya is ordained the protection of their subjects as the chief duty, for the Vaishya, lending at interest, agriculture, trade, and tending cattle are laid down. For the Shudras is laid down the service of twice-born (as the chief duty), or if he cannot thereby earn his livelihood he may become a trader, or studying the benefit of the twice-born, he may assist by various mechanical arts."[5] Even these circumscribed duties he could not perform for long: "When the father of a family perceives his muscles become flaccid and his hair gray and sees the child of his child, let him then seek refuge in a forest."[6] Manu then particularizes the life this hermit is to lead in the forest till he can get rid of life by torments and tortures, privations and self-denials, and even suicide if afflicted with any incurable ailment, when he should "advance in a straight path towards the invincible North-Eastern point feeding on water and air till his mortal frame totally decays, and his soul becomes united with the Divine Essence."[7]

47. The young Aryan becomes a householder from sheer necessity. He must leave that state as soon as he has begotten children from choice. Even as a householder he must abjure wealth. His grain store should be sufficient to last only for a year. If it exceeds that limit he must spend it on sacrifices.[8] In this scheme of life, this world, its pleasures and passions, its occupations and attachments, play a very subordinate part and legal obligations necessarily share the same fate. Even a casual glance at any Smriti will show that rituals loom large in the author's eye who adverts to

(1) Manu, VI-61; Ch. XII-1-126.
(2) Manu, VI-31, 32; XII-1-126.
(3) Manu, II-38; Yadnayavalka, 37; Brahmin before his 16th year, Kshatriya up to his 22nd year and Vaishya up to his 24th year.
(4) Lit. Going near—Skt. Upa near, Nayan to go, i.e., going near his spiritual preceptor.
(5) Yadnayavalka, 118, 120.
(6) Manu, Ch. VI-2.
(7) Manu, Ch. VI-31.
(8) Yad. 124, 125.

legal matters as merely necessary for the guidance and government of the family.

48. These books refer to a state of society long passed. Aryan life has become complex with industrialism and the vast accumulation of wealth. The head of the social order then was a Kshatriya king, holding autocratic sway over his people, who believed in his Divine supremacy. The society was divided into four main castes and subdivided into numerous sub-castes and people followed professions allotted to them by their caste. The Brahmin priests were the sole repositories of all knowledge, secular and divine, and wrote the Dharma Shastras. There was no collection of precedents and no enunciation of legal principles and the only factor which broke the monotony of the traditional teaching was the slow moving custom. Though extremely slow, there was a little progress and some change which had to be explained away without shaking the authority of the Divine Law. This was done by saying that the change was necessitated with the advent of Kaliyug—the present age of sinfulness, falsehood and deceit.

The Smritis.

49. Hindu Law is in essence a purely religious law which has never been secularized. Theoretically, the Smritis are our sole repository of law. They afford ample material for the ethnographic survey of the people and guide the course of their social evolution with which their laws and practices are naturally interwoven. A historical survey of their leading principles is, therefore, here attempted. It would show how modern ideas, with which the Hindu lawyer has to make himself familiar, have their roots lying embedded in the social structure of the ancient people.

The Age of Manu.

50. The Code of Manu or Manu-Smriti[1] is the first and foremost repository of Hindu Law. It is not a work of any single author, but rather a compilation used as a text-book of the school of Manavas held in high reverence from all time. Even the Veda declared that "whatever Manu pronounced was a medicine for the soul." From the fact that many passages are quoted by later writers from what is called Vrihat (or great) Manu and Vridha (or old) Manu, it is surmised that the code, now extant, is only one of the many, probably successive, redactions. The laws of Manu reflect the customs and practices of the society then extant, but which have long since become obsolete, though technically the work still remains a standard authority upon the unchangeable laws of the Hindus. They show the fast grip of the sacerdotal influence upon the community. The four castes had already become well established, but they had not as yet crystallized into their latter rigour. For instance, while a Brahmin is recommended to take for his first wife a woman of his estate[2] for subsequent marriages he is permitted to marry of the next lower twice-born order;[3] but the marriage of a twice-born with a Sudra woman is strongly reprobated, but should such marriage take place, then the progeny is degraded to the status of Shudra,[4] while the marriage itself is denounced as an inexpiable sin[5] which suggests that such alliances were becoming so common as to menace the purity of the Aryan race and continued despite the sacerdotal sermons due to paucity of Aryan women

(1) Manu was a Rajanya or Kshatriya and not a Brahmin. His father Vivaswat is called "the seed of all the Kshatriyas". (Madhusudan, Bhagwat-Gita, iv-i, cited by Max Muller in "Chips from a German Workshop," pp. 341, 342). But if so, the texts now extant must have undergone material alterations, since it places the Brahmin in a class apart.

(2) Manu, Ch. III, v. 12.

(3) Manu, Ch. III, v. 12.

(4) Ib., v. 15.

(5) Ch. III, v. 19.

brought about by female infanticide. The Gandharwa[1] form of marriage was usual amongst the twice-born: the Rakshasa[2] and the Paishach[3] forms took place between the twice-born and the Shudras.

Kinds of Marriage.

51. Manu describes eight kinds of marriages;[4] but of these he regards the first four as approved in the case of Brahmins.[5] The rest he reprobates.

52. In short, the first four are godly, the last four, demoniac. There was a difference of opinion whether the fifth should go into the first class, or be relegated to the second, and Manu cuts the gordion knot by holding it legal or not according to the caste of the husband. The difference between the first four lay in the price paid for the bride. The first two were marriages without consideration; the third and the rest were less meritorious, because they were marriages for a price or were otherwise non-consensual.

53. Wives in Manu's age enjoyed considerable liberty. The marriage itself was not a mere contract but a sacrament.[6] To the wife is assigned the duty of the hostess.[7] A man is recommended to consult his guide before marriage.[8] All men are enjoined to honour women: "Where females are honoured, there the deities are pleased; but where they are dishonoured, there all religious acts become fruitless."[9] The married man is to dispense hospitality with a lavish hand—an injunction which is to this day obeyed and is one of the sweetest phases of the Hindu religion.

54. Manu disapproves of widow marriages[10] likening it to a "practice fit only for cattle,"[11] but he allows the deceased husband's brother to espouse his virgin widow.[12] Child marriages appear to be common; girls below 8 are mentioned as possible brides.[13]

Manu's Twelve Sons.

55. Manu and the later text-writers do not regard marriages as an end in any sense, but only as a means to the sole end of securing the male issue to pull the begetter out of the torments of hell.[14] Consequently, as Manu treats every alliance between a man and a woman as marriage, he regards the son anyhow procreated, whether by the procreator or not, as a legitimate son. He classifies the following twelve as sons: (1) son by married wife of the same caste, (2) son by married wife of a lower caste than the husband, (3) by a wife two or more degrees lower, (4) by twice born who have not assumed the sacred thread, (5) by a wife who had conceived and delivered of a son before her marriage, (6) son purchased, (7) son of an appointed daughter, (8) son of an impotent or ailing husband born of his wife by another with his permission (a case of Levirate or Niyog), (9) son of a woman pregnant with or without the knowledge of the bridegroom, (10) adopted son—the latter being of the same caste as the adopter, (11) any boy deserted by his parents and received as such by the putative father, and (12) son of a remarried woman.[15]

56. Of these twelve, the Hindu had brought with him the practice of Niyog and adoption from his ancestral Aryan home. The practice of

(1) Ib., v. 33.
(2) Ib., v. 33.
(3) Ib., v. 34.
(4) Viz., (1) Brahma; (2) Daiva; (3) Arsha; (4) Prajapatya; (5) Asur; (6) Gandharva; (7) Rakshasa; and (8) Paishach.
(5) Ch. III, v. 24.
(6) Ch. III, v. 18.
(7) Ib., v. 4.
(8) Manu, Ch. III, 56; cf. v. 55, 62.
(9) III-56.
(10) IX-65, 68.
(11) IX-66.
(12) IX-69.
(13) IX-88.
(14) IX-138.
(15) Nagindas v. Bachao, 40 B. 270, P. C.

Levirate or Niyog, and arrogation or adoption, was quite established in Greece and Rome. If it fell into disuse it was because of the early establishment of settled governments and the absence of case which soon restored the equilibrium of sexes so seriously deficient in the case of oriental settlers, in whose case the necessity of combined and corporate existence continued down to very recent times and in whose case, the interwelding of law with religion with the attendant horrors of hell presented to the sonless man, created a thirst which could only be gratified by begging, borrowing or stealing a son. The practice of early marriage was probably also traceable to the same source. And the little scrutiny exercised in obtaining a son appears to have been due to their great scarcity and the high prices claimed for obtaining them.

57. The slaughter of cattle, bulls, buffaloes, cows and horses for food or sacrifice was permissible even to Brahmins[1] while the Ashwamedh or horse-sacrifice is spoken of as specially meritorious;[2] and a human sacrifice was not unknown. But Manu is not consistent with himself. In some places he condemns flesh-eating altogether;[3] in another place, he exalts both the beef-eaters as well as the slaughtered cattle to the summit of beatitude;[4] but probably, the latter verses were penned after a delicious dish off a fattened calf. The age of Manu was the age of pastoral life. All the goods and chattels that the Aryan had consisted of cattle, goat and sheep.

58. The Code commends strict conjugal fidelity. It prohibits polyandry, a practice which appears to be of later growth. Of course, polygamy was then, as it is now, legal. References such as, "If two sons begotten by two successive husbands who are both dead"[5] are of course to widow remarriage.[6] The right of a married woman to her separate property was recognized in verses which will have to be considered in another place.[7]

59. As might be expected, the government was on a par with the rest of the ordinances of Manu. Brahmins were wholly exempt from the payment of taxes, and kings, even though dying, were bound to see that the Brahmins were neither taxed nor left hungry.[8] Not only Brahmins but their benefactors were free from having to bear the burden of the State[9] which was thrown on the rest of the community. Taxes were levied in specie[10] and the king's share was fixed.[11] But fines were payable in coins of which gold, silver and copper pieces were well established.[12]

60. Justice was administered by the king with the assistance of three Brahmin assessors.[13] Law could, however, be interpreted by any of the twice-born.[14] The procedure is elementary, and for the most part fair, Indeed, Manu is fair in other respects except where his judgment is warped by prejudice or prepossession. And even as regards Brahmins, while they are singled out for every privilege, they are also enjoined to practise severe austerity[15]—the only difference in practice being that while the one is real, the other is ideal.

---

(1) Manu, V. 22.
(2) V. 53.
(3) V. 37, 47-56.
(4) V. 41-42.
(5) IX-191.
(6) IX-190.
(7) IX-194, 197. See, Chapter on Stridhan.
(8) VII-133.
(9) VIII-394.
(10) See VII-130.
(11) VII-130-132.
(12) VIII-131-138.
(13) VIII-10-11.
(14) VII-20.
(15) II-162-163.

61. Only Brahmins are to be appointed as Judges.[1] "The very birth of Brahmins is a constant incarnation of Dharma,[2] for the Brahmin is born to promote justice and to procure ultimate happiness."[3] He is exalted to the status of the gods but not yet above them. Later on he rose above them, and the gods in the heavens lived by his sufferance.[4] Manu's rules on the law of inheritance call for detailed examination, and refer as they do, to a subject which is still technically the current law. Their examination must be reserved for the ensuing commentary dealing with the subject.

62. All transgressions are punishable by Manu, but the difference between punishment and penance is not yet discerned. Even murder may be expiated by penance and amercement regulated according to the caste and kind of the murdered. The fine was the delivery of cattle.

63. The Smrit of Harit has not been translated in the "Sacred Books of the East." But a translation of a work of that name appears in the Twenty Samhitas. If this be the entire Smriti, it is devoid of any legal or ethnological significance. The work contains seven short chapters in which the four stages are defined. They merely show that Hindu Society had become divided into four castes according to their occupations, but there is no indication of their inter-relation, while Harit entirely omits to allude to the Dharma or civil duties which, in the earlier and later Codes, embody the laws of family relations and inheritance.

Harit, 850 B.C.

64. Next to Manu, Gautam is the oldest Dharm Shastra extant. But it was not the only work composed since the Code of Manu, for Gautam refers to other writers whose opinions he quotes without naming them.[5] The work belongs to the followers of the Sama Veda. Its age cannot be ascertained, but it appears to be older than Baudhayan by several generations, as the customs in vogue in his time appear to have died out when the Baudhayan school was founded just as the customs current in Baudhayan's time had disappeared when the Apastamb school was founded.

Gautam, 700-800 B.C.

65. The dominating note of the Aryan society in the days of Gautam was the same as in the days of Manu. Some changes were no doubt creeping into society. Caste was becoming a trifle more rigid, but it was still in a fluid condition as before. For instance, Gautam allows the student to accept alms from men of all castes,[6] and a Brahmin may eat food given by a twice-born man,[7] and in case of necessity, even that given by a Shudra.[8] He must not eat the flesh of "milch cows and draught oxen" but he was otherwise free to partake of that and other meat.[9] Society is divided into four orders—that of the student, the householder, the ascetic (Bhikshu) and that of the hermit in the woods (Vaikhanas). Only the householder can marry; the others are consigned to life long celibacy.[10] The householder must marry in the caste a woman not related to him within six degrees on the father's side,[11] or within four degrees on the mother's

(1) VIII-11.
(2) God of Justice.
(3) Manu, I-98.
(4) Vishnu, XIX-22; (7 S.B.E. 77): "It is by the favour of the Brahmins that the gods reside in heaven; a speech uttered by Brahmans (whether a curse or a benediction) never fails to come true."
(5) By use of the expression "Some declare" as in Gautam, II-9. 34, III-1, 19, VI-6, X-52, XVI-14, XVII-7.
(6) Gautam, II-35.
(7) XVII-1.
(8) XVII-5.
(9) XVII-27-38.
(10) III-3.
(11) IV 1-3.

side.[1] It recognizes the eight forms of marriages described in Manu[2] including capture[3] and the embracing of an unconscious female.[4]

66. Inter-caste marriages were customary and their offspring are declared legitimate.[5] But as was the view of all ancient laws, the wife was merely a means to an end. She was married for the sole purpose of procreating a son. If her husband dies sonless, she may procreate up to two sons[6] by his brother[7] or a sapinda, a sagotra, a samana-pravar or one belonging to the same caste.[8] The practice of Niyog is preserved in the following verse: "And the child begotten at a living husband's request on his wife belongs to the husband,"[9] but if it was begotten by a stranger, it belongs to the latter,[10] or to both the natural father and the husband of the mother.[11] Another means of raising an issue was to obtain a son by an appointed daughter.[12] Girls were married off before they attained puberty.[13] "Some declare that a girl shall be given in marriage before she wears clothes"[14]—which shows that a tendency had then become established in favour of child-marriages, though Gautam appears to have been comparatively a rationalist. Polygamy was then naturally customary.[15]

67. Gautam's law of inheritance recognizes the rule of primogeniture[16] as the rule of succession, but the rule on that point was fluctuating, and the tendency was towards the equality of shares amongst all the sons, the eldest being given two shares.[17] "A legitimate son, a son born secretly, and a son abandoned by his natural parents inherit the estate of their father."[18] "The son of an unmarried damsel, the son of a pregnant bride, the son of a twice-married woman, the son of an appointed daughter, a son self-given and a son bought"[19] receive one-fourth on failure of the other sons.[20] Idiots and eunuchs were disinherited, but the disqualification was personal and they were entitled to maintenance,[21] Cases of inheritance not covered by the express texts were to be decided by the committee (parishud) of ten Brahmins learned in law.

68. Hospitality is enjoined, but Brahmins are to be fed first, Kshatriyas next, and men of other castes are to be fed with one's servants for mercy's sake.[22] Reverence is due to age, and "even a Shudra of 80 years or more must be honoured by one young enough to be his son."[23] But an Arya, though he be younger, must be respected by a Shudra.[24] Prestige!

69. No Aryan should grow a beard without a sufficient reason.[25] But the Vedic Aryans grew beards as a rule, and hid his long hair in a conch-like pyramidal chignon arranged to the right. The student is now enjoined to shave off his head but merely maintain a pigtail.[26] They walked bare-headed during the day,[27] covering their heads only at night.[28] The Arya

(1) IV-5.
(2) IV-6-13.
(3) IV-12.
(4) IV-13.
(5) IV-16, 17.
(6) Gautam, XVIII-14.
(7) Ib.
(8) XVIII-6.
(9) XVIII-11.
(10) XVIII-12.
(11) XVIII-13.
(12) XXVIII-18.
(13) XVII-21.
(14) XXVIII-21.
(15) XXXVIII-14.
(16) XXVIII-3.
(17) XXVIII-9.
(18) XXVIII-32.
(19) XXVIII-33.
(20) XXVIII-34.
(21) XXVIII-43.
(22) VI-43.
(23) VI-40.
(24) VI-11.
(25) IX-7.
(26) I-27.
(27) IX-35.
(28) IX-36.

should not take water offered by a Shudra[1]—a notable restriction on the older law, when the Shudra was vigorously anathematized but not yet ostracized.

70. The Aryan ate meals twice a day—morning and evening,[2] but unlike that of the Romans, it savoured of the Spartan simplicity. The three duties enjoined on all Aryans are the study of the Vedas, the offerings of sacrifices and the giving of alms,[3] the additional duties of the Brahmin being to receive them and teaching people the making of sacrifices.[4] The payment of taxes follows the rules stated in Manu.[5]

71. The origin of bhet bigar is to be found in Gautam: "Each artizan shall monthly do one day's work for the King."[6]

72. The duties of a King are set out in much detail[7]: "The King is master of all, with the exception of Brahmins,"[8] "All excepting Brahmins shall worship him.[9] . . . . The Brahmins also shall honour him."[10] "He shall administer justice according to the laws of countries, castes and families which are not opposed to the sacred records."[11]

73. Of the rest of the productions of this age Apastamb occupies a prominent place not only because a comparatively authentic version of this Smriti is extant but also because it is an excellent compendium of the followers of Yajur-Veda originally compiled for the benefit of the Adhvaryu priests and their acolyte pupils.

Baudhayan, 650 B.C. Apastamb, 500 B.C.

74. The term "Apastamb" is the name of the school like Ashvalayan, Baudhayan, Bharadwaj or Gautam. It was one of the five branches of Khandikiya school which, again, was a branch of the Taittriyas, a section of the Brahmanas who studied the Black Yajur-Veda.

75. Apastamb and Baudhayan belong to the same school, but of these, Baudhayana is about 100 to 150 years older. If, therefore, Apastamb was compiled in 500 B.C. Baudhayan, which portrays customs of a ruder age, must have been composed about 650 B.C. Older than both is the work of Harit, but though a copy of this work exists, it has no practical value to the lawyer, as its Dharma Sutras are meagre and incomplete. So are those of Baudhayan as compared to those of Apastamb, though in this case, later glossators have performed the work of restoration according to their own ideas.[12]

76. Nevertheless, the following facts may be gleaned from what remains, which has been translated, with an Introduction in the Sacred Books of the East Series.[13] Both Baudhayan and Apastamb originated in the Deccan,[14] and both probably belonged to the Andhra country.[15] As to the age of Baudhayan it is manifestly older than Apastamb as it recognizes several customs reprobated in the latter work. It is computed that Apastamb flourished about 500 B.C., probably more but not less.[16] The Criminal Baudhayan.

(1) Gautam, IX-10.
(2) IX-59.
(3) X-1.
(4) X-2.
(5) X-24-30.
(6) X-31.
(7) XI.
(8) XI-1.
(9) XI-7.
(10) XI-8.
(11) XI-20.
(12) 14 S.B.E., XXXIII.
(13) 14 S.B.E. Translated by G. Buhler.
(14) India South of the Nerbudda, i.e., the Bombay and Madras Presidencies; see S.B.E., 20, 24: Intr., xlii.
(15) India South of the Nerbudda, i.e., the Bombay and Madras Presidencies; see S.B.E., 20, 24; Intr., xliii.
(16) Baudhayan, XLIII.

Law is draconian in its severity against Shudras. There was one law for the Aryan—another for the Shudra.

77. The outstanding features of Baudhayan are the recognition of family relations in their widest sense, the growing cleavage between the different castes and their tendency to follow their hereditary occupations. Like the older writers Baudhayan enters into the trivialities of life and prescribes a mode of living which must have reduced men to mere automata. Women were pre-ordained for procreation. They have no other function. They are excluded from education and inheritance, and though Baudhayan combats the view that they should be married off as they emerge from their cradle, he supports their marriage before puberty. Niyog was still in vogue[1] and sonship used in the same large sense as before.[2]

78. These peculiarities of Hindu society became accentuated with time and the writings of later sages only voice the growing tendency of the time when they applied the cardinal doctrines of their race to the practical problems of sociology.

79. Bhaudhayan even justifies divorce on the part of the husband: "Let him abandon a wife who does not bear children in the tenth year, one who bears daughters only in the twelfth, one whose children all die in the fifteenth, but her who is quarrelsome without delay."[3] With the last sentiment every one from Socrates downwards will agree. Baudhayan prefaces to his Smriti a long dissertation on personal purity in which he follows Manu, Gautam and the other sages of his time.

80. His law of inheritance is contained in the following seven verses[4]:—

"Moreover, the great-grandfather, the grandfather, the father, oneself; the uterine brothers, the son by a wife of equal caste, the grandson, and the great-grandson—these they call Sapindas, but not the great-grandson's son: and amongst these a son and a son's son (together with their father) are sharers of an undivided oblation.

"The sharers of divided oblations, they call Sakulyas.

"If no other relations are living, the property of a deceased male descends to them after the Sapindas.

"On failure of them, the teacher who holds the place of a spiritual father, a pupil, or an officiating priest shall take it.

"On failure of them, the king. Let him give that property to persons well-versed in the three Vedas.

"But the king should never take for himself the property of a Brahmin."

81. In Baudhayan's time, the law of coparcenership had not yet developed. There could be no partition during the father's lifetime except with his permission.[5] The rights of the younger sons to an equal division with their eldest brother was now recognized. He still received an additional 10 per cent. or the most excellent chattel, but it all depended upon the father's volition.[6]

82. Baudhayan's catalogue of edibles is the same as Gautam's. He believes in limited polygamy, allowing four wives to a Brahmin, three to a Kshatriya, two to a Vaisya and only one to a Shudra.[7] Inter-caste unions are discussed without being condemned. Their offspring are treated as legitimate.[8] His criminal law is hard on the Shudra. The murderer of a Shudra is, however, liable to the same fine as for killing a dog, a crow, an owl, a frog or a musk-rat.[9]

(1) Baudhayan, 14 S.B.E., p. 226, v-17.
(2) Ib., pp. 227, 288; v-20-33.
(3) II-6.
(4) 14 S.B.E., 178, 179.
(5) 14 S.B.E., 224.
(6) Ib.
(7) 14 S.B.E., 196.
(8) Ib., 197, 198.
(9) Ib., 202.

83. There was a growing sense of the dignity of marriage. Though he recites the eight forms of marriage, he reserves the Gandharv and the Pisach forms for Vaisyas and Shudras—a departure which was not universally acclaimed, since "some recommend the Gandhary rite for all castes because it is based on mutual affection."[1]

84. Baudhayan strikes the dominant note of the time to obtain a son by marriage if you may—by Niyog if you must—but get a son, for "through the procreation of a virtuous son he saves himself."[2] "Therefore, he should sedulously beget offspring."[3]

85. The right of women to acquire property was now recognized. Though women possess no independence and are never fit for it,[4] nevertheless, "the daughters shall obatin the ornaments of their mother, as many as are presented according to the custom of the caste, or anything else that may be given according to custom."[5]

86. The work concludes with a chapter on adoption,[6] in which occurs the text prohibiting the giving and taking of an only son in adoption,[7] which is no longer the law, and prescribing the following ceremony, the substance of which is still essential, to constitute the giving and taking in adoption:—

"9. Then he....goes to the giver of the child and should address this request to him: "Give me the son.'

"10. The other answers: 'I give him.'

"11. He receives the child with these words: 'I take thee for the fulfilment of my religious duties; I take thee to continue the line of my ancestors.'[8]

"If a legitimate son is afterwards born the adopted son gets a fourth of the legitimate son's share. Thus says Baudhayan."[9]

Another text of Baudhayan on the incapacity of women to inherit was used by the courts to overrule the succession of a sister, now set right by the Legislature.[10]

Apastamb, 500 B.C.

87. The Apastamb Sutra, the youngest of the trio, represents the doctrines of the school of that name which flourished in South India[11] and whose founder, according to tradition, was a native of the Andhra country. As compared to Gautam and Baudhayan, it records a change in the Aryan customs which is in many respects modern. In their general structure the three works agree, containing as they do, many verses in common, and setting out only some additional clauses which had forced themselves into the forefront by reason of their acceptance as the acknowledged tenets of the people. For instance, with the growing rigidity of caste, he prohibits intercourse, dining and intermarriages with those whose great-grandfather's, grandfather's and father's initiation is not remembered.[12] If a Shudra touches him then he shall leave off eating.[13] He shall not eat in a ship[14] or ready-made food purchased in the market,[15] but "the meat of milch cows and oxen may be eaten."[16] "Bull's flesh is fit for offerings."[17] But a Brahmin shall not eat in the house of people of the three other castes,[18] but on this point there was

(1) 14 S.B.E., 207.
(2) Ib., 272, v. 8.
(3) Ib., 272, v. 11.
(4) Ib., v. 44-45.
(5) Ib., v. 43.
(6) Ib., 334-336.
(7) Ib., 334, v. 4.
(8) Ib., 335, v. 9-11.
(9) Ib., 336, v. 16.
(10) Lallubhai v. Cassibai, 5 B. 110 (118) P.C.
(11) In a work called Maharnava, India is divided into two equal halves by the river Nerbuda and the School of Apastamb prevailed in the country to its south up to the mouth of the Godavari.
(12) 2 S.B.E. vv. 5, 6.
(13) Ib., p. 61 v. 1.
(14) 2 S.B.E. v. 6.
(15) Ib., v. 14.
(16) Ib., p. 64 v. 30.
(17) Ib., v. 31.
(18) 2 S.B.E., p. 66, v. 9.

still dissent: "According to some, food offered by people of any caste, who follow the law prescribed for them, except that of Shudras may be eaten."[1] Even the Shudra's food may be eaten in times of distress.[2] Apastamb affects puritan piety in forbidding food given by a physician,[3] or one who lives by the use of arms, excepting a Kshatriya[4] and several other injunctions, which, if strictly obeyed, must have left the Aryan very hungry. Niyog had by this time died out and is forbidden.[5] So is the delivery of widows for procreation to the agnatic kinsmen of her deceased husband.[6]

89. Apastamb's law of inheritance follows the beaten track except that it allows the daughter to take after the pupil—a very remote chance.[7] The wife's Stridhan is better defined as comprising her ornaments and the wealth received from her relations.[8] The doubtful equity in favour of the eldest son is now positively swept away. "Preference of the eldest son is forbidden by the Shastras."[9] It is allowed for a Shudra to prepare the food under the superintendence of men of the three higher castes. That Shudra cooks were employed is apparent from an allusion to that effect.[10]

Baudhayan allowed traffic in sons, Apastamb forbids it.[11]

90. After the two exponents of the Southern School, Vashishth who belongs to the Northern School, that is to say, the school founded in the country, north of the Nerbudda river and the Vindhya mountain, presents some interesting and instructive features. This Dharma-Shashtra was composed by the sage Vashishth, or, at any rate, by the pupils of his school who followed the Rig-Veda. There are no data to ascertain the age of this work, though internal evidence shows it to belong to a period long past the age of Baudhayan.

Vashishth, 400 B.C.

91. From its general structure it would show that it was written after the rise of Buddhism in India and when the hatred it had aroused amongst the priestly classes was keen: it refers to them as "Atheists," service with whom entails forfeiture of caste.[12] Consequently, it would not be far wrong if the age of Vashishth is placed in the fourth or fifth century before Christ. The author defines Aryavart to be a country between the Himalaya and the Vindhya ranges, limited on the East and West by the ocean.[13] The law prevailing there is authoritative.

92. It will be observed that while Apastamb has limited polygamy to four wives for a Brahmin, three for a Kshatriya, two for a Vaisya and only one for a Shudra, Gautam improves on Apastamb by reducing the Brahmin's allowance only to three, Kshatriya's to two and one each to the Vaisya and Shudra.[14] Vashishth reproduces many aphorisms of Baudhayan and Apastamb; but they are better arranged and brought up to date. Vashishth denounces the prevailing, though perhaps decadent, custom of a Brahmin marrying a Shudra.[15]

---

(1) 2 S.B.E., p. 67 v. 13.
(2) Ib., p. 67 v. 14.
(3) Ib., p. 67 v. 21.
(4) Ib., p. 67 v. 19.
(5) Ib., pp. 130, 131 v. 7, Niyog is definitely prohibited; Ib., p. 164, v. 2, 5.
(6) Ib., p. 164 v. 5.
(7) Ib., p. 133 v. 4.
(8) Ib., p. 134 v. 9.
(9) Ib., p. 134 vv. 10-14.
(10) Ib., v. 6.
(11) Ib., p. 13 v. 11. "The gift or acceptance of a child and the right to sell or buy a child are not recognized."
(12) I-23.
(13) I-8, 9.
(14) I-24.
(15) I-25, 26.

93. In regard to the marriage rites, Vashishth only recognizes six forms against the eight of his predecessors, namely: (1) Brahma (Supreme Spirit); (2) Daiva (Gods); (3) Arsha (Sages); (4) Gandharva (Love-match); (5) Kshatriya (Warrior); (6) Manush (Man). Of these, the last two are new, though they bear the old meaning, the Kshatriya marriage being seizure by main force, while the Manush marriage is purchase, pure and simple.[1] The dependence of women upon men is again insisted on.[2] He allows the widow after six months of widowhood—her appointment to raise an issue to her deceased husband[3] from whose estate she is to be maintained.[4] A woman may marry of her own accord three years after attaining puberty,[5] but with Gautam he counsels marriage before puberty[6] and permits re-marriage of virgin widows[7] and of deserted wives to one of the husband's kinsmen,[8] failing him to a stranger.[9] The meat of domestic animals was still eaten, and Vashishth adds the interesting fact that camel-flesh was equally served at the Aryan table.[10]

94. The law of adoption is a reproduction of the older texts, in places revised, as for instance, the following: "Let a woman neither give nor receive a son except with her husband's permission."[11] "He who desires to adopt a son shall assemble his kinsmen, announce his intention to the king, make burnt-offerings in the middle of the house, reciting the Vyavhritis, and take as a son not a distant kinsman, but the nearest among his relatives."[12] This would compare favourably with the Roman Law of adoption, but the objurgation does not appear to have attained the dignity of an indispensable condition.

95. Vashishth is quite modern in his law of property. Ten years' continuous adverse possession destroys the owner's right to property.[13] He recognizes possession as evidence of ownership.[14] He entrusts the minor's property to the king.[15] His ideal for the king is noble: "A king will be superior even to Brahmins, if he lives surrounded by servants who are keen-eyed like vultures."[16] "Let him live surrounded by servants who are keen-eyed like vultures. Let him not be a vulture surrounded by vultures."[17] Vashishth had an idea of contracts against public policy.[18]

96. He still recognizes the twelve kinds of sons.[19] Sons by inter-caste marriage are still legitimate.[20] But he reverts to the double share allowed to the eldest son on partition.[21] He disinherits eunuchs, madmen and out-caste sons but allows them maintenance.[22] He recognizes the right to self-acquisition, but allows the acquirer only a double share.[23] In other respects he follows the traditional law of inheritance.

97. In this closing exordium in support of liberality, Vashishth promises beatitude to him "who gives a house obtains a town"[24] and "he who

---

(1) I-34, 35.
(2) V-1, 2.
(3) XVII-57.
(4) XVII-62.
(5) XVII-67, 68.
(6) XVII-69, 70; Gautam, XVII-23.
(7) XVII-74.
(8) XVII-78-80.
(9) XVII-80.
(10) XIV-40, 45-46.
(11) XV-5.
(12) XV-6.
(13) XVI-17.
(14) XVI-10.
(15) XVI-9.
(16) XVI-21.
(17) XVI-25.
(18) XVI-31; cf. Manu, VIII-159. Vishnu, VI-41. Yajnavalkya, II-47.
(19) XVII-12-39.
(20) XVII-47-50.
(21) XVII-42.
(22) XVII-52-54.
(23) XVII-51.
(24) XXIX-14.

gives a pair of shoes obtains a vehicle."[1] "Practice righteousness, not unrighteousness; speak truth, not untruth, look far not near; look towards the Highest, not towards that which is not the Highest."[2] Happiness is the portion of him who relinquishes all desires which fools give up with difficulty, which do not diminish with age, and which are a life-long disease."[3]

98. The Dharma Shashtra which passed under the name of the God Vishnu is for its size equal to the Code of Manu, from which its contents are largely borrowed. This is, indeed, the leading feature of all Dharma Shashtras, the text of which is mainly borrowed from the earlier Codes, only in parts added to, or modified, to represent the views of the writer of the age. This Smriti contains over 160 slokas from Manu, and it appears that an old recension of this work was older than Baudhayan and Vashishth, for both have borrowed from it. But this recension has been edited by subsequent glossators out of recognition, so that the text translated in the Sacred Books of the East Series is comparatively a modern work.[4] It is now impossible to separate the old from the new and the works now extant may then be taken as the only works known to us, and which might have been 300 or 400 years old at the birth of Christ.

Vishnu, 300-400 B.C.

99. The Smriti belongs to a school studying the Black Yajur-Veda, but there are passages therein showing the writer's leanings towards the Sankhya philosophy of Buddhism. For instance, in the concluding praise of Vishnu by the Goddess of the Earth for his enlightening discourse, she addresses him as "the Lord of the Principle of Mahat (Greek Entity).[5] Thou art the sage Kapil,[6] thou art the teacher of the Sankhya."[7] As Buddhism was at the zenith of its power in the third and fourth century B.C., and the orange-coloured robes of its monks were a frequent sight in the towns, Vishnu regards it as a good omen that one should come across them.

100. Leaving out of account the ceremonial and penitential matter in which Vishnu does not differ from the earlier sages, his dissertation on the family relations and the law of inheritance call for a passing notice. Vishnu like his predecessors recognizes inter-caste marriages and the legitimacy of their offspring. He enumerates twelve kinds of sons, the last of whom is a son born by any woman whomsoever.[8] He recognizes the eight forms of marriage, but adds that the first four are only legitimate for a Brahmin while these and the Gandharv are legitimate for a Kshatriya,[9] but this restriction counts for nothing in view of the laxity he observes in counting the sons. In other respects Vishnu voiced the orthodox Hindu sentiment as to women's dependence upon men,[10] and the like. He is the first to regard Suttee or self-immolation with her husband's corpse as a wifely duty,[11] but this is regarded as a later interpolation. He recognizes the right of the wife and the daughter to inherit to her husband and father in the absence of male issue.[12] He also allows the mother to succeed to her son.[13] He, moreover, enlarges the scope of stridhan,[14] and prescribes the mode of

(1) XXIX-15.
(2) XXX-1.
(3) XXX-10.
(4) Vol. VII.
(5) CVIII-26.
(6) XCVIII-85.
(7) XCVIII-86.
(8) XV-27.
(9) XXIV-27, 28.
(10) XXVI-13.
(11) XXVI-14.
(12) XVII-4, 5.
(13) XVII-7.
(14) XVII-18.

its devolution.[1] He gives mothers and unmarried daughters a share on partition.[2] Niyog appears to have fallen into disuse and so also the employment of widows to raise offspring to their deceased husbands.

101. Most of Vishnu's law of inheritance has become obsolete with the discontinuance of inter-caste marriages. He apportions the share of each son according to the caste of his mother.[3] The balance is consonance with modern law and will be set out in the ensuing commentary.

102. Vishnu differs from all the previous sages in expressly prescribing the law of the mortgage of land.[4] He allows mortgage of only a bull's hide[5] of land at a time. If the mortgagor mortgages more without redeeming that previously mortgaged, he shall be whipped or imprisoned.[6] In a dispute between two mortgagees the one with possession has priority.[7]

103. In his exposition of Criminal Law, Vishnu is equally modern. He recognizes the right of private defence,[8] and punishes adultery,[9] defamation[10] and insult[11] while his refined moral sense does not suffer beastiality to go unpunished.[12] A tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye is his standard of punishment for many other offences.

104. The Dharma Shastra of Narad bears so close an affinity to the Code of Manu as to be regarded as one of its versions. From reference to the Roman gold coin Dinarius, which was introduced into India about the first century, the Smriti must have been compiled after that date. But inasmuch as it agrees on many points with the Smritis of Yadnyavalka, Vishnu, Katyayan, Brihaspati and Vyas and reflects a more developed stage of judicial procedure, it may be safely assigned to the fourth century A.D.

Narad, 400 A.D.

105. In his own preface to the Smriti, Narad admits that the work is no more than an abridgment of Manu, made for the convenience of study by those who should find Manu unmanageably bulky. But if Narad is an abridgment of that work, it is also an improvement thereon in many respects. The opening chapters deal with judicial procedure, the plaint, pleadings and judgment, and the constitution of the Courts. He then deals with the subject of debts and pledges which appear to have tormented the old world as it torments the new. He then deals with evidence and ordeals, deposits, the resumption of gifts, breach of a contract of service, rescission of purchase, trespass and boundary disputes which are followed by the law of impotency and marriage.

106. Narad allows the wife to divorce her husband for impotency:[13] "Women have been created for the sake of propagation, the wife being the field and the husband the giver of the seed. The field must be given to him who has seeds. He who has no seeds is unworthy to possess the field."[14] Narad permits an engagement to be broken in favour of a better suitor.[15]

---

(1) XVII-19-23. See this subject discussed in the Commentary, post.
(2) XVIII-34, 35.
(3) XVIII.
(4) V-181-184.
(5) "Bull's hide." That land, whether little or much, on the produce of which one man can subsist for a year is called the quantity of a "bull's hide." —V. 183.
(6) V-181.
(7) V-184.
(8) V-189, 190.
(9) V-40, 41.
(10) V-27-29.
(11) V-31-36.
(12) V-42-44.
(13) XII-16, 18.
(14) XII-19.
(15) XII-30.

He regards Niyog as still customary.[1] The sonless widow must have intercourse with her husband's brother till she has begotten a son, after which the brother is enjoined to let her go.[2] A married woman could re-marry, if her husband does not return after a stated number of years.[3]

107. Narad's law of partition is indistinguishable from that of Manu, but most of it is now obsolete. For instance, he concedes to the father the right of partition when he is striken in years,[4] or when the mother had ceased to menstruate.[5] He allows the eldest son a larger share.[6] His allotment of share amongst the subsidiary sons is, of course, equally obsolete. But on many other points of partition and inheritance, Narad's rules are still in force.

108. Comparing Narad with the older sages, it is evident that the distinction between Duty (Dharma) and Law was becoming more perceptible, though it was not so clear as it had become to the contemporary Roman jurists. Narad was probably the contemporary of Justinian, and if the two works are compared, they present a contrast which is only explicable on the assumption that while the sacerdotal law was still struggling for emancipation from its close confines, the secular law had already assumed a vigorous shape and form in the clear atmosphere of a thinking democracy.[7]

Brihaspati, 450 A.D.

109. Of Brihaspati we have merely a fragment, but its value is held to be in the fact that it affords a key to the age of Manu. Brihaspati is, indeed, regarded as one of its many versions—its other versions being those by Bhrigu, Narada and Angiras. Brihaspati mentions the Dinar (Denarius) as a current coin which was a copy of the Roman Denarius introduced into India in the first century A.D. The outstanding feature of Brihaspati is his definite pronouncement against Niyog. On "account of the successive deterioration of the four ages of the world" it must not be practised by mortals in the present age according to law.[8] He also advocates the custom of Sati, holding that "whether she ascends the fire after him, or chooses to survive him, leading a virtuous life, she promotes the welfare of her husband."[9] It does not appear when and how this custom arose. But one would not be far wrong in ascribing it to the cruelty of the husband's relations, to the contempt with which she was universally regarded, and the persecution which was her lot as one whose very sight and presence was unlucky to the beholder.

110. Inter-caste marriages, were still legal,[10] and the shares of sons are consequently apportioned according to the caste of their mothers,[11] but the tendency to restrict the sonship is outlined in the view that out of the thirteen sons[12] "the legitimate son of the body (Auras) and the appointed daughter (Putrika) continue the family."[13] Brihaspati allows the wife

---

(1) XII-58.
(2) XII-80, 81.
(3) XII-98, 99.
(4) XIII-4.
(5) XIII-3.
(6) XIII-4, 13.
(7) Translated in 33 S.B.E., pp. 271-390.
(8) XXIV-12.
(9) XXIV-13.
(10) XXV-14.
(11) XXV-27, 28, 29.
(12) Brihaspati adds the appointed daughter as equal to a son, and she with the 12 sons already enumerated make thirteen; Ib., XXV-35, 33 S.B.E., 375.
(13) XXV-33.

to inherit to her husband's movables but not to his immovable property.[1] But he allows the daughter to inherit all property in default of the wife.[2]

111. Brihaspati, for the first time, enunciates the condition and the law of reunion.[3] He cites Manu as having prohibited gambling,[4] but the spirit of gambling was abroad and Brihaspati allows it "under the superintendence of keepers of gambling-houses, as it serves the purpose of discovering thieves.[5] For the rest, Brihaspati voices the stereotype views of his predecessor.

112. The Smriti of Yadnyavalka[6] is stated to rank next only to the Code of Manu in its authority. It owes its added importance to one of its commentators Vidnyaneshwar, whose commentary thereon—called the Mitakshara—is nominally still the current law of the land, though in reality most of it has naturally been buried under the dust of ages, and what remains can only be safely relied upon if it is supported by the judicial commentary of the ultimate Court of appeal. But so long as the Dharma-Shastras still adorn and diversify the text of legal treatises, both the Smriti of Yadnyavalka and the commentaries thereon must remain the text, round which all law must cluster.

Yadnyavalka, 350 A.D.

113. The Institutes of Yadnyavalka are probably a versification of a Dharma-Sutra—or a set of aphorisms on Dharma (or Duty)—belonging to a school of the Yajur-Veda which flourished in the third and fourth century A.D.[7] Internal evidence points to the author being a native of Mithila, the capital of Tirhut.

114. The work is divided into three parts: the first deals with Achar (or the rules of conduct); the second with Vyavahar (or domestic law); and the third with Prayaschit (or penances). As usual, the subject is throughout dealt with in a series of incomplete and often unintelligible aphorisms drawn up for justifying a crop of commentaries to be presently noticed (§ 129). These commentaries possess the leading characteristics and the defects of all commentaries noticed later (§ 158). As, moreover, these commentaries reflect the view of a later age, it would perhaps be useful, if following the method hitherto adopted, the Institutes are perused without their attendant commentaries.

115. As regards marriage, Yadnyavalka still allows inter-caste marriages.[8] But he limits with Vashishth the three regenerates to three, two and one wife respectively. Niyog is modified but not abolished. The wife is required to co-habit with the husband's younger brother during his absence, and failing him with a Sapinda or Sagotra till a son is born.[9] Her perpetual dependence on men is again insisted on,[10] but in some minor respects her lot appears to have been improved by such allusions as that one should not take food before one's wife.[11]

116. The second chapter deals with legal precepts and procedure. As regards debts, Yadnyavalka enacts the rule of Damdupat[12] whether on

(1) XXV-54; but see contra in Ib., 65, 66, XXV-35.
(2) XXV-55.
(3) XXV-72, 73-77.
(4) XXV-11.
(5) XXVI-2.
(6) Translated by Mandlik (H.L.), pp. 157, 274.
(7) Weber opines its earliest age to be somewhere about 200 A.D.—Hist. Indian Lit., p. 281.
(8) I-57.
(9) I-68, 69.
(10) I-85.
(11) I-31.
(12) II-62, 56.

secured or unsecured debts. His conception of a mortgage is one with possession,[1] but he attaches special value to writing, holding that "a loan contracted by a written document is re-payable in three generations."[2] He prescribes rational rules for its execution and attestation by an even number of witnesses, who must write in their own hands, mentioning first the names of their respective fathers: "I am such and such a person, a witness in this document."[3] A document is of no value if it is obtained by force or threat.[4] "A debtor must enter on the back of the deed the payments he makes or the creditor should grant receipt in his own handwriting for the money received."[5] "After the discharge of the debt the deed should be destroyed; or for the validity of the transaction, a deed of release executed. What is paid before a witness must be re-paid before another witness."[6]

117. Yadnyavalka's law of partition provides for the shares of different sons; but it is, in principle, equitable. It is left to the father to either give his eldest son a larger share or to make all the shares equal.[7] He allows the wives possessing no stridhan of their own to share equally with the sons.[8] The rest of his rules on the important subjects of partition and succession are still authoritative and will have to be set out in the ensuing commentary.

118. Yadnyavalka lays down detailed regulations for the main, tenance of gambling-houses.[9] His Smriti is interspersed with the usual rules about ordeals,[10] disputed boundaries,[11] trespass by cattle,[12] sale of stolen goods,[13] gifts,[14] return of articles purchased and the conditions of its return.[15] The chapter relating to master and servant opens with a generous clause for the emancipation of slaves obtained by force or of those who, from starvation, have delivered themselves into slavery or those who being slaves save their master's lives.[16] But a higher caste could still enslave one belonging to a lower caste.[17]

119. Yadnyavalka prescribes punishment for abuse, insult and defamation, in which aggravation or mitigation of the offence is measured according to the relative castes of the parties.[18] He awards fine as a punishment for petty offences, the nature of which was probably determined by their frequency. Murderers were to be impaled,[19] women causing abortion were to be drowned[20] and those who kill their husbands, children or spiritual guide were to be trampled to death by oxen, after having their ears, fingers, nose and lips cut off.[21] The punishment for adultery varies with the caste of the offender, varying from a small fine to death.[22] Unnatural offence on the wife cost 24 panas.[23] The plea of the thief that he had entered the house at the invitation of one of its inmates is ordinarily as false as it is unquestionably ancient. The plea cost the accused 50 panas.[24] The king was intolerant of the seditionist. "One who indulges in talks affecting

(1) II-65.
(2) II-92.
(3) II-89.
(4) II-91.
(5) II-95.
(6) II-96.
(7) II-116.
(8) II-117.
(9) II-202, 206.
(10) II-97, 115.
(11) II-153, 161.
(12) II-162, 170.
(13) II-171, 177.
(14) II-179.
(15) II-180, 184.
(16) II-185.
(17) II-186.
(18) II-207, 232.
(19) II-276.
(20) II-282.
(21) Ib.
(22) II-286.
(23) II-296.
(24) II-304.

the interest of royalty, one who vilifies the king, or one who discloses his secret counsels, should have their tongues cut off and be banished."[1]

120. The age of Yadnyavalka was the age of literacy and co-operative industry. The former is manifest from the provision relating to written instruments, while the latter is manifest from a short Companies Act incorporated in the Smritis.[2] But it does not appear that such companies were anything more than trading partnerships, from whose profits the king received 5 per cent. as royalty.[3]

The third chapter relating to asouch or impurity deals with the obsequial rites and winds up with an epilogue on the origin of man from the Great Soul and his final absorption therein.[4]

Angiras, 1000 A.D.

121. The Samhita of Angiras is an anathema on the use of indigo-dyed cloth and the eating of food touched by low-caste people. It marks yet another step in the growth of caste rigour. But the twice-born were yet mutually tolerant of one another. They were only arrayed against the Shudra. "One may always take a Brahmin's food; a Kshatriya's on parva days; a Vaishya's in times of calamity; but never a Shudra's."[5] The protection of cows was also the special solicitude of Angiras who prescribes various penances for striking or maiming a cow.[6] Angiras' excursion into medical science is wild: "Milk and curds are digested within a month; and clarified butter within six months. It is doubtful if oil is digested in the stomach within a year."[7]

Minor Smritis.

122. Yadnyavalka was followed by a succession of minor Smritis, all of which deserve only a passing notice, as they are either mere reproductions or abridgment of the earlier Smritis. The introduction of writing into India by the adaptation of the 22 Semetic ideographic letters into the 52 Devnagri alphabets had given a great impetus to the production of new works modelled upon the old which were copied and put into circulation with great facility. But the hasty production of these works left much to seek. They are all dissertations on rituals, penances and penalties with an occasional fling at the Shudras and women. They, however, record the persistence of old customs, Niyog, for instance. "For knowing a woman brought by another for the purpose of procreating a son one becomes purified by bathing in the water of a river and drinking clarified butter."[8] Caste was growing apace with the diversified occupations. "A washerman, a cobbler, an actor, a varud, a kaivarta, a meda and a Bhilla,—these seven are known in the Smritis as degraded castes."[9] But the house of the twice-born was not as yet divided against itself, though the tendency was to caste exclusiveness. "If a twice-born person drinks water touched by Chandal, he becomes purified by a Krichhapad: So the ascetic Apastamb has said."[10] But "raw-meat, clarified butter, oil and oily substances obtained from fruits even when kept in vessels of degraded castes attain to purification when brought out."[11] Raw-meat was not yet taboo to the Aryan table, though the eating

(1) II-305.
(2) II-262, 268.
(3) II-264.
(4) III-118, 335.
(5) M. N. Dutt's Trans., p. 272, §§ 29-31.
(6) Ib., § 47.
(7) Ib., § 55.
(8) Atri, 182.
(9) Ib., 195.
(10) Atri, 202, 248.
(11) Ib., 247; Likhita, 89.

of beef had by now become sinful.[1] Most of the work of Atri deals with the penance attending on a connection with a Chandal or a Shudra woman. But despite recorded penances and penalties, such connections grew apace, and they account for the large and varied population of the Indian continent. Vyas regards such marriages as perfectly lawful,[2] and in his time, Shudra men appear to have taken to marrying Brahmin girls, though Vyas damns the offspring of such unions as Chandals and as devoid of any religious merit. But Vyas was reflecting only the social disgrace implied in such unions.[3]

123. The patriarch Daksha has some excellent advice for the householder, who must rise early and take a bath following his minute directions. He must not eat his meal alone but must extend his hospitality to all comers.[4] How to be happy, though married, is an eternal problem, and the sage Daksha devotes a whole chapter to connubial canons,[5] amongst which occurs his exhortation in favour of suttee: "A woman, who, after the demice of her husband, ascends the funeral pyre, becomes of good conduct and lives gloriously in celestial regions."[6]

124. The Smriti of Sankh is short and there is nothing to distinguish it from the rest of its kind. The sage Likhit idolizes the Ganges,[7] counsels the planting of trees, the excavation of wells and tanks, the letting loose of a bull as an obsequial gift on the eleventh day. A daughter may still be appointed to beget a son.[8] "The sin tantamount to an act of procuring abortion is committed, if through the negligence of her giver, a girl menstruates before her marriage. He who does not give away a daughter in marriage before she attains her puberty becomes degraded."[9]

125. This is a favourite exhortation backed up by the same simile throughout the Smritis. Vyas recognized inter-caste marriages. Exalted position is assigned to the wife as the better half of the man: "The God of Brahma cleft his body into two, of yore. Out of one part sprang the husband, out of the other the wife. This is what the Sruti relates."[10] But the daily duties of the wife, as stated by Vyas, are to rise before her husband, take a bath, clean the pots, cook his food and manage the household. He is to eat first. She is to live upon his offals.[11] A change in the Aryan dietary was made by Vyas. A twice-born was prohibited from eating meat.[12] This is then the commencement of pure vegetarianism. The tendency is noticeable in the earlier Smritis, but a bold bid for a vegetarian diet enjoined on not only the Brahmins, but all twice-born is for the first time made by Vyas who restricts the Aryan diet to merely boiled rice and milk.[13] There is now a definite and distinct cleavage amongst the twice-born themselves. "He who dies with the boiled rice of a Brahmin in his stomach acquires nectar after death. Dying with that of a Kshatriya in his stomach he is punished with indigence in his next birth; with that of a Vaishya in his stomach he is consigned to the vile necessity of eating a Shudra's boiled rice again; and with that of a

Vyas.

(1) Atri, 310.
(2) Vyas, Samhita, 7.
(3) Ib., 9.
(4) Daksha, 49, 51.
(5) Ib., Ch. IV.
(6) Ib., Ch. IV, 19.
(7) Likhit, 7.
(8) Ib., 52, 53.
(9) Vyas, 7.
(10) Ib., 14.
(11) Ib., 29.
(12) Ib., 58.
(13) Ib., Ch. III.

Shudra's boiled rice in his stomach, he is consigned to the torments of hell in his next life."[1]

Pious Forgeries.

126. About the middle of the 12th century A.D., one Ramanuj Acharya of Conjeeveram, in Mysore, founded the sect of Vaishnavas inculcating the supremacy of Vishnu, the supreme God, in opposition to Shiva, the God worshipped by the older sect of Shaivites. In order to lend his creed an antiquity and superior sanctity he forged and caused to be forged a number of new Dharma-Shastras bearing old and honoured names such as those of Apastamb, Gautam and Harit. They call for no further comment.

III

Commentaries.

127. The tenth and later centuries are remarkable for their output of commentaries on the old Smritis. As previously observed, though in form commentaries, they were independent works written to embody the law then current. Of the several commentaries on Manu that were written, that by Kulluka Bhatta, a native of Gour, the ancient capital of Bengal, is commended by Sir William Jones to be "the shortest, yet the most learned, the deepest, yet the most agreeable commentary ever composed on any author, ancient or modern, European or Asiatic."[2] Sir William Jones has incorporated this commentary in his translation of Manu.

128. Next in importance is the commentary of Gobind Raja. But this and all other commentaries have but little value now, as most of Manu is obsolete, and whatever of it survives has been reproduced in the Mitakshara (§§ 163-172). The same remark applies to the commentaries of Narad and other sages.

Mitakshara, 1150 A.D.

129. Of all commentaries that by Vidnyaneshwar, called the Mitakshara,[3] on the Institutes of Yadnyavalkya has obtained the foremost place, and is now acknowledged to be the most authoritative record of the Laws of the Hindus. All over India, its supreme authority is acknowledged, though in Bengal, and Bombay, it is more revered than followed.

130. Of Vidnyaneshwar little is known beyond the fact that he was the son of Padmanabha Bhatt of the Bharadwaj Gotra and that he lived at Kalyan, probably now Kalyani in the Nizam's Dominions, and was attached to the Court of King Vikramarka Vikramaditya VI, who reigned between 1076 A.D. and 1127 A.D.[4] Vidnyaneshwar quotes Bhoj and Dhara who flourished in the first half of the same century, from which his commentary may safely be assigned a date about the middle of that century. He was an ascetic (Paramhans) and belonged to the Vaishnav sect to whose activity in fabricating Dharma-Shastras reference has already been made. Vidnyaneshwar was thus a native of Deccan and his book, consequently obtained great vogue in the Western and Southern India, from where its authority and fame spread to the Gangetic valley and the rest of India.

131. Though itself a commentary, Mitakshara has found other commentators. Consequently, we have first the text of Yadnyavalkya, then

(1) Vyas, 66.
(2) Intro. Manu, XVII.
(3) Lit. Sk. Mit, short and Akshara, letters, i.e., short abridgment, compendium, epitome.
(4) V. A. Smith's Early History of India, (3rd Ed.), p. 432.

its explanation by Vidnyaneshwar, and then other explanations of his explanation.

132. The two commentaries on the Mitakshara are the Subodhini by Visveshwar Bhatt and the Lakshmi Vyakhyan or Ballam Bhatta Tika, composed by a lady author by name Lakshmi Devi, whose patronymic was Payagunde. According to tradition, this lady was a victim to early marriage and enforced widowhood. As a child widow, she commenced to while away her time in the study of Sanskrit under her father, and though adopting the traditional method of interpretation, she strives to the utmost to enlarge the rights of her sex, but which unfortunately, could not penetrate the iron conservatism of the age, which was too well agreed on the ruthless subjection of women. Visveshwar's comments explain only selected passages, but Lakshmi Devi gives a full and continuous verbal interpretation of the Mitakshara accompanied by lengthy discussions. She generally advocates latitudinarian views, and gives the widest interpretation possible to every term of Yadnyavalkya. Her views are held in comparatively small esteem and are hardly ever cited by the Shastris.[1]

Scheme of the Mitakshara.

133. The Mitakshara follows the Institutes of Yadnyavalkya in its tripartite division of the work into Achar,[2] Vyavahar[3] and Prayaschit parts, and contains 1,185 slokas (couplets). Of these, only a section of the second division treating of partition and inheritance has direct legal value. Its opening slokas 1-9 deal with invocation and the difference between Dharma (duty) and Adharma (sin). In slokas 4-5 Vidnyaneshwar mentions 20 Rihsis[4] whose works must be studied. He says that all these works are authoritative and they only supplement one another, and they must all be regarded as authoritative even when they contradict one another but then one is free to follow the one or the other.[2]

134. He then enters into the discussion of a Brahmachari, classifying all society into (i) Brahmin, (ii) Kshatriya, (iii) Vaishya, and (iv) Shudra, of whom the first three are Dwija (twice-born) whose life is regulated by the Vedic ritual.[3] He then sets out the rituals to be followed in securing impregnation, and the periodical rites to be performed till the child is six months old when it is to be given food.[5] A Brahmin boy should be invested with the sacred thread in his eighth year from the time of conception, a Kshatriya in his 11th and a Vaishya in his 12th year.[6] The remaining few verses detail the mode of cleaning the body and the like, and the study of the Vedas.[7] The next few verses deal with marriage.[8] Vidnyaneshwar expressly dissents from the view of Manu and the rest permitting inter-marriage between the twice-born and the Shudra.[9] He repeats the earlier text in favour of limited polygamy, permitting the Brahmin three wives, the Kshatriya two, and the rest, one wife each.[10] He recites the usual eight forms of marriages, reprobates re-marriage of widows or their duty to procreate a son to their deceased husband,[11] and does not

(1) W. & B. H. L. 17.
(2) Mit. vv. 4-5.
(3) Ib., S. 10.
(4) (1) Manu; (2) Atri; (3) Vishnu; (4) Harit; (5) Yadnyavalkya; (6) Ushanas; (7) Angiras; (8) Yama; (9) Apastambha; (10) Samvart; (11) Katyayan; (12) Brihaspati; (13) Parasar; (14) Vyas; (15) Shankha; (16) Likhit; (17) Daksh; (18) Gautam; (19) Shatatap and (20) Vashishth.
(5) Mit., S. 12.
(6) Ib., S. 54.
(7) Ib., Ss. 15, 44.
(8) Ib., Ss. 45, 75.
(9) Ib., S. 56.
(10) Ib., S. 57.
(11) Ib., S. 75.

omit to emphasize the woman's perpetual dependence on man.[1] Inter-caste marriages were still in vogue, but they were only confined to the twice-born,[2] though popular opinion increasingly disfavoured them.[3] The rest of the chapter repeats the old rules relating to ritual and the duty of each caste. The second chapter, relating to Vyavahar (or social duty), commences with the rules of common morality, duty of the king, the law of mortgage, the rate of allowable interest, the rules of evidence and the appraisement of oral evidence.[4] His rules about written deeds[5] are mere reproductions of the earlier sages, already mentioned. So are his rules about ordeals.[6] His subsequent sections on partition and inheritance, comprising 307 verses, being his commentary on Yadnyavalkya's, 36 verses on the subject, have been translated by Colebrooke and are the foundation of the modern Hindu Law of Partition and Inheritance. As such, they will be referred to in the ensuing commentary.

135. The rest of his commentary has no present value. It deals with the subject of boundary disputes,[7] delicts,[8] bailments,[9] contract of service,[10] duties of a king, and an unclassified miscellany of precepts, principles, duties and penalties which must, if ever, literally enforced, have made the life of the bewildered Aryan intolerably hard and mechanically monotonous.

The third chapter relating to ceremonial purity and impurity closes the work. It has no immediate value to the lawyer. As previously stated, what is now accepted by the Courts as the Mitakshara is a translation of Vidnyaneshwar's comments on Yadnayavalkya, Chapter II (Dayabhag section), and on this meagre foundation, the vast superstructure of the Hindu Law of Partition and Inheritance has been reared by the Courts.

136. The Mitakshara has gained its present ascendancy merely through the accident of its first discovery by the European scholars and the translation of its "Dayabhag" portion by Colebrooke in 1810, under the patronage of Government, which obtained wide currency and readily secured the imprimatur of the Courts who held it to enshrine all the sacred laws of the Hindus, regulating the succession and inheritance to their property.[11] Hindu writers wrote their Dharm-Shastras either in the form of Nibandhs (i.e., treatises or digests) or Tikas (i.e., commentaries), but whether they were one or the other in form, they were usually both alike in substance, since they were both founded on old texts, in which the writers incorporated or interpolated all the accepted usages then current. How far this was done in each case naturally depended upon the idiosyncracy of the writer. If he was one with a conservative trend of mind disapproving all new fangled innovations, he rigidly excluded them from his text or only alluded to them with a view to condemn them. If, on the other hand, he was a reformer, he readily welcomed the changes and thus gave them wider currency by according them his support. The authors of the Dayabhag and Mayukh belong to the latter class, while the author of the Mitakshara belongs to the former. He was an erudite pandit, but a stern and unbending Tory who overruled all encroachments upon established usages, being of opinion that nothing that is tried by time can fail to be good for the people.

(1) Mit. S. 87.
(2) Ib., S. 88.
(3) Ib., S. 90.
(4) Ss. 244-453.
(5) Ss. 453-477.
(6) Ss. 478-492.
(7) Ss. 602-625.
(8) Ss. 626-668.
(9) Ss. 669-676.
(10) Ss. 677-687.
(11) See Mandlik's Hindu Law, Intr., XLIX, et seq.

The Dayabhag.

137. The Dayabhag of Jimut Vahan, which rules Bengal, is only a chapter on Partition and Inheritance of a general work or digest of religious and civic duty, called the "Dharma Ratna." This work, like the Mayukh and the Smriti Chandrika, is in the form of a Nibandha or a Digest, rather than a commentary, the purpose of which is to expound the law, and at the same time to inculcate and lay emphasis on the special doctrines which its author specially favours. The common characteristic of the commentaries is that they quote the same text but draw their own deductions therefrom by a process of reasoning and reference to the rules of construction which are said to justify the gloss. Hindu writers make no distinction between digests and commentaries and they speak of them both as commentaries.

138. Of Jimut Vahan nothing is known beyond his name, and that he was a Brahmin of the Paribhadriya class and was the author of another work "Kalavivek," a copy of which, in the Library of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, bears on it the date 1417 Shak, which corresponds to 1495 A.D. Even his age is a conjecture,[1] though it marks an advance upon the development of Hindu Law, as portrayed in the Mitakshara, from which it differs upon many essential points on the subject of inheritance. It appears that the works that held the field prior to his appearance were those of Halayudh, Kulluka Bhatt, and Shulapani. Halayudh was a Judge of Lakshman Sen, the last Hindu King of Bengal, who flourished about the end of the twelfth century, whose work is lost, though from quotations made from it by other writers, it appears to have attained some degree of eminence amongst its contemporaries. Kulluka Bhatt is the celebrated commentator of Manu. He and Shulapani applied the doctrines of the Mitakshara to Bengal, till they were overthrown by the Dayabhag of Jimut Vahan. Jimut Vahan quotes the earlier writers, such as Bhoj Deva,[2] Gobind Raja,[3] Chandeswar,[4] and Vachaspati Misra,[5] which furnish data for a rough computation of his own age. The freedom with which Jimut Vahan discusses the doctrines of Vachaspati Misra, as contained in his treatise, Vivad Chintamani, is stated to show that the two writers were contemporaries. Jimut Vahan professes to base his treatise on the precepts of Manu, which he says have not been fully comprehended. He then cites Manu, Narad, Gautam, Baudhayan, Sankha, Likhit, Yadnyavalkya and other older sages and, upon their authority, refutes the doctrines of the Benares and Mithila School, supporting his own by an appeal to reason oftener than to precepts and precedents. The fact that Jimut Vahan frequently states and refutes the Mitakshara doctrines clearly shows that, after obtaining ascendancy in Bengal, they were in a decadent state and Jimut Vahan who voiced the popular view tries to explain them away without directly condemning them as based on fallacious reasoning.

139. The Dayabhag, like the Mitakshara, became the text for several commentaries, the earliest of which was composed by Srinath, himself an author of a work on Inheritance. The Dayabhag appears to have had its early struggle for fame. Till the early part of the sixteenth century it is mentioned by no other writer. Mr. Ghose opines that Jimut Vahan was attached to the Court of the King Jalaluddin Shah, a Hindu convert to

(1) In Rajani Nath v. Nitai Chandra, 48 C. 643 (687, 736) F.B. Mookerjee, J., holds that Jimut Vahan was alive in 1092 A.D.

(2) Dayabhag XI-2, 22; XI-2, 29.

(3) Ib., XI-2, 23; XI-2, 29.

(4) Ib., II, 27; IV-3, 23; XI-14; XI-4, 3.

(5) Sarv. Int., p. 402.

Mahomedanism, who, despite his conversion, continued to patronize Pundits, and he thinks that the fact that Jimut Vahan strikes out for individual rights in property with the power of alienation, refuting the old notions of coparcenary rights with its consequent survivorship, is due to the influence of his patron. To it he ascribes also the inclusion of females and the sister's son amongst heirs. This argument would have been plausible if Jimut Vahan had made any effort at the secularization of law. At the same time he has striven to modernize and reform the orthodox doctrines of the Mitakshara, which probably accounts for its neglect for about 200 years, till its doctrines were vigorously inculcated and given vogue by Raghunandan and other Pundits of Navadwip, who were formally consulted and influenced the decisions of the Mahomedan Courts.

Vyavahar Mayukh, 1650 A.D.

140. Jimut Vahan's Dayabhag is to Bengal what the Vyavahar Mayukh is to Bombay, an authority modifying the Mitakshara, wherever it expressly differs from it. In form it is an encyclopaedia of the sacred law and ethics of the Hindus. Of its author, Nilkantha Bhatta, all that is known is that he was a Deshastha Maratha Brahmin, born in Benares about 1600 A.D., and wrote his work under the inspiration and patronage of Bhagwant Deo[1] or Yuddha Sur, a Rajput prince of the Sengar clan, ruling over the town of Bharcha near the confluence of the rivers Chambal and Jumna. The work as a whole is named after the patron, the "Bhagwant Bhasker," that is, "the Sun of Bhagwant". This "Sun" consists of twelve "Mayukhs" or "rays" dealing with twelve different topics. They are: (1) Samskar (Sacraments), (2) Achar (Rituals), (3) Samaya (Festivals and religious rites), (4) Shradh (Obsequies), (5) Niti (Polity), (6) Vyavahar (Social duty comprising civil and criminal law), (7) Dan (Gifts), (8) Utsarg (Dedication to tanks, wells, etc.), (9) Pratishtha (Consecration of idols and temples), (10) Prayaschit (Penance), (11) Shuddhi (Purification) and (12) Shanti (Propitiation of evil spirits). Of all these "rays", the sixth is the one which deals with law, and as such possesses a direct legal value. This, like the rest of the "rays", is merely a compilation based on ancient texts interspersed with explanations, both original and borrowed, from other writers on law.

Mayukh and Mitakshara Compared.

141. Vyavahar Mayukh is in form a Nibandh,[2] and though it is independent of the Mitakshara, it differs from it but little, except that it recognizes the sister as heir to her brother,[3] and treats the estate inherited by the daughter as her stridhan. It also prescribes a special rule of succession to stridhan, technical and non-technical, following the Mitakshara as regards the devolution of the former, but providing for the inheritance of the non-technical stridhan by the male issue in preference to the female issue.[4] While the Mitakshara is nominally paramount in the Bombay Presidency it is subject to the Mayukh, which is the accredited work in that Presidency to interpret and supplement it, but only so as to harmonize the doctrines of the two so far as that is reasonably possible.[5]

---

(1) Postscript to Mayukh, Ch. XXII, 3-7 (Mandlik, H. L., p. 156).
(2) "Commensary."
(3) Mandlik, H.L., p. 81.
(4) Dayal Das v. Savitri Bai, 34 B. 385 (387).
(5) Vasudeo v. Venkatesh, 10 B. H. C. R. 139; Krishnaji v. Pandurang, 12 B. H. C. R. 65; Gajabai v. Shahajirao, 17 B. 114 (118); Kesser Bai v. Hunsraj, 30 B. 431 (442) P. C.; Bhagwan v. Waru Bai, 32 B. 300 (312); Dayal Das v. Savitri Bai, 34 B. 385 (390).

142. The five marginally-noted works are those which are regarded as possessing special authority in the Madras Presidency.[1] Of these the Daya Vibhag was written by Madhaviya in the latter half of the fourteenth century. He was a minister of several kings of the Vijayanagar dynasty. The author of Saraswati Vilas is said to be Pratab Rudra Deo, a king of Orissa, who was a contemporary of Chaitanya and reigned between 1503-1524 A.D. The work was probably composed by one of his court pundits. It is not only an authority in the Madras Presidency but also in Orissa. Of Varad Raja, the author of Vyavahar Nirnaya, all that can be conjectured is that he was probably a Tamil and lived at the end of the 16th or in the beginning of the 17th century.

Madras Authorities:
(1) Smriti Chandrika, 1300 A.D.
(2) Virmitrodaya, 1700 A.D.
(3) Daya Vibhag, 1450 A.D.
(4) Vyayahar Nirnai, 1600 A.D.
(5) Saraswati Vilas, 1500-1524 A.D.

143. The Smriti Chandrika was written by Devanand Bhatt in the middle of the 13th century. It has been held to hold a position parallel to the Mayukh in the Bombay Presidency.[2] In Madras, it is regarded as the most authoritative commentary on the Mitakshara. It is supplemented by Vir Mitrodai which fills up many gaps and omissions in the earlier commentaries, and illustrates and elucidates with logical preciseness the meaning of doubtful expressions.[3]

144. Vivad Chintamani, and Vyavahar Chintamani, written by Vachaspati Misra are held in special esteem in the Mithila country. So are the other two works, Vivad Chandra and Vivad Ratnakar. Vivad Chintamani was probably composed about the middle of the fifteenth century. The Ratnakar was composed under the superintendence of Chandeshwar, minister of Harsingh Deo, King of Mithila, in 1314 A.D. Chandeshwar is also the reputed author of other tracts.

Mithila Authorities:
(1) Vivad Chandra.
(2) Vyavahar Chintamani, 1500 A.D.
(3) Vivad Chintamani.
(4) Vivad Ratnakar, 1314 A.D.

But Colebrooke considers Lakshmi Devi to be the author of these works, though she published them under the name of her nephew. The name "Vivad Chandra" owes its title to the tenth reigning prince Chandra Singh, grandson of Harsing Deo.[4]

145. Two special prose works on adoption, the Dattaka Chandrika[5] and Dattaka Mimansa[6] hold a high place in the estimation of Hindu lawyers in all parts of India. But of these, the former work, as now extant, is said to be a forgery prepared by one Raghumani,

(1) Dattak Chandrika.
(2) Dattak Mimansa.

---

(1) Collector of Madura v. Muttu Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397; 10 W.R. 17 P.C.; Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.

(2) Vedachela v. Subramania, 44 M. 753 P.C.

(3) Ib.

(4) 1 Colebrooke's Digest, Preface, XX.

(5) Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 P.C.; Damodarji v. Collector, 7 A.L.J. 927 (931); Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 P.C.; Arumith v. Arumith, 44 M. 656 (665) P.C.; Asita Mohan v. Nirode Mohun, 20 C.W.N. 901 (910). In Bombay, the Dattak Chandrika and Dattak Mimansa are taken to supplement the Mitakshara and the Mayukh; Laxmipat v. Venkatesh, 41 B. 315 (337).

(6) Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 P.C.; Radha Mohun v. Hardai Bibi, Ib., 460 P.C.; Puttulai v. Parbati, 37 A. 359 (367) P.C., as to which see post, Buddha Singh v. Latto Singh, Ib., 604 (618).

Mr. Colebrooke's Sanskrit tutor, to support the claim of the plaintiff, an adopted son, to share equally with an after-born son in the case of Gopi Krishna v. Radha Kant, which was then pending in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, but which was compromised before proceeding to trial. The parties were Kayasths and the property in dispute a valuable Zemindari. According to the older authorities, the adopted son gets only a fourth of the estate[1] but Dattak Chandrika allows him a moiety.

146. There is a long but by no means an illuminating discussion on the subject in the Dattak Mimansa,[2] in which, however, the Chandrika is cited.[3] The latter admits the old rule but excepts the Shudras in a long argument,[4] which, considering its undue length and emphasis, is out of all proportion to its usual succinctness, and might be, probably was, an interpolation, but it does not prove that the entire work is a forgery as is contended for by several writers on Hindu Law.[5] Indeed, it is of the essence of literary forgeries of this character that something new should be inserted into what was old and venerated as such, and there was little risk of detection at a time when all such works circulated in manuscripts, and the text of no two manuscripts agreed. The work bore for its author the fictitious name of Kuver.

147. The Dattak Mimansa is written by Nand Pandit who is the author of other legal works, of which his commentary on the Institutes of Vishnu, called Vijayanti, and that on the Mitakshara, called Pratyakshara are still extant. The Dattak Mimansa has been treated by the Privy Council as a work "which has had a high place in the estimation of Hindu lawyers in all parts of India, and has become embedded in Hindu Law, but that caution is required in accepting the glosses of Nanda Pandit in the Dattak Mimansa where they deviate from or add to the Smritis."[6]

148. Two other works, the Dattak Tilak and Dattak Siddhant Manjari, on the same subject bear a similar stamp of suspicion, being, it is said, prepared to support the validity of the simultaneous adoptions of two sons, then questioned in a case in the Supreme Court before whom they were cited.[7] Other special works on the same subject such as Dattak Nirnai, Dattak Didhiti, Dattak Darpan, and Dattak Kaumudi are also not free from the same suspicion. But with the exception of the Mimansa and the Chandrika, they have all passed into oblivion and even their survival is not due to their merit but to the fact that they happened to be the first to fall into the hands of an English translator, Mr. J. C. Sutherland, who, in his preface, dated 1st July 1819, admits having completed it in his leisure moments in five years. Both these works are written in a style which renders them of little practical value, while what is not obscure is obsolete, as for instance, the view of Mimansa that a widow cannot adopt at all even though she might possess the express authority of her husband,[8] or that a woman cannot adopt her brother's son.[9] On several other points set out in the sequel these books have ceased to count.

---

(1) Vashishth, XV-9; Mitakshara. I-11.
(2) Section VI, 15-7.
(3) Ib., 8.
(4) Dattak Chandrika, V-29-34.
(5) Sarkar's Adoption (2nd Edition), pp. 124, 125; Ghose's Hindu Law (3rd Edition), 664.
(6) Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 42 P.C.; Radha Mohun v. Hardai Bibi, ib., 460 P.C.; Puttulal v. Parbati, 37 A. 359 (367) P.C., in which the gloss of Nand Pundit was not followed.
(7) Monmotho Nath v. Onanthnath, 1 J. (N.S.) 24.
(8) e.g., Dattak Mimansa, Ss. 1 27, 28.
(9) Ib., 34, 35.

149. The age of the Mimansa cannot be ascertained but they both belong to the same critical age when legal texts appealed to divine sanction rather than to human reason for their authority. Of the two, the Chandrika preceded the Mimansa.

150. This closes the first stage of Hindu Law. Its second stage is one of elucidation and exposition by European writers who, charged with the duty of administering the Hindu Civil Law in determining their personal relations, were naturally anxious to know something of that law at first hand.

IV.

151. It is a general principle that the private law of a community is not to be affected by a change of rulers, except on points upon which it conflicts with the public law. The mere establishment of a court to administer the law "according to justice and right" does not of itself imply any change in the law to be thus administered.[1]

Both the Hindu and Mahomedan rulers of India followed the same policy, but they mostly left its elucidation to the Shashtris who were not above moulding their opinions to suit the requirements of their patrons. But even the native rulers felt the necessity of a compact and codified statement of Hindu Law, and the Emperor Aurangzeb had one such digest[2] compiled by one Raghunandan, a learned Shashtri of Bengal.

Law under the East India Company.

152. The real history of Hindu Law under the East India Company begins from 1773 when the Regulting Act[3] was passed. It declared the supremacy of Bengal over the other presidencies, and confirmed the appointment of Warren Hastings, who had already been appointed Governor-General of the company's territories. It reserved to the Crown the power of establishing a Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William, which was constituted by a Charter, dated 26th March 1774, till its suppression by the establishment of the High Court in 1861. It conferred plenary jurisdiction on the Supreme Court over all the inhabitants of Calcutta "provided that their inheritance and succession to lands, rents and goods, and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party shall be determined in the case of Mahomedans by the laws and usages of Mahomedans, and in the case of Gentus, by the laws and usages of Gentus; and where only one of the parties shall be a Mahomedan or Gentu, by the laws and usages of the defendant."[4] This was, however, a mere legislative expression of Warren Hastings' plan, for determination of justice proposed and adopted by the company in 1772, which provided that "Moulvis or Brahmins" should respectively attend the courts to expound the law and assist in passing the decrees.[5] Subsequently, when Parliament invested the Governor-General in Council with the power of making regulations, the exact words of Warren Hastings' plan were incorporated into the first regulation[6] enacted by the Bengal Government on the 17th April, 1780.

Anglo-Indian Digests.

153. No sooner were the provisions, mentioned in Art. 196, placed on the statute book than Sir William Jones, then a Judge of the Supreme Court, felt the necessity of digests and authentic translations. In 1796, Jagannath Pandit composed Vivad Bhangarnava under Colebrooke's direction, who translated it in the

(1) In re Khandu, 5 B. 154.
(2) Named Fatwai-i-Alamgiri.
(3) 13 George III, C. 63. In its "short title" this Act is described as an Act of 1772 because Acts then dated from the beginning of the Session, in which they were passed.
(4) Ib., Ss. 13, 14.
(5) Rule 23.
(6) Reg. I of 1871, Ss. 17, 21.

same year into English. Sir Thomas Strange, Chief Justice of Madras, devoted his retirement from judicial office in compiling two volumes of Hindu Law, published in 1825, in which he essayed the task of stating the leading principles of law in his own language, departing from the conventional garb of commentaries and digests. Sir William Hay Macnaughten came to India as a cavalry cadet and used his leisure in acquiring the Persian and other Oriental languages. While serving as Registrar of the Sudder Divani, he published in 1829 his "Considerations on Hindu Law" and "Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law." But the next year he was transferred to political service, in which his distinguished career was cut short by his assassination by the Afghans in December 1841. Many of the topics dealt with in the works of these two authors have since been superseded by the Statutory Law.

Another work on Hindu Law made its appearance in 1878. It followed the historical method of presentation of law which loaded his work with a great deal of obsolete matter. However, it set the standard for other writers to follow. But all of them have since receded into the shade of oblivion.

Numerous attempts were thus made by Anglo-Indian writers to codify Hindu Law, but they all failed, because, instead of re-stating the principles in an independent code, using precise and technical language, the so-called codes were merely an assortment of old aphorisms, collected from the various sources, which contained all the defects of imperfect and loose expressions used therein.

Hindu Law Modified by Statute.

154. The executive and statutory declarations, above referred to, (§ 152)have not prevented the modification of Hindu Law by statute. As such, the Legislature, though slow to respond to the evolution of Hindu society, has, nevertheless, to interfere in suppressing and punishing cruel practices such as infanticide, Sati, and giving to the seceders from the Hindu faith freedom of conscience by removing the penalty which that law imposed upon heretics of forfeiting their rights of property.[1]

The Hindu Widow's Re-marriage Act[2] and some reforms of the marriage laws[3] have been impelled by the same desire, while still later Acts have modified the law of succession and repealed the foreiture of rights by a person born impotent and the like.[4]

Similarly, the Hindu Family Law and that of property and procedure have been modified or repealed to a very large extent by numerous Acts of the Legislature, rendering all but very few principles of Hindu Law, as stated in the Shastras, operative. The fact is that with the growing activity of the Legislature, and the acceleration of the pace of its reforming zeal, forced upon it by the pressure of public opinion, has completely outstripped the primitive condition of existence for which the text-writers provided a legal guide. There is scarcely any principle of the orthodox law that has not been eaten into either completely or partially by the Legislature or by the Codes. So far as the Legislature is concerned, the whole of the Civil Procedure, the Criminal Procedure and the law of Evidence are now subject to the Statute Law superseding the Shastric Law on the subject.

(1) The Freedom of Religion Act, XXI of 1850.
(2) Act XV of 1856.
(3) Special Marriage Act, III of 1872, as amended by Act XXX of 1923.
(4) Hindu Inheritance (Removal of Disabilities) Act, (XII of 1928).

Even as regards the substantive rights, the Transfer of Property Act,[1] the Succession Act[2] the Negotiable Instruments Act,[3] the Guardian and Wards Act[4] and several other Acts have directly superseded the personal law, and more recently important and far reaching of the first two Acts have thrown the Hindu Law of gifts and wills into complete obsolescence. Other Acts have likewise reformed the law of marriage[5] joint family[6] and nontestamentary succession,[7] similarly, the Religious Endowments Act of 1863[8] and another Act enacted in 1920,[9] while relinquishing some measure of judicial control over religious endowments has left untouched official control over all public endowments, and as regards religious endowments. That Act and other later Acts have provided a measure of control in accordance with the general law.

Judicial Decisions.

155. Not only the Legislature but the decisions of the courts, particularly of the Privy Council, have tended to modernize Hindu Law. The process comprises (a) the enunciation of rules in accordance with the precepts of justice, equity and good conscience, upon points on which Hindu Law was wholly silent, or guided by the self-same principle, (b) the interpretation of ambiguous or contradictory texts, (c) the application of the principle of analogy with (d) the consequent fertile deductions and corollaries.

156. An instance where the intervention of the courts or the legislature was rendered necessary by the gross inequality of the rule, which made the son and the grandson liable as a matter of pious obligation or religious duty to pay the debt of their ancestor is afforded by the primitive notion of Hindu Law, that all breaches of contract were sins to be atoned for in the next world. The obligation to pay was personal and perpetual and it was independent of the existence of any paternal assets in hand. The law being unjust, the Courts from early times commenced to limit the son's liability to the extent of the debtor's assets in his possession. But the Court in Bombay held the duty literally binding upon the son till the Legislature intervened to limit it to the assets.[10]

Custom.

157. Another attack upon the orthodox doctrine is made by custom, whose force as the precursor and progenitor of all laws is well recognised in the codes of all nations. "Immemorial custom is transcendent law", says Manu.[11] In its inception, custom is the mode of life adopted by one or more persons and copied by others who feel attracted to it by authority or by the community of thought or feeling.

The term custom in legal parlance has been restricted in its use only to unwritten usage confined to a peculiar class or locality, but when it becomes universal it passes out of the region of custom. The Greeks divided their laws into written (Lex Scripta) and unwritten (Lex non Scripta), the former being well ascertained and authoritative laws, while the latter were customary which owed their authority to popular acceptance. This dis-

(1) Act IV of 1882, as amended by later Acts.
(2) Act XXXIX of 1925.
(3) Act XXVI of 1881.
(4) Act VIII of 1890.
(5) Act XI of 1929.
(6) Act XXX of 1930.
(7) Act XII of 1928; Act II of 1929; Act XVIII of 1937.
(8) Act XX of 1863.
(9) Act XIV of 1920.
(10) Bombay Hindu Heirs' Relief Act, (Bombay Act VII of 1866). See this Act printed with the statement of objects and reasons in 2 B.H.C.R. 413, 416.
(11) Manu, I-180. To the same effect, Apastamb, II, 11, 19; Gautam, IV, 20; Vashishth, I-17; Mitakashara, I, S. 3, 4; Dayabhag, I-33; Mayukh, I, S. 15.

tinction was borrowed by the Romans,[1] and it has thence been transferred to English Law. As a branch of Hindu Law, custom plays an important part. It modifies or supplements the written law however well established or ascertained,[2] while in the Punjab custom is the first rule of decision in all questions relating to several branches of the personal law.

Legal Value of the Smritis.

158. The outstanding features of all these sacred compositions and compilations are: (1) They are professedly and designedly moral codes treating of civil obligations merely as a part of the moral duty of an ideal householder. (2) Wherever legal precepts occur, they are consequently, treated as rules of ethics and not as mandates of law. (3) The books are sometimes regarded and spoken of as codes but they are codes in no sense of the term, inasmuch as they do not contain any systematic exposition of the legal doctrine. On the other hand, they are a mere collection of aphorisms or sutras intended to aid the memory in teaching and acquiring religious knowledge. (4) As such, unlike the laws of Solon, or the Twelve Tables, or the institutes of Justinian, the Smritis were written by private individuals for the edification of their pupils, and generally of those who should care to refer to them, but they had no binding force as enactments of a lawfully constituted authority. (5) Since the Smritis stood upon their own merits, they were mostly records of the prevailing customs, accommodated in a certain degree to the idiosyncracies of the writer. (6) No Smritis can be safely regarded as free from interpolations. There is, indeed, internal evidence in several of them that many of them were subjected to systematic interpolations at the hands of the glossators. (7) The interpolations were due to the desire of the latter writers to popularize their own views by passing them off as the views of revered and established ancient authority. (8) Even whole works have been forged and made to bear the imprimatur of ancient sages. (9) On the whole however, they reflected in the main the manners and customs of the times, modified only by the private opinions of the Brahmin writers who have given them a shape and character consistent with their self-interest as members of the priestly class; as such, anxious to preserve their supremacy and power. As regards the titles of the several Smritis, it appears that some of them bear the names of the princely patrons to whose court the composer was for the time being attached. Some bear the names of the several gods of the Hindu pantheon, while a few bear descriptive or fancy names or a combination of one or the other. All Smritis claim a divine origin as calculated to insure implicit obedience, and all disguise, as far as possible, any reference to their modernity.

Mimansa Rules of Interpretation.

159. With the growth of a considerable body of legal aphorisms—many of them chaotic and contradictory—some working rules for their interpretation had to be devised. In the sixth or seventh century[3] Jaimini collected these rules in his "Mimamsa Sutras" with the object of introducing some critical insight into his students studying the revealed law. His work does not discriminate between civil law and religious duty,[4] the performance of which secures merit.[5] Jaimini's aphorisms are them-

(1) Institutes, I-1, T. 2, Ss. 3, 9.

(2) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (436).

(3) Not in the 13th century A.D., as assumed, for Jaimini's aphorisms are quoted in the Mitakashara. See Max Muller's Six Systems of Indian Philosophy, p. 118.

(4) Cf. "What is to be fulfilled as the object of a command is Dharma"—Jaimini, 1-i-2.

(5) i.e., "Apurva"—lit, "what one selves highly artificial, and in their turn, require voluminous commentaries to expound their meaning. An examination of his work discloses the scholastic method of interpretation: obscurum ab obscurius though in other respects are quite reasonable, hold good to-day as when they were originally enumerated.

160. It will be noticed from the foregoing pages that the age of the lego-religious codes, of which those of Manu and Yajnyavalka are best known, was followed by the age of commentaries. These were stereotyped and, as often as not, obscured the very texts by slavishly repeating the old aphorisms but placing upon them new meaning so as to reconcile the growing custom of the age, with custom that had long ceased to exist. A revolt against them was marked by the works of the two Macnaughtens and Sir Thomas Strange. In his history of India, Mill had pleaded for a modern code, and in 1832, the House of Commons appointed a Committee to report upon its possibility and utility. It examined a large number of witnesses, including Mill himself, and they recommended the appointment of a Royal Commission to codify both the Hindu and the Mahomedan Laws. A year later, the Charter Act of 1833 created the office of the Law Member of the Governor-General's Council, and Lord Macaulay was appointed as its first incumbent. He was commanded by the Parliament to ascertain and digest the laws of India with the assistance of a Law Commission. Macaulay was confident that he would be able to codify both the laws, and hoped to finish that great work "before the boys who were then entering the Madrassa and the Sanskrit College had completed their studies.[1]

161. But the work, if undertaken at all, was never finished, and the Law Commission, in their Report dated the 13th December 1855, abandoned the attempt on the ground that it would arrest the development of Hindu Law, and, what they regarded as decisive, that the Legislature possessed no power to do it. It is useless to combat these views, for they are so transparently fallacious and stand refuted by the conduct of the Law Commissioners themselves who had, at the same time, drafted the Bill which became the Lex Loci Act.

162. This Commission was followed up by several other commissions,[2] which took for granted that their predecessors had spoken the last word on the subject. And in 1878, Mr. John Mayne dismissed its possibility as a miracle.[3] The matter rested there till the first appearance of this Code, since when the two Houses of the Indian Legislature have pressed upon the Government the necessity of legislation in favour of codification, and both its possibility and utility are now recognized as beyond dispute.

163. The essence of a code is to be exhaustive. A modern Hindu Code must eschew the diffuse imperfections of the classical aphorisms. Its language must be precise and its decision free from the artificiality of classical expression. It must be something quite different from a conglomeration of hackneyed quotations from the classical authors who wrote in an age less critical and more in touch with the inner meaning of aphorisms had not had before," i.e., merit or virtue, or divine approval.

---

(1) Macaulay's Minute, dated the 2nd February, 1835.—1 Selections from Educational Records, p. 114.

(2) 2nd Commission, appointed in 1853 by S. 28 of the Charter Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict., C. 95). 3rd Commission appointed in 1861 by the Secretary of State. 4th Commission appointed in 1879. 5th Statute Law Revision Committee appointed by the Viceroy with the previous sanction of the Secretary of State, 1921.

(3) Preface, Hindu Law, 1st Edn., reprinted in the 7th Edn., p. xiv.

little useful as a collection of Latin Maxims, which, however, useful as aids to memory, are, nevertheless, mere tags intended to assist the student in his study of law.

164. An ideal code should do more. It must enunciate the leading principles and steer a middle course between scantiness and diffuseness of expression. That our other secular codes cannot be acquitted of this blemish is no reason why the Hindu Code should imitate their example. Time alone will show whether such a code can ever be compiled.

165. But whatever may be in the womb of the future, there can be no doubt that the present state of Hindu Law constitutes an anomaly, unparalleled in the history of the world. The Hindu Law as expounded by the text writers and commentators has been declared to be the law of the Hindus. Though the Legislature possesses the authority to interfere, it is pledged to leave it alone. The old race of commentators, who, by interpretation, annotation and analogy, brought that law into line with the altered social conditions is extinct and their occupation gone. Their place is now assumed by the judges of the British Courts who are all subordinate to the Privy Council in London. It is manifestly out of touch with the current of Hindu opinion. Nevertheless, it interprets, applies and at times, modifies or extends the law, though it is in fact presumed to do no more than administer it. If in doing so it conforms to the altered opinion, it is by a mere accident. If it departs from the accepted view, the Legislature possesses power to correct it. But, nevertheless, the slow evolution of human thought is proceeding apace even in the unchanging East. Western education, the adoption of Western institutions and standards of life and comfort, the establishment of new industries and the amassing of wealth as a result of individual effort and enterprise have created new problems for which the sacred texts afford no satisfactory solution, and to overcome this the Hindu Gains of Learning Act,[1] was passed.

166. An effort was recently made in the Indian Legislature to secularize and codify the law, as had been done in Rome, fifteen hundred years ago, (§ 8) but the Government, though sympathetic, found itself confronted with a large and powerful volume of orthodox opposition, which has given a pause to its codifying ardour. And so for the present, there seems little hope for the Hindus, unless a new Avatar arises to overcome their prejudices and reform their laws.

(1) Act XXX of 1920.

THE HINDU CODE.

CHAPTER I.

OPERATION AND EXTENT OF THE HINDU CODE.

Short Title.

1. (1) This Code may be cited as the Hindu Code.

Local Extent.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

And except as provided by this Code or by any other law or custom, for the time being in force, the rules herein contained are applicable to all Hindus[a] and such other persons as may have adopted them.

Meaning of "Hindu."

(3) The term "Hindu" in this connection includes not only those who are Hindus by religion, but also those who are commonly known as such.[b]

(a) §§ 186-190. (b) §§ 218-222.

167. Analogous Law.—Hindu Law, as expounded by the Smritikars, has always been formulated in the form of codes. In later times, similar attempts have been made under European direction, of which a history will be found given in the General Introduction (§§ 160, 161). All these codes were, however, no more than select extracts from the sacred writings and shared their incompleteness. The present work is the first attempt to reduce it to a system in the shape of a code which the Legislature has left alone on account of its professed neutrality, only interfering on matters of detail, whenever impelled to do so by public policy or public opinion, with the result that the Hindu Law of the present day has to be found—some of it enshrined in the sacred works written in a dead language, some of it in the statutes, much of it in cases, and not a little of it in the commentaries and customs, of which a critical study involves time which every lawyer cannot afford, and even where time is of no consequence the result attained does not give one an assurance of that measure of certainty, which is the acknowledged justification of a code.

168. History of the Hindu Code.—The Hindu Dharma Shastras, which embody the rules of law here codified, are all in the form of codes. The laws of Rome, which are the parent of all European jurisprudence, are essentially codes so intended and constructed. The modern Continental and American law is mostly codified. So is the law of Japan. Various attempts have been made to codify the laws of England, but the attempts have so far failed. There is a tendency in the direction of the codification of Indian Law. The advantages of codification are its certainty, simplicity and uniformity; its sole disadvantage is stated to be its artificial rigidity.[1]

(1) See on this point the author's view set out at length in his General Introduction to the Law of Transfer, (5th Ed.), §§ 42-45.

The state of Hindu Law before and since the advent of British Rule has been already considered (§§ 152-155). The declared policy of Government to administer the Hindu Law as it finds it, does not preclude the possibility of its codification. The present work is an attempt in that direction.

169. Its Operation and Extent.—The Code is stated to extend only to British India, because many of its rules are based upon decided cases which have no more than persuasive value in the Indian States. But in practice, it is apprehended, its rules will be found generally applicable throughout India.

170. Extended Application of Hindu Law.—A detailed history of the operation of Hindu Law since 1772 has already been given in the General Introduction (§§ 152-155) from which it will be noticed that both in the executive instruction, issued by Warren Hastings,[1] as in all the subsequent statutory enactments,[2] the two communities specially referred to are the Hindus and the Mahomedans, and this sub-division was assumed to exhaust the entire population of India, it being assumed that those who were not Mahomedans must be necessarily Hindus and subject to Hindu Law. Now, as the Mahomedan religion is rigid as to whom it counts within its fold, it is not difficult to differentiate a Mahomedan from a non-Mahomedan. But it is not so easy to do so in fact as to them a Non-Hindu, especially those who live on the verge of Hinduism, by adapting themselves to its external forms. Consequently, the Legislature classed them all alike as Hindus, and declared the Hindu Law as applicable to them.[3]

171. Sources of Hindu Law.—As already observed, the ultimate sources of Hindu Law go far beyond the sacred writings, which are ordinarily held to embody it. Its immediate sources given below are now in the inverse order of their age and sanctity. The Shruti and the Smritis, being the oldest have practically all been superseded.

(1) The Shruti.
(2) The Smritis.
(3) Digests and Commentaries.
(4) Custom.
(5) Legislative Enactments.
(6) Judical Decisions.

172. The Shruti and The Smritis.—A general view of the sources of Hindu Law has already been presented in the General Introduction (Part II). It will suffice here to state that the Shruti or Revelation is a term applied and confined to the Vedas which possess no legal value (§ 29). The Smritis or Tradition, however, nominally constitute the chief source of Hindu Law. But as they constitute a record about 2,000 years old it is obvious that they must of necessity contain many contradictions due to the change of social conditions, which cannot all be reconciled on the complaisant doctrine that all contradictions are equally good law (§§ 39-40). The only rational rule to apply in such cases is that the later Smriti supersedes the earlier one.

---

(1) Ilbert's Government of India, (2nd Ed.) 325.

(2) Geo. III, C. 70, S. 17; 39 and 40 Geo. III, C. 79, S. 5. See Kahandas, In re, 5 B. 154 (165, 166). Fully given in the 3rd Ed. of the present work in §§251-55.

(3) See Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 (29, 30) P.C.

173. Digests and Commentaries.—The Sanskrit legal works of greater value are, therefore, the Digests and Commentaries, which mark the last and comparatively modern period of Brahminical activity. As was to be expected, a few have outlived the time and place for which they were written, and are now acknowledged to possess predominating authority in certain provinces. Such is the work of the ascetic Vidnyaneshwar, called "The Mitakshara," or "The Compendium," which, though originally composed to guide a petty local chief, is now treated as possessing paramount authority in the whole of India, outside Bengal, where the "Dayabhag" of Jimutavahan holds the sway. But the paramount authority of the Mitakshara is now only so in name, since many of its doctrines have been refuted or modified by other works of local authority, and since, with the establishment of British Courts and the Legislature, the paramount authority has naturally become transferred to them, so that the authorities set out before, now possess finality and importance only in their inverse order.

174. But, nevertheless, there still remain points, unsettled by the Courts, on which the authority of the commentaries remains unshaken. Wherever it is so, reference must still be made to the Sanskrit works for authority and guidance. These works may be divided into two main groups: those which follow the old track and those which follow a line of their own. As such, Hindu Law has become divided into two schools known as the Benares and the Bengal school. The former is the orthodox or conservative school, while the latter is the reformed school. The text-book of the one is the Mitakshara, that of the other the Dayabhag; but both the schools and their acknowledged text-books are held to apply only to the inhabitants of certain territories, and in each case, they are subject to local modifications, sanctioned by text-books possessing only special local authority. The leading points of difference between the two schools have already been set out (§§ 129-139), and will have to be more fully considered in the sequel.

175. Their Legal Value.—These works, though they profess to be merely digests and commentaries on the older Smritis, are not to be treated as such, in any sense of the term, since, if they were in fact merely what they profess to be, their views could be corrected or contradicted by reference to the Smritis. But this is not allowable, for they possess an independent authority and are to be treated as works which, without reference to their form, portray the custom and usage of their contemporaries. In a case, Sir George Knox, J., referring to Vidnyaneshwar, said that he was only a commentator, and as regards the latest of the writers, such as Nand Pandit, he held that he was "as much open to review as the text of any commentator of the present school."[1] When this case went up, on appeal, to the Privy Council, their Lordships animadverted on this view of the classical texts,

(1) Beni Prasad v. Hardai Bibi, 14 A. 67 (114) F.B., O. A. Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 21 A. 460: 22 M. 398 P.C.; Muthu Karuppa v. Shellathammal, 16 M. L.T. 587: 26 I.C. (M.) 785 (786, 787), in which it is observed: "The fact is that commentators felt that any attempt to prescribe rules of inheritance on their own initiative will not find acceptance amongst the people. They had to justify their position by a reference to the sayings of the Rishis. This led them not infrequently to depart from the literal meaning of the texts commented upon. They found a body of usage which was not in strict accordance with the Smritis. They had to recognize the force of such usage; but they preferred to say that the usage was within the meaning of the text. The commentaries indicate an attempt to reconcile the text law with the actual usage of the people."

adding: "Their Lordships cannot concur with Mr. Justice Knox in saying that their authority is open to examination, explanation, criticism, adoption or rejection like any scientific treatise on European jurisprudence. Such treatment would not allow for the effect which long acceptance of written opinions has upon social customs, and it would probably disturb recognized law and settled arrangements. But so far as saying that caution is required in accepting their glosses, where they deviate from or add to the Smritis, their Lordships are prepared to concur with the learned Judge."[1]

176. In another case, referring to Sir W. Jones' translation of a verse of Manu, in which certain words were said to have been interpolated by a later and inferior commentator named Prakash, and not by the ancient and eminent commentator named Kulluka Bhatt, as Sir William Jones believed, their Lordships said: "Their Lordships assume for the purposes of their judgment that Sir William Jones was mistaken in attributing the words interpolated in verse 122 to Kulluka Bhatt. But they observe that Sir William Jones' version was probably founded on the tradition of the time at which he wrote, and has been accepted in the Indian Courts without question. Communis error facit jus is a sound maxim."[2] To the same effect their Lordships had delivered themselves as far back as 1868, when they observed: "The duty, therefore, of an European Judge who is under the obligation to administer Hindu Law is not so much to enquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school which governs the district with which he has to deal, and has been sanctioned by usage."[3] Again, twelve years later, they said: "The Hindu Law contains in itself the principles of its own exposition. The Digest subordinates in more than one place the language of texts to custom and approved usage. Nothing from any foreign source should be introduced into it, nor should the Courts interpret the text by the application to the language of strained analogies."[4] But while the Digests and Commentaries have, now, with the passing of time, attained a status of their own, they do not necessarily exclude a reference to the Smritis which they profess to annotate. This was conceded to by the Privy Council in a case in which they said: "Many of the precepts of Manu have been undoubtedly altered and modified by the modern law and usage, but his authority may properly be referred to when it is necessary to resort to first principles in order to ascertain and declare the law."[5]

Principles deduced.

177. The cases, then, settle the following points: (i) That the statements in the Digests and Commentaries, though professing to be merely comments on the original Shastric texts, cannot be examined with reference to the latter, but must be received as embodying the current accepted law; (ii) that even if the statement be an interpolation, it is no blot upon its validity if it has remained unquestioned for a considerable period, for the interpolation may itself represent the accepted popular view; (iii) that whenever it is necessary to refer to the first principles in order to ascertain the law, reference to the Smritis is still justifiable; and (iv)

(1) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 (411, 412) P.C.
(2) Jagdish v. Sheo Partab, 23 A. 369 (381) P.C.
(3) Collector of Madura v. Muttu Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (436).
(4) Bhayah Ram Singh v. Bhayah Ugur Singh, 13 M.I.A. 373 (390).
(5) Ramalakshmi v. Sivanatha, 14 M. I.A. 570 (591).

that if there be a conflict between any text and its commentary, by a recognized authority, the latter should be accepted as reflecting the existing custom.[1]

178. Custom.—As a source of law, custom takes a conspicuous place in the legal systems of all the nations. As a matter of fact custom is the mother of all laws, and whether it be the Shruti or the Smriti they are both alike founded on custom. Indeed, "custom is powerful and overrides the sacred law."[2] The general influence of custom upon the Aryan law has been already considered (§ 157), and its particular significance in moulding the current law will be considered in the sequel.

179. Judicial Decisions.—The sacred books enshrine the written law. The Courts interpret and administer it. In doing so they place before themselves certain principles which have come to be regarded as rules for the interpretation of Hindu Law (§ 185). Where the Court finds a text suitable to the matter it has to adjudicate upon, it has naturally to interpret it. Now, the difficulty of understanding the texts is by no means small for they are often cryptic and contradictory, and are all written in a dead language which can only be interpreted by the learned Pandits whose aid the Courts have now ceased to take. They now interpret the texts for themselves with the aid of such published translations as they can find; and in doing so, they naturally accommodate them to their own view of what is just and proper. In other words, the judges, while professing to administer law, sometimes make it. This they have necessarily to do in cases not covered by any direct authority. But in either case, they test their decision by reference to reason and convenience.[3]

180. Then again, even where the Sanskrit text covers a point, it does not necessarily follow that the Courts are to give it the force of a statute.[4] Before giving effect to a text the Court has to consider whether it is precatory or mandatory, merely directory or absolutely compulsory. This view of the law had to be considered by the Privy Council who had to decide as to the validity of the adoption of an only son. The Smritis condemn it,[5] and the question which their Lordships had to consider was whether the scriptural prohibition was mandatory or merely monitory, and in adopting the latter view, their Lordships quoting from an earlier case decided by their own Board[6] remarked: "If a transaction is declared to be null and void in law, whether on a religious ground or another, it is so; and if its nullity is a necessary implication from a condemnation of it, the law must be so declared. And the mere fact that a transaction is condemned in books like the smritis does not necessarily prove it to be void. It raises the question what kind of condemnation is meant."[7]

Stare Decisis.

181. Then referring to the conflicting decisions on the subject, their Lordships observed: "In estimating the weight of reasoning in the various litigated cases their Lordships have not forgotten the weight of actual decisions; that they

(1) Atmaram v. Baji Rao, (1935) P.C. 57.

(2) Narad 1-40; Collector of Madura v. Muttu Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397.

(3) Ramalaxmi v. Sivanath, 14 M.I.A. 570 (593, 594).

(4) Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraji 9 A. 253 (296).

(5) Mitakshara, Ch. 1, S. XIV, 11: "So an only son must not be given nor accepted. For Vasishth ordains, 'Let no man give or accept an only son.'"

(6) Rao Balwant Singh v. Rani Kishori, 20 A. 267 (285, 286) P.C.

(7) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 (419) P.C.

represent the opinions of eminent and responsible men, arrived at after public and anxious discussion, carrying with them an authority not legally disputable in the provinces under their jurisdiction, and it may be affecting many lands and many titles to property or to personal status. Such decisions are not to be lightly set aside."[1]

182. Legislative Enactments.—The effect of legislation on Hindu Law is, unlike the influence of custom and judicial decisions, immediate and direct. The Legislature is paramount and it can make or unmake laws. It assured to the Hindus their personal law (§ 152) but finding it intolerable on many points it had to modify it. In other respects, for the sake of uniformity or public convenience, it had to legislate irrespective of racial law. A list of such enactments has already been given. (§ 154) Their particular effect will be found set out in the sequel.

183. Caste Autonomy.—Caste is an essential institution of Hinduism and the reservation of their personal laws to the Hindus implies the reservation of the jurisdiction of caste. This is ensured by the enactment which limits the jurisdiction of the civil Courts only to matters of a "civil nature." This term which occurs in the Civil Procedure Codes,[2] enacted since 1859, has, as regards caste, acquired a somewhat settled sense which limits and defines the respective authority of the caste and of the Courts in matters affecting personal status, the leading principles of which may be thus stated:—

(1) In all matters affecting any property, office or dignity carrying with it the right to any perquisite or emoluments, the Courts possesses jurisdiction to adjudicate, but in doing so the Court is limited to giving effect to what are considered as customary rights subject only to the just limitations within which they are operative. For instance, where a marriage takes place between persons, one or both parties to which are illegitimate children, or persons of any caste, its legality depends not upon what the Court considers right but rather upon how the caste people regard it. If the latter treat it as a good marriage, then the Court must assume it as such.[3] On the other hand, where the caste sanctions as marriage an alliance between a man and a married woman, who has neither been divorced nor deserted by her husband, the Court cannot give effect to the custom, as that would be tolerating adultery which is both immoral and opposed to the established law.[4]

(2) It is within the jurisdiction of the caste to appoint a man to an office of dignity, e.g., that of a priest, and so long as it is connected with no right to property, the Court cannot control his appointment, retention or removal. But where there are annexed to it certain incidents in the nature of civil rights as against members of a community, then, in adjudicating upon the question the Court has necessarily to assume jurisdiction over the whole question.[5]

(3) Thirdly, for the protection and better management of public, religious and charitable endowments, the Legislature has armed the Court with certain powers of supervision and control in which it inherits the

(1) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 (430) P.C.
(2) Bisheshur v. Matagolam, 2 A.W.N. 300.
(3) Muthuswami v. Masilamani, 33 M. 342; Ram Kumari, In re, 18 B. 264.
(4) Uji v. Hathi, 7 Bom.H.C.R. (A.C.) 133; Narain Das v. Tirlok, 29 A. 4; Emperor v. Lazar, 30 M. 550.
(5) Ghelabhai v. Hargovan, 13 Bom. L.R. 1171.

powers, which the Hindu Shastras acknowledge, belongs to the Sovereign as the protector of Dharm.

(4) For the rest, the powers of the Court are confined to the interpretation and administration of the caste rules to persons acknowledging its supremacy.

A postacy or loss of caste by the husband is of itself no ground for refusing restitution of conjugal rights,[1] though the Court would be slow to decree it, since, by reason of the conversion to an alien faith, co-habitation has become impossible.[2]

184. It has already been pointed out (§ 6) how Hindu Law remained unsecularized by the divorce of legal from moral obligations. The tendency of judicial decisions by the European Judges has, in a measure, effected that severance, by the pure legal rules being separated from their religious figment, and crystallized into separate rules and principles, enunciating the living personal Hindu Law of the Hindus. Even where any matter is not the subject of a direct judicial decision, the reasoning and the rules given below, by which the Judges now consider themselves bound, have established canons for the construction of the sacred and secular Sanskrit texts, which should afford solution to the novel problems which must continue to arise in practice.

185. Rules of Interpretation.

(1) Stare decisis. In dealing with property and status, the Courts are essentially conservative, following their own precedents and never departing therefrom, unless very cogent reasons impel the departure.[3]

(2) All legal texts must be separated from moral injunctions, the former alone followed, the latter ignored, if their union is casual and not essential.[4]

(3) In interpreting old texts regard must be had to usage; for no text is binding unless it is accepted as binding on the community to which it relates.[5]

(4) When the two texts are equally authoritative but contradictory, the Court is entitled to select the one which is in conformity with reason and convenience.[6]

(5) In a conflict between the text and the recognized commentary, the latter is to be preferred as stating the later law.[7]

(6) Where a rule is ambiguous or uncertain the Court construes it reasonably.

(7) Where there is no rule, the Court decides according to the rule of justice, equity and good conscience.

---

(1) Act XXI of 1850; Emurtee v. Nirmul, (1864) N.W.P.H.C.R. 853; Sahadur v. Rajwanta, 27 A. 96; contra 2 Dig. p. 413, overruled by the Legislature.

(2) See XXI of 1866, Ss. 16, 18; Muchoo v. Arzoon, 5 W.R. 235. Cf. Moola v. Nundy, 4 N.W.P.H.C.R. 109.

(3) Rampiyari v. Mulchand, 7 A. 114; Bai Kesser Bai v. Hansraj, 30 B. 431 (452) P.C.

(4) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 P.C.

(5) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (436); Kumar Gangadher v. Kumar Hira Lal, 20 C.W.N. 489 (499).

(6) Vedanayaga v. Vedammal, 27 M. 591; Vedammal v. Vedanayaga, 31 M. 100.

(7) Atmaram v. Baji Rao, 62 I.A. 139: (1935) P.C. 57.

(8) The Court always gives effect to the policy of the Legislature paying due regard to its behests.

(9) No rule, however sacred, is enforced if it is opposed to public morality.

(10) In construing the standard texts, the Court considers what is mandatory, and, therefore, legally enforceable, and what is merely monitory and, therefore, not legally enforceable.

(11) In administering the law the Court pays due regard to consistency assuming the body of law, so far as possible, to be consistent with itself.

(12) As such, the same word must be given the same meaning throughout the book.[1]

(13) A well-established usage overrides the written law.

(14) In giving effect to legal presumptions it pays due regard to the altered conditions of the present day.

(15) In construing deeds and bequests, the Court assumes what was tacitly and necessarily implied.

(16) Transactions prejudicing natural heirs must be supported by cogent reason and evidence.

(17) In all acts the Court presumes in favour of legality and morality.

(18) Where a legal precept is not wholly applicable, subject to the other rules, it applies it by analogy.

The concrete exemplification of these rules will be found in the ensuing commentary.

186. Who are the Hindus?—In the first place, Hindu Law applies to Hindus. But who are the Hindus? This is by no means an idle question, for, beyond a certain number who observe the correct rituals of Hinduism—an ever-diminishing class—there remain the vast body of those who, though, owing no allegiance to any other revealed religion, do not conform to the tenets of Hinduism, and would, if the question were submitted to the judgment of the orthodox, be voted as nondescript outcastes. But in the eye of law these might be as good Hindus as any. The term 'Hindu' is of comparatively recent origin (§ 71) and the tenets of Hinduism are uncertain and ill-defined. Like Judaism, Hinduism is not a proselytizing creed. A Hindu, like a poet, is nasciter non fit. If he is sprung out of any of the twice-born people then he is unquestionably a Hindu; but, otherwise, he may be a Hindu nevertheless. The true test of Hinduism now implies the observance of caste, the worship of a Hindu deity and the paying of homage to Brahmins who are the hierophants of that religion. The ceremonial observance of the Hindu fasts and feasts is another index. With the decline of Brahminical influence these symbols have been shorn of their support, and the Hindu has ceased to believe in them, not because his belief has undergone a change, but because the narcotic that produced the symptom has lost its potency.

187. The term Hindu was originally a mere geographical expression. Its present meaning is still vague since it comprises not only those who are

(1) Gajadhar v. Gawri Shankar, (1932) A. 417 F.B. the Chap. on Inheritance and in the (e.g., Sapinda in Achar Kand).

Hindus by religion, but also those who, though Hindu by race, do not subscribe to the doctrine of Hinduism, and are in fact Hindu dissenters; while Hindu Law may apply to yet another class who do not follow Hindu religion at all, and may, indeed, be converts to an antagonistic creed, such as Christianity or Mahomedanism. Considered as religion, Hinduism is rather a system than a creed. It has no dogma or articles of faith. A man may be a Theist or an Atheist, he may believe in Krishna or Conte: he will continue to be a Hindu if he was born one.

188. All Hindus were primarily divided into four castes (§§ 34-36) the first three were classed as Dwijas or the twice-born, and the last, Shudras, who, though Hindus, were not entitled to its privileges. All were enjoined certain duties by the Shastras, but these duties have long since ceased to be operative with the liberalizing forces created by the advent of Mahomedans and the establishment of the British rule.

A Hindu may, therefore, follow the conventional creed or he may not, but law still treats and regards him a Hindu, if he is acknowledged as such, because he has sprung from a Hindu stock and has, by his conduct or course of life, not become allied to another essentially non-Hindu faith.

189. Essence of Hinduism.—Though Hinduism possesses no formula which distinguishes its creed from the other revealed religions, and though its catholicity has ushered into its fold the more divergent and heterodox faiths, still there are some elements more or less essential in which Hinduism with all its family members ordinarily agree. These are belief in (1) the unity of Godhead, (2) Maya, (3) Pantheism, (4) the doctrine of Karm, and (5) its consequent pessimism. All Hindu speculation centred round these subjects which afford a key to the many dogmas and beliefs, which, to the mind of an outsider, present a maze of bewildering confusion of ideas, theories and rituals between whom there seems to be nothing in common. But a close examination of them all reveals their essential unity on these five points of which a succinct account was attempted, in the previous edition of this work.[1]

190. Present-day Hindus.—The subject of practical Hinduism may be presented in the following order: (1) those who follow the orthodox creed; (2) those who without following it are still classed as Hindus; (3) those who have been admitted into another creed; and (4) those who follow the Hindu Law without following the Hindu religion.

(1) Orthodox Hindus.

191. The first class presents comparatively little difficulty. Persons born of the first three castes still remain Hindus, whatever may be their caste or status. The fact that an issue of an irregular alliance has forfeited his caste is no blot on his Hinduism, since the forfeiture of one's caste does no longer entail its pristine penalities.[2] But the following ceremonies are still in vogue both amongst the orthodox and reformed Hindus.[3]

192. Taking first the Dwijas or twice-born, for whom the sacred books were written, the orthodox Hindu is enjoined to perform the sixteen

(1) See Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), pp. 199, 200, §§ 287-291.

(2) Cf. Caste Disabilities Removal Act, 1850, printed in Appendix.

(3) The ceremonies mentioned in Manu ii-27 are now obsolete, except the severance of the umbilical cord, which is of course necessary and the tensure of its head (if male) with a lock of hair left on it, which is still customary.

Shastric ceremonies given in details in the last edition of this work[1] but now omitted as they are obsolete with the exception of the following:—

(1) Namkaran (नामकरण): naming-ceremony, performed on the 10th, 11th, or 12th day; (2) Annaprashan (अन्नप्राशन): ceremony of taking food performed in the 6th month; (3) Upanayan (उमनयन)—popularly called "Manj": the thread ceremony, generally performed at the ages of 8-16 years; 11-12 years and 12 to 24 years, by the Brahmins, Kshatriyas and Vaishyas respectively; (4) Vivah (विवाह): Marriage; and (5) Shraddh (श्राद्ध): the obsequies. Of these the only ceremonies now important are (1) thread bearing, and (2) marriage, the last being common to the non-Hindus.

Shudras.

193. The difference between the different castes of the Hindus is great but for the purpose of law it is immaterial, inasmuch as all the three regenerate castes are equally subject to the same rules. But the case of Shudras is different, both because the Sanskrit texts are not primarily addressed to them, as also because, being free from the rigid supervision of the priest, their customs had a free scope for development. Consequently, ceremonies which might suffice to validate a Shudra adoption or marriage do not necessarily have that effect in the case of a Dwija, and so while the illegitimate son of a Shudra is an heir, that of a Dwija is no heir at all. Considerable latitude still exists as regards intercaste marriages amongst Shudras, amongst whom divorce and re-marriage of women are customary and common. It is, therefore, often a question of some importance, as it is one of some nicety, whether a person is a Dwija or a Shudra.

194. The following are some of the recognized tests by which a Shudra may be known:—

(1) The Shudras bury their dead. They do not ordinarily burn them.
(2) They do not don the sacred thread.
(3) Intercaste marriages amongst them are customary.
(4) Divorces are common amongst them, and even a woman may divorce her husband, and marry another. But this is not encouraged, though it is tolerated, and the second husband is mulcted in costs of the marriage of the bereaved husband, who is thereupon compelled to give a "Marti Jiti" feast, which means that the woman is dead to her previous husband but has become alive to her new one.
(5) Brahmins, as a rule, do not officiate at their marriages.
(6) Their caste occupations are menial and manual.
(7) Their gods belong to a lower order and stand outside the Hindu pantheon.
(8) They eat the forbidden flesh, such as the flesh of fowls, and domestic pigs, while the lowest of them eat even beef.
(9) Their men do not stamp marks of sandal or saffron upon their temples.
(10) They are so regarded by the general Hindu community.

195. As already observed these criteria have now lost much of their value by reason of the general social upheaval now proceeding in Hindu society and the removal of all social barriers created by old religion. All the same they cannot be altogether ignored in judging of the status of a Hindu. Some well-known castes have already been the subject of judicial decisions. For instance, the Kayasths of Bengal have been held to be Shudras,[1] though some of their leaders lay claim to be Kshatriyas.

(1) See Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), § 297, pp. 201, 202.

196. Outcast Hindus.—Caste is an integral part of the Hindu religion and the Shastras enjoin the forfeiture of all civil rights with the deprivation of caste. But the Caste Disabilities Removal Act passed in 1850[2] has repealed all such texts and usages as have that effect—the result being that the forfeiture of one's caste now no longer entails any of its prescribed civil disabilities, and an out-cast Hindu is, in the eye of law, as good a Hindu as one who has never lost his caste.[3]

197. Illegitimate Children of Hindus.—Hindu Law makes no distinction between the legitimate and illegitimate children of Hindu parents,[4] or even where one of them is a Hindu and the other non-Hindu, provided they are brought up and received as Hindu.[5] The same rule applies equally to children of mixed parentage.[6]

198. The following rules may be deduced from the decided cases: (1) That Hindu Law applies not only to those who are Hindus, strictly so called, but also to those who, though not following the Shastric rituals still conform to some of its outward forms. (2) That even those who have become converted from Hinduism to another religion, such as Mahomedanism or Christianity, may still continue to retain their old law, customs and usages provided they are not repugnant to their new religion.[7] (3) Lapses from orthodoxy do not imply abandonment of Hindu Law[8] and (4) Descendants, even illegitimate offspring of the Hindus, may become subject to Hindu Law if, by their habits and mode of life, they conform to the rules of Hinduism and are generally treated as belonging to its fold.

Rules deduced.

199. The Hindu Society is a fluctuating mass of people nominally divided into Dwijas or twice born and the Shudras. The Shastras being equally applicable to the twice born, it is immaterial which particular regenerate caste a person belongs to. But this is not so of the Shudras and others who come into the Hindu fold and lay claim to higher status in the Hindu society. In such cases, the Courts have formulated for their own guidance a few working rules which, though not inflexible, have become invariable guides in the determination of such cases. These are (i) what they think of themselves and (ii) what others think of them. So in the question arising as to the caste of an illegitimate son of a Kshatriya by a Shudra woman, the Privy Council put the question to that test and held him to be above the Shudra.[9]

The Four Castes.

(1) Raj Coomar v. Bissessur, 10 C. 688.

(2) Act XXI of 1850.

(3) S. 290; Somaria v. Bhularya, 54 I.C. (Pat.) 820; Ma Yait v. Maung Chit, 42 M.L.J. 193 P.C. reversing O. A. 10 Bur.L.T. 194: 37 I.C. 780.

(4) Ramkumari, (In re), 18 C. 264.

(5) Myna Bayee v. Ootaram, 8 M.I. A. 400; Lingappa v. Esudasan, 27 M. 13.

(6) Myna Bayee v. Ootaram, 8 M.I. A. 400 (420); Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M. I.A. 195 (239, 240, 241).

(7) Myna Bayee v. Ootaram, 8 M.I. A. 400; Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M.I. A. 195; Sri Gajapathy v. Sri Gajapathy, 14 W.R. 33 P.C.; Lopez v. Lopez, 12 C. 706; Ghosal v. Ghosal, 31 B. 25, dissenting from Tellis v. Saldanha, 10 M. 69; Rahimat Bai v. Hirbai, 3 B. 34; Abdul Kadar v. Turner, 9 B. 158.

(8) Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 (33) P.C.

(9) Chuoturya v. Sahub Purhulad, 7 M.I.A. 18 (48); Brindavana v. Radhamani, 12 M. 72 (78).

In a similar case in Madras, it was found that such people form a distinct intermediate caste called the Ugra,[1] higher than that of the mother and lower than that of the father.[2] The question is essentially one of opinion. As Chandavarkar, J., pointed out, the membership of a caste is like the membership of a club, with the only difference that entry into the one is by birth, while entry into the other is by election. But the members of the one as of the other, are free to continue in membership or leave it: "To hold that the membership of a caste is determined by birth is to hold that the caste cannot, if it likes, mix with another caste and form both into one caste. That would be striking at the very root of caste autonomy."[3]

Kayasths.

200. The Courts have adjudicated upon the position of several castes in the Hindu system. Thus for instance, the Bengali Kayasths, though claiming to be Kshatriyas[4] have been held to be Shudras.[5] The same view has been taken of the Kayasths of Behar, but who have latterly been held to be Kshatriyas.[6] In so holding Field, J., pointed out that the question was not one of origin or pedigree but one which depended upon popular recognition and observance of the ceremonial prescribed for the twice-born. Such was the view of Babu Shyama Charan Sarkar, who, in his Vyvastha Darpan, explained that while the Kayasths were, according to the preponderance of authorities, of Kshatriya origin, they had become degenerate since several centuries by giving up their surname of "Varma" and taking to "Das" appropriate to the servile class, and by not performing the thread ceremony characteristic of the Dwijas.[7] But Mahmud, J., was inclined to doubt this view so far as regards the twelve castes of Kayasths of the United Provinces[8] though he confessed that the authorities were against his view. He appears, however, to have been impressed by the fact that Kayasths constitute the literary caste amongst Hindus; but caste is scarcely based upon the modern notion of literacy and social status, though, as previously remarked, these facts are slowly and silently undermining the old barriers. But, as observed by a census officer, the test of social pre-eminence as a guide to grading the castes is impracticable.[9]

Marathas.

201. The Marathas are held to belong to the Kshatriya caste[10] while the Bhumibar Brahmans are held to be Dwijas, though it would be incorrect to call them

---

(1) So mentioned in Yadnavalkya (Mandlik, p. 173.)

(2) Brindavana v. Radhamani, 12 M. 72 (78, 79); Jwala Singh v. Sardar, 41 A. 629.

(3) Nathu v. Keshawji, 26 B. 174 (186, 187), following Advocate-General v. Devakar, 11 B. 185 and Vengamuthu v. Pandaveswara, 6 M. 151, dissenting from contra in Jagannath v. Akali Dassia, 21 C. 463.

(4) Sarkar's Adoption, (2nd Ed.), 419-c, 419-d.

(5) Asita Mohun v. Nirode Mohun, 20 C.W.N. 901.

(6) Raj Coomar v. Bissessur, 10 C. 688 (693-696); doubted per Mahmud, J., in Tulsi Ram v. Behari Lal, 12 A. 328 (334); Iswari Prasad v. Rai Hari, 6 Pat. 506; Rajendra Prasad v. Gopal Prosad, 7 Pat. 245 (251, 252): 9 Pat.L.J. 123, (in which Kayasths were held to be Kshatriyas).

(7) Vyavasthadarpan, (3rd Ed.), p. 549 et seq. Ratan Chand v. Anandi Bai, (1933) S. 53.

(8) Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal, 12 A. 328 (334).

(9) Cited in Virasangappa v. Rudrappa, 8 M. 440 (444).

(10) Subrao v. Radha, 52 B. 497.

Brahmans in all respects.[1] There is in fact no decisive test for the purpose, though in the popular estimation, the three tests usually employed to determine, a man's caste are: (i) the consciousness of the caste, (ii) the acceptance of that consciousness by other castes, and (iii) its customs, such as the wearing of the sacred thread, the eligibility to perform the Homa, the rules as to the period of impurity, the incompetency of the widows to re-marry and of the illegitimate sons to inherit; these are perhaps important. But with a general social upheaval, taking place in the country, there is a growing confusion of castes, which can only end in their abolition altogether. But so long as they linger, their existence has to be recognized. The Prabhus.

Prabhus who correspond to the Kayasths of the Mahratta country claim to belong to the Kshatriya caste[2] but their claim does not appear to have been ever judicially recognized.

202. Hindu Dissenters.—The Sikhs,[3] like the Lingayats and the Jains are Hindu non-conformists, but nevertheless, they have always been held to be Hindus,[4] though Sikhism admits of conversion to its fold from Mahomedanism and no special ceremony is prescribed for it.[5]

Sikhs.

203. The Jains[6] are another sect of Hindu dissenters, who still remain Hindus and to whom the Hindu Law applies.[7] The sect is now recognized as a well-known sub-division of the Vaishya caste, which is divided into Agarwalas, Mahesris and Jains, the two former being orthodox Hindus, while the last are classed by the latter as heretics. They are again sub-divided into Digambaris and Sitambaris, the former worshipping their God stripped of all attire, while the latter worship him clothed in costly raiments.[8] The founder of this sect was a Kshatriya by name Mahabir, a contemporary of Buddha from whom he differed in his extreme asceticism.

Jains.

---

(1) Sita Devi v. Gopal Saran, (1928) Pat. 375: 111 I.C. (Pat.) 762.

(2) Steele's Law of Caste, (1st Ed.), 95, 100; Gopal v. Hanmant, 3 B. 273 (282).

(3) The religion of the Sikhs (Lit. Skt. Shishya-disciple, of which Sikh is a curruption) was founded by Nanak, a Kshatriya, who was born in Lahore in 1469. His aim being to reconcile and unite Hinduism and the Islam, he recognised the divinity of the Hindu deities as also the claim of Mahomad to be the Prophet of God. Sikhism has become divided into many sub-sects, the chief ones being the Udasis, the Nirmals, the Gobind Singhas and the Ramrajis.

(4) Doed Kissenchunder v. Baidam, (1815) 2 Mor. Dig. 22; followed in Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 P.C., affirming O.A. Bose v. Bhagwan Koer, (1900) P.L.R. 51; to the same effect, Dhalip Kuar v. Fatti, (1913) P.R. 99: 18 I.C. 930; Sohanlal v. Ishar Singh, (1934) L. 800.

(5) Dhalip Kuar v. Fatti, (1913) P.R. 99: 18 I.C. 930.

(6) Lit. worshippers of Jinas, the twenty-four immortalized mortals of each of the past, present and future ages.—Wilkins' Modern Hinduism, pp. 99-101.

(7) Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 P. C.; Bashebi v. Malkhanlal, 3 A. 55; Lakhmichand v. Gatto Bai, 8 A. 319; Dalip v. Ganpat, ib., 387; Rukhob v. Chunilal, 16 B. 347; Amava v. Mahad Gavda, 22 B. 416 (418, 422); Ambabai v. Gobind, 23 B. 257 (263, 264); Chotay Lal v. Chunno Lal, 4 C. 744 P.C. Manickchand v. Jagat Settani, 17 C. 518 (533-536); Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 (30) P.C.; Mandit Koer v. Phool Chand, 2 C.W.N. 154; Zunkari v. Budhmal, 57 I.C. (N.) 252; Sheokuar Bai v. Jeoraj, 25 C.W. N. 273: 61 I.C. 481 P.C.

(8) Mount Stuart Elphinstone, History of India, (4th Ed.), Ch. IV, p. 103, cited with approval per Westropp, C.J., in Bhagwandas v. Rajmal, 10 B.H.C.R. 241 (247), approved in Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 (701, 704) P.C.; Prof. Jacobi, Jain Sutras, 22 S.B.E.

204. As such the Jains differ from the Hindus not only in their tenets but also in their practices. They perform no obsequies after the corpse is cremated. They regard the birth of a son as having no effect on the future state of his progenitor, and consequently, adoption to them is a merely temporal arrangement and has no spiritual meaning.[1] The Jain widow has consequently an absolute right of adoption and requires no express or implied authority of her husband or his kinsmen. Her adoption is not controlled by the orthodox texts. She may adopt her daughter's son,[2] and in fact any one and of any age, in accordance with the usuage of the sect. The Jains are allotted a place amongst the twice-born in the Hindu hierarchy.[3]

Brahmos.

205. It is now settled that a Hindu does not forfeit his Hinduism by a mere conversion to Brahmoism,[4] though the Brahmos were not Hindus within the meaning of the Special Marriage Act[5] before its amendment.[6]

Arya Samajists.

206. If the Brahmos are Hindus, the Arya Samajists are the more so because, though professing to be monotheists, they believe in the supremacy of the Vedas.[7] This faith was founded by Pandit Dayanand Saraswati, who like the Brahmos, opposed idolatry and caste and advocated female education and the re-marriage of widows. The Arya Samajists are now mainly confined to the Punjab, though they have a few enthusiasts in other provinces.

Prarthana Samaj.

207. The same cult is preached by Dayanandis, a sect of Arya Samajis,[8] and by the monotheists of the Bombay side under the name of "Prarthana Samaj."[9]

Kabir Panthis.

208. A similar campaign against caste and idolatry was led by the Zealous reformer Kabir Das, a weaver by caste and a disciple of the Vaishnavite[10] Ramanand, who, about the beginning of the fifteenth century, invited both Hindus and Mahomedans to join his faith, which the latter did not. Kabir Panthis now comprise of the Vaishyas, Shudras, Telis, Mahars and other castes.

The most famous work of Kabir is his Bijak or will, the perusal of which is said to have inspired Nanak to found Sikhism.

Shivites and Vaishnavites.

209. The Shivites and Vaishnavites are two other sects of Hinduism, the followers of which, however, still follow Hindu law. Of the two sects, the Shivite is older and was founded by Shankaracharya, also said to be the founder of Gossavis, and inculcates phallus worship, while its rival, the Vaishnavites, inculcate the worship of the god Vishnu. This sect has become split up into several sub-sects of which the oldest is that of

(1) Sheokuar Bai v. Jeoraj, 25 C.W. N. 273: 61 I.C. 481 P.C.

(2) Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 P. C.

(3) Rupchand v. Jambu Prasad, 32 A. 247 P.C. (Case of Agarwal Jains).

(4) Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 P.C. affirming O.A., Bose v. Bhagwan Koer, (1900) P.L.R. 51. The contrary conceded by Sale, J., in Kusum Kumari v. Satya Ranjan, 30 C. 999 can no longer be maintained.

(5) Act III of 1872; Sonaluxmi v. Vishnu Prasad, 28 B. 597.

(6) Act XXX of 1923.

(7) Suraj Jote v. Attar Kumari, 1 Pat. 706.

(8) Suraj Jote v. Attar Kumari, 1 Pat. 706 (714).

(9) Lit. Prarthana-Prayer and Samaj an association.

(10) The worshipper of Vishnu as the Supreme God. The Bengali leader of Vaishnavism was Chaitanya who was born in 1485.

Ramanuja, or Sri Sampradai, founded by Ramanuja Acharya, in the twelfth century, who taught at Conjeeveram, tenets in opposition to the older sect. Its other offshoot is the Vallabha Charis or Rudra Sampradain, popularly known as the religion of Gokul Gossains. Its founder, Vishnu Swami, flourished in the sixteenth century. He lived at Gokul near Mathura, and then at Brindaban, where he transformed his religion into a voluptuous epicureanism. It numbers adherents drawn both from the Brahman and Vaishya castes. The two sects of Shivites and Vaishnavites are rival sects which have nothing in common except that they both follow Hindu law. A Jati Vaishnava is a Hindu.[1]

210. Minor Sects.—Numerous minor sects, many of mushroom growth, have sprung out of the Hindu religion. Such are the Satnamis, (or believers in the "True Name"), a sect founded by a Chamar named Ghasidas, a follower of Ramanand, now confined to the Chattisgarh division of the Central Provinces. They despise alike idolatry and the idolators, Brahmans in particular, but their hostility to Brahmanism has now become mitigated and a new sect called Ramnamis has emerged out of the Satnamis who tattoo their heads with the word "Ram" and to whom that word is as the breath of life. Another sect, little different from the rest, is that of the Sadhus founded by a Brahman, named Birbhan who was born near Delhi in 1658. They also worship God as the Satnam. The Shiv Narayanas are followers of a Rajput teacher, Sheo Narayan, who lived in the eighteenth century. Like the Kabir Panthis they make no distinction between Hindus and Mahomedans, both being equally admitted to their creed. They inculcate truth, temperance and mercy and repudiate all religious rituals and faiths.

(i) Satnamis.
(ii) Ramnamis.
(iii) Sadhus.
(iv) Sheo Narayans.

211. The Lingayats lay claim to belong to the Vaishya caste. But their efforts have hitherto failed, for they have been treated as Shudras in several cases decided at periodical intervals.[2] They are a heretical sect, and though not subject to the Brahmanical laws, are, nevertheless, subject to Hindu law. Any Hindu may become a Lingayat.[3]

Lingayats.

212. Ascetics.—The ascetic castes amongst Hindus are the Gossains, Bairagis, Brahmacharis, Sadhus and Sanyasis who were all pledged to celibacy and religious mendicancy, but many of whom have settled down to the ordinary avocations of the householders. But inasmuch as their original history has engrafted upon their community certain relics of their famous order, it has aroused controversy in the Courts as to how far they are amenable to the unadulterated rules of Hindu Law.

According to the Smritis, the ascetic is qualified to hold no property; and whatever little he does, is subject to a special rule of devolution, but this is a counsel of perfection,[4] and Hindu asceties now not only own large estates but actively engage in commerce, marry and beget children, make wills and otherwise dispose of their property. This is one of those cases in which the Shastric rules fail, but as has been already

(1) Nalinaksha v. Rajani Kant, 58 C. 1392.

(2) Gopal v. Hanmant, 3 B. 273 (283); followed in Somashekhararaja v. Subhadramaji, 6 B. 524 (526); Baswa v. Lingangauda, 19 B. 428 (465); Fakirgauda v. Ganji, 22 B. 277; Virsangappa v. Rudrappa, 8 M. 440 (450).

(3) Per Ranade, J. in Basva v. Lingangauda, 19 B. 424 (457, 458).

(4) Chhajju Gir v. Diwan, 29 A. 109 (112); Jagannath v. Bidianund, 10 W. R. 172.

observed, the Courts are not to administer all the Shastric rules but only such rules as are still kept alive by usage.

Gosavis.

213. Shankaracharya, the founder of the Shaivite sect, is said to be also the founder of the sect of Gosavis who accordingly worship Lingum (Phallus) of the god Shiva, as the Bairagis, another sect of the same order, worship Vishnu in his incarnation of Ram.

The Gosavis constitute a religious order, now divided into several groups such as the Dundis or those who carry a staff and still affect mendicancy, the Dunglee or the traders, and the Grihast or Gharbari Gosavis who have forsaken the order and relapsed into ordinary life. As such, the Gosavis[1] have long since become sub-divided into two classes: (a) Nihang, or celibates, that is to say, those who still conform to the original form and mode of life, and (b) Grihast or Gharbari, or householders, that is, those who have given up their religious vow and entered the confederacy of householders. But, nevertheless, they also keep up the old form of adoption of a Chela or a spiritual disciple[2] who is treated as, and passes for, a son.

The Gosavis observe no caste, and any Hindu may join the sect. It then follows that any Hindu boy might be taken in adoption, but such adoption can only be made by the Gosavi. It cannot be made by the widow.[3] The Chela so adopted succeeds to the estate of his adoptive Guru, if he was his mundit or tonsured Chela, even in preference to the natural son, but one son cannot be so adopted to the prejudice of the other and in the absence of an adopted stranger, sons succeed equally.[4] Except then as to certain matters which have become established as usages of the sect, the Gosavis are Hindus, and as such governed by the general Hindu Law.[5] So are the Bairagis who only differ from the Gosavis in that they worship Vishnu instead of the god Shiv. And inasmuch as both the sects admit converts from the Shudra caste, and marry women irrespective of caste, they would be classed as Shudras.

Bairagis.

Brahmacharis, Sadhus, Sanyasis.

214. Brahmacharis, Sadhus, and Sanyasis[6] are the other sects belonging to the monastic order who are equally subject to the Hindu Law applicable to householders, modified by the rules and customs of their respective orders. The Smritis lay down a special rule for the devolution of property of an ascetic to the following effect: "The heirs of a hermit, of an ascetic, and of a professed student, are, in their order, the preceptor, the virtuous pupil and spiritual brother and associate in

---

(1) Lit. Skr. Go passion, and Swami master, i.e., one who has mastered his passions.

(2) Ramdhan v. Dalmir, 14 C.W.N. 191: 2 I.C. 385.

(3) Balgir v. Dhondgir, 5 Bom.L.R. 114. In some cases it is held that the Chela must be nominated by the Mahants of the order; Nirunjan v. Padaruth, (1864) S.D.A.N.W.P. Vol. 1, p. 512; Madho Das v. Kamta Das, 1 A. 539; Jugunnath v. Bidianand, 10 W.R. 172; Chhajju Gir v. Diwan, 29 A. 109. But this is not the invariable rule; Ramdhan v. Dalmir, 14 C.W.N. 191. A Chela who deserts his Guru, manifesting an intention to be permanently absent, is not entitled to a share in the succession; Soogunchand v. Gopalgir, 4 N.W.P.H.C.R. 101; see post, "Adoption."

(4) Chhajju Gir v. Diwan, 29 A. 109 (115).

(5) Chhajju, Gir v. Diwan, 29 A. 109 (112). For the customs of Gosavis, see Steele's L.C., pp. 432, 446; as to marriage, see Gitabai v. Shivbakas, 5 Bom.L.R. 318.

(6) Nirunjun v. Padaruth, (1864) N.W.P.S.D.A., Vol. 1, p. 512; Madho Das v. Kamta Das, 1 A. 539.

holiness."[1] But this rule postulates adherence of the ascetic to his religious vow. It does not extend to an ascetic who has forsaken the order, and contrary to its precepts and purpose amassed wealth. They cannot be held bound by the rules framed for another purpose.[2]

215. Aboriginal Hindus.—Besides the Hindus, properly so-called and those who are commonly so-called, there remain a number of people belonging to the aboriginal tribes, such Gonds,[3] Gujars of the Nimar district in the Central Provinces,[4] Rajbansis of Bengal,[5] Lachmipur Rajchaurasis,[6] the Mundaris of Ranchi District[7] Bhils, Kurds, Santals, Kochees of Assam,[8] Bouiyas,[9] Rajbansis of Cooch Behar,[10] Aroras of the Punjab,[11] Khatiks[12] Kumhars[13] and the like who have become absorbed into the Hindu society and who are, consequently considered and consider themselves Hindus, and as such bound by Hindu Law. The test in their case is: How do they regard themselves and how are they regarded by the rest of the Hindu community? The test applicable is not the Shastric test which has ceased to be applicable to the most orthodox Hindu. The fact is that the Shastras never contemplated the absorption of non-Aryan plebian people into the Hindu hierarchy. But no Shastra could stem the tide of human progress, and the non-Aryan races were not slow to take advantage of the Hindu civilization to which they became attached, and in the course of time, assimilated. Such are the Gonds and Bhils, who, though aborigines, are now universally classed as Hindus. They retain their old customs to a certain extent, but they equally acknowledge the supremacy of the Brahmins, worship some of their gods and have commenced to observe some of their caste conventions. Some of them have intermarried with Hindus, thereby originating distinct castes. So the alliance of Rajputs with Gond women has produced the caste of Raj Gonds, that with Bhils "Bhilalas", of whom quite a number own Jagirs and Zemindaris in the Nimar and adjoining districts of the Central Provinces. All such and similar castes admit allegiance to the Shastras by which they profess to be bound.[14]

216. Dancing Girls and Prostitutes.—Though the class of dancing girls and prostitutes have formed themselves into a caste apart from the four castes, they are, nevertheless, subject to Hindu Law.[15] Manu classes them in the residuary caste of Shudras, but this is, since the removal of caste disabilities immaterial.[16]

---

(1) Yadnavalkya, 37; Mitakshara, S. 8; Dayabhag XI-6 Ss. 35, 36; Chhajju Gir v. Diwan, 29 A. 109 (112).

(2) Nirunjun v. Padaruth, (1864) N. W.P.H.C.R. Vol. 1, p. 512; Madho Das v. Kamta Das, 1 A. 539 (541).

(3) Ramanath v. Sukalsi, (1924) N. 330, but in Ujiar v. Tilochan, 44 I.C. (N.) 435, Janki Bai v. Parwati, 87 I.C. (N.) 1036: (1925) N. 353, and in Kallue v. Bet Singh, 17 N.L.R. 183; Vithoba v. Lab Singh, 19 N.L.R. 104, in which a Gond was held not to be subject to Hindu Law; which is opposed to the view of the Privy Council in Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 (P.C.).

(4) Rambhabai v. Tota Ram, 71 I.C. (N.) 727: (1923) N. 188.

(5) Santala Bewa v. Badaswari, 50 C. 727; Narendra Narain v. Nagendra Narain, 50 C.L.J. 267: 118 I.C. 342: (1929) C. 577.

(6) Sahdeo v. Kusum Kumari, 2 Pat. 230 P.C.: (1923) P.C. 21.

(7) Doman Sahu v. Buka, (1931) Pat. 198.

(8) Aiti v. Aidew, 24 C.W.N. 173: 54 I.C. 695; Dino Nath v. Chundi, 16 C.L.J. 14: 16 I.C. 349; Harbans v. Atra, 53 I.C. (L.) 858.

(9) Sahdeo v. Kusum Kumari, 2 Pat. 230 P.C.: (1923) P.C. 21.

(10) Santata v. Badaswari, 50 C. 727.

(11) Chandan Mal. v. Wasindi, (1915) P.R. 92: 31 I.C. 541.

(12) Bholar v. Emp., (1914) P.L.R. 131: 24 I.C. 947.

(13) Cf. Ballia v. Emp., (1914) P.L.R. 161: 25 I.C. 839.

(14) Steele's Law of Caste, 122, 123.

(15) Meenakshi v. Muniandi, 38 M. 1144 (A case of a degraded woman).

(16) See Act XXI of 1850; Ram Pargash v. Dahan Bibi, 3 Pat. 152.

217. Jats.—Jats are governed by Hindu law in the absence of special custom, which they must prove.[1]

218. Non-Hindu Followers of Hindu Law.—But outside the circle of those who follow the Hindu religion and those who pass as Hindus, there stands a class of people who, though now converted to the religion of Islam, were by origin and descent Hindus, and who have, consequently, despite their conversion, continued to follow the Hindu Law of succession. Such are the Khoja Mahomedans,[2] Kachi Nassaparia,[3] and the Bantwa,[4] Cutchi Memons,[5] Halai Memons,[6] the Sunni Borah Mahomedans of the Dhandhuka Taluq in Guzerat,[7] the Molesalem Girasias,[8] the Navayate,[9] and Labbais of Madras,[10] Moplas of the Malabar,[11] the Basichowrasi Gaddidars of Behar[12] and Mahomedans of the Satpura plateau in the Central Provinces,[13] who are, as regards succession and inheritance, governed by the rules of Hindu Law; but apart from this, they do not follow it. For instance, the law of joint property is inapplicable to them[14] The judicial view of these and other similar converts from Hinduism is settled in a series of cases which lay down the nature of Hindu Law and the extent to which it is applicable to them. But all such converts are now given the option of following the Mahomedan law of intestate succession, if they make a declaration to that effect as provided in the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Application Act of 1937.[15]

Khojas.

219. The Khojas are converts from Hinduism. Their original home was in Sindh whence they migrated to Cutch and Kathiawar and thence to Bombay where they have left their original pursuit of agriculture and taken to trade and have amassed great fortunes.[16] The first case on the law applicable to the Khojas and Memons was decided by the Supreme Court in 1845[17] and it has been followed since in a succession of cases.[18] The general principles

(1) Bhagwani v. Khushi Ram, 24 I. C. (A.) 982; Nauli v. Kheri, 15 I.C. (A) 607; e.g., Hindu Jats of Delhi held governed by customary law—Basant Singh v. Brij Raj, 57 A. 494 P.C.

(2) Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy, 13 B. 534; Rashid v. Sherbanoo, 29 B. 85.

(3) Abdul Rahim v. Halima Bai, 20 C.W.N. 362 P.C.

(4) Safuran Umer v. Emna, (1916) 26 Kath.L.R. 174.

(5) Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed, 10 B. 1; Sahoo Sidick v. Ally Mahommed, 30 B. 270. But the Halai Memons of Bombay unlike those of Kathiwar, are governed by Mahomedan Law in matters of succession; Mhd. Yusuf v. Govindas, 24 Bom.L.R. 753.

(6) Khatabai v. Mahomed Haji, 47 B. 146 P.C.

(7) Bai Baiji v. Santok, 20 B. 53.

(8) Fatesangji v. Harisangji, 20 B. 181; Moosa v. Abdul Rahim, 30 B. 197.

(9) Hussain Sahib v. Hassan Sahib, (1915) 2 L.W. 1140; 31 I.C. 927, O. A. 5 L.W. 835; 41 I.C. 184.

(10) Ibrahim v. Ibrahim, 39 M. 664, reversed O. A. by the Privy Council 30 M.L.T. 85 P.C.

(11) Azamanila v. Kayinari, (1914) M.W.N. 883: 26 I.C. 337.

(12) Shahdeo v. Kusum, 5 Pat.L.J. 164: 46 I.C. 929.

(13) Uima Bi v. Mahomed Sarwar, C. P.D.C.R. (Part VIII), 78.

(14) Mangaldas v. Abdul Razhak, 16 Bom.L.R. 224; Advocate-General v. Jimabai, 41 B. 181; Haji Osman v. Haroon Salleh, 47 B. 369.

(15) Act XXVI of 1937; as to Cutchi Memons, see The Cutchi Memon's Act, XLVI of 1920.

(16) Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy, 13 B. 534 (544).

(17) Perry's Or. Cases, 110.

(18) Gangbai v. Thavar Mulla, 1 B. H.C.R. 71; Hirbai v. Gorbai, 12 B.H. C.R. 294; Rahimatbai v. Hirbai, 3 B. 34; Haji Ismail, In re, 6 B. 452; Ashabai v. Haji Tyeb, 9 B. 115; Abdul Kadir v. Turner, 9 B. 158; Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed, 10 B. 1; Ahmedbhoy v. Cossumbhoy, 13 B. 534; Baibaiji v. Bai Santok, 20 B. 53 (57); Rashid v. Sherbanoo, 29 B. 85; Saboo Sidick v. Ally Mahomed, 30 B. 270.

applicable to these communities can be stated as follows:—(1) That presumably they follow the Hindu Law of succession and inheritance; (2) that in regard to other matters they are presumably governed by the Mahomedan Law; but (3) that it is open to them to show that they have adopted any usage of Hindu Law at variance with their own law. The question how far the Khojas were governed by Hindu Law was considered by the Bombay High Court in a case in which the evidence disclosed that the Hindu Law of succession and inheritance, as administered in Bombay, that is, according to the Mayukh school of law, in the absence of custom to the contrary, applied to them; but that as regards the law of joint family and partition, there was the greatest doubt and difference of opinion, and consequently, there could be no presumption in favour of its applicability and he who asserted it had to prove it like any other fact.

The case shows that the same community may adopt different usages upon their migration to another place. So while the Khojas of Kathiawar and Cutch recognize in the son a right to obtain his share on partition of the family property, both ancestral as well as self-acquired, no such right exists amongst the Khoja settlers of Bombay and for an obvious reason. For while the Khojas of the former place are mere agriculturists, those of Bombay are enterprising traders who have acquired valuable estates by their individual capacity and exertion.[1]

Cutchi Memons, Sunni Borahs, Molasalem Girasias.

220. The same rules apply equally to the other Mahomedan sects formed out of Hindu converts, such as the Cutchi Memons,[2] Sunni Borahs,[3] Molasalem Girasias. It will be noted that all these retain and follow their own communal law. But an instance of territorial extension of Mahomedan Law is afforded by the case of Mahomedans, inhabiting the Satpura plateau of the Central Provinces, who, from their association with the Hindus, have adopted their law of succession and inheritance.[4]

Christian Converts.

221. But while Hindu converts to Mahomedanism retain their freedom of following the Hindu Law of succession and inheritance, the same cannot be said of Hindu converts to Christianity, who, since the passing of the Succession Act[5] are held to have left no option but to conform to its provisions on the subject of succession to be found in the Succession Act.[6]

222. Two questions then arise: are Hindu converts to Christianity "Hindus" within the meaning of the Succession Act and do its provisions necessarily preclude the application of Hindu Law upon matters not directly dealt with in that Act? The Succession Act does not define that term, but there can be no question that after their conversion they cannot be called Hindus even in common parlance. They are, therefore,

(1) Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy, 13 B. 534.

(2) Who may, however, now make a declaration that they, their minor children and dependants, shall in matters of succession and inheritance be governed by the Muhamadan Law—Act XLVI of 1920; Act XXXIV of 1923.

(3) Bai Sakar v. Ismail, (1937) B. 65.

(4) Umdobi v. Mahomed Sarwar, C. P. D. C. R. (Part VIII) 78.

(5) Act X of 1865; now Act XXXIX of 1925.

(6) Ss. 29, 58, Succession Act XXXIX of 1925; S. 3 provides for exemptions.

bound by the Act,[1] and as it saves no usage or custom to the contrary they are inevitably so bound unless they are exempted by Government under S. 3. In this view, there is no room for survival of the essentially Hindu doctrines of coparcenership and survivorship,[2] but this has not been acceded to by Sir Lawrence Jenkins who, in a considered judgment, held that notwithstanding the conversion of a family to Christianity, it may still continue or become an undivided joint family holding and enjoying property in coparcenership with the right of survivorship, which is unaffected by the Succession Act,[3] which merely deals with the devolution of rights on intestacy and does not purport to enlarge the category of heritable property.[4] In other words, since the Act merely deals with succession and not survivorship, it has not the effect of excluding the possibility of succession by survivorship. The Succession Act is not a consolidating statute, though it must be deemed to be exhaustive so far as it goes. Such however is the Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872,[5] the provisions of which exclude the possibility of any marriage being solemnized according to Hindu Law,[6] and similarly, a marriage so solemnized, being subject to dissolution as provided in the Indian Divorce Act,[7] there is no room for the applicability of Hindu Law so far and to the extent these Acts are applicable.

223. Conversion to Hinduism.—It has been stated before, that Hinduism does not admit converts. This is true. But nevertheless, the process by which non-Hindus are admitted into its fold is, in its effect, little, if at all, distinguishable from conversion. This result is achieved by acknowledgment and recognition of non-Hindus as Hindus. It is thus that the creedless barbarians of a by-gone age have been brought into its fold. Whole provinces have been thus become Hinduised. More recently, the Courts have recognized the validity of conversion[8] or reconversion[9] to Hinduism; but they insist upon a ceremony as distinct from a mere confession or conformity with the mode of Hindu life.

224. The Manipuris were so converted wholesale to Hinduism, only about a hundred years ago by a wandering Sanyasi, who converted one Garib Niwaz, the founder of the family of the present Raja, and all Manipuris to Hinduism by declaring that they were all Hindus but had forgotten their privileges and duties. After ordering the people to bathe and make expiatory offerings for their long neglect, he declared them all to be good Hindus of the Kshatriya caste.[10] The people of Cachar were similarly converted.

In one case, ultimately decided by the Privy Council, the illegitimate issue of a Kshatriya Taluqdar of Balrampur in Oudh, who had been brought up and married as Hindus were treated as such.[11] Nor is this

(1) Vathiar, In re, 7 M.H.C.R. 121; Ponnusami v. Dorasami, 2 M. 209; Administrator-General v. Ananda, 9 M. 466; Appavu v. Susaiudayan, 15 M.L.J. 235; Dagree v. Pacotti, 19 B. 783; Nepenbala v. Sittikanta, 15 C.W.N. 158: 8 I.C. 41.
(2) Tellis v. Saldhana, 10 M. 69.
(3) Act X of 1865.
(4) Ghosal v. Ghosal, 31 B. 25 (32), following Navroji v. Perozbai, 23 B. 80, dissenting from contra in Tellis v. Saldhana, 10 M. 69.
(5) Act XV of 1872.
(6) Act XV of 1872, S. 4.
(7) Act IV of 1869.
(8) Ratansi v. Administrator-General, 52 M. 160; Guruswami v. Irulappa, (1934) M. 172.
(9) Ramayya v. Mrs. Elizabeth, (1937) M. 172.
(10) Wilkins' Modern Hinduism, p. 178.
(11) Sher Bahadur v. Ganga Baksh, 36 A. 101 (116) P.C.

view unsupported by authority.[1] Such a case may be treated as one of conversion, a process which accounts for the development of Hindu society by incorporating into it the mixed and aboriginal races.[2] Even direct conversion is being attempted by the Arya Samajis and other Hindu reforming societies, and it is only a question of time when the status of such converts will become undisputed and indisputable.

225. The process of conversion was incomplete when the Cooch Behar Raj case went up for decision to the Privy Council. In that case, the dispute related to the succession of a Zemindari called the Baikantpur Raj and the question their Lordships had to determine was as to the validity of the defendant's adoption to the deceased Zemindar. It was found that the family of Cooch Behar, to which the parties belonged, originally belonged to the Cooch aboriginal tribe which had abandoned their old customs, altered the name of their country to "Behar," called themselves Rajbansi Kshatriyas, adopted Hinduism as their religion and a divine ancestry for the chief was even manufactured by the Brahmins who traced his pedigree to the god Shiv.[3] Upon this the High Court presumed that the parties were Hindus and cast upon the plaintiff, a rival claimant, the burden of proving the invalidity of the defendant's adoption. On a review of the family history, their Lordships held that it showed "that, although they affected to be Hindus, they had retained and were governed by family customs, which as regards some matters, were at variance with Hindu Law." They, therefore, held the family subject only to customary law, and as no custom in favour of adoption was proved, the defendant lost his estate though he held an adoption deed from the deceased Zemindar, but which failed to convey the property to a persona designata.[4] This decision has naturally had the effect of arresting the indirect conversion of this family to Hinduism, but in later cases of Rajbansis[5] and Surajbansis[6] the Court held the conversion complete and applied the ordinary Hindu Law. The distinction between the two class of cases was, however, only this that while in the one the origin and history of the family was known, in the other it was not, and there being nothing to show that the conversion of his family was incomplete, the Court assumed the ostensible state to be the real state and held them to be Hindus bound by the lex loci, adding: "It must be taken that they have adopted in its entirety one form or other of that law, and it being uncertain which form they adopted, it is not unreasonable to infer that they adopted the form which prevailed in the locality."[7] Apart from conversion of classes and communities, even an individual, for example, an Austrian, may become a Hindu by conversion,[8] and the Court cannot ignore the recent but widespread movement in favour of "Shuddhi" or reconversion of converted Hindus and the conversion of the non-Hindus,

---

(1) Sir A. A. Williams' Religious Thought and Life in India, pt. 1, p. 57; Sir Alfred Lyall's Asiatic Studies, pp. 101-104; W. J. Wilkins' Modern Hinduism, p. 177; Carnegy's Notes on the Races, Tribes and Castes of Oudh, (1868), pp. 37-40, 50.

(2) Muthusami v. Masilamani, 33 M. 342 (349); Ma Yait v. Maung Chit Maung, 42 M.L.J. 193 (200) P.C.

(3) Fanindra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 463 (475) P.C.

(4) Fanindra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 463 (485) P.C.

(5) Ram Das v. Chandra Dassia, 20 C. 409 (412); Santala v. Badaswari, 50 C. 727 (733) P.C.

(6) Sahdeo v. Kusum Kumari, 2 Pat. 230 P.C.

(7) Ram Das v. Chandra Dassia, 20 C. 409 (413).

(8) Morarji v. Administrator-General, 52 M. 160.

while the Arya Samaj, an offshoot of Hinduism, is a well-recognized militant proselytizing creed.

226. Buddhists.—The question whether Buddhists are Hindus can only admit of one answer. Whatever may be its association and affinity with Hinduism, it is a creed apart, and Buddhists cannot be classed as Hindus, both because they do not regard themselves as such, nor are they so regarded by the other Hindus, and they have distinct religion and family law.[1]

2. In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, the natives of each of the following provinces are governed by the schools of law noted against them:—

Lex Loci.

(i) Bengal and Assam ..	Dayabhag, supplemented by the Mitakshara.
(ii) United and Central Provinces, Behar (except Mithila), N.W.F. Province, Orissa, Sindh.	Mitakshara.
(iii) Mithila	Mitakshara, supplemented by Vivad-Chintamani and Vivad-Ratnakar.
(iv) Island of Bombay, Gujrat, Northern Konkan and Berar.	Mitakshara, modified by the Mayukh.
(v) Madras Presidency ..	Mitakshara modified by (1) Smriti Chandrika, (2) Parasar Madhav, (3) Vir-Mitrodai.
(vi) The Punjab ..	Customary law, supplemented by the Mitakshara.

227. Analogous Law.—There is this distinction between the Hindus and the non-Hindus. The personal law of the one being mostly customary follows them upon migration to another locality, but the law of persons subject to the Christian law is the lex loci. So a Frenchman or a Portuguese, migrating from French or Portuguese India to British India renders himself subject to the Indian Succession Act.[2] But a Hindu and a Mahomedan[3] would in the same circumstances carry with him his own personal law. The general history of the Hindu schools has already been given (§§ 127-144). Strictly speaking, there is no lex loci in Hindu Law, since the existence of a lex loci is inconsistent with the existence of personal communal law. Take

Lex Loci.

(1) Buddhism was founded by Shakya Muni, afterwards known as Gautam Buddha, who was born in the borders of Nepal in 563 B.C., whence he wandered to Behar, where he fasted, taught and died. In the third century B.C. the great monarch Ashoka adopted Buddhism under whom it spread as far as Ceylon. But in the eighth century A.D. there was a revival of Brahmanism which drove out Buddhism from India where now the Buddhists number only about half a million.

(2) Abu v. Khatubai, 43 B. 647.

(3) Abdur Rahim v. Halimabai, 20 C. W.N. 362: 32 I.C. 413 P.C.

for instance, the case of Calcutta. The Bengali Hindus resident there are governed by the Dayabhaga, not because they are residents of Calcutta but because they are Bengali Hindus and, as such, they would be so governed whether they were resident in Calcutta or Cawnpore.[1] Similarly, the Marwadi Hindus from Rajputana would be governed by their personal law, whether it is the Mitakshara or custom, and the Sikh from the Punjab would, similarly, follow his ancestral customs. But while with the heterogenous population of an Indian town it is not safe to premise that any people resident therein are subject to any particular school of law, still there is the lex loci in the sense that the indigenous natives of a particular place are presumably subject to the school of law, which has, by common consent, been held to bind that locality. Though, strictly speaking, there is no such thing as lex loci as regards the personal law applicable to the Hindus, still the Courts administer the personal law obtaining in any locality to a Hindu living there unless there is evidence to show that he has adopted any other law or custom.[2] A family, migrating from Guzerat, where the Mayukh prevails, to Madras where the Mitakshara is supreme, will be presumed to continue to be bound by the Mayukh.[3]

228. Books of Local Authority.—The Bengal school, also known as the Gaudiya school, dominates the Bengali speaking provinces of Bengal and Assam, in both of which provinces the primary authority is that of Dayabhag.[4] The Mitakshara is treated there with respect, but it holds only a secondary place, merely supplementing the Dayabhag together with its commentaries[5] upon points upon which they are silent.[6] Of these the two following are considered as commentaries of great authority:

Bengal, Assam.

(1) Dayatatwa by Raghunandan,[7]

(2) Daya-krama-sangrah by Shri Krishna.[8]

The two works on adoption, namely, (3) the Dattak-mimansa and (4) the Dattak-chandrika are equally considered as works of the highest authority in Bengal,[9] but in case of conflict the Chandrika is preferred to the Mimamsa.[10] (§ 145).

---

(1) Kulada v. Hari, 40 C. 407; contra a general statement in Bhadia v. Bhaji, 10 N.L.R. 34, is unsound.

(2) Ramdas v. Chundra, 20 C. 409; but see Murle Das v. Manick, 5 M.L.T. 181.

(3) Murle Das v. Manicka, 5 M.L.T. 181.

(4) Uma Sunker v. Kali, 6 C. 256 (263); Abhai Churn v. Mangal, 19 C. 634 (638); Basanta v. Jogendra, 33 C. 371 (375).

(5) The leading commentaries are by Srinath Acharya Chudamani, Achyuta Chakravarti, Raghunandan, Maheshwar and Shri Krishna (1700 A.D.), of which Raghunandan's ranks highest; Ramnath v. Durga, 4 C. 550 (554); Ramanand v. Raj Kishore, 22 C. 347 (351). Shri Krishna also ranks high, Raj Kishore v. Gobind, 1 C. 27 (39); Hari Dayal v. Grish Chunder, 17 C. 911 (914); Ramananda v. Rai Kishore, 22 C. 347 (353).

(6) Bhugwandeen v. Myna Bai, 11 M. I.A. 487 (507, 508); Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (435).

(7) Ramananda v. Rai Kishore, 22 C. 347 (351).

(8) Raj Kishore v. Gobind, 1 C. 27 (39).

(9) Padma Coomari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 (311) P.C.; Puddo Kumari v. Jugut Kishore, 5 C. 615; Asita Mohan v. Nerode Mohan, 20 C.W. N. 901: 35 I.C. 127; Uma Shunkar v. Kali, 6 A. 256.

(10) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (437).

229. The preferential position accorded to the Dayabhag in Bengal is accorded to the Mayukh in the city of Bombay, Berar[1] and Gujrat,[2] though with this qualification that the two works should be sought to be reconciled as far as possible, and the Mayukh view only accepted where such reconciliation is impossible or the Mitakshara is silent or ambiguous. This appears to be the prevailing view,[3] though in the earlier cases the Mayukh was assigned only a second place, the Mitakshara being regarded as paramount,[4] and on the subject of adoption, the two special treatises, Dattak-chandrika and the Dattak-mimansa possess special authority[5] but, as the Privy Council observed with reference to the latter, caution is required in accepting the glosses of its author where they deviate from, or add to, the Smritis.[6]

Bombay, Berar and Gujrat.

230. The ruling authorities in Sindh are the Mitakshara and the Mayukh when not in conflict. But if the two are in conflict, the Mitakshara prevails, unless the Mayukh rule is proved as a part of the customary law.[7]

Sindh.

231. The authority of the Mitakshara (§§ 129-136) is paramount in the United,[8] and the Central Provinces.[9] Other works governing the same school are:—

U.P. and C.P.

(1) Vir-Mitrodai—a work of special authority.[10] It is a collection of notes concisely elucidating the obscure passages of the Mitakshara.[11]

---

(1) Girja Bai v. Venkatesh, 2 Berar L.J. 135; Ram Prasad v. Subu Bai, 4 N.L.R. 31 (32); Dawlat Rao v. Govind Rao, 5 N.L.R. 13; Ramji v. Nursha, 7 N.L.R. 116; Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath, 9 N.L.R. 102 (108); Bhadia v. Bhagi, 10 N.L.R. 24; Madho v. Janki, 12 N.L.R. 148; Sadasheo v. Jaikrishna, 14 N.L.R. 6; Kasam v. Jagavad, 18 N.L.R. 127 (129, 130) P.C.; Narain v. Tulsiram, 22 N.L.R. 183 F.B.

(2) Where it was introduced by the Maratha conquerors after 1720 A.D.; and where, therefore, it became the lex loci only by adoption; see Per West, J., in Bhagirathi Bai v. Kanujirav, 11 B. 285 (294, 295) F.B.

(3) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (438); Vinayak v. Lakshmibai, 1 B.H.C.R. 117 (122), approved O.A. Vinayak v. Lakshmibai, 9 M.I.A. 516 (536, 537); Bhagawandeen v. Myna Bai, 11 M.I.A. 487 (508); Krishnaji v. Pandurang, 12 B.H.C.R. 65; Rahi v. Govind, 1 B. 97 (106); Bhagirath v. Kanujirav, 11 B. 285 (295) F.B., in which West, J., explains the reasons for the ascendancy of the Mayukh; Gojabai v. Shahajirao, 17 B. 114 (118); Bai Kesser Bai v. Hunsraj, 30 B. 431 (442); Tukaram v. Narayan, 36 B. 339 (357); Basanta v. Jogendra, 33 C. 371 (375); Narayanaswamy v. Kuppusami, 11 M. 43 (48).

(4) Vallabh Ram v. Bai Hariganga, 4 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 135 (138); Narayan v. Nana, 7 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 153 (166, 167); Rakmabai v. Radhabai, 5 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 181 (185); Bachha Jha v. Jugmon Jha, 12 C. 348 (355); Balkrishna v. Lakshman, 14 B. 605 (612).

(5) Laxmipati Rao v. Venkatesh, 41 B. 315; Bachoo v. Nagindas, 16 Bom. L.R. 263 O. A. Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 P.C.

(6) Puttu Lai v. Parbati, 37 A. 359 P.C.

(7) Bodo Mal v. Kishni Bai, 93 I.C. 844: (1926) S. 231.

(8) Bhayh Ram v. Bhyahugur, 13 M. I.A. 373 (390); Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 (410) P.C.; Bachira Ju v. Venkatappadu, 2 M.H.C.R. 402 (406); Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal, 12 A. 328 (335); Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 17 A. 294 (347); Debai Sahai v. Sheo Shankar Lal, 22 A. 353 (356); Jagannath v. Ranjit Singh, 25 C. 354 (366).

(9) Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao, 48 C. 30 P.C. (C.P. case).

(10) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (438); Girdhari Lal v. Bengal Government, Ib., 448 (465); Moneram v. Kerry Kolitany, 5 C. 776 (786) P.C.; Bachha v. Jugmon, 12 C. 348 (353, 356); Ranjit Singh v. Jagannath, Ib., 375 (381); Jogdamba v. Secretary of State, 16 C. 367 (374); Abhal Chwran v. Mangal Jana, 19 C. 634 (638); Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal, 12 A. 328 (340, 341).

(11) Cole, Preface to Mitak, p. viii.

(2) Subodhini—by Visheshwar Bhatt, author of Madan-Parijat, an authority in Mithila. Subodhini is only a collection of notes explanatory of obscure passages in the Mitakshara.

(3) Madan-Parijat.

(4) Keshava-Vaijyanti.

(5) Balam Bhatta Tika—a work by a Brahmin lady named Laxmi Devi (§ 132) overstrains the text to favour the rights of women.[1] In other respects, neither this commentary nor her Vaijyanti can equal the Vir-Mitrodaya.[2]

(6) Vaijyanti—see Balam Bhatta.

(7) Vyavhar-Madhav.

(8) Kalpataru—by Lakshmidhar (1130 A.D.).

(9) Vivad-Tandav—author Kamlakar—contemporary of Nilkanth and said to be his cousin—deals only with inheritance and followed, if "his work is not in conflict with any higher authority."

Mithila.

232. As previously observed, except the Bengal, Eastern or Gaudiya School, whose text-book is the Dayabhag, and the Maharastra school, which favours the Mayukh, the rest of India is subject to the Mitakshara and its sub-schools of which the Mithila school, its nearest neighbour, is least dissentient. The country comprised in the ancient Mithila is variously described, some holding it to correspond to the whole of modern Behar[3] while others hold it to comprise only North Behar including Tirhoot[4] and Purneah.[5] According to Messrs. Golap Shastri and D. Chatterjee, the translators of the Vivad Ratnakar, the province of Mithila is that territory which lies between the rivers Gandak and the Coosee.[6] Whatever may be the exact boundaries of Mithila, it was at one time the seat of great literary activity. Yadnavalkya, the author of the Institutes, annotated in the Mitakshara, lived and taught here; and it still boasts of a distinct sub-school which has been prolific in the production of treatises, which, though professedly commentaries on the Mitakshara, do not fail to introduce small local variations under the license of interpretation. But the Mitakshara remains there as the paramount authority[7] the following works being regarded as merely supplementing it and as such entitled only to local preference:—

(1) Vivad-Ratnakar—composed by or under the superintendence of Chandeshwar. Leading text-book of the school.

(2) Vivad-Chintamani—by Vachaspati Misra, is also a leading text-book.[8] It follows the Ratnakar.

---

(1) Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal, 12 A. 328 (368); Ananda v. Nownit Lal, 9 C. 315 (324); Jogdamba v. Secretary of State, 16 C. 367 (372); Dwarka v. Sarat Chandra, 39 C. 319 (336).

(2) Ananda v. Nownit Lal, 9 C. 315 (324).

(3) Tagore's Preface to Vivad Chintamani, p. xxvii.

(4) Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139 (175); Bhagwandeen v. Myna Bai, 11 M.I.A. 487 (507).

(5) Rutcheputty v. Rajendra, 2 M.I.A. 132 (155).

(6) Babu Golap Shastri, in his Law of Adoption, treats Mithila as co-extensive with Tirhoot (2nd Ed.), 92.

(7) Sourendra v. Hari Prasad, 5 P. 135 (155) P.C.; Chandreshwar v. Bisheshwar, ib., 777.

(8) Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139 (174 175); Dhondu v. Jaganath, 1 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 47 (49); Balwant Singh v. Rani Kishore, 20

(3) Vivad-Chandra—by Misaru Misra—holds as high place.[1]

(4) Krita-kalpadruma.

(5) Madan-parijat—written by Vishweswar Madan Upadhyaya—better known as the author of Subodhini.

(6) Dwaita-Parishishta—by Keshav Misra.

(7) Smriti-Sar.

(8) Smriti-Samuchchai—by Hari Nath Upadhyaya.

But though these are all text-books of this school, in case of conflict between any of them, the Mitakshara alone is regarded as the final guide.[2]

Madras.

233. In the Madras Presidency[3] the supreme authority of the Mitakshara, though unshaken,[4] is supplemented by the following works:—

(1) The Smriti-Chandrika ranks highest after the Mitakshara,[5] though it cannot override its explicit provisions.[6] It holds a parallel position to the Mayukh in the Bombay Presidency.[7]

(2) Vir-Mitrodai—has a high position in Western India. It supplements many gaps and omissions in the earlier commentaries and illustrates and elucidates, with logical preciseness, the meaning of doubtful expressions.[8]

(3) Subodhini—by Vishweshwar Bhatt.

(4) Saraswati-Vilas—by Pratap Rudra Deo of some authority in Madras.[9]

(5) Parasar-Madhaviyam—written by Narainswamy—especially esteemed in the Canara District.[10]

(6) Vyavhar-Nirnai.

(7) Aparark.[11]

A. 267 (290) P.C.; Damodar v. Senabutty, 8 C. 537 (541); Birajun v. Luchmi Narain, 10 C. 392 (399); Bachha v. Jugmon, 12 C. 348 (351); Sunimani v. Mullammal, 3 M. 265 (268); Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 107 (113).

(1) Rutchputty v. Rajunder, 2 M.I.A. 132 (155).

(2) Bachha v. Jugmon, 12 C. 348 (356).

(3) Variously called the Penisular, the Dravid District, or the Southern School.

(4) Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly, 8 M.I.A. 500 (522); Katama Nachiar v. Srimut Raja Mootoo, 9 M.I.A. 539 (606, 607); Nagalinga v. Subhiramaniya, 1 M.H.C.R. 77 (80); Srinivasa v. Kuppan, 1 M.H.C.R. 180 (182); Bachiraju v. Venkatappada, 2 M.H.C.R. 402 (403).

(5) Bhagwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487 (508); Collector of Madura v. Muthu Ramalinga, 2 M.H.C.R. 206 (219) O.A. 12 M.I.A. 397 (437); Kissen v. Javallah, 3 M.H.C.R. 346 (351); Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 1 M. 290 (299) P.C.; Muttu v. Dora Singha, 3 M. 290 (302) P.C.; Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 107 (123); Subramania v. Muthuswamy, 21 M.L.J. 856 (864); Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 439 (441).

(6) Summani v. Mullammal, 3 M. 265 (269); Muthappanarayan v. Ammani, 21 M. 58 (62); Raju Gramony v. Amani, 2 M. 358 (360); Chinnasami v. Kunju, 35 M. 152 (159); Vedachela v. Ranganathan, 26 C.W.N. 159 P.C.

(7) Vedachela v. Ranganathan, 26 C.W.N. 159 P.C.

(8) Ib.

(9) Kattama v. Doraswamy, 6 M.H.C.R. 310 (333); Jajyamp v. Kamakshi, 3 M.H.C.R. 424 (452); Appandai v. Bagubali, 33 M. 439 (441); Chinnaswami v. Kunja, 35 M. 152 (159); Vedachela v. Ranganathan, 26 C.W.N. 159 (166) P.C.

(10) Collector of Madura v. Muthu Ramalinga, 2 M.H.C.R. 206 (220), O.A. 12 M.I.A. 397; Bhagwandeen v. Myna Baee, 11 M.I.A. 487 (508).

(11) Both Aparark and Vyavhar Nirnai may be usefully consulted on points on which the Mitakshara is silent.

(8) Vaithinath-Dikshatiyam.
(9) Dattak-chandrika.[1]

The Punjab.

234. In the Punjab, in all questions relating to adoption, guardianship, succession, women's property and female relations such as betrothal, dower, marriage, divorce and bastardy, family relations, partitions, gifts, wills and legacies, religious usages and the rights of alluvion and diluvion, the first rule of decision is custom[2] which is recorded in the Riwaz-i-Am prepared by the settlement officers charged with this duty.[3] But in the absence of ascertained custom, the Punjabi Hindus are governed by the Mitakshara, though the scope for its applicability is much limited by the considerable body of customary law which has become crystallized into well-ascertained rules.

235. Special Treatises on Adoption.—The two special treatises on adoption, the Dattak-chandrika[4] and the Dattak-mimansa,[5] are recognized as of high authority in every part of India, of these the Dattak-Chandrika is the older and considered of higher authority,[6] but the observation of the Privy Council made with reference to the Dattak-mimansa apply equally to both, viz., that caution is required in accepting the glosses of their authors where they deviate from or add to the Smritis.[7]

Persons subject to Lex Loci.

3. (1) All persons domiciled in a given place are prima facie subject to the law of that place.[8]

Law applicable to Migrants.

(2) (a) But, since Hindu Law is personal, and a person has the right to carry it with him upon his migration to another place in India,[9] where a different system or a rule of law prevails, it follows that where a person has migrated from the home of his origin to another place in India, subject to different law, he is entitled to adhere to the law of his origin, and it will be so presumed unless it appears that he had abandoned that law and had adopted the law of his new domicile.[10] but should not be accepted if their opinion is clearly opposed to it; Chinna Swami v. Kunja Pillai, 35 M. 152.

---

(1) Rungama v. Atchama, 4 M.I.A. 1 (97); Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (437); Gurulingaswami v. Ramalakshmamma, 3 C.W.N. 427 P.C.; Arumilli v. Arumilli, 44 M. 656 P.C.

(2) S. 2, Reg. XI of 1825; S. 5, Punjab Laws Act (Act IV of 1872); Krishna Singh v. Nur Din, (1917) P.W. R. 156: 42 I.C. 193; Rattigan's Dig. Civil Law Punjab, pp. 1-4.

(3) Bey v. Alla Ditta, 44 C. 749 P.C.

(4) Rungama v. Atchama, 4 M.I.A. 1 (97); Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (437); Gurulingaswami v. Ramalakshmamma, 3 C.W.N. 427 P.C.: 26 I.C. 113 (132); Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 P.C., Bachoo v. Nagindas, 16 Bom. L.R. 263: 23 I.C. 912, O.A. Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 P.C., Arumilli v. Arumilli, 44 M. 656 (665, 666) P.C.; Damodarji v. Collector, 7 A.L.J. 927: 7 I.C. 418.

(5) Puttu Lal v. Parleali, 37 A. 359 P.C.; Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 P.C.; Pralhad v. Mahadeo, 9 N.L.R. 130.

(6) § 145, Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (437).

(7) Per Sir John Edge in Puttu Lall v. Parbati, 37 A. 359 P.C.

(8) Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao, 48 C. 30 (38, 39) P.C.; Banamali v. Arjun Sen, (1932) C. 730.

(9) But not where a person migrates out of India to say East Africa—Abdurahim v. Halimbai, 43 I.A. 35: 32 I.C. 413 P. C.; Mailathi v. Subharaya, 24 M. 650 (a converse case—widow from French India migrating to British India remains subject to French law).

(10) Ib. p. 40; Jiwan Bras v. Myindra, (1934) Pat. 260; Bhim Rao v. Punjab Rao, (1935) N. 24; Kasamsha v. Baban Rao, 30 N.L.R. 322; Basanta v. Lala Ram Sankar, 59 C. 859.

(b) Where an area, originally a part of one province subject to one law, is transferred to another province subject to another law, it involves no change of the law to which it was subject.[1]

Explanation 1.—The "law of origin" means and includes the law established in the original domicile of the ancestors of the family, and not merely of any members thereof, as determined by the caste, race and language of the family at the time of its migration.

Explanation 2.—In order to show that in spite of his migration a person has continued to follow the law of his origin the evidence given must be such as suffices to prove a special or family custom regarding its observance.[2]

Illustrations.

(a) A, a Mahratta Brahman from Poona, subject to the Mayukh law, migrates to Nagpur where the Mitakshara law is the lex loci. In the first place, it will be presumed that he is subject to the Mitakshara law, but A may shew that both he and the other branches of his family have maintained a connection with Poona and followed the manners and customs of that place.[3]

(b) A, a Bengali from Calcutta, settled down in Allahabad. The fact that several families of Bengalis had done the same, but were following the Dayabhag law is evidence from which it will be presumed that A and his descendants had continued to be subject to their own law.[4]

(c) A, a Marwadi from Bikaner, joined a large colony of Marwadis in Calcutta for business. It is notorious that Marwadis follow their own customs wherever they go. A will be presumed to be governed by such customs, in Calcutta.[5]

(d) In North Kanara, the adoption of a married man is invalid. In 1861, it was transferred to the Bombay Presidency, where, in places subject to the Mayukh law, such adoption is valid. A, a Lingayat resident of North Kanara, adopted a married man in 1907. There was nothing to shew that A had become identified with the people of Maharashtra. The adoption is invalid.[6]

236. Analogous Law.—Since Hindu law is a part of the religious law of the Hindus and is inextricably blended with their religious rites and worship, the policy of the Government not to interfere with their religion leads to the necessary corollary not to interfere with their law as well; though since the Legislature enacts no limitation upon its own powers, it follows that the policy of non-interference is to that extent limited, and the Legislature has repealed some of its rules and modified others in the larger interest of society. The tenacious adherence of Hindus to their customs and usages, and their territorial diversity, justify the rule here enacted. In this sense, there is a lex loci as stated in clause (1).[7] But the lex loci applies only to persons of which the place is the domicile of origin.[8] This is presumed to be as stated in Section 2. It follows the linguistic test. For instance, those who speak Bengali will presumably be governed by the Dayabhag law wherever they may happen to reside, for

---

(1) Somashekhara v. Mahadeva, 53 M. 297.

(2) Balkinson v. Kunjilal, (1930) P. C. 133.

(3) Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao, 48 C. 30 (39) P.C.

(4) Surendra Nath v. Hiramani, 12 M.I.A. 8; Parbati Kumar Debi v. Jagadis Chunder, 29 C. 433 (451) P.C.

(5) Ib.

(6) Somasekhara v. Mahadeva, 53 M. 297 P.C.

(7) Soorendranath v. Heeramonee, 12 M.I.A. 81 (96); Parbati v. Jagadish Chunder, 29 C. 433 (452) P.C.; Govind v. Radha, 31 A. 477 (479) P.C.; Nobin Chunder v. Janaradhan, (1862) W.R. 67; Otun Chander v. Obhy Churn, W.R. (Sp.) 67 (68); Koomud Chunder v. Seetakanth, (1863) W.R. (Sp.) 75; Sonatum v. Rutton, (1864) W.R. (Sp.) 95.

(8) Ramdas v. Chandra Dassia, 20 C. 409 (413).

Bengal was and remains their "domicile of origin." This term has been defined in the Succession Act as the country in which, at the time of a person's birth, his father was domiciled.[1] But this is not the sense in which a Hindu takes with him his personal law, and therefore, a different term had to be coined to describe it.

Lex Loci.

237. The question whether a person is bound by the lex loci or the prevailing law of the place depends upon the subject-matter of the right if it relates to immoveable property, it is generally subject to the law where the property is situate (lex rei situ).[2] The same rule applies to gifts and commercial transactions.[3] But in the matter of contracts, their validity depends upon the law of the place where the contract is made (lex loci contractus), but where it is made in one country, but is to be performed in another country, it will be presumably subject to the law of the place of performance (lex loci solutionis).[4] But since Hindu law is a local family law, it may be generally stated that the presumption of the applicability of that law applies to India; but since that law is not uniform and has become territorial, the presumption arising in the case of a person domiciled in a given place is that he is prima facie subject to the school of law prevailing there.[5] But where it is known or is proved that a person, though domiciled in one place, has continued to maintain the individuality of his caste, race language, manners or custom, prevailing in the country from which he or his ancestors had migrated, and which, at the time of his migration, was subject to a different rule of law, then the law applicable to him would be such law, namely, the law of his original domicile (lex domicilii)[6] or, indeed, the law of his original domicile, if it had come into existence since his migration, even though it may have become incorporated in that law,[7] and by which he would have been bound if he had not migrated, and by which, indeed, his other relations who have not migrated might still be bound.

But in such a case it would be permissible to the migrant to shew that he had adopted the later custom as a part of his family law. The preservation of personal law is the necessary corollary to the preservation of the religious rites and worship with which the Hindu Law is inextricably blended. The question was considered by the Privy Council as far back as 1839 when, affirming the finding of the Sadar Diwani Adalat, their Lordships said that in a case where a family migrates from one territory to another, if it preserves its ancient religious ceremonies, it also preserves the law of succession.[8] It should be noted that this presumption only applies

---

(1) Act XXXIX of 1925, S. 7.

(2) Dicey, Conflict of Laws (5th Ed., Ch. 33, p. 583; Nobin Chunder v. Janardhan, (1862) W.R. 67 F.B.

(3) Ib., p. 609.

(4) Hamlyn v. Talisher Distillery, (1894) A.C. 202 (212).

(5) Ratcheputty v. Rajunder, 2 M.I.A. 132; Soorendranath v. Heeramonee, 12 M.I.A. 81; Parbati v. Jagdis Chunder, 29 C. 433 P.C., cited in Balwant Rao v. Bajirao, 48 C. 30 (39) P.C.

(6) Parbati Kumari v. Jagadish Chunder, 29 C. 433, P.C.; Tularam v. Shyam Lal, 49 A. 848 (852, 853).

(7) Vasudevan v. Secretary of State, 11 M. 157 (162), approved in Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao, 48 C. 30 (39) P.C.

(8) Rutchepatty v. Rajender, 2 M.I.A. 132; Surendranath v. Heeramoni, 12 M.I.A. 81 (92); Parbati v. Jagadis Chunder, 29 C. 433 (451) P.C.; Otum Chunder v. Janardhan, W.R. (F.B.) 67 (68); Kumud Chander v. Seetakant, ib., 75 (76); Lekkea v. Ganga Govinda, 8 W.R. 56; Prithee Singh v. Sheo Soondaree, 8 W.R. 261; Huro Pershad v. Shib Shunkari, 13 W.R. 47; Sonatan v. Rutton, ib., 95; Gobind v. Radha, 31 A. 477 (479); Murli Das v.

to persons as to whose nationality or race there is no dispute; there may be cases where the same degree of presumption cannot be made, as for instance, in the case of persons of mixed descent, or of those whose assimilation to the Hindu society is yet incomplete.[1]

Law at the Time of Migration Applicable.

238. It has been held that the personal law by which a party is bound is the personal law in vogue at the time of his migration and not any subsequent development of that law which may have come into prevalence after his migration.[2] But it is submitted, that this limitation is by no means in accord with the principle underlying the rule. The reason why a Hindu is permitted to carry his personal law with him is founded on the fact that that law is disseverably connected with his religion, and that Hindus are notoriously conservative in the matter of their religious observances and that they do not wholly break away from their place of origin to which they repair on occasions of marriage and death and for the performance of their religious observances. Consequently, they are held free to take with them both their religion and their law wherever they go. Now, it cannot be denied that if they had not migrated they would have been bound by any changes and development which that law might undergo from time to time. If so, how can they be the less bound merely because they have changed their domicile. Moreover, the rule assumes a continuous connection with the place of origin in spite of the change of domicile. Moreover, the change may be a mere correction of an erroneous view of law; or it may be the revival of an old custom. So, where in a case of migration proved to have taken place before the composition of Mayukh, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee referring to that work, said: "Although the migration of the Abhan Thakurs took place before the Mayukh was written, it may well be that the rule was in force in earlier times, and that on this point the Mayukh only embodied and defined a pre-existing custom."[3]

Lex Loci.

239. While a person is entitled to his personal law, he cannot simultaneously have two such distinct and inconsistent laws, for example, one governing his rights in respect of property, taken by him from paternal ancestors, and the other in respect of properties received by him from maternal ancestors.[4] The lex loci, as set out in S. 2, governs a person whose place of origin is unknown.[5] Even when known, a long continuous residence in a given locality and the severance of all ties with the domicile of origin may make the migrant amenable to the local law. Such is the case of the Brahmans and Kayasths of Bengal who are reputed to have migrated from Kanauj,

---

Manicka, 5 M.L.T. 181; Amba Bai v. Gobind, 23 B. 257; Jagannath v. Narayan, 34 B. 553 (557, 558); Basudev v. Secretary of State, 11 M. 157 (161, 162); Mailathi v. Subcaraya, 24 M. 650; Bhagabai v. Sohodra, 16 C.W.N. 834: 13 I.C. 691; Kulada Prosad v. Hari Prosad, 40 C. 407 (416); Balwant Rao v. Raji Rao, 48 C. 30 P.C.; Sukbir Singh v. Mangeistar, 49 A. 302.

(1) Fanindra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 463 (481, 482) P.C.; Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao, 48 C. 30 P.C. contra in Madho Rao v. Kesho Rao, 55 I.C. (N.) 175.

(2) Vasudevan v. Secretary of State, 11 M. 157 (162).

(3) Chandika v. Muna Kunwar, 24 A. 273 (280) P.C.; Jawalita Lal v. Jaran Lal, 46 A. 182.

(4) Bhagabati v. Sohodra, 16 C.W.N. 834: 13 I.C. 691.

(5) Ram Das v. Chandra, 20 C. 409 (412).

and to have brought with them the Mithila Law. But after their settlement in Bengal, the Dayabhag school was founded, and it became applicable to them and is prima facie the lex loci of Bengal, though it is still open to any Bengali to show that his family had, nevertheless, retained the law of his origin.[1] Such was held to be the case of a family of Nagar Brahmans of Gujrat who were domiciled for over a century in Benares, and were ignorant of any rules to be found in the Mayukh country, and were unable to prove a single instance of special succession under the Mayukh.[2]

240. Principle.—If Hindu Law were uniform, and had not been divided into schools, nor varied by local customs and usages governing only certain castes, communities and families, it would, in the same sense, have been the lex loci as are the laws of the Indian Legislature. But since that law is only, loosely speaking, territorial, it follows that it would apply as stated in the last section, where nothing is known of the origin of a person found domiciled in a given place. But since this can be predicated of very few families who have migrated from their original homes, it follows that where they have preserved their contact with the home of their origin or retained its custom they will be entitled to observe and enforce them in spite of the fact that generations separate them from their homes and that they have become permanently domiciled in a place where another system of law prevails. Ordinarily, all persons living in any locality are subject to the law in force there.[3] And as regards immovable property, the general rule is that it is subject to the lex rei situ.[4] But inasmuch as Hindus are now declared by law to be bound by their own personal laws,[5] it follows that they are equally entitled to be judged by those laws wherever they may be living. This is of some consequence as Hindus are to be found scattered all over India, and if their laws were to be altered by each movement of their domicile, or in accordance with the rule of rei situ, then they might be subjected to a variety of rules as divergent as the schools of Hindu Law. Moreover, that rule only applies to countries which possess a more or less uniform territorial law. Such laws now exist in this country, and so far as they are applicable, they apply to the exclusion of Hindu Law (§ 154). They, however, still leave Hindu Law intact on several subjects here dealt with, and on those the rules here prescribed, hold good. But since the statutes reserving this law only extend to India, a Hindu migrating beyond the shores of India, e.g., to Africa, England or elsewhere, cannot carry his personal law with him, but would be bound by the lex loci prevailing in the land of his domicile. But a Hindu migrating from foreign territory to India is entitled to bring his personal law with him.[6]

241. Personal Law when applicable.—This section lays down a rule in consonance with the unanimously accepted view of the Courts (§ 237). It declares that a Hindu is primarily governed by the law of his origin. Such law is set out in S. 2. Consequently, persons who have long lived rooted to the soil of any province and speak the language and follow

---

(1) Pitambar v. Nishi Kant, 24 C.W.N. 215; Ramesh Chandra v. Elahi Buksh, 50 C. 898.

(2) Lakshmi v. Hari Ram, 52 I.C. (A.) 25.

(3) Lalla Mahabir v. Mt. Kundar, 8 W.R. 116 (118, 119); Pitambar v. Nishi Kant, 24 C.W.N. 215; Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao, 48 C. 30 P.C.

(4) Nobin Chander v. Janardhan, W.R. (F.B.) 67.

(5) Government of India Act, 1915, S. 112 (5 & 6 Geo. V, c. 61), and the statutes previously cited.

(6) Mailathi v. Subbaraya, 24 M. 650.

the customs there prevalent, are governed by the lex loci. But in the case of migrating families, who leave the place of their origin to settle down in another place where the prevalent law is different, the rule is that their own personal law follows them on migration. But this is merely a presumption, and may be rebutted by proving that the family had by its adoption of the customs and usages of its domicile, declared its intention to abandon its law of origin and follow that of the domicile.[1] But the mere adoption of local customs, festivals and ceremonies of the people around is not sufficient to displace this presumption.[2] The real test is whether the family has continued to adhere to the essential ceremonies of its place of origin, such as those performed at the time of birth, marriage and death,[3] especially the last, which Hindu Law regards as the most important.[4] It is not necessary to prove migration from the place of origin, as this would, in many cases, be impossible.[5] Of course, where a Hindu has become a convert to Mahomedanism he is presumed, by the very act of his conversion, to have abandoned Hindu Law and usage to which he was subject, and those who allege that the Hindu Law and usage have been still retained must prove it.[6]

242. Law of Domicile when applicable.—It has been stated before that a Hindu is only presumably bound by the law of origin, and that that presumption is rebuttable, and may be rebutted by proof of adoption of the law of domicile in essential ceremonies, such as those attending birth, marriage and death. The question in each case is one of fact. Where a family originally subject to the Mithila Law, migrated to Bengal and had, for several generations, intermarried with Bengal women, though the rites and ceremonies connected with funerals and marriages had been sometimes performed according to the Bengal Shastras, the court held the fact of intermarriages sufficient to justify the application of the law of domicile.[7] But the converse proposition does not necessarily hold good, since a family may have for generations become merged in the local population, and yet it may not be permitted to intermarry with the people of that locality; but if, in such case, the law of succession be in accordance with the lex laci, then the court would presume that the family had abandoned its law of origin and adopted that of domicile.[8] But this statement requires to be qualified. The fact that a Hindu is entitled to carry with him his communal law depends upon the fact that inspite of the change of domicile he still remains a member of his community and attached to his original home. He visits it on the occasions of birth, marriages and funeral obsequies, and it would be strange if he were bound by one law, his wife by another, and his children by its latest development. Moreover, in such a case, a preliminary enquiry into the period of migration

---

(1) Byjnath v. Kopilmon, 24 W.R. 95 (96); Kulada v. Haripada, 40 C. 407.

(2) Huro Pershad v. Shibo Shunkuree, 13 W.R. 47.

(3) Koomud Chunder v. Setakanth, W.R. (F.B.) 75 (76): Login v. Princes Gowramma, 1 I.D. (O.S.) 109; Padmavati v. Doolar Singh, 4 M.I.A. 259.

(4) Ram Bromo v. Kaminee, 6 W.R. 295 (296); Ramesh Chandra v. Elahi Buksh, 50 C. 898.

(5) Ramesh Chandra v. Elahi Buksh, 50 C. 898, explaining Pitambar v. Nishikanta, 31 C.L.J. 52.

(6) Machhu Bai v. Hira Bai, 35 B. 264; Ibrahim v. Ibrahim, 30 M.L.T. 85 P.C.

(7) Raj Chunder v. Kokul Chund, 6 I.D. (O.S.) 42: (1801) 1 Sel. R. S. D.A. (Macnaghur) 43; Koomud Chunder v. Seetakanta, W.R. (F.B.) 75 (76).

(8) Chundro Sekhur v. Nobin Soondur, 2 W.R. 197.

and the state of the law then current would be almost a necessary prelude to every such litigation. Fortunately, as the old fiction of interpretation still obtains and as interpretation of law is not its alteration, it follows that Hindus are entitled to insist upon the administration of their personal law with all its latest "interpretations."[1] From what has been said before, it is clear that the lex loci will apply to persons whose origin is unknown, or who have become permanently domiciled elsewhere and identified with its people. Such is also the case of aborigines, who are presumably governed by the Hindu Law of the place where they reside, in the absence of proof of a custom at variance therewith.[2]

243. The Jains are no exception to the rule.[3] Like the rest of the Hindus they also carry on migration, their own personal laws with them. But inasmuch as, being traders and merchants, they have for generations become settled in all parts of India it is not always possible to ascertain the law of their origin. In that case their personal law would be the law of their domicile, in other words, the lex loci.[4]

Law applicable to Converts.

4. (1) Hindu Law, as such, ceases to bind a Hindu upon his conversion to an alien faith[5] and in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, he will be presumed to follow the law applicable to his new religion[6] but it is open to him to continue to follow Hindu Law as a matter of custom so far as it is consistent with his new religion[7] and with the rights of the other members of his family.[8]

(2) The question whether a convert continues to follow the old law or elects to follow the new law is a question of intention to be decided in each case with due regard to the course of his conduct, habit and mode of life.

244. Analogous Law.—This section enunciates three main propositions of law all of which have been the subject of judicial decisions. The first proposition is that a Hindu, upon his conversion to a non-Hindu faith, e.g., Mahomedanism or Christianity, becomes at once free from the obligations of Hindu Law.[9]

The second proposition is that a convert prima facie becomes subject to the law applicable to his new religion.[10]

---

(1) Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao, 48 C. 30 (43) P.C. approving Vasudevan v. Secretary of State, 11 M. 157 (162); Madho Rao v. Kesho Rao, 55 I.C. (N.) 175.

(2) Rukhab v. Chunnilal, 16 B. 347; Amava v. Mahadgauda, 22 B. 416; Ambabai v. Govind, 23 B. 257 (263); Lalla Mahabeer v. Mt. Kundun, 8 W.R. 116; Chotay Lall v. Chunao Lal, 4 C. 744; Manik Chand v. Jagat Settani, 17 C. 518.

(3) Bhagvandas v. Rajmal, 10 B.H.C.R. 241; Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 P.C.; Chotay Lall v. Chunnoo Lal, 4 C. 744 (752, 753) P.C.

(4) Official Assignee v. Bidya Sundari, 24 C.W.N. 145: 54 I.C. 700.

(5) Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 P.C.

(6) Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M.I.A. 195.

(7) Rowther v. Rowther, 45 M. 308.

(8) Kulada Prasad v. Haripada, 40 C. 407 (418, 419).

(9) Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 P.C.; Rowther v. Rowther, 45 M. 308 P.C.; Najimuddin v. Abdul Hamid, (1923) L. 175; Jamna Bai v. Gonda Ram, 6 L.L.J. 84; contra in Ramjee v. Anandappa, 2 Mysore L.J. 92 (submitted, based on a misapprehension of the Privy Council).

(10) Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M.I.A.

The third proposition is that a convert may, despite his conversion to an alien faith, elect to follow the old law, but he can only do so in its entirety (a) so far as it is consistent with his new religion,[1] and (b) so far as he can do so without prejudicing the rights of his unconverted relations.[2]

A convert continuing to follow Hindu Law can only do so as a matter of custom,[3] since Hindu Law, as such, ceases to apply to him upon his conversion to another faith with the personal and property law of its own.[4]

Clause 2 lays down a rule of evidence and is equally supported by authority.

These several propositions will now be examined in detail.

Clause I.

245. New Religion: New Law.—Since Hindu Law is a part of the Hindu religion and is claimed to possess divine origin, it follows that he who renounces that religion in favour of another, possessing a system of its own law, the convert, upon his embracing his new religion, equally embraces his new system of law. But it is only a presumption, since a person may become a convert to a new religion, such as Christianity, and Islam and yet continue to retain his old law, but the presumption is otherwise.[5] Where however, a Hindu becomes a convert to a religion which is only a sect of Hinduism, i.e., Sikhism, which has no separate system of its own law, and which conversion is, moreover, to an allied and not to an alien faith, since conversion does not entail any presumptive break in the continuance of old law by which he was bound in spite of his conversion. Hindu Law is essentially a religious law. It has not been yet secularized. Technically, it remains a set of divine commands which are obligatory upon all Hindus so long as they are Hindus by religion. But outside this narrow and steadily narrowing circle, there remain a class of Hindu reformers, dissenters and apostates, such as, Sikhs,[6] Brahmos, Arya Samajis, Prarthana Samajis and the rest, who, though disavowing the essential tenets of Hinduism are still regarded as Hindus and are subject to the Hindu Law. But there is a limit beyond which apostacy is intolerable; and it has been held that the moment a Hindu plunges into apostacy by allying himself to an alien faith with a legal system of its own, he ceases to be subject to Hindu Law, and it is presumed that, with the acceptance of a new religion, he had also accepted its law, which, again, he was not bound to do, since Christian and Mahomedan Laws are, unlike the Hindu Law, apart from the Christian and Mahomedan religions, and the acceptance of one does not necessitate the acceptance of

---

195; Rowther v. Rowther, 45 M. 308 (314) P.C.; Advocate-General v. Jimba Bai, 41 B. 181; Bai Maeh Bai v. Hir Bai, 35 B. 264; Asha Bibi v. Ma Kya Yin, 64 I.C. (R.) 514; Chedambaram v. Ma Yein, 6 R. 243 (253).

(1) Rowther v. Rowther, 45 M. 308 (314) P.C.

(2) Kulada Prasad v. Haripada, 40 C. 407 (418, 419).

(3) Abu v. Khatubai, 43 B. 647, affirmed O.A. Khatubai v. Abu, 47 B. 146 (152, 153) P.C.

(4) Dalipa v. Dallu, 4 L.L.J. 336; Haji Osman v. Haroon, 24 Bom.L.R. 978: 68 I.C. 862; Abu v. Khatubai, 43 B. 647, affirmed O.A. Khatubai v. Abu, 47 B. 146 (152, 153) P.C.

(5) Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M.I.A. 195 (237, 238); Tellis v. Saldanha, 10 M. 69; Subbayya v. Rangayya, (1927) M. 883: 105 I.C. 206.

(6) Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 P.C.

the other; from which again it follows that a Hindu may become a convert to Christianity and Mahomedanism, and yet retain his personal law unaffected by the change of his religion.

246. It was so laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Abraham v. Abraham, in which it had to consider the applicability of the law of coparcenership to the two brothers who were descendants of Hindu parents, but had themselves become converts to Christianity, and one of them, Mathew, having married an English woman of mixed descent, the question was whether, on his death, his brother succeeded to his estate by survivorship, which the Privy Council held that he did not, on the ground that with the conversion of a Hindu to Christianity the Hindu Law, as such, ceased to apply to him, though it was conceded that the convert may abide by the old law notwithstanding that he had abandoned his old religion, a fact which must be proved in each case; but in such a case, Hindu Law would apply to the convert not because it is Hindu Law, but because it is adopted by the convert as his family custom.[1]

247. This case was decided in 1863 before the enactment of the Succession Act, 1865, under which, while Hindus, Mahomedans and Christians are exempted from its provisions[2] others not subject to any other law, are made subject to it.[3] The question whether this enactment has had the effect of overruling their Lordships' view[4] by making it no longer possible for a Hindu convert to retain his own law has been answered in the negative by the Board.[5]

248. In another case, a similar question arose upon a Hindu becoming a convert to Mahomedanism. Here one Ratan Singh was a born Hindu, but became converted to Mahomedanism, the effect of which their Lordships held, was to have ipso facto dissolved the coparcenership of which he had till then been a member.[6]

249. Joint family implies that members thereof are entitled to joint mess, joint worship, joint residence and joint estate. But where joint mess, joint worship and joint residence become impossible the jointness of estate cannot continue in the sense it is understood of a coparcenary estate. The converted member becomes entitled to enjoy his share, but he can only do so on partition. The underlying religious foundation of a coparcenership being swept away by his act of conversion all that remains to him is his share safeguarded to him by the statute. He cannot continue to remain joint. If he fails to assert his right in time it is apt to be lost by the efflux of time, since the possession of those who continue to remain joint would be adverse as to him and on the expiry of the statutory period, his right of recovery would be extinguished.[7]

250. Forfeiture of caste may follow other acts besides conversion to an alien faith. It may equally result from a marriage out of caste. Such would, for instance, be the marriage of a coparcener to a European Christian

(1) Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M.I.A. 195 (237, 238); Tellis v. Saldanha, 10 M. 69; Subbayya v. Rangayya, 1927 M. 883: 105 I.C. 206.

(2) S. 332, now see S. 3 of Act XXXIX of 1925.

(3) S. 2, Succession Act (X of 1865).

(4) Napel Bala v. Sitikanta, 15 C. W.N. 158: 8 I.C. 41.

(5) Rowther v. Rowther, 45 M. 308 (314) P.C., following Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M.I.A. 195.

(6) Khunnilal v. Gobind Krishna, 33 A. 356 (363) P.C.; followed in Kulada Prasad v. Haripada, 40 C. 407 (418, 419); Chidambaram v. Ma Nyein Me, 6 R. 243.

(7) See this subject further discussed in the Chapter on "joint family."

lady who would inherit to her husband under the Succession Act. His issue by such marriage would not be of his caste, and they could not render the spiritual services to his ancestors for which the right to property is regarded as a solatium.[1] But, nevertheless, he does not now forfeit his heritage.[1]

251. So far as the wholesale conversion of families is concerned, it is open to the members of such families and their descendants to adhere to the old law, or renounce it. But Hindu Law, as such, ceases to apply to him. As the Privy Council observed: "Upon the conversion of a Hindu to Christianity, the Hindu Law ceases to have any continuing obligatory force upon the convert. He may renounce the old law by which he was bound, as he has renounced his old religion, or, if he thinks fit, he may abide by the old law, notwithstanding he has renounced the old religion."[2] In another place, they said: "The profession of Christianity releases the convert from the trammels of the Hindu Law, but it does not of necessity involve any change of the rights or relations of the convert in matters with which Christianity had no concern, such as his rights and interests in, and his powers over, property. The convert, though not bound as to such matters, either by the Hindu Law or by any other positive law may, by his course of conduct after his conversion, have shown by what law he intended to be governed as to these matters."[3]

252. In another case it was observed: "A convert, i.e., a Hindu or a Mahomedan, who becomes a convert to some other faith, is not deprived ipso facto of his rights to property by inheritance or otherwise. Prima facie he loses the benefits of the law of the religion he has abandoned, and acquires a new legal status according to the creed he has embraced, if such creed involves with it legal responsibilities and obligations. Thus a Hindu adopting the Mahomedan faith, from the moment of his conversion, by that act affects all the property he may acquire subsequently to it, so as to render it subject to he Mahomedan Law of inheritance. His apostasy has an immediate and prospective, not a retrospective effect; and his subjection to the new law dates from the moment of his profession of the new religion."[4]

253. It will be noticed that these and other cases[5] in which the same view was reiterated were cases of wholesale conversions of all members of the family, or of descendants of the convert, to whom it is open to follow the law of their old religion, or adopt that of their new religion. But it will be presumed that, upon his conversion, the convert has not only adopted the new religion but also its new law. But this is only a presumption which he may rebut by shewing that, despite the change of his religion, he had continued to adhere to the old law; and where this has been found to be the case amongst converts generally, it becomes a custom of the caste as became established in the case of Hindu converts to Mahomedanism, known as Khojas and Cuchi Memons.[6]

(1) See Act XXI of 1850.

(2) Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M.I.A. 195 (241).

(3) Ib., p. 245.

(4) Raj Bahadur v. Bishen Dayal, 4 A. 343 (347).

(5) Lopez v. Lopez, 12 C. 706 (722); Jalbhai v. Manoel, 19 B. 680; Baiji v. Santok, 20 B. 53; Hastings v. Gonsalves, 23 B. 539 (543); Ghosal v. Ghosal, 31 B. 25 (30, 32), dissenting from contra in Tellis v. Saldanha, 10 M. 69.

(6) Abdul Cadar v. Turner, 9 B. 158 (162); Mahomed Sidick v. Ahmed, 10 B. 1; Ahmedhoy v. Cassumbhoy, 13 B. 534; Jaswantsangji v. Fatesangji, 20 B. 181; Abu v. Khatubai, 43 B. 647, affirmed O. A., Khatubai v. Abu, 47 B. 146 (152, 153) P.C.

So the Hindu rule of exclusion of females from succession has been held to persist as a custom amongst the Hindu converts, known as the Halai Memons of Porebunder, though the Halai Memon settlers in Bombay follow the orthodox Mahomedan rule.[1] In a Madras case, it was held that coparcenership and the right of survivorship were incidents peculiar to Hindu Law, which law, so far as it affected Native Christians, was repealed by the Succession Act.[2] This view was dissented from in Bombay, where it was pointed out that there was nothing in the Succession Act to support it, and that on the other hand S. 93 of that Act actually recognized a joint tenancy with the right of survivorship[3] (§§ 221-223, 254).

5. No Court shall enforce any law or usage having the force of law, inflicting on a Hindu, forfeiture of rights or property other than a right to hold a religious office or in any wise imparting or affecting any right of inheritance not so connected by reason of his renouncing or having been excluded from the communion of the Hindu religion, or being deprived of caste.[4]

Effect of Apostasy.

Illustrations.

(a) A, a Hindu, dies, leaving him surviving two sons, B and the son C, who had previously become a convert to Christianity. B and C will inherit equally to A.

(b) In the last illustration if C predeceased A, leaving him surviving his Christian son D, the latter will inherit equally with B.[5]

(c) A, a Shebait of a temple, dies leaving him surviving B, who had previously turned a Christian. B cannot succeed to the Shebaitship, nor claim its emoluments, received by the holder of that office.

254. Analogous Law.—This section is drawn from S. 9 of the Bengal Regulations enacted as the Caste Disabilities Removal Act, 1850,[6] otherwise known as the Lex Loci Act, passed to remove the disqualification attending a person upon his renunciation of the tenets of Hinduism, whereupon he might be outcasted or his right to property depended upon the observance of the orthodox practices of Hinduism forfeited. The Act itself is based upon the provisions of an earlier Regulation,[7] which removed the penalty for freedom of conscience. Consequently, where the Rajput father had become a convert to Mahomedanism in 1845, whereupon it was claimed that he forfeited his share in the ancestral estate, which became solely vested in the son, the Privy Council held that the intention of both the Regulation of 1832 and of the Act of 1850 was perfectly clear in that they both withdrew from the parties the arm of the Court to enforce any penalty or forfeiture of right of property consequent thereupon. In such case, the forfeiture was in fact incurred, but it did not give the son any enforceable right to his father's share in the joint estate, which he could either assert himself or transmit to his heirs for enforcement in a British Court of Justice.[8]

255. The Act of 1850[9] lays down that a person deprived of his caste by conversion to another faith or otherwise does not forfeit on that account

(1) Khatubai v. Abu, 47 B. 146 (151, 152) P.C., affirming O.A., Abu v. Khatubai, 43 B. 647.

(2) Tellis v. Saldanha, 10 M. 69.

(3) Nauroji v. Perozbai, 23 B. 80; Ghosal v. Ghosal, 31 B. 25 (32).

(4) Act XXI of 1850. The Act in its turn is based on S. 9 of the Beng. Reg. VII of 1832.

(5) Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu, 11 A. 100.

(6) Act XXI of 1850.

(7) S. 9, Beng. Reg. VII of 1832.

(8) Khunnilal v. Gobind Krishna, 33 A. 356 (365, 366) P.C., reversing O.A. 29 A. 487.

(9) For full text, see Appendix.

(a) his rights, (b) his property, or (c) inheritance, the last two being merely illustrative of the first, as both the "forfeiture of property" and a "right of inheritance" are included in the word "rights." The Act does not abolish the forfeiture of such rights, but is limited merely to their non-enforcement by the Court. If the intention were otherwise, the section might have been worded thus: "No rights which a person possesses shall be forfeited, impaired or in any way affected by reason merely of his renouncing, etc."[1] The effect of this enactment is to remove partially certain disabilities imposed by the Hindu Law on an outcast Hindu, it being immaterial whether the deprivation of caste is due to conversion to another religion, in which case the convert ceases to be a Hindu, or whether it is due to non-compliance with its rules. Consequently, an outcast does not forfeit his right of guardianship of his children if he is otherwise qualified.[2]

256. Principle.—Since Hindu Law is religious law, the right to property is made by that law dependent upon the observance of the tenets of that faith. Consequently, a lapse from the orthodox practices of Hinduism would under that law entail forfeiture of the caste and all rights to property and inheritance. The pioneer missionaries influenced the Government to remove the iniquity visiting a Hindu convert of the deprivation of his civic rights, resulting in the enactment of the Caste Disabilities Removal Act,[3] otherwise known as the Lex Loci Act. This measure applies equally to those who change their religion or are outcast for failing to comply with any of its precepts. But in either case, the Act is limited to this that the court will not enforce or recognize the forfeiture as affecting his right to property or inheritance.[4] It does not otherwise interfere with the autonomy of caste. For instance, the Court cannot restore him to the privileges of caste lost by his exclusion.[5]

257. Effect of Apostasy.—The last section deals with the effect of Hindu Law upon Hindu converts. This section deals with the penalties which Hindu Law imposes upon converts and defines the extent to which they have been statutorily mitigated. The Act applies equally to converts and non-conformists, that is to say, to those who have renounced Hinduism as also to those who do not conform to its usages. The question may be examined with reference to (a) the persons protected, (b) the rights protected, (c) and the rights lost.

(1) Persons Protected.

258. The operation of the Act is ambiguous and has given rise to a conflict of decisions. It will be observed that so far as regards the persons, it prohibits the court from inflicting "on any person forfeiture of rights or property" and then goes on to add "or may be held in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance by reason of his or her renouncing, or having been excluded from the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste." If the latter clause be read as explanatory of and enlarging, with special reference to inheritance, the more general clause rendering unenforceable through the medium of court, the forfeiture of rights or property "on any person," it

(1) See the subject further discussed in the chap. on the General Principles of Inheritance.

(2) Khunnilal v. Gobind, 33 A. 356 (365, 366) P.C.; Kamlesra v. Jarai Kasaundan, 28 A. 233; Muchoo v. Arzoon, 5 W.R. 235; Ram Nath v. Durga, 4 C. 550 (552, 555); Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871 (873, 874); Gul Muhammed v. Wazir Begum, (1901) P.R. No. 60; Taij Sing v. Kousilla, (1902) P.R. 104.

(3) Act XXI of 1850.

(4) Honamma v. Timannabhat, 1 B. 559.

(5) Subbaraya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171.

would support the view, taken in Allahabad to the effect that these words not only protect the apostate, but also his descendants. Where, therefore, a Hindu turned a Mahomedan, his son, also a Mahomedan, was held entitled to succeed as reversioner to his Hindu uncle on the death of that uncle's widow.[1] But this view, though followed by the other courts, has been dissented from in Madras, where so far as regards the right of inheritance specifically provided for, stress is laid on the language of the second clause containing the words "by reason of his or her renouncing or having been excluded from the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste"—all words pointing to the person who has renounced the religion, or is excluded from or deprived of caste. In this view, the Mahomedan son of a converted Hindu would not succeed to the reversionary right of his uncle.[2] In Sindh, the question arose whether a Hindu son of the father converted to Mahomedanism was his heir. It was held that "any right of inheritance" extended equally to a right accruing to a person, which right is not affected by conversion. Consequently, a Hindu son was held entitled to inherit the property of his father. But it was added, that though, under the Mahomedan Law, a son is prima facie entitled to a share, yet the fact of his being a Hindu shifted the burden of proof on him to shew that he was not excluded as a Kafir.[3] This case shows the difficulties which beset a liberal construction of the section. The fact is that the Act ill-defined the rights intended to be protected, and the second clause, while intended to be supplementary, is susceptible of a double construction according as it is taken to be illustrative or exhaustive of the rights protected by it.

(2) Rights Protected.

259. Secondly, as regards the rights protected, the Act refers to "forfeiture of rights or property." It is, therefore, clear that the Act merely saves existing rights, but has not the effect of creating new ones.[4] Consequently, a member of a tarwad in Malabar which is impartible, cannot, on his conversion to Mahomedanism, acquire a right to a partition of the tarwad property.[5] And even as regards the existing rights, the Act does not prevent their being forfeited or lost upon apostasy—all it provides is that the Court will not enforce such forfeiture. So where a person was outcast by a Caste Panchayat, whereupon he claimed damages, the court refused to interfere with the autonomy of caste, provided that its decisions were within its own jurisdiction and were not oppressive or contrary to natural justice.[6] So where a Hindu married woman, having embraced Islam, married a Mahomedan according to the forms of Mahomedan Law and had sons by him during the lifetime of the Hindu husband, from whom she had not obtained divorce, she claimed to inherit to her father, whereupon the court held her to possess no such right on the ground that having been married to a Hindu, her second marriage was illegal and that, therefore, she was in the eye of the law an unchaste daughter, who was excluded from inheritance under Hindu Law. The Act did not apply to her case because, possessing as she did, no right, she had forfeited none which the Act could

(1) Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu, 11 A. 100, followed in Mabna v. Chan, (1902) P.R. 104; Rupa v. Sardar Merza, 1 L. 376; Hasoinmal v. Ghulam Mahomed, 8 S.L.R. 185: 27 I.C. 357; contra Vaithilinga v. Ayyathorai, 40 M. 1118.

(2) Vaithilinga v. Ayyathorai, 40 M. 1118.

(3) Hassomal v. Ghulam Mahomed, 8 S.L.R. 185: 27 I.C. 357.

(4) Matungini v. Ram Ratton, 19 C. 289 (291) F.B.

(5) Pathumma v. Raman, 44 M. 891 (896) F.B.

(6) Bishambar Das v. Gobind Das, 12 A.L.J. 552: 23 I.C. 301.

save.[1] It is apprehended that if the Act will not enforce forfeiture of rights, it will not equally enforce assertion of rights lost by the apostate which are involved in his deprivation of caste. Such is a right to enter a temple, or to participate in a caste dinner or a religious or social ritual, all of which are bound up with the observance of the caste rules. There are some texts which deny to the outcast and his offspring the right of maintenance.[2] Such rights are now protected by the Act. The father does not forfeit his right to the guardianship of his children by his conversion to another faith (S. 76), though in the case of the mother and other relations that fact may influence the Court in appointing another guardian as more conducive to the minor's benefit. A person may continue to enjoy his right of adoption even on his conversion to Mahomedanism (§§ 254, 255), but whether the adopted son of a Hindu, upon his conversion to an alien faith, still retains his right as son in his adoptive father's family is one upon which the early text writers had opined against him.[3] But a different answer would have to be given now in view of the Act which preserves his "rights" in spite of his conversion and the withdrawal of spiritual benefit which his adoption was held to convey. In other words, on his adoption, an adopted son is as good as an aurus son and the conversion of one no more than of the other prejudices his rights.

Persons married under the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act[4] are, as regards their rights and liabilities, made subject to the provisions of this Act.[5]

(3) Rights Lost.

260. Apart from their enforcibility through the medium of court, this Act does not encroach upon the provisions of Hindu Law, which determines the rights of an apostate. Some of these rights, being welded with religious observances, would be necessarily lost on the renunciation of the religion of which they are only an attribute. Such would be the right of coparcenership,[6] the right to perform the obsequial rites, the right of worship or to act as a Shebait or representative of the founder of a religious endowment, to attend a Caste Panchayat or caste dinners and other ceremonial functions.

Hindu Law when Applicable to non-Hindus.

6. Subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, non-Hindus, whether Hindu converts or others, residing in a Hindu country, and adopting the custom of the Hindus, may become subject to such of the incidents of Hindu Law as are implied in the custom they have adopted.[7]

Illustrations.

(a) A family of aborigines lives as a Hindu family joint in mess and estate. It will be governed by the Hindu Law of coparcenership, and the legal presumption applicable to the position of a joint Hindu family will be applied to it.[8]

(b) A family of Hindu converts to Mahomedanism, domiciled in India, continue to live joint in mess and estate. It will be deemed to possess the incidents of a Hindu joint family.[9]

---

(1) Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871; Matangini v. Jaykali, 5 B.L.R. 466; Kerry Kolitaney v. Moneeram, 19 W.R. 367 O.A. Subbaraya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171 (177, 178).

(2) Vishnu, XV-§§ 35, 36; Deval and Baudhyayan, cited in Dayabhag, V-§§ 11, 12; May., IV-11-§ 10; Sm. Ch., V-§§ 2, 12; Manu, cited in Sm. Ch., V-1.

(3) 2 Mon.H.L. 200; Steele, 181.

(4) Act XXX of 1923.

(5) Ib., S. 23.

(6) See S. 120 (iii) post.

(7) Rup Chand v. Lalu, 3 C.L.R. 97 (99, 100).

(8) Ib.

(9) Suddentonnissa v. Najada, 3 C. 694.

(c) But in the last case, if the family were domiciled out of India, e.g., in Burmah,[1] or Mombasa,[2] the same presumption would not arise.

261. Analogous Law.—"Where persons who are non-Hindus reside in a Hindu country, and adopting the customs of the Hindus have lived as Hindu families do, joint in mess and estate, they will be governed by the Hindu Law of coparcenership and the legal presumption applicable to a joint Hindu family will be applied to them."[3] The combined effect of this section and the last is to recognize the right of non-Hindus, whether Hindu converts, or others, to follow by custom some of the incidents of Hindu Law. But this they can do only in India, where the vast majority of the population being Hindus, others, residing in their midst might conceivably be imbued by their surroundings.

262. Effect of Emigration.—The question to what extent a non-Hindu who has adopted Hindu Law as a part of his family or communal custom remains subject to that custom, upon his migration to another province outside India, or to another country, has been settled by the Privy Council who have held that since the territorial extent of Hindu Law is limited to Hindusthan, though a Mahomedan family governed by that law would be deemed to be still subject to that law upon its migration from one province to another within that country, still it cannot but cease to apply where the migration is to a non-Hindu country, e.g., Africa, which has a lex loci of its own.[4]

263. Even Hindus may upon their migration to a non-Hindu country become subject to such law, though in their case, the presumption would remain that they follow their personal law in spite of their migration to a foreign country. But where the lex loci of such country enacts a rule inconsistent with the personal law, the latter cannot prevail in preference to the lex loci of that country.[5] It was so held in a case of one Maung Ohn Ghine, whose paternal grandfather was a Hindu emigrant from Madras to Burmah, where he had married a Burmese woman. His son was, therefore, a Kalai who married a Kalai and had practically settled down in Burmah. Ghine was a resident of Rangoon and had evinced great interest in Buddhism and was as much a Buddhist as he was a Hindu. But the question was which one of the two he must be classed as for the purpose of succession. The Privy Council thought that the question depended upon the combined effect of migration, intermarriage, new occupation and identification with the new community and the extent of departure from the orthodox law. In the case of Kalais, it was found that they had become a distinct community domiciled in a non-Hindu country where they intermarried with the people, and had, therefore, become so far removed from the influence of Hinduism that they could not be classed as Hindus. "To the members of such a community," they observed, "the expression Hindu in the Indian Succession Act and the Burma Laws Act would not be applicable."[6]

---

(1) Ma Yait v. Maung Chit Maung, 66 I.C. 609 (612, 613) P.C.; contra in Raghubar Dayal v. Rani Dulare, 6 R. 367.

(2) Abdur Rahim v. Halimabai, 20 C. W.N. 362: 32 I.C. 412 P.C.

(3) Per Curiam in Rupchand v. Latu, 3 C.L.R. 97 (99, 100).

(4) Abdur Rahim v. Halimabai, 20 C. W.N. 362: 32 I.C. 413 P.C.

(5) Ib.

(6) Ma Yait v. Maung Chit Maung, 49 C. 310 (322) P.C.

CHAPTER II.

CUSTOMARY LAW.

Custom defined.

7. Custom is an established practice at variance with the general law.[1]

264. Analogous Law.—The definition in this section is taken from the undernoted case.[2] "Immemorial custoi is transcendent law", says Manu.[3] Custom as the source of Hindu Law is well recognized by the Shastric texts,[4] Indeed, the whole Hindu Law is itself founded on immemorial customs, and, therefore, it naturally assigns a high place to communal customs and usages. This is recognized by the courts. So the Privy Council in one case said, "Their Lordships are fully sensible of the importance and justice of giving effect to long established usages existing in particular districts and families in India, but it is of the essence of special usages, modifying the ordinary law of succession, that they should be ancient and invariable, and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence."[5]

265. In this and other cases the courts have used the two terms "custom" and "usage" as interchangeable; but they are clearly distinguishable on the grounds stated in section 13, and apparent from the following descriptions given of them by the same high tribunal.

Custom in Other Laws.

266. The rule that custom overrides the law is not merely a rule of Hindu Law, but is equally the rule in England and America and even in countries possessing the advantage of codified laws.

Distinction between custom and usage.

267. There is as much confusion in the indiscriminate use of the two terms "customs" and "usage" in England, as there is in this country.[6] Ordinarily, the term "usage" lacks three of the distinguishing features of custom properly so called:—

(i) It need not have existed from time immemorial;

(ii) It need not be local;

(iii) It cannot override the positive law. But on close examination, none of these tests would stand scrutiny; since the first two are not exclusive, and the last is equally applicable to custom.

---

(1) Hur Parshad v. Sheo Dayal, 26 W. R. 55 (70) P.C.

(2) Ib.

(3) Manu, Ch. I, Ss. 108-110. See also Ib., Ch. VII, S. 203; Ch. VIII, Ss. 41, 46.

(4) Yadnavalkya, II, Ss. 4, 5; (Mandlik's Trans., p. 198); Vrihaspati, 33 S. B. E., pp. 282, 287; Mitakshara Ch. 1, Ss. 1-25 1-ii 1, S. 2; Narad, Intro. S. 40; Gautam, Ch. XI, S. 20; (S. B. E. II, p. 237); Vasishth, S. 1-10 (S.B.E. XIV, p. 2); Baudhayan (S. B. E. XXX, pp. 147, 167); Saraswati Vilas (Foulkes Tr.), pp. 16, 99, 100; Virmitroday, Ch. II, p. II, S. 19. Sarkar's Tr. p. 127.

(5) Ramlakshmi v. Sivanatha, 14 M. I.A. 570 (585).

(6) 10 Halsbury's L.E., Tit Custom, S. 422, p. 221.

268. The real distinction is stated in the definition, and when the two terms are not interchangeably used, as they very often are, those appear to be the leading attributes of usage. This term is however frequently used to denote a local custom.[1] It is used in this sense in the Evidence Act.[2] It will, however, be used in this Code in the definite sense assigned to it in the section. In the ethnological development of law, usage usually precedes custom. Many customs have so developed; and sometimes, the custom of a particular community remains no more than a usage of another.

Nature of Custom.

8. (1) A custom varying the general law may be a general,[3] local,[4] tribal[5] or family custom.[6]

Explanation 1.—A general custom includes a custom common to any considerable class of persons.[7]

Explanation 2.—A custom which is applicable to a locality, tribe, sect or a family is called a special custom.

269. Analogous Law.—Custom has been defined as some established practice at variance with the general law.[8] Now, such practice may be universal or confined to a particular people, or locality, or again, it may even be confined to a particular family.

Universal Custom.

270. A universal custom is the common law of the people,[9] and is soon transformed into the statute law, for its universality is itself a guarantee of its popularity and it is popularly known as the common law of the people. Such may be said to be the custom of polygamy prevalent amongst the Hindus.

271. The existence of a general custom as distinct from law is, however, possible and is assumed in the Evidence Act[10] where it is thus described:—

"The expression general custom or right includes customs or rights common to any considerable class of persons."[11]

Local Custom.

272. A local custom is a custom confined to a particular locality. Such is, for instance, the custom of observing no caste in the matter of eating and drinking, in Jagannath, the custom of pre-emption, and such is the custom of polyandry which is confined to Malabar. A custom which, though once general, may latterly become confined only to one locality.[12] The Punjab is full of such local customs.

(1) The term "usage" is so used in S. 23, Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885); Sati Prasad (Raja) v. Manmatha, 6 I.C. 291.

(2) Cf. Act I of 1872, Ss. 48, 49.

(3) General Intr., Ss. 4-6.

(4) A local custom is called a Deshachar.

(5) Vasudevan v. Secretary of State, 11 Mad. 157; Padam v. Suraj, 28 A. 458.

(6) Which is then called Kulachar; Urjun Singh v. Ghunsiam, 5 M.I.A. 169; Gunesh v. Moheshur, 6 M. I. A. 164; Soorendra Nath v. Herramonee, 12 M.I.A. 81 (92); Chintamun v. Nowlukho, 1. C. 153 P.C.; Nanji v. Sundrabai, 11 B. H. C. R. 249 (269, 270).

(7) Cf. Act I of 1872, S. 48, Expl.

(8) S. 7, ante.

(9) Co. Litt. 110-b.

(10) Act I of 1872, S. 48.

(11) Ib., Expl.

(12) Padam Kumari v. Suraj Kumari, 28 A. 458 (461).

Tribal custom.

273. A tribal custom is a custom confined to a particular tribe, caste or community. Such was the custom proved in the case of an Agarwal Bania of Zira in the Ferozpur District, amongst whom an unequivocal declaration of adoption followed by subsequent treatment of the adoptee as a son was held to constitute a valid adoption.[1] So while adoption is not recognized by the Mahomedan Law, it is customary amongst the village community of Ramsar.[2] So amongst the Bajwa Jats of the Sialkot District a person adopted into another family does not thereby forfeit his right to succeed in his natural family as against collaterals.[3] So as regards marriage, intercaste marriages are customary in the Punjab.

Family custom.

274. A Kulachar, or family custom, is a custom the existence of which is confined to a single family. Such a custom may relate to impartibility[4] or inalienability[5] of its property or succession to it by a special mode of devolution, e.g., by primogeniture[6] or other special mode of descent.[7] The Privy Council have upheld such customs in several cases, but like all customs and even more than all customs, they must be strictly and sufficiently proved.[8] The fact that they are recorded in the Wajib-ul-arz is not a sufficient, since it often connotes merely the personal views of those who would like to see the practice prevailing, rather than the ascertained fact of a well established custom[9] as distinct from a mere arrangement for peace or convenience, made or acquiesced in by the family.[10] Custom proved to exist in a family may be presumed ta exist in every branch of it.[11] (§ 6.)

Custom cannot override express law.

9. (1) Custom has the effect of modifying the general personal law, but it does not override the statute law, unless it is expressly saved by it.[12]

(2) Such custom must be ancient, uniform, certain, peaceable, continuous and compulsory.

275. Analogous Law.—The reason which entitles the Hindu to preserve his personal law is the reason for allowing him to retain his customs which, by their very nature, are a part of his personal law. As such, both of them are subject to the commands of the Legislature.[13]

(1) Chiman Lal v. Hari Chand, 40 C. 879 P.C.

(2) Abdulla v. Sunda, 11 I.C. 670; Niamai v. Nira, (1911) P.W.R. 95 : 10 I.C. 338.

(3) Jiwan v. Dit, (1912) P.R. 49.

(4) Chintaman v. Nowlukho, I.C. 153 P.C.; Ramrao v. Yeshwant, 10 B. 327.

(5) Sivasubramania v. Krishnammal, 18 M. 287.

(6) Shidhojirao v. Nikojirao, 10 B. H.C.R. 228; Adrishappa v. Gurushiappa, 4 B. 491 P.C.; Gopalrao v. Trimbakrav, 10 B. 598; Nitrapal Singh v. Jaipal Singh, 9 A. 1 P.C.; Rup Singh v. Pirbhu, 20 A. 537.

(7) Beerchunder v. Neelkissen, 1 W. R. 177; Mahender v. Jokha Singh, 19 W. R. 211; Burjare v. Bha Gana, 10 C. 557 P.C.; Antamma v. Kaveri, 7 M. 575; Narayan v. Nana, 7 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 153; Bhau v. Sundarbai, 11 B.H.C.R. 249; Atmaram v. Bholagir, 1 C.P.L.R. 54.

(8) Suriya Rao v. Raja of Pithapur, 9 M. 499; Basava v. Lingangauda, 19 B. 428 (458); Garurudhwaj v. Suparandhwaj, 23 A. 37 P.C.; Chandika Baksh v. Mana Kunwar, 24 A. 273 (281) P.C.; Anant Singh v. Durga Singh, 32 A. 363 P.C.

(9) Anant Singh v. Durga Singh, 32 A. 363 (373) P.C. following Muhammad Imam Ali v. Hussain Khan, 26 C. 81 (92) P.C.; Parbati v. Chandrapal, 31 A. 457 P.C.

(10) Bhaw Nanji v. Sundarbai, 11 B. H.C.R. 249 where the law is discussed in detail per West, J.

(11) Lal Gajendra v. Lal Matharnath, 20 C.W.N. 876: 1 Pat.L.J. 109 : 35 I.C. 383.

(12) Mohanlal v. Amratlal, 3 B. 174 (177).

(13) Mohanlal v. Amratlal, 3 B. 174 (177)

So it has been held that custom cannot override the provisions of the Limitation Act,[1] and generally, no evidence of custom can be admitted in regard to matters upon which the legislative enactments have superseded the personal law. Again, as has been already pointed out, while custom has the effect of modifying the general personal law, it can do so only to the extent it is proved; over and beyond it the general law remains.[2]

Essentials of a Custom.

276. The various attributes of a custom are thus described. It must, it is said, be ancient, immemorial, uniform, unaltered, uninterrupted, invariable, constant and continuous, certain, definite and notorious, peaceable, consistent and compulsory. In a sense, a custom must possess all these elements—nay many more, it must not be unreasonable, illegal, immoral or opposed to public policy.

277. Of these a custom must certainly be ancient or immemorial. It must also be uniform, which implies that it must be unaltered, uninterrupted, invariable, constant and continuous all of which are merely attributes of its uniformity. So again, if it is certain, it must necessarily be definite and consistent. No custom can fail to be notorious and peaceable if it is ancient, uniform and certain, from which it follows that it must be necessarily compulsory, for if one is free to follow or disregard a custom according to his whim or convenience, it must necessarily cease to be uniform and certain. All these elements of custom are, therefore, reducible to the three main heads, viz., it must be ancient, uniform and certain, but it is well to know what these terms imply. For though they are verbal variations to convey the same idea, they enlarge its meaning and tend to emphasize the nature and extent of the uniformity and certainty which is of the essence of custom.

As for the provision that custom must not be unreasonable, illegal and immoral or opposed to public policy—it rather affects its validity but is not of the essence of its constituent elements. They have, therefore, been made the subject of a separate section.

278. Clause (2) sets out the necessary elements of a valid custom. A custom possessing these elements is prima facie valid though it may be unenforceable owing to reasons set out in the next section. Assuming, however, that the custom is not open to that objection, it must still possess all that this section requires. These requirements may be now considered seriatim.

(1) It must be Ancient.

279. Elements of a valid Custom.—The first essential of a valid custom is that it shall be ancient. This is necessary, otherwise any person could defy the general law by setting up a special custom of his own.[3] The custom must, in theory, at least, be of an origin as ancient as the law itself to which it constitutes an exception. The courts will, from uniform modern usage, presume an indefinitely ancient usage of the like kind, in the absence of circumstances leading to a contrary inference.[4]

(1) Mohanlal v. Amratlal, 3 B. 174 (177); Tuni Orain v. Leda Orain, 1 Pat.L.J. 225 : 20 C.W.N. 1082: 36 I.C. 206.

(2) Neel Kisto v. Beerchunder, 12 M. I. A. 523 (542); Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, 10 A. 272 (285) P.C.

(3) Basantrav v. Mantappa, 1 B.H.C. R. Appx. 42 (47); Rowther v. Rowther, 30 M.L.T. 85 P.C.

(4) Basant Singh v. Brij Raj Saran, 57 A. 494 (508) P.C. Antiquity presumed from proof of custom of impartibility

280. The rule that a custom must be ancient is equally the rule of English Law, but with this difference, that while under English Law that word has an artificial meaning as dating back from 1189 A.D., i.e., the commencement of the reign of Richard I, which is regarded as the measure of legal memory,[1] there is no such fixed date to determine its antiquity in this country[2] Even in England, though the rule remains, it is in effect circumvented by a legal presumption created in its favour by a mere proof of the existence of custom as far back as living memory can go,[3] which is all that is equally necessary in this country to establish its antiquity.[4] All that the law requires is that the custom must have been in existence for a time immemorial, that is to say, for a time as far back as one can remember, which again, in England, has been held to be as short as 20 years[5]—a period which the Privy Council regard as sufficient even for this country upon which the Jury would, and indeed, should presume its immemorial existence,[6] provided there is no evidence to the contrary. Such would be the case where the family is one of comparatively modern origin or where the practice can be traced to a recent agreement.[7] In other words, the existence of a custom for twenty years or more creates only a presumption in favour of its antiquity,[8] which may be rebutted by tracing it to its recent origin.[9]

(2) It must be Uniform, and (5) continuous.

281. From the fact that the custom is ancient, it follows that it must be uniform (and not variable), definite and continuous, for these are the elements to establish its immemorial user.[10] If there is a discontinuance, such discontinuance destroys its stability, it being immaterial whether the discontinuance was accidental or intentional.[11] for 30 years. Per West, J., in Bhau Nanaji v. Sundra Bai, 11 B.H.C.R. 249 (271).

---

(1) Chapman v. Smith, 1 (1754) 2 Ves. S. 505; as to how this date became fixed, see Dalton v. Angus, 6 A.C. 740 (810, 811).

(2) Kuar Sen v. Mamman, 17 A. 87; Mohidin v. Shiv Lingappa, 23 B. 666 (669, 670); Gopal v. Maheshri, 2 A.L. J. 795.

(3) Per Cockburn, C.J., in Angus v. Dalton, 3 Q.B.D. 85 (104); Trura Corporation v. Rowe, (1901) 2 K.B. 870 (877); Bastard v. Smith, 2 Moo. & R. 129.

(4) Ramasami v. Sundaralingasami, 17 M. 422 (443); Doed. Juggomohun v. Nemoo Dossee, (1831) Clarke's R. 101 (113, 114) : 1 I.D. (O.S.) 358 (364).

(5) Maharaja Mahtab v. Government, 4 M.I.A. 466 (499); R. v. Joliffe, 2 B. & C. 54; Brocklebank v. Thompson, (1903) 2 Ch. 344 (350). The period of 20 years is in England fixed by the Statute known as Lord Tenterden's Act as a rule of prescription which inspired a similar period in S. 15 of the Easements Act.—Per Garth, C.J., in Parmeshri v. Mhd. Syed, 6 C. 608 (615).

(6) Dheeraj v. Government of Bengal, 4 M.I.A. 466 (499); Bhau Nanaji v. Sundarbai, 11 B.H.C.R. 249 (271); Trenibak Das v. Nagindas, 27 N. 75. Contra in Deod. Juggomohun v. Nemoo Dossee, (1831) Clarke's R. 101 (113, 114) : 1 I.D. (O.S.) 358 (364) is no longer law; but see Martand Rao v. Malhar Rao, 55 C. 403 (413), (sixty years not sufficient to establish an ancient custom), Martand Rao v. Malhar Rao, 47 C.L.J. 150 P.C.: (1928) P.C. 10.

(7) Umrithnath v. Goureenath, 13 M. I.A. 542 (549, 550); Bhau Nanoji v. Sundar Bai, 11 B.H.C.R. 249; Durga Charan v. Raghunath, 18 C.L.J. 559 (561); Rajalakshmi v. Suryanarayana, 3 M.L.J. 100 (106).

(8) Gopal v. Hanmant, 6 B. 107 (109); Vythilinga v. Vijayathammal, 6 M. 43 (48); Mills v. Colchester Corporation, L.R. 2 C.P. 476; Mercer v. Denne, (1904) 2 Ch. 534 (555).

(9) Mahamaya v. Haridas, 42 C. 455; Mills v. Colchester Corporation, L. R. 2 C. P. 476; Lockwood v. Wood, 6 Q.B. 50 (68), 10 Hals. L.E. § 425, p. 223.

(10) Saperandhwaj v. Garuradhwaj, 15 A. 147 (167); Basava v. Lingangauda, 19 B. 428 (483).

(11) Rajkishen (Raja) v. Ramjog, 1 C. 186 (195, 196) P.C.

In its effect it amounts to an abandonment of the custom.[1] When it is said that the custom must be uniform, what is implied is that, within its circle of authority, it must have been given effect to as often as there was occasion to have recourse to it. If it was followed only on occasions of convenience and ignored on other occasions, then it ceases to be both a continuous and uniform custom such as the courts will give effect to. A custom is not either uniform or continuous if its authority was challenged each time that the occasion arose for its enforcement; and it does not become uniform if, as the result of compromise, a right was conceded.[2]

282. This essential element of a valid custom is variously expressed. It is said that the custom should have continued as an invariable, unaltered, uninterrupted and a continuous custom.[3] All these adjectives are sometimes used to emphasise the same fact that the identity of the custom should not suffer in its passage through time. Take an example: The history of the law of primogeniture shows how the right owes its origin to the establishment of feudalism. Now, in the development of that custom the stages were (i) the grant was a personal grant which lapsed with the grantee, (ii) it was extended to and shared by the grantee's sons, (iii) and then it descended only to his eldest son. If in this process the order were ever reversed and the grant were at times heritable by all the sons, and then, say, in times of rebellion by only the eldest son, the custom which impresses upon the tenure is the incident of peculiar succession which, though ancient, would not be uniform or invariable. So it is usual, both in England and in this country, to close all private thoroughfares once a year to prevent the public from acquiring a customary right of way. But a single discontinuance is not necessarily fatal to the establishment of custom.[4] The right of procession is a common law right, but the right to carry it along a certain route or past a certain mosque or temple is a customary right, and its existence depends upon its uninterrupted continuance, and its validity is frequently put to the test by interrupting its enjoyment.

283. A caste custom was pleaded for the Kadwa Kunbis of Ahmedabad denying the right of widows to adopt. It appeared that, on two occasions, widows had adopted without any protest from the caste people, and generally, the custom was in a state of flux, there being no evidence that the caste people forbade such adoptions or treated them as invalid, whereupon the court refused to uphold the custom holding that a uniform and persistent usage had not moulded the life of the caste.[5]

284. A custom is not uniform if it is intermittent and not continuous. But law distinguishes the interruption of a right[6] from the interruption of its enjoyment.[7] If there is an interruption of the right, no matter for how short a period the right is extinguished, and if the right is revived it may become the starting point of a new custom, but it ceases to be the continuance of the old custom, and if the new right arose within the time of legal memory so that its commencement is known, it ceases to be

(1) Rajkishen (Raja) Ramjog, 1 C. 186 P.C.
(2) Ramakanta v. Shamanand, 36 C. 590 (603) P.C.
(3) Jamelah v. Paqul Ram, 1 W.R. 251; Ramalakshmi v. Sivanatha, 14 M. I. A. 570.
(4) Sarabjit v. Indarjit, 27 A. 203.
(5) Patel Vandravan v. Patel Manilal, 16 B. 470.
(6) Mercer v. Denne, (1905) 2 Ch. 538.
(7) Scales v. Key, 11 Ad. & E. 819 (825).

an ancient custom. From the fact that custom must be uniform it follows that it must be consistent. Two contradictory customs cannot exist in the same place with reference to the same people. But the customs of the various tribes, castes and sects may otherwise be, in fact they sometimes are, divergent and often contradictory.

(3) It must be Certain.

285. The third ingredient of a custom is that it shall be certain, a term which is varied in its expression by the statement that it shall be definite and constant. When it is said that a custom must be certain, what is meant is that it should be certain (i) in respect of its nature; (ii) in respect of its locality; and (iii) in respect of the persons whom it is alleged to affect.[1] In one sense a custom proved to be ancient must be necessarily certain, for, as Willes, C.J., observed in a case: "how can anything be said to have been time out of mind when it is not certain what it is."[2]

(i) Must be certain as to its nature.

286. In the first place, the right asserted as a customary right, must be clearly defined and definitely certain. For if the right is uncertain the custom itself cannot be proved. So where a person claims the customary right to fell timber or quarry stones, earth or other minerals from the land of another, the nature of the right claimed must be first defined. Every tenant has the right to graze his agricultural cattle on the village common. If, therefore, he establishes a cattle breding farm, or maintains milch cows or buffaloes, he has no right to turn them on to the common for the purpose of grazing. So again, the right to quarry stones means a right limited to personal use, and does not imply a right to remove them in unreasonable quantities for the purpose of sale.[3] So a right to stack coals near to certain pits was held to be too indefinite to support a customary right.[4] On the same ground, the court disallowed a custom to play "any rural sport" as too general and uncertain.[5] So in a case where the plaintiff claimed by the ordinary Hindu Law property against the defendant, who claimed by the rule of primogeniture, the Privy Council found that whenever the holder of the estate died leaving more than one son, the right of the eldest son was challenged in the courts, and the litigation invariably ended in a compromise under which the younger sons obtained a share of the estate very much in excess of the maintenance, to which, had the custom existed, they would have been entitled. In their Lordships' opinion, this rendered the custom uncertain and consequently invalid.[6] It is, however, submitted that the case was rather one where the custom was not peaceably enjoyed.

(ii) Certain as the Locality.

287. Secondly, the custom must be certain as regards the locality where it is alleged to exist, for a custom which is universal in extent is no custom at all, for it then becomes the common law.[7] Its local

(1) Per Tindal, C.J., in Tyson v. Smith, 9 Ad. & El. 406 (421); Mercer v. Denne, (1904) 2 Ch. 534 (551), C. A. (1905) 2 Ch. 538.

(2) Broadbent v. Wilks, (1742) Wiles 360; Rowther v. Rowther, 30 M. L. T. 85 P.C.

(3) Blewett v. Tregonning, (1835) 3 Ad. & El. 554 (574).

(4) Broadbent v. Wilks, (1742) 360 (363), but see Carly v. Lovering, (1857) 1 H. & N. 784 (800).

(5) Millechamp v. Johnson, (1746) Willes 205 N.

(6) Ramakanta v. Shamanand, 36 C. 590 (603) P.C. reversing, Shijamanand v. Ramakanta, 32 C. 6.

(7) Co. Litt. 110*b*.

extent must then be defined with reference to the geographical division of land, such as a province, district, town, tahsil or village, zemindari family or the like. The area affected by the custom may, however, consist of any defined space, and its boundaries may vary from time to time, provided the area is sufficiently and clearly defined at any particular moment.[1] Where a custom is proved to exist in a district it will be deemed to exist in a village comprised in the district, but not vice versa.

(iii) Certain as to the People.

288. Thirdly, the custom must be certain in respect of the person or classes of persons to whom it is made applicable. A custom which binds an uncertain or undefined class of men or the public at large is neither certain nor enforceable, and it, therefore, ceases to count as a custom. So where a custom was alleged that the "poor householders" of a town had the right to free wood from a close, the court refused to enforce it on the ground that the term "poor householders" was too vague and uncertain.[2] But in another case, the Court upheld the right of the inhabitants of a parish to enter upon the land of another at any time in the year, to erect a maypole thereon and dance round and about it on the ground of preponderance of authorities.[3] A class is certain though its number may fluctuate; e.g., travellers, worshippers and the like. So again, it is no blot on the validity of a custom if the class of persons to whom it applies is definite, though no such class exists for the time being.[4]

(4) It must be Peaceable.

289. Another requirement of a valid custom is that its continuance must be uninterruptedly peaceable. In fact, the binding force of custom lies in the fact that for a time out of memory all affected by it have unquestionably accepted it as a binding custom. Where, therefore, on a question of primogeniture it was found that upon each succession the right was challenged and only compromised upon terms the enjoyment was not peaceable.[5]

(6) It must be Compulsory.

287. So, again, its enjoyment must be "as of right, and therefore, neither by violence nor by stealth, nor by leave asked from time to time."[6] It is not necessary that the enjoyment should be free, for a reasonable customary fee may be claimed by grant, or by prescription; but what is necessary is that the enjoyment should be because of the right and not because of the fee, which is merely incidental to the custom and need not have been fixed before legal memory.[7] Where, however, enjoyment of a right is dependent upon the payment of a fee, the court has to find whether the payment is the price of the enjoyment or is merely paid as a customary fee. If it is the former, then there can be no custom, since the enjoyment was precarious and not as of right, and the several acts of enjoyment were consequently not an uninterrupted

(1) 10 Hals. L.E., Tit. "Custom and Usage," § 434, p. 230.

(2) Selby v. Robinson, 2 Term. R. 758.

(3) Abbot v. Weekly, (1665) 1 Lev. 176: 83 E. R. 357; Fitch v. Rawling, 2 H.B.L. 393; Hall v. Nottingham, 1 Ex. D. 1 (3); contra in Bell v. Wardell, Willes 202.

(4) 10 Hals. L.E. § 436, p. 231; but the cases cited do not support the text.

(5) Ramakanta v. Shamanand, 36 C. 590 (603) P.C.

(6) Per Willes, J., in Mills v. Mayor of Colchester, L.R. 2 C.P. 479 (486).

(7) Ib., pp. 484, 485; Tyson v. Smith, 9 Ad. and E. 406.

exercise of the same right but were in the nature of independent acts lacking in continuity which is of the essence of custom.[1]

291. An act which a person may have done but which he is at liberty to stop does not support custom. So where a custom was alleged restraining widows of a certain caste from adopting, but the evidence showed that there was no caste decision to that effect, and that widows had adopted on two occasions without incurring any caste penalty, the court threw out the suit refusing to uphold the custom, holding that a uniform and persistent usage had not moulded the life of the caste.[2]

10. No custom is valid if it is illegal, immoral, unreasonable or opposed to public policy.[3]

Invalid Custom.

292. Analogous Law.—The Legislature has elsewhere recognised the general principle underlying this rule.[4] A custom is not illegal merely because it contravenes the express tests or the general principles of Hindu Law, since all Hindu Law is declaredly subject to custom (§ 157). For the same reason custom does not necessarily become illegal because of the existence of a statute on the subject, unless the latter contains provisions which make the continuance of the custom necessarily illegal. Of course, the court cannot enforce an immoral custom any more than it will enforce an immoral contract inasmuch as both are destructive of society.

293. The provisions that the custom must not be unreasonable or opposed to public policy also control an English custom.[5] The reasonableness of a custom is a question of fact dependent upon its nature and the society to which it is made to apply. So Tindal, C. J., in one case observed: "Several customs which have been adjudged void in our books as unreasonable against common right, or purely against law, if their nature and liability be considered, will be found injurious to the multitude and prejudicial to the commonwealth, and to have their commencement (for the most part) by oppression and extortion of lords and great men."[6]

294. It has been held that public policy has little force now in invalidating contracts, the question of public policy being regarded as one for the legislature rather than for the courts. But the question of custom stands on a different footing. It makes law and public policy control all laws.

295. Principle.—The invalidating ingredients set out in this section are sometimes treated as part of the elements constituting custom. But they affect its operation rather than its formation and have, consequently, been relegated to a section of its own.

296. Invalid Customs.—A custom may answer all the tests mentioned in the last section; and yet it may be invalid because it is obnoxious to the provisions of this section, the operation of which may now be considered.

---

(1) Elwood v. Bulluk, (1844) 6 Q.B. 383.

(2) Patel Vandravan v. Patel Manilal, 16 B. 470 (476).

(3) S. 23, Contract Act (IX of 1872).

(4) Ib.

(5) Co. Lit. 62-a.

(6) Tyson v. Smith, 9 Ad. & El. 406 (422).

(1) Illegal Custom.

297. It is a well established principle that though a custom has the effect of overriding law which is purely personal, it cannot prevail against a statutory law, unless it is thereby saved expressly or by necessary implication.[1]

298. So law has swept away many customs, e.g., the practice of Sati[2] infanticide,[3] slavery,[4] begar or forced labour,[5] human sacrifice;[6] while it has attempted to strengthen the law against the dedication of minors as dancing girls to a pagoda, it being notorious that these girls are consigned to lifelong prostitution.[7] On a similar ground the court refused to recognize the adoption of a girl by a woman of the prostitute class as legal.[8]

299. A customary cess levied on all purchases and export of cotton was held to have become illegal by reason of an Act which abolished "cesses on trades and professions of every kind" under whatever name levied.[9] So the custom that a tenancy lapsed on submersion of the land and on the tenants' failure to pay rent and that, on its reappearance, the landlord became entitled to possession was held to be of no avail against the express provisions of the N.W.P. Rent Act.[10] So no custom can override the provisions of the Limitation Act.[11]

(2) Immoral Custom.

300. A custom like a contract is void for immorality. The question what customs are "immoral" must be left to the conscience of the court. Morality is a necessary social convention as to which all agree up to a certain extent; but beyond it, it is a matter of opinion. This is specially so as regards the relation of the sexes. A European would regard both polygamy and polyandry as highly immoral, but both these institutions are deep-rooted in the soil and though polyandry is now fast dying out, polygamy is a popular oriental custom not solely confined to the Hindus. But in judging of the validity of such customs, the court adapts itself as far as possible, to the standard of morality of the sect, tribe or caste to which the custom is sought to apply, remembering always that it has not only to pay due regard to the sentiments of the community but also to the general welfare of society. Such is the custom of remarriage of a married woman without the permission of her husband on payment of a fine to the castes,[12] or the custom of selling daughters,[13] or of the succession of an illegitimate son by an adulterous,[14] or incestuous

(1) The Magistrates of Dunber v. The Duchess of Roxburghe, 3 Cl. & Fin. 335: 6 E.R. 1462; Noble v. Durell, 3 T. R. 271: 100 E.R. 569.

(2) S. 306, Indian Penal Code.

(3) Ib., S. 304-A.

(4) Ib., Ss. 367, 370, 371.

(5) Ib., S. 374.

(6) Ib., S. 302.

(7) Ib., Ss. 372, 373; Sanjivi v. Jalajakshi, 21 M. 229; but see Tara Naikin v. Nana Lakshman, 14 B. 90 (92, 93).

(8) Guddati v. Ganpati, (1912) 23 M. L. J. 493 (494); Public Prosecutor v. Kannammal, (1913) 13 M.L.T. 131 (134 137, 139), contra in Venku v. Mahalinga, 11 M. 393.

(9) Kalyanraiji v. Mofussil Co., Ltd., 15 B. 526 (531) P.C.

(10) Act XII of 1881, Ss. 18, 31, 34 (b), 95 (n); Kupil Rai v. Radha Prasad, 5 A. 260; as to Punjab, Puran v. Beja, (1870) P.R. 73.

(11) Mohan Lal v. Amrat Lal, 3 B. 174.

(12) R. v. Karson, 2 B.H.C.R. 117; Uji v. Hathi, 7 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 133; Narayan v. Laving, 2 B. 140; Indar v. Jewa, (1890) P.R. 49. But such marriage contracted after consent and divorce would be good; Sankaralingam v. Subhan, 17 M. 479; Vancatachella v. Parvatham, 8 M. H. C. R. 134; Dalip v. Ganpat, 8 A. 387.

(13) Kalavagunta v. Kalavagunta, 32 M. 185.

(14) Rahi v. Gobinda, 1 B. 97.

intercourse,[1] or of an association of women to enjoy a monopoly of the gains of prostitution.[2] The plaintiffs who were Dev Dasis attached to a temple sued the manager restraining him from admitting two other Dev Dasis into the temple without their consent. In short, they claimed a monopoly of the right which the court refused to grant them on the ground that it was immoral.[3]

A custom which attributes to mere co-habitation all the legal effects of a marriage is invalid as it tends to confound concubinage with marriage.[4]

Not Immoral.

301. But a custom in favour of remarriage upon desertion,[5] or divorce by mutual agreement, is neither immoral nor opposed to public policy.[6] So the exchange of children in marriage is neither immoral nor opposed to public policy.[7]

(3) Unreasonable.

302. A custom may not be illegal or immoral; but it may, nevertheless, be invalid on the ground of its unreasonableness. A custom which any honest or right-minded man would deem to be unrighteous is bad as unreasonable.[8] One ground for holding a custom unreasonable is that it is injurious to the multitude and prejudicial to the commonwealth.[9] A custom for the inhabitants of several adjoining or contiguous parishes to exercise the right of recreation over land situate in one of such parishes is bad as placing an unreasonable burden upon one parish.[10] On the same principle, the court refused to give effect to a custom by virtue of which all the inhabitants of a zemindari were alleged to have a prescriptive right to fish in certain jhils of the plaintiffs.[11] So the agent cannot be heard to justify his departure from the instructions received by him from his principal on the ground of custom. Such was held to be the case of the principal who ordered his agent in Mauritius to ship to him a cargo of 500 tons of sugar. Instead of shipping it in a single vessel, he shipped 400 tons in different vessels when the principal cancelled the order due to a falling market. He, however, justified it on the ground that his instructions had been contravened. The shipper appealed to custom but the court held that it could not override the express instructions of the principal.[12] A custom upheld by the courts cannot be attacked on the ground of its unreasonableness.[13]

---

(1) Datti v. Datti, 4 M.H.C.R. 204; Soundararajan v. Arunachalam, 39 M. 136.

(2) Chinna v. Tegarai, 1 Mad. 168.

(3) Pirthi Singh v. Bhola, (1883) P. R. 29; Hakim v. Jagat Singh, (1898) P. R. 87; Dina v. Karamchand, (1899) P. R. 52; Lalchand v. Mt. Thakur Devi, (1903) P.R. 49; but see Chanda Singh v. Mela, (1897) P.R. 73.

(4) Chinna v. Tegari, 1 M. 168 (170 171).

(5) Virasangappa v. Rudrappa, 8 M. 440.

(6) Sankaralingam v. Subhan, 17 M. 479; Sinammal v. Administrator-General, 8 M. 169.

(7) Amirchand v. Ram, (1903) P.R. 50.

(8) Paxton v. Courtenay, 2 F. & F. 131.

(9) Tanistry Case, (1608) Davis 29 (33); Mahamaya v. Haridas, 42 C. 455 (475).

(10) Edwards v. Jenkins, (1896) 1 Ch. 308.

(11) Luhchmeeput Singh v. Sadaulla, 9 C. 698 (704), following Lord Rivers v. Adams, L.R. 3 Ex. D. 361, distgd. Parbutty v. Mudho, 3 C. 276, on the ground that the persons there were ascertained.

(12) Ireland v. Livingstone, L. R. 5 Q. B. 516; Arlapa v. Narsi, 8 B.H.C. R. (A. C.) 19.

(13) 10 Hals. L.E. § 429, p. 228; S. 42, Ev. A.; Shimbu v. Gayachand, 16 A. 379.

303. A custom, otherwise good, may be void on the ground of public policy.[1] Such is the custom recognizing the right of a person who had murdered,[2] or abetted the murder of his ancestor to succeed to his estate.[3] So it is against public policy to permit trafficking in public or religious offices,[4] and a custom which permitted it, would be obnoxious to this rule.[5] But this does not mean that a religious office may not be transferred to a qualified person standing in the line of succession.[6] A custom is arbitrary and, therefore, unreasonable which sanctions expulsion of a man from caste without hearing him. The maxim audi alteram partem[7] is a rule of elementary justice and applies as much to custom as it does to judicial procedure. Since law favours marriages as necessary to perpetuate the human species, any custom tending to restrain it is invalid as one opposed to public policy. Such was held to be the custom which sanctioned the levy of a marriage cess on the remarriage of widows.[8] But there can be no objection to a customary offering to a temple on marriages performed in a particular locality, or a customary fee to which the village Joshi is entitled on all marriages within his jurisdiction, whether his services are requisitioned or not;[9] the distinction between the two being that the one is a tax while the other is a customary offering for the maintenance of the temple from which all worshippers derive benefit.[10]

(4) Opposed to Public Policy.

11. Pleading and proof of Custom. (1) He who relies upon custom varying the general law, must plead and prove it.[11]

(2) Custom must be established by clear and unambiguous evidence[12]

304. Analogous Law.—The first clause of this section is abundantly supported by authority, and so is the second clause, while the section as a whole is supported by the authority of the Privy Council.[13] Custom,

(1) As to the very narrow application of this rule, see the Author's 1 Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.), p. 196 §§ 285-288.

(2) Shah Khanam v. Kaladhar, (1900) P.R. 74; Muhammed Khan v. Sis Bano, (1906) P.R. 41.

(3) Vedanayaga v. Vedammal, 27 M. 591; but the disqualification is personal; Gangu v. Chandrabhagabai, 32 B. 275.

(4) Rajah Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah, 1 M. 235 P.C.; Kuppa Gurukal v. Dorasami, 6 M. 76; Narayana v. Ranga, 15 M. 183; Mahamaya v. Haridas, 42 C. 455, and cases cited at pp. 470, 471.

(5) Mahamaya v. Haridas, 42 C. 455.

(6) Sitaram Bhat v. Sitaram, 6 B.H.C.R. 250; Mancharam v. Pranshunk, 6 B. 298; Annasami v. Ramkrishna, 24 M. 219; Nirad v. Shibdas, 36 C. 975; Mahamaya v. Haridas, 42 C. 455 (471).

(7) Hear the other party.

(8) Lala v. Hirasingh, 2 A. 49; Madan v. Erlandi, 5 M. H. C. R. 147; Ganela v. Khwaja Mohommad, (1880) P.R. 64.

(9) Vithal v. Aman, 11 B. H. C. R. 6; Dina Nath v. Sadashiv, 3 B. 9; Raja v. Krishnabhat, ib., 232; Waman v. Balaji, 14 B. 167 (169).

(10) Madan v. Erlandi, 5 M.H.C.R. 147.

(11) S. 103, Ev. Act; Girdharee Singh v. Koolahul, 6 W. R. 1 P.C.; Mahendra (Raja) v. Jokha Singh, 19 W. R. 211; Thankur Titnath v. Loknath, 19 W.R. 239; Natukhar v. Chowdhary Chintamun, 20 W.R. 247; Hirbai v. Gor Bai 2 B.H.C.R. 294; Rahimat Bai v. Hir Bai, 3 B. 34; Gopal v. Hanuman, 3 B. 273; Adrishappa v. Guru Shidappa, 4 B. 494; Gossain Rambharti v. Surajbharti 5 B. 682; Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy, 13 B. 534; Bai Baijee v. Bai Santok, 20 B. 53; Abdul Hussain v. Habibullah, (1906) P. R. 18; Garuradwaja v. Superundwaja, 23 A. 37 P.C.

(12) Shidhojirav v. Naikoji, 10 B.H.C. R. 228; Rama Lakshmi v. Sivanatha, 14 M. I. A. 570 (585, 586); Desai Ranchhodass v. Rawal Nathu Bhai, 21 B. 110 (116, 117).

(13) Rai Manickchand v. Madho Ram, 13 M.I.A. 1; Rama Lakshmi v. Sivanatha, 14 M.I.A. 570 (585, 586).

being a departure from the ordinary law, must be both pleaded and proved, and proved by evidence which must be both clear and unambiguous.

305. Plea of Custom.—It is incumbent upon a party relying upon a custom to plead it as a part of his case. This does not mean that he should set out the evidence upon which he rests his plea. But his plea must be sufficiently specific to give his adversary notice of the custom he was relying on.[1] A party is at liberty to plead custom and the general law in the alternative.[2] But the parties are not at liberty to depart from their pleadings nor is the court at liberty to rest its decision upon facts never pleaded[3] or upon facts only partially pleaded. So where the plaintiff launched his case with the plea that custom excluded both widows and daughters from succession, he was not allowed to hold fast to the custom which proved that daughters only were excluded.[4]

306. Proof of Custom.—The standard of proof required to establish custom is higher than what is required to determine an ordinary issue. Custom should not be decided upon a mere balance of probabilities, for, in the language of the Privy Council, it must be supported by "clear and unambiguous" evidence to entitle the court to hold that, in a particular family, community or locality, the customary rule had obtained the force of law in partial modification or complete supersession of the ordinary law.[5] No evidence is clear and unambiguous which does not mean evidence approximating to a certainty that the custom exists and not merely pointing to a probability of its existence. As Farwell, J., observed: "Not only ought the court to be slow to draw an inference of fact which would defeat a right that has been exercised during so long a period, as the present, unless such inference is irresistible, but it ought to presume everything possible to presume in favour of such a right."[6] The proof must extend to all the points which constitute its necessary ingredients. Of these the most important are that it is (a) ancient, (b) uniform, (c) certain, (d) continuous, and (e) compulsory.

307. A custom will be presumed to be ancient if it is proved to have existed for a time immemorial, that is to say for at least 20 years and that its origin is unknown (§ 280). This only raises a presumption in favour of its antiquity which may be rebutted. A custom shown to have had an origin within living memory, even though existing in fact, is void at law, because it lacks its prime attribute.[7] The uniformity of custom should be proved by numerous instances in which it has been invariably followed; a few instances only will not suffice to establish the custom.

---

(1) Serumah v. Palathan, 15 W. R. 47 P.C.; Basava v. Lingangauda, 19 B. 428.

(2) Muhammad v. Shamsunnissa, 36 A. 456 (458); distgd. Muhammed Salim v. Sadaruddin, 7 A.L.J. 660; Daya Ram v. Sohei Singh, (1906) P.R. 110; Nihala v. Bhuti, 23 I.C. (P.) 418.

(3) Eshenchunder v. Samachurn, 11 M.I.A. 7 (22-25).

(4) Leathes v. Newitt, 4 Price at p. 370, cited in Desai Ranchhoddas v. Rawal Nathubhai, 21 B. 110 (115).

(5) Ramalakshmi v. Siva Nath, 14 M.I.A. 570 (585); Harpershad v. Sheo Dayal, 26 W.R. 55 P.C.; Rupchand v. Jambu, 22 A. 370 P.C.; Daya Ram v. Sohal Singh, (1906) P.R. 110; Abdul v. Sona, 45 C. 450 P.C.; Rajani v. Nitaichandra, 25 C.W.N. 433 (465, 466) F. B.; Sitaram v. Lachman, 8 N.L.R. 128: 17 I.C. 133.

(6) Mercer v. Denne, (1904) 2 Ch. 534, 556.

(7) Bl. Comm. 76; London Corporation v. Cox, L.R. 2 H.L. 239 (259).

308. These instances must relate to its conscious application.[1] A few instances only will not suffice.[2] But this rule should not be construed too strictly; for the custom may be a local one; it may be confined to a family where numerous instances may, from the very nature of the case, be impossible, or may be difficult to get. Oral evidence as to the existence of custom should be tested by ascertaining the grounds of the witness's opinion,[3] the extent or limits of his knowledge, and how far he is deposing to facts, and how far he is merely voicing his opinion, which apart from facts, is of little value.[4] When a custom is proved as generally applicable to the parties, it is open to proof that certain individual members were exempt from its operation on personal grounds.[5] It has already been pointed out that a custom of origin follows a person upon migration to his new domicile.[6] But where one relies upon the local custom of his domicile, he has to prove that he had adopted it (§ 242). The question of custom is a mixed question of fact and law, depending as it does, upon the relevancy of evidence and the inference legally deducible therefrom.[7]

309. Proof of uniformity implies proof of the invariable application of custom whenever there was occasion for it. Uniformity implies continuity which does not, however, mean that there should be no interruption at all, provided that the interruption be in possession and not in the right,[8] or that it be only temporary[9] by constant or for the sake of temporary convenience,[10] or from necessity, as where the subject of the right is submerged for a time and is, therefore, incapable of enjoyment.[11] Then again, continued custom would be deemed uniform, if it is traced to a recent date. It is not necessary that it should be proved up to date. As Lord Denman, C.J., said: "The finding of the Jury that the custom had existed till 1689, was the same in effect as if they had found that it had existed till last week, unless something appeared to show that it had been legally abolished."[12]

310. The quantum of evidence acceptable to the court depends upon the custom pleaded. Very slender evidence will suffice to establish a

---

(1) Lachman Rai v. Akhar Khan, 1 A. 440; Sarabjit v. Inderjit, 27 A. 203; Gopal v. Hanmant, 3 B. 273; Durgacharan v. Regunath, 18 C.L.J. 559 (562).

(2) Pancha v. Bindeswari, 37 I. C. (Pat.) 960. Three instances insufficient. Bhagvandas v. Rajmal, 10 B.H.C.R. 241 (261); Desai Ranchhoddass v. Rawal Nathubhai, 21 B. 110 (116, 117).

(3) Lachman Rai v. Akhar Khan, 1 A. 440. See, for an example of analysis of such evidence, Basava v. Linganguda, 19 B. 428.

(4) Rahimabhai v. Hirbai, 3 B. 34, followed in Parbati v. Chandarpal, 31 A. 457 P.C.

(5) Gitabai v. Shivbakas, 5 Bom. L. R. 318.

(6) See S. 3, Comm. Surender Nath v. Hiraman, 12 M.I.A. 81; Prithee Singh v. Sheo Sunduree, 8 W.R. 261; Parbati v. Jagadis, 4 Bom.L.R. 365.

(7) S. 584 (b), C.P.C. 1882; S. 100 (b), C. P. C. 1908; Palaniappa v. Daivasikhamony, 40 M. 709 P.C.; Kumarappa v. Manavala, 41 M. 374 F.B., overruling Kakarla v. Venkata, 29 M. 24; Hashim Ali v. Abdul Rahman, 28 A. 698: Ram Bilas v. Lal Bahadur, 30 A. 311 F.B.; Giraj Singh v. Hargobind, 32 A. 125; Ram Harakh v. Ishar Dat, 3 I. C. (A.) 558; contra in Hureehur v. Judoonath, 10 W.R. 153; Syud Ali v. Gopal Dass, 13 W.R. 420; Burjara v. Bha Gana, 10 C. 557 P.C., is no longer the law.

(8) 1 Bl. Comm. 77.

(9) Co: Lit. 114-b: 1 Bl. Comm. 77: "An interruption of the possession for ten or twenty years will not destroy the custom; it only becomes more difficult to prove."

(10) 10 Hals. L.E., § 444, p. 225.

(11) Mercer v. Denne, (1904) 2 Ch. 534 C.A. (1905) 2 Ch. 538.

(12) Seals v. Key, 11 Ad. & E. I. 819 (825).

custom which is only a slight departure from the normal law,[1] but very cogent evidence supported by unquestionable and numerous instances would be required to convince the court to make a wide departure from it.[2]

Proof of Kulachar.

311. In this respect the court has special rules for the determination of family customs. As these customs are necessarily personal, the court not only applies the most stringent test to the evidence offered, but it is reluctant to depart from the general law, unless the custom has been proved in all its bearings. The reported cases show how rare it is for the court now to admit as family custom a practice which has not already received its imprimatur. The same remarks apply to local customs.

Proof and disproof of custom..

12. A custom may be proved or disproved in any of the following ways:—

(1) Judgments, orders and decrees relating thereto.[3]

(2) Entries in any public document made—

(a) by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty,[4] or

(b) by any other person in the performance of a duty especially enjoined on him by the law of the country in which the public document is kept,[5]

(3) a published work dealing therewith,[6]

(4) any transaction by which the custom in question was created, claimed, modified, recognized, asserted or denied or which was inconsistent with its existence,[7]

(5) particular instances in which the custom was claimed, recognized, exercised or in which its existence was asserted, disputed or departed from.[8]

(6) opinions of—

(a) persons knowing of its existence or non-existence,[9]

(b) persons likely to have known of the custom, given before any controversy as to the custom had arisen, and who are either dead or cannot be called without unreasonable expense or delay,[10]

(c) a number of persons,[11]

(d) experts,[12]

(7) previous deposition of witnesses examined inter partes who cannot be called for reasons stated in clause (6) (b),[13]

(8) admissions of persons adversely affected thereby,[14]

(9) acts and conduct which make the existence or non-existence of the custom highly probable or improbable.[15]

---

(1) Johnson v. Clark, (1908) 1 Ch. 303 (309).
(2) Ib.
(3) S. 42, Ev. Act.
(4) Mahammad Imam Ali v. Hussain Khan, 26 C. 81 (92) P.C.
(5) Ib., S. 35.
(6) Ib., S. 87; Collector of Madura v. Motoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (411); Vallabha v. Madusudanan, 12 M. 495 (499, 500).
(7) Ib., S. 13 (a).
(8) Ib., S. 13 (b).
(9) Ib., S. 48.
(10) Ib., S. 32 (4).
(11) Ib., S. 32 (8).
(12) Ib., S. 49.
(13) Ib., S. 33.
(14) Ib., S. 21.
(15) Ib., S. 11.

312. Analogous Law.—This section is consolidated and condensed from certain sections of the Evidence Act dealing with the proof of custom. In order to understand its scope, reference must be made to a work on that subject. It is not proposed to annotate this section with any degree of exhaustiveness, and the following paragraphs are confined to the discussion of cases bearing only on the evidence relating to Hindu customs.

Cl. (1) Effect of Judgments.

313. The section permits custom to be proved by a judgment, decree or order not inter partes, in which it was recognized. But the mere production of judgments, however relevant, is never sufficient to prove custom,[1] upon which other evidence is necessary. Even as regards its weight, much must necessarily depend upon the nature of the question, the evidence adduced and the decision given thereupon. A judgment given ex parte cannot command the same value as one given after contest, or one suffered on compromise resulting after a contest.[2]

Cl (2) Entry in a Public Record.

314. An entry in a public record may suffice to establish a custom. It all depends upon the record and the entry. For instance, the Riwaj-i-am in the Punjab is a record of local tribal customs prepared by an officer deputed for that purpose. It has been consequently held to be of itself sufficient to create a presumption of the custom therein recorded.[3] But the same cannot be predicated of a wajib-ul-arz in the United or the Central Provinces. Their value depends upon the information available to, and availed of, by the Settlement Officer.[4] It depends in each case upon the nature of the duty, and the inquiry which preceded the record and the care taken to ascertain the facts and eliminate therefrom pre-conceived ideas and opinions. For instance, records of custom, prepared by officers deputed to make an ethnological survey of a locality, would be necessarily entitled to greater weight than a similar record prepared by a Settlement Officer or a Collector of folk-lore for insertion in a popular Gazetteer. The admissibility of the record prepared under this clause does not depend upon the personal knowledge of the public servant or other person concerned.[5]

Cl. (3) Pubished Works.

315. The courts freely admit into evidence published works of repute on the subject of custom. But, of course, such works must be those compiled to instruct and not merely to entertain readers. Works such as Sherring's Law of Caste, Steele's Law of Caste, and

---

(1) S. 42, Ev. A.; Labh Singh v. v. Gurcharan, (1913) P.R. 54: 19 I.C. 731; Bai Baiji v. Bai Santok, 20 B. 53 (57, 58); Sri Ganesh v. Keshavrav, 15 B. 625 (635); Kali Krishna v. Secretary of State, 16 C. 173; Sheo Chwrn v. Goodur, (1868) N. W. P. H. C. R. 138; Lachman v. Akbar, 1 A. 440; Gurdayal v. Jhandu, 10 A. 585 (586); Shimbhu v. Gayanchand, 16 A. 379; Harnath v. Mandal Das, 27 C. 379.

(2) Durga Devi v. Ramyan, (1911) P. R. 91.

(3) Beg v. Alladitta, 44 C. 749 P.C.; Vaishno Ditti v. Rameshri, 10 L. 86 P. C.; Basant Singh v. Brij Raj Saran, 57 A. 494 (507) P.C.

(4) Muhamad Imam Ali v. Husain Khan, 26 C. 81 (92) P.C.; Parbati v. Chandarpal, 31 A. 457 P.C.; Anant Singh v. Durga Singh, 32 A. 363 (373) P.C.

(5) Lekraj v. Mahpal, 5 C. 751 (753, 754).

Tupper's Punjab Customary Law fall into the former category and command serious attention. But there are other works, which, though professedly written to portray customs, are ill-disguised epitomes of these works, or of the Census Reports or of the Reports of the Ethnological Survey, so that the Courts would rather prefer going to the originals than to their abridgments.

Cl. (4) Any Transaction.

316. This is a very wide clause,[1] and would include judgments, decrees and orders in civil, criminal,[2] and revenue cases in which a custom was claimed,[3] decreed[4] or disallowed[5] and in fact any business[6] or dealing in which the question of the custom was gone into.

317. Not only judicial and quasi-judicial records, but acts, conduct and proceedings of such bodies, as the caste panchayat, arbitrators and the like, would be admissible under this clause. So any document bearing on the custom may be proved in evidence. For instance, receipts for payment of the customary dues, diaries and private records, account books, and memoranda, and in fact, any other fact or matter which has any bearing on the question of custom. It should be noted that while under clause (1) judgments are relevant qua judgments and as embodying judicial opinion on the subject of custom, this clause lets in not only the judgment but the entire litigation or proceedings as such, i.e., not merely the judicial opinion but also the claim made and its subsequent course from its very inception.[7]

Cl. (5) Particular Instances.

318. This is a most important clause and one on which the courts insist compliance. "The most cogent evidence of custom is not that which is afforded by the expression of opinion as to its existence, but the examination of instances in which the alleged custom has been acted upon, and by the proof afforded by judicial or revenue records or private records or receipts that the custom has been enforced."[8] The acts required for the establishment of custom must be plural, uniform and continuous. Two or three instances will not suffice, where numerous instances were possible.[9] In a general custom, what the court has to find is whether the custom is accepted and used by the people as their private law in preference to their general law. This can best be proved by establishing their obedience to it.

319. In the case of local or tribal custom the best evidence is that of the elders of the village or the sect or tribe. People as old as can be got should be examined to prove such custom, while in the case of

(1) Dinomoni v. Brojomohini, 29 C. 187 (198) P.C.; Bhitto Kanwar v. Kesho Prasad, 19 A. 277 P.C.; Rani Ranjam v. Ram Narain, 22 C. 533 P.C.

(2) Koondoo Nath v. Dheer Chunder, 20 W.R. 345.

(3) Dinomoni v. Brojo Mohini, 29 C. 187 P. C.

(4) Jiamuttlah v. Ramonikont, 15 C. 233; Ramasami v. Appavu, 12 M. 9.

(5) Bhaya Dirgui v. Pande, 3 C.L.J. 521; Parbutty v. Purno Chander, 9 C. 586.

(6) Sarappalli v. Fota, (1914) M. W. N. 779: 26 I.C. 747.

(7) Gujju Lal v. Feteh Lall, 6 C. 171 (175, 185) F.B.

(8) Lachman v. Akbar, I. A. 440; Rahimat Bai v. Hirbai, 3 B. 34; Tarchand v. Reeb Ram, 3 M.H.C.R. 57; Desai Ranchodas v. Rawal Nathubhai, 21 B. 116 (117); Zunkari v. Budhmal, 57 I.C. (N.) 252; Ganeshi v. Darshan, 2 L. L.J. 377: 56 I.C. 478.

(9) Gopal v. Hanmant, 3 B. 273; Sarabjit v. Indarjit, 27 A. 203; Chandika Baksh v. Muna Kunwar, 24 A. 273 P.C.; Durga Charan v. Raghunath, 18 C.L.J. 559 (567).

family customs the evidence must not only tend to show that the custom existed but that it still exists. Since the difference between this and the other customs is that while the latter cannot be materially affected by individual lapses, a family custom, disclosing such lapses, would fail of its effect, either because these lapses would destroy its continuity or prove its abandonment.[1] But where both are otherwise satisfactorily established, the mere fact that it was not enforced in an isolated instance would not affect its validity.[2]

320. To establish a Kulachar or family custom of descent, one at least of two things must be shown, either a clear, distinct and positive tradition in the family that the Kulachar exists[3] or a long series of instances of anomalous inheritance from which the Kulachar may be inferred.[4] (§ 274).

Cl. (6) Opinions.

321. Opinions as a rule are inadmissible in evidence, as a witness is required to depose to facts of which he knows, and not merely of what he thinks. But this clause is an exception, and it must be understood with its necessary safeguards, namely, that while a witness is free to depose to his opinions, it is for the court to appraise their evidentiary value which depends not so much upon what he thinks, but upon the logic of facts upon which he bases his opinion. Opinion then, is valueless, without the grounds upon which it is based.[5] And this is true alike of an expert as of a layman witness. Both must disclose the data which the court is free to examine.[6] The opinion must not be merely the repetition of a hearsay but a reasoned conclusion drawn from facts and conduct, tradition, observation, inquiry, research and study upon which a reasonable man forms his judgment. An opinion, after all, is only a judgment of a private person formed on materials available to him. These he must disclose so that, if his judgment be wrong, the court may reject it; if right, the court may follow it. As regards the admissibility of the previous statements of persons who are not called, its admissibility is contingent upon proof of the fact that the statement was made ante litem motam[7] and its value must depend upon its credibility and the means of knowledge available to him. It is, in any case, insufficient of itself to prove any custom.

322. The statements of crowd of persons is admissible, even though the latter be alive and available as witnesses, on the ground that it is a statement of their common sentiment.[8]

Cl. (7) Admission and Estoppel.

323. Law attaches considerable value to the admissions of a person made against himself, and in cases where evidence is conflicting, it is decisive of the case.[9]

---

(1) Raja Nugandur v. Raghunath, (1864) W.R. 20; Nitrapal Singh v. Jaipal Singh, 19 A. 1 P.C.

(2) Ekradeshwar Singh v. Janeshwari, 42 C. 582 (606) P.C.

(3) Maharani Hiranath v. Baboo Ram-Narayan, 9 B.L.R. 274 (291).

(4) Sumurun Singh v. Khedun Singh, 2 Sel. Rep. (N.E.) 147.

(5) S. 51, Ev. A.; Ekradeshwar Singh v. Janeshwari, 42 C. 582 (604, 665) P.C.

(6) Ib.

(7) Ekradeshwar Singh v. Janeshwari, 42 C. 582 P.C.

(8) Q. v. Ram Dutt, 23 W.R. (Cr. 35 (38); Chandra Nath v. Nil Madhab, 26 C. 236.

(9) Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhiri Narpat Singh, 19 A. 184 (194, 195) P. C.

Cl. (8) Acts and Conduct.

324. On the same ground stand acts and conduct of a person which are a mere outward manifestation of his inward conviction. But the acts and conduct must be unequivocal, and ordinarily, ante litem motam.

Proof of General Custom.

325. This section deals with admissibility of evidence. Closely connected with the question of admissibility is the question of its value, which largely depends upon a variety of considerations: the age and status of the witnesses, their impartiality and disinterestedness, their power of observation and means of knowledge and the nature and grounds of their opinions. These are mainly questions of fact, but, as in the evidence of custom, the question of relevancy is so intimately blended with the question of credibility that it is not often possible to state when the facts end and law begins. Moreover, it is not always possible to prove a custom in all the several ways enumerated in the section and a short discussion on the quantum of evidence which the courts have considered sufficient may, therefore, be subjoined.

326. It has been held that general customs which affect a large number of persons and are, therefore, in the nature of public rights may be proved by evidence of common notoriety,[1] or by the production of a judgment,[2] public document,[3] treatises or other record in which the said custom was proved, and the court may even take judicial notice of such a custom[4] if it is well-known[5] to save needless cost to parties.[6] So the court will take judicial notice of a custom which has been held proved in the reported cases,[7] provided they are not contradictory.[8]

At any rate, formal evidence will ordinarily suffice to prove such custom.[9]

Local Custom.

327. Evidence of the existence of the custom in the neighbourhood of the place is admissible if there is reason to believe that like customs prevailed in both.[10]

Communal Custom.

328. The fact that other communities have equally exercised the right claimed by a special custom is admissible to disprove the custom.[11]

---

(1) Taylor's Ev., Ss. 609-620; Weeks v. Sparke, 1 M. & S. 679; Crease v. Barrett, 1 C.M. & R. 919; Lord Dunraven v. Llewellyn, 15 Q.B. 811.

(2) Freeman v. Phillips, 4 M. & S. 486; Reed v. Jackson, 1 East 335; Earl De Lawarr v. Miles, 17 Ch. D. 535.

(3) Sturla v. Freccia, (1880) 5 A. C. 623 (643); Mercer v. Denne, (1905) 2 Ch. 538.

(4) 10 Hals. L. E. § 448, p. 237; Rechenoweth, (1902) 2 Ch. 488.

(5) Moult v. Halliday, (1898) Q. B. 125 (129); Goodwin v. Roberts, L.R. 10 D. Ex. 337 O.A. 1 App. Cas. 476; Nelson v. Dahl, 12 Ch. D. 568; Postlewaite v. Freeland, 5 App. Cas. 599 (616).

(6) Per Mellish L. J. Re Mathews, ex parte, Powell, 1 Ch. D. 501 (506); Edelstein v. Schuler & Co., (1902) 2 K. B. 144 (155, 156).

(7) Per Brett, M.R., In re Parker, ex parte Turquand, 14 Q.B.D. 636 (645); Rama Rau v. Raja of Pittapur, 40 M. 778 P.C.

(8) Per Mellish, L.J., In re Mathews, ex parte Powell, 1 Ch. D. 501 (507).

(9) Johnson v. Clark, (1908) 1 Ch. 303 (309).

(10) Anglesay v. Hatherton, 10 M. & W. 213.

(11) Earl Dela Earr v. Miles, 17 Ch. D. 535; Lord Rivers v. Adams, 3 Ex.D. 361.

13. Usage defined. Usage is a practice at variance with the general law, and differs from custom in that it need not possess the antiquity, uniformity or notoriety of custom, provided it is well known and acquiesced in by the community to whom it is made applicable.[1]

329. Analogous Law.—"Immemorial custom is transcendent law approved in the sacred scripture, and in the codes of divine legislators; let every man, therefore, of the three principal classes, who has a due reverence for the supreme spirit, which dwells in him, diligently and constantly observe immemorial custom."[2] Referring to custom, the Privy Council observed in a case: "A custom is a rule which, in a particular family, or in a particular district, has, from long usage, obtained the force of law."[3] In another case, referring to mercantile usage, they said: "To support such a ground, there needs not either the antiquity, the uniformity, or the notoriety of custom, which, in respect of all these, becomes a local law. The usage may be still in course of growth; it may require evidence for its support in each case; but in the result, it is enough if it appear to be so well known and acquiesced in that it may be reasonably presumed to have been an ingredient tacitly imported by the parties into their contract."[4]

330. A usage is something more than practice, but something less than custom. It is merely the habit of doing a thing in a particular way without advertence to its propriety or legality.[5] Practice may amount to no more than an individual habit, or it may be the established habit of a particular class or community. Distinguishing these two, it was observed in a case: "To constitute a usage it must apply to a place rather than to a particular bank; it must be the rule of all banks of the place or it cannot consistently be called a usage. If every bank could establish its own usage, the confusion and uncertainty would greatly exceed any local convenience resulting from the arrangement."[6]

331. Proof of Usage.—Usage is a generic term and has a wider application as implying practice supplementing a mercantile agreement, or contract, usage of the trade and country, and usages forming part of the common course of affairs.

Leaving out of account all usages, not falling within the scope of Hindu Law, the term may be confined to connote a practice of a country, caste, community, sect or tribe which is notorious and acquiesced in by them. But the term is often used to mean no more than custom, from which it is clearly distinguishable, but of which it is an essential element, since user is a test of the continuity of a custom, and its non-user furnishes evidence of its discontinuity or abandonment.[7] Notoriety does not imply knowledge of the party against whom custom is proved. All it implies is that it is generally known.

---

(1) Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchand, 7 M.I.A. 263, 282; Dalglish v. Guzuffer Hussain, 23 C. 427 (429); Sariatullah v. Pran Nath, 26 C. 184 (187).

(2) Manu, Ch. I, S. 138.

(3) Hurpershad v. Sheo Dyal, 26 W. R. 55 (70) P.C.

(4) Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchund, 7 M.I.A. 263 (282).

(5) Mirabivi v. Vellayanna, 8 M. 464 (466).

(6) Adams v. Otterback, 15 Howard (U.S.A.) 545 cited per curiam, Mana v. Rama, 20 M. 274.

(7) Jenkins v. Harvey, 2 C.M. & R. 393.

CHAPTER III

MARRIAGE.

332. Topical Introduction.—The history of Hindu marriage has already been set out (§§ 20-29). It is the history of promiscuity of marriage. In the Mahabharat, the Pandavas tell their wife that at one time, women consorted with men like cattle until Svetaketu, son of the Sage Uddalak, introduced the institution of marriage.[1] But it was not marriage as we now understand it. Polyandry and polygamy was the next stage,[2] and traces of it are to be found in the Rigveda,[3] which, however, was compiled when the institution of marriage had become established, and monogamy had become the rule,[4] though polygamy was still customary.[5] Marriage was then compulsory. Without re-marriage a widower could not perform any sacrifice. The Vedic marriage was with adults, and the wife selected her husband.[6] The sole ceremony enjoined was the grasping of the hand[7] before the sacrificial fire.[8] The position of the wife was that of the chosen friend.[9] The elaborate symbolism which constitutes the Shastric marriage is a later development born of the Sutra period.[10] But even then the Grihya Sutra took care to add that "the usages of the country should be followed in marriage."[11] This was a concession to the usage which had already overlaid the ritual texts and the traditional law. For instance, Manu regarded polygamy as exception[12] but it has become the rule. Re-marriage of wives and widows was ruthlessly reprobated, but the one has become customary, and the other legalized by legislation. Similarly, the Vedic age was the age of courtship and marriage, but the growth of caste with its intercaste jealousy, aided by the sacredotal puritanism, established the institution of early marriages which tendency became aggravated in later ages, as the doctrine received support from the popular cry—"Give the girl no chance to go wrong."

333. A marriage may be Shastric, Statutory or Customary, the first of which may be presently considered.

Marriage defined.

14. (1) A marriage is an alliance between a man and a woman recognized by law.

(2) A religious marriage is of two kinds; (a) Brahma and (b) Asur.

---

(1) Mahabharat, Adiparva, Ch. I, 122, 147, p. 2.
(2) Ib., V-V-30-35.
(3) Muir's Sanskrit Text, Vol. 5, pp. 234, 243, where the subject is discussed in detail.
(4) Rigveda (Max-Muller's Trans.), Vol. 2, p. 609.
(5) Ib., p. 426.
(6) Ib., Vol. 6, p. 509.
(7) Ib., Vol. 6, p. 520.
(8) Ib., Vol. 6, p. 206.
(9) Ib., Vol. 5, p. 546 ("Sakha," i.e., friend).
(10) There were 27 principal ceremonies.—Mandlik's H. L., p. 401.
(11) Grihya Sutra 1-7, I, p. 25.
(12) Manu, IX-77-83.

Brahma.

(3) A Brahma marriage is a sacrament in which the bride is a voluntary gift by her father or guardian to her husband.[1]

Asur.

(4) An Asur marriage is a sacrament in which the bride is given to the husband in payment of a consideration.

Betrothal.

(5) A betrothal is an engagement of two persons with a view to marriage, and is called Vagdana.

334. What is Marriage.—This section defines "marriage" as an alliance between a man and a woman recognized by law. The first essential of marriage is then an alliance, union or compact between persons of opposite sexes. Such alliance may be formed in a variety of ways, and for a time, limited or unlimited. The various ways in which the alliance is formed in a marriage constitute its ceremonies. They vary from the most complicated as prescribed in the Shastras to the free love which, under the name of Sambandham, is taken for a marriage in Malabar. The question of marriage is mainly one of form and intention. If the intention was to treat the woman as wife and the form prescribed by the sect or caste, as the outward expression of that intention, is conformed with, then the union would amount to marriage and recognized as such by law.

335. The question of legal recognition is all in all. Its necessity was perceived by Apastamb who says, "The union of the husband and the wife is effected through the law."[2] It has been thought best to leave the details of this subject to subsequent sections. Legal recognition depends upon the law and custom to which the parties were subject, the ceremonies, if any, performed and the observance of other rules as to consanguinity.

Betrothal.

336. There are two stages in the Hindu, and for that matter, in all marriages, the betrothal and the actual ceremony of marriage. It has already been stated that infant marriages are now customary amongst the Hindus, though amongst the educated and reformed classes there is a tendency in the direction of adult marriages even preceded by courtship. Leaving these out for the moment, the orthodox Hindu first bethinks himself of the marriage of his daughters as soon as they are of marriageable age. Emissaries comprising a Brahmin and a barber accompanied by a friend or relation proceed to view the prospective husband. This is a distinct ceremony in some parts of the country. If the boy is approved, then preliminary negotiations begin with the two fathers through the same intermediaries. Amonst the three higher castes, it is usal for the boy's father to stipulate for a definite sum as the bridegroom's dowry. But on this point, as on all others relating to marriage, local customs widely differ.[3]

337. But apart from custom, the Shastric rule, and one favoured by public opinion, is to take no bride-price and to pay a suitable dowry

(1) Cf. Manu, III Ss. 27-34.
(2) Apastamb II, 6-13; 2 S. B. E. p. 132.
(3) Census of India, 1911, Vol. I, § 330, p. 257. Ib., (1931) Vol. I, § 97, p. 226, but they have diminished on account of the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929 (XIX of 1929).

if possible to the husband. A marriage so contracted is now taken to be a Brahma marriage, which is presumed of every marriage till the contrary is shown.[1]

But though the Asur form is not favoured or presumed, the court is constrained to recognize its validity, however indisposed it may be to countenance it.[2]

The question whether the marriage is in one form or the other would have been immaterial, but for its effect upon the devolution of the woman's property, which depends upon whether she was married in the approved Brahma form or the disapproved Asur form.[3]

Contract between Adult Parties.

338. The contract of marriage hitherto considered is the contract between parents on behalf of their minor children. But there may be cases, and such cases are more likely to be fostered by the reforming zeal of the present generation, when the contract of marriage is made directly by the parties immediately interested. In that case, the contract culminating in an engagement could not be distinguished from any other contract, giving rise to similar rights and liabilities; though the age of discretion in such case is not that prescribed by the Indian Majority Act, which, as already stated, does not affect the capacity of any person to act in matters of marriage, dower, divorce and adoption.[4] The effect of this enactment is, that so far as regards these matters, the question of majority must be determined as if the Indian Majority Act had not been passed. Apart from that Act, there is however, no clear provision in the Hindu texts prescribing the age of majority, and what little there is to be found on the subject is limited to males, there being no provision for females whose lifelong dependence upon men is repeatedly insisted on. However, as an age for majority was necessary, the Legislature has now prescribed the age for boys and girls at 18 and 14 years respectively.[5] On the attainment of this age, Hindu boys and girls should be treated as sui juris and competent to contract for their own marriage. There is no prohibition in Hindu Law against such contracts. On the other hand, post-puberty marriages were the only marriages known in the Vedic times, and even in the degenerate days of the Smritis, such marriages are expressly contemplated and provided for: "Three years[6] let a damsel wait, though she be marriageable; but after that term, let her choose for herself a bride-

(1) Jaikisondas v. Harkisendas, 2 B. 9 (14); Moosee Haji v. Haji Abdul Rahim, 30 B. 197; Chunilal v. Surajram, 33 B. 433; Jagannath v. Narain, 34 B. 553; Jagannath v. Runjit Singh, 25 C. 354; Athikesavalu v. Ramanujam, 32 M. 512; Munni v. Umrao Singh, (1909) P. R. 39; Ramprasad v. Sububai, 4 N.L.R. 31 (36); Govind v. Dawalat, 6 N.L.R. 3 (5); Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath, 9 N. L.R. 102 (108).

(2) Dholidas v. Fulchand, 22 B. 658 (664); Vaithinathan v. Gangarazu, 17 M. 9 (10); Venkatakrishnyya v. Lakhminarayan, 32 M. 185 (190).

(3) Bhao v. Raghunath, 30 B. 229 (Brahma devolution); Dwarka v. Saratchandra, 39 C. 319, (Asur devolution); see post "Inheritance to Stridhan."

(4) S. 2 (a), Indian Majority Act, (IX of 1875).

(5) The Child Marriage Restraint Act (XIX of 1929).

(6) Skt. "Ritu," lit. "season," which Sir W. Jones translates to mean years, but which in the Sacred Books of the East is translated as "Seasons," "monthly periods." If the word "ritu" means the revolving year, then 13 being the age of puberty, a girl would attain her years of discretion, like the boy, on completion of her sixteenth year.

groom of equal rank; if not being given in marriage, she chose her bridegroom neither she, nor the youth chosen, commits any offence."[1]

Marriage Brocage.

339. Cases in which match-makers stipulate for a reward for themselves are even more immoral than those in which a price is paid to the guardians of children to bring about their marriages. All agreements to pay them for their services have been, consequently, held to be immoral and opposed to public policy and as such void. And so, of course, are the claims for damages flowing therefrom.[2]

Effect of breach of contract to marry.

15. A contract to marry cannot be enforced by specific performance[3] or an injunction,[4] but a party suffering loss thereby may recover damages for a breach of contract.

340. Analogous Law.—No person can be compelled by law to marry another,[5] and it would be against public policy and in restraint of marriages which law disfavours, if the party resiling therefrom were restrained by an injunction from marrying another.[6] The only remedy open to the disappointed party, suffering by the breach, is compensation in money awarded as penalty for a breach of contract to one suffering therefrom. But on this head, any presents of clothes, money and jewels made to the parents of the other party may, it seems, be not recovered, being, as they are, unconditional and in the nature of voluntary offerings.[7] As such, presents made to, and for the benefit of parents, not being in the nature of a settlement on the wife, undoubtedly tend to induce the exercise of parental influence from corrupt motives and encourage the buying and selling of children.[8] As such, they should be held, and have been held to be irrevocable, though there are cases which lay down otherwise,[9] even where the recipients of such gifts were not the guardians of the children whom they had agreed to offer in marriage.[10] But these cases really follow precedents; and none of them was a flagrant instance of the abuse of parental power when alone the rule could have been tested. They, however, stand on firmer ground when they decree return of presents made for the bride, in which case their return on the breaking off the match is a matter of course.[11]

---

(1) Manu, IX-90, 91; Vishnu, XXIV 40; 7 S.B.E. 109; Gautam, XVIII 20; Narad, XII-24.

(2) Atma Ram v. Banku Mal, 11 L. 598.

(3) S. 21 (b) last Ill. Specfic Relief Act (I of 1877).

(4) Gunput (In re)), 1 C. 74 (76-78).

(5) S. 21 (b), last Illustration Specific Relief Act, (I of 1877); Umed v. Nagindas, 7 B. H. C. R. (O. C.) 122 (132); Nowbat Singh v. Lad Kooer, 5 N.W.P. H.C.R. 102 (105); Gunput (In re), 1 C. 74.

(6) Gunput (In re), I.C. 74 (76, 77, 78).

(7) Per Markby, J. in Asgar v. Mahabat, 13 B.L.R. App. 34 (36) followed in Gunput, 1 C. 74 (76).

(8) Buldeo v. Mohamaya, 15 C.W.N. 417: 9 I.C. 652; Devarayan v. Muthuraman, 37 M. 393; Venkata v. Lakshmi, 32 M. 185 F.B.; Girdhari v. Needher, 10 A.L.J. 159; Buldeo v. Jumna, 23 A. 495; Dulari v. Vallubhdas, 13 B. 126.

(9) Jogeswar v. Panch Kauri, 5 B.L.R. 395; Rambhat v. Timmayya, 16 B. 673 (675).

(10) Umed v. Nagindas, 7 B. H. C. R. (O. C.) 122; Mulji v. Gomti, 11 B. 412; Rambhat v. Timmayya, 16 B. 673 (675).

(11) Jaikisondas v. Harkisondas, 2 B. 9 (15); Amratlal v. Bapubhai, (1887) B.H.C.P.J. 207; Rambhat v. Timmayya, 16 B. 673 (675).

341. So, again, the father or other guardian of the bridegroom may legitimately recover any expense of the marriage of his son or ward which the father or guardian of the bride had agreed to pay,[1] and marriage expenses, being a legitimate charge on the family, they are payable therefrom. So where the defendant improperly neglected to get his niece married, whereupon her mother married her and then sued him for expenses out of the joint estate of her deceased husband, the court decreed the claim overruling the objection that the plaintiff was not legally entitled to marry her daughter.[2]

Where the bride-elect dies, it is but just that the husband-elect should be able to get back the presents and this contingency is expressly provided for in the Mitakshara,[3] which, however, allows deduction therefrom of the expenses incurred by the girl's father. The court does not recognize the Asur marriage as valid, and though if it is performed it has to be treated as valid on the ground of factum valet, but till it is performed, no contract relating thereto can be enforced whether for the payment of the bride-price stipulated, or for damages for non-performance of the marriage, though if the money is actually paid and the marriage ceremony completed, the money cannot be recovered back.[4]

342. Parent's Duty.—There is nothing in the textual law regarding the selection of the bridegroom, and the person by whom he is to be selected. This duty must, therefore, be presumed to arise out of the general rights of guardianship. As such, the father and, in his absence, the mother must make the selection,[5] as it is their duty to see that their children are suitably matched. While the contract is in the course of negotiation neither party is, of course, legally bound by the terms exchanged, but as soon as a definite contract is made that stage is marked by performance of the ceremony of the enagagement or bethothal,[6] between which and the actual marriage the couple are engaged, and the parents held under contract to marry them. Even this period is nowhere covered by textual authority. Consequently, it is held subject to the ordinary civil law of contracts. As such, the parents are at liberty to terminate the engagement for any reason which should justify it in law. Force, fraud, undue influence and misrepresentation are, amongst others, its chief dissolvents.[7] Even if the contract has been illegally broken the only remedy is damages.[8] There cannot be specific enforcement of a contract to marry, and for obvious reasons.[9] Nor for the same reason,

---

(1) Vaikuntam v. Kallapiran, 23 M. 512. Post-nuptial expenses allowed in the same case in 26 M. 497.

(2) Gulabchand v. Fulhar, 3 I.C. (B.) 748; contra Hira v. Jowala, (1915) P. L.R. 27: 27 I.C. 1008.

(3) Ch. II, Sect. XI, S. 30.

(4) Chunilal v. Suraj Ram, 33 B. 433; Kalavagunta v. Kalavagunta, 32 M. 185 F.B. following Dholidas v. Fulchand, 22 B. 658; Ramachand v. Audaito, 10 C. 1054, overruling Visvanathan v. Saminathan, 13 M. 83; Vaithinathan v. Gangarazu, 17 M. 9; Baldeo v. Jumna, 23 A. 495 merely followed Visvanathan v. Saminathan, 13 M. 83, since overruled.

(5) Acha Ranganaiki v. Acha Ramanuja, 35 M. 728.

(6) Variously called, Vagdan; Sagai, etc.

(7) Asgar Ali v. Mahabhat Ali, 13 B.L.R. (App.) 34.

(8) Mulji v. Gonti, 11 B. 412; Rambhat v. Timmayya, 16 B. 673; Colaquhoun v. Smither, 33 M. 417.

(9) Shridhar v. Hiralal, 1 C. 74; Umed v. Nagindas, 7 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 122; Purshotam v. Purshotam, 21 B. 23; Ma Ngme Yin v. Maung Po Taw, 7 Bur. L.R. 14: 23 I.C. 376; Nowbut v. Lad Kooer, 5 N. W. P. H. C. R. 102. Contra Narad, XII-35; 33 S.B.E. p. 172 ordains forcible marriage of the recalcitrant bridegroom but not vice versa; but this can another marriage be restrained by injunction.[1] Nor is there any case for damages consequent on the mere breach of a contract of marriage, as a Hindu father has always the option to put an end to his daughter's engagement should a more suitable match be available.[2] This he is at liberty to do till the very last moment; and where a ceremony is required, as that marriage is completed only with the Saptapadi or the taking of seven steps round the marriage pole,[3] then before this last irrevocable step is taken, he may break off the contract though if the seventh step is taken, the marriage is completed and becomes indissoluble.

343. Jurisdiction of the Court.—The jurisdiction of the court on the subject of Hindu marriages is limited mainly to giving effect to the ascertainment of facts and declaring them inter partes. But in contracts relating to a marriage, the jurisdiction of the court is unrestricted by any consideration of personal law, as all such contracts are subject to the provisions of the statutory enactments. So the court may award damages for a breach of contract to marry, but since a party cannot compel another to marry him, there can be no decree for specific performance. And where a marriage has in fact taken place, the court will entertain a suit for jactitation of marriage, that is, a suit for the establishment of marriage relationship, such a suit for instance, as seeks a declaration that the defendant is or is not married to the plaintiff,[4] or being married, whether the marriage is or is not valid, because it was procured by fraud or force or celebrated without the consent of the necessary parties or without the formalities necessary to render it a binding marriage according to Hindu Law.[5] Should the court hold a marriage valid, it becomes necessarily entitled to restrain by an injunction the parents from marrying the bride to another person.[6] The question whether the plaintiff has the right to betroth and marry a minor belongs to the domain of personal guardianship on which the courts undoubtedly possess jurisdiction.[7]

A suit for damages for a breach of contract to marry is not cognizable by the court of Small Causes.[8]

Right to marry.

16 (1) Every man has a right to marry, and such right is not affected by infancy or infirmity.

---

drastic penalty is opposed alike to law and policy and is not saved by the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), S. 21 (b), the last illustration to which is exactly in point.

(1) Purshotam Das v. Purshotam Das, 21 B. 23 (34) dissenting from contra in Khooshal v. Bhugwan, 1 Borr. 155.

(2) Mit., II-II, 27; Narad, XII, 30, 38; Yadnavalkya, 165, 166; Vashisth, 2 Dig. 487; Katyayan, Ib., 491; Umed Kika v. Nagindas, 7 B.H.C.R. 122; Purshotam Das v. Purshotam Das, 21 B. 23 (30; 31); Kinji v. Narsi, 39 B. 682 Nagindas, 7 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 122 (134). (714); per Westropp, C.J., in Umed v.

(3) On this point there are local variations. In some places these steps are taken successively into seven circles, in other places, the pair perambulates seven times round the marriage pole, while in others the parties compile seven steps upon a stone.

(4) Mir Azmat Ali v. Mahmud-ul-Nissa, 20 A. 96.

(5) Ramsurn v. Rakhal Das, 1 W.R. 412; Aunjona Dasi v. Prahlad Chandra, 6 B.L.R. 243, F.B., overruling contra in Ramsaran v. Rakhal, Ib., p. 244-n; Aunjona v. Prohladh Chunder, 14 W.R. 132.

(6) Venkatacharyulu v. Rangacharyulu, 14 M. 316.

(7) Purshotam Das v. Purshotam Das, 21 B. 27 (37).

(8) Kalisunker v. Koylash Chunder, 15 C. 833.

(2) Provided that a marriage between a male below eighteen years of age and a female below fourteen years of age, if contracted on or after 1st day of April, 1930, shall be penalized to the extent provided in the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929.[1]

Infant marriage.

344. Analogous Law.—Hindu Law which treats marriage as a Samskar, and as such a religious rite, naturally regards the male as marrying and the female as merely married to. From her standpoint the Dharmkars treat her as being the subject of a gift by her father to the bridegroom called "the Kanyadan."[2]

345. Who may marry.—A Hindu marriage being a sacramental ceremony, every twice-born Hindu, desirous of entering the householder's estate is entitled to contract a marriage irrespective of his age, constitution and poverty.

No deformity or disease[3], not even congenital impotency,[4] can stand in the way of marriage, nor leprosy or other loathsome and contagious disease.

But since Hindu Law regards marriage in the nature of a gift by the father of his daughter to the husband, the latter may be an idiot and even a lunatic, so long as his lunacy did not, at the time of his marriage, prevent him from accepting his bride during the marriage ceremony and of understanding what was going on.[5]

There is no age limit. A boy of any age and a man up to any age are both equally competent to marry.[6]

346. The right of Bairagis[6] and Gosavis to marriages, is now recognized,[7] and there seems no reason why a Nihang Gosavi should not enter the order of Grihasth by contracting a marriage. In doing so, he merely breaks the vow of perpetual celibacy made to himself, but Hindu Law does not tie any one down to lifelong celibacy, and any custom having this effect would be ruled out as obnoxious to the rule restraining marriage.[8] But though a Gosavi can marry, it does not thence follow that he can thereby alter the devolution of property which he held on condition of continued celibacy. The property so held would devolve in accordance with the rules of the order and the nature of the grant.[9]

---

(1) Act XIX of 1929 which came into force on the 1st April, 1930.

(2) Lit. "gift of the daughter."

(3) Monji Lal v. Chandrabai, 38 C. 700 (706) P.C. See per Woodroffe, J., at p. 705 affirmed O.A. at p. 706. Under English Law the marriage of a lunatic is absolutely void even if it takes place during a lucid interval. Turner v. Meyers, 1 Hag. Con. 414 Marriage of Lunatics Act, 1811 (51 Geo. III. C. 37.)

(4) Purushotam v. Das Mani, 21 B. 610.

(5) Monji Lal v. Chandrabai, 38 C. 700 P.C.

(6) Dial Das v. Dhianun, (1914) P. R. 36; 21 I.C. 932.

(7) Gosain Rambharti v. Mahant Swrajbharti, 5 B. 682 (684); Gitabai v. Shivbakas, 5 Bom.L.R. 318; Satiadama v. Saranbagi, 18 M. 266 (270); Shree Mahant Kishora v. The Coimbatore, etc. Co., 26 M. 79 (83); Chhajju Gir v. Diwan, 29 A. 109.

(8) Balgir v. Dhonagir, 5 Bom.L.R. 114; Gitabai v. Shivbakas, Ib., 318; Hargir v. Anand Bharti, 88 I.C. 343, P.C.; 21 N.L.R. 127; (1925) P.C. 127.

(9) Ib., contra assumed per Piggott, J., in Sespuri v. Dwarka, 10 A.L.J. 181; and per Rafiq, J., in Ramkishore v. Jaganath, 11 A.L.J. 738 (740) is, it is submitted, erroneous.

347. The illegitimate children of a Hindu have equally the right of marriage and may marry in the caste if the caste people recognized them as still in caste.[1] So may the dancing girls or dasis attached to temples.[2]

Polygamy: and Polyandry.

17 Polygamy is lawful,[3] but polyandry is unlawful except to the extent permitted by custom.

348. Polygamy.—Polygamy is permitted by Hindu Law. Indeed, since the purpose of marriage is the procreation of a son to relieve the father from the torments of Hell[4] it follows that that purpose may not be often served if monogamy were the rule.

Polygamy is sanctioned by the texts and equally by usage.[5] But Brahmos who marry under the Special Marriage Act are limited to monogamy,[6] and in practice, polygamy is otherwise discouraged by the educated public opinion, but it is, nevertheless, legal.

349. A Hindu is unrestricted as to the wives he may marry. The fact that he has already a wife or wives living is no disqualification to his polygamy.[7] Even if he has given an agreement to the father of one of his previous wives not to remarry during his wife's lifetime, such agreement is invalid being opposed to the policy of Hindu Law,[8] and polygamy being legal, it might be attacked even as a restraint on marriage under the general law.[9]

350. Polyandry.—There are scarcely any indications in the archaic law of the general practice of polyandry, though it was not unknown, as witness the instance of the Pandavas, who had all conjointly married Draupadi; but the practice, never popular, is now decadent, being confined only to a few localities (§ 28).

351. Polyandry exists in the Kulu division, the Simla Hill States and to a small extent in the Natan, Mandi, and Suket States (§ 28). It is confined to the lower castes, though Rajput and other castes do not abjure it. The polyandry generally practised is of the fraternal type, known as Tibetan, all the brothers in a family having usually one joint wife, but distant relations, and even persons belonging to different families, agree to share a wife in partnership.[10] The husband visiting the wife has to leave his shoes or cap at the door which is notice to the other husbands that the wife is "engaged."

---

(1) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I. A. 141 (159); Ram Kumari (In re), 18 C. 264 (268, 269).

(2) Kamakshi v. Nagarathnam, 5 M. 161.

(3) Manu, III-12; Vishnu, XXIV-1; XV-41, XVIII-1; Narad, XII, 19; 33 S. B.E. 169; cf. ib., XII-28 33 S.B.E. 171. Quoted in Hindu Code, (3rd Ed.), p. 284.

(4) Vishnu, XV-44; 7 S.B.E. 65 See also Ib., pp. 106, 111, 112.

(5) Huree v. Mutho, 1 Borr. 59; Viraswami v. Appaswami, 1 M.H.C.R. 375; Arumugam v. Tulukanam, 7 M. 187 (188); Thapita v. Thapita, 17 M. 235 (239).

(6) Sonaluxmi v. Vishnu Prasad, 28 B. 597.

(7) E. v. Lasar, 30 M. 550.

(8) Sitaram v. Aheeree, 20 W.R. 49 (50); S. 26, Contract Act (Act IX of 1872).

(9) S. 26, Contract Act (IX of 1872).

(10) Punjab Census, 1912, Pt. 1, § 378.

18. No prescribed ceremony is necessary to constitute marriage,[1] provided that if any ceremony is customary and regarded by the caste as essential, then it must be performed.[2]

Prescribed ceremonies unnecessary.

Explanation 1.—The ceremony of Saptapadi[3] is necessary[4] to complete a marriage performed according to the orthodox rites, and that of Vivah Hom[5] is also usually performed, but its non-performance does not invalidate a marriage, if otherwise completed.

Explanation 2.—A marriage celebrated with due ceremony is not rendered invalid by reason of the fact that a party thereto was then an outcast.[6]

Explanation 3.—Cohabitation is not necessary to complete marriage.[7]

352. Analogous Law.—The Shastric ceremonies are very elaborate but most of them are now out of vogue.[9] They were described in detail in the third edition of the present work (§ 482) but are omitted from this edition.

Shastric Marriage Ceremony.

353. Of all the religious ceremonies prescribed for a Hindu marriage, the ceremony of Saptapadi or the "Seven Steps" is treated by the Smritikars as marriage.[7]

Saptapadi.

354. The ritual, so far as it extends to Saptapadi, may be divided into three parts: (1) the Vagdan or the promise to give; (2) the actual gift of the bride or kanyadan; and (3) the marriage rite which commences with taking the wife by the hand (panigrahanam) and ends with the seventh step, Saptapadi, taken around the consecrated fire.[9] (4) Vivah Homa, i.e., the sacrifice of fried grain. In the United Provinces, this ceremony involves circumambulation of the bridal pair, with their clothes knotted seven times, round the marriage pole, fixed in the centre of the shed or of the shed itself,[10] which in the Punjab, it means circumambulation round the Granth Sahib.

But this is not the invariable form of taking the seven steps. In another place it is described thus: "The bride is conducted by the bridegroom, and directed by him to step successively into seven circles a text being recited at each step." This is called Saptapadi.[11]

But whatever may be the variation in the mode of taking the seven steps, all agree that with the completion of the seventh step, marriage becomes irrevocably complete.[12] This does not, however, imply that it is

(1) Authikesavalu v. Ramanujam, 32 M. 512 (519); Moosa Haji v. Paji Abdul, 30 B. 197.

(2) Strange, H.L. 42.

(3) Lit. "Seven steps"—Skt. Saptam, seven, and pad, pades, foot.

(4) Brindaban v. Chundra Kurmokur, 12 C. 140 (143); Venkatacharyulu v. Rangacharyulu, 14 M. 316 (318); Appibai v. Khimji, 60 B. 455; Manu, VII-227; 2 Dig. 487, 488.

(5) Lit. Skt. vivah, marriage, homa, sacrifice. Muthuswami v. Masilamani, 20 M.L.J. 94 : 5 I.C. 42.

(6) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I. A. 141; Kumari, (In re), 18 C. 264; E. v. Madan Gopal, 34 A. 589 (591).

(7) Anandachari, (In re), 9 M. 466 (470); Dadaji v. Ruckmabai, 10 B. 301 (311).

(8) Mandlik, Hindu Law, pp. 401, 402; Muthuswami v. Masilamani, 33 M. 342 (345). See also Sir T. Strange, H.L., pp. 7-8.

(9) Manu, VII-227. Cited in 2 Dig., p. 488.

(10) Ib., p. 319.

(11) U.P.Census Report, 1912, § 233, p. 222.

(12) Appibai v. Khimji, 60 B. 455.

a sine qua non to a Hindu marriage, and that it may not be otherwise complete. As a matter of fact, Hindu marriage ceremonies have of late become so varied and various that it is impossible to generalize about them. All that the law, therefore, requires is, that whatever the ceremonies may be, they should be performed and not omitted, if their performance is essential to the completion of the marriage.

355. Present-day Ceremonies.—It is now universally acknowledged that the Shastric ceremonies have been almost entirely superseded by those which custom and convenience have substituted in their place. So Shankar Nair, J., observed in a case: "Hindu lawyers prescribed various ceremonies to constitute a valid marriage. But those ceremonies in their entirety are seldom, if ever, performed. According to them, the Vivah Hom[1] and Saptapadi[2] are essential. But it is notorious that marriages are performed in many castes without them, and it is now settled that if by caste usage, any other form is considered as constituting a marriage, then the adoption of that form under those conditions prescribed by the caste with the intention of thereby completing the marriage union is sufficient. No other conclusion is possible if due regard is had to conditions in India."[3] It is consequently clear that the essential and binding part of the marriage ceremony must necessarily vary in different localities.

356. Consumption not necessary.—Consummation is not necessary even under English Law to complete a marriage, which is complete as soon as the declaration and contracting words[4] are spoken; still less is it necessary under Hindu Law[5] where the marriages are usually contracted before the parties thereto have attained puberty. But though consummation is not necessary under law, it may become so by custom. In that case, the custom must, of course, be strictly proved.

Explanation 3.

According to Vashish, "if a damsel at the death of her husband had been merely wedded (by the recitation of texts) she may be married again."[6] But this precept has no value beyond the fact that it reduces the prejudice against the remarriage of such a widow.

357. Persons entitled to give in Marriage.—It has already been stated that the Indian Majority Act,[7] does not "affect the capacity of any person to act in the matter of marriage, dower, divorce and adoption"[8] and as under Hindu Law, the age of majority is attained on completion of the 16th year, persons born below that age cannot be married, except through their guardians whose right rests upon the following text of Yadnavalkya:—

"The father, paternal grandfather, brother, kinsmen, remote relations (Sakulyas) and mother are the persons to give away a damsel—the latter respectively on failure of preceding."

(1) Lit. "Marriage Sacrifice."
(2) Lt. "Seven Steps."
(3) Muthuswami v. Masilamani, 33 M. 342: 5 I.C. 42 (46). Also see Census of India, (1911), Vol. I-314, pp. 257, 258; Ib., (1931) Vol. I, p. 225, § 95.
(4) Marriage Act, 1898, S. 6 (61 and 62 Vic., c. 58).
(5) Administrator-General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466; Arur Singh v. Mangal, (1877) P.R. 85. It is said that consummation was in ancient times essential to complete a marriage; Ghose, H. L. (3rd Ed.,) 789. This view is supported by the fact that a virgin widow could re-marry (Vashishth, XVII-74), and a wife only passed into the gotra of her husband on performance of the consummation Homa ceremony; Hiranya Keshin, Grih. Sutra, 30 S.B.E. pp. 191, 193, 20.
(6) Vashishth, XVII-74.
(7) Act (IX of 1875).
(8) Act (IX of 1875), S. 2 (a).

353. Parents.—It has been held that this order merely prescribed for the giving away of the child, and does not confer on them any right of betrothal in the order of succession declared. Though the father has the absolute right of arranging for the marriages of his children, no other paternal kinsman can, in his absence, arrogate to himself the same unqualified authority without the concurrence of the mother.[1] But in a conflict between the father and the mother, the father has doubtless a superior right. This right was put to a somewhat severe test in a case in which the father was convicted of theft and imprisoned for two years after which he deserted his first wife and married another. Three years later, the wife negotiated for the marriage of her daughter to her own cousin, whereupon the father sued her for an injunction, which the court granted, being satisfied that the father had arranged for another more eligible match to the greater advantage of the minor, and that his suit being in the interest of his child and his right to give his daughter in marriage being superior to that of the mother, it could not be defeated by the latter.[2] But, of course, if in such a case the marriage had already been performed, then it would not have been cancelled merely because the mother had married without the father's authority.[3] A father may expressly or impliedly delegate his authority to another. Such was held to be the intention of the father, who, having lost his wife, made over his daughter, two years old, to another person to adopt, who brought her up and at the proper age married her to the plaintiff. The natural father then secured possession of her and married her to one Jadoo whom the plaintiff sued for the custody of his wife, and the Court decreed the suit holding that the father having by his conduct delegated his parental authority to another, could not reassert it to the detriment of the plaintiff to whom the girl had been previously married by her putative father.[4]

359. Other relations.—Apart however, from the father and mother, the paternal relations have the preferential right of arranging for the marriage of minors[5] in the following order:—the father, paternal grandfather, brother, kinsman, the Sakulyas—that is other paternal relations up to the tenth degree, and the mother. The right is then said to vest in the maternal grandfather, maternal uncle and other maternal relations in the order of proximity. But the question of priority loses its importance as soon as the marriage is performed. In the absence of force or fraud, the marriage will then be upheld on the ground of factum valet, if the consent thereto was given by a legal guardian such as the mother without consulting the father.[6]

360. Step-mother.—A step-mother has no right to give in marriage.[7] and indeed, excepting the parents, with whose authority the courts are

(1) Namasevayam v. Annamalai, 4 M. H.C.R. 339; Ranganayaki v. Ramanuja, 35 M. 728; Ramkore v. Jamnadas, 37 B. 18; Maya Devi v. Ramchand, (1916) P. R. 20 : 31 I.C. 186.

(2) Nanabhai v. Janardhan, 12 B. 110 (120, 121); Ram Bansee v. Soobh Koonwar, 7 W.R. 321; Golamee v. Juggessur, 3 W.R. 193.

(3) Khusal Chand v. Baimani, 11 B. 247; Ghazi v. Sukru, 19 A. 515; Mayadevi v. Ramchand, (1916) P.R. 20; Gajja v. Crown, 2 L. 288.

(4) Golamee v. Jaggessur, 3 W.R. 193, contra Atmaram v. Bankumal, 11 L. 596.

(5) Kasturi v. Ponnalal, 38 A. 520.

(6) Ghazi v. Sukru, 19 A. 515.

(7) Ram Bunsee v. Soobh Koonwar, 7 W.R. 321.

loath to interfere, the authority exercised by more distant relations is subject to the supervision of the court, which, as the supreme guardian of the State, is entitled to intervene whenever it will be in the interest of the minor to do so, and in so doing, it may consider the minor's own wishes if she is sufficiently old to study her own welfare.[1]

361. Customary Marriages.—Custom may influence the form of marriages, or it may legalize the alliance, not in consonance with the normal law. In the one case it reduces, modifies or altogether dispenses with the performance of the prescribed or any ceremonies. In the other case, it sanctions intermarriages between different castes or sub-castes, or permits the remarriage of women already married or of widows. In its solicitude for upholding marriage contracts, law suffers every community to follow its own notion of a valid marriage, and if it is only sure of the factum of marriage, it even presumes that it has been performed with the requisite sanction of custom. In this respect it views custom with unwonted indulgence. Such marriages may be grouped under the following heads:—

(i) Those in which custom moulds the form (§§ 367-380).
(ii) Inter-caste marriages (§§ 19).
(iii) Marriage between Hindu and non-Hindus (§ 19).
(iv) Remarriage of wives ((§ 20).
(v) Remarriage of widows (§21).

Customary forms.

362. It has already been seen that of the eight forms of marriages, enumerated by the Smritikars, the Brahma is the most favoured. It is still current; so is the Asur form. But since these two forms only differ on a single point, viz., whether the bride is gifted or sold,[2] it is clear that they take no note of the fact that widow re-marriages have since been again legalized and the bonds of caste have again been loosened. Moreover, there remain the ceremonies.

Besides the Brahma and Asur forms, another old form—the Gandharva—is said[3] to still survive. "The voluntary union of a maiden and her lover, one must know to be the Ghandarva rite which springs from desire and has sexual intercourse for its purpose."[4] The essence of this form lies in the absence of all ceremonies.

363. But there the marriages which are held to be perfectly valid, though they require no religious ceremonies. Such is the Karewa marriage in the Punjab, which is a marriage with the brother or some other male relative of the deceased husband and is contracted without any ceremony at all, but is, nevertheless, held to be valid and to confer upon the parties all the rights of a valid marriage.[5] The Karao Dhureecha marriage prevalent amongst the Jats[6] and Lodhis[7] of the United Provinces appears to be quite similar. So a form of Gandharva in a

(1) Shridhar v. Hira Lal, 12 B. 480 (485, 486).
(2) Chuni Lal v. Surajram, 33 B. 432 (437); Kailasnatha v. Parasakthi, 58 M. 488.
(3) Brindavana v. Radhamani, 12 M. 72; contra in Bhaoni v. Maharaj Singh, 3 A. 738.
(4) Manu, III-32 (3 Cole. Dig., p. 606).
(5) Authikesavalu v. Ramanujam, 32 M. 512 (514, 515, 518).
(6) Rattigan, Punjab Customary Law (7th Ed.), 75, p. 141 and cases there cited; Tupper, Customary Law, Vol. 2, 95; Pooran Mul v. Toolsi, 3 Agra, 350.
(7) Q. v. Bahadur Singh, 4 N.W.P. H.C.R. 128.

Tiperah caste is completed "by the worship of the Goddess Tripoora and taking shanti-water (or water of absolution).[1] The wife so married admittedly possesses an inferior status. Such was the "Dagger wife," that is to say, the wife who is merely married to a dagger of her husband, who, being usually a person possessing a much higher social status, does not stoop to marry in person which the Privy Council have condemned as illegal.[2] The Anand marriage, customary amongst the Sikhs, is completed by the Kharat or an offering to the deity coupled with the recitation of a text called Anand.[3] Still greater laxity marks the marriages of Jat Sikhs amongst whom, not only inter-caste marriages but marriages without any ceremony at all are quite common and customary, and as such, recognised as valid by the Courts.[4] So amongst Vaishnavs' marriage by kanthibadal (or exchange of garlands) was held to be sufficient.[5] So a mere mutual consent is all that is required to constitute a Buddhist marriage, and such consent may be expressed or implied by conduct or reputation.[6] Even a permanent concubine acquires the status of a wife.[7] The fact that the Privy Council recognised such an alliance as valid marriage shows how elastic is the term "marriage" when applied to persons only subject to their customary law and such examples are not unfamiliar to the Indian courts dealing with cases of even such high caste people as the Gour Rajputs of Cawnpur.[8]

364. The Punjab and Malabar marriage customs reduce marriage to a mere figure of speech. The Punjab customs not only permit of inter-caste marriages but they permit of marriages such as the Chadar Andazi and the Karewa, which are mere sexual alliances which custom recognizes as lawful marriages.[9] So is the Sambhandham of Malabar, in which all that is necessary is the consent of the girl and her guardian followed by cohabitation. There are several varieties of Sambhandhams, amongst which the Podamuri form is said to hold the pride of place, being one in which the bridegroom makes the ceremonious present of a cloth to a bride.[10] It is said that these marriages have been reprobated by the courts.[11] But this seems to be a mistake, since they are recognized by the Legislature[12] and the reports of cases prove otherwise.[13]. Such mock marriages are equally in vogue amongst the Newars of Nepal.[14]

---

(1) Kesree v. Samardhan, 5 N.W.P. H.C.R. 94.

(2) Ramsaran Singh v. Mahabir Sewak Singh, 1934 P.C. 74 Chakrodhuj v. Beer Chunder, 1 W.R. 194; Rajkumar Nohodip v. Birchandra, 25 W.R. 404 (414), (customary amongst the Kshatreyas but void amongst Shudras) contra Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram, 48 M. 1 (39) F.B. no longer good law.

(3) Ramasami v. Sundaralingasami, 17 M. 422 (430).

(4) Doed Jaggamohun v. Sancoomar, 2 Mor. Dig. 41 S.C. 3 I.D. (O.S.) 797 (799).

(5) Benode v. Shashi Bushan, 24 C.W. N. 958.

(6) Chandsingh v. Mela, (1897) P.R. 73; Harta v. Kanhya, (1908) P.R. 72; Azkaur v. Savansingh, (1910) P.R. 79; Hurdial v. Kali Ram, (1911) P.R. 65.

(7) Mi Me v. Mi Shwa Ma, 39 C. 492 P.C.; Ib., p. 505 P.C.

(8) Lachman Kaur v. Mardansingh, 8 A. 143.

(9) Askar v. Sawansingh, (1910) P. R. 79 : 7 I.C. 1009.

(10) Report of the Malabar Marriage Commission, 1894, pp. 21-24, 98.

(11) Census of India, 1911, Vol. I, § 294, p. 242, foot-note (1). See Moore's Malabar Law and Custom, p. 75.

(12) Cf. Ss. 2, 3, 11, Malabar Marriage Act, 1886 (Madras Act IV of 1896).

(13) Census of India, 1911, Vol. I, § 294, p. 243.

(14) For Bengal, Bihar, Orissa and Sikkim, see Census of India, 1911, Vol. 5, Part I, Ch. VII, Part I,§§ 625-689, pp. 314-343. For Bombay, Ib., Vol. IX, Common Marriage Customs.

365. But a few leading incidents are common to all customs, whether European or Indian, Hindu, or non-Hindu. The husband selected is invariably a few years older than the bride, and the marriage rites are performed in the parental home of the latter. Amongst the Hindus, marriage is universal, and it is so amongst all other races who affect Hinduism. All Hindus strive to marry off their daughters before the age of puberty, and strange devices are often resorted to in order to comply with the letter of the Shastric law. Failing to secure an eligible husband, the girl is made to go through a mock marriage with an arrow, a flower or a tree,[1] the real marriage being performed later with the husband.[2] Wherever widow re-marriage is sanctioned by the caste, it is invariably treated with disfavour, and accompanied by the ceremony of applying vermilion to the woman's forehead and putting bracelets on her wrists.[3] But the usual ceremony accompanying a virgin marriage is not much more elaborate, the Sindurdan or the smearing of vermilion on the bride's forehead or on the parting of the heir, being generally regarded as the essential feature of the marriage ceremony.[4] It is probably a survival of the blood covenant between husband and wife and has a wide vogue even amongst people and races whose connection with the Indo-Aryan civilisation is not readily apparent.

366. Marriage by purchase and marriage by exchange are common throughout India, and in the United Provinces, such marriages are even customary amongst Brahmins.[5] Marriage by capture was at one time common. It could not persist after the Penal Code and the only survival of the custom is now to be found in the fact that the husband goes mounted and armed and captures his bride in a mock battle. This custom is not confined to the Hindus, nor, indeed, to India.

367. Punjab Marriages.—The Punjab is a province of customs and there the marriage customs, both the tribal and territorial, widely differ. But the essential features of Hindu customs equally persist there.

Marriage is universal and regarded as a sacrament. Infant marriages are customary, the majority of girls being married between the ages of 10 and 15. Girls are, as a rule, sold, as there is a shortage of women,[6] the price varying according to the maturity of the bride.

Anand Marriage.

368. The ceremonies[7] were originally performed by the Sikhs as well, who used to employ the Brahmins to officiate at their marriages. Later on it became usual to supplement this with the Sikh ceremony, which is now

---

Part I, Ch. VIII deals with castes and tribes but no marriage customs.

The Madras Part Ib., Vol. XII similarly deals with the religion and caste (Chs. IV and XI) but not with their marriage customs.

The U.P. and Oudh, Part Ib., Vol. XV devotes a considerable space to the description of marriage customs. Ch. VII, §§ 212-239, pp. 207-229. The Punjab, Part Ib., Vol. XIV is a most illuminating record of castes, religion and marriages of the Hindus—As to the last, see Ib., Vol. XIV, Pt. I, Ch. VII, §§ 334-384, pp. 261-294.

For C.P., see Ib., Vol. X, Pt. I, Ch. VII, §§ 160, 196, pp. 131-151.

(1) Bengal Census Report, 1913, Pt. I, §§ 647, 648.

(2) Tribes and Castes of Bengal, Vol. I, P. 415.

(3) Bengal Census Report, 1913, Pt. I, § 641; widow marriage is very common in Orissa, Ib., § 643.

(4) Ib., § 640.

(5) U.P. Census Report, 1912, § 231.

(6) Punjab Census Report, 1912, Pt. I, Ch. VII, §§ 348, 349, p. 272.

(7) Ib.

the sole marriage ceremony performed by them in their marriages. A Sikh marriage may now be performed in the old style, or it may be performed in the new style called the Anand marriage, which is now declared legal by Legislature.[1] The leading binding ceremony is each is, however, the same, viz., the circumlocution of the pair four times round the Granth Sahib accompanied by the reading of hymns by the Sikh priest. These hymns are called the Lawans.[2]

Widow Marriage in the Punjab.

369. Widow marriages, though deplored, are none the less more frequent in the Punjab than anywhere else. The ceremony, most prevalent amongst the Hindus and Sikhs, is that called the Karao or Chadar Andazi in the Eastern Punjab and Karewa or Chadar Pana in the rest of the province. This marriage is completed with little or no ceremony at all.[3]

370. As to marriage within the prohibited degrees, the orthodox rule is honoured here more in the breach than in its observance. The Punjabi Hindus avoid only two gotras, viz., one's own and that of the mother's father; small groups avoiding only the collaterals, i.e., only the father's gotra,[4] and marriages by exchange are common throughout the province.

The Sikh marrying in his own caste, ordinarily, avoids only the collaterals of the father and the mother's father.[5]

371. Polygamy is, as usual, prevalent throughout the Punjab, and the number of wives is regulated by the wealth and status of the husband.

Divorce does not appear to be customary amongst the Hindus, Sikhs and Jains. Nor has the Hindu minor the same option of puberty,[6] possessed by her Mahomedan conferre, who on attaining puberty may disown an alliance contracted during her infancy by certain relations.

U. P., C.P. and Behar Marriage Customs.

372. The leading features of the marriage customs in the Central Provinces resemble those of its neighbours, the Bihar and the United Provinces. The leading idea of the highest caste is to make a gift of their daughters to husbands, of the lower to exploit them for money. The Kunbis will take Rs. 20 for a daughter before she reaches adolescence, after which she is given away for nothing. Exchanges are common[7] while service is taken in lieu of cash where the husband is too poor to afford it.

373. The binding portion of the marriage ceremony in the Hindi speaking districts is the Bhanwar ceremony which consists of the bridal pair walking round the marriage shed called the Mandwa. In the Maratha country, this ceremony is not usually performed, and the

(1) Anand Marriage Act (VII of 1909).

(2) Translated in Maculiffe's "Sikh Religion," Vol. 2, Oxford 1909; also in the Punjab Census Report, 1912, § 355, pp. 277, 278.

(3) Haker v. Mathalesingh, (1879) P. R. 38; Mula v. Chando, (1880) P.R. 26; Lachu v. Dalsings, (1896) P.R. 33; Chandsingh v. Mela, (1897) P.R. 73; Daliplcuar v. Tatti, (1913) P.R. 99, 18 I.C. 93.

(4) The Mohyal Brahmins marry into the family of one of the collaterals of the mother's father, Ib., § 374.

(5) Ib., § 374.

(6) Munshi v. Bhagwani, 64 I.C. (L.) 356.

(7) C. P. Census Report, 1912, § 175.

marriage rite is completed when the sheet suspended between the bride and the bridegroom is taken away, and the rice is thrown over them. Amongst the tribes, the Bhanwar is usually performed, but the binding ceremony is the affixing of the vermilion mark on the forehead of the bride which concludes the marriage.[1] Marriage by capture is symbolized by the Gond and the Mudia aborigines.[2]

374. Widow re-marriage is customary not only amongst the Shudras but also amongst the Marathas who claim an equal status with the Rajputs.[3] The ceremony which is usually performed at night includes one symbolic of the supersession of the rights of the ex-husband and the changing of clothes and bangles. If a bachelor marries a widow, he usually has to go through the ceremony of a mock-marriage with a tree, an arrow, or a ring. A widow may not marry any one of her own father's gotra or within the degree that would be prohibited to her as an unmarried girl. A member of her deceased husband's family has a prior claim.

Divorce is customary, and may be obtained by the husband for adultery of the wife, and by the wife if she is deserted by her husband. But in practice, where women are greatly in demand, they are free to re-marry as often as they desire for a new husband. Such re-marriages are customary even amongst the Jadams of Hoshangabad who claim to be a branch of the Rajput race.[4]

Second Marriage when necessary.

375. Amongst most people, the ceremony of marriage begins and ends with the performance of a single ceremony. This is the real marriage. But where it is performed before puberty, a Gowna or Pathoni, mis-called a second marriage, usually marks the advent of that event. But this is usually a quiet ceremony, and one which is by no means essential to the completion of marriage. But it might be possible that by custom, before any conjugal rights could be asserted, a second ceremony of marriage was necessary, though the Hindu Law requires no such ceremony. In a case in which this custom was alleged, the plaintiff's suit for possession of his wife was thrown out on the ground that the evidence disclosed that the wife was free to re-marry till the second marriage was performed, and the plaintiff's failure to perform it, disentitled him to the relief which he claimed.[5]

Sub-caste, and Inter-caste-Religious Marriages.

19. (1) A religious marriage may be contracted between persons of the same caste, though of separate sub-castes.[6]

(2) A religious marriage may be validly performed between a male of a higher caste and a female of a caste below his.[7] Such marriage is called an "Anuloma" marriage.

(3) But a marriage of a man belonging to a lower caste with a woman of a caste above his is invalid. Such marriage is called 'Pratiloma".[8]

---

(1) C.P. Census Report, 1912. § 176.
(2) Ib., § 177.
(3) Ib., § 178.
(4) Ib., § 179.
(5) Boolchand v. Janokee, 25 W.R. 386.
(6) Gopi Krishna v. Mt. Jaggo, 58 A. 397 P.C.
(7) Bai Gulab v. Jiwanlal, 46 B. 871; Bai Kashi v. Jamnadoss, 14 Bom.L.R. 547.
(8) Bai Kashi v. Jamnadoss, 14 Bom. L.R. 547.

Explanation:—As converts to Hinduism are classed as Shudras,[1] they are subject to the rules above stated.

Illustration.

A European woman became a convert to Hinduism. Her marriage with a Vaishya male is valid.[2]

376. Customary Inter-caste Marriages.—The history of the origin and growth of castes and their inter-relations has already been given in the General Introduction, (§§ 42-44) from which it will be seen that in the Vedic times, when the idea of caste was only taking root, inter-marriages between Aryan males and the Shudra females were not interdicted and were even connived at. But later on, when the caste ascendancy grew and the four castes became more distinctly marked, inter-caste marriages still continued to be customary, though they began to be treated with growing disfavour[3] and so Manu ordains that the Dwija should preferably marry in his own caste, at least his first wife,[4] though he may take other wives from the caste next to his own. But this rule does not appear to be inflexible, and Manu anathematizes a Brahmin if he takes a Shudra woman as his first wife.[5] In a later age, this practice was exalted into a moral law and inter-caste marriages increased in disfavour with the increase of caste independence. Sub-castes were formed, the members of which followed the example of the greater castes. But this ferment was mainly confined to the three upper castes. Though the Shudras were technically within the pale of Hindu society, in reality, they continued to remain outside it. Consequently, inter-caste marriages amongst them continued unchecked by the rising tide of popular opinion against them. And their legality is now well established.[6]

Inter-caste customary Marriages.

377. But even amongst the twice-born, both pure and mixed, such marriages have obtained a foothold in the Punjab, where the inter-marriages of a Rajput man with a Khatri woman[7] and of a Kshatriya man with a Vaishya woman[8] have been upheld, and so the Calcutta High Court has upheld the marriage of a Vaishya husband with a Kayastha mother as supported by a local custom prevalent in Tipperah;[9] as also the marriage of a Kayasth with an aborigines Dom, the latter being classed as a Shudra,[10] and the Allahabad High Court had to concede both the legality and validity of inter-sub-caste marriages,[11] as also of inter-caste marriages between a Brahmin and a Kshatriya woman as supported by the local custom in Nepal,[12] and such marriages, being anuloma are held legal in Bombay under the authority of the Shastras, which cannot be restricted by a Caste Panchayat.[13] Bot both the Courts

(1) Muthusami v. Masilamoni, 33 M. 342; Morarji v. Administrator-General, 52 M. 160 (173).

(2) Morarji v. Administrator-General, Ib.

(3) Manu, III-4, 13.

(4) Ib., III-12.

(5) Ib., III-17.

(6) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I. A. 141; Faleir Gauda v. Ganji, 22 B. 227; Mahantava v. Gengava, 11 Bom.L. R. 822, contra in Narain v. Rakhal, 1 C. 1; Har Bahadur v. Chand Raj, 21 O. C. 298 : 58 I.C. 400 (marriage between Kayasth sub-caste; Biswanath v. Shorashibala, 48 C. 296.

(7) Haria v. Kanhaya, (1908) P.R. 72.

(8) Khairu v. Fakhirchand, (1909) P. R. 57, 2 I.C. 944.

(9) Ramalal v. Akhoycharan, 7 C.W. N. 619.

(10) Bhola Nath v. Emperor, 51 C. 488.

(11) Har Prasad v. Kewal, 47 A. 169.

(12) Padam Kumari v. Suraj Kumari, 28 A. 458 (461).

(13 Natha v. Chotelal, (1931) B. 89.; Gulab v. Jiwan Lal, 46 B. 871 (877).

in Bombay and Allahabad, have held as invalid a marriage of a Brahmin woman with a Rajput man[1] much less with a Shudra man,[2] though in Bombay, the marriage of a Vaishya male with the illegitimate daughter of a Vaishya born of a Shudra woman has been upheld as sanctioned by Hindu Law.[3] But in Allahabad, an inter-marriage of a Vaishya with a Shudra woman has been held to be wholly void.[4]

Inter-marriages between mixed castes are permissible,[5] and since illegitimate children are held to possess no caste, inter-marriages between them are equally unobjectionable.[6] So a marriage between a Bania and the illegitimate daughter of a Brahmin father and Bania mother has been held to be valid, as recognized by the husband's caste fellows.[7]

It has been held in Burma that there could be no valid marriage between a Hindu male and a Burman Buddhist female.[8] (§ 380.)

Inter-marriages between sub-castes.

378. At the present day, all over India, inter-marriages between sub-castes, even when not customary, are generally condoned on payment of a small fine. But nowhere are such marriages considered as void.[9] The present tendency is to eliminate all interdiction against sub-caste marriage,[10] and to make the connubial limit extend as far as the commensal. In fact, this tendency is generally observable in all castes. It will be thus seen that the ban on inter-marriages is the direct result of the growing caste exclusiveness. It is least common where caste-conservatism is least rigid. For instance, in the Punjab, where caste has never taken a strong hold on the people, inter-caste marriages are quite common,[11] and their validity has been upheld by the Privy Council, even in the case of a Vaishya in the United Provinces,[12] while inter sub-caste marriages of even brahmins have been held not unlawful under Hindu Law.[13] But nevertheless, there is no Shastric authority against inter-sub-caste marriages, least of all for territorial interdiction, which forbids a Brahmin of the North to marry into a Brahmin family of the South, and the Kayasths of Bengal to intermarry with the Kayasths of the adjacent Bihar.

379. The four rules deducible from the Shastras which still survive in the customs of the people are then these:—

(1) All Shudras can inter-marry.[14]

---

(1) Lakshmi v. Kalian Singh, 2 Bom. L.R. 128; Sespuri v. Dwarka, 10 A.L. J. 181.

(2) Kashi v. Jamnadas, 13 Bom.L.R. 547.

(3) Gulab v. Jivan Lal, 46 B. 871 (877).

(4) Munni Lal v. Shiama, 48 A. 670 contra in Bombay.

(5) Daryai Singh v. Narpat Singh, 13 O.C. 375: 9 I.C. 71.

(6) Sukkho v. Ramcharan, (1892) A. W.N. 27.

(7) Madan v. E., 34 A. 589.

(8) Moung Man v. Dermo, 3 L.B.R. 244.

(9) Census for India, 1911, Vol. I, § 472, p. 368, Inter-marriage between sub-castes of Brahmins upheld; Har Prasad v. Kewal, 47 A. 169; Appibai v. Khimji, 60 B. 455.

(10) Bengal Census Report, 1901, p. 356.

(11) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I. A. 141; Ramamani v. Kulanthai, 14 M. I.A. 346; Fakirgaudu v. Gangi, 22 B. 277; Mahantawa v. Gongawa, 33 B. 693 (697).

(12) Gopi Krishna v. Mt. Jaggo, 58 A. 397 (P.C.).

(13) Kshitish Chandra v. E., (1937) C. 214 F.B.

(14) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I. A. 141 (158, 159); Ramamani v. Kulanthai, 14 M.I.A. 346; Ramaswamy v. Sundaralingasami, 17 M. 422 (430, 431); Muthisami v. Masilamani, 33 M. 342; Fakirgauda v. Gangi, 22 B. 227; Mahan-

(2) Persons belonging to the same primary caste may intermarry, notwithstanding any practice against such marriages.[1]

(3) Persons belonging to the mixed and new castes may intermarry, if permitted to do so by their own custom.[2]

(4) Where inter-caste marriages are permitted by custom, they only permit hypergamous marriages, i.e., they permit only men of the higher caste marrying women of the next lower caste, but not vice versa.[3]

Marriage of converts to Hinduism.

380. As regards the inter-marriage of Hindus with non-Hindus, the question is one, again, of custom. A Hindu may marry a Christian woman reconverted to Hinduism.[4] Even without such re-conversion there is a possibility of a legal marriage, if the lex loci permits it. So a Hindu may validly marry a Christian lady in England, as the law of England does not prohibit inter-marriages between Christians and non-Christians,[5] but not a Burman Buddhist in Burmah.[6] (§ 377.) Sikhism is a proselytizing creed and so is latter day Hinduism. A Mahomedan may be converted to Sikhism. Consequently, where a Sikh of position was shown to have cohabited with a Mahomedan woman and there was evidence to show that he was anxious to make her his lawful wife, the court presumed lawful marriage, presuming at the same time, that the woman must have been converted to Sikhism, since there was neither a legal nor a customary bar to such conversion.[7] In case of conflict between persons belonging to different religions, the courts apply the rules of justice, equity and good conscience,[8] presuming the legality of a marriage if it was in fact performed.[9]

381. Factum Valet.—The legal maxim quod fieri non debuit factum valet[10] has recognized place in Hindu Law to cases of adoption,[11] and marriage,[12] for curing a mere irregularity in form or an immaterial tawa v. Gangawa, 33 B. 693; Upama v. Bholaram, 15 C. 708; Girish Chandra v. Mhd. Shagde, 25 C.W.N. 634; Biswanath v. Shorashibala, 48 C. 926 (Kayasth and Tanti inter-marriage valid); Bhola Nath v. Emp., 51 C. 488 (Bengali Kayasths and Dom can inter-marry); Har Bahadur v. Chand Raj, 5 O.L.J. 655; 48 I. C. 400 (sub-divisions of Kayasth). Contra in Narain v. Rakhal, 1 C. 1; Domab Singh v. Hirondi Bai, 54 I.C. (N.) 294 (Ahirs); Hardyal v. Kali Ram, (1911) P.R. 65 : 10 I.C. 152 (Jhabra Rajput).

---

(1) Gopi Krishna v. Mt. Jaggo, 58 A. 397 P.C.

(2) Ramlal v. Akhoy, 7 C.W.N. 619; Darayisingh v. Nepalsingh, (1910) 13 O. C. 375: 9 I.C. 71; Biswanath v. Shorashibala; 48 C. 926 (marriage of a Bengali Kayasth, who is a Shudra, with a Tanti or weaver woman legal).

(3) Tukaram v. Babaji, 1Bom.L.R. 144 (153); Ramasami v. Sundaralingaswami, 17 M. 422 (430); Shepuri v. Dwarka, 10 A.L.J. 181 : 16 I.C. 222; Lakshmi v. Kaliansingh, 2 Bom.L.R. 128; Bai Kashi v. Jamnadas, 14 Bom.L.R. 547: 16 I.C. 133.

(4) Muthusami v. Masilamani, 33 M 342.

(5) Chetty v. Chetty, 1909 P. 67.

(6) Maung Man v. Daramo, 3 L.B.R. 244.

(7) Dualip Kuar v. Fatti, 1913 P. R. 99: 18 I.C. 913; Sodlie v. Sleersingh, (1895) P.R. 50; Shibditta v. Bela, (1900) P.R. 50; cf. Lachman v. Partap, 3 L.L.J. 336.

(8) Badamea v. Fatima Bai, 26 M.L.J. 260 (264).

(9) Inderun v. Ramaswami, 13 M.I. A. 141 (158); Lopez v. Lopez, 12 C. 706 (732); Lucas v. Lucas, 32 C. 187 (191).

(10) "What should not be done, yet being done, shall be valid" is a qualification of the general maxim quod ab initio non valet in tractu temporis non convalescit. (That which is bad in its commencement, does not improve by lapse of time).

(11) Raje Vyankatrav v. Jayavantrao, 4 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 191; Gurlinga v. Rama, 1 Bom.L.R. 226 P.C.; Sukhbasi v. Guman Singh, 2 A. 366 F.B.; Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj, 9 A. 253; Bene Prasad v. Hardai, 14 A. 67 F.B.; Chinna v. Kumara, 1 M.H.C.R. 54. See under "Adoption."

(12)) Diwali Bai v. Moti, 22 B. 509; Mulchand v. Bhudia, Ib., 812 (815).

defect, as where the adoption or marriage is irregularly performed or where the rule against the adoption or marriage of a particular person is simply directory, and not obligatory. But the maxim itself is one even of wider application and applies generally to condone formal defects and disobedience of rules which are merely directory, and not imperative.[1] Acting presumably on this principle, the children of a Mahomedan, who had married a Hindu, were held to be legitimate, though the reason given is that such marriage is, according to the Mahomedan Law, merely fasid (invalid) and not batil (void).[2]

20. The wife may re-marry if her husband is lost or is impotent or has become a religious ascetic or expelled from caste.[3]

Re-marriage of the wife.

(2) Where re-marriage is lawful, the wife may re-marry, if her husband, after leaving her, has not been heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive.[4]

Presumption of the death of the husband.

382. Re-marriage of wife.—Narad sanctions the re-marriage of a wife in the following cases of the marital legal necessity:—

"When her husband is lost or dead, when he has become a religious ascetic, when he is impotent, and when he has become expelled from caste; these are the five causes of legal necessity in which a woman may be justified in marrying another husband."[5]

383. Clause 2 is based upon S. 108 of the Evidence Act[6] which supersedes the varying Hindu rules on the subject. Manu and Narad allow the wife to re-marry after the continued absence of the husband for eight years[7] Gautam after six years[8] and Vashisth after five,[9] while Hindu Law generally prescribed twelve years as the period after which death might be presumed.[10] In all such cases, S. 108 of the Evidence Act now introduces a fixed period of absence after which the court will presume death.[11] The rule is taken from Taylor's work on Evidence.[12] It merely deals with a legal presumption as a matter of evidence, and does not dispense with the proof of the exact time of death whenever such question is necessary, as it is, for instance, to start limitation. The rule cannot be controlled by the difference of age, sex and state of health which does not set up any counter legal presumption.[13]

---

(1) Balusu v. Balusu, 22 M. 398 (415) P.C.

(2) Ihsadin Hasan v. Panna Lal, 7 Pat. 6.

(3) Narad, XII-97; to the same effect Parashara, IV-30; Manu, IX-76; Vashisth, XVII-20; 14 S.B.E. 86.

(4) S. 108, Indian Evidence Act (Act I of 1872).

(5) Narad, XII-97. To the same effect Parasara, IV-30; Manu, IX-76.

(6) I of 1872.

(7) Manu, IX-76; Narad, XII-98; Macnaghten's H.L., p. 9; Vyavastha Darpan (Sircar), pp. 10, 11; Ganganarayan v. Balram, 2 Mor. D. 152; Ayaboti v. Raj Krishna, 3 S.D.R. 28; Janmajay v. Keshah Lal, 2 B.L.R. (A.C.) 134, following Sarda Sundari v. Gobind, 2 B. L.R. (A.C.) 137-note.

(8) Gautam, XVIII-15, 17, if a Brahmin, 12 years, Ib.

(9) Vashisth, XVII-78; only four years, if she has no issue.

(10) 1 Strange H.L. 117; Ganesh v. Ragho, (1879) B.P.J. 18; Dhondo v. Ganesh, 11 B. 433; Guru Das v. Matilal, 6 B.L.R. (App.) 16.

(11) Parameshar v. Bisheshar, 1 A. 53 F.B.; Dharup Nath v. Gobind, 8 A. 614 (619).

(12) Dharup Nath v. Gobind, 8 A. 614 (619, 620). Taylor's statement is based on the decision of Lord Ellenborough, C.J., in Doed. George v. Jesson, 6 East 84; Doed. Lloyd v. Deakin, 4 B. & A. 433; and Stat. 19 Car. II, C. 11, S. 1.

(13) Underwood v. Wing, 23 L.J. Ch. 982, O.A. 24 L.J. Ch. 293, affirmed in Wing v. Angrav, 8 H.L.C. 183; Re Green's Settlement, L.R. 1 Eq. 289.

384. This clause merely deals with one of the causes dealt with in Narada's text, viz., disappearance of the husband for seven years. As the Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act only legalizes the marriage of all widows, and this section furnishes presumptive evidence of the husband's legal death, it follows that on expiration of this statutory period, the wife is entitled to consider herself a widow and get remarried under the Act. In other cases, the validity of her marriage must depend upon the force of custom. Even in the cases provided for in the section, the husband must not only be absent for seven years, but he must not have been heard of for that period by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive. This does not mean that these people should have heard from him. All that the section requires is that the missing man should have become untraceable, and no one should know where he is or be able to say that he had heard of his existence. This is a question of fact, to be proved in the first instance, to create a prima facie presumption upon which the wife is entitled to act. If the husband afterwards reappears he cannot maintain restitution against his wife or claim her as his own, for the law severs the link on the expiry of seven years.

385. Re-marriages of wives.—Amongst several custom-ridden castes, wives are permitted to remarry with or without the consent of their husbands. "Where women are greatly in demand, they are correspondingly free to decide with whom they will live, and in a caste of as high a status as the Jadams of Hoshangabad, an endogamous branch of Rajputs, it is said that a woman sometimes has as many as nine or ten husbands in the course of her life.[1] The courts, however, decline to succour run-away wives, holding the consent of the first husband essential to the validity of a second marriage. In many cases, the consent or acquiescence of the husband is considered essential to the dissolution of the first marriage, and till its dissolution the woman is not free to re-marry. In short, in these castes, re-marriage recognizes the custom of divorce; the husband being awarded a solatium in the shape of his marriage expenses, while the new husband celebrates the occasion by a caste dinner, called the Marti Jiti[2] feast, that is a feast which symbolizes the death of the wife to her former husband and her becoming alive to the new one. Sometimes, a writing called Chhod Chithi[3] is given to the wife to enable her to get re-married, while in some cases, the husband, though not a willing party to his wife's re-marriage, acquiesces in it on terms. Certain castes permit re-marriage of wives upon desertion by their husbands. The courts uphold all such transactions in which re-marriage follows upon a divorce[4] or desertion.[5] Sometimes, the wife re-marries with the permission of the elders of the caste, but in this case if the husband remains recusant, the elders have neither the power to decree a divorce nor permit a re-marriage, and any custom which transfers this power from the husband to his castemen is unreasonable and immoral, legalizing adultery,[6] which, the courts would not enforce.[7] The marriage of wives is quite customary amongst the

(1) Census of India, 1911, Vol. I, § 297, p. 245.

(2) Lit. "dead and alive."

(3) Lit. "Letter of Release."

(4) Steel's Law of Castes, p. 168 et seq; Reg v. Karson, 2 B.H.C.R. 117; Rahi v. Gobind, 1 B. 97 (114); Sri Ram v. Inchi, 11 A.L.J. 711 : 21 I.C. 313.

(5) E. v. Umi, 6 B. 126; Virasangappa v. Rudrappa, 8 M. 440.

(6) Bai Ugri v. Patel Purushottam, 17 B. 400 (405, 406).

(7) Reg. v. Karson, 2 B.H.C.R. 117; Narayan v. Laving, 2 B. 140; Uji v. Hathi Lalu, 7 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 433.

Shudras,[1] but it is not unusual amongst even the twice born castes, e.g., the Sompura Brahmins of Ahmedabad, the Lodhis of the United Provinces,[2] the Lingayat Banias[3] of the Southern Provinces and many castes, high and low of the Punjab, which is the greatest latitudinarian as regards the custom regulating the relation of the sexes.

Widow Re-marriage.

21. A Shudra widow is entitled to re-marry.

(2) The re-marriage of widows amongst Dwijas must be authorised by custom, in the absence of which, it is subject to the provisions of the Hindu Widow's Re-marriage Act, 1856.

386. Analogous Law.—It has been already seen that the re-marriage of widows was at one time not only customary but even obligatory. (§§ 16-17). It has also been seen how, in course of time, this practice fell into desuetude till the pendulam of custom having swung to the opposite extreme of enjoining and even ordaining the self-immolation of the newly made widow with the body of her husband. (§ 39). These Vedic and Shastric tenets, it seems, remained confined to the twice-born and amongst them to a few. The British Government abolished the practice of Sati, and once more legalized the marriage of widows[4] in quarters in which it had fallen into desuetude.[5]

Re-marriage of Widows.

387. The widow re-marriage was always customary amongst the Shudras. It was customary even amongst some of the higher castes, of which the Pat marriages of the Mahrathas.[6] And the Natra marriages of Guzerat are familiar examples, while the same custom has been traced up to the Gour Rajputs of the United Provinces,[7] and the Sompura Brahmins of Ahmedabad.[8] Of all widow marriages, the marriage of the widow to the deceased husband's younger brother is that most favoured and one which needs least ceremony everywhere. It is the modern relic of an ancient custom which was at one time a feature of Hindu society and still lingers even amongst some of the twice-born, e.g., the Taga Brahmins of Upper India[9] and in the Punjab, where the re-marriage of even a pregnant widow has been held to be customary and not opposed to "equity and good conscience and public morality."[10] (§ 370).

388. Customary marriages of Hindu widows were wholly insufficient to check the growing evil, resulting from the surplus of unmarried widows, which attracted the notice of the Legislature, which in 1856, passed an Act[11] "to remove all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows." This Act merely supplements the custom, by legalizing the re-marriage of widows in cases when their re-marriage would have Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act, 1856.

(1) Khembar v. Umai Shankar, 10 B. H.C.R. 381.
(2) Kesaree v. Samardhan, 5 N.W. P.H.C.R. 94.
(3) Virasangappa v. Rudrappa, 8 M. 440 (451).
(4) Widow Re-marriage Act (XV of 1856); Civil Marriages Act (III of 1872).
(5) Sri Ram v. Inchi, 11 A.L.J. 711 : 21 I.C. 313 (there can be no re-marriage of a married woman unless sanctioned by custom).
(6) Sitaram v. Laxman, 8 N.L.R. 128 : 17 I.C. 133.
(7) Lachman v. Mardan Singh, 8 A. 134.
(8) Khemkar v. Umai Shanker, 10 B. H.C.R. 381.
(9) Mula v. Partab, 32 A. 489.
(10) Bhagat Singh v. Santi, (1919) P.R. 102 : 50 I.C. 654.
(11) Act XV of 1856.

been opposed to custom. The result of this Act, coupled with custom, is to establish the right of all Hindu widows to remarry; though her re-marriage under the Act determines her interest in her late husband's property. In other words, while a widow re-marrying by custom may retain her first husband's estate if so permitted by custom, the one who marries under the Act must of necessity forfeit it because it is so provided therein.[1] The Act was never intended to vary the existing custom in favour of re-marriage or any of its legal incidents. It was merely intended to enable widows of those castes to re-marry who by their custom were prevented from re-marrying, and it is only to those and those alone that the Act extends and applies. If her estate is from its very nature limited and its enjoyments conditioned upon her remaining unremarried then her re-marriage would necessarily determine her estate.[2] It seems that, apart from the Act, custom sanctions the re-marriage of Jat widows subject to the same penalty, namely, that upon her re-marriage she forfits her right to her husband's estate.[3]

22. The marriage expenses of all members of an undivided family are a legitimate charge on its property.[4]

Marriage Expenses.

389. Analogous Law.—Marriage being a Samskar and an obligatory religious duty, binding upon all Hindus, whether Dwijias or Shudras, male or female, it follows that the expenses of marriage constitute a family necessity for which its property may be validly alienated or charged.[5] This liability is common to every manager, whether the father or any other coparcener, or whether the estate is in the hands of a qualified owner such as a Hindu female. But of course, this amount must not be out of all proportion to the requirments of the case.[6] Even the expenses of the second marriage of a male co-parcener are so chargeable. The right to such expenses does not rest on contract. The liability is created by Hindu Law and arises out of the moral relation of the members of the Hindu family.

23. Every marriage is subject to the following conditions, namely:—

---

(1) Bhola Umar v. Kausilla, 55 A. 24 F.B.; distg., contra Matungini v. Ram Rutton, 19 C. 289 F.B.; Vitta Tayarama v. Chatakondu, 41 M. 1078 F.B.; Suraj Jore v. Attar Kumari, 1 Pat. 706; Basorey v. Ballabidas, 6 N.L.R. 171; Sitaram v. Laxman, 8 N.L.R. 128; see this subject further discussed in "Woman's Estate", post.

(2) Matunjini v. Ram Rattan Ray, 16 C. 289; Rasul v. Ram Saran, 22 C. 589 (595); Gouricharan v. Sita, 14 C. W.N. 346; Muhammad v. Mankuar, 21 C.W.N. 906; Murugayi v. Viramakali, 1 M. 226; Vitta v. Chatakandu, 41 M. 1078 F.B.; Venkatachalam v. Rama, 12 M.L.W. 322 : 59 I.C. 91 : Vithu v. Govinda, 22 B. 321. Tappo v. E. (1937) S. 42. See post under "Inheritance."

(3) Ram Kishen v. Medle Singh, 1 I.C. 141 (A.) (a case of Karao re-marriage from Meerut).

(4) Sundrabhai v. Shiv Narayana, 32 B. 81; Kameswara v. Veracharlu, 34 M. 422; Arunachellam v. Arunachellam, 10 I.C. (M.) 285; Marina v. Doddisetti, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 380; Seeni Ammal v. Angamuthu, 1912 M.W.N. 99; Gopalakrishna v. Venkatanarasa, 37 M. 273; Srinivasa v. Tiruvengada, 38 M. 556 (577-579); Pohumal v. Naroomal, 6 S.L.R. 246 : 19 I.C. 835; Yellamanchilli v. Yellamanchilli, 19 M.L.J. 666 : 4 I.C. 1069; Nandan v. Ajudhia, 32 A. 325 F. B., contra in Namasivayam v. Annamall, 4 M.H.C.R. 339; Seshammall v. Munisam, Mad. unrep., cited in Sundari v. Subramania, 26 M. 505; Vaikuntam v. Kallapiram, 23 M. 512; Govindarasulla v. Devarabhotla, 27 M. 206.

(5) Ib., contra, Ram Jash v. Chand Mandal, I.L.R. (1937) 2 C. 764.

(6) Raghunatha v. Damodar, (1910) M.W.N. 195 : 6 I.C. 720; Nandan v. Ajudhia, 32 A. 325 (332) F.B.

No valid marriage within prohibited degree.

(a) That the parties thereto must not be within the prohibited degree of relationship;[1] and

(b) That if the parties thereto are Dwijas, they, ordinarily, must be of the same caste.[2]

Explanation 1.—The prohibited degree of relationship for the purpose of marriage is regulated by custom.[3]

Explanation 2.—A person shall be deemed to be within the prohibited degree of relationship whose marriage is opposed to common morality.[4]

Illustrations.

(a) The Shastras prescribe that Dwijas' sons who are Sapindas, Gotrajas or who belong to the same Pravar should not intermarry. A, a Dwija, wishes to marry B, who is related to A. The validity of this marriage depends upon the usage of the caste.

(b) A has married B, who is his own sister's daughter. The marriage is valid as it is sanctioned by custom.[5]

(c) A, a Kshatriya, marries B, who is the illegitimate daughter of a Kshatriya father. The caste people recognize it as a valid union. The marriage is valid.

390. Analogous Law.—Numerous texts on the subject of prohibited degrees are to be found in Smritis.[6] They are conflicting, many of them too wide, and none of them of general application. The Shastric law prohibited marriage of persons of the same Gotra and Pravar or who were inter-related as Sapindas. These barriers were too wide to be effective.

So Mandlik observes: "The question of a proper or an improper marriage is, therefore, always one of usage, to be determined according to the people's achar (practice) and not by mere texts of greater or less antiquity."[7]

391. Sapindas cannot inter-marry.—Within the prohibited degree, the Shastras interdict all marriage between sapindas.[8] But this restriction disqualifies too widely as it would exclude no less than over 2,000 relations as compared to 30 relations amongst Europeans. Communal and territorial customs have, consequently, greatly narrowed down the circle of prohibited degree.

392. But the sapinda prohibition is not the only one that stands in the way of the orthodox marriage, for the parties must not belong to the same Gotra or Pravar. These three rules are independent, and the fact that a party is not a sapinda does not make him marriageable, for he may be a Gotraj, and failing both, he may still be of the same Pravar. It is said that the two latter prohibitions apply only to the Brahmins, since both the Kshatriyas and the Vaishyas have neither a Gotra nor a

(1) Manu, III-5, V-60; Vishnu, XXIV-10, 11; S.B.E. 106, 107; Yaj. I-52, 53; Narad, XII-7; Mandlik's H.L., p. 413.
(2) See S. 19, supra.
(3) Mandalik's H.L., p. 414.
(4) Ib.
(5) Mandlik's H.L., p. 425.
(6) Manu, III-5, V-60; Vishnu, XXIV-10, 11; 7 S.B.E., pp. 106, 107; Yad. I-52; Narad, XII-7; Gautam, IV, 2-5 to the same effect Harit; Vashisth, Paithinas, cited in Mit. Note on Yad. I-53 (Panini Ed.) p. 110; Samskar Kaustubh, cited in Mandlik's H.L., p. 413. Quoted in Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), pp. 305, 306 § 531.
(7) Mandlik's H.L., p. 414.
(8) Yadnavalkya, Lit. Mit., Ch. III See ch. on "Inheritance."

Pravar, but the Mitakshara lays down that the Gotra and Pravar of their family priest are theirs, and so they too are subject to these limitations.[1] But the Shudras are stated to be subject only to the sapinda prohibition, as they have neither Gotra nor Pravar.[2]

393. The three terms "Sapinda," "Gotra" and "Pravar" used by the Smritikars require explanation.

Meaning of Sapinda.

The word "Sapinda" in its etymological sense means one who is of the same "pinda."

The word "Pinda" is a word of uncertain import and may, among other things, mean either a body or a ball. The Mitakshara understands it in the first sense, Raghunandan, the accredited writer the Bengal School, understands it in the other. According to the one it means relations who are related to one another by reason of the fact that they possess particles of the same body, according to Raghunandan the word indicates relations of a person with whom, when deceased, he partakes of the obsequial offering of the rice ball. That this view is forced and far-fetched, will be seen in the sequel when dealing with inheritance.[3]

394. The terms "Sapinda," "Gotra" and Pravar" are explained in the Mitakshara. Referring to the prohibition against sapinda marriage, the author of the Mitakshara observes that that term must be understood as limited to the fifth and seventh degree removed from the mother and father respectively. Without any such limitation all people of the world would be sapindas of one another. "Thus the six ascendants beginning with the son, and one's self counted, in each as the seventh, in each case are sapinda relations."[4] So also beginning from the mother and counting her father and grandfather, etc., till the fifth ancester is reached is the meaning of the words fifth from the mother."[5] But in the case of children of hypergamous marriages (called Anuloma births), the sapinda relationship extends only up to the third degree.[6]

Who is a Sapinda.

395. The following table gives the simplest example of this prohibited relationship:—

A

2 S	2 S
3 D	3 D
4 D	4 S
5 S	5 D
6 D	6 S

Here 6 D cannot marry 6 S because 6 D is within seven degrees on her father's side related to 6 S. But in this case if 6 S were a female and 6 D a male could have validly married 6 S, because 6 D would then have been more than five degrees remote from her mother related to 6 S through their common ancestor A. But even in the days of the Mitakshara, this prohibition was held by some to go too far. Paithinasi is quoted by the Mitakshara as laying down that a damsel may be espoused

(1) Mit. Note on Yad. 1-52 (Panini Ed.), p. 106.
(2) Mit. (Panini Ed.), p. 106.
(3) See Dayabhag, Ch. XI, S. 33, and discussion on the subject under "Inheritance", post.
(4) Mit. (Panini Ed.), p. 110.
(5) Ib., p. 110. To the same effect Vashisth, VIII-2; Gautam, IV-2-25; Vishnu, XXIV-10; Narad, XII-7.
(6) Ib., pp. 110, 111.

who is beyond the third on the mother's and fifth on the father's side.[1] In this view, 4 D could have validly married 4 S. On the other hand, Manu prohibits marriages up to the seventh degree on either side,[2] which he lays down as the last degree of the sapinda relationship.[3]

These relationshps were at one time explained only to refer to the question of marriage. So they do, but they have been held equally to control inheritance.[4]

Special Mode of Counting.

396. In laying down the limit of sapinda relationship, the *Smrithi*kars follow the canonist rule of computation at variance with the civilian rule followed in Sections 25 and 26 of the Succession Act. The former start counting with the propositus who counts as one degree, while the latter exclude the propositus in their calculation. Consequently, when in the foregoing texts the sapinda relationship is declared to end with the 5th, 6th or 7th degree, it means that it ends with the 4th, 5th and 6th degree, according to the modern method of computation.

Sapindas and Bandhus the same.

397. The sapinda relationship described in the ritual section of the Mitakshara has been held to apply equally to inheritance. But when dealing with that subject, it will be seen that the term Bandhu is often used in a sense different to sapindas. For the present it may be noted that the two terms are synonymous and were so intended by Narad who in defining the limits speaks of the Sapindas as Bhandus.[5]

(2) Gotraj.

398. Secondly, some sacred texts[6] prohibit inter-marriages of Gotrajas though custom has in places relaxed the rule.[7] What is then a Gotraj? In theory, all the twice-born people, according to some, only the Brahmins, are descendants in the male line from certain Rishis or sages who are said to be the accredited progenitors of the race. All the descendants from this common Rishi bear a single family name, in the same way as all the descendants in the male line from Smith and Brown bear those surnames. Gotrajas are thus persons entitled to the same surname. According to a text, cited by Raghunandan, there were originally 8 such progenitors, and their names are Agastya, Atri, Bharadwaj, Gautam, Jamdagni, Kashyap, Vasisth and Vishwamitra.[8] But many of their distinguished descendants have founded new families and new Gotras, so that the number of such secondary Gotras runs into millions. Every twice-born owns one of these primeval procreators as the founder of his family, and as several thousands of families make the same claim, it follows that Gotaraj relationship offers a formidable impediment to the establishment of connubial relations. This relationship is, of course, a purely artificial one and its artificiality is acknowledged in the Mitakshara in which it is said that the Kshatriyas and Vaishayas have neither Gotra

---

(1) Mit. (Panini Ed.), p. 110.
(2) III-§ 5.
(3) V-§ 60.
(4) Ramachandra v. Vinayek, 42 C. 384 P.C.
(5) XII-7. This sense is lost in its translation in 33 S. B. E. 166.—See text in original cited in Sarkar's H.L. (3rd ed.,), p. 74.
(6) Gautam and Vashisth do not mention Gotra at all.—See texts cited ante.
(7) Shah Deo Narain v. Kusum, 5 Pat.L.J. 164.
(8) Balam Bhatt names 18 such Rishis —with several sub-divisions of each—See Mit. (Acharkand), Panini Ed., pp. 107, 109.

nor Pravar of their own,[1] but that they should follow the Gotra and Pravar of their family priests.[2] Persons belonging to two different castes may possess the same Gotra. This is explained away on the ground that castes were a later development of Hindu society, and therefore the arrangement of the people into castes did not affect their Gotra. It is equally plausible that two families of different castes having the same family priests would naturally adopt the latter's Gotra as enjoined by the Mitakshara, and so Gotraja relationship would in course of time transcend the barriers of caste and the still narrower confines of the sapinda relationship.

(3) Pravar.

399. The question of pravar still remains. Its meaning is explained by Baudhayan as follows:—

"Jamdagni, Bharadwaj, Viswamitra, Atri, Gautam, Vashisth, Kashyap, Agastya—these Rishis are the makers of the Gotras. Their descendants have founded Gotras. These are thousands and hundred millions. Among them forty-nine are Pravars or excellent from having attained to the wisdom of Rishis, and they are founders of Pravars. As long as there is one Rishi common to several Pravars, so long there is relationship of the same Gotra excepting the children of Bhrigu and Angiras."[3]

A Pravar then is an approved Gotra, and as there are 49 such Pravars, some of which have been founded by the same Rishi those related through such common Rishi are themselves inter-related and so cannot inter-marry.[4]

(4) Step-mother.

400. The step-mother and, at least, some of her relations in the same degree cannot be married, for "the wives of the father are all mothers, their brothers are maternal uncles, their sisters are mother's sisters, their daughters are sisters, and the offspring of those daughters are children of a sister." Opinions differ as to whether the relations named are merely illustrative or exhaustive. The Western lawyers favour the former,[5] the Eastern the latter interpretation.

(5) Adoption.

401. Another subject, upon which there is a conflict, is the effect of adoption upon the prohibited degrees. Since a son by adoption has consanguineous relationship with one family and relationship by adoption with the other, the question arises whether such son is debarred from marrying all the sapindas of his natural as well as the adopted family. It is said that if the adoption took place after the boy had had the Upanayan ceremony performed, then the prohibition as to marriage in his natural family extends to all sapindas and in his adopted family only to three degrees. If, however, all the Samskars, except the Upanayan were performed in his natural family, but only the Upanayan was performed in the adopter's family, then the prohibition extends in both families to five degrees on

(1) The implication being that they cannot claim the same descent from a saint as the Brahmins.

(2) Ch. III, V-52, Mit., and note thereon, p. 106.

(3) Manu does not mention Pravar, nor does his commentator Kulluk. Like Manu, Brihat Parasar also omits it.—See texts cited in Hindu Code (3rd ed.), § 531, pp. 305, 306.

(4) Cited in the Parasar Madhav, and Parijat, p. 137; also by Hardutt in Ujval. Balam Bhatta gives a long disquisition on this subject of Gotra and Pravar, for which see her gloss to the Mitakshara note to Yad. v. 52 (Panini Ed.), pp. 107-109; see also Max Muller's Hist. S. L., pp. 195, 200.

(5) Mandlik's H.L., p. 352.

the father's side and three degrees on the mother's side. But if all the Samskars commencing from Jatkarm to the Upanayan were performed in the adopter's family, then the order of the first case is reversed, the prohibition extending in the adopter's family to all sapindas and in the natural family only to three degrees. The Nirnai Sindhu would, however, extend the prohibition in all the three cases to all sapindas of both the families, while Nagoji Bhatt would make no prohibition against marriage in the natural family on the ground that adoption severs relationship with the natural family altogether.

402. If all the precepts had any value, the number of prohibited relations would exceed 6,000, and since there is the other mandatory prohibition against marriage out of caste, an adopted son with a step-mother must be thrice blessed if he can manage to secure a wife, let alone the ideal damsel of Manu's imagination.

403. As already observed, the Courts regard this[1] and the other questions of prohibited degree as one of custom, and not one of interpretation of the textual law.

(6) Other Prohibitions.

404. It might have been thought these triple prohibitions had sufficiently narrowed down the field of selection. But they are not all. For there are other prohibitions against the marriage of the following non-consanguineous relations, viz., (1) the step-mother's sister, (2) her brother's daughter, (3) his daughter's daughter, (4) the paternal uncles's wife's sister, (5) the wife's sister's daughter[2] and (6) the preceptor's daughter. .....

405. General Result of the Shastric Rules.—The net result of the shastric rules as to the prohibited degree of relationship for marriage is to render ineligible no less than 2,100 relations as against the thirty relations with whom marriage is prohibited amongst the Christian nations.[3] It may be doubted whether these restrictions were ever tolerated in practice. From the context it would seem that they were rather in the nature of moral precepts addressed to the adept student, than to the people at large in the market place.

It has already been said that in no case does usage sanction such widespread exclusion, and the fourth degree appears to be the utmost verge of a valid prohibition given effect to in practice. And there are a good many marriages within that limit.

406. These being then the textual rules that are both obsolete and impossible and no other general rules to take their place, the courts leave the question of the prohibited degree to be decided by custom, and no other alternative is possible or suggested even by the stoutest supporters of textual authority.[4]

407. Marriageable Sapinda Relations.—It has already been stated that the true test of the prohibited degree is custom, and not the textual law. As such, a person may validly marry his own maternal uncle's

---

(1) Vaithilinga v. Vijayathmmal, 6 M. 43 (48).

(2) Such marriage is valid: Ragavendra v. Jayaram, 20 M. 283.

(3) See English rules of prohibited relations, cited in Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), § 548, p. 312.

(4) See Sarkar's H.L. (3rd Ed.), p. 96; Ghose, H.L. (3rd Ed.), pp. 792, 793.

daughter,[1] or his own sister's daughter[2] or his wife's sister's daughter,[3] or his step-mother's sister's and sister's daughter, his paternal uncle's wife's sister, his paternal uncle's wife's sister's daughter, her brother's daughter and his children's daughter[4]—any text to the contrary being explained away on the ground that they are merely hortatory and not imperative.

408. So, again, marriages by exchange are not only customary but common and everywhere regarded as valid, though they are directly opposed to the scriptual text.[5] So Steele mentions cases in which intermarriages with cousins and nieces, though prohibited, do occasionally take place.[6] In a Bombay case, the court however condemned the marriage of a man with his siste's daughter as incestuous,[7] but in basing their decision on the Shastric texts[8] the learned Judges took care to add that there was no allegation or proof of any custom tolerating such a marriage.

409. Some texts prohibit the marriage of certain relations, e.g., the wife's sister's daughter. But this is held to be merely a moral precept.[9] There are other prohibitions, but their saving grace is custom.

Invalid marriages.

24. A marriage may be rendered invalid for any of the following reasons:—

(1) because the parties were related within the prohibited degree,[10]

(2) because they were of different non-inter-marriageable castes,[11]

(3) because they did not observe the essential ceremonies,[12]

(4) because their marriage was brought about by force or fraud.[13]

(1) Within prohibited degree.

410. The question of prohibited degree is a question of fact to be decided upon the evidence in each case. In the absence of such evidence the court will be guided in its decision by the recorded or reputed law, and if it finds such a marriage prohibited, all it can do is to treat it as a nullity. The authorities declare such marriage as wholly null and void, though the woman married is entitled to be maintained as a sister.[14] This was the view taken in a case in which a Brahmin had married his niece.[15]

.. ..

(1) Mandlik's H.L., pp. 418, 424. The Nirnay Sindhu recognizes the custom; Ib. So does the Achar Madhav, Ib., p. 418.

(2) Ib., p. 425.

(3) Ib., followed in Ragavendra v. Jayaram, 20 M. 283 (286, 287).

(4) Ragavendra v. Jayaram, 20 M. 283 (286); Ramchandra v. Gopal, 32 B. 619 (630).

(5) Narad, cited by Kaustubh, 1-196, p. 1, verse and translation in Mandlik's H.L., p. 414, F.-N. 3.

(6) Steele's Law of Caste, p. 165.

(7) Ramangavda v. Shivaji, (1876) B. P.J. 73.

(8) Mandlik shows that even the texts cited do not support the conclusion.—See Mandlik's H.L., pp. 438, 439.

(9) Ramakrishna v. Subbanna, 43 M. 830.

(10) S. 23, supra.

(11) S. 19, supra.

(12) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M. I. A. 141 (158). See S. 18, supra.

(13) S. 25, post.

(14) Manu, III-5; Yadnavalkya, I-52; Mayukh, IV S-5-pt. 29; Macnaghten's H. L. (2nd Ed.) 61; Steele's L.C. (2nd Ed.), pp. 26, 30, 163, 166.

(15) Ramangavda v. Shivaji, (1876) 3 B.P.J. 73; Reprint, p. 57.

411. Inter-caste marriages stand on a somewhat different footing.

(2) Difference of Castes.

Those contracted in the face of the Shastric prohibitions, e.g., higher caste woman marrying a man belonging to the lower caste, (i.e., pratiloma marriages) have been declared to be void in places, such as Bombay and the United Provinces, in cases in which the parties failed to plead or prove any legalizing custom (§§ 376-381.) Such marriages create no legal obligation beyond the one to maintain the wife. Inter-sub-caste marriages are, however, not prohibited by the Shastras, though they are not favoured by custom. They are well protected by the doctrine of factum valet, and cannot be avoided. (§§ 376-381).

412. The Shastras regard the Shudra caste as a single caste, as comprising all who are not Dwijas. As such, the numerous castes into which the Shudras have become divided have no scriptural sanction, and inter-caste marriages among them are neither prohibited nor unusual. Even where a determined stand is made against them, they are likely to be upheld on the ground of factum valet.

413. When a marriage is proved to have been performed in fact,

(3) Non-observance of ceremonies.

it is presumed to be valid in law, since, as observed by the Privy Council, "It would be a most unlikely thing for a person of his caste to go through the ceremony of marriage, if it was known that the marriage was a marriage which was invalid in law.[1] In view of the law, ceremony is but the evidence of marriage, and where its factum is proved, its form is to be presumed, and it lies heavily on one to prove the contrary.

Avoidance of marriage.

25. (1) A marriage brought about by force or fraud may be avoided by the party affected thereby.[2]

(2) It may also be avoided on the ground of the husband's impotency, or either party's imbecility, but it cannot be avoided for their infancy or other incapacity which rendered them incapable of understanding the nature of their marital obligations and their consequence upon their individual rights or their own mental or physical incapacity to discharge them.[3]

414. Analogous Law.—There is a Shastric authority for this rule. Taking marriage as either the gift or sale of the bride to the bridegroom, the section falls within the general principle enunciated by Manu that force[4] and fraud[5] vitiate all transactions with which Yadnavalkya[6] and Narada[7] agree. So referring to marriage, Manu Says: "A person may abandon a maiden, though taken or accepted in due form of ceremony, if she be blemished, diseased, or deflowered and given fraudulently."[8] But this is explained as relating only to a stage before the Saptapadi, i.e., its completion.[9] This explanation explains away the text which

(1) Inderun v. Ramasawmy, 13 M. I.A. 141 (158).
(2) Manu, VIII-165, 168; Narad, IV-9, 10; Yaj., II-31, Mandlik, p. 204. Appibai v. Khimji, 60 B. 455 (467, 468).
(3) Narad, XII-19, 97; 9 S.B.E. 166 et seq.
(4) Manu, VIII-168.
(5) VIII-165.
(6) Yad. 11-31, Mandlik, p. 204.
(7) IV-9, 10.
(8) IX-72.
(9) Vashisth, XVII-73; 14 S.B.E. 92; Baudhayan, I-14 A.; II-14; S.B.E. 314.

itself did not go far. However, whatever may have been the view of the Smritikars, the court regards the rule as well settled, and though slow to give effect to it, where the mischief cannot be retrieved, it will not hesitate to cancel a marriage if it is brought about by force or fraud of either party, or their guardians.[1]

415. Clause 2 is supported by the following texts:—

Narad.—"19. Women have been created for the sake of propagation, the wife being the field, and the husband the giver of the seed. The field must be given to him who has seed. He who has no seed is unworthy to possess the field.

"97. When her husband is lost or dead, when he has become a religious ascetic, when he is impotent, and when he has been expelled from caste: these are the five cases of legal necessity, in which a woman may be justified in taking another husband."[2]

Force or Fraud.

416. A marriage brought about by force or fraud is not void but voidable by the party wronged.[3] But before it can be avoided, the court must be satisfied of the violation of some substantial right and material prejudice; otherwise, it will condone mere irregularities, omissions and errors of procedure which could not be permitted to affect such solemn obligations as those of a marriage: quod fieri non debuit factum valet.[4] So the courts have refused to set aside marriages performed without the consent of the lawful guardian,[5] or where the certificated guardian marries without the consent of the District Judge.[6] But the case would be different where a marriage of a minor is performed with no consent at all. Such was the case of the defendant who forcibly married his minor sister-in-law who had gone on a visit to see his wife.[7] So where a woman was entrapped into a marriage without the consent of her guardian and the match appeared to the court unnecessary and unsuitable, it set aside holding that its invalidity could not be cured by recourse to the doctrine of factum valet.[8] So in another case, where a minor widow was alleged to have been married by the chadar-andazi ceremony, but it appeared that the marriage was performed without the consent of her parents or any other lawful guardian, and that the minor, though consenting to it, was legally incapable of offering herself in marriage, the court held the marriage void, as consent which was necessary to the nexus of the marriage was wholly wanting.[9] Of course, in such cases, the want of a previous consent might have been made good by a subsequent acquiescence. The one question which exercise the court in cases of cancellation is whether the party suing for that relief will not be the greater sufferer by reason of

(1) In Mani v. Zaboo, 22 N.L.R. 134; (1926) N. 488, a pat marriage was held indissoluble even though the wife concealed her pregnancy by her former husband; because marriage was held to be a sacrament—Sed quare.

(2) Narad, XII-19, 97; 9 S.B.E. 166 et seq.

(3) Ankamma v. Ramanappa, (1937) M. 332.

(4) What should not be done, yet being done, shall be valid." Ankamma v. Ramanappa, (1937) M. 332 (334) (husband an adult sued for the invalidity of his marriage to defendant on the ground of coercion.

(5) Rulyat (Bai) v. Jeychand, (1840-48) Bellasis 43; Mulchand v. Bhudia, 22 B. 812 (815); Venkatacharyulu, v. Rangacharyulu, 14 M. 316; Brindabun v. Chandra Kumar, 140; Khushalchand v. Bai Mani, 11 B. 247; Diwali (Bai) v. Moti, 22 B. 509; Gazi v. Sukru, 19 A. 515; Misri Lalsa v. Harlalsa, 15 C.P.L. R. 46; Dayal v. Narain, (1884) P.R. 64.

(6) Diwali (Bai) v. Moti, 22 B. 509.

(7) Lal Chand v. Thakur Devi, (1903) P.R. 49.

(8) Anjona v. Prahlad, 6 B.L.R. 243; Dayal v. Narain Das, (1884) P.R. 64; Lalchand v. Thakur Devi, (1903) P.R. 49.

(9) Lalchand v. Thakur Devi, (1903) P.R. 49; Appibai v. Khimji, 60 B. 455; (467, 468); Ankamma v. Ramanappa, (1937) M. 332.

the relief granted thereby. Where, for instance, the parties, or either of them, is impubes and the marriage has not been consummated, cancellation would cause no serious injury, but where marriage has been followed up by consummation, and the wife sues for cancellation, the court may have to consider whether the cancellation would be to her advantage.

417. Though impotency and imbecility are clearly recognised in the texts as a bar to marriage and as good reasons for its dissolution, they do not appear to have actively passed into the custom of the people, other than the Shudras, amongst whom they afford a good ground for divorce. But amongst the twice-born, though the law is as stated, it has been made a dead letter by the practice of the courts, who are held to posses no matrimonial jurisdiction in such cases, beyond awarding a decree declaratory of a fact, which in this case is left to the decision of the caste autonomy.[1] It is true that apart from custom a Hindu marriage is not subject to divorce.[2] But the dissolution of the tie of marriage brought about by the husband's disabilities is akin to, though not quite the same as, divorce.[3] That imbecility is a disqualification to marriage was conceded by the Privy Council in a case in which, however, they affirmed the finding of the courts in India that the husband, though insane, was yet not incapable of knowing what he was doing, adding that "the objection to a marriage on the ground of mental incapacity must depend on a question of degree."[4] In one case, it was conceded that a Hindu marriage may be dissolved on the ground of the bridegroom's impotency,[5] but, in another case, it was said that since marriage was a sacrament,[6] and not a contract, the insanity of the husband did not disqualify him from performing it,[7] but it has been held in Madras, that since marriage creates mutual rights and obligations it does require a consensual mind,[8] and it is obvious that a lunatic is excluded from the performance of any religious rite much less a sacrament. But it has been held in Bombay that the husband's impotency is no ground for refusing him a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights[9] but though such decree can no longer be enforced by imprisonment, it may be upheld on the ground that so long as the marriage tie lasts the marriage obligations remain.

418. The question whether a marriage is rendered void on account of impotency, insanity and incapacity of either party depends upon its true notion and purpose. It has been said that "a Hindu marriage is the performance of a religious duty, not a contract; therefore the consenting mind is not necessary, and its absence, whether from infancy or incapacity, is immaterial."[10] Each one of these propositions has, however, been denied. It is held that a Hindu marriage is a contract,[11] and that imbecility is an impediment to its formation: but the question is one of

---

(1) Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath, 9 N. L.R. 102 (104): 20 I.C. 557.

(2) Kudomoee v. Joteeram, 3 C. 305; Hira v. Hansji, 37 B. 295; Sankaralingam v. Subban, 17 M. 479.

(3) Sinnammal v. A.G., 8 M. 169 (173).

(4) Monji Lal v. Chandrabati, 38 C. 700 (703, 706, 707) P.C.

(5) Kanhai Ram v. Biddya Ram, 1 A. 549 (551).

(6) Manu, II-66, 67.

(7) Deokishen v. Budh Prakash, 5 A. 509 (513) F.B.

(8) Muthusami v. Masilamani, 33 M. 342 (355).

(9) Purushotam Das v. Mani, 21 B. 610 (615).

(10) Mayne's Hindu Law (9th Ed.), § 90, p. 110.

(11) Manu, V-152; per Sankaran Nair, J., in Muthusami v. Masilamani, 33 M. 342 (355).

degree.[1] The fact that marriaeg is a religious rite does not prevent it from being a conjugal contract. Indeed, no person can circumscribe another's freedom in the guise of religion, unless it is warranted by law, and the reciprocal rights and obligations created by marriage are no less secular because they find a place in a theocratic system of law. In that system, while marriage is regarded as a sacrament, its sole purpose is emphasized to be the procreation of a son.[2] In the archaic age the purpose was attained by the practice of Niyog; but in later ages, this practice fell into desuetude, but the old texts remained and were repeated by later text writers as if they were still a part of the current law. The abject subordination of woman was yet another feature of ancient law which has only been partially ameliorated by the statute. In the view of Smritikars the wife became, upon her marriage, entirely dependent upon her husband. If he did not like her he was free to discard her, and take unto himself other wives. But if she found him impotent she had no remedy, though he could force her to receive the embraces of other men. A eunuch and an idiot cannot inherit, but, nevertheless, they were competent to marry. It is submitted, that since the discontinuance of Niyogi, impotency is an insuperable obstacle to marriage both under Hindu as well as the general law; under Hindu Law because a eunuch cannot beget a son, and under general law because it fails to serve the primary purpose of marriage, namely, the rising of issue. But the contrary was held in a Bombay case.[3] And since Hindu Law regards marriage in the nature of a gift by the father of his daughter to the husband, the latter is incompetent to receive the gift unless he possessed sufficient intelligence to accept it.[4] But these deductions from analogies do not carry the law of marriage very far, and without legislative interference, the correlative rights and duties of the husband and wife cannot be placed on a satisfactory footing.

26. (1) On its completion the marriage becomes indissoluble and is not subject to judicial separation or divorce for the adultery, cruelty or other misconduct of either party.[5]

No Judicial Separation or Divorce permitted.

No Dissolution for apostasy, Degradation, or Loss of Caste.

(2) The tie of marriage is not dissolved by the apostasy, degradation or loss of caste of either party.[6]

419. Analogous Law.—The following text bears on the subject of this section:—

Deval.—"The husband may be forsaken by his wife if he be an abandoned sinner, or an heretical mendicant or impotent or decript or afflicted with pthisis or if he have been long absent in a foreign country."[7]

420. Divorce.—From its very idea of a sacrament a Hindu marriage is held to be indissoluble. The effect of the marriage upon the wife is to

(1) Monji Lal v. Chandrabati, 38 C. 700 (706) P.C.

(2) Manu, VI-36, 37.

(3) Purushotam Das v. Mani, 21 B. 610 (613).

(4) Monji Lal v. Chandrabati, 38 C. 700 P.C. contra in Manu, VIII-205; Deo Kishan v. Budh Prakash, 5 A. 509 (513) F.B.; the father's right is personal and cannot be delegated to another. Atmaram v. Banku Mal, 11 L. 596. Nor can he exercise before the child is born. Ib., but see §§ 357-360, supra.

(5) Kudomee v. Joteeram, 3 C. 305; Sinammal v. Administrator-General, 8 M. 169 (173). Its indissolubility is due to its being a sacrament.

(6) Administrator-General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466; Government v. Ganga, 4 B. 330; Ram Kumari, (In re), 18 C. 264, and cases cited post.

(7) Cited in 2 Coleb., p. 164.

transfer her both bodily and spiritually from her parental family to that of her husband. She adopts the gotra of her husband and becomes united to him in flesh and blood.[1] "During the husband's lifetime he is to be regarded by the wife as a god, and the wife is declared to be half the body of her husband, equally sharing the fruit of pure and impure acts, and no sacrifice or religious rite is allowed to her, apart from the husband's. Hence it is, that, after the husband's death, the widow is regarded as the surviving half of his body; the union is a sacred tie and subsists even after the death of the husband."[2] This view leads to several results. Being the union of the two souls, the death of the husband does not set the wife free to remarry; and during his lifetime, there can be no divorce for whatever reason[3] unless it is permitted by custom.[4] Neither adultery[5] nor even prostitution,[6] degradation by conversion to Mahomedanism[7] or other religion or forfeiture of caste[8] dissolves a Hindu marriage. (§ 425). This is the normal law. Its inflexible rigour has however been to a certain extent modified by legislation[9] and custom.[10] (§§ 421, 422).

In spite of the conception that a Hindu marriage is a sacrament, divorce of a kind was recognised by the early writers. But it was more in the nature of desertion than divorce.[11] But strictly speaking, divorce, as such, was unknown to Hindu Law. "Neither by sale nor desertion can a wife be released from her husband! Thus we fully acknowledge the law enacted of old by the Lord of creatures."[12] But even since the days of Manu, law had to bow to the inevitable, and however indissoluble a marriage tie might be in theory, its dissolubility had to be recognized, though it is now essentially a matter of usage.[13] (§ 421) which generally

---

(1) Apastamb, 2 S.B.E. 137; Tekait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751 (758).

(2) Per Ghose, J., in Tekait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751 (758).

(3) Kudomee v. Joteeram, 3 C. 305 (308); Ram Kumari (In re), 18 C. 264 (269); Tekait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751 (758); Binda v. Kausilia, 13 A. 126 (153); Narain v. Tirlok, 29 A. 4 (6) Sinnammal v. Administrator-General, M. 169 (173); Administrator-General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466 (470); Vasudeva v. Secretary of State, 11 M. 157 (161); Thapita v. Thapita, 17 M. 235 (242) F.B.; Subbaraya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171 (176); Surampalli v. Surampalli, 31 M. 338 (340).

(4) E. v. Umi, 6 B. 126 (128); Bai Vigli v. Nansa Nagar, 10 B. 152 (154); Kudomee v. Joteerama, 3 C. 304 (306); Jukni v. Q. E., 19 C. 627 (628, 629); Sankaralingam v. Subban, 17 M. 479.

(5) Subharaya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171, (176, 178), followed in Narain Das v. Tirlook, 29 A. 48.

(6) Subharaya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171 (178); contra in Komineymoney (In re), 21 C. 697.

(7) Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871; Government of Bombay v. Ganga, 4 B. 330.

(8) Bisheshur v. Mata, 2 N.W.P.H. C.R. 300.

(9) Act XXI of 1886.

(10) S. 18.

(11) Manu, IX-72 : "Even though a man may have married a young woman in legal form, yet he may abandon her, if he find her blemished afflicted with disease, or previously deflowered and given to him with fraud";

Narad, XII-19, 32 S.B.E. 175; "One who after having left the husband of her youth, and betakes herself to another man, returns into the house of her husband is declared the second (Punarbhu) wife." "When a woman, whether she have children or not, goes to live with another man through love, her husband being alive, she is the first svairnii," (wanton woman).

(12) Manu, IX-46; (Jone's Tr.) 198; Kudomee v. Joteeram, 3 C. 305; R. v. Karsam, 2 B.H.C.R. 124; Khemkar v. Umai Sankar, 10 B.H.C.R. 381; Rahi v. Gobinda, 1 B. 97 (114); R. v. Sambhu, 1 B. 347.

(13) Sankaralingam v. Subban, 17 M. 479 (Porter's case).

sanctions divorce amongst Shudras and other lower castes.[1] Divoce is also now possible upon a conversion to Christianity in accordance with the provisions of the Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act, 1866.[2] (§ 425).

421. Customary Divorce.—It has been stated before, that though Hindu Law dos not recognise divorce,[3] still amongst Shudras and certain other lower and mixed castes, divorce of the wife or of the husband is sanctioned by custom. Where, however, such custom was said to permit a divorce of one at the sweet will of the other without reason, but only on a payment of a small fine fixed by the caste, the court condemned the custom as opposed to public policy.[4] The remarriage of the wife divorced by custom is not marriage in an unapproved form unless the bridge-price is paid. In the absence of any such payment it is a perfectly good and valid marriage.[5]

422. A marriage is absolute, irrecoverable and unconditional by law.[6] But it may be rendered conditional by custom.[7] Such a custom was proved in a case in which a husband had sued for the restitution of conjugal rights which the wife resisted on the ground that she had not become his married wife for which a second ceremony on her attainment of puberty was required, and this contention was upheld. In another case, the marriage was in the nature of an exchange of children who were married when only a month old on condition that the son's father should provide a girl to be married to the wife's brother. The court upheld this mutual bargain holding it justified by the possible paucity of woman.[8]

But while a marriage may be contracted so as to take effect only upon the fulfilment of a condition precedent, it cannot be cancelled for any breach of condition made for its cancellation.[9] Nor can it be conditioned[10] by an agreement to live apart.

423. Effect of Unchastity.—The degradation of a woman consequent upon her unchastity appears to be no exception to the rule,[11] though in some cases it is held to justify the severance of the tie of marriage.[12] But apart from the institution of divorce, supported by custom, as in the case of Shudras and certain other castes, Hindu Law, as such, does not recognize divorce, it sanctions the abandonment of a wife who has taken to the career of unchaste life. This question has been considered in several cases in connection with the husband's heirship to such wife's stridhan, and will have again to be adverted to in that connection.

---

(1) Steele's Law of Caste, 169, 170.
(2) Act XXI of 1886. See App.
(3) Abdul Karim v. Abdul Rajak, 2 O.L.J. 101: 28 I.C. 201.
(4) Kesmay v. Gandi, 39 B. 538.
(5) Hira v. Hanaji, 37 B. 295.
(6) Keheram v. Gendheree, 23 W.R. 178.
(7) Boolechand v. Janakee, 25 W.R. 386; Balugri v. Vatel Purshotam, 17 B. 400 (406).
(8) Baiugri v. Vatel Purshottam, 17 B. 400 (406).
(9) Charitam v. Nathi, (1900) P.L. R. 193.
(10) Krishna v. Balammall, 43 M. 398.
(11) Bisheshur v. Mata Gholam, 2 N. W.P.H.C.R. 300; R. v. Marimuttee, 4 M. 243; Administrator-General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466; Subharaya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171; Surnomoyee v. Secretary of State, 25 C. 254.
(12) Ram Prasad v. Subu Bai, 4 N.L R. 31 (41, 42); Sivasinga v. Minal, 12 M. 277; Narasanna v. Gangu, 13 M. 133; Kamineymoney Bewah, (In re,) 21 C. 697.

424. Effect of Conversion.—Though apostasy has not the effect of dissolving a Hindu marriage, the conversion of a person to Christianity, gives the right of divorce, subject to the provisions of the Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act, 1866, to which reference has already been made in the foregoing discussion.

425. Statutory Divorce.—Though a marriage under Hindu Law is indissoluble and apostasy furnishes no ground for its dissolution, still in the case of converts to Christianity, divorce may be secured in accordance with the provisions of the Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act, 1866.[1] If in consequence of a party's conversion to Christianity, the other party repudiates or deserts the other for the space of six continuous months,[2] in that case the former may sue the latter for conjugal society,[3] and on the respondent's refusal to co-habit for a period of one year, allowed by the court, the court may dissolve the marriage[4] which may, moreover, be dissolved even without the locus penetentiae for a year, if the marriage was not consummated owing to the fact that either party was then impubes.[5] This Act has not the effect of widening the door for divorce, but merely prescribes and provides for a dissolution where —(i) either party is, after marriage, converted to Christianity, and (ii) the desertion or repudiation is solely due to such conversion. If the repudiation or desertion was then due to cruelty or adultery and not to conversion, the court cannot entertain a suit for dissolution under the Act.[6]

A dissolution under the Act does not affect the status of children.[7]

426. A Hindu marriage is a sacrament and, therefore, indissoluble by divorce[8] or otherwise upon the loss of caste by degradation or conversion of either party.[9] Where, therefore the wife sued her husband for divorce under S. 7 of the Indian Divorce Act,[10] and it appeared that the parties who were married as Hindus had afterwards become converted to Christianity, it was held that the Divorce Act only contemplated a monogamous marriage and did not apply to a marriage contracted in accordance with the Hindu rites.[11] In another case, the wife, who had been similarly married to her husband, embraced the Mahomedan religion and then married a Mahomedan. She was convicted of bigamy, it being held that the conversion of the wife to Mahomedanism did not have the effect of dissolving the tie of marriage, which continuing, she could not contract another valid marriage,[12] and her children of such marriage would be illegitimate, and she herself would be treated as an unchaste daughter, and as such, disqualified from inheriting her father's property.[13] In such case, her right cannot be saved by the Lex

(1) Act XXI of 1866.
(2) Ib., S. 12.
(3) Ib., Ss. 4, 5.
(4) Ib., S. 16.
(5) Ib., S. 18.
(6) Ib., S. 25.
(7) Ib., S. 27.
(8) S. 26.
(9) Administrator-General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466; Government v. Ganga, 4 B. 330; Ram Kumari (In re) 18 C. 264; Dhan Bibi v. Lalon Bibi, 27 C. 801; Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871 (873); Imam Din v. Hassan Bibi, (1906) P.R. 85; Jamna Devi v. Mul Raj, (1907) P. R. 49.
(10) Act IV of 1869.
(11) Magania v. Prem Singh, 8 Bom. L.R. 856, following Thapita v. Thapita, 17 M. 235 F.B.
(12) Government v. Ganga, 4 B. 330, followed in Ram Kumari (In re), 18 C. 264, dissenting from contra in Rahmed Bibi v. Rokeya Bibi, 1 Norton's L.C. 12; Administrator-General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 467; Millard (In re), 10 M. 218; Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871; Magania v. Prem Singh, 8 Bom.L.R. 856.
(13) Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871.

Loci Act,[1] because she had not lost her right by reason of her renouncing or being excluded from the Hindu communion, but by reason of her invalid marriage.

Mutual rights and obligations upon marriage.

27. The following rights and obligations arise upon marriage:—

(a) As to the husband—

1. He is his wife's natural guardian during her minority;[2]
2. He is entitled to her conjugal society;[3]
3. He is bound to maintain her;[4]
4. He cannot divorce her,[5] unless he is allowed to do so by custom;[6]
5. Should she predecease him, he is entitled to inherit her property.[7]
6. He has no right over her stridhan, which he may, however, use in a time of great distress.[8]

(b) As to the wife—

1. She is bound to live with her husband, unless he is guilty of cruelty or misconduct;[9]
2. She is entitled to retain her stridhan as her separate property;[10]
3. She is entitled to sue, and is liable to be sued, in respect of her stridhan, as if she were a feme sole;[11]
4. She cannot divorce her husband, unless she is allowed to do so by custom;[12]
5. Should her husband predecease her, she is entitled to inherit his separate property; otherwise she has the right of maintenance and residence in the family dwelling-house;[13]
6. She has no right over her husband's property during his lifetime beyond the right of maintenance and residence.[14]

Husband's patria potestas.

427. Husband's Rights upon Marriage.—On the conclusion of the essential ceremony of marriage, the wife absolutely passes into the potestas of her husband, and her marriage with him becomes absolute and for ever indissoluble.

428. The husband is the lawful guardian of his wife, and is entitled to the enjoyment of her person and society. If she refuses, he can maintain a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights. But against this suit she may defend herself on any of the following grounds, namely: that the husband was suffering from some loathsome disease

(1) XXI of 1850.
(2) Manu, IX-2, 3; Navantilal v. Purushottam, 50 B. 268, S. 82, post and Comm.
(3) Jogendra Nandini v. Hurry Doss, 5 C. 500; Dadaji v. Rukhmabai, 9 B. 529; Binda v. Kausila, 13 A. 126.
(4) Dig. Bk. V. ch. VI, p. 404, cited and followed in Savitri Bai v. Lukmi Bai, 2 B. 592; see S. 93, post.
(5) See S. 26.
(6) Ib., E. v. Uni, 6 B. 126 (128); Bai Vigli v. Nansa Nagr, 10 B. 152 (154); Kudomi v. Jotiram, 3 C. 304 (306); Janaki v. Q. E., 19 C. 627 (628. 629); Shankaralingam v. Subban, 17 M. 479.
(7) See Ch. on "Inheritance", post.
(8) Mit. Ch. II-xi, 32, 33.
(9) See foot-note (3) above.
(10) See "Stridhan", post.
(11) Ib.
(12) See foot-note (6) above.
(13) See "Inheritance", post.
(14) See S. 93, post.

such as syphilis or leprosy,[1] or that he was outraging her wifely feelings by keeping a mistress in the house,[2] or was guilty of habitual cruelty towards her, or apart from cruelty, was guilty of a grave matrimonial offence[3] or had become converted to an alien faith,[4] and thereby or otherwise forfeited his caste,[5] though on the latter point the courts have struck a discordant note.[6] Even where the court decrees possession, it may make its decree conditional, imposing upon the husband the security of his wife's safety, health and welfare,[7] though such a condition cannot include one that the husband must provide his wife with a separate house and separate maintenance.[8] He has no right over his wife's stridhan, over which his wife has complete mastery, though the husband is allowed to draw upon it in a moment of pressing necessity,[9] but it is apprehended that he can no longer be permitted to do so without her consent; in any case, till he has actually used it, the ownership remains with the wife.[10] (§ 445).

429. Wife's Right on Marriage.—Upon her marriage, the wife not only leaves her parental home but severs her connection with it as completely as if she had never been born therein. She abandons the gotra of her parents and passes into, and assumes, that of her husband in whose family she is received as a daughter,[11] but in which she has no individuality apart from her husband. She is, however, entitled to separate ownership of her wedding gifts.[12] Apart from custom, she cannot divorce her husband, or be divorced by him for any cause or misconduct. The tie is inseverable and cannot be broken owing to her adultery,[13] prostitution and consequent degradation from the caste,[14] or ex-communication;[15] and even conversion to an alien faith has therefrom not effect.[16] But the husband may desert such a faithless wife,[17]

---

(1) Premkumar v. Bhika, 5 B.H.C. R. (A.C.) 209.

(2) Lala Gobind v. Dowlut, 14 W. R. 451; Jagendra Nundini v. Hurry Dass, 5 C. 500; Dular Koeri v. Dwarka Nath, 32 C. 234; Dular Koeri v. Dwarka Nath, 34 C. 971.

(3) Manu, IX-79; Dular Koeri v. Dwarka Nath, 34 C. 971 (980-985), following Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, (1895) A.C. 384; Russel v. Russell, (1897) A. C. 397; Yamna Bai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164; Binda v. Kaunsilia, 13 A. 126; Sabadur v. Rajwanta, 27 A. 96.

(4) Muchoo v. Arzoon, 5 W.R. 235.

(5) Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78; Bai Jina v. Kharwa, 31 B. 366; Surjomoni v. Kalikanta, 28 C. 37.

(6) Binda v. Kaunsilia, 13 A. 126; Sobadur v. Rajwanta, 27 A. 96; Jamna v. Mulraj, (1907) P.R. 49.

(7) Takait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751; Jamna v. Mulraj, (1907) P.R. 49; Moonshee, Buzloor Raheem v. Shamsoo Nissa, 11 M.I.A. 607.

(8) Chimanlal v. Narmada, 4 Bom. L. R. 820.

(9) Mit. Ch II-xi 32, 33; Dayabhag, IV-i-19-25; Tukaram v. Gunaji, 8 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 129; Mohima Chander v. Durga Monee, 23 W.R. 184.

(10) Nammalwar v. Thayarammal, 50 M. 941.

(11) Lallubai v. Cassibai, 5 B. 110 (118) P.C.

(12) See "Stridhan" post.

(13) Subbaraya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171 (176, 178); Narain Das v. Tirlok, 29 A. 4; Sundari v. Nemye, 6 C.L.J. 872; Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650, F.B.

(14) Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 F. B.; Narumayya v. Tiruvangadathan, 24 M.L.J. 223; contra in Bhutnath v. Secretary of State, 10 C.W.N. 1085.

(15) Q. v. Marimuthu, 4 M. 243; Nandi, 1 L. 440; Abdul Karim v. Abdul Razak, 2 O.L.J.: 28 I.C. 201.

(16) Manu, IX-46; Vashishth, XXVIII, 2-3; Bisheshur v. Mata Gholam, 2 N.W. P.H.C.R. 300; Government v. Ganga, 4 B. 330 (332); Gobardhan v. Jasadamoni, 18 C. 252; Ramakumari (In re), Ib., 264; Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871; Administrator-General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466; Millard (In re), 10 M. 218; Thapita v. Thapita, 17 M. 235; Budensha v. Fatmabi, 26 M.L.J. 260, contra in Sinnammal v. Administrator-General, 8 M. 169, dissented from.

(17) 2 Dig., S. 80.

refusing to provide her with even a starvation allowance, unless she is penitent,[1] though the Smritikars admit her right to a bare sustenance.[2] But this is merely a moral injunction and does not create any legal obligation.

430. The wife may claim separate maintenance for any just cause against her husband, if, for instance, he was guilty of cruelty to her[3] or lived in adultery,[4] with a low caste mistress and thereby affronted her modesty,[5] or was suffering from insanity, incurable or loathsome disease,[6] or became a convert to an alien faith, such as Mahomedanism or Christianity.[7] The wife may defend herself for any libel upon her by her husband.[8] If improperly deserted, she may maintain a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights against her husband.[9]

431. Restitution of Conjugal Rights.—The husband by his jus connubi is entitled to the society and service of his wife, and is entitled to the custody of her person. He is not bound by any agreement to the contrary,[10] unless so bound by his tribal custom.[11] Hindu Law does not prescribe for a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights; but it is now settled that such suit is maintainable,[12] and that it is not a condition precedent to its maintainability that there should have been an antecedent demand of delivery of the wife.[13] The courts, however, do not entertain suits for possession of the recalcitrant wife or of the husband, and the only relief available to an aggrieved spouse is that implied in a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights.[14] Even this cannot be decreed to him unless the wife has attained puberty.[15] The wife may resist such a suit by the same defences which entitle her to live apart from her husband.

432. On marriage, the husband becomes entitled to the custody and care of his wife, and he may assert his right by either getting himself

---

(1) Mit., XI-49; Valu v. Gangu, 7 B. 84; Vishnu v. Manjamma, 9 B. 108; Subbayya v. Bhawani, 24 I.C. (M.) 390; contra in Honamman v. Timannbhat, 7 B. 84.

(2) Mit., III-297.

(3) Bhawani v. Subhagi, 12 A.L.J. 995; Yamuna v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (173); Sidlingapa v. Sidava, 2 B. 634; Matangini v. Gogendra, 19 C. 84; Sitabai v. Ramachandra, 12 Bom. L. R. 373.

(4) Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 M. 470.

(5) Administrator-General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466 (470); Dular v. Dwarkanath, 32 C. 284 (289); Dular v. Dwarkanath, 34 C. 971.

(6) Bai Premkuar v. Bhika, 5 B. H. C.R. (A.C.) 209.

(7) Muchoo v. Arzoon, 5 W.R. 235; Administrator-General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466 (470); Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78.

(8) S. 499, I.P.C.; contra in Deokoonwar v. Umba Ram, 1 B. 370 which is no longer law.

(9) Binda v. Kaunsillia, 13 A. 126; Yamuna Bai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (166, 167); Dadaji v. Rukma, 10 B. 301 (310, 311); Kaseeram v. Gendhenee, 23 W.R. 178; Jogendra v. Hurry Doss, 5 C. 500 (505); Surjyamoni v. Kali Kanta, 28 C. 37 (42, 44).

(10) Tekait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751; contra in Kawasji v. Sirinbai, 22 B. 279; Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78 (79, 80).

(11) Lenga v. Penguri, 20 C.W.N. 406 : 30 I.C. 796.

(12) Jugendro Nundini v. Hurry Doss, 5 C. 500; Dadaji v. Rukhmabai, 9 B. 529; Binda v. Kaunsillia, 13 A. 126 (139).

(13) Binda v. Kaunsillia, 13 A. 126 (145); contra in England under the statute R. 175; Field v. Field, P.D. 26; Smith v. Smith, 15 P.D. 47.

(14) Chotun v. Ameer Chund, 6 W.R. 105 (107); Koobur v. Jan Khansama, 8 W.R. 467; Metaram v. Thanjooram, 9 W.R. 552; Gotha Ram v. Moobita, 23 W.R. 179. See as to execution O. 21, R. 32, C.P.C.

(15) Santosh v. Gera, 23 W.R. 22; Dadaji v. Rukmabai, 10 B. 301 (311); Arumuga v. Viraraghava, 24 M. 255.

appointed as the certificated guardian of his wife[1] or by maintaining a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights. He cannot sue for possession, for though the husband is entitled to the possession of his wife, he cannot maintain a suit therefor, as the courts do not regard the wife as a chattel but as a human being upon whom no further coercion is justifiable than what the law considers it necessary to exert in execution of a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights, that is, by ordering the wife to return to her husband[2] and if she refuses, then the court could formerly detain her in the civil jail for six weeks,[3] or attach her property, or both,[4] but detention is now no longer possible and the only relief available to the aggrieved husband is the seizure of her property (§ 444). The court is not bound to decree restitution merely because the husband claims it. It has power to refuse that relief on a case being made out[5] which must, however, amount to some offence of a matrimonial nature such as would support a decree for judicial separation,[6] and it may qualify its decree by imposing terms on the husband[7] as that the husband should provide the wife with a suitable residence away from that in which the husband has kept his mistress,[8] or that the decree is subject to the husband being restored to caste.[9] In a case where the wife had gone wrong, and had in consequence been put out of caste, the plaintiff undertook to get her re-admitted into the caste, but the court considered her re-admission necessary before any decree could be passed for restitution.[10] In such a suit if the validity of the marriage is disputed, it is not enough to find that the marriage took place, leaving it to be presumed that the rites and ceremonies necessary to constitute a legal marriage in the particular case were performed. The court must find specifically what those rites and ceremonies are, and whether they were performed.[11]

433. The minority of the husband is no ground for refusing restitution[12] since minority does not disqualify the husband from being the lawful guardian of his minor wife in preference to her parents,[13] though the court will not decree restitution, unless the wife has attained puberty.[14] If the wife is removed from his custody, the husband may apply to the court under S. 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act for its resumption, and the court will order it if it will be for the welfare of the ward. The husband may obtain an order of the nature of habeas

---

(1) Guardians and Wards Act (Act VII of 1890), S. 21.

(2) O. XXI, R. 32, C.P.C.

(3) Ib., 58 (b).

(4) O. XXI, R. 32 (1), C.P.C.

(5) Surjyamoni v. Kali Kanta, 28 C. 37 (46, 47). But this must amount to a matrimonial offence upon which the English Courts would refuse relief.—Ib., p. 43; Binda v. Kaunsillia, 13 A. 126; Sahadur v. Rajwanta, 27 A. 96. (The fact that husband is out of caste is no ground.) In case of non-attainment of puberty; Suntosh v. Geru, 23 W.R. 22.

(6) Dissenting from contra in Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 73.

(7) Bazloor v. Shumsoonissa, 11 M. I.A. 551 (615); Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78; Jogendra Nundini v. Hurry Dass, 5 C. 500.

(8) Jogendra Nundini v. Hurry Dass, 5 C. 500 (508).

(9) Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78.

(10) Surjyamoni v. Kalikanta, 28 C. 34 (47).

(11) Surjyamoni v. Kalikanta, 28 C. 34 (47, 50).

(12) Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), S. 21.

(13) Ib., Ss. 19, 41 (d); Kaseeram v. Gendhenee, 23 W.R. 178; Dhurnidhur (In re), 17 C. 298; Surjyamoni v. Kalikanta, 28 C. 37 (45).

(14) Arumuga v. Viraraghava, 24 M. 255.

corpus if his wife resides anywhere within the original jurisdiction of the presidency towns of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras.[1]

Suit for Damages.

434. The husband can maintain a suit for damages against any one restraining his wife. Every person who receives a married woman into his house, and suffers her to continue there, after he has received notice from the husband not to harbour her, is liable to an action for damages unless the husband has, by his cruelty or misconduct, forfeited his marital rights, or has turned his wife out of doors, or has by some insult or ill-treatment compelled her to leave him.[2] As a party wronged, the husband may recover damages against a person committing adultery with his wife.[3]

435. The measure of damages depends on the deprivation suffered by the husband of his wife's society and affection, the loss to him of his wife's services and assistance in domestic affairs, and the social injury which he is likely to incur from the insult and dishonour which the adulterer has inflicted upon him, against which the court has to weigh the conduct of the husband towards his wife and the adulterer, with a view to judging whether or not he has contributed to the mischief of which he complains. The ability of the adulterer to pay damages is not generally to be taken into account.[4]

436. Refusal of Restitution.—The circumstances which justify the court in the refusal of the restitution of conjugal rights are not peculiar to Hindu Law, for they generally follow the general principle which the courts apply to the enforcement of the marital rights.

437. The cases decided so far may be grouped under—

(i) cruelty proper, that is where the wife alleges ill-treatment coupled with personal violence;

(ii) where apart from personal violence, the husband's conduct disqualifies him for restitution; and

(iii) where his suit is not for the bona fide purpose of enforcing his marital rights.

(i) Cases of Cruelty.

438. The term "cruelty," justifying the wife's desertion, is the same in this country as in England,[5] where the term "legal cruelty" includes not only personal violence of such a character as to endanger personal health or safety, but also reasonable apprehension of it.[6] Her constant ill-treatment,[7] wrongful confinement and deprivation to her of the ordinary

(1) Cr. P. C., S. 491.

(2) Addison on Torts, 802, cited per Melville, J., in Yamunabai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (174, 175).

(3) Soodasun v. Lakenath, Mont. 619.

(4) Per Phear, J., in Kelly v. Kelly, 3 B.L.R. (O.C.) 67 (69).

(5) Buzloor v. Shamsoonnissa, 11 M. I.A. 551 (611), cited and followed in Dular Koer v. Dwarkanath, 34 C. 971 (976, 977); Binda v. Kaunsilia, 13 A. 126 (159); Husaini v. Rustam, 29 A. 222; Yamunabai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (174); Sitabai v. Ramchand Rao, 12 Bom.L.R. 373 (377).

(6) Yamuna Bai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (174); Jogendra v. Hurry Das, 5 C. 500; Sitanath v. Haimabutty, 24 W. R. 377.

(7) Ib., p. 172, citing Kelly v. Kelly, 39 L.J. 59, Mat. Cas.; to the same effect, Dular Koer v. Dwarka Nath, 34 C. 971 (978).

necessities of life, such as food and clothing[1] would constitute legal cruelty. The term is now more liberally interpreted as regards the wife, and anything done to prejudice her health is held sufficient to constitute legal cruelty.[2] But such cruelty must amount to a habit since an isolated act of unkindness or cruelty would be insufficient.[3] It is in fact impossible to enumerate all the acts of illtreatment and neglect which, due regard being had to the position of the parties and the circumstances of each case, the court would regard as sufficient to constitute legal cruelty within the meaning of law.

439. The fact that the husband had been guilty of disgraceful conduct wounding her feeling of dignity was held sufficient to amount to such cruelty, which cannot be atoned by justification, since incompatibility of temperament is the originating cause of many such cruelties, though their condonation is taken into account as a defence. But condonation cannot be presumed from the wife's mere continuing to live with her husband in spite of her ill-treatment. The relief given to the suffering wife must be suitable and adequate, and for this purpose the husband may be put upon terms.[4]

(ii) Husband's Misconduct.

440. Apart from physical injury, the courts recognize the force of legal cruelty apprehended from the fact that the husband was suffering from insanity,[5] or any loathsome disease, such as, ulcerous leprosy,[6] or syphilis,[7] but not impotence[8] or given to abominable practices such as sodomy or bestiality.[9] His immorality such as that the husband was living in adultery with a low caste woman has been held to constitute legal cruelty.[10] But the mere keeping of a mistress is held to be insufficient, as the practice of concubinage is common in this country,[11] and concubines have a legal right to maintenance.[12]

(iii) Mala Fide Suit.

441. The court will not decree restitution where the husband with a wife living had married under a misrepresentation that he was a bachelor,[13] or where he

---

(1) Bhawani v. Subbagi, 12 A.L.J. 905.

(2) Jeaps v. Jeaps, 89 L. J. 74; Thompson v. Thompson, 85 L.J. 172 (adultery of husband with servants in the house held to amount to legal cruelty). So his conviction for indecent assault was held to amount to legal cruelty by causing a breakdown of her health by reason of the disgrace and shock arising out of his conviction, Coffey v. Coffey, (1898) p. 169.

(3) Sitanath v. Haimabutty, 24 W.R. 377.

(4) Bulzoor v. Shumsoonissa, 11 M. I.A. 551 (611), cited and followed in Dular Koer v. Dwarka Nath, 34 C. 971 (976, 977); Binda v. Kaunsilia, 13 A. 126 (159); Husaini v. Rustam, 29 A. 222.

(5) Binda v. Kaunsillia, 13 A. 126 (155); Hall v. Hall, 3 S.W. & Tr. 347.

(6) Shinappaya v. Rajamma, 45 M. 812.

(7) Premkuvar v. Bhika, 5 B.H.C. R. (A.C.) 209; Yamuna Bai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (173).

(8) Purushotam Das v. Moni, 21 B. 610; contra Devala, cited 2 Dig. 470; but ancient authorities which recognized Niyog do not regard impotency as a disqualification to the exercise of marital rights.

(9) Bromley v. Bromley, 2 Add. 158-n.

(10) Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78 (81); Dular Koer v. Dwarkanath, 32 C. 234 (239); Dular Koer v. Dwarka Nath, 34 C. 971.

(11) Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 M. 470 (474-n).

(12) Iingareddi v. Lakshmanwa, 26 B. 163; Ramanarasu v. Buchamma, 23 M. 282 (291).

(13) Rukmani Ammal v. Chari, (1935) M. 616.

sues for an ulterior purpose, as where, being indebted to the wife, who had obtained a decree against him, he sued for restitution with a view to coerce her into relinquishing her claim,[1] or to deliver to him some of her property.[2] So the court refused restitution where the husband had filed his suit by way of retaliation of the suit filed by the wife against his father in which he falsely accused his wife of immorality.[3]

442. A suit for the restitution of conjugal rights is a suit of the nature of specific performance and the grant of that relief is, therefore, discretionary.[4] The procedure for the enforcement of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights by the imprisonment of the wife was abolished by the Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1923[5] which has amended O. XXI, r. 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure to this extent. Similarly, in England, imprisonment for non-compliance with the decree formerly awarded by the Ecclesiastical Courts[6] was abolished by a Statute of 1884[7] and the only relief available against the recalcitrant party is by a suit for judicial separation.[8] As this relief is inapplicable to a Hindu, the one further step necessary to bring the Indian law into line with that law is to legalise the institution of such suits, without which, however, the wife is free to live apart from her husband, though it might imperil her maintenance, and not even that if she was impelled to adopt that course by his cruelty.

443. Limitation.—A suit for restitution must be instituted within six years from the time when the right to sue accrues.[9] Such right would arise when there was a demand for and a refusal of cohabitation, but this is not necessary for the plaintiff's cause of action,[10] which for the purpose of jurisdiction is deemed to arise at the husband's house.[11]

444. The wife's claim to maintenance may be enforced by a suit under the common law, or it may be enforced by a petition under S. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The provisions of the two may to a certain extent overlap, but S. 488 provides a summary remedy limited as to the amount awardable, but it does not bar the wife's right of suit, though in decreeing maintenance, the Civil Court will no doubt take into account the amount already payable to the wife under that section.[12]

[For further information on the subject see Chapter VII, Maintenance.]

---

(1) Buzloor v. Shumsoonissa, 11 M. I.A. 551.
(2) Khurshedi v. Khurshedi, 12 A.L. J. 1065 (1072).
(3) Husain v. Rustam, 29 A. 222.
(4) Bai Jivi v. Narsingh, 51 B. 329, following Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, (1895) A.C. 384.
(5) S. 3 (g), Act XXIX of 1923.
(6) Cherry v. Cherry, 29 L.J. Mat. 141.
(7) Ss. 2-4, Matrimonial Clauses Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68).
(8) Leslie v. Leslie, (1908) P. 99.
(9) Art. 120, Sch. I to the Limitation Act (IX of 1908); Krishna v. Badamnal, 34 M. 398; Chotun v. Ameerchand, 6 W.R. 105.
(10) Binda v. Kaunsillia, 13 A. 126 (139); Fakirgauda v. Ganji, 23 B. 307 (310); Surjamoni v. Kalikanta, 28 C. 46.
(11) Lilitagar v. Suraj Bai, 18 B. 316.
(12) Cf. Kuppa v. Singaravelu, 8 M. 325.

445. Husband's Right to Stridhan.—The Mitakshara permits the husband to use his wife's Stridhan in case of necessity:—

Clause (a) (6).

Mitakshara.—"In a famine, for the preservation of the family, or at a time when a religious duty must indispensably be performed, or in illness, or during restraint, or confinement in prison, or under corporal penalties, the husband being destitute of other funds and, therefore, taking his wife's property, is not liable to restore it. But, if he seize it in any other manner (or under other circustances) he must make it good."[1]

But even in case of pressing necessity as above, the husband must take his wife's consent, before he uses her stridhan.[2]

But this right is personal to him and cannot be availed of by his creditor or any other person whatsoever.[3] Nor can it be now enforced against the wife's consent (§ 428).

28. (1) In a case relating to conjugal rights there must be, except as otherwise expressly provided, proof of the performance of marriage and its validity.[4]

Proof and Presumption of Marriage.

(2) In other cases marriage may be presumed from continuous cohabitation, conduct and repute;[5]

(3) Such presumption of marriage cannot be rebutted by mere proof of its improbability;[6]

(4) When the fact of marriage is proved, it will be presumed that it was performed—

(a) in the approved form,[7]

(b) with due ceremonies, and was otherwise a valid marriage[8] and that,

(c) it continued during the lifetime of either party.[9]

446. Analogous Law.—This is an important section, and all its clauses are amply supported by authorities.

(1) Mit. II-xi-32.

(2) Nammalwar v. Thayarammal, 50 M. 941.

(3) Nammalwar v. Thayarammal, 50 M. 941.

(4) S. 50, Ev. Act, Surjyamoni v. Kalikanta, 28 C. 37; Smith, 4 W.R. (Cr.) 3; 4 W.R. Cr. 10; Arshad Ali, 13 C.L.R. 125; Pitambur, 5 C. 566 F.B.; Danesh v. Tafir, 7 C.W.N. 143; Basanta Kumar, 26 C. 49; Bhagu, 17 Bom.L.R. 75; Kallu, 5 A. 233; Dal Singh, 20 A. 166; Nasir Khan, 36 A. 1; Santok Singh, (1898) A.W.N. 186; Syed Munir, 14 N.L.R. 28; and cases cited in Gour's Penal Law (5th Ed.), §§ 6046, 6047.

(5) S. 50, Ev. Act, ill. (a), Ma Wun Di v. Ma Kin, 35 C. 232 (240) P.C. (caution necessary); Monji Lal v. Chandrabati, 38 C. 700 (706, 707) P.C.; Ghazanfer Ali v. Kaniz Fatima, 32 A. 345 (350) P.C.; Nath v. Bhag Singh, (1910) P.W.R. 54 : 6 I.C. 661; Ratan v. Nathu Singh, 16 C.P.L.R. 85; Sastry v. Sembecutty, L.R. 6 A.C. 364; Sivarama v. Veerappa, 23 I.C. (M.) 828; Lopez v. Lopez, 12 C. 706 (732); Lucas v. Lucas, 32 C. 187 (191); Bepin Behari v. Atul Krishna, 17 C.W.N. 494.

(6) Piers v. Piers, 2 H.L.C. 331; Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. & Fin. 163 (265); 47 P.R. 50; Lopez v. Lopez, 12 C. 706 (752); Luchmi Koer v. Raghu Nath, 27 C. 971 (978), P.C.; Imambundi v. Matasuddi, 15 C.L.J. 621 : 13 I.C. 678 : O. A. 35 M.L.J. 422 : 45 I.A. 73 (P.C.); Monji Lal v. Chandrabati, 38 C. 701 (706, 707) P.C.; Bipin Behari v. Autul Krishna, 15 I.C. 328.

(7) Thakur Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M.I.A. 139 (175); Gangaram v. Ballia, (1876) B.P.J. 26 (29); Kaser Bai v. Valab, 4 B. 188 (197); Gojaban v. Shabajirao, 17 B. 114 (117); Chunilal v. Surajram, 33 B. 433 (437); Jagannath v. Narayan, 35 B. 354 (359); Jadoonath v. Basunt Coomar, 19 W. R. 264 (266); Jagannath v. Ranjit, 25 C. 354 (366); Thayammal v. Annamalai, 19 M. 35; Authikesavalu v. Ramanujam, 32 M. 512 (515, 516); Gabriel v. Valliammaiammal, 26 M.L.T. 348 : 53 I.C. 423; in Jaikisondas v. Harkisondas, 2 B. 9 (14) it is said to be matter of enquiry but this is no longer tenable.

(8) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I.A. 141 (158); Brindobun v. Chundra Kurmokar, 12 C. 140.

(9) Bhima v. Dhulapa, 7 Bom. L. R. 95.

447. Principle.—This section embodies an important principle. There is a presumption in favour of morality, and consequently, if it is found that a man and a woman have cohabited and passed as a married couple, law presumes marriage, if marriage between them was at all possible. For this purpose it will presume compliance with every detail necessary to legalize a marriage. The law is jealous of the honour and reputation of the home and the family, and it presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage when a man and a woman have cohabited continuously.[1] The presumption of marriage is a presumption of a very special kind, much stronger than most presumptions. "The presumption of law is not lightly to be repelled. It is not to be lightly broken in upon or shaken by a mere balance of probability. The evidence for the purpose of shaking it must be strong, distinct, satisfactory and conclusive."[2]

448. A presumption in favour of marriage arises from mere cohabitation, conduct or repute. Marriage, being so presumed, it warrants another presumption in favour of the legitimacy of all children born in wedlock and within 280 days of the death of the husband or the dissolution of the marriage. This is proof by presumption; but legitimacy may be proved aliunde as where a child was born after 357 days of the husband's death, and at least 365 days from the last coitus, the court considered the prolonged period of gestation as unique, though not impossible, and decided against its legitimacy on the improbability supported as it was by other evidence.[3] (§ 469).

The other presumptions specified in clause (3) are consequential, and justified by the fact that a person going through the form of marriage is most unlikely to omit its ceremony.[4]

449. Proof of Marriage and its Validity.—In cases between the husband and wife, created by or in respect of rights arising out of the marriage relation, such as divorce, the restitution of conjugal rights and offences and wrongs committed in violation of the marriage vow, if the marriage is denied, it is incumbent on the party relying upon any right consequent thereon, to prove both the factum of marriage as also its validity by proof of the nature of the ceremonies performed and their legal or customary sufficiency.[5] This strictness of proof is justified by the nature of the rights involved and their dependence upon the legality of marriage; while in criminal cases, the sanctity which law attaches to the person of its subject requires that no one shall be condemned for violating any person's marital rights unless there was clear proof that he possessed those rights. The higher standard of proof required in such cases justifies the necessity for positive evidence, which as to the factum, may be furnished by the witnesses who were present at the marriage, or by the production of the register, or a certified copy, or of such other

---

(1) Per Lord Lyndhurst in Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. and F. 163 cited by Sir Barnes Peacock in Sastry v. Sembecutty, 6 A.C. 334 (372).

(2) Sastry v. Sembucutty, L.R. 6 A. C. 364.

(3) Tikam Singh v. Dhan Kunwar, 24 A. 433; Palani v. Kuppuswami, 13 M.L.W. 511.

(4) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I. A. 141 (158).

(5) S. 50, Evidence Act.

record as the law of a country or custom of a class may provide,[1] while its validity may be established by the examination of the caste punchas or of those whose evidence is otherwise relevant. The court will make no presumption when law requires proof of the fact by positive evidence. In cases affecting the liberty of third parties, law requires not only positive but also independent evidence and the evidence of the husband or of the wife that they were married is insufficient.[2]

450. But the presumption of marriage, though arising, is not so strong in an oriental country where open concubinage is not treated with the same degree of disfavour, as in Western countries.[3] But nonetheless, the presumption exists and cannot be rebutted by the mere proof of improbability. As Sir Barnes Peacock, delivering judgment of the Privy Council, observed: "The evidence for the purpose of repelling it must be strong, distinct, satisfactory, and conclusive."[4] This was the case of one of the Tamil settlers in Ceylon, in which the Supreme Court had dismissed the suit of a woman who had claimed a share of her husband's estate as his widow. She had proved continuous cohabitation, but had failed to prove her marriage and given evidence of it, which showed that the witnesses had no fixed idea of the ceremonies of marriage, and it was proved that owing to disturbance some of the ceremonies had not been performed. It was contended that in the circumstances there could be no presumption of marriage, but the Privy Council held that the presumption was there, and that it could only be rebutted by the clearest and most satisfactory evidence which, in the case before them, was lacking.[5] In another case, their Lordships started with that presumption but held it rebutted by the description of the wife by the husband in his will in terms which precluded her marriage to him.[6] Except in cases previously mentioned, law presumes and presumes strongly in favour of marriage from the fact of continuous cohabitation, conduct and repute.[7] In cases affecting the legitimacy of children, this presumption is very strong indeed, though where there are no children and the validity of the marriage is alleged, the presumption is yet strong, though not as strong as in the other case.[8] The court will make every possible presumption against bastardy, presuming not only the marriage but due compliance with all the forms and ceremonies of marriage, and the removal of all impediments, if any, existing in the way of marriage.

Cl. (2). Legal Presumption of Marriage when made.

451. The presumption that a Hindu marriage is in a Brahma form is made upon similar considerations, the presumption being founded upon what ought to be and is, ordinarily, done. It has already been seen that of the eight recognised forms

Cl. (4) (a). Presumption of Brahma Marriage.

(1) Pitambar, 5 C. 566 F.B.; Kallu 5 A. 233.

(2) See Gour's Penal Law (5th Ed.), §§ 6046-6047.

(3) Ma Wun Di v. Ma Kie, 35 C. 232 (240, 241) P.C.

(4) Sastry v. Sembecutty, L.R. 6 A. C. 364 (371).

(5) Sastry v. Sembecutty, L.R. 6 A. C. 364 (370-372) following Piers v. Piers, 2 H.L.C. 331; Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. and F. 163 : 7 E.R. 365 (383); De Thoren v. Attorney-General, App. Cas. 686.

(6) Luchmi Koer v. Raghu Nath, 27 C. 971 (977-979) P.C.

(7) Per Sir Barnes Peacock in Sastry v. Sembecutty, L.R. 6 A.C. 364 (371); Bipin Bihari v. Atul Krishna, 17 C.W.N. 494: 15 I. C. 329; Inder Singh v. Thakur Singh, 2 L. 207 (216).

(8) Re Monghlik's Estate, (1878) Ir. L.R. 421.

of marriages, the two forms now extant are the Brahma and the Asur marriages, which are open to all Hindus, the Shudra being equally free to contract a Brahma marriage,[1] and a twice-born being equally free to contract an Asur.[2] In fact the form of marriage nowadays is not so much determined by the caste of the contracting parties as by the natural law of supply and demand. And the courts accordingly view the question from the standpoint of the caste. Even the payment of some consideration by the bridegroom does not necessarily have the effect of converting the presumed Brahm marriage into an Asur marriage, unless the payment was a bride-price and the parties to the marriage and their community viewed it in that light.[3]

Cl. (4) (b). Presumption of due ceremonies.

452. The presumption of marriage necessarily raises the presumption of the due performance of all its essential ceremonies. This presumption is justified by the fact that no one intending to marry would go through the form without its ceremonies, if he knew that their non-observance would invalidate the marriage.[4] It is a strong legal presumption and one which cannot be rebutted by any evidence which merely raises a counter-presumption, that is, evidence which is merely inferential and does not directly attack the marriage on any of its essential ceremonies. To be of any value, such evidence must be clear, cogent and conclusive.[5] In the Breadalbane Peerage case, the House of Lords went so far as to hold that the presumption was one which not only might, but ought to be drawn from cohabitation with habit and repute, although the cohabitation commenced with a ceremony which was not only invalid by reason of the real husband of the woman being alive at the time, but was known by both parties to be so.[6] Such presumption of marriage was made even between a Pariah and Burmese woman.[7]

Cl. (4) (c). Continuance Presumed.

453. Since it is not usual for married persons to divorce each other, there is naturally a presumption in favour of the continuance of a marriage. Such presumption is all the greater in the case of a Hindu whose marriage is normally indissoluble. In monogamist countries, the fact that a person was re-married would necessarily carry with it the presumption of dissolution of the previous marriage by death or divorce. But there is no room for any such presumption in the case of Hindus.

---

(1) Sivarama v. Bagawan, (1859) M. S.D. 44; Jaikissondas v. Harkisondas, 2 B. 9 (13, 14).

(2) Nundalal v. Tapeedas, 1 Borr. 14; Keshow v. Naor, 2 Borr. 194; Vijiarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B.H.C.R (O.C.) 244; Visvanathan v. Saminathan, 13 M. 83.

(3) Gabriel v. Valliammaiammal, 26 M.L.T. 348 : 53 I.C. 423; Kailasnatha v. Parasakthi, 58 M. 488.

(4) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I. A. 141 (158).

(5) Henries Peerage Claim, L. R. 2 H.L. (Sc.) 258 (268).

(6) Piers v. Piers, 2 H.L.C. 331; Morris v. Davies, 25 Cl. and F. 365 (383).

(7) Breadalbane's Case, L.R. 2 H.L. (Sc.) 269, cited in Sastry v. Sembucutty, 6 A.C. 364 (372). (The report of the case cited, however, does not contain the passage quoted by their Lordships who must have taken it from the Journal of the House of Lords.)

Statutory Civil Marriage.

29. It is lawful for a Hindu to marry a person who professes any of the following religions, that is to say, the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh, Jain[1] or Christian[2] religion.

Statutory Civil Marriage when valid.

454. Analogous Law.—The Indian Christian Marriage Act permits the marriage of a Christian with a non-Christian,[3] and the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act legalizes inter-marriages between Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains irrespective of caste.[4] It is also possible for a Hindu to contract a marriage under the unamended provisions of the Special Marriage Act,[5] in which case, however, the parties have to subscribe to a declaration that neither of them professes the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or the Jain religion. It has been held in Calcutta[6] that a Hindu married under the Act, even after this declaration, does not cease to be a Hindu, and a large number of persons belonging to the reformed sects of Hinduism, such as Sikhism, Brahmoism or the Arya Samaj have availed themselves of its provisions. Those so married retain all the rights and are subject to all the disabilities of Hindu Law.

455. Over and beyond such marriages it is possible for a Hindu to contract a purely civil marriage, but at present he can do so only outside the territorial waters of India, since no provision exists in the Indian Law for contracting civil marriages as such, within the ambit of its jurisdiction, where the only marriages possible are those already described.

456. The rights and disabilities arising out of the locally permissible marriages are follows:—

I. Under the Special Marriage (Unamended) Act.—

(1) The parties, if previously Hindus, continue to be so in spite of the declaration made that they are non-Hindus.

(2) Their personal law continues to govern them with the result that females suffer from the special disabilities placed upon them by that law.

II. Under the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act.—

(1) The parties have not to subscribe to a declaration that they do not profess the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion.

(2) Upon their marriage they become at once vested with the following rights:—

(a) Their previous rights are unaffected to the extent provided in the Caste Disabilities Removal Act.[7]

---

(1) Special Marriage (Amendment) Act (XXX of 1923), S. 3 and other Acts cited post comm.

(2) Indian Christian Marriage Act (XV of 1872), S. 4.

(3) S. 4, Indian Christian Marriage Act (XV of 1872).

(4) S. 3, Act XXX of 1923.

(5) Act III of 1872.

(6) Jnanendra Nath Roy (In re), 49 C. 1069; Vidyagavri v. Narandas, 30 Bom.L.R. 139; (1929) B. 74.

(7) Act XXI of 1850.

(b) They no longer possess the right of adoption. And if the person so marrying is an adopted son, his adoptive father may, if he so chooses, make another adoption.

(c) Such marriage has the effect of dissolving the joint family.

(d) Succession to their property and to the property of their issue is regulated by the Indian Succession Act.[1]

III. Under the Indian Christian Marriage Act.—

(1) Persons so marrying may have their marriages solemnized by a clergyman, or in the presence of a Marriage Registrar.[2]

(2) The rights and disabilities therefrom are not statutorily defined, but he would presumably continue to be subject to his personal law.

IV. Under the Civil Marriage Law.—

(1) Such marriages can only take place outside the territorial waters of India.

(2) The rights and disabilities therefrom are not statutorily defined, but so far as marital rights and obligations are concerned, parties remain subject to English Law.

457. It will thus be seen that the Special Marriage Amending Act has created a paradox. If the Hindu declares himself to be a non-Hindu and marries, he remains subject to Hindu Law. If he does not so declare, he ceases to be subject to Hindu Law, giving rise to a conundrum: When is a Hindu a non-Hindu? The answer is: When he marries as a Hindu under the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act.

But the amendment was made to enlarge the rights of persons by giving them the advantage of the English Law of succession, and at the same time removing the incubus of joint family obligations.

Saving of other marriages.

30. Nothing herein affects a marriage otherwise valid under any law or custom then in force.

Illustrations.

(a) A, a Brahmin, marries a Mahomedan lady before the Registrar of Civil Marriages in London. The marriage is valid.

(b) A, a Kshatriya, marries a Brahmin lady under the Special Marriage Act (as amended by Act XXX of 1923). The marriage is valid.

(c) A, a Hindu, marries a Christian in British India. The marriage is valid, being permitted by S. 4 of the Indian Christian Marriage Act (XIV of 1872).

(d) A, a Hindu, marries a Mahomedan in Hyderabad. The marriage is valid, being permitted by local custom.

Customary Inter-marriages.

458. Though the inter-marriages between Hindus and Mahomedans are not statutorily permissible, still they are customary in Hyderabad, while intercaste marriages between Brahmins and Kshatriyas

(1) But this Act is not retrospective. Vidyagavri v. Naran Das, 30 Bom.L.R. 139: (1929) B. 74.

(2) S. 5, Indian Christian Marriage Act (XV of 1872).

are customary in Nepal and the Terai. Such marriages, if legal in the lity where they are contracted, hold good everywhere else in India.

459. The customary restrictions against marriage outside one's caste are purely personal and territorial, since a Hindu has the choice of marrying in any of the following ways, namely:—

(1) Marriage limited to the caste, except in the case of Shudras who are free to marry other Shudras irrespective of caste: such marriage is solemnised by the priest, and is the orthodox Hindu marriage.

(2) Marriage between Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains subject to the provisions of the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act, 1923.

(3) Non-caste marriage requiring a declaration that the persons intending to marry do not profess any of the following religions, namely, Hinduism, Jainism, Christianity, Jewism, Parsism or Mahomedanism.

(4) Marriages referred to in the three preceding clauses may be performd in India. But outside the territorial waters of India, e.g., a British ship 3 miles off an Indian port, a Hindu is at liberty to contract a purely civil marriage, since a British ship is a floating island subject to British laws on the high seas—the same rule being applicable to the ships of other nations.

(5) All marriages except the first are monogamous marriages subject to he law of judicial separation and divorce.

(6) There remain local customs which legalise intercaste, and intercommunal marriages, and regulate their incidents. As such, it is perfectly competent to a European Christian woman to become a Sikh or join the Arya Samaj and contract a polygamous marriage with a Hindu with a wife living.[1]

460. Civil Marriage Laws.—The Baroda State in 1908, the Indore State in 1916, and other States, including the Kolhapur Darbar, have enacted Civil Marriage Laws legalizing the marriage of persons without reference to their religion or caste. These laws enable all persons whether British subjects or otherwise to contract civil marriages within those territories, and as marriage is an international institution, marriages so contracted hold good everywhere,[2] with the result that the barriers of religion and caste now offer no impediment to the solemnization of civil marriages on the Indian soil. Outside India, such marriages are possible everywhere in European countries, America and in Japan where marriage is treated as a civil contract and may be similarly contracted. And since a ship registered in a foreign country preserves its nationality outside the territorial waters of India, that is within 3 miles of its coast, a civil marriage on board such vessel is equally possible. But in British India, there is yet no civil marriage law, and no person can contract a civil marriage. The disability from which he suffers is purely territorial, and the only Act under which he is able to marry a person outside his own caste is the Special Marriage Act;[3] but in doing so, he has to declare that he does not profess Hinduism—a phrase which, though sufficiently elastic, does not convey any assured meaning; though it has been held that a Brahmo is a Hindu, yet the Act was enacted to enable them to marry under the Act, independently of the ritual of the Hindu marriage. Similarly, the Sikhs can contract Anand marriages legalised under the Anand Marriage Act.[1] And yet both Brahmos and Sikhs have been held to be Hindus. The Law of Hindu Marriages would then appear to sanction a marriage both in the orthodox form as also in a form outside the ritual of orthodoxy. The latter form of marriage might be in any form warranted by law or custom.

(1) Sita Devi v. Gopal Saran, (1928) Pat. 375 (381).
(2) Brinkley v. Attorney-General, (1890) L.R. 15 P.D. 76.
(3) Act II of 1872.

---

(1) Act VII of 1909.

Allahabad.

CHAPTER IV.

AFFILIATION AND LEGITIMACY.

461. Topical Introduction.—Legitimacy of issue depends upon the legality of marriage. As will be seen from the preceding chapter, the law of Hindu marriage is, in some respects, wider and in other respects narrower, than the English law, in that while the latter opposes polygamy, Hindu Law permits it, but while the former admits of only two forms of marriages, namely, that contracted under secular authority which is non-sectarian, and both in form and substance a civil contract, and that contracted under ecclesiastical authority, which was treated as a sacrament and is still so treated by the Roman Catholic section of the Church, and which, as such, admits of no dissolution or divorce, in which respect, it coincides with the religious law of Hindu marriage, but with this difference that while the sacramental nexus can be released under relief provided by the statute of all modern states, Hindu marriage remains what the Catholic marriage would have remained but for that relief.

462. Further, since Hindu law permits the numerous forms of customary marriages, it follows that the scope of legitimacy is to that extent widened. Again, since the narrower conception of marriage has its repercussion on both affiliation and legitimacy, Hindu Law is to that extent wider, and its scope is further widened by the law of adoption which it still retains as a living institution. The two following facts are a common feature of all primitive societies. First, the existence of a patriarchy; and secondly, ownership by the patriarch of his wives and children, and disposing of them, as would a present-day farmer dispose of his live-stock. The joint family system which was only an incident of the patriarchal system postulated one undivided head, who was the father, who held sway and exercised complete dominion over all members of his household. The evolution of the modern conception of marriage and sonship is the outcome of ages of culture. The patriarch of primitive society sold and hired out his wives and children exactly in the same way as the keeper of a livery stable to-day sells or hires out his horses. Slavery was recognized and the father freely requisitioned the services of other men to beget children upon his wives whom he sold into slavery as a matter of routine business. But since male children are not only more useful but also necessary for the protection of the family, and of the tribe against hostile aggression, it follows that they would be more prized than mere girls who being helpless could be seized by force or theft. The necessity for male being established, the necessity for begetting or buying sons followed as a matter of course. The civil law conferred special privileges on the father of three or more sons, and it popularized the institution of adoption (§§ 9, 10). The primary motive for adoption was thus entirely secular. The religious halo which came to surround this social necessity is a later development, and due to priestly laudation of a purely defensive act of which the mainspring was the instinct of self-preservation. The son in archaic society took the same place as a recruit in a modern regiment. And that term did not convey what it has come to mean since.

463. A society in which the sole security lay in the strength of its members, welded into a defensive and offensive alliance for mutual support and self-protection, could not think of the fears of a future purgatory, any more than a herd of deer or a flock of geese. The spiritual element was a fiction introduced later to emphasize a precept when the necessity for it became less obvious. This is even evident in the pages of Manu, who said: "The rule is that women who are devoid of valour and destitute of scriptural learning are useless."[1] Those who added to the physical strength of the social unit counted, the rest were relegated to a position of dependence and lifelong servitude. The blind, the deaf, dumb or lame and those suffering from bodily infirmity, which detracted from the tribal strength, were not fit for inheritance. They contributed nothing to its strength, and they could not, therefore, share in its rights. The patriarchal family was a self-centred State, of which the father was its king. He levied an income-tax on the dependent relatives owned by him. They had no property of their own. All that they had earned belonged to the patriarch. "A wife, a son and a slave are devoid of property; whatever they acquire becomes his whose they are."[2] Being their father's chattel, even his death did not determine their obligation to discharge his debt, even if he had left no assets.[3] But otherwise the patria potestas being removed, the sons commenced to enjoy a certain measure of independence. This then is the common genesis of the law of sonship and adoption.

464. The Sanskrit writers commonly enumerate 12 kinds of sons[4] (§56) and some as many as 17, but they have long since disappeared from the category and the only sons now recogniezd are the auras and the dattak (adopted sons), though the law books will be found loaded with minute details of the other ten vanished sons.

Children defined.

31. (1) Children may be natural or adopted. Of these the former may be legitimate or illegitimate.

(a) A legitimate child is one begotten by a person on his lawfully married wife: A lawfully begotten son is called Auras putra;

(b) An illegitimate children is one begotten by him on one who is not lawfully married to him;

(2) An adopted son is one legally adopted by or to a man as his son: A son taken in adoption is called Dattak putra or the adopted son.

465. Analogous Law.—The only children now possessing any legal status, as such, are the natural and adopted children. Natural children

(1) IX-18.
(2) Manu, VIII-416.
(3) Yad., II-50.
(4) Manu, IX-159; Baudhayan, II-2, 3, 31-33; 14 S.B.E. p. 228; Gautam, Ch. XXVII-32-34; 2 S.B.E. 303, 304; Yad., II, 132, 134, classifies them in a different order. Vishnu, XV-130 and Vashishth, XVII-12-39, agree with each other but differ from Manu with whom Yama cited in Dattak Chandrika (V-3) and Narad (XIII-45-47), generally agree. Brihaspati (2 Dig. 343) regards only two sons, viz., Auras (one's own) son and that of the appointed daughter, as entitled to inherit, the rest being merely kinsmen and so relegated to the second class, adding: "The sons made in various ways by the ancient Rishis, the powerless modern people have not the power to make in the Kaliyug (or present age)," cited in Datt. Mim., 1-64 (Sutherland, p. 16).

may be legitimate or illegitimate and may belong to either sex, though, except in the case of dancing women, a child taken in adoption must be a male. But legally, there is no legal impediment to the adoption of a daughter, so that the father may theoretically possess children of either sex who are either natural or adopted. Of the 12 kinds of sons of various degress, mentioned by the ancient law-givers (§ 56) only two now survive, viz., the legitimate son and the son by adoption. Of these, the legitimate son calls for no notice. His legitimacy is a question of proof or of presumption to be made in accordance with the next rule. The adopted son is a subsidiary son and one still recognized. The law relating to him will be found set out in the next chapter.

466. This chapter deals only with the status of natural children, and of these, the subject may be considered in the following order:—

(i) Presumption of legitimacy, (ii) proof of legitimacy, (iii) proof of illegitimacy, (iv) status of a legitimate son, (v) status of a legitimate daughter, (vi) status of an illegitimate son, (vii) status of an illegitimate daughter.

Presumption of legitimacy.

32. The legitimacy of a child born of a married wife of a person is conclusively presumed in the following cases, namely:—

(a) where it was born during the continuance of the marriage, or

(b) within 280 days after its dissolution, the mother remaining unmarried, unless it is proved that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when it could have been begotten, or the husband was, by reason of his age or other incapacity, incapable to beget a child.

Illustrations.

(a) A had validly married B in the morning. B was delivered of a child in the evening. The child is the legitimate child of A and B, and evidence cannot be given to disprove it.

(b) A had validly married B. After his marriage A became an ascetic. He visited B casually now and then. B was delivered of a child. It is the legitimate child of A and B, and evidence cannot be given to prove that by reason of his vow, A could not have begotten it.

(c) A validly married B. A was then aged 10 and B aged 14. A few months after the marriage, B was delivered of a child. The child is the illegitimate child of B, since A could not have begotten it.

(d) A aged 30 married B aged 15. B subsequently gave birth to a child. It is the legitimate child of A and B, and evidence cannot be given to disprove it.

(e) A had validly married, B. A child was born to them in wedlock. Evidence is led to prove that A was congenitally impotent. The evidence is admissible as proving sexual non-access.

467. Analogous Law.—The rule here enacted is adopted from S. 112 of the Evidence Act which enacts a rule in consonance with both the English and Hindu Laws,[1] but at variance with the Mahomedan Law.[2] The former treat a child as legitimate whenever conceived, if it was born in wedlock but the latter treats it as legitimate only if the parties were married at the date of conception. The Evidence Act now formulates a general rule and this section merely reproduces it here, being equally applicable to Hindu Law.

(1) Per Lord Langdale in Jeswunt Sing v. Jet Singh, (1844) 6 W.R. 46 (47) P.C.; Per Sir Barnes Peacock in Pedda Amani v. Zemindar of Marungapuri, (1874) 14 B.L.R. 115 (122) P.C.; S. 112 of the Evidence Act was drawn from the statement of the common law in the Banbury Peerage case, 1 Sim. St. 153.

(2) Per Lord Langdale in Hargrace v. Hargrace, 9 Beav. 552 (556).

468. The word "access" used in the proviso is held to mean "generating access,"[1] i.e., such access as made conception possible. It has accordingly, been held that the presumption may equally be rebutted by proof of impotency in the husband.[2] Non-accessibility in this sense was pleaded in a case in which, however, the husband's incapacity due to illness was alleged, but not proved.[3] The period of 280 days fixed in clause (b) is regarded by the obstetricians as about the maximum period of normal gestation, though instances are on record of the period being as much as 311 days, and in some rare cases, it may extend to even 322 days.[4] The Evidence Act takes the usual period for presumption, and leaves other cases to proof.

469. Presumption of Legitimacy.—The presumption of legitimacy under this section is conclusive if it is proved or admitted that the child was born in wedlock.[5] But since marriage may itself be the subject of a presumption,[6] it follows that in order to raise the presumption of legitimacy, all that is necessary is to prove birth of the child on the wife within any time however short or long after marriage up to 280 days of the death of the husband, or divorce of the wife by him. This presumption is conclusive in the sense that it is not open to the parties to rebut it in any way otherwise than as stated in the proviso. Consequently, such presumption cannot be rebutted by proof that the child was begotten by some one else, or that other people had likewise access to the wife,[7] or in fact, by any other circumstance of general improbability. (§ 448)

470. The only fact allowed to be proved in rebuttal is non-access to the wife.[8] This includes, as previously remarked, not only non-access in fact but also non-access in the sexual sense such as precludes the possibility of conception. Evidence may then be led to prove that the husband was impotent,[9] too young or too old, or otherwise incapacitated to beget a child. The fact that the parties lived apart, or that the husband had remarried, and deserted and discarded his wife would not exclude the presumption, unless there was proof of non-access to her[10] evidence as to which must be cogent and almost irresistible.[11] Such evidence was furnished in the case where the wife had admittedly lived in open concubinage with another man and they both had acknowledged the children born of them.[12]

---

(1) Ashrufooddowlah v. Hyder Hossein, 11 M.I.A. 94. Bhagwan Baksh v. Mahash Baksh, (1935) P.C. 199; Karapaya v. Mayandi, 12 R. 243 P.C.

(2) Banbury Peerage case, 1 Sim. and St. 153; Cope v. Cope, 1 M. & Rob. 275; Bury v. Philpot, 2 My. & K. 349.

(3) Narendra v. Ram Gobind, 29 C. 111 (125) P.C.

(4) 2 Taylor Med. Jur. (14th Ed.), p. 265.

(5) S. 1 ante: Ghazaffar Ali v. Kaniz Fatema, 11 C.L.J. 649, P.C.; Manji Lal v. Chandrabati, 38 C. 700 P.C.

(6) Umra v. Mhd. Hayat, (1907) P. R. 79.

(7) Mooris v. Davies, 3 C. & P. 215; Cope v. Cope, 5 C. & P. 604; Wright v. Moldgate, 3 C. & K. 158.

(8) S. 112, Ev. Act. (I of 1872); Bhima v. Dulappa, 7 Bom.L.R. 95.

(9) Rozario v. Ingles, 18 B. 468.

(10) C.F.R. v. Mansfield, 11 Q.B. 444.

(11) Bosvile v. Attorney-General, 12 P.D. 177.

(12) Bahadur Singh v. Viru, (1906) P.R. 28.

471. The same presumption in favour of legitimacy continues for a period of 280 days after dissolution of the marriage by death or divorce. Considered as a rule of limitation, the day of death or dissolution would probably be excluded.

Proof Aliunde.

472. But apart from presumption, legitimacy may be the subject of direct proof, though where one can rest his case on so conclusive a presumption, it would be not only supererogatory, but at times risky, to attempt it.

473. Other Presumptions.—Besides the conclusive presumption in favour of legitimacy, others may arise from circumstances, the strength of which must naturally vary in each case. So in a case of disputed legitimacy of the plaintiff on the ground that there could be no legal marriage between his mother, who was alleged but not proved to be a dancing girl, attached to a Pagoda, and his father, who was Zemindar, it was found that both were, however, Shudras belonging to different castes between whom intermarriage was uncommon and its legality doubtful. The evidence on both sides was conflicting, and that adduced by the plaintiff as to how his mother (co-plaintiff and his next friend in the case) was married to the Zemindar false. But their Lordships held that the evidence failing, the presumption remained: "The legal presumption in favour of a child born in his father's house of a mother lodged, and apparently treated, as a wife, treated as a legitimate child by his father, and whose legitimacy is disputed after the father's death, is one safe and proper to be made; and the opposing case should be put to strict proof."[1] The plaintiff's claim was, consequently, decreed.

474. In the case of disputed legitimacy, it is the child and not its mother that possesses the "legal character" referred to in S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act to obtain a declaration as therein provided.[2]

Children's right of maintenance.

33. Every child, whether legitimate or illegitimate, possesses the right of maintenance against its father or his estate: Provided that in a family subject to the Bengal School, such right, in the case of an illegitimate child, ceases upon its attaining majority.

475. Analogous Law.—The children's right of maintenance against their father is supported by the jus naturale, and is recognized in all systems of law. It underlies S. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which prescribes a summary remedy for the maintenance of wives and children limited to a monthly allowance not exceeding Rs. 50. The common law right here declared is independent of that section and may be enforced by suit. In the case of legitimate issue, the right is lifelong, but both the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag qualify it in the case of illegitimate issue, the former by continued service and obedience to the head of the family, the latter by his age and capacity to earn his own livelihood.[3] According to Yadnavalkya, the illegitimate child of a regenerate father is entitled to maintenance not as a matter of consideration, nor as a provision against starvation and vagrancy, but as a matter of right and in recognition of his status as a member of his father's family[4] and by reason of his exclusion

(1) Ramamani v. Kulanthai, 14 M. I.A. 346 (365, 366).
(2) Latifan v. Moorti, 23 C.W.N. 171.
(3) Ananthaya v. Vishnu, 17 M. 160.
(4) Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan, 55 M. 1 (15) P.C.

from inheritance. As in the case of females of the family or of disqualified heirs, an illegitimate son is entitled to maintenance as long as he lives, and possesses such right independent of his earnings, though they cannot be ignored in fixing his maintenance. But though the claim, while it lasts, may be charged upon the inheritance, it still remains a purely personal claim and is not a heritable right.[1] It is not settled that the right of maintenance is independent of the mode of illegitimacy, so that the child, whether born of a permanent mistress or a concubine, is equally entitled to it.[2] The right of the child cannot be affected by reason of the fact that it was the issue of an adulterous intercourse.[3]

Amount of Maintenance.

476. The amount of maintenance depends upon circumstances. It must bear some relation to the position and property of the father, but an illegitimate son cannot claim a share therein in the guise of maintenance.[4] In one case, the court decreed it at Rs. 25 per mensem, but the value of the estate did not enter into its calculation, and it was treated merely as a compassionate allowance.[5] In another case, the person entitled to maintenance was in possession of the inheritance, the income from which yielded only Rs. 150 per annum, which was found insufficient to maintain the claimant. The heir asserted his right to possession of the estate which the court decreed, but burdened it with the payment of that amount, though it represented the entire profit received therefrom.[6]

It has been held in a case that the common law right of maintenance is only available to an illegitimate son and not to an illegitimate daughter whose case is not supported by any text.[7]

[For a further discussion, see Chapter VII on "Maintenance," post.]

(1) Roshan Singh v. Balwant Singh, 22 A. 191 (198) P.C.

(2) Choutwrya v. Sahib Purhulad, 7 M.I.A. 18 (50, 52), followed in Roshan Singh v. Balwant Singh, 22 A. 191 (197) P.C. affirming Balwant Singh v. Roshan Singh, 18 A. 25.

(3) Rahi v. Govinda, 1 B. 97; Subramanya v. Velu, 20 M.L.J. 350: 5 I.C. 919; Muttusamy v. Venkataswara, 12 M.I.A. 203; Venkatachella v. Parvatham, 8 M.H.C.R. 134; Kuppa v. Singaravelu, 8 M. 325 (327); Viramuthi v. Singaravelu, 1 M. 306.

(4) Gopalasami v. Arunachelam, 27 M. 32.

(5) Ib., p. 37.

(6) Qomrao v. Mankoonwer, 2 N.W. P.H.C.R. 136.

(7) Bhayalal v. Churaman, 9 C.P.L. R. 38.

CHAPTER V.

ADOPTION.

477. Topical Introduction.—It has already been seen that the adoption of children is not an institution peculiar to Hinduism, but owes its origin to the social communism peculiar to the primitive races. All the European races have outlived that stage. In India, it has become stereotyped as an integral part of the Hindu personal law. In early times, children, irrespective of their sex, were taken in adoption, and this is recommended by Nand Pandit who commends the adoption of daughters as equally conductive to spiritual efficacy, since both the gift of a daughter in marriage[1] and the birth of a son to her are spiritually meritorious acts,[2] and children of both sexes are necessary to free one from the torments of hell.[3] This special pleading to bring into vogue an old custom which had long since fallen into desuetude does not appear to have appealed to the populace, and though the adoption of a daughter is not altogether unknown,[4] it is now as dead as the dodo amongst all classes of Hindus, except the dancing girls amongst whom it is still common.

Leaving this out of account for the present, the adoption, as now practised, is the adoption of a son.

Adoption defined.

34. (1) Adoption is a formal recognition of a person as the son of another.

(2) No adoption is valid unless it is made in conformity with law.[5]

478. Analogous Law.—The law of adoption is supported by numerous texts.[6]

479. What is an Adopted Son?—An adopted son is a creature of the law. He is spoken of as a secondary, subsidiary or a substituted son. His affiliation is stated to be an imitation of nature. His necessity arose from secular motive. His continuance has been assured by an assumed spiritual benefit he is supposed to confer upon his adoptive father, and his ancestors. But even persons, e.g., the Jains, who do not believe in a hereafter, practise adoption. The fact that other sons whose spiritual efficacy was as great, if not greater, have become obsolete, and the adopted son remains, suggests that its raison d'etre must be "the ordinary human

---

(1) Datt. Mim. VII-1, 16.
(2) Ib., VII, 16-18.
(3) Ib., VII-3.
(4) Nawab Ray v. Bhugbutte, 6 B.L. R. 5; Nursing v. Bhuttan Lal, W.R. (Gap. No. 194).
(5) Yajur Veda, Ashtak, VI-3-10; Hang. Vol. I, p. 179; Manu, IX-127, 160, 168; Vashisth, and Atri (Cal. Ed.) Vol. I, p. 17, cited in Mandlik's H.L. p. 458, f.n. (2)—all texts cited in Hindu Code, (3rd ed.) § 635, pp. 353, 354.
(6) Ib.

desire for perpetuation of family properties and names."[1] This was stated by Manu himself in a passage already quoted.

But according to the sacred precepts, the adoption of a son by a sonless man is a matter of religious necessity, but it does not mean that it is, therefore, necessarily a matter of legal obligation. All that it means is that adoption is commendable to one who has no present issue.[2]

35. Save as provided by any law for the time being in force, every Hindu has the right to adopt a son, provided—

Who may adopt.

(a) has no living son legitimate[3] or adopted,[4] or having a son; the latter was married under the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act, 1923,[5] or is civilly dead;[6] and has no other son; grandson or great grandson in the male line then living;

(b) is possessed of sound mind;[7]

(c) he has attained the age of discretion;[8] and

(d) is not suffering from any mental or physical disability which disqualifies him from inheritance.[9]

Explanation 1.—The facts that the adopter is a bachelor[10] or a widower,[11] or that his wife is pregnant,[12] or does not consent;[13] or opposes the adoption[14] are immaterial to the validity of adoption.

Explanation 2.—A son mentioned in clause (b) does not include a son who suffers from any of the disabilities which disqualify him from inheritance.[15]

Illustrations.

(a) A marries B under the Special Marriage Act, 1872, as amended by Act XXI of 1923, both professing the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh, or Jain religion. They cannot adopt.[16]

(b) A is a Government ward subject to an Act which prohibits A from adopting without the consent of the Local Government. A adopts. The adoption is invalid unless consented to as provided in the Act.

(c) An eunuch registered under Act (XXVII of 1871) is declared by S. 29 thereof incapable of adopting a son. A cannot adopt.

(d) A has turned a Sanyasi and so renounced the world. A cannot adopt.

(e) A has a son who is a congenital idiot. A can adopt.

(f) A who has an adopted son B, adopts C. The adoption is invalid, for a Hindu cannot have two adopted sons at the same time.

---

(1) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 (414): 21 A. 460 (477) P.C.

(2) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398; contra in Rajendro v. Saroda Soondaree, 15 W.R. 548.

(3) Illegitimate son is no bar—Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram, 48 M. 1.

(4) Gopee Lal v. Chundraolee, (1872) I.A. (Sup. Vol.) 131.

(5) See S. 26 of Act XXX of 1923.

(6) Datt. VI, 1.

(7) Tayammal v. Sashachalla, 10 M. I.A. 429 (434, 435).

(8) Jamoona Dassya v. Bama Soondari, 1 C. 289 (295, 296) P.C.

(9) Datt. VI-1, 2; Contra Sarkar's Adoption.

(10) Gopal v. Narayan, 12 B. 329.

(11) Chandrasekharudu v. Bramhanna, 4 M.H.C. 270.

(12) Nagabhushanam v. Seshammagaru, 3 M. 180; Daulah v. Ram Lal, 29 A. 310; Hanmant v. Bhima Charya, 12 B. 105.

(13) Rungamma v. Atchama, 4 M.I.A. 1.

(14) Narain v. Gopal, 33 I.C. (O.) 31.

(15) Datt. Chan. VI-1, 2. Nagammal v. Shankarappa; contra Bharmappa v. Ujjangauda, 46 B. 455.

(16) S. 25 of Act III of 1872.

480. Who may adopt.—The necessity of a son to perform one's obsequies and so ensure salvation has given rise to the custom of adoption, which was at one time a part of the laws of other races, e.g., the Romans, and is still the law in force in Canada and in Japan. As previously stated (§ 462) an adoption had not only the spiritual background but also a secular one, in that it provided to a family in an age of mutual raids. That an adoption was in early age permitted even to the father with legitimate sons alive is borne out by the Vedic legend of Vishwamitra's adoption of Devawrat, even though he had then 100 sons of his own. [1] But in later times, this privilege was narrowed and it became settled that only a person with no son of his own could take one in adoption. The two writers on adoption struggled to reconcile the old text with the current usage, Nand Pandit observing that the father had the right to adopt a son if his legitimate son permitted him to do so.[2] But the Privy Council have given a quietus to this license holding there can be no adoption so long as a legitimate son is alive.[3]

Cl. (a) Has no living son.

481. The term "son" in this section means the natural son and includes an adopted son. It does not include the fraternal nephew though he is declared by Manu to be a son of all his father's brothers.[4] Similarly, the existence of a daughter's son is no bar to adoption, though he is spoken of as equivalent to the son's son. Where a marriage with a sword or dagger is illegal, sons born of such alliance, though entitled to maintenance, do not preclude an adoption, since adoption is presumed to confer the spiritual benefit only by the adoption of a legal son.[5] Even where such marriages are customary, but the sons are regarded as inferior, and not competent to perform the obsequies of their ancestors, their presence is no bar to adoption.[6]

Nephew and Daughter's Son No Bar to Adoption.

482. The existence of any of the relations specified in clause (a) of the section is a bar to an adoption, for every one of them is an heir and is capable of conferring the fullest spiritual benefit on the adopter. It does not make any difference in the rule if the person in existence is himself an adopted son.[7] For much the same reason, the simultaneous adoption of two or more sons is invalid as to all. This was laid down by the High Court of Calcutta in several cases, one of which has been affirmed by the Privy Council, who said: "The observation which appears to their Lordships to be the strongest against such an adoption as this being allowed by the Hindu Law, is that no authority and no text has been, or apparently can be produced showing that the Hindu Law allows it..... The entire absence of any authority in favour of such an adoption is an argument that the Hindu Law did not recognize it, and that it has really not been the practice amongst Hindus; for if such a practice had prevailed

Simultaneous adoptions invalid.

---

(1) Veda Atreya.

(2) Datt. Mim. Sec. 1-12; Datta Chan., I-3-8.

(3) Rangama v. Atchama, 4 M.I.A. 1; explained in Akhoy v. Kalapahar, 12 C. 406 (412) P.C.

(4) Manu:—"If amongst uterine brothers one becomes father of a son, Manu ordained that all the rest became fathers of male issue by that son."—IX-182; Datt. Mim., II-29.

(5) Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram, 48 M. 1 F.B.

(6) Ib.

(7) Bhujagonda v. Babu, 44 B. 627.

to any appreciable extent, some authorities would have been found on the subject."[1]

According to Golap Shastri, simultaneous adoptions are not only legal but usual in Bengal.[2] He argues that the fiction of adoption should imitate nature. But the courts, even in Bengal, have answered both the questions in the negative, holding two simultaneous or successive adoptions equally invalid and unsupported by the text or usage.[3] And the questions are really ones for usage and not logic to answer. In any case, it is against the policy of law to favour the creation of artificial relations, and it would treat that as prohibited which is not expressly permitted.

Where Son Disqualified, Civilly or Presumably Dead.

483. Since the primary purpose of adoption, as now understood, is to provide for the adopter's spiritual advancement by having some one legally qualified to perform his obsequies, and since such qualification must be judged by Hindu Law, which disqualifies a son who is impotent, an idiot or insane, blind, deaf, dumb, lame, congenitally suffering from leprosy or from any infirmity or disease which disqualifies him for inheritance,[4] or one who has become a convert to an alien faith or has turned a hermit, sanyasi or a fakir[5] and thereby snapped the natural tie by which he was bound to his father, the latter may make an adoption as such disqualified son is as good as civilly dead to him. This is also the view of Nand Pandit who argues that, since subsidiary sons were neither entitled to perform the obsequies, nor share the inheritance, and participation in the obsequies and estate is the result of filial relation, a person who is impotent and the rest, merely bears the semblance of being a son, but is of no use for either purpose.[6] A son who has merely become a Bairagi, who is not an ascetic, does not forfeit his religious efficacy.[7] In order to have that effect, the renunciation must be complete with no legal possibility of returning to civil life. Such is the case of an ascetic, sanyasi or a fakir[8] who then form a brotherhood of their own and whose return even to their domestic life does not revive their lost right of inheritance.[9] There is, of course, nothing in the Caste Disabilities Removal Act[10] to militate against this view, since the renunciation of wordly pursuits and wordly ties does not amount to his "renouncing or having been excluded from the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste."[11]

Effect of Act, XII of 1928.

484. Persons congenitally deaf and dumb are now made statutorily eligible to inherit their patrimony. Now, as the Hindu texts Judge of a person's competency to adopt from his competency to inherit, that

(1) Monemotho Nath v. Onath Nath, Bourke 189; Sidessur v. Doorga, Ib., 260; Gyanandra v. Kalapahar, 9 C. 50, affirmed O. A. Akhoy Chunder v. Kalapahar, 12 C. 406 (412) P.C.; Doorga v. Surendra, 12 C. 68, O.A. 19 C. 513 P.C. Mahesh v. Taruck, 20 C. 487.

(2) Adoption (2nd Ed.), pp. 183, 184.

(3) Joy Chunder v. Bhyrub Chunder, (1849) S.D.A. 461; Sudanund v. Bonomallee, 1 Marsh 317.

(4) Rungama v. Ramanadha, 4 M.I.A. 1 (54, 55); Nagammal v. Sankarappa, 54 M. 576: 131 I.C. 9; contra Bharmappa v. Ujjanagauda, 46 B. 455 (458-463). Cf. Ran Bijai v. Jagat Pal, 18 C. 111 (118) P.C.

(5) Mahru v. Moti, (1875) P.R. 52.

(6) Datt. Mim., S. II-62 (Suth.), p. 31. To the same effect, 1 Strange H. L., p. 77; Sarkar's Adoption (2nd Ed.), pp. 195, 196.

(7) Teeluk Chunder v. Shama Churn, 1 W.R. 209; Jagannath v. Bidyanunda, 10 W.R. 172; Khooderam v. Rookhinee, 15 W.R. 197.

(8) Mohun v. Mati, (1875) P.R. 52.

(9) Dayabhag, 5-14.

(10) XXI of 1850.

(11) Contra Sarkar's Adoption, (2nd Ed.), p. 197.

test of the Shastras must be deemed to have been overruled by the Legislature. But still as the primary purpose of adoption is spiritual benefit, it follows that a son, though competent to inherit is still ineligible to perform the obsequies of his father, he is as good as civilly dead for the purpose of his father's adoption, and his presence offers no legal bar to the exercise of his right by the father. This debacle flows from the Legislature having amended the law of secular rights and left the performance of spiritual duty untouched. The fact is that what was given as an unreal spiritual sanction has now been construed as the primary purpose of adoption, overlooking the real purpose which remains masked in the cloak of religion.

485. For the same reason a father whose son has disappeared for a time, sufficiently long to raise the presumption of death, is set free to make an adoption. Such presumption will arise if he has not been heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive.[1]

It has been said that in such a case the adoption is not valid unless it is proved that the son was dead at the date of the adoption,[2] but presumption is one mode of proof where the son has not been heard of for seven years prior to the date of adoption. Of course, where the question of the date of death is material it must be proved and cannot be left to presumption, since presumption merely extends to death and not to the date and time thereof.

486. The father of a person who has contracted marriage under the amending provisions of the Special Marriage Act, 1923[3] has been statutorily given the right to make an adoption,[4] though the person so married has no such right.[5] These provisions were added by the present writer not only to do away with an obsolete custom, but also to give the father the right of adoption, as the son might marry out of caste and so cause him spiritual disquiet.

487. Adoption is a solemn act and alters the course of devolution of property. In effect, it is even more far-reaching than a will. There can, therefore, be no valid adoption unless, the adopter had obtained sufficient maturity of understanding and was otherwise in possession of his senses. While therefore, an idiot and a lunatic are not inherently incompetent to make an adoption, an adopter made by them may be set aside on the ground that they did not fully understand the nature of the act and of its effect upon their rights. So in setting aside the adoption and a will alleged to have been made by a dying man almost continually insensible, though occasionally roused to consciousness by loud tones or pungent applications to his nostrils, but almost immediately afterwards relapsing into a state of insensibility with his mind quite inert, and instantly fatigued upon the slightest exertion, their Lordships observed: "How is it possible that a man in such a condition could be capable of any act requiring judg-

Cl. (b) Who is of sound Mind.

(1) S. 108, Ev. Act. (I of 1872), as to the meaning of which see In re Phene's Trusts, L.R. 5 Ch. 139 (144); Parmeshar v. Bishessar, 1 A. 53 F.B.; Mazhar Ali v. Budh Singh, 7 A. 297; Dharup v. Gobind 8 A. 614; Dhondo v. Ganesh, 11 B. 433; Rango v. Mudyeppa, 32 B. 296 (303); Contra in Janumajay v. Keshudial, 2 B.L.R. (A.C.) 134; Guru Das v. Matilal, 6 B.L.R. (App.) 16, following the Hindu Law, are now superseded by the Evidence Act.

(2) Trev. H. L., (2nd Ed.), 105.

(3) Act XXX of 1923.

(4) S. 26, Act III of 1872 as amended by Act XXX of 1923.

(5) Ibid., S. 25.

ment and reflection, especially one to which no antecedent circumstances appear to have led, and for which the enfeebled and scarcely conscious mind was unprepared. In such a state as that described, even if the mind were passively awake to the suggestions made to it, would naturally cling to repose, and yield, for the sake of it, to any external suggestion.....If the law were to countenance acts of this description, performed at such a time and under such circumstances, without the clearest and most cogent evidence to establish their validity, relations and the managers would be encouraged to advance their own private notions of what might be advisable to be done for the good of the family, and to ascribe acts to a dying man in which he would have been the merely passive instrument to prolong their own gain and authority."[1] These words are equally applicable to persons of immature intellect, and especially women, who are often imposed upon to adopt by persons who are less anxious for the repose of the adopter's soul than for feathering their own nests.

Cl. (c) Age of discretion.

488. In the matter of adoption the Indian Majority Act is inapplicable. Consequently, there is no statutory bar as regards the age of adoption, and since the only direct provisions of Hindu Law fixes the age of minority, in the sixteenth year[2] it follows that a person below that age cannot adopt. But since the affiliation of a stranger calls for the exercise of discretion, the courts have laid down that no one who has not attained the age of discretion is competent to make an adoption.

489. The question then is what is an age of discretion. It would seem that, in the absence of any specific rule of Hindu Law, the statutory law of majority should guide the courts as courts administering the rules of justice, equity and good conscience. This the courts have generally enjoined but on the subject of adoption they have held the attainment of 15 or 16 years by a husband as a sufficient age "which according to the law prevalent in Bengal is to be regarded as the age of discretion."[3] But this case was never intended to settle a general rule of Hindu majority, and if it has that effect, then a Hindu adopter would fare much worse than a Hindu transferor or testator, inasmuch as a boy of 16 might at the age of impressionable youth, moved perhaps by a feeling of religious piety, or unduly alarmed by a passing ailment, commit an act for which he might heartily feel sorry when he foresees the consequence of it. Moreover the two ages of majority may, at times, lead to awkward results. Thus while a person below 18 may not execute an authority to adopt a son, since it is compulsorily registrable,[4] he is competent to confer such authority verbally or by a will, and what is more, make an adoption himself. In other words, he is to that extent like a major competent to delegate his authority to another, though not a major to exercise it himself.

490. The Legislature has made some provision for protecting such minors as are placed under a certificated guardian,[5] or the management of whose estate is assumed by the Court of Wards,[6] but the Legislature should certainly protect other minors as well. As it is, it is left to the

(1) Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram, 48 M. 1 F.B.; Tayammal v. Seshachaliah, 10 M.I.A. 429 (434, 435); Bullub v. Kishenpria, 6 B.L.R. 219.

(2) Manu, VII-72.

(3) Rajendra v. Sarada Soondaree, 15 W.R. 548, followed in Jumoona v. Ramasoondari, 1 C. 289 (295, 296) P.C.

(4) Ss. 17 (3) and 35 (3) (b) of the Registration Act (XVI of 1908).

(5) The Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890).

(6) The Court of Wards Acts.

court to decide whether the adopter in a given case had attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature of his act and its consequences upon his natural heirs and after-born progeny.[1]

Cl. (d). Congenitally Disqualified to Inherit.

491. The question whether a person suffering from mental and physical infirmities, e.g., congenital blindness, deafness, dumbness, impotency, lameness, virulent leprosy, idiocy, lunacy, disqualifying him from inheritance, forfeits his right of adoption is neither covered by authority nor by judicial precedent, though it is the subject of a direct text which forbids them an adoption.[2] In a case of disputed succession to a Mahant, ultimately decided by the Privy Council, the plaintiff claimed to succeed to the Muth properties as the chela of the deceased Mahant. The defence was that the Mahant was a leper and so disqualified to make a valid appointment of his successor. The High Court threw out his suit holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he had been appointed by the Mahant, and that the Mahant could not have validly adopted him for he was suffering from leprosy. Mr. Mayne who supported this decree before the Privy Council, conceded on the authority of decided cases,[3] that only virulent leprosy would have disqualified the Mahant and that his leprosy was not of that type. As there was no evidence to prove that the deceased's leprosy was of this type, the Privy Council reversed the decision of the High Court by merely reversing their finding that the plaintiff had failed to prove his appointment.[4] But the fact that Mr. Mayne conceded and Sir R. Couch adopted this concession as the statement of sound law, in delivering the judgment of their Lordships, by observing that "in order to disqualify from making an adoption the leprosy must be of a virulent form" shows that this malady was treated by all concerned as a sufficient disqualification for adoption. If so, the other infirmities which occur in the same text would be equally a bar to adoption. In the case of Shudras, leprosy is no bar.[5] It is submitted, that neither leprosy nor any other infirmity is a legal bar to adoption because a leper still remains a Hindu and has a right to have his obsequies performed and his soul transferred to heavenly regions which he would not be able to do without adoption. If at all, adoption is to him a greater necessity, otherwise, since his sufferings of this life are due to the sins he had committed in his past life, if he dies with his obsequial rites unperformed, he would be exposed to even greater torments in the next life against which adoption is the only cure.[6] Moreover, the author of Dattakmimansa commenting on the text of Yadnavalkya[7] on the right of the issue of disqualified persons, expressly

---

(1) Ramachari v. Saraswati, (1920) M.W.N. 721: 60 I.C. 246.

(2) Mit. 11-x-10, 11; Datt. Chand, VI-1-2 contra Sarkar's Adoption (2nd Ed.) pp. 202, 203.

(3) Ananta v. Ramabai, 1 B.H.C. R. 554; Janardhan v. Gopal, 5 B.H.C. R. (A.C.) 145; Muthuvelayuda v. Parasakti, (1859-1862) Mad. S.D.A. 238.

(4) Bhagaban v. Ram Praparna, 22 C. 843 (858) P.C. In Bhoobunessuree v. Gouree Dass, 11 W.R. 535, the plaintiff had admitted that the disability due to leprosy could be expiated by penance (citing Shama Charan Sircar's Vyavashta Dharpan, 2nd Ed., p. 1010), which the two courts below had found against the plaintiff. No further question was therefore gone into.

(5) Sukumari v. Anantta, 28 C. 168.

(6) Sarkar's Adoption (2nd Ed.), p. 202.

(7) "But their sons, whether legitimate, or the offspring of a wife by a kinsman, are entitled to allotments, if free from similar defects".—Yad. 2 S. 141.

contemplates adoptions by them,[1] though the Mitakshara understands that text to forbid the adoption of other sons.[2]

But Babu Golap Shastri questions the correctness of the translation of the text, and rightly, for a reference to the original shows that what the commentator meant was that the specific mention of the Auras and Kshetraj sons by Yadnavalkya was intended "to exclude other sons from inheritance" on the principle of expressio unius exclusio alterius.[3]

Where Adoptor degraded.

492. But though the apostacy of the son frees the father for adoption, his own apostacy or degradation from caste does not disqualify him for adoption. In this, he is protected by the Caste Disabilities Removal Act.[4] But though a convert to Mahomedanism or Christianity may nominally continue to possess his previous right of adoption, it will be a question, whether, by his abandonment of Hinduism, and acceptance of the doctrines of a new religion he has not abandoned the practice of adoption which only the religion he had abandoned allowed, but which his new religion does not. Moreover, since adoption is merely a means to the attainment of spiritual beatitude in accordance with the tenets of the Hindu religion, the renunciation of the religion would carry with it also a necessary inference that the convert had also abandoned a usage of that religion.[5] But this is a mere presumption. It does not preclude the possibility of adoption by a converted Mahomedan, and such customary rights are known to have persisted in the Punjab[6] where adoptions by converted Mahomedans are both customary and common, and some of whom even closely follow the Hindu rule that a widow cannot adopt without the authority of her husband.[7]

A person who has committed murder becomes degraded (patit) but is not disqualified from adopting a son.[8]

In any case, if they still retain the right of adoption it must be by custom which must be proved; but such adoption could carry with it no right of inheritance unless it is a part of the custom which sanctions adoption.[9]

Usage may Prohibit Adoption.

493. Adoption may be prohibited by custom, but in this case, if the parties are admittedly Hindus, adoption will be presumed to be permissible till the contrary is established by custom.[10] But if the family was one of non-Hindu origin, and had adopted only some of the customs of Hinduism, then it would be on it to prove that the custom of adoption was also the one adopted by it. Such was held to be the case of a Cooch Bihar family which had only become partially Hinduised and as to whom

(1) Datt. Ch., Sect. VI-§ 1.

(2) Mit., II-x-10-11. See Suth. Note to Datt. Ch., p. 144.

(3) Sarkar's Adoption (2nd Ed.), p. 202.

(4) XXI of 1850.

(5) Machhu Bai v. Hirbai, 23 B. 264 (265).

(6) Najibulla v. Nadir, (1881) P.R. 120; Umar Baksh v. Dhanda, (1894) P. R. 39; Nada v. Nur Muhammad, (1894) P.R. 143; Kur Ali v. Mawaz Khan, (1900) P.R. 214; Muhammad Niazuddin v. Mhd. Umar Khan, (1907) P.R. 1; Jiwan v. Harnam Das, (1907) P.W.R. 77.

(7) Abdul Rahman v. Bure Khan, (1911) P.R. 196; Kallu v. Nur Mahi, (1891) P.R. 104.

(8) Vaman v. Krishnaji, 21 Bom. L. R. 427: 51 I.C. 363.

(9) Mhd. Umar Khan v. Mhd. Niazudin, 39 C. 418 (432) P.C. Elahya v. Kanha, (1871) P.R. 12; Rachli Bai v. Hirbai, 35 B. 264.

(10) Vandravan v. Manilal 16 B. 470 (476); Verabhai v. Bai Hiraba, 27 B. 492 (498, 499) P.C.; Bishnath v. Ram-

the custom of adoption was pleaded, but which the Privy Council held required to be proved like any other custom.[1]

494. So again lunacy is no bar to a person's right of adoption, provided the act is performed in a lucid interval. This he may do even though he had been adjudged lunatic and a manager appointed for the custody of his person and the management of his estate.[2] And since a lunatic may adopt, his wife cannot adopt during his lifetime for him, since her right to adopt arises only on her husband's death, and lunacy is not death.[3]

Cl. (e) or is a Lunatic.

495. There is no express authority prohibiting the adoption by a bachelor[4] or a widower, and both are therefore competent to adopt.[5]

Bachelor or a Widower.

496. Though Hindu Law counts the birth of a child as from the date of its conception,[6] there is no prohibition against adoption by a person during the pregnancy of his wife.[7] The right of adoption cannot be suspended upon so remote and contingent a possibility—and such contingencies may often occur, as not only the adopter's but his son's grandson's and great grandson's wives may become pregnant. As Sargeant, C. J., observed: "It may doubtless be contended, that when the wife is in a state of pregnancy there may be a son in the womb at the moment of adoption; but the possibility that the child in utero may be a female, would, if the power to adopt were to be deemed suspended by the mere fact of pregnancy, always imperil, and in some cases seriously so, the acquisition of those spiritual benefits which the rite of adoption is supposed to supply in default of a legitimate son."

Adoption during the Pregnancy of Wife.

497. But a person who has permanently renounced the world and turned a hermit has no need for adoption, and he is held to be ineligible.[8] But such ineligibility must arise from custom or the nature and purpose of the life affected. A mere change of status does not carry with it any disqualification to adopt as a matter of legal necessity. If any such did arise, it would be obnoxious to the provisions of the Caste Disabilities Removal Act. At any rate, there is no law to prevent a Grihast Gosavi from making an adoption. They are entitled to hold property and have churn, (1850) S.D.A.R. 20, followed in Fanindra v. Rajesuar, 11 C. 463 (478) P.C.

Adopter an Ascetic or Sanyasi.

(1) Fanindra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 463 (478) P.C.

(2) S. 67, Lunacy Act (IV of 1912); Amanchi v. Amanchi, 19 M.L.T. 243: 33 I.C. 578.

(3) Ramkrishna v. Laxmi Narayan, 59 I.C. (B) 458.

(4) Gunappa v. Sankappa, (1839) B. Sel. R. 202; Gopal v. Narayan, 12 B. 329; Chandrasekharuda v. Brahmanna, 4 M.H.C.R. 270; Monemotho Nath Dey v. Gononthnath, 2 I.J. (N.S.) 24 (43).

(5) Nagappa v. Subha, 2 M.H.C.R. 367; Chandrasekarudu v. Brahmanna, 4 M. H. C. R. 270; Gopal v. Narayan, 12 B. 329; contra Bhattacharie's H. L. (3rd Ed.) 348; Sarkar's Adoption (2nd Ed.) 200, dubitante; Somanath, in his Datt. Mim., cited per Strange, Manual of H. L., p. 61.

(6) Mit. 1 6-8-11; Tagore v. Tagore, 18 W.R. 359 P.C.

(7) Doulat v. Ramlal, 29 A. 310; Nagabhushanam v. Seshamma, 3 M. 180; Hanmant v. Bhimacharya, 12 B. 105.

(8) Teku v. Busti, (1874) P.R. 15; in Mhalsa Bai v. Vithoba, 7 B.H.C.R. (App.) XXVI (XXXI), the validity of an adoption was challenged on the ground that the adopter had undergone the ceremony of "Vibhut Vida" (i.e. the father had assumed the role of a Lingayat ascetic), but the court held this not proved and held that even if proved it did not amount to Sanyas or complete abandonment of worldly matters.

now come to be regarded as a class by themselves following a secular occupation.[1]

Adoption during Pollution.

498. The validity of an adoption cannot be attacked on the ground that it was made during the period of ceremonial impurity following the birth or death of a relative.[2]

The question was raised and considered by Madras High Court in which they said: "Pollution is only a bar to a religious act and renders religious ceremonies inefficacious, but a gift and acceptance are secular acts, and may, therefore, be supplemented by Datta Homa after the period of pollution.[3] As, however, Datta Homa is not necessary in all cases, it follows that an adoption may be completed even during a period of pollution.[4] And this seems to be essential since the services of a son, natural or adopted, are indispensable for the performance of the obsequial rites. Moreover, the Shastras provide for the vicarious performance of the ceremonies of adoption and the natural father has been held competent to delegate his authority to a relative, in case of his own sickness, to make the delivery,[5] for otherwise the delay might imperil, and in some cases seriously so, the acquisition of those spiritual benefits which the rite of adoption is supposed to supply in default of a legitimate son. As observed in a Bombay case: "A man in bad health or on his death bed, as in the present case, might not live till the child was born and yet, if the rule be as contended for the appellant, the suspension must ipso facto take place in all cases during pregnancy; for we entirely agree with the Madras High Court that it would be impossible to make the validity of an adoption dependent on knowledge or ignorance of the fact of pregnancy."[6]

Assent of Wife Unnecessary.

499. It will be presently seen that the wife has no power to adopt without the consent of her husband, but is the husband on his part bound to consult his wife before introducing a stranger into the family? An adoption being regarded as an imitation of nature, the wife logically could not be ignored. This argument was addressed to Nand Pandit who had no difficulty in answering it on the ground of the inferiority of women and the superiority of the husband,[7] who can validity adopt a son not only without consulting her but in spite of her opposition,[8] but she neverthe-

(1) Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao, 47 I.C. 213; 16 N. 187; Hari Gir v. Anand Bharti, 21 N. 127 P.C.; Balagir v. Dhonegir, 5 Bom.L.R. 114.

(2) The period of pollution (mourning) varies with the caste and closeness of relationship. The extreme period for Brahmins is 10 days, for Kshatriyas 12 days, for Vaishyas 16 days and for Shudras 30 days. But on the death of a man's parent or a woman's husband the period of pollution lasts for a whole year.

(3) Santappayya v. Kanagappayya, 18 M. 397 (398, 399), followed in Asita v. Nirodi, 20 C.W.N. 901 (908); 35 I.C. 127; Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti, 13 M. 214 (222); pollution was incidentally mentioned as an objection to adoption, but its effect was not considered, the adoption being set aside as having been brought about by coercion (see Ib., p. 224). So in Ramalinga v. Sadasiva, 1 W. R. 25 P.C., pollution was pleaded as a bar, but the P.C. found as a fact that the adoption had been made after the period of pollution which they observed extended to 16 days.

(4) Thangathanni v. Ramu, 5 M. 358.

(5) Jamnabai v. Raychand, 7 B. 221 (227, 228); Vijiarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B.H.C.R. 244 (257), and see post.

(6) Hanmant v. Bhimachanya, 12 B. 105.

(7) Datt. Mim., 11-22 (Suth.), p. 5; Annapurni v. Collector, 18 M. 277 (283), affirmed O. A. Sub nom Annapurni v. Forbes, 23 M. 1 P.C.

(8) Narain v. Gopal, 18 O.C. 341: 33 I.C. 31.

less, if she is the sole wife, comes to be regarded as mother of the adopted son and her parents, as his maternal grand parents.[1]

Adoption by the wife.

36. A wife may adopt a son to her husband with his express consent.[2]

But Where One of the Wives Participates.

500. But while the wife does not count in the matter of adoption, and it makes no difference in her status if she is the sole wife, her non-participation will, however, prejudice her right if she has a co-wife who had joined in the adoption. In that case the latter acquires the status of a mother and the former that of a stepmother, so that on the death of the adopted son, the former inherits to him to the exclusion of the latter.[3]

Exp. (2).

501. The question whether a person with a son disqualified for inheritance by reason of his mental or physical infirmities is free to make an adoption is now reduced to very narrow limits since the statutary amendment of the Shastric rule on the subject.[4] Still the question remains and will be found discussed elsewhere (§ 491).

Jain Adoption.

502. It has already been seen that, Jains though forming a sect of dissenters are classed as Hindus (§§ 197, 198). As such, they have the same right of adoption though their adoption is a purely secular institution,[5] and is free from many of the restrictions of orthodox Hinduism.[6] The subject will have to be discussed in the sequel (S. 60).

One Adoption by Two Persons.

503. Two persons, even brothers, cannot take the same boy in adoption either conjointly or consecutively. If they do, both the adoptions would be invalid.[7] Even as regards the adoption by two widows taking one boy in adoption to their husband, its legality depends upon local custom which justifies such adoption in Western India,[8] but not elsewhere.

Motive Immaterial.

504. The adopter's motive influencing his adoption is wholly immaterial, and does not affect its validity, even if it be to defeat an alienation or disappoint an expectant heir. But, of course, an adoption cannot be made a cloak for defrauding bona fide transferees who would be entitled to retain their property, or decreed restitution, if their title is attacked by the adopted son in collusion with the adopter.

Statutory Prohibition against Adoption.

505. The right of a ward of court to adopt is now the subject of express statutory enactments, which prohibit a Government ward from making an adoption without the previous or subsequent consent of the Local Government. The question in such a case is one of construction of the statutes concerned and the extent of

(1) Datt. Mim., Sec. VI 50; Annapurni, v. Collector, 18 M. 277 (283).

(2) Narayan v. Nana, 7 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 153.

(3) Annapurni v. Forbes, 23 M. 1 (9) P.C. following Kasheeshuree v. Greesh Chunder, (1864) W.R. (Sup. Vol.) 71, dissenting from Macnaughten's view in his Prel. Remarks to his H.L. pp. 12, 13.

(4) Act XII of 1928.

(5) Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688, P.C.; Dhanraj v. Soni Bai, 52, C. 482 (494) P.C. Ashrafi Kunwar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 197.

(6) Lakshmichand v. Gatto, 8 A. 319; Harnabh v. Mandil, 27 C. 379.

(7) Raj Coomar v. Bissesur, 10 C. 688 (696, 697).

(8) Indar Kunwar v. Jaipal, 15 C. 725 (746, 747) P.C.; Narasimha v. Parthasarathy, 37 M. 199 (220) P.C.

their legality which should, however, be presumed.[1] Eunuchs registered under the provisions of the Criminal Tribes Act[2] are expressly precluded from adopting a son. They therefore forfeit by force of this statute any common law right they may have had to make an adoption.

506. Adoption by a wife is supported by the text of Vashisth who allows it subject to the assent of her Lord.[3] Cases of such adoptions are rare. Such an adoption contemplates the absence of the husband, in which case, the wife exercises the authority within the limits set by her husband and is, in effect, his agent for that purpose. The consent requisite is express, though it may be oral[4] but when given in a non-testamentary writing, it must be registered.[5] And since the provisions of the Registration Act are not controlled by Hindu Law, and are only subject to the Majority Act, and the Registrar has no option but to refuse registration of any such instrument if executed by a "minor, an idiot or a lunatic,"[6] it follows that a person under 18 years of age cannot validly convey his authority in writing, though he may do so by parol, a result which the law could never have contemplated, while extending its policy of laissez faire to the Hindus in the matter of adoption when enacting the Indian law of majority. But the law must remain in this unsatisfactory state till the Legislature intervenes to place it on a more logical footing. Where, of the two wives, the junior joins with her husband in adoption, she becomes the adoptive mother and is entitled to succeed to the adopted son in preference to the senior co-wife, who is assigned only the status of a step-mother.[7]

Joint Authority Invalid.

507. The authority given must be to the wife alone and not to her conjointly with another. Such authority, if given, vitiates it altogether.[8] But a person may, while authorizing his wife to adopt, provide that she should not adopt without consulting a person named,[9] or even make the exercise of the power contingent upon the consent of other persons.[10]

The subject of authority to adopt will be found more fully discussed in the sequel.

Adoption by Delegated Authority.

37. (1) The power of giving and taking in adoption is a right that primarily belongs only to a man, which he is not free to delegate to any relation other than his wife or widow, and when they are more than one to such of them as he may select.

(2) But on the man's death, his power of adoption may, by presumed delegation, be exercised by his widow subject to the provisions of the ensuing sections.

---

(1) For provisions prohibiting adoption by a Government ward, see C.P. Court of Wards Act, S. 32 (XXIV of 1899); Beng. Act IX of 1879, S. 81, read with Act, VII of 1912, S. 5; Mad. Act I of 1902, S. 34; Jamoona v. Boma Soonderi, 1 C. 289 (295) P.C.; Mad. Reg. V of 1804, S. 25; U.P. Act IV of 1912, S. 37; Punj. Act II of 1903, S. 15; Orissa, Beng. Act IX of 1879, S. 61; Bombay (Bom. Act I of 1903); Ajmere (Reg. I of 1888) seems to be a similar provision.

(2) III of 1911.

(3) Narayan v. Nana, 7 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 153.

(4) Soonder v. Gudodhur, 7 M.I.A. 54.

(5) S. 17 (3), Registration Act (XVI of 1908); Somasundara v. Duraisami, 27 M. 30.

(6) Ib., S. 35 (2) (b); contra 12 C. W.N. cxxxviii, cannot be maintained.

(7) Surendra v. Savlaja, 18 C. 385.

(8) Beem Churn v. Heeralall, I.J. (N. S.) 225; Amrito Lal v. Surnomoyee, 27 C. 996(1002) P.C.; Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivasa, 39 B. 441.

(9) Annapurni v. Collector, 18 M. 277 (283).

(10) Amrito Lal v. Surnomoyee, 27 C. 996 (1002, 1003) P.C.

(3) Apart from the power of adoption, the consequential ceremonies including that of giving and taking may be performed by any person by delegation from either parent.[1]

508. Analogous Law.—The origin of the father's sole right to give away his son in adoption and his daughter in marriage flows from his quandom ownership of his children. This section formulates rules relating to his power of giving and taking a son in adoption which follows the law of gift. The power of giving and taking in adoption is the direct outcome of his personal authority which can only be delegated to his wife or widow. The latter as the donee of his power is bound by his express mandate, in the absence of which, usage has supervened and created rights which will be found set out in this chapter.

This section is limited to the exercise of his delegated authority. As such, the power of gift and its acceptance can only be exercised by him or by his widow, but with this difference that, outside the limits of the Mayukh law, his widow cannot take a son in adoption, nor can she give away her son in adoption, since the power to take, and the power to give are equally subject to the husband's authority. Once this power is exercised, the consequential ceremony of giving and taking might be left to be performed through another, preferably a relation. But there is no rigid enabling or disabling rule on the subject.

509. Power and Limits of Delegation.—Adoption is the gift of his son by the natural father to another, and is completed on its acceptance by the latter.[2] This may partake of a contract followed up by simultaneous or subsequent manual delivery and acceptance, which symbolizes and completes the transfer of the boy from one parental control to another. The first essential contract of gift and acceptance can only be made by the parent of the child. It cannot be left to be performed vicariously. But if the contract of gift and acceptance is concluded between the principals, competent to give and take,[3] and if either of them is, through illness or otherwise, unable to perform the only indispensable ceremony of corporal giving and taking[4] or of the Datt Homa, if necessary, its performance may be delegated to be performed by the wife,[5] or another son[6] on the part of the giver and any relation, such as the uncle of the receiver,[7] or indeed, any other suitable person.[8]

Conditional Delegation.

510. The father may depute his wife to give away his son. In that case she acts as his delegate and is bound to act strictly according to his instruction. If he had ordered her to act only on the fulfilment of a certain condition, then she has

(1) Lakshmibai v. Ramchandra, 22 B. 590; Shamsing v. Santabai, 25 B. 551; Vijayarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B.H.C. R. 244.

(2) Collector of Surat v. Dhirsingi, 10 B.H.C.R. 234 (237).

(3) Bhagwan Das v. Rajmal, 10 B.H. C.R. 241 (265) citing Kenchava v. Ningappa, Ibid., 265 note; Venkata v. Subhadra, 7 M. 548 (551); Subbarayar v. Subbammal, 21 M. 497 502), O.A.: 24 M. 214 P.C.; Shamsingh v. Santabai, 25 P. 551 (555).

(4) Vijayarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 244 (257).

(5) Subbarayar v. Subbammal, 21 M. 497.

(6) Venkata v. Subhadra, 7 M. 548 (551) 3 N.L.J. 191: 56 I.C. (N.) 620.

(7) Vijayarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B. H.C.R. (O.C.) 244 (257); Jamnabai v. Raychand, 7 B. 225 (227).

(8) Chunni Bai v. Girdhari, (1934) N. 1 (6).

no power to act till that condition, however unnecessary, and even though imposed in consequence of a mistake, is fulfilled, provided it was made an essential term of her employment. So where the father had agreed to give his boy in adoption, only if the adopter obtained the previous assent of the British Government to it, without which the mother was not to give away her son in adoption, as there had been "former wrangles" about the estate. In this he was mistaken. His wife completed the adoption, but the court set it aside holding that the condition precedent to her authority had not been fulfilled. "The mere fact that a man might have judged more wisely or have obtained more acurate information, does not justify those to whom his permission is requisite for a legal transaction, to think and judge for him. His volition and its legal consequences are, in fact, not affected by a mistake under which he may labour. The business of the other parties concerned is not to supersede but to persuade him."[1]

38 (1) (a) The widow has no right of her own to make an adoption, though she may adopt a son to her husband if she is authorised by him to do so.[2]

Adoption by the widow.

(b) The widow, subject to the Mitakshara or the Dayabhag schools of law, cannot adopt except with such authority.[3]

(c) But the widow subject to the Dravid and the Maharashtra schools of law are, even in the absence of such authority, permitted to adopt in accordance with the provisions of the next following sections.

(2) The widow authorised or empowered in this behalf may adopt at her option, but is not compellable to do so.[4]

Exception.—Nothing herein contained applies to an adoption authorised by custom as provided in sections 66-71.

511. Analogous Law.—The foundation of the woman's right to adopt is the following text of Vashishth:—

Vashishth.—"Man formed of uterine blood and virile seed proceeds from his mother and his father (as an effect) from its cause. Therefore, the father and the mother have power to give, to sell, and to abandon their son."

"Let a woman neither give nor receive a son except with her husband's permission."[5]

This text makes her power subject to the assent of her lord.[6] But latter usage has interpreted this text, giving rise to a diversity of views which have become more or less crystallized into fixed rules qualifying it. Thus in Bombay, whether the husband died, joint or separated, his assent is presumed and the widow is empowered to make an adoption unrestricted by any of his relatives whose just expectations she might disappoint.[7] In Madras, the widow can never adopt free

---

(1) Ranga Bai v. Bagirathi Bai, 2 B. 377 (383).
(2) Vashisth, XV-1, 2, 5; 14 S.B.E. 75.
(3) Ib.
(4) Mutsaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A. 377 P.C.
(5) Ch. XV-1, 2, 5; 14 S.B.E. 75.
(6) Mutsaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A. 377 P.C.
(7) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (436); Gopal v. Vishnu, 23 B. 250 (256); Malgauda v. Babaji, 37 B. 107; Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram, 48 M. 1 F.B.; Harigir v. Anand, (1925) P.C. 127; 88 I.C. 343.

from the control of a masculine mind, whether her husband died separated or not. In either case, she must have been either possessed of the authority of the husband, or in its absence, she must act with the consent of her husband's sapindas. She is bound to consult all, but for the validity of her adoption it is not necessary that all must concur in her act. If all, or the majority do, then her act becomes final, but if only some of them concur and the rest dissent, then the validity of her act is put to another test: was it proper and made in pursuance of a religious duty? The question in this case becomes one of fact to be decided on the circumstances of the family and a fair consideration of its expediency.

512. The Bengal, and Benares[1] schools understand Vashisth's text to imply the express authority of her husband and insist upon it, while in the Mithila country, the widow can, under no circumstances, adopt a son to her husband even with his express authority, though she may adopt a son to herself in the Kritrim from.[2] But such adoption is not an adoption to her husband, but to herself, and consequently, the adopted son does not succeed to any estate but her own.[3] In the Punjab, adoption is so entirely subject to tribal and territorial custom that it admits of no general statement.

The question whether a remarried widow can take a son in adoption to her deceased husband has been raised in Bombay and decided in the negative.[4]

The next few sections state the general rules and the discussion thereunder sets out their detailed import.

513. All start by accepting the text of Vashisth as of unquestionable authority. But the text is bald and merely provides that the wife must adopt with the "asent of her lord." What is the meaning of "assent"? This is the sole question upon which there is divergence of views between the various schools. According to some, the consent of the husband is provided for, because he is the natural guardian of the wife. Adoption affects the family and he consents for the family who should have something to say in his absence. This is no longer necessary in Bombay, though the necessity of the Sapinda's consent still holds good in Madras.

514. According to the Western or Bombay school, in the case of a husband, whether separate or joint, his consent is necessarily implied, and in the absence of a prohibition, must be presumed,[5] while according to the Eastern or Benares and Bengal schools, it cannot be presumed but must be expressly given.[6] The Dravid (or Madras) school adopts an intermediate

---

(1) Janki v. Sadasheo, 1 Beng. S.R. 197; Solukhna v. Ramdolal, 1 Beng. S. R. 435; 6 I.D. (O.S.) 318; Tara Munee v. Devnarayan, 3 Beng.S.R. 516: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 1058; Babu Motising v. Durgabai, 53 B. 242 (244).

(2) Oomra Singh v. Mahtab Koonwar, 3 Agra 103; Haimun v. Gunsheam, 5 W.R. 69 P.C.; Pudum Singh (Chowdhry) v. Koer Oodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350; Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal, 12 A. 328.

(3) Sreenarain v. Bhya Jha, 2 Beng. S.R. 23 (27).

(4) Fakirappa v. Savitrewa, 23 Bom. L.R. 482.

(5) Dalpatsingji v. Baisingji, 39 B. 528; Lakshmi Bai v. Saraswati Bai, 23 B. 789 (795). Contra per Westropp, J., (dissentiente), in Bayabai v. Bala, 7 B.H.C.R. (App.) 1, who held express authority necessary.

(6) Babu Motising v. Durgabai, 53 B. 242 (244).

course, between the stricter law of Bengal and the wider law of Bombay, by making an adoption by the widow dependent either, as elsewhere, upon the consent of the husband or, in its absence, upon the concurrence of her husband's sapindas.

Adoption by Dravida and Bombay Widows.

515. But while this text has been literally understood in Bengal and Benares, the Dravid school understands it merely to signify that the assent of a masculine mind is all that is required and it would be sufficient to validate a woman's adoption, and it may be furnished, not only by the husband, but by any of his kinsmen who are interested in him and in his estate. Such assent is provided for to prevent a woman from making an improper adoption which is prejudicial to the family. Being condemned to a life-long tutelage, a widow was not intended to act independently of those who are her guardians. Consequently, when her husband was alive, his consent was sufficient. But on his death his guardianship ceasing, any consent given by him to a post mortem adoption became inoperative, except only in the case when he died separate from the family, in which case the widow, being the heir, she took the estate independent of his kinsmen's control. And as adoption was beneficial to his soul, he must be presumed to have consented to an act which was conductive to his spiritual advantage.[1] Therefore, in such a case, in the absence of an express prohibition, consent is presumed. On this subject then, the Eastern and the Western schools, take diametrically opposite views. The one presumes prohibition and requires express consent; the other presumes consent, till any prohibition is proved. The Madras school presumes neither way, but stipulates for consent either of the husband or his sapindas.

Motive Immaterial.

516. In an old case decided in 1868, the Privy Council observed that "in order to be valid an adoption by the widow must be made in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive."[2] They went on to add: "In this case no issue raises the question that the consents were purchased, and not bona fide attained." This dictum was quoted with approval by the same board in a recent case.[3] In accordance with this dictum, which applies to widow's adoptions, whether in the Maharashtra or the Dravid peninsula, even where the widow adopts to her separated husband, her act may be challenged on the ground that the adoption had been induced by corrupt motives and not in the bona fide assertion of a right. Such charge was made against a widow who had admittedly received Rs. 4,000 from the father of the adopted boy as a consideration for the latter's adoption, but the court held it to be insufficient to rebut the presumption in her favour.[4] In a later case the Full Bench of the same court had to consider the question of motive and held it to be altogether irrelevant.[5] This is in consonance with the principle that a person having a right to do a thing is entitled to do it, whatever his motive. In the case of adoption in an undivided family, it was observed "that even supposing that the motives which influence the widow

(1) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (435); Datto v. Pandurang, 32 B. 499.

(2) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (442, 443) followed in Rakhena Bai v. Radha Bai, 5 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 181 (191).

(3) Yadao v. Namdeo, 49 C. 1 P.C.

(4) Mahabaleshwar v. Durga Bai, 22 B. 199.

(5) Ramachandra v. Malji, 22 B. 558 (568) F.B.

may be puerile or even malicious, still if no fraud or deception has been practised on the head of the family, who is her rightful guardian and protector, and with whom she lives, and to whom she must look for maintenance, and if he had assented to her taking a proper person in adoption, then that son takes the estate of the widow's late husband."[1] The fact that the motive was to defeat or divest her husband's kinsmen of her husband's interest which had devolved on them by survivorship is no ground for attacking an adoption, for it is one of its necessary incidents. As the Privy Council observed: "It would be very dangerous to introduce into the consideration of these cases of adoption nice questions as to the particular motives operating on the mind of the widow."[2]

517. Husband's Prohibition to Adopt.—It will be observed that by the consensus of opinions of all schools, the express permission of the husband entitles the widow everywhere to make an adoption. But his express prohibition is nowhere stated to be necessary to destroy her right. If, therefore, by his words and acts a prohibition might be reasonably inferred, then it amounts to such prohibition as will be sufficient in law to preclude an adoption by her. This was pointed out in the Ramnad case,[3] in which their Lordships observed: "Inasmuch as the authorities in favour of the widow's power to adopt, with the assent of her husband's kinsmen, proceed, in a great measure, upon the assumption that his assent to this meritorious act is to be implied, wherever he has not forbidden it, so the power cannot be inferred when a prohibition by the husband either has been directly expressed by him, or can be reasonably deduced from his disposition of his property, or the existence of a direct line competent to the full performance of religious duties or from other circumstances of his family, which afford no plea for a supersession of heirs on the ground of religious obligation to adopt a son in order to complete, or fulfil, defective religious rites."[4]

518. The prohibition to adopt may be expressed or implied and may equally be inferred from other facts inconsistent with a sanction. So where the husband at the point of death positively refused to adopt a son, and died without retracting his refusal, the court considered it necessarily to carry with it an implied prohibition to the wife to do what he himself had deliberately refused to do.[5] So where the wife had misbehaved and had been for 30 years living apart from her husband, who had deserted her and married three other wives in succession, adopted a son with the consent of her husband's brother, the court held that the presumed authority in a normal case was more than rebutted by those facts which justified a finding of prohibition to her to adopt, whereupon the consent of his brother to the adoption became irrelevant.[6] So where a testator by his will provided for the contingency of his having a son in these words, viz. "If by divine favour, I have child of the male sex," these words were construed to mean

---

(1) Vithoba v. Bapu, 15 B. 110 (134, 135).
(2) Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 (190) P.C.
(3) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (443); Yadao v. Namdeo, 49 C. 1, P.C.; Jagannath v. Ram Bharosa, (1936) P.C. 201 (203).
(4) Ib., p. 443.
(5) Bayabai v. Bala, 7 B.H.C.R. (App.) 1 (xix-xx) dissented from in Sitabai v. Govind Rao, 51 C. 217 (220, 221).
(6) Dyanoba v. Radhabai, (1894) B. P.J. 22.

only a natural son and were not sufficient to confer an authority to adopt.[1] The terms of a will or other disposition of property by the husband might imply a prohibition.[2]

519. It has already been stated, that such prohibition is legally presumed both under the Bengal and Benares systems of law, while under the other two systems, there is equally a presumed permission in favour of adoption. The burden of proving permission in the one case lies upon the widow, while the burden of proving prohibition in the other case lies upon those who dispute her presumed authority.

Adoption by Bengal and Benares Widows.

520. The view that the widow, subject to the Bengal[3] and Benares school[4] cannot adopt without the express authority of her husband is supported by the highest authorities.[5] In Bengal, the question was settled as far back as 1811, when the Pandits consulted opined that the widow was competent to adopt with the authority of her husband which may be provisional as, if he had a son then alive, the husband might direct that, in the event of his death, the widow was at liberty to adopt.[6] Such authority might be verbal or in writing.[7] As regards Benares, a similar question put to the Pandits in 1816 elicited the reply that, though the authority of the widow to adopt without the authority of her husband was admitted by Vir Mitrodai and Samskar Koustubh, their authority was overruled by that of the Dattak Mimansa which required his authority.[8] The authority of her "lord" could not, the Pandits added, mean or be replaced by the authority of his kindred.[9] The same opinion was expressed as regards the Dattak adoption in Bihar, and on the same grounds.[10] In all these cases, the permission is assumed to be express and not merely implied. That is how they have been understood by the Calcutta High Court.[11] It has already been stated that the written authority of her husband releases her power, which the widow may then exercise or not at her discretion, and unless her authority is limited, as to time, there is no limitation to its exercise.[12]

Cl. (2) Adoption Discretionary.

521. But all schools are agreed that whatever the nature of qualification upon her right, her power of adoption remains discretionary in her. She is not bound to adopt, unless she chooses to do so. Delay does

---

(1) Shiyali v. Calve, 21 M.L.T. 315: 37 I.C. 404.

(2) Malganda v. Babaji, 37 B. 107.

(3) Solukhna v. Pande, (1811) 1 Beng.S.R. 435: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 318 (320); Tara Muni v. Devnarayan, (1824) 3 Beng.S.R. 516; 6 I.D. (O.S.) 1058.

(4) Shumshere (Raja) v. Dilraj Konwur, (1816) 2 Beng.S.R. 217; 6 I.D. (O.S.) 523; Haimunchull (Raja) v. Ghunsheam, 5 W.R. 69 P.C.; Pudum Singh (Chowdhry) v. Koer Oodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350; Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lall, 12 A. 328.

(5) Solukhna v. Pande, (1811) 1 Beng. S.R. 435: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 318 (320).

(6) Tara Munee v. Devnarayan, 3 Beng.S.R. 516: 1 I.D. (O.S.) 1058; in Janki v. Rai, (1807) Beng.S.R. 283: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 198, the necessity for authority was admitted though the one produced was found forged.

(7) In Jai Ram v. Muson, (1830) 3 Beng.S.R. 3: 1 I.D. (O.S.) 336 (341), there is a note that "the necessity of the husband's permission to legalize the widow's adoption in Bengal is established by many printed cases."

(8) Shameshere (Raja) v. Dilraj Konwar, (1816) 2 Beng.S.R. 217: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 523 (525) (a Gorakhpur case).

(9) Ib., p. 526.

(10) Jai Ram v. Musan, (1830) 3 Beng.S.R. 3: 7 I.D. (O.S.) 336 (340).

(11) Lala Parbhu Lal v. Mylne, 14 C. 401 (415, 416).

(12) Ramundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M.I.A. 169 (190); Mutasaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A. 377 P.C.; Uma Sundari v. Sornobinee, 7 C. 288.

not destroy her right.[1] But if she does adopt, then the "assent of her lord," which may be given either orally or in writing, must be strictly pursued. If, therefore, the assent did not limit her as to time, she may exercise the power at any time.[2] But the authority is, of course, personal to her. She cannot delegate, transmit or transfer it to another.[3] Nor can she abuse it for her own advantage. For if she enters into an agreement, whereby she undertakes not to adopt in consideration of her getting some properties, the agreement is bad as opposed to public policy, since the authority to adopt is given to her not for herself but for her husband.[4]

The widow's right to adopt does not, it is said, depend upon her inheriting any property from her husband, and she may make an adoption though no property vests in her.[5] This view probably proceeds on the distinction implied between status and succession.[6]

522. Adoption by a Minor Female.—The Indian Majority Act saves a Hindu as regards marriage, dower, and adoption,[7] which means that in these matters, the Hindu Law remains unaffected by that Act. The question, therefore, arises as to the age of majority of a Hindu female. The Smritis prescribe an age of majority for a male to be the 15th[8] or the 16th year[9] which may mean either the commencement or completion of that year.[10] This has been assumed to be the age of majority also for a Hindu female in a case in which it has been held that no Hindu minor can make any adoption before the completion of her 15th year.[11] But this assumption would appear to be unjustifiable, since while the Smritis have of necessity to prescribe an age of adolescence for males, after which they have to enter upon their pre-ordained duties, there is no necessity to prescribe the same or any age for the majority of women, who, according to the oft-repeated text, are condemned to life-long dependence upon men,[12] and who, therefore, never in the eye of the law, attain the age of discretion in the same way as men.

523. There being then a paucity of express text prescribing an age of majority for women, the only view possible is that the age of discretion for women must be deemed to be the same age as is prescribed by the Indian Majority Act, not proprio vigore, but as embodying the rule of justice, equity and good conscience. In this view a woman on completion of her 18th year may validly make an adoption, though even then there must be some evidence that she had done so after taking independent advice, and realizing the nature of her act and its effect upon her own rights. The necessity for such independent advice will be greater if she

(1) Pratab Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 (793) P.C.; Bahadur Singh v. Beni Bahadur, (1926) P.C. 97 (99).

(2) Collector of Tirhoot v. Huropershad, 7 W.R. 500; Shibo Kooree v. Joogun Singh, 8 W.R. 155.

(3) Bamundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M.I.A. 169 (190); Mutasadi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A. 377 P.C.; Uma Sundari v. Saurobinee, 7 C. 288.

(4) Jagannatha v. Kunja Behari, 25 M.L.J. 204: 49 I.C. 929.

(5) Pratap Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 P.C.

(6) See S. 48 Comm. Post.

(7) Act IX of 1875, S. 2.

(8) Madhu Sudan v. Debigobinda, 1 B.L.R. 49 F.B.; Mothoormohun v. Soorendra, 1 C. 108 (114) F.B.; Sattiraju v. Venkataswami, 40 M. 925 (929).

(9) Manu, VIII-27.

(10) But in Verabhai v. Bai Hiraba, 27 B. 492 P.C.; the Privy Council regarded a boy before completion of his 16th year as a minor even under Hindu Law. See Ib., pp. 496-499; p. 496 for the S.J.'s opinion, affirmed by P.C. at p. 499. To the same effect, Kishori Lal v. Chunilal, 31 A. 116 (127) P.C.

(11) Sattiraju v. Venkataswami, 40 M. 925.

(12) Manu, IX-3; V-148; Yadnavalkya, I-85.

is a young pardanashin woman leading a secluded life, who is ignorant and had taken no part in the business of her husband.

524. If the adopter was below 18, then her tender years would be her best protection, and no court would drive her to the logical consequence of her act unless it is convinced that she had acted of her own free will with one advertence to the sacrifice she was making in letting a stranger into her family.[1] In one case, however, an adoption by a widow aged 15 was upheld on the ground that she obtained sufficient maturity of understanding to comprehend the nature and effect of the act.[2] But such infant prodigies are rare, for numerous cases will be found to engage the courts when grown up women are found to adopt in haste and to lament at leisure, often invoking the intervention of the court to relieve them from their ill-advised act.

525. Where a person claims to disinherit such a minor heir on the score of his adoption by her, the burden is upon him to shew not only that he had been duly and validly adopted, but that his adoptive mother had done so after mature reflexion and with the advice of her competent advisers.

526. If her husband had charged her with the power to take a particular boy in adoption and she does so, her act would be intelligible, as, in that case, she was merely acting as the instrument of his will. There is then no necessity for independent advice. Even so, but to a less degree, would be an adoption made in pursuance of a general power to adopt conferred by her deceased husband. But time in such cases is a material factor. If the widow had refrained from making an adoption for, say 10 or 20 years, some explanation may be due for the delay in discharging her delegated power.

527. This is the trend of the cases which look askance at an adoption by an ignorant Hindu female of immature years and insufficient intelligence or knowledge of the result of her act upon her own rights,[3] a similar protection being given even to males making a death-bed adoption, even in the presence and with the aid of his wife, unless it was supported by antecedent probabilities.[4] These cases were not those of pardanashins who are entitled to greater protection and whose adoption would call for greater scrutiny.[5]

528. Such cases, however bear no analogy to adoptions made by minors, though they are equally entitled to protection. As previously observed, adoption to a Hindu is a religious necessity, and adoption, if otherwise valid, cannot be held invalid, merely because it was made with the authority of a minor husband, or was made by the minor himself,[6] provided he had then

(1) Seshayyar v. Saraswati, (1920) M.W.N. 721; Ramachari v. Saraswati, (1920) M.W.N. 721 : 60 I.C. 246; Murugappa v. Kalava, 44 B. 327; Bhimrao, v. Ganga, 27 N. 291.

(2) Basappa v. Shidramappa, 43 B. 481. In another case an adoption by a widow of 12½ years was upheld, because it had long been acquiesced in; Abaambai v. Raja Mathna, (1927) M.W.N. 298.

(3) Bayabai v. Bala, 7 B.H.C.R. (App.) 1; followed in Somashekraja v. Sibhadramaji, 6 B. 524.

(4) Tayammaul v. Seshachalla, 1 M.I.A. 429 (433); Ranganayakamma, v. Alwar, 13 M. 214 (221).

(5) Sajjad Hussain v. Wazir Ali, 31 A. 455 (462) P.C. Kali Baksh v. Ram Gopal, 36 A. 81 (89) P.C.

(6) Rajendra v. Saroda Soonduree, 15 W.R. 548; Jumoona v. Bama Sundari, 1 C. 289 P.C.; Mondakini v. Adinath, 18 C. 69 (72).

attained the years of discretion,[1] that is to say, was in or had completed his sixteenth year.

39. (1) The widow, subject to the Dravid school of law, may, in the absence of her husband's authority, adopt with the consent of his Sapindas,[2] but the validity of her adoption is, in such case, a question of fact to be decided upon consideration of the character of his estate, the kinsmen surviving him, the nearness of kin of those consulted and assenting to the adoption, its time and purpose, and all the circumstances of the family.

Dravid Widow's Adoption.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, her adoption is generally subject to the following rules, namely:—

(a) That if her husband was a member of a coparcenary at the time of his death, the consent of the majority of his surviving coparceners, or of her father-in-law or the manager would be deemed sufficient for an adoption made in their own lifetime, or within a reasonable time after their death; provided that there had been no material change in the circumstances of the family sufficient to render their consent ineffectual.[3]

(b) That if her husband had died a separate member of the family, then the consent of his next reversioner,[4] or of the majority of her reversioners would be deemed sufficient, provided that if only some of them consent to an adoption, it will not be invalid, if it is proper and was made in the bona fide discharge of her religious duty;

(c) That if her husband had died leaving him surviving both coparceners and heirs in respect of some property joint, and other separate, then the consent must be obtained of his undivided coparceners in accordance with the rule applicable to joint family.[5]

Explanation (1).—The consent mentioned in this clause must be free and not induced by fraud or corrupt or improper motive.

Explanation (2).—The consent is not improper if the surviving coparcener giving it stipulates that his own share should not be reduced[6] or where he had nothing to lose by his consent[7] or that his own son was taken in adoption.[8]

Explanation (3).—Where the majority of the coparceners or the sapindas, as the case may be, have consented to an adoption, it will be presumed that their consent was bona fide.

Illustrations.

(a) A died leaving him surviving his son and widow. The son died unmarried, leaving a will authorizing his mother to adopt, and providing that the son so adopted should inherit his estate. The mother thereupon adopted B to her husband, in 1908. Her next reversioner, C, died a year and a half thereafter, without of objecting to B's adoption. The adoption is invalid.[9]

---

(1) Jumoona v. Bama Sundari, 1 C. 289 (296) P.C., following Rajendro v. Saroda Soonduree, 15 W.R. 548.

(2) Mit. Ch. I, Sec. IX, § 9, and Colebrooke's note, accepted by P.C. in Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (432, 433).

(3) Annapurnamma v. Appayya, 52 M. 620 (637-639) F.B.

(4) Krishnayya v. Lakshmipathi, 43 M. 650 (654) P.C.

(5) Sri Virada Pratapa v. Sri Brozo Kishore, 1 M. 69 (81) P.C.

(6) Srinivasa v. Rangasami, 30 M. 450.

(7) Anna Purnamma v. Appayya, 52 M. 620 (637) F.B.

(8) Salaimalai v. Sokammal, (1934) M. 567 (571); obiter in Krishnayya v. Raja of Pittapur, 51 M. 893 (925).

(9) Annapurnamma v. Appayya, 52 M. 620 F.B.

(b) A adopted B with the consent of one, not the nearest, out of 6 Sapindas. The adoption is invalid.[1]

(c) A, a member of the joint family, died as A's coparcener. C consents to his widow's adoption on condition that the adopted son will not claim a share of the joint estate. C's consent is valid, since it is not given from corrupt or improper motives.[2]

(d) A pays B a sum of money to induce her to adopt C. B takes the money and adopts C. The adoption is invalid.[3]

(e) The widow asks for the consent of her husband's two brothers. One refuses from corrupt motives, the other consents to an adoption of his own son. The adoption is valid.[4]

529. Analogous Law.—As the whole law of adoption by a female has been evolved out of a single sentence of Vashith's, so the whole of Dravid view of that law is the outcome of a single sentence in Colebrooke's note on the Mitakshara,[5] where he says that, in some of the schools, adoption is admitted to be valid "if made by the widow with the assent of the husband's kindred." This statement was repeated by Sir Thomas Strange in his Hindu Law[6] in which he said, "According to the doctrine of the Benares and Maharashtra schools prevailing in the Peninsula, it (i.e., the husband's assent) may be supplied by that of his kindred, her natural guardians." The Privy Council quoted and accepted these opinions,[7] and held them to reflert the current usage of the Dravid country, also supported to that extent by a collection of Sanskrit texts, made for the purpose of the case before their Lordships[8] as well as by the opinions of the Pandits[9] and of the decided cases[10] cited and discussed in the Court below.[11]

Genesis of the Dravid rule.

530. The statement that, in the absence of the husband's authority, the widow could adopt, with the "assent of her husband's kindred" has thus been the foundation of all law relating to the subject of woman's right to adopt in the Dravid country now to be examined. That Colebrooke's statement is as vague as the text of Vashisth was admitted by the Privy Council,[12] who have, in several cases, striven to elucidate the law on the subject, as summarized in the section. In the leading case, since followed in several cases of their Board,[13] they decided that where the husband was a member of a coparcenary, his father's consent was alone

---

(1) Krishnayya v. Lakshmipathi, 43 M. 650 P.C.

(2) Shrinivas v. Rangasami, 30 M. 450.

(3) Sitaram v. Harihar, 35 B. 169.

(4) Krishnaya v. Surya Rao, (1935) P.C. 190.

(5) Ch. I, Sec. XI, § 9.

(6) 1 Strange H.L., p. 79.

(7) Collector of Modura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (432, 433).

(8) Dattaka Mimamsa of Vidyaranya Swami, in which the widow is declared to possess the right to adopt with the authority of her father-in-law etc.; cited per curiam in Collector of Madura v. Muttu, 2 M.H.C.R. 206 (221), O. A. 12 M.I.A. 397 (438).

(9) See them collected in the H.C. judgment in Collector of Madura v. Muttu, 2 M.H.C.R. 206, affirmed O. A. 12 M.I.A. 397.

(10) Appaniengar v. Alelmaloo, (1858) S.D.A.M. 5, 6.

(11) Collector of Madura v. Muttu, 2 M.H.C.R. 206.

(12) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (441, 442).

(13) Ib., followed in Sri Virada v. Sri Brozo Kishore, 1 M. 69 (79, 80) P.C.; (law stated obiter) Veerabasana v. Bala Surya, 41 M. 998 (1009) P.C.; Krishnayya v. Lukshmipathi, 43 M. 650 P.C.

sufficient as he was both the venerable protector of his daughter-in-law as the nearest heir of his son. Ordinarily, he would also be the head and manager of the joint family, but in his absence, the manager's consent was sufficient; in the absence of which, the consent of the majority of her husband's coparceners would be ordinarily necessary. (§§ 532-537). But the question does not depend upon arithmetical rule, since, in considering the question of consent, the court has to take into account all the circumstances of the family.[1]

531. The question what is implied by the "assent of the husband's kindred" still remains. Adverting to its obvious ambiguity, the Privy Council held that, where an adoption is to be made to a deceased whose father is alive, his consent to his daughter-in-law's adoption would be alone sufficient.[2] But in his absence, it is not possible to lay down an inflexible rule; but one thing is certain that she has to take the consent of her husband's sapindas, who might be either his coparceners or reversioners, and consequently, interested in his estate. But nevertheless, she has to ask for their consent. Consequently, where the family is joint, the consent of the manager is both necessary and sufficient.[3]

Consent of Sapindas.

532. But if the consent of either the father-in-law or of the manager is not available, then the widow is not bound to call the family council to consider the propriety of her adoption,[4] though she must consult all her husband's sapindas, i.e., her own reversionary heirs, that is only the agnatic relations of her husband, and not his cognatic relations, such as the daughter[5] or the daughter's son.[6] And amongst them, it is essential that she should consult, and if possible, receive the assent of her next reversioners whose reversionary right will be defeated by the adoption. If these do not agree to the adoption, she may then secure the assent of those next to them, and so on, but the question of consent cannot be decided by the numerical votes of the reversioners, but rather by the nature of the interest possessed by those who have consented to the act. For instance, an adoption would probably be upheld, if it is made with the consent of the next reversioner, though it be opposed by the rest.[7] A consent once given enures even though the consenting party be dead, and the next sapindas be opposed to the adoption, when it is made. As such, the court has upheld adoptions made with the consent of the son[8] or of the father-in-law[9] given in their wills, though in the latter case, the adoption was not made for a period of 19 years after the father-in-law's death, but in both cases, it was conceded that such consent would lapse if the circumstances have since materially changed, as if a nearer sapinda has since come into existence, or the estate has become vested in third persons.

533. To enable her to adopt, she is not bound to obtain their unanimous assent to her act. This was the view of the Madras High Court in a case which was affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council[10] who admitted

---

(1) Vide foot-note (13) at p. 186.
(2) Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (441, 442).
(3) Pratapa v. Kishoro, 1 M. 79 (81) P.C.
(4) Brahma Sastri v. Sumitramma, 57 M. 411 (421).
(5) Ib., (448).
(6) Adusumilli v. Adusumilli, 43 M. 650 P.C.; Vadrevu v. Ryali, 43 M. 876; Subbamma v. Adimoorthappa, 86 I.C. (M.) 269: (1925) M. 635.
(7) Kandukuri v. Kandukuri, 41 M. 998 P.C.
(8) Annapurnamma v. Appayya, 52 M. 620 (638, 639) F.B.
(9) Ammanna v. Satyanarayana, 49 M. 636 (648, 649).
(10 Collector of Madura v. Moottoo, 2 H.M.C.R. 206 (230), O.A. 12 M.I.A.

that the assent of all the kinsmen was not necessary, but that "there should be such evidence of the assent of kinsmen as suffices to show that the act is done by the widow in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive."[1]

534. On the assumption made by the Privy Council that the propriety of such an act should be referred to and decided by a family council,[2] it is clear that if the majority of the members consent, then the adoption will be presumed to be prima facie justifiable and valid.[3] But it does not mean that all the available sapindas should be made to sit in conclave and decide the question.[4] As was observed in a case, affirmed by the Privy Council: "The expression 'family council' in the above extract is no doubt rather too general and comprehensive. It is not probable that it was intended to include the whole circle of sapindas and samanodakas or to imply that they should assemble. The presumptive reversionary heir or heirs are the nearest of kin to the deceased husband, and as such the natural advisers of the widow; and if his or their assent be obtained and the same be given bona fide, and not from any corrupt motive, that would be sufficient authority on which she could act, and it would not be necessary that she should seek the assent of remoter reversionary heirs,"[5] whose dissent is then immaterial.[6] But, of course, it is not always that the expectant heir is anxious to forswear his heritage. In that case, the widow must seek the counsel and consent of those in the next degree, and finally, of the general body without reference to their propinquity.

535. It is, of course, a counsel of perfection to the next reversioner to subordinate his self-interest to his duty and to offer disinterested advice to the widow, though such is the behest of law.[7] But as this is sometimes paid for, if received, and even if then refused, the widow is not helpless in the exercise of her power which she may do, even with the consent of remote reversioners accounting for the refusal of the nearest on the ground of self-interest, in which case, the court will uphold the adoption regarding their refusal as improper.[8]

536. But it may be that the widow does not even secure a majority, as while some consent, the majority might dissent from her decision. In that case too, the adoption may be valid, though its validity cannot be presumed; but nevertheless, the widow or her adopted son may establish

---

397; Brahma v. Sumitramma, 57 M. 411 (421, 422).

(1) Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (442, 443), explained in Arundad v. Kuppammal, 3 M.H.C.R. 283: Raghunatha v. Brozo, 1 M. 69 (79) P.C.; Prasara v. Rangaraja, 2 M. 202; Venkata Krishnamma v. Annapurnamma, 23 M. 486 (488); Brahma v. Sumitramma, 57 M. 411 (423): Krishnayya v. Lakshmipathi, 43 M. 650 P.C. explained in Brahma Sastri v. Sumitramma, 57 M. 411 (423).

(2) Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 (191) P.C.; Vadrevu v. Ryali 43 M. 876.

(3) Venkata Krishnamma v. Annapurnamma, 23 M. 486 (488, 489); Adusumilli v. Adusumilli, 43 M. 650 P.C.; Anne v. Rattayya, 47 M. 716.

(4) Adusumilli v. Adusumilli 30 M.L.J. 265: 32 I.C. 253.

(5) Subramanyam v. Venkamma, 26 M. 627, affirmed O.A. 30 M. 50 P.C.; Veera Basavaraja v. Balasurya, (1914) M.W.N. 502: 25 I.C. 8, affirmed in O.A. 41 M. 928 P.C.; Adusumilli v. Adusumilli, 30 M.L.J. 265: 32 I.C. 253; Parasara v. Rangara, 2 M. 202.

(6) Sohaj Ram v. Ramlal, (1914) P.L.R. 78: 22 I.C. 542.

(7) Venkatarama v. Bappamma, 39 M. 77.

(8) Adusumilli v. Adusumilli, 30 M.L.J. 265: 32 I.C. 253 O.A. Adusumilli v. Adusumilli, 43 M. 650 (P.C.); Nagarampalli v. Nagarampalli, (1914) M.W.N. 620: 24 I.C. 257; Krishna Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 102 I.C. 713: (1927) M. 733.

its validity by proving that the adoption was made "in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive."

537. Proof of this must necessarily depend upon the circumstances of the family. But in such a case, the court will require strong evidence to support an adoption affecting the rights of parties in actual possession not forgetting the "pernicious influences which interested advisers are too apt in India to exert over women, possessed of, or capable of exercising dominion over, property."[1] On the other hand, it must not be forgotten that the right of adoption is inherent in the widow, and the consent of the kinsmen is required, not because their rights in property will be prejudicially affected by her act, but rather because law assigns to the woman a position of perpetual incapacity without the direction of a masculine mind.[2] But when this is unavailable, the consent of the husband's mother was held sufficient to validate an adoption.[3]

What is Valid Consent? Minority, Acquiescence, Corruption, Fraud Excluded.

538. It is perhaps unnecessary to add that such a consent must be by a person, who, if otherwise competent, though a female, must not be a minor.[4] It was so held where the widow of a predeceased son of one Vithoba justified her adoption on the ground that it had been consented to by his two daughters aged 25 and 12 in whom the estate had vested on their father's death. The only fact proved was that they were both present at the adoption. But the court threw out the adopted son's suit, holding first, that one of the daughters, being a minor, could not legally consent, and that the consent of the adult daughter could not be proved by her mere presence at the adoption. Even if such presence amounted to acquiescence, it is not equivalent to the consent legally necessary to legalize such an adoption.[5] As the Privy Council remarked: "One of the plaintiffs in this case is an infant, the other is a Hindu female. Against neither it is the practice of the courts in India to press a presumption by acquiescence in a rival claim, from the mere non-contestation for a limited time of an adverse title, and especially not of such a title as this certificate evidences."[6] But this does not preclude such evidence being given in support of ratification in a case properly pleaded or where it is relied upon to prove consent or a case of estoppel.[7] But since previous consent of the reversioners is a conditio sine qua non under the textual law, a mere ratification ex post facto is not such consent as the law contemplates,[8] though it may estop a party from pleading it.[9]

---

(1) Raghunatha v. Brozo, 1 M. 69 (83) P.C.

(2) Collector of Madura v. Moottoo, 12 M.I.A. 397 (442); Narayanasami v. Mangammal, 28 M. 315 (319).

(3) Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram, 48 M. 1 F.B.

(4) Vasudeo v. Ramachandra, 22 B. 551.

(5) Vasudeo v. Ramachandra, 22 B. 551 (557, 558), following, on the subject of presence as being insufficient to prove consent, Ramamani v. Kulanthai, 14 M. I. A. 346; Rungama v. Atchama, 4 M.I.A. 1 (107, 108), followed in Bhimappa v. Basawa, 29 B. 400 (403). To the same effect, Tarinee v. Sharoda, 11 W.R. 468 (476).

(6) Ramamani v. Kulanthai, 14 M.I. A. 346 (360).

(7) Bhimappa v. Basawa, 29 B. 400 (403); Seetharamamma v. Subranarayana, 49 M. 969. See this subject discussed in S. 58 post.

(8) Bahanna v. Parava, 50 B. 815; Dorasami v. Chinna, 22 M.L.T. 538.

(9) Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh, 34 A. 398 P.C.

Since the consent of the sapindas is required to perform a religious duty, it follows that a sapinda who withholds his consent from corrupt or selfish motives fails in his duty and the widow is entitled to ignore his refusal and make an adoption with the consent of another sapinda of equal degree.[1]

Explanation (1).

539. No consent is valid if it is obtained by corruption, coercion, undue influence, fraud or misrepresentation. These facts vitiate both the consent as well as the adoption consequent thereon (S. 46).

Explanation (2).

540. A consent purchased is not a free consent, though there is nothing illegal in a co-parcener of the husband stipulating with his consent that his own share should remain undisturbed by the adoption, since the protection of one's share in such cases cannot be said to constitute a corrupt or improper motive actuating his consent, if it did not prejudice those for whom he was equally consenting.[2] The question is really one of degree. Where, however, the consenting sapinda had stipulated for some land to be transferred to him by the widow,[3] or some one offered him Rs. 1,000 for his consent,[4] the court naturally regarded them as cases of naked bribery. Such was the case where the consenting manager of the family agreed to an adoption stipulating for himself, that he should be the guardian, and obtained a declaration from the widow that a village, admittedly belonging to the joint family was his self-acquisition, as having descended to him from his maternal grandfather. The adoption was sought to be put in force against the manager's brothers, but the Privy Council held that, in the circumstances, it could not bind them.[5]

Consent of Co-widow Unnecessary.

541. From this it follows that the widow is not bound to consult any female member of her household not even her junior co-widow.[6] She is in an equal position of dependence with her, though, as between her and herself, the latter occupies a position of pre-eminence due to her being the elder wife of her husband.

Consent Revocable.

542. A reversioner cannot revoke his consent capriciously after it is once given.[7] The fact that it is gratuitous in the sole exercise of his discretion makes it revisable, but there must be sufficient grounds for his so doing. And so far as regards the widow, she cannot obtain a consent to adopt "any boy at any time" as such consent cannot be described as discreet and given after due deliberation. Where the widow acts upon a consent given to her she must adopt within a reasonable time, otherwise the consent would be deemed to have lapsed.[8]

Case of Divided Counsels.

543. Though the Dravid widow has to secure the assent of her husband's kinsmen for the validity of her adoption, the question arises as to whose consent is sufficient. It has already been seen, that the

(1) Parasara v. Rangaraja, 2 M. 202; approved in Krishnayya v. Surya Rao, (1935) P.C. 190 (195); Krishnayya v. Lakshipathi, 43 M. 650 P.C. after remand, in 57 M. 1 P.C.

(2) Srinivasa v. Rangasami, 30 M. 450.

(3) Rami v. Rangamma, 11 M.L.J. 20.

(4) Danakoti v. Bala Sundara, 36 M. 19 (27).

(5) Ganesha v. Gopala, 2 M. 270 (280, 281) P.C.

(6) Ib.

(7) Shiv Surya v. Audinarayana, (1937) M. 110 F.B.

(8) Ammanna v. Satyanarayana, 49 M. 636 (648, 649).

consent of the father-in-law as the head and manager of the undivided family, and in his absence, the consent of the manager is sufficient without reference to the other co-parceners.[1] But if the manager's consent is not available, and in the Dravid country, there is no manager, the family being divided, whose consent should then be applied for?

544. It is conceded that if all the sapindas or the majority of them consent, then it has the same effect, in the absence of which, consent of the nearest sapinda is essential and sufficient. Consequently, if the deceased has left an undivided brother or brothers related to him in equal degree, the consent of one of them should suffice, though the rest may withhold their consent for reasons of their own.[2] But she is bound to consult them, although she might believe that some of them were hostile to her proposal, and would certainly refuse their assent.[3] The general rule applicable to such cases was stated by the Privy Council to be "there should be such proof of assent on the part of the sapindas as should be sufficient to support the inference that the adoption was made by the widow, not from capricious or corrupt motives, or in order to defeat the interest of this or that sapinda, but upon a fair consideration by what may be called a family council, of the expediency of substituting an heir by adoption to the deceased husband."[4]

40. In the absence of a mandate of the husband to the contrary, the Maharashtra widow is entitled to make an adoption on a presumed authority from him[5] and this she may do whether he had died a joint or a separate member of the family.[6]

Maharashtra Widow's Adoption.

545. Adoption by the Maharashtra Widow.—In the matter of adoption, the Maratha widow possesses a peculiar privilege of adopting to her husband without his or anybody else's permission. The genesis of this rule is the outcome of the following reasoning. There is nothing in Manu or in the Mitakshara on the subject of woman's adoption. Therefore the Bombay school turns to their local authorities for the definition of her power. The Mayukh carries it no further than the Dravid school,[7] but her power is carried a step further in the Dattak Chandrika which is a recognized authority in the Maratha country:—

Genesis of her Power.

"But by a woman the gift may be made with her husband's sanction, if he be alive or even without it, if he be dead, have emigrated, or entered a religious order."

"Now, if there be no prohibition even, there is assent: on account of the maxim, 'the intention of another, not prohibited is sanction.'"[8]

546. This view is affirmed by the Privy Council in several cases[9] which have firmly established the widow's right of adoption in the

(1) Mami v. Subbarayar, 36 M. 145.
(2) Parasara v. Rangaraja, 2 M. 202 (206, 207), explaining Sri Virada v. Sri Brozo, 1 M. 69 P.C.
(3) Subrahmanyam v. Venkamma, 26 M. 627, affirmed O.A. 30 M. 50 P.C.; Palaniswamy v. Vanjiammal, 4 I.C. (M.) 36; Veera Basavaraja v. Balasurya Prasada Row, 41 M. 998 P.C.; Adusumilli v. Adusumilli, 43 M. 650 P.C.
(4) Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 (190, 191) P.C.
(5) Datt. Chand. Sec. I §§ 31, 32.
(5) Datt. Chand. Sec. I §§ 31, 32 and cases in the next foot-note.
(6) Yadao v. Namdeo, 49 C. 1 P.C.; Bhimabai v. Gurunathgauda, 57 B. 157 P.C.; Vijayasangji v. Shiv Sangji, 59 B. 360 (365) P.C.; Jagannath v. Rambharosa, (1936) P.C. 201 (203).
(7) Mayukh, Ch. IV, Sec. V, § 17.
(8) Datt. Chand, Sec. 1, §§ 31, 32.
(9) Yadao v. Namdeo, 49 C. 1 (11-18) P.C. Bhimabai v. Gurunathgauda, 57 B. 157 P.C.; Vijaysangji v. Shivasangji, 59 B. 360 (364) P.C.

Maharastra. But though that was a period when such power was held limited to where the husband had died a separated member,[1] and that where he had died a coparcener, she could not adopt without the consent of the surviving coparceners—a limitation now swept away on the ground that it qualifies a spiritual act by secular considerations for which there is no justification.[2] But while it is so, there must be some limitation upon her power, which, however, cannot go beyond that stated in S. 54.

41. The widow is bound to strictly obey any directions given by her husband touching an adoption to him.[3]

Husband's mandate.

547. Analogous Law.—Since the widow in Bombay possesses the power to adopt on a presumed authority of her husband, which must be expressly conferred elsewhere, it follows that he may vary his authority by his words or act which his widow must strictly obey. But the mandate only creates a moral, not a leyal obligation on the part of the widow. If, therefore, the husband directs his widow to adopt the son of A, the injunction fetters the widow's option, but if does not give the husband's nominee the right to specifically enforce his claim to be so adopted, nor can the widow be held liable for damages, if she fails or refuses to make the desired adoption; at the same time, the widow being enjoined to adopt the son of A, she is not free to adopt another. In other words, if she does adopt, she must adopt the son of A, or not at all.

548. Husband's Mandate.—The right of the widow to adopt to her husband is the right which she possesses as the donee of her husband's power. As such, she is bound to follow his directions with the utmost fidelity. As the Privy Council have again and again observed, the authority given to the wife must be strictly pursued.[4] And in construing the husband's directions the court would follow the ordinary rule as to the construction of powers which prevails in England.[5] Her power of adoption may be rescinded or modified in any way at the discretion of her husband. So where the husband expressly enjoined on his wife the duty of adopting "as far as possible" one Shankar, failing whom she was to adopt any other boy with the advice of the trustees named in the husband's will, it was held that the widow was bound to apply for the adoption of Shankar, though his adoption was extremely improbable owing to her enmity with Shankar and his family. But nevertheless, she could not validly adopt another boy, which she did, unless she had acted upon the mandatory direction of her husband to secure Shankar whom she never tried to adopt.[6] This was a Maharashtra case, and aptly illustrates the necessity under which the widow is to follow the behests of her lord. If, therefore, the husband had forbidden her to adopt any of her relations and she adopted his brother's daughter's son, the adoption was held invalid, being opposed to her husband's

---

(1) Ramji v. Ghammu, 6 B. 498 F. B.; Dinkar v. Ganesh, ib., 505 F.B.; Ishwar v. Gaia Bai, 50 B. 468 F.B., overruled in Bhimabai v. Gurunathgauda, 57 B. 157 (172) P.C., Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (654, 657) P.C.; Vijaysangji v. Shivasangji, 59 B. 360 (364) P.C.

(2) Ib., Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (654, 657) P.C.

(3) Chowdhary Padam Singh v. Koer Oodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350 (356); Surendra Keshub v. Doorga Sundary, 19 C. 513 P.C.; Rajendra v. Gopal Prasad, 10 Pat. 187 P.C.

(4) Ib.

(5) Rajendra v. Gopal Prasad, 10 Pat. 187 (195) P.C.

(6) Sitabai v. Bapu, 47 C. 1012 (1018, 1019) P.C.

mandate.[1] The wife's power to adopt might be limited not only by what the husband might say, but equally by what he might have done. Thus, a previous adoption by him would prevent another adoption by his widow, during the lifetime of the adoptee or the proved invalidity of his adoption. Hence an adoption by the husband amounts to an implied prohibition of another adoption by his wife,[2] though his refusal to adopt has not necessarily the same effect.[3]

549. Where the husband empowers the widow to make an adoption with the consent of a person named, and that person dies before the adoption is made, the power to adopt is at an end.[4] The question is one of construction and intention. If the condition was a condition precedent, the impossibility of its fulfilment would be fatal to the power. But it would be otherwise if the power was not conditional on consent. But ordinarily, it would be so regarded.[5]

Form of authority.

42. The authority by the husband to adopt may be express or implied,[6] verbal or in writing, but if it is in writing of a non-testamentary nature, it must be stamped and registered.[7]

550. Form of Authority.—There is no general law[8] requiring the husband's authority to be in writing, and without such law, its reduction to writing is optional.[9] If the writing be in the nature of a will, then its registration is optional; otherwise, such authority must both bear stamp of Rs. 10,[10] and be registered.[11] Otherwise, it cannot be used in evidence at all[12] and secondary evidence of that fact would be barred by S. 91 of the Evidence Act; which means that the authority cannot be proved at all. It has already been stated that, for this purpose, the husband is subject to the Majority Act, and that if he has not attained the age of majority, there fixed, he cannot register his authority as the Registrar is bound to refuse registration of a document presented to him for registration by a minor within the meaning of that Act, inasmuch as the Registration Act has not saved any rule of Hindu Law on the subject of majority.[13] Law has prescribed no form in which an authority to adopt should be couched.

551. Such a writing is known as Anumati Patra or consent deed and it usually recites the status of the husband in his family—whether he is joint or separate, the fact that he is without any male issue, the reason and necessity for adoption, and why it was deferred during his own lifetime. Where the husband has more than one wife, the authority may further define how far they are to act in concert. The boy to be adopted may also

(1) Kalawati v. Dharam Prakash, 55 A. 78 P.C.

(2) Bhujangouda v. Bala Bokare, 44 B. 627, affirmed O.A. Bhan v. Narasagouda, 46 B. 400.

(3) Sitabai v. Kashi Nath, 51 B. 217.

(4) Rajendra v. Gopal, 10 Pat. 187 (196) P.C. overruling ib., 4 Pat. 67; Baij Nath v. Ratan Lal, 14 L. 345 (351).

(5) Prangopal v. Chandra Mohan, 41 C.L.J. 55: (1925) C. 619.

(6) Seetharamamma v. Suryanarayana, 49 M. 969 (976, 977).

(7) S. 17 (3) Registration Act (XVI of 1908).

(8) Under the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), the Taluqdar's authority to adopt should have been in writing; Bhasba v. Indar Kunwar, 16 C. 556 (562) P.C.

(9) Soondar v. Gadadhar, 7 M.I.A. 54 (64); Mutasaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A. 377 P.C.

(10) Stamp Act (II of 1899), Sch. I, Art. 3.

(11) Registration Act (XVI of 1908) S. 17 (3); Gopalswami v. Arunachalam, 27 M. 32; Kachoo v. Khushaldas, (1886) 4 Bom.L.R. 883.

(12) Registration Act (XVI of 1908), S. 49; Gopalswami v. Arunachalam, 27 M. 32.

(13) Act XVI of 1908, S. 1.

be named. It is usual however to confer upon the wife full discretion both as to the choice of the boy and the time of adoption. The question whether a writing constitutes a will or a mere authority to adopt depends upon whether the primary purpose was the one or the other.

552. Such a case arose before the Privy Council who had to construe a deed styled Anumati Patra (or a permission deed, by which the executant empowered his wife to adopt a son. His wife was afterwards delivered of a son. Two years after his birth, he executed another deed, similarly styled, authorising his wife to adopt on death of his legitimate son and to make successive adoptions to avoid extinction of the name. The son came of age and succeeded to his father and, on his death, his widow entered upon the inheritance as his heir. Some time after the son's death, his mother exercised the power given to her by her husband. The Sadar Diwani court construed the deed as a will and held, upon its construction as such, that it created a limitation on failure of male issue of the testator, in the lifetime of his wife, to the son to be adopted by her as a persona designata. But the Privy Council deprecated the introduction of English rules of construction which were wholly inapplicable to the deeds executed by Indians. "There is no doubt that, by the decision of courts of justice, the testamentary powers of disposition by Hindus has been established within the presidency of Bengal, but it would be to apply a very false and mischievous principle if it were held that the nature and extent of such power can be governed by any analogy to the law of England. Our system is one of the most artificial character, founded in a great degree on feudal rules, regulated by Acts of Parliament, and adjusted by a long course of judicial determinations to the wants of a state of society differing as far as possible from that which prevails amongst Hindus in India."[1] Finally, they held the deed to be what it was called and construed it as such, with the result that they set aside the adoption holding that the power must be exercised within reasonable time, and that its exercise would be to divest the son's widow, which it could not be permitted to do, whatever may have been the intention of the husband. An incomplete testament may be legitimately used as evidence to establish the husband's authority.[2]

553. An authority to adopt must be strictly proved and pursued.[3] If he authorizes her to adopt A or B, minor sons of his junior paternal uncle, it is not open to her to adopt C, quite a different person, without making any attempt to secure either A or B.[4] A Bengal father may, by his authority to adopt, direct that the adopted son should not interfere with or divest his adoptive mother of the estate during her life, just as he has the power to postpone the succession of his natural born son by interposing a life estate.[5] In Madras, the requisite authority may, it is said, be even implied.[6]

Construction of Authority.

(1) Bhoobun v. Ram Kishore, 10 M. I.A. 279 (308, 309).

(2) Brijokishoree v. Sreenath, 9 W. R. 463.

(3) Pudum Singh (Chowdhry) v. Koeroodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350 (356). where the Privy Council are reported to have said: "Of course, such a power must be strictly pursued," but in the report of the case in 2 B.L.R. (P.C.) 101 (104) the words reported are: "Of course such authority must be strictly proved."—Amrito Lal v. Surnomoye, 27 C. 996 P.C.; Mutsaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A. 377 P.C.

(4) Sindigi v. Sindigi, 32 M.L.J. 47: 38 I.C. 164.

(5) Bhupendra v. Amarendra, 43 C. 432 P.C.

(6) Seetharamamma v. Suryanarayana, 49 M. 969 (972, 976, 977).

554. Where the authority is in writing, the question whether it empowers the wife in sufficiently clear terms to make an adoption is simplified to a mere question of its interpretation. But where it is alleged to be verbal, which is the present unsatisfactory state of the law, it possesses some advantage over written authority, but the question becomes then more involved. For the court has then to find both the factum as well as its terms. And it is not always easy. Both the questions are of course, questions of fact in the determination of which the court cannot disregard antecedent probabilities. It is sometimes said that there is an antecedent probability in favour of such authority, because every Hindu desires a son, and every sonless Hindu must, therefore, desire to adopt one.[1] This is no doubt true. But as the Privy Council observed, cases cannot be decided upon mere probabilities. The court must look to the facts. And even against this probability, one must also consider the circumstance that if the Hindu longed for such a son why did he not make an adoption before his very eyes? It may be that the pious thought arose uppermost in his mind as death approached and with it the fear of an unredeemed purgatory. The fact that the deceased could have committed his authority to writing but did not, that he was not imbued with an ultra orthodoxical value of adoption, that he was young and was carried off in a short illness from which he hoped to recover, that he was attached to his nephews or any of them, whom he should have named, that he could have made no provision for adoption without making some provision for the maintenance of his wife and those near and dear to him, whom the tenure of his whole life seemed to favour, are only some of the numerous questions that present themselves for consideration and will be found more fully set out in the sequel.

Hindu Wills Act.

555. An authority to adopt given by a husband in a will, subject to the provisions of the Hindu Wills Act,[2] which extends to the Province of Bengal and to the towns of Madras and Bombay, must conform to its provisions.[3]

556. Other Relations Cannot Limit Right.—No relation other than the husband can specially limit the widow's right of adoption,[4] though her power of adoption may be otherwise generally limited and be subject to the consent of her husband's kinsmen. A Hindu died in 1872, leaving him surviving a widow (A) and a daughter (B) of his predeceased son, and also his brother's sons and grandsons. He made a will bequeathing his entire estate to A for life, but permitttd her to adopt a son and declared the son so adopted to be the owner of his estate. He, however, prohibited A from making an adoption if a son was born to B, and in that case, on A's death, B and the sons that might be born to her were to be owners of the property. B gave birth to a son (the plaintiff C) in 1891 and five years later in 1896, A adopted the defendant (D). B died in 1897 and in a few days was followed by A. The plaintiff (C) sued to recover possession of the property from A's adopted son (D) but his right to succeed to A depended upon the question whether the remainder given to B by the will was vested or contingent; and it was held that B only took a remainder contingent on

---

(1) Soondur Koomaree v. Gudadhur, 7 M.I.A. 54 (64).

(2) Act XXI of 1870; now S. 57, Sch. III of Act XXXIX of 1925.

(3) Ib., S. 2: now S. 57, Sch. III of Act XXXIX of 1925.

(4) Natvarlal v. Ranchhod, 22 Bom. L.R. 71: 55 I.C. 313.

A's dying without taking a son in adoption. The fact that A's power of adoption was limited could not affect the power of adoption which she otherwise possessed under Hindu Law. The only effect of the testator's limitation on A's power of adoption was to affect the right of A's adopted son to take under the testator's will as a persona designata. The plaintiff's adoption could not, therefore, be assailed, though by his adoption he became a bandhu, and as such, had to yield place to the testator's nearer heirs.[1]

Construction and limits of authority.

43. (1) The authority to adopt can only be conferred on, and used by the wife.[2]

(2) He who confers the authority may revoke it at any time before it is used.[3]

(3) Such authority may be general or limited, but it will be ineffectual if it is illegal, vague or void.[4]

(4) The authority of the husband to adopt must be liberally, though reasonably, construed so as to advance the purpose he had in view.[5]

Illustrations.

(a) A authorized his wife B to adopt a son. B adopted C who died after the adoption, whereupon B adopted D. The adoption of D is valid for the general authority to adopt empowered B to make any number of successive adoptions.[6]

(b) A authorizes his wife B to adopt C. C dies. B has no power to adopt.

(c) A authorizes B to adopt a son should their son C die unmarried. C dies unmarried. B adopts. The adoption is valid.

(d) A authorizes his wife B to make an adoption should their son C die. C died leaving his widow D surviving him as his heir. B adopted E. The adption is invalid as the power to adopt had vested in D.[7]

(e) A authorized B to adopt C. B adopts D. The adoption is invalid for B's authority was limited to the adoption of C.

(f) A authorizes his wife B and executor C to adopt. The authority is invalid as A was legally competent only to authorize B.[8]

557. Analogous Law.—Clause (4) is supported by the authority of the Privy Council,[9] who have overruled the earlier view that such authority must be strictly construed.[10]

Clause (3) recognizes that the authority to adopt may be general, in which case, the widow's power to adopt is co-extensive with that of her husband and extends to any number of successive adoptions, or it may be limited, in which case, she is bound by the limits of her authority. But illustration (d) drawn from a reported case, clearly shows that an authority,

---

(1) Natvarlal v. Ranchhod, 22 Bom. L.R. 71: 55 I.C. 313.

(2) Amrita Lal v. Surnamoye, 27 C. 996 P.C.; Bhagwan Das v. Rajmal, 10 B.H.C.R. 241.

(3) Venkata Narayana v. Subammal, 39 M. 107 P.C.

(4) Sarda Prasad v. Rama, 17 C.W.N. 319 (323).

(5) Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana, 29 M. 382 (388) P.C.

(6) Ib.

(7) Bhoobun Mayee v. Ramkishore, 10 M.I.A. 299 (311, 312).

(8) Rajendra Prasad v. Gopal Prasad, 10 Pat. 187 P.C.

(9) Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana, 29 M. 382 P.C., affirming O.A. 26 M. 681, overruling contra Gour Nath v. Annopoorna, (1852) S.D.A.B. 332: 12 I.D. (O.S.) 257; Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh, 30 A. 549, affirmed O. A. 34 A. 398 P.C., in which, however, the right to successive adoptions was upheld on the ground of estoppel; Bhagwat Prasad v. Murarilal, 15 C.L.J. 97 (108).

(10) Gour Nath v. Annopoorna, (1852) S.D.A.B. 332: 12 I.D. (O.S.) 25.

however unlimited in intention, may necessarily become limited by the interposition of other interests.[1]

558. Only Wife Can Adopt.—Since an adoption is the right of a man, and the adopted son is the reflex of an auras or natural born son, it follows that it can only be made by him or by his express or presumed authority by the wife, and by no other person. Consequently, if a person authorises his widow and his father and uncle jointly to make an adoption, the authority is invalid. As Lord Bolehouse observed: "That no one can adopt a son to a dead man except his widow is such a rudimentary principle of Hindu Law, and one so constantly occurring in ordinary life, that it is difficult to suppose any educated man to be ignorant of it. That the widow's choice of a boy may be restricted in various ways, and among them, by requiring the consent of persons named by the husband is also familiar law."[2]

Clause (1).

Now, since the term "wife" includes the plural, it follows that an authority given to the wife means, when a person has left more than one wife, that all of them must adopt jointly or not at all.[3] Consequently, the power to adopt lapses on the death of one of them.[4] But where the authority is given to the widows severally, the right must be exercised in the order of seniority, the junior widow adopting only after the senior widow has refused to do so.[5] But once the latter has adopted, the power to adopt is at an end, so long at least as the adopted son is alive.[6]

559. Liberal Construction.—The sole object of construction of the authority of the donor of power is to reach as near as possible to his real intention, and give effect to it. But the difficulty arises not from the statement of the rule but in its application to a given case, since it is not always clear what was his dominant motive. Now, this may be both spiritual and temporal or a blend of both, but in what proportion, it may be impossible to Judge. Probably, the donor, if he came back to life merely to interpret his own words, would return to his grave equally puzzled, since many people do not speak and write without adverting to the effect and consequence of their words. But it is the duty of the court to reduce to precision by interpretation what he had failed to do by clear expression. For this purpose, it has to ask itself many questions: Was it to secure merely the performance of his obsequies by a son, or was that motive blended with the desire to benefit a persona designata who was really the object of his bounty, or was it to provide merely an heir to his estate and prevent its extinction by survivorship or escheat, or its devolution upon other heirs, or was it that the injunction to take counsel of another was intended to control his wife's discretion or merely to guide it? If a boy was mentioned, was she to adopt him or not at all and what if he was dead or unavailable?

560. Two questions arise in this connection: One is the question of construction, the other of compliance. On the first, the courts allow themselves

(1) Bhoobun Moyee v. Ram Kishore, 10 M.I.A. 299 (311, 312).
(2) Amrito Lal v. Surnomoye, 27 C. 996 (1002) P.C.; Venkata v. Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (444, 445).
(3) Narasimha v. Parthasarathy, 37 M. 199 (220, 221) P.C.; Tiruvengalam v. Butchayya, 52 M. 373; Lachmi v. Mt. Parbati, 42 A. 266.
(4) Narasimha v. Parthasarathi, 37 M. 199 (220, 221) P.C.
(5) Ranjit Lal v. Bijoy Krishna, 39 C. 582; Bijoy v. Ranjit, 38 C. 964; Mondakini v. Adinath Dey, 18 C. 69.
(6) Shivappa v. Rudrava, 57 B. 1.

some latitude in that their sole duty being to fathom the dominant intention, they take into consideration all the circumstances, but once the construction is settled the courts are strict in enforcing the terms of the authority.[1] In this view, their Lordships have construed a general authority to adopt as covering a second adoption on the death of the first adoptee, if it appears that, in giving his authority, the husband had two objects in view, his own spiritual benefit and the continuance of his line.[2] But the case is different where to secure an heir to his estate, the testator, subject to the Dayabhag Law, authorised his widow, then aged 13 or 14 years of age, to adopt his half-brother, and failing him, another according to the "opinion or advise of his father". He died in 1869. The adoption of the persona designata failed, and on the death of her father-in-law in 1873, she made an adoption twelve years later in 1885. The Privy Council held that as the peramount intention of the testator, shown by the deed, was not to obtain the spiritual benefit, but to have a son to inherit, the permission of the father was a condition precedent and the adoption was accordingly invalid.[3] It is clear that this case would have been differently decided if the motive of the testator had been equally spiritual as in the case last cited.

561. So where the husband authorized one of the sons of Hardeo Das to be adopted "within a year or two" and the adoption was not in fact made until about six years after the husband's death, and the boy adopted was not any of the four sons, which Hardeo Das had at the time of the husband's authority, but a son subsequently born, the Privy Council upheld the adoption holding that inasmuch as the husband had named none of Hardeo's sons to be adopted, he had apparently intended merely to indicate that one of Hardeo's family should be adopted and that the direction had been sufficiently complied with by the affiliation of a boy who was of a more suitable age than his elder brothers and that as regards the time, the words, when read contextually, could not be treated as words of limitation.[4] Where the husband had given the power to his two widows jointly, having made no provision what was to happen if one of them died before any adoption was made, the court held that, as the exercise of the power was vested in the discretion of the joint donees, the death of one of them put an end to the power, and the survivor of them could not make a valid adoption. The conclusion at which their Lordships arrived was based not on any peculiar doctrine of English Law or the English cases but on the very nature and incidents of a joint power.[5] Where a person could exercise the power in one character but not in another, the court will presume that the power was conferred only in the character in which it could be exercised. The testator (A), father of his deceased son (B), executed a will in which he expressed a desire to adopt his nephew C, but added that if he could not do so (as then his daughter-in-law (D), B's widow, was to adopt him, he had appointed him as his heir. It was held that the direction to D to adopt must be construed as a direction to her to adopt a son to her deceased husband B and not a son to her father-in-law A, as that was the only adoption which she was by Hindu Law competent to make.[6]

(1) Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana, 29 M. 382 (388) P.C.

(2) Ib., P. 388.

(3) Rajendra Prasad v. Gopal Prasad, 10 Pat. 187 (195) P.C.; following Amrito Lal v. Surnomoye, 27 C. 996 (1002) P.C.; Radha Madhab v. Rejendra Prasad, 12 Pat. 727.

(4) Mutasaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A. 377 (382) P.C.

(5) Narasimha v. Parthasarathy, 37 M. 191 (P.C.) overruling Narasimha v. Rangaya Appa Row, 29 M. 437.

(6) Karsandas v. Ladkavahu, 12 B. 185 (199).

Authority to Adopt a Persona Designata.

562. This doctrine of liberal construction has been put in force in the case of a direction to adopt a persona designata. So when the husband authorized his wife to adopt a boy named by him, the courts construed the naming of the boy as merely indicating a preference, so that if he was not available, being dead or refused, the widow was at liberty to adopt any other boy unless her authority was expressly limited as if the direction were: "Adopt A and no other."[1]

Construction must be Reasonable.

563. Construction, though liberal, must be equally reasonable and not outside the pale of probability and the rules of judicial interpretation. This was pointed out in a case, in which the son had executed a will appointing his wife, father and uncle his executors, and the latter two trustees as well, conferring upon all the three an authority to adopt and providing for his trustees to adopt should his wife die without making an adoption. The wife adopted the plaintiff with the consent of the uncle, her husband's father being then dead. It was contended that as the wife only could adopt, this power must be treated as one merely authorizing the wife and providing for the concurrence of the two executors. But the Privy Council held this to be a mere speculation, which could not override the clear provisions of the will which intended to confer the power of adoption on all the three, and in case of the wife's death, on his two executors, which showed the father and the uncle were conferred a power to adopt independently of the widow. The joint power being invalid, the adoption made by the widow with the consent of one of the executors was equally invalid.[2]

The same view was held in other cases where the testator had empowered his wife to adopt a son along with a living son, in which case the direction could not be construed to mean an authority to adopt on the death of the son.[3]

Provision for Consent.

564. Such joint authority, which is inconsistent with the sole legal authority inherent in the widow, for the proper exercise of which the consent of the husband is made pre-requisite, is not to be confused with a condition providing for the consultation or advice of a person named. So where the testator appointed his cousin as manager of his estate, and provided that his wife will "manage all his affairs with the consent of the said manager," that if she did any wrongful act the said manager could cancel it, and that his wife "will adopt a son with the good advice and opinion of the manager", the wife adopted without the advice of the manager who refused to advise or attend the

---

(1) Jagannath v. Rambharos, (1936) P.C. 201; Ramchandra v. Bapu, (1877) B.P.J. 42; Lakshmi Bai v. Rajaji, 22 B. 996, followed in Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana, 26 M. 681 (684); Shankar v. Sawitri, 50 I.C. (N.) 599. The somewhat narrower construction in Amirthayyan v. Ketharamayyan, 14 M. 65, may be justified on the terms of the will the court had to construe.

(2) Amrita Lal v. Surmoye, 25 C. 662, affirmed O.A. 27 C. 996 (1002, 1003) P.C.

(3) Joy Chundro v. Bhyrub, (1849) S.D.A.B. 461: 10 I.D. (O.S.) 1006; Basoo v. Basoo, (1856) S.D.A.M. 20; Veraprashiya v. Santanraja, (1860) S. D. A. M. 168.

ceremony, the court held the adoption good on the ground that while the will prescribed a penalty for mismanagement, it did not say that the manager's non-consent should invalidate the adoption. That the condition as to his consent was, therefore, not a condition precedent to the validity of an adoption by her, and as adoption by his wife was the testator's primary purpose, it could not fail for want of the manager's consent.[1] This was the view taken in another case, in which the authority was given in the following words: "If my younger brother has children, and if he would give his second son among them in adoption, he should be taken. In the meanwhile, if another son is adopted, much trouble would occur. If a boy is available among relations, with reference to whom trouble may not ensue, he may be taken." It was held that these words were merely commendatory and not imperative and that it left the wife free to adopt a stranger.[2] A Hindu testator by his will appointed five trustees of his property, and gave power to his widow to adopt a son with their consent and advice. One of the trustees declined to act. She adopted a boy with the consent of the remaining trustees who had in fact made the selection. The Privy Council upheld the adoption holding that the refusal of one of the trustees to act could not invalidate it, and that the real authority to adopt was vested in the widow.[3]

Limited Authority.

565. The authority may be conditional, contingent or limited, but whatever its nature, "it must be strictly pursued."[4] So the husband may direct that his wife may adopt on the death of his legitimate son,[5] or that the adoption should be of a boy from a certain family or that it should not be from her own family[6] in which case the wife is bound to execute the limited authority. So where a Hindu made a will, executed in favour of his wife, addressing whom he said therein, "You must adopt for me a boy you like from the children that may be born in the families of my brothers" and later on added, "the principal object of this will is that you should adopt for me any suitable boy" and the wife adopted one outside the husband's brothers' family, though one of the brothers had offered his own son in adoption, the court set aside the adoption holding the second clause controlled by the first and thereby limiting her authority, which she could not exceed, by adopting an outsider.[7]

Illegal Authority.

566. Of course, it is a well-known principle of law that a person cannot authorize another to do what he is not able to do himself.[8] Consequently, the husband, being unable to make an illegal adoption cannot confer larger powers upon

---

(1) Surendra v. Sailaja, 18 C. 385 (391); Chennappa v. Ramappa, 10 M.L.J. 131.

(2) Radha v. Narasimha, 17 M.L.J. 186.

(3) Bal Gangadar Tilak v. Shrinivas Pandit, 39 B. 441 P.C. Distig. in Baij Nath v. Rattan Lal, 14 L. 345. (One of the two executors consented, adoption held invalid.)

(4) Padum Singh v. Koer Oodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350 (356).

(5) Solukhna v. Ramdolal, 1 Beng. S.R. 434: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 318; Bhubon Moyee v. Ramakishore, 10 M.I.A. 279; Bykant v. Kisto Soonderee, 7 W.R. 392; Velanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 P.C.

(6) Kalawati v. Dharam Prakash, 55 A. 78 P.C.

(7) Amirthayyan v. Ketharamayyan, 14 M. 65.

(8) Gopee Lal v. Chunderbolee, 11 B. L.R. 391 P.C.

his wife. He cannot, for instance, make an adoption during the lifetime of a son. If, therefore, he permitted his wife to make an adoption of a co-heir with his son, the authority is altogether invalid and cannot be validated by construing it to authorize an adoption on the death of the natural son then living. As the court observed: "It is impossible to convert this permission into a permission for what is altogether a distinct purpose, i.e., the adoption of a son after the death of the natural son then living.....It can furnish no authority for enabling a widow to correct an illegal permission by modifying it, or groundlessly assuming the existence of a permission which might have been legal."[1] So where the husband had two wives and a son by the senior wife, and when ill, his junior wife complained to him of the ill-treatment awaiting her at the hands of her co-wife and her son, whereupon the husband empowered her to adopt a son if she could not agree with her step-son, it was held that as the husband could not adopt while his son was alive, so could not his widow.[2] So where the husband gave each of his two wives permission to adopt three sons in succession, and acting upon this authority, the two widows adopted two sons simultaneously, and the question was, which of any of the two adoptions was valid, their Lordships held the two simultaneous adoptions invalid, first, because such adoptions are illegal, and secondly, because, if reasonably construed, the permission gave not a power to the widows to adopt simultaneously, but first to the elder widow power to adopt three sons successively, and then a similar power to the younger widow.[3]

567. So an authority, legal and sufficient, may by the intervention of other interests become invalid if exercised thereafter. Such would be the case where the power to adopt by the widow, in the event of the death of a legitimate son then living, was exercised on his death after his marriage, and when his wife entered into possession as his heir, and when the adoption made by his mother in the exercise of her power had the effect of divesting her daughter-in-law.[4]

568. So an authority may be void for vagueness. Such was the case of the husband who authorized his wife to adopt a boy "from amongst my near relatives" which clause was held to be too vague and, therefore, inoperative.[5] But in such cases the court strives, as far as possible, to place a reasonable and probable construction upon vague and incomplete words.

Vague Authority.

569. The testator, the Taluqdar of Balrampur in Oudh, who died childless leaving two widows, bequeathed to "the Maharani Sahiba" his entire estate, giving her also a power to adopt, and also providing maintenance for both his widows after such adoption. On the question arising

---

(1) Joy Chunder v. Bhyrub, (1849) 5 S.D.A.B. 462: 10 I.D. (O.S.) 1006 (1009).

(2) Solukhna v. Ram Dolal, 1 Beng.S.R. 434: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 318 (320).

(3) Akhoy Chunder v. Kalapahar, 12 C. 406 (411, 414) P.C.

(4) Bhoobun Moyee v. Ramkishore, 10 M.I.A. 299 (311, 312); Sri Virada v. Sri Brozo, 1 M. 69 P.C.; Ram Krishna v. Sham Rao, 26 B. 526 (532); Bachoo v. Mankorebai, 31 B. 373 P.C.; Amulya v. Kalidas, 32 C. 861 F.B.; Dutto v. Pandurang, 32 B. 499; Maniyamala v. Nanda Kumar, 33 C. 1306; Madana Mohana v. Purshotama, 41 M. 855 P.C., affirming O.A. Madana Mohana v. Purshotama, 38 M. 1105.

(5) Sarda Prasad v. Rama, 17 C.W.N. 319 (323).

whether the term "Maharani Sahiba" applied to the senior or to the junior widow, the Judicial Commissioner held that term to refer to both the wives considered collectively, but the Privy Council overruled him holding that the employment of a singular number pointed only to one individual, which was otherwise consistent with the context, and that in that view, the senior widow who retained the pre-eminence of an elder wife must be held to be the donee of her husband's power.[1]

Revocation of Authority.

570. He who gives the authority may equally revoke it before it has been acted upon.[2] Such revocation may be express or implied. Such revocation will be presumed where after the authority is given, he himself gets a son or makes an adoption.[3]

Abuse of Authority.

The authority to adopt is the conferral of power which the donee cannot use to her personal advantage. Where, for instance, a Hindu widow, having authority to adopt from her husband entered into an agreement whereby she undertook not to adopt in consideration of her getting some properties, the agreement was held to be void as contrary to public policy, the authority being given to her not for herself but for her husband.[4]

Proof of Authority.

571. The proof of authority is no exception to the rule governing the proof of any other fact. But time is always a factor in determining its value. The fact that there was an adoption in fact by the widow does not, of course, warrant any presumption of authority. But where the adoption was made 42 years ago and the widow survived the adoption for a period of 30 years, during which it could have been, but had not been challenged, on the other hand, it was recognized by the local authorities as valid and the plaintiff had in various litigations acted along with the adopted son, acknowledging in the course of proceedings his right and all other parties had acted on the assumption of the adoption, the court held the evidence of witnesses, who proved both the adoption and the authority, as beyond cavil.[5] In another case, the court presumed authority to an adoption made in 1867, but only questioned after about 50 years and after the son had died.[6]

Successive Adoptions.

44. In the absence of a direction of the husband, or of any rule of law to the contrary, the widow's authority to make an adoption does not lapse on the making of a single adoption, but continues so long as the spiritual purpose of adoption has not been achieved.[7]

572. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by the undernoted cases.[8] Since the wife adopts to her husband and is the donee of his power,

(1) Indar Kunwar v. Jaipal, 15 C. 725 (748) P.C.

(2) Jagannath v. Kunj Behari, (1919) M.W.N. 52: 49 I.C. 929.

(3) Goureepershaud v. Jymala, 2 Beng. S.R. 174: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 491 (492). The legality of two successive adoptions by two co-widows upheld in this case, is now no longer tenable.

(4) Jagannath v. Kunj Behari, (1919) M.W.N. 52: 49 I.C. 929.

(5) Sri Kanchumarthi v. Kanchumarthi, (1925) P.C. 201: 89 I.C. 817.

(6) Sambasiva v. Ramaswami, 48 M. L.J. 353: 86 I.C. 772: (1925) M. 803.

(7) Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (650) P.C.; followed in Sasanka v. Gopi Ballav, (1935) C. 716.

(8) Ib.

it follows that her authority to adopt depends upon the extent of his authorisation. As such, law presumes that in the absence of an express prohibition, he intended to adopt a son to perform the religious rites consequent upon his death and thereby secure his spiritual beatitude. One rule of law ensuring this purpose is that stated in S. 48. Save that and other similar rules the widow's right of adoption is a continuing right, entitling her to make successive adoptions in the event of her one or more sons dying issueless and unmarried, or if married, leaving behind a widow possessing no power of adoption. (For further commentary, see S. 48.)

45. Where the authority to adopt devolves or is conferred on two or more widows, in the absence of any express direction to the contrary, the power must be exercised by them in the order of seniority.[1]

Adoption by co-widows.

Illustrations.

(a) A directs that his two wives, B and C, may jointly adopt a son. Here B, though senior, cannot adopt without the concurrence of C, and if one of them dies the other cannot adopt.[2]

(b) A directs that his two wives B and C should make an adoption. There is nothing to indicate that they are to act jointly. B, if senior, may adopt, and if she dies or refuses, C may do so.[3]

573. Analogous Law.—Ordinarily, where the testator empowers his two or more widows to adopt and both have equal rights, the authority to adopt devolves upon them in their order of seniority. If the seniormost should refuse or become incapable of adopting, then the right devolves on the one next senior to her.[4] It is, however, open to the senior to waive her preferential right to adopt in favour of a junior widow. The latter would then become entitled to make the adoption.[5] But without such authority, the junior cannot even perform the ceremony of adoption of a boy selected by the senior for that purpose, since adoption implies the mutual acts of giving and receiving the child, and until they take place, there is necessarily a locus penitentiae for the elder widow, of which she may avail herself, although contrary to the wishes of the other widows, by changing her mind and selecting another child. To hold that any one of the junior widows might perform the formal act of adoption of the selected child, whenever it pleased her, is to force the hand of the elder widow, and compel her to complete the adoption, which, till it is completed, is, at the most, only in fieri.[6] Where both widows have equal presumed authority to adopt, the senior may adopt not only without consulting her junior but even in opposition to her wishes, and even though it may prejudice her right.[7] But this is only so where the husband does not give any specific directions to the contrary. He may, for instance, direct that it would be competent to his two widows to adopt jointly. In that case, the exercise of the power being vested in the discretion of the joint donees, one is incompetent to act

---

(1) Mondakini v. Adinath, 18 C. 69.
(2) Narasimha v. Parthasarathy, 37 M. 225 P.C.
(3) Mondakini v. Adinath, 18 C. 69 (71, 72).
(4) Saroda Prosad v. Rama, 17 C.W.N. 319; Mondakini v. Adinath, 18 C. 69 (71-72); Doorga v. Soorendra, 12 C. 686; Padajirav v. Ramrav, 13 B. 160.
(5) Padajirav v. Ramrav, 13 B. 160 (167).
(6) Padajirav v. Ramrav, 13 B. 160.
(7) Bhimawa v. Sangawa, (1896) B. P.J. 351.

without the other, so that if one of them dies the power is at an end.[1] It is, of course, competent to the husband to authorize his junior widow to adopt to the exclusion of the senior widow.[2] Of the two co-widows in Bombay, the senior may adopt without any express authority of her husband, but the junior cannot adopt without the consent of the senior co-widow, or the special authority of her husband,[3] a fortiori she cannot adopt when the senior widow has already exercised her right.[4] Where the husband authorizes his two widows to adopt to him alternately up to the number of six, the the adoption by the junior widow, after the death of the son adopted by the senior widow is valid even though the estate does not vest in the adopting widow.[5]

Adoption by fraud, etc.

46. An adoption brought about by corruption, coercion, undue influence, fraud, misrepresentation, or mistake, or otherwise than by the free consent of the parties thereto, is voidable at the instance of the party wronged, but subject to the rights of other parties, it may be confirmed.[6]

Illustrations.

(a) A, a widow in the Dravid country, falsely represented to her husband's sapindas that she had authority from her husband to adopt. They thereupon accorded their consent. The adoption is invalid as their consent was obtained by misrepresentation.[7]

(b) A threatened B with a criminal prosecution falsely accusing her of forgery. B thereupon adopted A's son C. She treated C as her son for years. B could not afterwards avoid it, for she had ratified it.

574. Analogous Law.—This section merely applies the general law to the subject of adoption, and is amply supported by authorities.[8] So the Succession Act[9] embodies the following provision equally applicable to the Hindus, subject to the Hindu Wills Act.[10]

Will obtained by Fraud, Coercion or Importunity.

A will or any part of a will, the making of which has been caused by fraud or coercion, or by such importunity as takes away the free agency of the testator is void, and the court is bound to ignore it. But assuming that fraud, etc., is pleaded, the proof by which it is supported must be precise and sufficient, and as it is too often ignored, the fraud proved must be the fraud pleaded, and not some other fraud which had never been pleaded at all and of which the other party had no notice. In the case of marriage and adoption, which materially alter the status of the person married or adopted, this precaution is especially necessary; for it may affect his rights, though, being a minor, he may have had no share in it at all.

---

(1) Narasimha v. Parthasarathy, 37 M. 199 (225) P.C., overruling Narasimha v. Rangayya, 29 M. 437.

(2) Chennappa v. Ramappa, 10 M.L.J. 131; Dnyanu v. Tanu, 44 B. 508.

(3) Basappa v. Shidramappa, 43 B. 481; Dnyanu v. Tanu, 44 B. 508.

(4) Shivappa v. Rudrava, (1932) B. 410 (416, 417).

(5) Shashankabhooshah v. Brtjendra Narayan, 63 C. 385.

(6) Venkata v. Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (445, 446); Venkamma v. Subramaniam, 30 M. 50 (53) P.C.; Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas, 39 B. 441 (467) P.C.; Sitaram v. Hurihar, 12 Bom.L.R. 910: 8 I.C. 625.

(7) Venkamma v. Subramaniam, 30 M. 50 (52, 53).

(8) Ib.

(9) Act XXXIX of 1925.

(10) Act XXI of 1870, S. 2; now Sch. III, S. 57, Act XXXIX of 1925.

575. As regards the effect of these Acts, it has been held that neither coercion nor fraud nor undue influence nor misrepresentation renders an adoption invalid or void, though they make it voidable at the instance of the party coerced or the adopted son, whose status is altered to his prejudice by such coercion. But a party may have been coerced into the doing of a thing which he may ratify afterwards. Such was the case of the Hindu widow who had been coerced into making an adoption of a boy by an attorney, who threatened the mother with prosecution for the forgery of a will, executed in her favour, whereupon she took the boy in adoption, ratifying her act when the threat was removed by acknowledging the adoption and upholding it as a valid one.[1]

Ratification when possible.

576. The first pre-requisite of a valid adoption is that it should be made and taken out of affection[2] which, of course, implies that it should be the voluntary act of parties and not one brought about by corruption, coercion, or any of the other circumstances mentioned in the section, which may defeat the very purpose of adoption. So, in setting aside the death-bed adoption of a person, the Privy Council said: "How is it possible that a person in such a condition could be capable of any act requiring judgment and reflection, especially one to which no antecedent circumstances appear to have led, and for which the enfeebled and scarcely conscious mind was unprepared? In such a state as that described, even if the mind were passively awake to the suggestions made to it, it would naturally cling to repose, and yield, for the sake of it, to any external suggestion."[3]

(1) It must be Voluntary.

577. Of course, a person who, from extreme youth or old age, is unable to judge of the nature of the act and its effect upon his rights, is equally incompetent to make an adoption. As was observed in a case, "a minor might make a valid adoption for the spiritual benefit of her husband, yet there must be cogent evidence to show that she did so under the intelligent and disinterested guidance of her legal guardian, seeking bona fide to provide for a spiritual necessity, with due regard to her interest as far as it is compatible with such necessity."[4]

578. Any consideration paid to the father for giving away his son in adoption is really the sale of the child, and is as such, now illegal and opposed to public policy.[5] But an adoption like a marriage involves the change of status and law does not ordinarily permit the cancellation of a filial relationship once

Corrupt Adoption.

---

(1) Venkata v. Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (445, 446), reversed O.A. Narasimha v. Parthasarathy, 37 M. 199 P.C., though on a different point. The view set out in the text was dissented from in Sattiraju v. Venkataswami, 40 M. 925 (930).

(2) Manu, IX-168.

(3) Tayammaul v. Sashachalla, 10 M. I. A. 429 (435). To the same effect, Bullub Kant v. Kishenpria, 6 Beng.S.R. 271, 6 I.D. (O.S.) 869 (871).

(4) Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti, 13 M. 214 (221).

(5) A "son bought" is the 8th out of the 12 recognized sons in the Smritis, but completed,[1] any more than it favours the cancellation of a marriage. But, nevertheless, it discourages trafficking in children, and regarding the passage of all consideration between the natural parent and the adopter as illegal, it would do all it can to prevent the parent profiting by it. Consequently, if the adopter borrowed money for payment to the natural parent, the money so borrowed is not recoverable from his estate or his heirs including the adopted son.[2] And if the amount is promised but not paid, it cannot be sued for.[3] But in such cases, the reason why the adoption is not cancelled is, that it may cause irreparable loss to the adopted son. As was observed in a case: "That a rule which makes an agreement to pay, or the payment of such a consideration as that in question invalidate the adoption itself, would strike at the mischief more effectually than one which only prohibits the grant of relief in respect of the agreement or the payment, it would be idle to suppose, so long as the sentiments of the people concerned remain what they are. It is abundantly clear from the evidence that in the community to which the parties belong such payments form the rule, and the contrary, the exception. And so long as these men continue to be moved by the desire for the perpetuation of lineage by recourse to the fiction of adoption, the payments will not cease and the consequence of the stricter rule would only be that the payments would be made in secret. . . "[4]

579. The court, however, takes this view in the interests of the adoptee, and if he feels injured by his affiliation, he is entitled to have it cancelled on the ground of corruption. But otherwise the question of motive is immaterial to its validity and the court will not allow a stranger to shake his title on that ground.

But as pointed out in a later case, this view is not sustainable, as the act of adoption is not an act in the nature of a contract, and the validity of the act changing the status of a person cannot be made to remain in suspense at the option of one of the actors in the transaction.[5] Such cases may more appropriately be supported on the ground of estoppel rather than of ratification.

But in another case, the widow in Madras, being required to obtain the consent of her sapindas to her adoption, falsely stated to them that she had the authority of her husband to adopt, which rendered their consent supererogatory. They, however, consented and the widow went through the form of adoption, but the court declared it to be a nullity on the ground that the widow had obtained the necessary sanction of the sapindas by misrepresentation, and that their consent was not the "independent approval of her natural advisers," the absence of which sufficed to vitiate the adoption.[6]

580. Not Corrupt.—A sapinda's consent cannot be ruled out on the ground that while giving his consent, he had stipulated that his own share he is no longer so recognised; Eshan Kishore v. Hurish Chunder, 21 W.R. 381 (382); Murugappa v. Nagappa, 29 M. 161.

---

(1) Murugappa v. Nagappa, 29 M. 161 (164, 165).

(2) Sitaram v. Harihar, 35 B. 169 (181).

(3) Eshan Kishore v. Hurish Chunder, 21 W.R. 381 (382).

(4) Murugappa v. Nagappa, 29 M. 161 (165).

(5) Sattiraju v. Venkataswami, 40 M. 925 (930); Venkamma v. Jonalagadda, 30 M. 50.

(6) Sitaram v. Harihar, 35 B. 169 (180, 181).

should not be reduced by the adoption,[1] or because his own son was adopted.[2]

Adoption by Fraud, etc.

581. An adoption by a widow must be made with an eye solely to the fitness of the boy to be adopted to fulfil the religious and secular duties binding on a son. That object is likely to be frustrated, if she is induced to adopt a boy out of greed for money and for pecuniary benefit to herself. If she is so induced, the money paid to her is a bribe, which is condemned by all smriti writers as an illegal payment. Still less is the object fulfilled, if she is defrauded or coerced into accepting a boy whom she is constrained to adopt, without the exercise of that unfettered judgment which is essential to the efficient discharge of her duties. It is consequently clear, that no adoption can be upheld, which is the result of coercion, fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence. These are large words and commonly used in concatenation, but as the Privy Council remarked: "Coercion, undue influence, fraud and misrepresentation are all separate and separable categories of law. It is true that they may overlap or may be combined."[3] But it is, nevertheless, necessary, and is indeed, a well-recognized rule of pleading[4] that he who relies upon them for relief must plead them specifically giving particulars, without which the court will take no notice of general allegations which do not amount even to an averment of fraud.[5] The motive for an adoption being spiritual, it cannot be avoided on the ground that the adoptee has nothing to inherit.[6]

Widow's estoppel.

47. The widow cannot dispute the validity of her husband's adoption.[7]

Illustration.

A adopts his sister's son, B, which is invalid. A's widow C thereupon adopts D. D's adoption is invalid, since C could not lawfully dispute the validity of her husband's adoption.[8]

Legal limitation on the widow's adoption.

48. The widow's power of adoption is not affected by the vesting of her husband's estate in a coparcener or other heir, nor is it exhausted by the birth of a son, although it remains suspended during his lifetime, reviving on his death if he should die issueless irrespective of his age[9] and without his own widow possessing the like power of adoption.[10]

Illustrations.

(a) A, the owner of an impartible Zemindari in Behar, subject to primogeniture, dies leaving him surviving his son B, and his widow whom he empowers to adopt should B predecease her, which he did, whereupon B's cousin C inherited his estate. A's widow

(1) Srinivasa v. Rangaswami, 30 M. 450.

(2) Obiter in Krishnayya v. Raja of Pittapur, 51 M. 893 (925); Solaimalai v. Sokkammal, (1934) M. 567 (571).

(3) Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas, 39 B. 441 (467) P.C.

(4) O. VI, R. 4, C.P.Code (V of 1908).

(5) Wallingford v. Mutual Society, 5 App. Cas. 685 (697); Ganga Narain v. Tiluckram, 15 C. 533 P.C.; Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas, 39 B. 441 (467) P.C.

(6) Sri Virada v. Sri Brozo, 1 M. 69 (83) P.C.; Sukhdevdoss v. Mt. Choti Bai, (1928) M.W.N. 32: (1928) M. 118 (123).

(7) Bhau Adgouda Patil v. Narasa Gouda Tatya, 46 B. 400; Chimabai v. Mallappa, 46 B. 946.

(8) Ib.

(9) Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (654) P.C.; Yadao v. Namdeo, 49 C. [illegible] P.C.; Bhimabai v. Gurunathgouda, 57 B. 157 (172) P.C.; Vijai Singh v. Shiv Sangji, 59 B. 360 P.C.

(10) Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (664) P.C.

then adopted D, which had the effect of divesting C. D's adoption was valid though it divested C.[1]

(b) Two brothers, A and B, were members of a Maharashtra joint family. A died leaving him surviving his brother B and widow who adopted C without consulting B. C's adoption is valid.[2]

(c) Of the three coparceners, A, B and C, A died leaving him surviving his widow D who, after the partition between B and C, adopted D who claimed A's share from B and C. B and C must give D his share.[3]

(d) A, the father of B, then aged 2 years empowers his wife C to adopt, should B die. B survived his father but died issueless and unmarried at the age of 21, whereupon C took D in adoption. D claimed the estate from E in whom it had vested as the then nearest heir of A, entitled to A's impartible Zemindari, D is entitled to divest E.[4]

(e) But if in the last case B had made an adoption before his death, or left a widow who could adopt, then his mother C's power to make an adoption would become extinguished.[5]

582. Analogous Law.—The power of the widow to adopt, though it has the effect of defeating a contingent interest, such as the interest of her reversioner, has long been recognized and never been doubted, but her power to defeat a vested right by her adoption had long been the subject of doubt on the ground stated by the Privy Council that an estate once vested cannot be divested by an adoption,[6] and that "it would be unjust to allow the widow to defeat their interest by introducing a new coparcener against their will."[7] In a later case, they re-emphasised this view, adding that it was impossible not to see "that there are grave social objections to making the succession of property, and it may be in the case of collateral succession, as in the present instance, the rights of parties in actual possession, dependent on the caprice of a woman subject to all the pernicious influences which interested advisers are too apt in India to exert over women possessed of, or capable of exercising dominion over property. It seems, therefore, to be the duty of the court to keep the power strictly within the limits which the law has assigned to it."[8] In a still later case, their Lordships reiterated their view that, in giving effect to the religious duty, rights to property cannot be left out of consideration in the determination of the question.[9] These were all Madras cases, but the reasons given were general and applied to cases even from Bengal[10] which, therefore, were taken to guide the course of Indian decisions[11] till their current was reversed by their Lordships' decision in Yadao v. Nam Deo,[12] since when the courts have adopted the view that the religious obligation of the widow to make an adoption cannot be qualified

(1) Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 P.C.

(2) Yadao v. Namdeo, 49 C. 1 P.C.; Bhimabai v. Gurunathgouda, 57 B. 157 P.C.; Vijai Singh v. Shivsangji, 59 B. 360 P.C.

(3) Ib., Panyam v. Ramalakshmamma, 55 M. 581.

(4) Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 P.C.

(5) Ibid.

(6) Bhoobun Moyee v. Ramkishore, 10 M.I.A. 279 (312).

(7) Collector of Madura v. Muttu Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (441-442).

(8) Sri Virada v. Sri Brozo Kishore, 1 M. 62 (83) P.C.

(9) Veerabasavaraju v. Balasurya, 41 M. 998 (1010) P.C.

(10) Bhubun Moyee v. Ramkishore, 10 M.I.A. 279; Padmakumari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 (309) P.C.; affirming O.A. 5 C. 615; Tarachuran v. Sureshchander, 17 C. 122 P.C. "Nothing would be gained, in their Lordships' opinion, by attempting a critical examination of these cases in view of two recent pronouncements of this Board." Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (655) P.C.

(11) Ishwar v. Gajabai, 50 B. 468 (511) F.B., overruled in Bhimabai v. Gurunathgouda, 57 B. 157 P.C.

(12) 49 C. 1 P.C.

with reference to considerations extraneous to it, and that, therefore, the fact that her adoption would have the effect of devesting vested interest cannot affect her spiritual duty.[1]

583. Another limitation on her power upon which the courts had settled down to a view, since pronounced erroneous, by the Privy Council, was the rule that if the widow's son had died reaching the age of "ceremonial competence" it had the effect of determining her own power, since, with the attainment of ceremonial competence the son acquired the inherent right to make his own adoption, and that, since there cannot be two persons possessing the same right, the widow's right must cease the moment her son became competent to perform the ceremony of adoption, which is only possible as stated in the section.

584. Principle.—Two motives underlie an adoption, spiritual and secular, and the case-law that has clustered round the subject depends upon which of the two motives is given pre-eminence. The one regards the primary purpose of an adoption to provide for the spiritual needs of a person in accordance with Hindu Law only possible through the medium of a son, natural or adopted, as also the continuance of the lineage for the same purpose; the other view which, while recognizing the force of spiritual necessity still treats the question as not wholly independent of its effect upon the devolution of property, the result being that the power of adoption is in each case limited by conditions which treat the one or the other question more important. In many cases[2] the secular consideration was held to limit the widow's power of adoption, but the Privy Council regard this view point fallacious, holding as they do the spiritual necessity as more vital to the orthodox Hindu, though the secular view had long gained currency in this country on the authority of the same Board who had held that where the husband had left coparceners, "it would be unjust to allow the widow to defeat their interest by introducing a new coparcener against their will."[3]

585. Nature and effect of widow's adoption.—Since the widow's power of adoption is now supported on the theoretical basis of spiritual necessity, it is no longer held subject to the rule regarding the vesting of estates, (§ 582) or the attainment of "ceremonial competency" of her son, or, in the case of the widow of a joint coparcener in Bombay, upon the express authority of her husband or of her husband's coparceners,[4] or on the fact that she had inherited no property from her husband.[5] This view has made a clean sweep of an accumulated mass of case-law in which the logical deductions from the two rules, now abrogated, were set out. Now, that the rules themselves have gone, it would be futile to pass in review the earlier law on the subject; but a prolific crop of new cases are sure to be the outcome of the new rules, for the time being settled by the Privy Council. Meanwhile, it might be useful to forecast the trend of such derivative law as the rules incline to.

---

(1) Amarandra v. Sanathan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (654) P.C. and cases cited, supra.

(2) See Hindu Code, (3rd Ed.), S. 44 Comm.

(3) Collector of Madura v. Muttu Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (441-442) cited in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai, 5 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 181 (193) approved in Bhimabai v. Gurunathgouda, 57 B. 157 (172) P.C. though the fact stated in the text was not adverted to.

(4) Yadao v. Namdeo, 49 C. 1 (11-18) P.C.; Bhimabai v. Gurunathgouda, 57 B. 157 P.C.

(5) Pratap Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 (793) P.C.

586. In the first place, since a deceased coparcener may now empower his widow to make an adoption, and the adoptee takes the place of a natural son, with effect from the death of his adoptive father, on the analogy of a posthumous son[1] it follows that such a son would rank as a coparcener as from that moment, possessing all rights of a coparcener; so that if the estate be an impartible one, he will succeed to it displacing his collaterals, even though one of them might, in the meantime, have inherited it as the presumptive heir of the deceased.[2] If the joint estate be partible he is still entitled to take his father's share, and if, in the meantime, the estate had been already partitioned he would be entitled to the allotment of his share,[3] though it would be no ground for a repartition of the whole estate; since a partition once made is not subject to repartition on that ground. In such cases, moreover, the rule that an adoption can only be made to the last male holder would not apply, since it is also a rule based on devesting.[4] Where the deceased has left two or more widows, all equally empowered or otherwise entitled to make an adoption, then all must join in making the adoption, but if the others refuse, the senior alone may make a valid adoption.[5] But if of two widows the junior had inherited the estate on the death of her own son, could she be devested of her vested estate by the adoption by her senior co-widow? That she could not be so devested had been previously held in cases which followed the general rule applicable to vested estate,[6] but since this rule no longer controls an adoption, it follows that such co-widow can be no better off than the coparcener and that both must bow to the effect of the spiritual duty upon their own estates.

587. But the case would be different, where the deceased left the widow and a son, then aged 2. In such a case, if the son should die on coming of age and married leaving him surviving his own widow, the question whether the father's widow would still retain the right of adoption depends upon whether the son's widow had equally that right. The Privy Council were clear that if she had, then the mother's right would become extinguished,[7] but they refrained from deciding what would be its effect if she had no such right,[8] though in a later passage, they seemed to suggest that in that case, her mother-in-law's right to make an adoption would remain unimpaired,[9] though in some previous cases decided by them, they regarded the mere survival of the widow as sufficient to divest her mother-in-law of her right of adoption; but in so holding they did not advert to her incapacity, but based their judgment on the rule that her vested estate could not be devested by her mother-in-law's adoption.[10] One thing is certain, that if the son should die unmarried, whatever his age, the mother's

(1) Pratap Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 (794) P.C.
(2) Pratap Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 (792) P.C.
(3) See S. 195 comm.
(4) Ammanna v. Satyanarayan, 49 M. 636 (645, 646).
(5) Ramkumari v. Radhabai, 5 B.H.C.R. 192; Rupchand v. Rakhmabai, 8 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 1; Ramji v. Ghamu, 6 B. 498; Keshava v. Govind, 9 B. 91; Bhimawa v. Sangawa, 22 B. 206 (211); Amava v. Mahadgauda, 1 B. 416; Narayanswami v. Mangammal, 28 M. 315.
(6) Ramkrishna v. Shamrao, 26 B. 526 F.B.; Anandi Bai v. Kashi Bai, 28 B. 461 (464, 465); Datto v. Pandurang, 32 B. 499; Faizuddin v. Tincawri, 22 C. 565 (572).
(7) Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (659) P.C.
(8) Ib. p. 659.
(9) Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (664) P.C. citing with approval Wallace, J., in Tripuramba v. Venkataratnam, 46 M. 423 (433-434).
(10) Bhoobun Moyee v. Ram Kishore, 10 M.I.A. 279 (312); Amarendra v.

right of adoption would survive his death.[1] But, of course, if the son, though unmarried, died leaving an adopted son, then it would naturally suffice to extinguish his mother's right of adoption[2] even though the adopted son should die one moment after the adoption.

588. Limits to Her Power.—That the right of the widow to adopt, though large, is by no means unlimited, has been recognized by their Lordships even in the later cases in which they have given fuller recognition to the doctrine of religious duty. The fact is that the law of adoption, like any other law, can at best be only loosely logical. It would not bear all the deductions that might be held to flow legitimately from the recognition of a single doctrine. As their Lordships observed in a case, "It could hardly have been intended that after the lapse of several successive heirs, a son should be adopted to the great-grandfather of the last taker, when all the spiritual purposes of a son, according to the largest construction of them, would have been satisfied."[3] Again, while the widow may, by her adoption, create an estate in her son, in which she herself had no interest beyond a claim for her maintenance, and though her adoption may devest a vested interest, a fortiori a mere contingency, still her adoption cannot defeat her husband's devise[4] or the disposal of property to a bona fide transferee for value by the heir since displaced.[5] Her right would equally continue, where the son is himself adopted into another family.[6]

589. The presence of a daughter, or of a daughter and her sons, has never been held to be a bar to the mother's right of adoption, though by her adoption she would not only disappoint her husband's lineal heir but alter the entire course of succession. There has never been any doubt on this question, since, as already observed, the widow's right of adoption was never held to be affected by its effect upon a mere contingency, and the daughter and her sons, being mere reversioners possess no higher right.[7]

590. Mother-in-law v. Daughter-in-law.—The question whether the mother-in-law has a preferential claim to adoption against her daughter-in-law on the death of the latter's husband issueless has been settled so far that if the son's widow was authorised or entitled to adopt, it suffices to extinguish her mother-in-law's power whether the son's widow does or does not use her power. But this is not the only contingency in which the two might be in conflict, since suppose the widow be the widow of a predeceased son with power to adopt, or the widow of the son dying after his father but without power to adopt. In the former case, since the last holder was the father there can be no doubt that his widow would have the preferential right of adoption. The latter contingency cannot be met with the same degree of assurance, nor were their Lordships quite sure of the inclination of their mind in such a case, since in their latest considered judgment[8] they acknowledge that the previous decisions of their Board held the pre-

---

Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (659-664) P.C.; to the same effect Verabhai v. Bai Hiraba, 27 B. 492 (499) P.C., in which, however, the son had died both unmarried and a minor.

(1) Ib., p. 662.

(2) Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (655) P.C.; following 10 M.I.A. 279; approving 26 B. 526 F.B.

(3) Bhoobun Moyee v. Ram Kishore, 10 M.I.A. 279 (312).

(4) Ammanna v. Satyanarayana, 49 M. 636 (645, 646).

(5) Pratap Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 (794) P.C.

(6) Chinnasami v. Ramasamy, 13 I.C. (M.) 7; Rampeari v. Bhogis, 8 I.C. (C.) 713.

(7) Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram, 48 M. 1, F.B.

(8) Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (655, 656), P.C.

sence of the sons's widow as extinguishing her mother-in-law's power,[1] though in them the question of her capacity was not adverted to, and in their later case, they left the question open,[2] though, later on they expressed "complete agreement" with the statement of Wallace, J., in a Madras case[3] to the effect that, "If the only son dies without leaving any one to perpetuate the line, there seems no good reason for restricting the power of his mother to perpetuate it in the only way she can by adopting a son to her own husband."[4] This view of their Lordships though obiter and taken all in all not unequivocal would seem to be in consonance with the general line of their ratiocination.

No revival of determined power.

It is manifest that a widow's power of adoption, if once determined, cannot be revived upon the estate vesting in her. Consequently, where the estate becomes revested in the widow on the death of her son and his widow, she could not adopt to her husband.[5] The result would be the same if instead of dying the son was adopted in another family[6] and his widow re-marries.

Which estate may be divested by Adoption.

49. (1) An adoption by the widow of a sole surviving coparcener has not the effect of devesting his heir.[7]

(2) An adoption to a coparcener may defeat survivorship[8] but it cannot devest inheirtance.[9]

Illustrations.

(a) A and B are two coparceners. A dies and his interest vests in B. A's widow then adopts D. D will devest B to the extent of A's interest that had become vested in him before adoption.[10]

(b) But in the last case, if B had died before D's adoption and his own interest, enlarged with A's, had vested in his heir C, the latter cannot be devested of A's interest that had become merged into B's on whose death C had taken it by inheritance.[11]

Power to give in adoption.

50. A boy may be given in adoption by his natural father,[12] or with his consent, by the mother, except where such consent cannot be obtained owing to his death or disability, provided that he had not at any time expressly or impliedly prohibited her from so doing.[13]

591. Analogous Law.—The following text refer to the persons entitled to give in adoption:—

(1) Madan Mohan v. Purushothama, 41 M. 855, P.C.; approving Ramachandra v. Sham Rao, 26 B. 526 F.B.; Pratap Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 P.C.; Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (658) P.C.

(2) Ib., p. 659.

(3) Tripuramba v. Venkataratnam, 46 M. 423 (433-434).

(4) Amarendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 (664) P.C.

(5) Krishnarav v. Shankarrao, 17 B. 164; Manikyamala v. Nand Kumar, 33 C. 1306; Ramchandra v. Murlidhar, 39 Bom. L.R. 599.

(6) Sinnachami v. Ramasamy, 22 M. L.J. 85; 13 I.C. 7; Rampeari v. Bhogis, 8 I.C. (C.) 713.

(7) Balu v. Sambhaji, I.L.R. 1927 B. 508 F.B. (per Beaumont, C.J. and N.J. Wadia, J.; Rangnekar, J., dissentient; approving Shankar v. Ramrao, 60 B. 89; Dhon v. Rama, 60 B. 83.

(8) Madana v. Purshothama, 38 M. 1105, O.A. 41, M. 855 P.C.; Chandra v. Gojrabai, 14 B. 463.

(9) Babu v. Sambhaji, I.L.R. 1937 B. 508 F.B.; Chandra v. Gojrabai, 14 B. 463.

(10) Vijay Singhji v. Shirsangji, 59 B. 360, P.C.; Amadendra v. Sanatan Singh, 12 Pat. 642 P.C.

(11) Balu v. Sambhaji, I.L.R. (1937) B. 508 (542) F.B.

(12) Narayanswami v. Kuppusami, 11 M. 43 (47).

(13) Jagesh Chandra v. Nrityakali, 30 C. 965.

Vashisth.—"A son, formed of seminal fluids and of blood, proceeds from his father and mother as an effect from its cause; both parents have power to give or sell or desert him."[1] "Let not a woman give or accept a son, unless with the assent of her husband."[2]

Yadnavalkya.—"He whom his father or mother gives in adoption shall be considered as a son given."[3]

As previously explained, children being the property of their father the latter has the right of their disposal, of which adoption is one. After the father, the mother possesses the same right, but subject to control when possible. If, therefore, he is dead or incapable of consenting by loss of reason or otherwise, or if he is permanently absent from home, or if he has entered a religious order, then the mother may, in the absence of any express or implied prohibition from him, give away her son in adoption.[4] But since the father, and if he be dead or otherwise rendered incompetent, the mother are the only relatives entitled to give in adoption, it follows that that right belongs, and can be delegated to no other relation; consequently, a boy who has lost both his parents cannot be adopted.[5]

592. Father's Authority to give in Adoption.—The person who adopts or, with or without his authority, his wife may, in accordance with the rules already set out, take a boy in adoption. But the authority to give remains. Primarily, only the natural father possesses that power. An adoptive father has no right to give his adoptive son in adoption, for the simple reason that a boy who has once been taken in adoption cannot be again adopted.[6] Consequently, if the adoptive father begets a son he may give in adoption this son, but not his adopted son.

593. The right of the father to give is uncontrolled by the mother. Even if she objects, he has still the right to give his son in adoption, for "in the eye of Hindu Law, when a man gives his son in adoption he would seem to exercise a power, more like the power of an absolute proprietor than of a guardian."[7]

His Right Unaffected by Age or Conversion.

594. If a minor father can adopt, or authorize an adoption, there seems no reason why such a father should not be competent to give his son in adoption. The question in each case is whether he had, at the time, attained the age of discretion so as to be able to understand the nature of his act and its effect upon his rights.[8]

595. His conversion to an alien faith, e.g., Mahomedanism,[9] a fortiori Brahmoism,[10] does not affect his paternal right of giving his son in adoption. The fact that he may have, by his conversion, incapacitated himself from performing the religious ceremony, e.g., Datt Homa, is no

(1) Vashisth XV-172, 14 S.B.E., p. 75.

(2) Ib., XV-4; cited in Datt. Mim., I-§§ 15 and 16 (Suth.), p. 4. This is repeated in Mayukh, Ch. IV—Sec. V, § 16.

(3) Yadnavalkya, II-130.

(4) Datt. Ch., 1-§32 (Suth.) p. 115.

(5) Dhanraj v. Soni Bai, 52 C. 482 P.C.

(6) Datt. Mim., 1-§ 30 (Suth.) p. 7: "The same son must not be adopted by two or three persons."

(7) Chitko v. Janaki, 11 B.H.C.R. 199. In Alank v. Fakirchand, 5 Beng. S. R. 418 (420), 7 I.D. (O.S.) 650 (651), the Judge, having questioned the Pandit of the court whether "the assent of the wife of the adopter was necessary to legalize the adoption," received a reply in the negative.

(8) In Jumoona v. Bamasoondari, 1 C. 289 (296) P.C., a minor under 18 was held competent to adopt as well as authorize an adoption. If so, he should be equally competent to give in adoption.

(9) Shamsingh v. Santa Bai, 25 B. 551 (554, 555).

(10) Kusum Kumari v. Satyaranjan, 30 C. 999.

disqualification, since law allows such rituals to be performed vicariously in case of necessity. Even excommunication from caste does not determine the paternal right to give in adoption, unless the terms of the excommunication suspend that right.[1]

596. There is no text declaring that a person suffering from any of the disabilities such as congential leprosy,[2] impotency, blindness, deafness, idiocy or the like has no right to give in adoption,[3] and as the gift of a son is a meritorious act, a father so afflicted would not be debarred from exercising a right which his position and his religious dogma alike justify.

597. Mother's Authority.—While, therefore, the father has an absolute authority, the mother's authority to give is subject to his consent when possible.[4] Consequently, if he is dead,[5] or has emigrated, or entered a religious order,[6] she can give. But these instances are merely illustrative and support the view that, in the absence of the husband, the wife is competent to give her son in adoption,[7] unless the husband has, at any time, expressly or impliedly prohibited it.[8] In other words, in the absence of any such prohibition, she has the presumed authority of her husband in favour of her power.[9] According to the Madras High Court, her implied authority can be curtailed only by an express prohibition of the husband to the contrary.[10] In any case, her right arises from material relation, and not by any presumed delegation from her husband.[11] Consequently, her conversion to an alien faith may not affect her right, though she would forfeit it upon her re-marriage as such re-marriage severs the link she had with her former husband.[12]

598. Who cannot give in Adoption?—It has been already stated that except the parents no other relation has the right to give their child in adoption. Following this principle, the courts have negatived the right of the adoptive father or mother,[13] the stepmother,[14] the paternal grand-

---

(1) Neelawa v. Gurshiddappa, (1937) B. 169.

(2) Anund Mohan v. Gobind, (1864) W.R. 173.

(3) Anund Mohun v. Gobind, (1864) W.R. 173.

(4) Narayan v. Nana, 7 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 153 (167, 168); Bashetiappa v. Shivlingappa, 10 B.H.C.R. 268 (271, 272); Rangubai v. Bhagirathi Bai, 2 B. 377 (379, 380); Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai, Ib., 388 (404) affirmed by F.B. at p. 435; Santappayya v. Rangappayya, 5 M.L.J. 66; Arumachellum v. Iyasamy, (1817) 1 M.S.D. 154; Mhalsabai v. Vithoba, 7 B.H.C.R. (App.) xxvi (xxxi); Hurosoondree v. Chundermoney, (1863) Sev. 938; Jogeshchandra v. Nrityakali, 30 C. 965 (971); Chunnia v. Giridhar Lal, 30 N. 62.

(5) Tarinee v. Sharoda, 11 W.R. 468 (476).

(6) Datt. Mim., 1-§ 31 (Suth.) p. 115, cited, supra, 1 Str. H.L., 82.

(7) 1 Str. H. L. 95; Mhalsabai v. Vithoba, 7 B.H.C.R. (App.) xxvi (xxxi-xxxii); Makund Deb (Raja) v. Sri Jaganath, 2 Pat. 469; Ganpati v. Krishnappa, 73 I.C. (B.) 204.

(8) Mhalsabai v. Vithoba, 7 B.H.C. R. (App.) xxvi (xxxii).

(9) Datt. Ch. Sec. 1 §§ 31, 42; Mit. Ch. 1, Sec. 11, § 9, Colebrooke's note; Mayukh, Ch. IV, Sec. V. § 1; Rangubai v. Bhagirathi, 2 B. 377 (380, 381); Mhalsabai v. Vithoba, 7 B.H.C.R. (App.) xxvi (xxxii).

(10) Narayanaswami v. Kuppusami, 11 M. 43 (47, 48), followed in Gurulingasami v. Ramalakshmamma, 18 M. 53 (58).

(11) Putlabai v. Mahadu, 33 B. 107 (113).

(12) Fakirappa v. Savitreswa, 23 Bom. L.R. 482: 62 I.C. 318 F.B.; Jagesh Chandra v. Nityakali, 30 C. 965; Sheokabai v. Ganpat, 20 N. 57 F.B.; Bahore v. Lookain, 28 N. 52.

(13) Datt. Mim., IV, § 62.

(14) Papamma v. Appa Rau, 16 M. 384 (394).

father,[1] and of the brother,[2] to give in adoption. But the case of the Jains is exceptional, since the adoption of an orphan being locally sanctioned by custom,[3] they are not subject to the same restrictions. On the other hand, while under the Mithila law Dattak adoption is recognized, it is subject to the rule that the father should give his consent to the adoption, thus ruling out an adoption by the widow.[4] But the Mithila law has a customary form of adoption of its own which more than removes the hardship of the narrower rule attached to the Dattak adoption (Ss. 68, 69).

Qualification for Adoption.

51. A boy must possess the following qualifications to be eligible for adoption, namely:—

(1) Except in the case of Shudras, and in the absence of custom, he must belong to the same caste as the parties giving and taking him in an adoption;[5]

(2) He must not be an orphan;[6]

(3) He must not have been adopted by any other person;[7]

(4) Except in Bombay,[8] he must not be married;[9]

(5) Under the Bengal and Benares Schools, he must not have been invested with the sacred thread;[10]

(6) In Dravid, he may be adopted after his investiture with the sacred thread, provided he is not married;[11]

(7) Except in Dravid, if the parties are Dwijas, he should not be the sister's son, daughter's son, and mother's sister's son of the adopter.[12]

Provided that, in the Bombay Presidency, and the Punjab, and amongst the Jains, he may be adopted at any age, even though older than his adopter,[13] is married and has children.[14]

Exception.—Nothing in Clauses (5) and (7) applies to Shudras,[15]

599. Analogous Law.—The scriptural texts,[16] bearing on the subject of this section, have been superseded by the decided cases.

---

(1) Tara Munee v. Devanarayan, 3 Beng. S.R. 516; Moothoosawmy v. Lutchmydavummah, (1852) Mad. S. D. 96; contra in Veeraperumall v. Narrain, 1 M.H.C. 78 (109), dissented from in Collector of Surat v. Dhirsingi, 10 B.H. C.R. 235 (237); Kenchawa v. Ningapa, ib., 265-note.

(2) Collector of Surat v. Dhirsingi, 10 B.H.C.R. 235; Bashetiappa v. Shivlingappa, 10 B.H.C.R. 268 (274); Venkata v. Subhadra, 7 M. 548 (551); Jamnabai v. Raychand, 7 B. 225 (227, 228); Bandaru v. Bandaru, 39 M.L.J. 495; 60 I.C. 141.

(3) Parshotam v. Venichand, 23 Bom. L.R. 227: 61 I.C. 492 (case of an orphan adoption in the Idar State in the Mahikantha agency in the Bombay Presidency).

(4) Chandeshwar v. Bisheshwar, 5 P. 777 (847).

(5) Manu, IX-168, quoted in Mit. Ch. I; See XI, § 9, the word 'Sadrusham' literally means belonging to the same class but interpreted as belonging to the same caste.

(6) Dhanraj v. Soni Bai, 52 C. 482 P.C.; unless sanctioned by custom, as in Jats; Basant Singh v. Brij Raj, 57 A. 494 P.C.

(7) Datt. Mim., 1-§ 30 (Suth.) p. 7.

(8) Mayukh, Ch. IV. Sec. V (Mandlik) lik), p. 58.

(9) Papamma v. Apparau, 16 M. 384; Gangashahai v. Lekhraj, 9 A. 253 and cases cited in comm.

(10) Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj, 9 A. 253; Mukund Deb v. Jagannath, 2 Pat. 469 (480), Custom amongst the Kashmiri Brahmins found. Contra Durga Devi v. Shambhu Nath, 5 L. 200 P.C.

(11) Viraraghava v. Ramalinga, 9 M. 148, F.B.; Papamma v. Apparau, 16 M. 384.

(12) Sakala, cited in Datt. Mim. II-14, 107; Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 (420, 424), Madras excepted, Minakshi v. Ramanada, 11 M. 49 (54) F.B.

(13) Mallappa v. Gangava, 43 B. 209; Gopal v. Vishnu, 23 B. 250 (257), Balabai v. Mahadu, 48 B. 387.

(14) Balabai v. Mahadu, 48 B. 387.

(15) See cases cited in comm.

(16) Quoted in the Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), § 772.

Textual Rules.

The sacred texts enunciate a large number of rules which have long since become obsolete and which the legal text-books record and refute in their historical sequence. It is sufficient to say that the current adoption rules are those stated in the section. Even they are subject to local variations, to be presently noticed.

A short historical retrospect of the archaic law is all that will be attempted here.

Same Caste.

As caste rigidity in the matter of marriage and adoption is but the result of the growing re-action of the last three or four hundred years, prior to which inter-caste marriages were customary and legal, there are no specific rules in the earlier Smritis as to the qualifications of the son to be taken in adoption. The only qualification Manu mentions is that the boy to be adopted must belong to the same caste or class as the adopter.[1]

Katyayan refers to adoption of a son of a different caste but adds that he is entitled to "food and raiment only."[2] Yadnavalkya also refers to such adoptions.[3]

Nand Pandit quotes Vridha Gautam in support of the view that the adopted son should belong to the adopter's Gotra[4] or be a Sapinda,[5] but this rule is obsolete.[6]

600. The text of Sakala lays down:

Sakal.—"A sonless twice-born shohld also adopt a son of a sapinda, next to him a sagotra, in default of whom he should adopt agotra excepting a daughter's son, sister's son and mother's sister's son.[7]

Prohibited relations.

This is construed to mean that, "in the order of selection for adoption, the first choice is directed in favour of a sapinda, failing him a sagotra and in default of these, a stranger, excepting always the specific instances mentioned, viz., a daughter's son, a sister's son, and the mother's sister's son"—these three being strangers and neither "sapindas" nor "sagotras" of the adopter.[8]

Niyog Rules.

601. The rule which has aroused much comment is that incidentally mentioned by Saunaka as an attribute of the adopted son. Describing the ceremony of adoption, he says: "Having kissed the forehead of the child, having adorned with clothes, and so forth, the boy bearing the reflection of a son." This incomplete quotation Nand Pandit subjects to a lengthy comment, concluding that "such person is to be adopted as with the mother of whom, the adopter might have carnal knowledge.[9] He refers to the practice of Niyog and adds that the adopted son must be one as could have been produced on the wife by Niyog, thereby expressly excluding the brother,

(1) IX-§§ 168, 169. Nand Pandit points out that if Manu be followed, the result would be 13 kinds of sons; Datt. Mim., II-§ 55 (Suth.), p. 30.

(2) Datt. Mim., III-§ 3 (Suth.), 42.

(3) Ib.

(4) Datt. Mim., S. II-§ 4 (Suth.), p. 18; § 74 (Suth.), 34.

(5) Datt. Mim., S. II-§ 3 (Suth.), 18.

(6) Gokoolanund v. Woma Daee, 23 W.R. 340, O. A. Uma Doyi v. Gokoolanund, 3 C. 587 P.C.; Babaji v. Bhagirathi Bai, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 701; Dharma v. Ram Krishna, 10 B. 80.

(7) Sakal cited in Datt. Mim., II-14 107; literal translation, quoted in Datt., Ch. 1-10-17, 29; also in Mandlik's H.L. 52; Walbai v. Heerbai, 34 B. 491 (495).

(8) Ramachandra v. Gopal, 32 B. 619; Walbai v. Heerbai, 34 B. 491 (495).

(9) Datt. Mim., II-§ 20 (Suth.), 63.

paternal and maternal uncles, the daughter's son and that of the sister "for they bear not resemblance to a son."[1] The rule has been understood as prohibiting adoption of a person whose mother the adopter could not have married.[2]

602. It has been held applicable only to an adoption by a male, and inapplicable to an adoption by a female to her husband,[3] or any adoption by a Shudra.[4] Even where it is applicable, it is limited to the possibility of a marriage with her when she was a virgin, having reference only to the law of propinquity,[5] without any reference to the law of appointment of Niyog, with reference to which the rule was framed. But as Niyog is now obsolete, the courts have made it a new rule of their own. The rule originally framed was no doubt intended to prevent an incestuous connection between the adoptive father and the natural mother of the boy adopted, in imitation of nature. The rule substituted in its place has the same purpose in view, but since the original rule had reference to the relationship upon marriage, while the rule substituted refers only to the relationship before marriage, it is apparent that the two rules though possessing the same aim, are not in conflict, though they do not completely coincide.

603. But even any of these three, though excepted by the text, may be adopted if permitted by custom, and one such custom in favour of the validity of adoption of a daughter's son being proved, in a case arising in the Umbala District of the Punjab, the Privy Council held it unobjectionable,[6] and even in the case of Brahmins of Southern India, the custom of adopting a sister's or daughter's son has been recognized by the court.[7] And so Strange wrote in 1806 that "in practice, the adoption of a sister's son by persons of all castes is not uncommon."[8] And similarly, the custom of adopting the daughter's son has survived the appointment of a daughter for that purpose.[9]

604. Niyog Rules prohibit adoption of the following relations: the paternal and maternal uncles, the brother, the four first cousins on the paternal and maternal side, the brother-in-law, the sister's son, and the daughter's son. The marriage rules do not exclude adoption of the father's brother's son and the mother's brother's son,[10] but exclude the brother's daughter's son.[11]

605. The Bombay High Court has held the Niyog rules of ineligibility for adoption as merely directory, and not imperative,[12] and that the rule

---

(1) Datt. Mim., II-§ 20 (Suth.), 63; §§ 16-17 (Suth.), p. 63. See also Datt. Ch., S. V-§ 8.

(2) Minakshi v. Ramanada, 11 M. 49; Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412.

(3) Jivani v. Jivu, 2 M.H.C.R. 462; Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15; Minakshi v. Ramanada, 11 M. 49; Gopal v. Hanman, 3 B. 273 (298); Vyas v. Vyas, 24 B. 473.

(4) Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15.

(5) Minakshi v. Ramanada, 11 M. 49.

(6) Rup Narain v. Gopal, 36 C. 780 (795) P.C.

(7) Vayidinada v. Appu, 9 M. 44 F.B.

(8) 2 Str. H.L. 100 (App.). To the same effect, 2 West and Buhler's H.L. (3rd Ed.), pp. 884-888.

(9) 2 West and Buhler's H.L. (3rd Ed.), pp. 884-888, cited with approval; Vayidinada v. Appu, 8 M. 44 (53) F.B.

(10) Minakshi v. Ramanada, 11 M. 49 (54).

(11) Haridas v. Mamath Nath, (1936) C. 1.

(12) Virayya v. Hanumanta, 14 M. 459 (460, 461); Ramachandra v. Gopal, 32 B. 619 (630); Waibai v. Heerbai, 34 B. 491.

that no one can be adopted whose mother the adopter could not have legally married, is confined to the three specific instances, forbidding the adoption of the son of a daughter or of a sister[1] or of mother's sister,[2] though he may also happen to be a son of his father's brother,[3] as the three are expressly excluded by both works on adoption.[4]

606. Persons Eligible for Adoption.—All Schools and courts now agree that the first pre-requisite of eligibility for adoption is that the boy selected must be of the same caste as the adopter.[5] For this purpose, law recognizes only the four primary castes and if the boy and his adopter both belong to any of them, then there is no Shastric impediment in the way of their adoption.[6] This rule is sought to be justified on various grounds, that an adoption being an imitation of nature, and since a son, if born, must belong to the father's caste, so must be the son adopted,[7] or that, since an adopter cannot marry a woman of a different caste, and the fiction of adoption is founded upon the fiction that the adopter has begotten the boy upon his natural mother, therefore, it is necessary that she should be a person who might lawfully have been his wife—a rule which, being pushed to its logical extreme, implies (a) not only that the two must belong to the same caste; but (b) that the two must not be within the prohibited degree of relationship for marriage.[8] But the fact that the Mitakshara recognizes intermarriages between different castes, as lawful,[9] Saunaka recognizes adoption of sons of different castes and Nand Pandit does not explain away this text but recognizes it as expounding the current law of his time[10] shows that the true reason to be found for desuetude of the custom is custom, and that there is no logic behind it.[11] That there can be no adoption of a boy belonging to a different caste is, however, settled, as regards the twice-born, though the Shudras belonging to one sub-caste are permitted both to intermarry and adopt persons of another sub-caste.[12] So the court refused to countenance the adoption of a Brahmin boy by a widow of the Rajbansi Thakur caste.[13] But if the caste is one, the fact that the adoptee's father belonged to the Sadharan Brahmo Samaj is no obstacle to his adoption into an orthodox Hindu family.[14]

(1) Identity of Caste.

---

(1) Subrao v. Radha, 113 I.C. (B.) 491.

(2) Vyas v. Vyas, 24 B. 473 (481); Ramachandra v. Gopal, 32 B. 619; Yamnava v. Laxman, 36 B. 533; Ramakrishna v. Chimnaji, 15 Bom.L.R. 824; Gajanan v. Kashi Nath, 39 B. 410 (419); Ragavendra v. Jayaram, 20 M. 283; contra in Minakshi v. Ramanada, 11 M. 49.

(3) Ramachandra v. Gopal, 32 B. 619; Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 P.C. overruling 17 A. 294 F.B.

(4) Walbai v. Heerbai, 34 B. 491.

(5) Manu, IX-168, cited in Mit. Ch. I; see XI, § 9.

(6) Manu, IX-168; Yadnavalkya II 132; Mitak. Ch. 1, S. XI-§ 9; Mayukh, Ch. V, S. 5 § 4; Datt. Mim. II-§§ 22, 23-25 (Suth.), p. 21; Saunaka, cited ib., § 21; (Suth.), p. 21; Datt. Ch., 1-§§ 12-16.

(7) Mit. Ch. 1, S. XI, § 9; Datt. Mim., II, 74-88.

(8) Sutherland's Synopsis, II-§ 1.

(9) Mit. Ch. 1, Sec. VIII; Dayabhag, Ch. IX.

(10) Datt. Mim., III-§§ 1-3.

(11) Virayya v. Hanumanta, 14 M. 459 (460).

(12) Girish Chandra v. Mhd. Shajde, 25 C.W.N. 634.

(13) Narain Singh v. Shiam Kali, 17 O.C. 186: 25 I.C. 45.

(14) Kusum Kumari v. Satya Ranjan, 30 C. 999 (1009, 1010).

(2) Must not be an Orphan.

607. Secondly, the boy to be adopted must not be an orphan, that is to say, one bereft of both parents, for, in that case, there is no one qualified to give him in adoption[1] (§ 598). And when there is no giving and taking, an adoption cannot be supported on the ground of fuctum valet,[2] and the adoptive father may himself dispute its validity, since there can be no estoppel in fraud of the law[3] (§ 634). But though this is unquestionably the rule, it is subject to custom to the contrary as was found in the case of Dhusars of the Girgaon district of Punjab,[4] or the facts of the Delhi district,[5] or the Nattukottai Chettis in the Madras Presidency.[6]

(3) Must Not be Adopted by Another.

608. Thirdly, since adoption is an imitation of nature, a person cannot be the son of two fathers, even though they be brothers, and his adoption to one disqualifies him for a second adoption.[7] But if his first adoption was invalid, there being no adoption in law, it does not stand in the way of a second adoption.

609. This is now the established view, though Nand Pandit[8] deduces an exception in favour of the adoption of a nephew by several brothers from an instance of such an adoption once having taken place in the mythical age; but his view was not based upon current custom and has not found favour with any text writer. As early as 1822, Sir William Macnaghten combated it in the following words: "A notion seems to have prevailed, that two brothers might adopt the same individual; but this is entirely erroneous. The supposition seems to have proceeded on a misconstruction of the following text of Manu: 'If among several brothers of the whole blood, one have a son born, Manu pronounces them all fathers of the male child by means of that son.'[9] But that text is not meant to authorize the adoption of a nephew even by two or more brothers. The adopted son of one brother would, of course, offer up oblations to the ancestors of all, and so far would perform the office of a son to them also; but he would not take the estate of his adopting father's brothers, in the event of their having any nearer heir."[10]

(4) Must not be married, Proviso, Cl. 7.

610. Much emphasis was laid in the earlier cases upon the fact that after a certain age, and the performance of certain ceremonies, such as tonsure in the natural family, the boy passes the age of his eligibility

---

(1) Dhanraj v. Soni Bai, 52 C. 482 P.C.; Balawantrao v. Bayabai, 6 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 83; Bashetiappa v. Shivlingappa, 10 B.H.C.R. 268; Srinivas v. Balwant, 37 B. 513 (518); Rajambal v. Shanmuga, (1922) M.W.N. 481; Sakhbir Singh v. Mangisar Rao, 49 A. 302. But contra the fat custom, Basant Singh v. Brij Raj, 57 A. 494 P.C.

(2) Bandaru v. Bandaru, 39 M.L.J. 495; Soni Bai v. Dhanraj, 56 I.C. (N.) 620.

(3) Rajambal v. Shanmuga, (1922) M.W.N. 481.

(4) Ramkishore v. Jainarayan, 49 C. 120 P.C.

(5) Basant Singh v. Brij Raj, 57 A. 494 P.C.

(6) Subramanian v. Somasundaram, 59 M. 1064.

(7) Dattak Mimansa, I-§§ 30-32, II-§ 40, Macn.H.L. (4th Ed.), p. 65.

(8) Dattak Mimansa, II-§§ 40-47.

(9) Cited in 3 Dig., p. 266.

(10) Macnaghten's H.L. (4th Ed.), p. 65; see also Mayne's H. L. (9th Ed.), § 149, p. 291.

for adoption. But these have all been superseded by later authorities to the contrary, summarized in the texts.[1]

Madras view.

611. In the cases cited, it was pointed out that even in the case of Shudras marriage was a bar to adoption,[2] and this has been the law even in Madras where, however, there is no restriction as to age, so much so that if the person is unmarried, the fact that he is aged 40 is no bar to adoption, provided he is a sapinda.[3] The prohibition of the adoption of a married man amongst the Lingayats of Dharwar still holds good, though Dharwar has been transferred to the Bombay Presidency.[4] That a married man cannot be adopted has also been decided in Allahabad[5] and in Nagpur[6] and is now the established doctrine of the Benares School applicable alike to the regenerate castes[7] and the Shudras[8] and even to the Jains[9] amongst whom, however, the custom of adoption of married men is not unknown and has been found proved in several cases.[10]

Bombay Excepted.

612. But in the Bombay Presidency, even marriage is no bar to an adoption,[11] and is in accordance both with the written law,[12] and the prevailing usuage,[13] which sanctions such adoptions even where the married man is aged 45 and is himself the father of a son.[14] Where a father becomes the son of another person, the latter acquires no right of accession in his adoptee's son who continues to retain his old gotra and his right of inheritance in the family of his birth. In other words, by his adoption into another family, the father alone goes out of the family, but he does not drag with him his son,[15] though he would necessarily have to take with him his wife who completes his individuality, and who, therefore, like her husband acquires his new gotra.[16]

Status of Son and Wife of the Adoptee.

---

(1) For these cases see Gour's Hindu Code (3rd Ed.) §§ 781, 782, pp. 421, 422.

(2) Annasami v. Sivagamy, 1 Mad. D. 106; Chetticolum v. Vencatachella, (1823) M. S. D. A. 406; Sreenevassein v. Sashymmal, (1859) Mad. D. 118; Vythilinga v. Vijayathammal, 6 M. 43; Pichuvayyan v. Subbayyan, 13 M. 128.

(3) Papamma v. Apparau, 15 M. 384.

(4) Somasekhara v. Mahadeva, 53 M. 297.

(5) Gangasahai v. Lekhraj, 9 A. 253; Damodarji v. Collector of Banda, 7 A. L.J. 927; Phul Chand v. Gobardhan, (1929) A. 739, followed in Manika Bai v. Gokuldas, 49 B. 520 (522).

(6) Tejabai v. Mohanlal, 11 C.P.L. R. 56; Kanhyalal v. Satiya, 1 N.L.R. 1.

(7) Bishunath v. Sheo Bahadur, (1927) O. 265.

(8) Damodarji v. Collector of Banda, 7 A.L.J. 927; Jankiram v. Venkiah, 10 M.L.J. 92 : 11 I.C. 883; Hira v. Hardab Singh, (1922) P.L.R. 47: 68 I.C. (L.) 763.

(9) Rupchand v. Jambuprasad, 32 A. 247 P.C. in which their Lordships, however, confined their decision to the custom found not proved in that case.

(10) Manoharlal v. Banarsidas, 29 A. 495.

(11) Mhalsabai v. Vithoba, 7 B.H. C. R. (App.) 26; Nathaji v. Hari, 8 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 67; Dharma v. Ramkrishna, 10 B. 80. Query as to Brahmins in Sadashiv v. Hari, 11 B.H.C.R. 190; Lakshamappa v. Ramava, 12 B.H.C. R. 364.

(12) Mayukh, Ch. IV, Sec. V (Mandlik), p. 58.

(13) Brijbhukhanji v. Gookulootanji, 1 Borr. 181.

(14) Gopal v. Vishnu, 23 B. 250; Kalgavada v. Somappa, 33 B. 669; Balabai v. Mahadu, 48 B. 387.

(15) Kalgavada v. Somappa, 33 B. 669; followed in Manika Bai v. Gokuldas, 49 B. 520 (522).

(16) Ib., p. 687.

(5) Adoption Before Investiture in Bengal and Benares.
(6) But after Investiture valid in Madras.

613. The rule that in the case of the first three castes, the boy to be adopted must not have donned the sacred thread is enforced only by the Benares[1] and Bengal[2] schools, the Dravid and the Bombay schools permitting such adoptions, the former only on condition that the adoptee is not married,[3] which is the rule everywhere, except in Bombay and the Punjab. So dealing with the case of a Kshatriya adoption, Mahmud, J., held, "That according to the Hindu Law of adoption as prevalent in the Benares school, the performance of the Upanayan[4] or the ceremony of the investiture of the sacred thread, followed by the Gayatri, representing as it does the sacred birth of a boy and the beginning of his education in the duties of his tribe as prescribed by Manu, is the ultimate limit when a valid adoption in the Dattak form can take place."[5] This doctrine has no application to the Shudras, for in their case the only ceremony of consequence in its theological and legal aspect in Hindu Law, is the ceremony of marriage.[6]

Shudras excepted.

Age for Investiture.

614. Now, since the ceremony of investiture, as already stated, may be performed in the case of Brahmins at any time between the 8th and 16th year, that of a Kshatriya between the 11th and the 22nd year and that of a Vaishya between the 12th and 24th year, it follows that this is the extreme age limit for the performance of the investiture as also for adoption.[7] But should the boy be for any reason not invested with the sacred thread beyond this age, there appears to be no legal impediment to his adoption before marriage, for if his eligibility is determined by the Upanayan, it cannot be assumed where it has not been in fact performed, or, where though performed in fact, it is found to be invalid in law, being not in conformity with the customary ritual.[8] But here again, custom may override the law and such custom was found proved in the case of a Kashmiri Brahmin whose adoption at 17, after his Upanayan, was held valid, because it was so treated by the caste and not questioned for a period of 17 years.[9]

(7) Adoption of Prohibited Relations.

615. The texts favour the adoption of near relations, sapindas first, gotrajas next, and strangers last, if the first two are not available.[10] These injunctions have been held to be only monitory and not mandatory. Consequently, the adopter is free to choose any boy from amongst his caste

---

(1) Ganga Sahai v. Lakhraj, 9 A. 253; Makund Deb v. Jagannath, 2 Pat. 469 (480).

(2) Makunda Deb v. Jagannath, 2 Pat. 469: 72 I.C. 230.

(3) Viraragava v. Ramalinga, 9 M. 148 F.B.; Pichumayyan v. Subhayan, 13 M. 128; but see Visva Sundara v. Soma Sundara, 43 M. 876.

(4) Lit. "up" near and "nayan" going, i.e., "going near the preceptor" for commencement of his Vedic studies. All men are born Shudras and the ceremony of Upanayan symbolized by the investiture of the sacred thread is regarded as a second birth converting a Shudra into a Dwija or twice-born. It marks the termination of infancy and the commencement of the term of studentship.

(5) Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj, 9 A. 253 (328) following on this point Keerutnarain v. Bhoobunesree, (1859) S.D.A. B. 161; Ramkishore v. Bhoobunmoyee, (1859) S.D.A.B., p. 229 (cited supra).

(6) Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj, 9 All. 253 at p. 328.

(7) Manu, II, §§ 36-38.

(8) Vadrevu v. Ryali, 43 M. 876; Chandeshwar v. Bisheshwar, 5 Pat. 777.

(9) Durga Devi v. Shambu Nath, 5 L. 200 P.C.

(10) See Sakala cited in analogous law.

fellows. And amongst these last, the Privy Council have now settled that since the texts of Sakal and Saunak, cited with approval in the two Hindu treatises on adoption,[1] expressly prohibit the adoption of the sons of one's daughter, sister and mother's sister, these cannot be adopted,[2] nor can such adoption be supported by recourse to the doctrine of factum valet.[3]

616. There remains the question whether these texts equally prohibit the adoption of other relations with whose mother the adopter could not have at any time contracted a legal marriage. The Privy Council had not to decide, and refrained from deciding, this general question as the case before them related to the adoption of a mother's sister's son, which is expressly prohibited, and as such, their Lordships felt bound to follow the text, supported as it was by precedents and the opinion of text writers. The question, therefore, still remains whether the prohibition is specifically confined to the specified relations, or is more general, as stated in the rule. (§§ 604-609).

617. But the texts of both the Smritis and Nand Pandit, as also the reflection metaphor and the Niyog rules and their deductions have been overridden by the march of custom which, as was to be expected, has been more active in the matter of sonship and inheritance than in any other branch of law, and the desire of a man to yield to his natural instinct of affection, rather than to the fine disquisitions of the logician, have made the law of adoption more a customary than a textual law, which, as in the Mithila, permits the son to adopt his own father. (Ss. 68, 69).

618. One thing is certain that whether it be the relic of the Niyog rules, or its apparent incongruity, or the force of custom, the same relation may be adopted in one place, or under one school of law, though his adoption in another place, or under another school of law, is held to be invalid.

Rule Inapplicable to Shudras.

619. The rule has, in any case, no application to Shudras.[4] They are expressly excepted in the very texts which are held to denounce the rule.

Southern India also excepted.

620. Nor has it any force in Southern India,[5] where the adoption of a brother's son,[6] a brother's daughter's son,[7] or of a daughter's son, or a sister's son, are locally customary.[8]

Daughter's Son.

621. Even the above express text has not received universal acceptance. For while the prohibition of adoption of a daughter's son is now accepted as the general rule of Hindu Law,[9] deviation from it is permitted by custom.[10] While

---

(1) See texts already cited § 772.
(2) Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 (420-424) P.C.; Walbai v. Heerbai, 34 B. 491.
(3) Gopal v. Hanmant, 3 B. 273 (293).
(4) Nunkoo Singh v. Purm Dhun Singh, 12 W.R. 356; Phundo v. Janginath, 15 A. 327; Chinna v. Pedda, 1 M. 62.
(5) Minakshi v. Ramanada, 11 M. 49 (54) F.B.
(6) Soorta v. Kanaka, 43 M. 867 (Kshatriyas of South Kanara).
(7) Vadrevu v. Ryali, 43 M. 876 (Brahmins of the Andhra or Telugu portion of the Madras Presidency).
(8) Jageshwar v. Pandurang, (1924) N. 73.
(9) Gopal v. Hanmant, 3 B. 273 (293).
(10) Rup Narain v. Gopal Devi, 36 C. 380 P.C.

the rule has been given effect to in the Benares school,[1] the contrary has become customary in the Southern Mahratta country,[2] the Punjab[3] and amongst the Havik Brahmins of Kanara,[4] the Nambudri Brahmins of Malabar[5] and amongst the Brahmins generally in the Tanjore, Trichinopoly and Tinnevelly districts of Southern India.[6]

Sister's Son.

622. The same view holds good in the case of a sister's son, prohibition being the rule and permission an exception, when justified by custom.[7] Such custom was proved to exist amongst the Bhora Brahmins of the United Provinces,[8] though not amongst the other Brahmins,[9] and among the agricultural Khatris of the Punjab,[10] and the Vaishyas of Bombay[11] and even the Brahmins of Nagpur,[12] and Southern India.[13] But in the Andhra country, as in Bengal, the normal rule holds good.[14] As Kayasthas are Shudras, they are free to adopt a sister's son.[15]

Sister's Son's Son.

But there is no legal prohibition against the adoption of a sister's son's son, and he may be validly adopted, even though it may amount to a breach of caste custom.[16]

Mother's Sister's Son.

623. So the prohibition of adoption of a mother's sister's son being covered by an express text, the prohibition is the rule and extended over to one though he may happen to be also his father's brother's son,[17] but an exception has been allowed in the case of Purbia Kurmis, who though they call themselves Purbia Kshatriyas, do not really belong to the regenerate caste.[18] In this case the court upheld the adoption of the father's sister's grandson.

Brother and Step-brother.

624. Valid Adoptions.—Nand Pandit expressly excludes the brother and both the paternal and maternal uncles from adoption.[19] The Noyog rules exclude both the brother and the step-brother, but their adoption, though not general, is, nevertheless, not unknown. Steele infers that a younger brother may be adopted by an elder brother because the Ramayan

---

(1) Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 (418) P.C.

(2) Bai Nani v. Chunilal, 22 B. 973 (976); Sundrabai v. Hanmant, 56 B. 298.

(3) Rup Narain v. Gopal Devi, 36 C. 780 P.C.; contra in Baij Nath v. Shamboo, (1908) P.W.R. 53; Parmanand v. Sheocharan, 2 L. 69 (Amritsar Khatri case).

(4) Gowri v. Shivaram, (1894) B.P. J. 30.

(5) Vishnu v. Krishnan, 7 M. 3.

(6) Vayidinada v. Appu, 9 M. 44 F. B.; Appayya v. Vengu, 15 M.L.J. 211.

(7) Mansa Ram v. Sundar, 14 A. 53; Sundar v. Parbati, 12 A. 51 P.C.

(8) Hansa Ram v. Sundar, 14 A. 53.

(9) Parbati v. Sundar, 8 A. 1.

(10) Sobha Mal v. Nanakchand, (1911) P.L.R. 16: 9 I.C. 36.

(11) Ganpatrav v. Vithoba, 4 B.H.C. R. (A.C.) 138.

(12) Jageshwar v. Pandurang, (1924) N. 73.

(13) Vayidinada v. Appu, 9 M. 44 F. B.

(14) Narasamma v. Balaramcharlu, 1 M.H.C.R. 470.

(15) Rajcoomar Lall v. Bissessur, 10 C. 688; Tira v. Shibhu, 6 L.L.J. 442; but see § 308; Rajendra v. Gopal, 9 Pat. L.J. 123.

(16) Sheopujan v. Kanog Cir, 55 I.C. (A.) 652.

(17) Walbai v. Heerbai, 34 B. 491; Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 P.C.

(18) Jivanlal v. Kallumal, 28 A. 170.

(19) Datt. Mim. V-17 (Suth.), p. 63.

speaks of the latter as "in the place of the father."[1] But the Madras High Court condemned the adoption of a brother and a step-brother, though it held that the prohibition of the adoption of a half-brother had nothing to do with the possibility of a legal marriage between the son and his step-mother in her virgin state.[2] But such adoption was held valid in a Bombay case on the ground that he was not one of the relations expressly prohibited by Nand Pandit.[3] It will be, of course, valid amongst Shudras,[4] who are expressly exempted from the narrow texts. Whatever may be the established usage as regards the adoption of a younger brother, there can be no doubt that the latter cannot adopt his elder brother. Such a question was categorically put to the Pandit who opined that according to the doctrine of Saunaka, stated in the Dattak Mimansa, an elder brother, an uncle, etc., cannot become a son.[5]

Uncle.

625. The ineligibility of the uncle, both paternal and maternal, was incidentally declared by the Pandit in the case last cited. They stand in loco parentis to their nephew, who cannot turn the tables upon them by becoming their adoptive father. Moreover, the restriction as to age would in most cases prevent their adoption, except amongst the Jains in Bombay, and in the Punjab, even where the metaphor has not probably yet spent its force. Such however, appears to be the case in Bombay where the Courts have upheld the adoption of the father's first cousin, holding the rule of incongruity inapplicable.[6] For the same reason reason there is nothing to prevent a man from adopting a son older than himself.[7]

Brother's or Cousin's Son or Grand-nephew.

626. Of all relations, both the Smritis and later texts commend the adoption of a brother's son,[8] and even on the Niyog rule, the adoption of the latter's son is not repugnant to Hindu Law, since no rule prevented the marriage of the adopter with his nephew's wife when a virgin.[9] So there is nothing illegal in the adoption of a cousin's grandson.[10]

Wife's Brother.

627. The adoption of a wife's brother is legal, and its legality has been judicially affirmed,[11] and the legality of his son's adoption by his sister is settled by the Privy Council[12] in the case of a Brahmin family of the

(1) Steele's L.C., p. 44.

(2) Sriramalu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15, followed in Rajendra v. Gopal Prasad, 7 Pat. 245 (250).

(3) Gajanan v. Kashi Nath, 39 B. 410 (419); Shripad v. Vithal, 49 B. 615.

(4) Phundo v. Jangi Nath, 15 A. 327.

(5) Rumjeet Singh v. Narain Singh, 2 Beng.S.R. 315, 6 I.D. (O.S.) 597.

(6) Mallappa v. Gangava, 43 B. 309.

(7) Balabai v. Mahadu, 48 B. 387.

(8) Wooma Daee v. Gokulanand, 3 C. 587 (597, 598) P.C., in which the effect of Datt. Mim., 1, 28-31, 67, 74 and Datt. Ch., 1-20-22, 27, 28, enjoining the adoption of a brother's son was held to be merely directory and not imperative, and in any case condoned by application of the maxim Factum Valet (Ib., p. 601).

(9) Morun v. Bijoy Kishto, W.R. (S.N.) F.B. 121 (122); Haran Chunder v. Hurro Mohun, 6 C. 41; Virayya v. Hanumanta, 14 M. 459.

(10) Morun v. Bijoy, W.R. (S.N.) F.B. 121 (122), explained in Haran Chunder v. Hurro Mohun, 6 C. 41 (47).

(11) Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15; Roop Shunker v. Shunkerjee, 2 Borr. 662; Kristniengar v. Vanammalay, (1856) Mad. Dec. 213; Rumganaigum v. Namesevoya, (1891) Mad. Dec. 94; Sarup Singh v. Jassi, (1875) P.R. 22.

(12) Puttu Lal v. Parbati, 37 A. 359 P.C.; Nani v. Chuni Lal, 22 B. 973; Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 51; Jaisinghpaul v. Bijaypal, 2 A.L.J. 36 (46), distinguishing contra in Batas Koer v. Lachman Singh, 7 N.W.P.H.C.R. 117 as obiter.

United Provinces. In that case, one Gandharv had authorized his widow Parbati to take in adoption her brother's son, which she did. The High Court upheld it,[1] and its decision was not only affirmed, on appeal by the Privy Council,[2] but their observations shake to its very foundation the obsolete Niyog rule; and its substituted analogue, so far as that rule was attempted to be extended to an adoption by the widow. Their Lordships further expressed their approval of two cases decided by the Bombay[3] and Madras High Court,[4] in the latter of which the adoption was by the husband, which in their Lordships' view, would have made no difference.

Wife's Brother's Son or Grandson.

629. So the adoption of a brother's daughter's son has become established as a rule in the Punjab, so that its validity is presumed,[5] while it is customary in Southern India,[6] though it is held invalid in Bengal.[7]

Brother's Daughter's Son.

630. So the adoption by a man of his wife's sister's daughter's son has been held valid in Madras as would be a marriage between him and his adoptees' mother[8]

Wife's Sister's Daughter's Son.

631. Of the rest, while the Madras and the Patna Courts hold the adoption of a brother and step brother invalid,[9] the Bombay High Court upheld it on the ground that it is not one of the relations expressly prohibited by Nand Pandit[10] and that in any case, it is valid amongst Shudras, who are expressly exempted from the narrow texts.[11] The same court upheld the adoption of the father's first cousin[12] and there is no objection to the adoption of the paternal[13] or maternal uncle's son, or even son's son[14] or the maternal aunt's daughter's son.[15]

Other Adoptions.

52. (1) No adoption is complete without the corporal delivery of the adoptee to the adopter with a declaration by the person, delivering him, that he delivers him in adoption; and of the adopter, that he so accepts him.[16]

Ceremony of Adoption.

(2) Provided, that they have also performed such other act or ceremonies as may be required by law, or are customary to that end.[17]

---

(1) Jai Singh v. Bijai, 27 A. 417.
(2) Puttu Lal v. Parbati, 27 A. 359 P.C. approving Jai Singh v. Bijai, 27 A. 417; Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15; Bai Nani v. Chunilal, 22 B. 973, overruling contra in Battas Kuar v. Lachman, 7 N.W.P.H.C.R. 117.
(3) Bai Nani v. Chunilal, 22 B. 973.
(4) Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15.
(5) Chuttan v. Ramchand, (1904) P. R. 86.
(6) Appayya v. Vengu, 15 M.L.J. 211.
(7) Haridas v. Manmotho Nath, 41 C. W.N. 322.
(8) Ragavendra v. Jayaram, 20 M. 283.
(9) Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15, followed in Rajendra v. Gopal Prasad, 7 Pat. 245 (250).
(10) Gajanan v. Kashi Nath, 39 B. 410 (419); Shripad v. Vithal, 49 B. 615.
(11) Phundo v. Jangi Nath, 15 A. 327.
(12) Balabai v. Mahadu, 48 B. 387.
(13) Buta Singh v. Dial Singh, (1902) P.R. 67.
(14) Virayya v. Hanumanta, 14 M. 459 (461); Haranchunder v. Hurromohun, 6 C. 14.
(15) Venkata v. Subhadra, 7 M. 548.
(16) Shoshinath v. Krishna, 6 C. 381 (389) P.C.; Govindayyar v. Dorasami, 11 M. 5 (7) F.B.
(17) Veerapermal v. Naraina, 1 Str. Notes 117, cited in Singamma v. Vinga Muri, 4 M.H.C.R. 165 (167).

(3) Provided further, that if the parties thereto belong to any of the regenerate castes, and do not belong to the same Gotra, they must also perform the ceremony of Datt Homa.[1]

(4) But non-performance of the Datt Homa[2] or of the further ceremonies mentioned in clause (2)[3] will not invalidate an adoption made as provided in clause (1) unless their performance is regarded by the caste as of the essence of the ceremony of adoption.

Explanation.—No delivery and its acceptance is valid unless the parties thereto were capable of understanding the nature of the act and its effect upon their rights.[4]

Illustrations.

(a) Amongst Nambudris an adoption is performed by burning a pan of sacred grass. A is a Nambudri. He adopts B without burning such grass. It is a question of fact whether without such burning, the adoption is complete.

(b) An adoption by a widow, subject to the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) must be in writing attested, as in the case of a will, and registered. A is such widow. She performs the ceremony of giving and taking but omits to execute a registered deed of adoption. The adoption is invalid.

632. Analogous Law.—The following texts refer to the necessary ceremonies for adoption:—

Vashisth.—"He who desires to adopt a son, shall assemble his kinsmen, announce his intention to the king, make burnt offerings, in the middle of the house, reciting the Vyahriti and take as a son a non-remote kinsmen, and visit the nearest among his relatives."[5]

Dattak Mimansa.—"The filial relation of these five sons proceeds from adoption only, with observance of the form of either Vasisth or Saunaka, not otherwise."[6]

"It is therefore, established that the filial relation of adopted son is occasioned only by the proper ceremonies of gift, acceptance, a burnt sacrifice and so forth. Should either be wanting, the filial relation even fails."[7]

Yama.—"The Homa or the like ceremony is not necessary in the case of adoption of the daughter's or the brother's son; by the verbal gift and acceptance alone, that is accomplished: that is decided by Lord Yama."[8]

633. Giving and Taking.—The indispensable and irreducible ceremony necessary to complete an adoption is that of the physical giving and taking, performed as stated in clause (1).[9] It may be supplemented, but cannot be substituted, by another ceremony. As the Privy Council observed: "According to Hindu usage, which the courts should accept as governing the law, the giving and taking ought to take place by the father handing over the child to the adoptive mother, and the adoptive mother

Clause (1).

(1) Shoshinath v. Krishna, 6 C. 381 P.C.; Bal v. Shrinivas, 39 B. 441 P.C.

(2) Singaramma v. Vinjamuri, 4 M.H.C.R. 165; Govindayyar v. Dorasami, 11 M. 5 F.B.; cited with approval in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas, 39 B. 441 (445) P.C.; Valubai v. Govind, 24 B. 218.

(3) E.g., Putreshti Yag, held not essential, Sheo Lotan v. Bhirgun, 2 Pat.L.J. 481 : 41 I.C. 875.

(4) See S. 50 and Comm.

(5) Vashisth, XV-6, 14 S.B.E. pp. 75, 76, cited in Datt. Mim., II-13, 14 (Suth.), pp. 19, 20; Datt. Ch. II-11 (Suth.), p. 116.

(6) Datt. Mim. V-50 (Suth.) 70.

(7) Ib., V-56 (Suth.) 71; Datt. Ch. II-1-13 (Suth.), pp. 116, 117.

(8) Quoted and commented on in Valubai v. Govind, 24 B. 218 (222).

(9) Shoshinath v. Krishna, 6 C. 381 (389) P.C.; Bireswar v. Ardha Chander, 19 C. 452 (460, 461) P.C.; Krishna v. Broja, 25 C.W.N. 403; Govindayyar v. Dorasami, 11 M. 5 (7) F.B.; Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti, 13 M. 214 (218, 219); Balak Ram v. Nannu Mal, 11 L. 503; Ganga Ram v. Amir Chand, 50 I.C. (P.) 355; Shankar v. Savitri, 50 I.C. (N.) 599; Ishwari Prasad v. Rai Hari Prasad, (1927) Pat. 14.

declaring that she accepts the child in adoption."[1] The Madras Full Bench held this decision "as an authority for the proposition that any overt act is not sufficient but that there must be corporal delivery of the child by a person competent to give to a person competent to take, accompanied by the declaration on the one side, "I give the child in adoption," and on the other. "I take the child in adoption."[2]

634. Such gift and acceptance are not merely necessary to furnish evidence of adoption but constitute its essential ceremony. Consequently, even if the parties have executed and received a formal and duly registered deed of adoption evidencing such an intention, it is not sufficient to constitute a legal adoption, unless there is the overt act of corporal delivery of the child, and its acceptance coupled with a declaration that the one was giving and the other receiving him in adoption.[3] This is the sole operative ceremony, indispensable to all adoptions, whether of the twice-born or of the Shudras,[4] whether in the Saste-ridden Upper India, or the custom-ridden Punjab. Its absence cannot be made good by application of the doctrine of factum valet,[5] unless perhaps the adoptee's position has been, in consequence, altered to his disadvantage by reason of his so called adoption (§§ 863-868),[6] though amongst the Jains, amongst whom the adoption of grown-up and married men has become customary, corporal delivery would, at times, be very awkward, and is, therefore, not insisted upon.[7]

Clause (2).

635. As regards the performance of other ceremonies, they are important but not equally so. If they are customary, they will be performed as a matter of course by parties who are interested in seeing that no ceremony, customary in their caste, is omitted. But if through inadvertence or otherwise they are omitted, it would not necessarily vitiate an adoption, if the operative ceremony mentioned in clause (1) is completed. As Sir Thomas Strange observed: "The operative part of the ceremony seems to be the giving and receiving, the rest is matter of customary solemnity, of decorum, of charity and convivality varying under different circumstances in different parts of India."[8] Amongst Marwadis, one such ceremony, both customary and regarded as essential, is the tying of the turban of the adoptive father and seating the boy on his guddi (padded seat). Presents called tilak are also made to the newly made son by the relatives and friends of the adopter.

---

(1) Shoshinath v. Krishna, 6 C. 381 (389) P.C.

(2) Govindayyar v. Dorasami, 11 M. 5 (7) F.B.

(3) Kenchawa v. Ninjupa, 10 B.H. C.R. 265-note; Singamma v. Vinjamuri, 4 M.H.C.R. 165 (167), following Veeraperumal v. Naraina, 1 Str. Notes 117 (quoted ib., p. 167).

(4) Indromani v. Behari Lal, 5 C. 770 P.C.; Shoshinath v. Krishna, 6 C. 381 P.C. (Shudra adoption); Bireswar v. Ardha Chander, 19 C. 452 P. C. (Brahmins); Kuppusami v. Venkata Lakshmi, 18 M.L.T. 434 : 31 I.C. 855 (Shudra); Sheolatan v. Bhirgaon, 2 Pat. L.J. 481 : 41 I.C. 375; Sukumari v. Ananta, 28 C. 168; Vishvanath v. Kalibai, 55 B. 103 (adoption deed alone insufficient).

(5) Bandaru v. Bandaru, 39 M.L.J. 495; Soni Bai v. Dhanraj, 56 I.C. (N.) 620.

(6) Vaithilingam v. Murugalan, 37 M. 529 (581).

(7) Jeoraj v. Sheo Kuar, 60 I.C. (N.) 65, O.A. Sheo Kuar v. Jeoraj, 25 C.W.N. 273 P.C.; Govinda v. Rindabai, 49 B. 515.

(8) Veerapermal v. Naraina, Str. Notes 117, cited in Singamma v. Vinga Muri, 4 M.H.C.R. 165 (167).

636. One such ceremony is the Putreshti Yag which is usually performed by the twice-born, but it has been held to be a matter of form and not essential to an adoption.[1]

Putreshti Yag.

637. But the performance of the Datt Homa stands on a different footing. Datt Homa is the service performed by the burning of clarified butter, which is offered as a sacrifice to fire by way of religious propitiation or oblation. The Privy Council have recently affirmed the view previously maintained in several cases that the performance of this ceremony is not necessary where the two families belong to the same Gotra.[2] Their Lordships, however, refrained from deciding the general question as to the necessity of the ceremony of Datt Homa to complete an adoption, decided in the two cases of the Madras High Court, which, however, they cited with apparent approval, "being of value as containing a careful study of the authorities and affirming that the ceremony of Datt Homa is not essential to a valid adoption among Brahmins in Southern India."[3] In so holding they adopted both the reasons as well as the findings of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., in the undernoted case[4] in which, though a Maratha Brahmin case, the learned Judge relied, not only upon the stare decisis but on the text of Yama, already cited, which expressly dispenses with this ceremony in the case of the relations, because they are of the same Gotra and which furnishes a more general rule than that declared in the section.

Clause (3) Datt Homa.

638. There is no case in which the non-performance of Datt Homa has invalidated an adoption; and since the question has been canvassed by the courts for over a century, it may be safely asserted that, however necessary may be this Homa to a twice-born, its non-performance would not seriously shake the legality of an adoption[5] a fortiori, the non-performance of the Putreshti Yag (or sacrifice for male issue).[6]

Clause (4).

639. In the case of a Shudra, it is, of course, both inadmissible and unnecessary.[7] And in the case of the Dwijas, besides the deccan Brahmin Sagotras,[8] which include those of the Drivid country,[9] it has been held that Datt Homa is not necessary to complete an adoption. This exemption has been held to extend to all Brahmins,[10] and also in the case of Kshatriyas in Madras.[11] Datt Homa may be performed

(1) Sheo Lotan v. Bhirgan, 2 Pat. L. J. 481 : 41 I.C. 375, contra in Luchmun v. Mohun Lall, 16 W.R. 179, in which Putresti Yag is said to have been an error for Datt Homa.—Sarkar's Adoption, p. 383.

(2) Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas, 39 B. 441 (463- 467) P.C., citing Singamma v. Vinjamuri, 4 M.H.C.R. 165; Govindayyar v. Dorasami, 11 M. 5, F.B. and following Valubai v. Govind, 24 B. 218 (221).

(3) Singamma v. Vinjamuri, 4 M.H. C.R. 165; Govindayyar v. Dorasami, 11 M. 5 F.B., cited in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas, 39 B. 441 (455) P.C.

(4) Valubai v. Gobind, 24 B. 218 (221).

(5) Retki v. Lakpati, 20 C.W.N. 19 (25); Makund Deb v. Jagannath, 2 Pat. 469 (482).

(6) Asita v. Nirode Mohan, 20 C.W. N. 901; Makund Deb v. Jagannath, 2 Pat. 469 (482, 483).

(7) Thangathanni v. Ramu, 5 M. 358.

(8) Atma Ram v. Madho Rao, 6 A. 276 F.B.; Valubai v. Gobind, 24 B. 218 (221), followed in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Srinivas, 39 B. 441 (465) P.C.

(9) Vedavalli v. Mangamma, 27 M. 538.

(10) Singamma v. Vinjamuri, 4 M.H. C.R. 165.

(11) Chandra Mala v. Muktamala, 6 M. 20.

later on[1] and by a delegate[2] while it is wholly unnecessary in the Punjab,[3] and amongst the Agarwal Banias of the United Provinces.[4]

Motive Immaterial.

53. An adoption by a woman cannot be impugned on the ground that,

(a) it was made from improper motives and not with a view to confer spiritual benefit upon her husband;[5]

(b) or that the widow had retained a part of the estate for herself, for the purpose of her own maintenance, or for that of discharging her debts;[6]

(c) or that it was conditional upon the adopted son discharging her debts.[7]

Factum Valet.

54. (1) No adoption may be set aside for a mere irregularity or for non-observance of a form not essential to its validity[8]

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing rule, it may not be set aside on any of the following grounds, namely:—

(a) That the adopted son was the eldest,[9] the youngest[10] or the only son of his father;[11]

(b) That he was given in adoption after his investiture with the sacred thread;[12]

(c) That the adoptee was older than the adopter;[13]

(d) That the adoption was made during pollution;[14] or

(e) That the adoption was made by an untonsured widow.[15]

640. Analogous Law.—As regards the adoption of an only son, the following text discourages or forbids it.

Vashisth.—"An only son should not be given nor accepted, for he is to continue the line of his ancestors."[16]

---

(1) Subbarayar v. Subbammal, 21 M. 497.

(2) Lakshmi Bai v. Ramachandra, 22 B. 590.

(3) Dunanchand v. Dwaruknath, (1913) P.L.R. 271: 20 I.C. 303.

(4) Gangabai v. Gopaldas, 20 O.C. 356.

(5) Vijaysinghji v. Shivsangji, 59 B. 360 P.C.

(6) Krishnayya v. Surya Rao, (1935) P.C. 190.

(7) Ib., (195) But see Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 (190, 191); Ramchandra v. Mulji, 22 B. 558 (567) F.B.; Maraji of Kolapur v. Sundaram, 48 M. 1 (65).

(8) Shri Balusu v. Shri Balusu, 22 M. 308 (423) See the doctrine of factum valet discussed in comms.

(9) The bar stated in Manu, IX-109; Dattak Didhili cited in Sarkar on Adoption 2nd Ed., 283, Peramaul v. Pottee, (1851) M.S.D.A. 234.

(10) The prohibition is based on the story of Shunashepa but not so far covered by authority.

(11) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 P.C.

(12) Durga Devi v. Shambu Nath, 5 L. 200 P.C.; see this question fully discussed in S. 51 clauses (5) and (6).

(13) Gopal v. Vishnu, 23 B. 250 (257); Balabai v. Mahadu, 48 B. 387.

(14) Thangathanni v. Ramu, 5 M. 358.

(15) Raoji v. Laksh Bai, 11 B. 381 (395).

(16) 1 Str. H.L. 85; 1 W. Mac. H. L., pp. 67, 77; 2 W. Macn., pp. 178, 179 and note; Seetaram v. Dhunock, 1 Hay 260; Janoke v. Gopaul, 2 C. 365; Kashi Bai v. Tatia, 7 B. 221; Jamnabai v. Raychand, Ib., 225. The same text repeated in Baudhayan.

There are no clear texts prohibiting the adoption of the eldest or the youngest son[1] but as regards the validity of adoption of an only son the Courts were divided till the conflict between them was settled by the Privy Council.[2]

641. Factum Valet.—"Quod fieri non debuit factum valet"[3] is a well known, though not well expressed,[4] maxim of civil law, which has been applied to overlook and condone mere irregularities as distinct from substantial illegalities in several transactions including that of adoption,[5] such as the adoption of the eldest, the youngest or the only son,[6] though it is condemned by the texts, or of a married man of advanced age, where such an adoption is valid[7] or likewise the adoption of one not otherwise a proper adoption.[8]

642. As already stated, the doctrine cannot cure a defect that is of the essence of adoption, e.g., the ceremony of giving and taking which no one but the parents can perform. Consequently, the adoption of an orphan cannot be so legalized,[9] unless its illegality cannot be challenged by having recourse to some other overriding doctrine, such as acquiescence by all concerned or estoppel, which may create a personal equity against the adopter.[10]

643. To the same class belong an adoption by a leper[11] or by one suffering from other incurable disease, which disqualifies him from performing any religious ceremony,[12] an untonsured[13] or one unchaste[14] or under pollution,[15] but the border line is passed in when such a widow was then pregnant in concubinage.[16]

644. So while the payment of a bribe to the natural father to give his son in adoption is an act both illegal and opposed to public policy,[17] it does not vitiate an adoption already made, which effects a change in the status of the son, which is already separable from the illegal act.[18]

---

(1) For such texts as exist, see Hindu Code (3rd Ed.) §§ 316, 317 pp. 434, 435.

(2) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 P.C.

(3) What should not be done, yet being done, shall be valid.

(4) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 (423) P.C. : 22 A. 460 (487) P.C.

(5) For a history and general application of this doctrine, see Author's Hindu Code, 3rd Ed., §§ 818-822 pp. 435-437.

(6) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 P.C.; 22 A. 460 (487) P.C.; Raje v. Jayavantrav, 4 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 191; Dharma v. Ramakrishna, 10 B. 80; Lakshmappa v. Ramava, 12 B.H.C.R. 364 (398).

(7) Dharma v. Ramkrishna, 10 B. 80 (86).

(8) Nimbalkar v. Jayavantrav, 4 B. H.C.R. (A.C.) 191 (195).

(9) Vaithilingam v. Natesa, 37 M. 529 (532) following Subhaluvammal v. Ammakutti, 2 M.H.C.R. 129; Balvantrao v. Bayabhai, 6 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 83; Bashetiappa v. Shivlingappa, 10 B.H.C. R. 268; Soni Bai v. Dhanraj, 56 I.C. (N.) 620.

(10) Ganesh v. Bokil, 7 B.H.C.R. (App.) xxiii (xxiv) Vaithilingam v. Natesa, 37 M. 529 (530).

(11) Syamalal v. Saudamini, 5 B.L.R. 362 (369, 370) cited in Keri v. Moneeram, 13 B.L.R. 1 (14) F.B.

(12) Which he may perform vicariously, Indramoni v. Behari Lal, 5 C. 770 (774) P.C.

(13) Rajvi v. Lakshmi Bai, 11 B. 381 (395).

(14) Basvant v. Malappa, 45 B. 489; contra, Duyaba v. Radhabai, (1894) B. P.J. 22.

(15) Thangathanni v. Ramu, 5 M. 358; Indromoni v. Behari Lal, 5 C. 770 (774) P.C.

(16) Syamalal v. Saudamini, 5 B.L. R. 362 (370).

(17) A "son bought" is not recognized in the present age (or Kaliyug) —Eshan Kishore v. Harish Chunder, 21 W.R. 381.

(18) Marugappa v. Nagappa, 29 M. 161 (164); Sitaram v. Harihar, 35 B. 169 (170-180).

But the result might be different, if the adopter himself complained of a status forced on him by his father moved by mercenary motives.

55 An adoption must be unconditional and irrevocable,[1] but the rights thereby acquired may be limited[2] or postponed[3] to any reasonable extent warranted by custom.[4]

Conditional Adoption.

Illustrations.

(a) A adopts B on condition that it shall be void on the birth of a son to A. The condition is invalid as an adoption, when once completed, cannot be revoked.[5]

(b) A, a Hindu widow in possession of her limited estate adopts B on condition that A shall have full power of its disposal during her lifetime. The condition is invalid, for it creates in A an unqualified power of disposal.[6]

(c) A adopts B on condition that A shall continue to manage her estate during her lifetime. The condition being reasonable is valid.[7]

(d) A directed in his will that his wife B should adopt a son who should take one-third of his estate giving two-thirds to his wife and daughter. A adopted C. C is bound by A's direction.[8]

(e) A adopts B on condition that B shall not call for partition during A's lifetime. B is bound by the condition as it is reasonable.[9]

645. Analogous Law.—An adoption may be void or invalid, in which case, there is no legal adoption; but an adoption which is legal and complete cannot be revoked or cancelled at the instance of either party or by consent of both, since adoption, like marriage, creates a status which cannot be annulled save as provided by law.[10] As such, it is not open to the natural parents of the adoptee or the adoptee himself to renounce the legal status conferred on him on adoption, though he may give up his right of inheritance.[11]

646. Conditions: Valid and Invalid.—Before his adoption it is open to his parent to enter into a binding agreement limiting or postponing his right thereto. If his right is so qualified by the terms of the authority of the husband, which empowered his widow to receive him in adoption, then the authority being conditional, he is bound by its terms, and he cannot be heard to question its legality or justice.[12] He is also bound, though not to the same extent, by an agreement made with his natural

(1) Basha v. Indar Kunwar, 16 C. 556 (563) P.C.; Dinkar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 (205) P.C.

(2) Visalakshi v. Sivaramien, 27 M. 577 F.B. & cases cited in f.-n (1), infra.

(3) Bhupendra v. Amarendra, 43 C. 432 (439) P.C. (a Dayabhaga case).

(4) Krishnamurthi v. Krishnamurthi, 50 M. 508 P.C.

(5) Sant Singh v. Mula, 17 I.C. (P.) 350.

(6) Purushottam v. Rukhmabai, 16 Bom.L.R. 57.

(7) Visalakshi v. Sivaramien, 27 M. 577 F.B.; Krishnamurthi v. Krishnamurthi, 50 M. 508 P.C. contra in Purshottom v. Rakhmabai, 16 Bom.L.R. 57.

(8) Bachoo v. Mankorebai, 31 B. 373 P.C.; Toolsi Dass v. Madan, 28 C. 499; Surendra v. Kalachand, 12 C.W.N. 668; Lakshmi v. Subramanya, 12 M. 496; Narayanasami v. Ramasami, 14 M. 172.

(9) Korab v. Pancham, 11 N.L.R. 29.

(10) 2 Dig. 111, 2 Str. H.L. 108; Huebat Rao v. Govind Rao, 2 Borr. 75; Sukhbasi v. Guman Singh, 2 A. 366; Sadashiv v. Huri, 11 B.H.C.R. 190; Chintu v. Dhondu, Ib., p. 192, note (a); Ravji v. Lakshmibai, 11 B. 381 (adopter estopped); Bhasba v. Indra Kunwar, 16 C. 556 (564) P.C.; Bhupendra v. Amarendra, 43 C. 432 P.C.; Diwakar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 (205) P.C.; Lunkurn v. Birji, 57 C. 1322.

(11) Ruvee v. Rupshankar, 2 Borr. 713 (729); Balkrishna v. Savitribai, 3 B. 54 (57); Mahadu v. Bayaji, 19 B. 239 (244, 245); Chandania v. Saligram, 26 A. 40; Thaman Singh v. Jit Singh, (1893) P.R. N. 9.

(12) Lakshmi v. Subramanya, 12 M. 490; Narayanasami v. Ramasami, 14 M. 172; Ganpati v. Savithri, 21 M. 10; Challa v. Pallury, 31 M. 446 (450); Goverdhan Das v. Laloomal, 13 S.L.R. 155 : 53 I.C. 546, (in which the adoptee being major had himself so agreed).

father as a condition of his adoption that his adoptive mother should continue to retain her limited estate during her own life-time, or, in other words, relegating his right as son to that of a reversioner.[1] And by parity of reasoning she may stipulate for an absolute right over a part of the estate.[2] He acquires his status because his father submitted to the agreement. He cannot have the benefit of his status without submitting to its condition, provided it is reasonable and not such as might deprive him of his entire inheritance. Such would be a stipulation giving to the mother an absolute power of disposition over the property, as distinct from a power that a guardian may stipulate for and exercise for the benefit of the infant or of the estate.[3] But since the purpose of adoption is prima facie to benefit spiritually the adopter, a condition depriving the adoptee of the means to discharge his spiritual obligation would be void.[4]

647. But the adoptive father may validly stipulate with the father of the adoptee that the latter shall not call for partition during his own life-time.[5] So again, he may before or at the time of adopting a son, give a portion of his ancestral property to his daughters which the adopted son cannot resume.[6] Of course, he who relies upon a condition as qualifying the legal right of the adopted son must prove it by as strong evidence as is necessary to establish a nuncupative will.[7]

648. Customary Conditions.—But while the court upholds all reasonable conditions qualifying or postponing the enjoyment of his estate by the adopted son, there is a limit beyond which it cannot go. The Privy Council go further and require that they must be supported by custom.[8] As was observed in a case: "An agreement entered into by a Hindu widow at the time of taking a son in adoption with his natural father and making a reasonable provision for her ought to be upheld as valid according to general custom modifying the strict terms of Hindu Law. This principle cannot be extended to reservations in favour of charities and religious endowments. The custom of establishing any such extension lies upon the person seeking to prove such modifications of the strict rules of Hindu Law."[9] Where therefore, the adopter had contracted with the natural father of the adoptee that the latter shall pay an annual sum for the purpose of lighting lamps in a certain temple, the

(1) Krishnamurthi v. Krishnamurthi, 50 M. 508 P.C.; Vinayak v. Govindrao, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 224; Chitko v. Janki, 11 B.H.C.R. 199; Radhabai v. Ganesh, 3 B. 1 (8); Ravji v. Lakshmi Bai, 11 B. 381 (400, 401), explaining dictum of P. C. in Ramaswami v. Venkataramanaiyan. 2 M. 91; Vyasacharya v. Venkubai, 37 B. 251 F.B.; Venkappa v. Fakirgowda, 8 Bom.L.R. 346; per Beaman, J., in Pirsab v. Gurappa, 38 B. 227, contra by the same learned Judge in Vyasacharya v. Venkubai, 37 B. 251 F.B. must be taken as corrected in supra; Visalakshi v. Sivaramien, 27 M. 577 (585) F.B., overruling Jagannadha v. Papamma, 16 M. 400; Subbamanik v. Sankara, (1931) M. 804; Krishnayya v. Surya Rao, (1935) P.C. 190.

(2) Raju v. Nagammal, 52 M. 128 (133).

(3) Ravji v. Lakshmibai, 11 B. 381 (403); Purshottam v. Rakhmabai, 16 Bom.L.R. 57 (60); Balkrishna v. Uttar Narayan, 43 B. 342.

(4) Visalakshi v. Sivaramien, 27 M. 577 (587) F.B.

(5) Lukshmi v. Subramanya, 12 M. 490; Narayanasami v. Ramasami, 14 M. 172; Ganapathi v. Savithri, 21 M. 10; Challa v. Palluri, 31 M. 446 (450); Goverdhan Das v. Laloomal, 13 S.L.R. 155 : 53 I.C. 546 : Korat v. Pancham, 12 N.L.R. 29 (34).

(6) Basava v. Lingangouda, 19 B. 428; Durgi v. Kanhaiya Lal, 25 A.L.J. 338: (1927) A. 387.

(7) Imrit Koonwar v. Roop Narain, 6 C.L.R. 76.

(8) Krishnamurthi v. Krishnamurthi, 50 M. 508 P.C.

(9) Balkrishna v. Uttar Narayan, 43 B. 542; approved in Krishnamurthi v. Krishnamurthi, 50 M. 508 P.C.

court refused to enforce it on the ground that it was unreasonable and gratuitously onerous.[1] So a will by which a testator gave part of his property to his intended adopted son, part to his widow for life, part to the kindred, and part to charity was held not binding upon the adopted son, although before the adoption took place, the natural father executed a deed by which he consented to the provisions of the will and gave his son in adoption subject thereto.[2] But this was a case of an arrangement with the widow. It leaves untouched the proposition that where the testator, being the sole owner of his estate, makes a will giving a portion of it to charity and at the same time empowering his widow to adopt, the adopted son cannot avoid the bequest, because "the adopted son, cannot, while approbating the provisions of that will under which his adoption was made, reprobate other provisions of the same will.[3] A Hindu can settle a portion of his ancestral property upon any body he likes and then take a boy in adoption. The adopted boy could not, under such circumstances, impeach an alienation made before the date of his adoption."[4] But where, at the time of adoption, the adoptive father and the natural father entered into an agreement which, in effect, gave the adoptive father absolute right to dispose of all his property, even after the adoption, in any way he pleased, the adopted son was held entitled to treat the agreement void.[5]

Dvamushyayan adoption.

56. A son may be given in adoption on condition that he shall be the son of both the natural and the adoptive fathers. Such a son is called the Dvamushyayan son.[6]

649. Analogous Law.—The Mitakshara devotes one whole section to the rights of the Dvamushyayan son, or the son of two fathers.[7] But the son there intended is the Kshetraj or the son of the wife[8] who is so defined:—

"If the husband's brother, or other person duly authorized, and being himself destitute of male issue, proceed to an intercourse with the wife of a childless man for the sake of raising issue both for himself and for the other: the son, whom he so begets is the child of two fathers and denominated Dvamushyayan. He is heir to both, and offers funeral oblations to their manes."[9]

650. This is the prototype of the modern Dvamushyayan son who owes his existence originally to the procreation by Niyog or appointment. As this practice became obsolete, the Dvamushyayan son lost his original character, giving place to his modern analogue, which was originally subdivided into a nitya or permanent or absolute, and anitya, i.e., a temporary son of two fathers.

651. The difference between the two is thus explained in Dattak Mimamsa:—

"Sons of two fathers are of two descriptions—those absolute sons of two fathers, and those incompletely so. Of these, those are named absolute Dvamushyayans who are given in adoption with this stipulation: this is son of us two (the natural father and the adopter). The incomplete Dvamushyayans are those, who are initiated by

(1) Balkrishna v. Uttar Narayan, 43 B. 542; approved in Krishnamurthi v. Krishnamurthi, 50 M. 508 P.C.

(2) Krishnamurthi v. Krishnamurthi, 50 M. 508 (527, 528) P.C., reversing O. A. 49 M.L.J. 252: 85 I.C. 882 : (1925) M. 932.

(3) Venkatanarasimha v. Subba Rao, 46 M. 300 (316).

(4) Venkatanarasimha v. Subba Rao, 46 M. 300 (347).

(5) Parvati Bai v. Vishvanath, 27 Bom.L.R. 1509.

(6) Mit. Ch. 1, S. X; Manu, IX-132.

(7) Yad. I-69, 70.

(8) Mit., Ch. 1, S. X to the same effect, Manu, IX-132.

(9) Mit., Ch. 1, S. X, § 3.

their natural father in ceremonies ending with that of tonsure, and by the adoptive father, in those commencing with the investiture of the characteristic thread. Since they are initiated under the family names of both even, they are sons of two fathers; but incompletely so. Should a child, directly on being born, be adopted, as his initiation under both family names would be wanting, he would partake only of the family of the adopter.[1]

652. The author of Dattak Chandrika recommends such an adoption to remove the objection to the adoption of an only son as entailing extinction of the lineage of the natural father,[2] and this view received the sanction of the court in an old case;[3] but the validity of the adoption of an only son has been since otherwise settled, and the temporary son of the two fathers has gone with the reason, which restricted adoption within the narrow limits set out by the Dattak Mimamsa.

Even as regards the "perpetual Dvamushyayan son" only the term remains, but its connotations have so materially changed that there is nothing but an identity of name to connect the new Dvamushyayan son with his pristine prototype.

653. Conditions of a Dvamushyayan Adoption.—The Dvamushyayan son or son of two fathers is a modern relic of the old but now obsolete institution of Niyog. As such, he has passed through four stages. In the first stage, he was the Kshetraj son of the wife who belonged both to the begetter as well as to his mother's legitimate husband, the rule being that if any one sows on my land, he shares the crop with me. In the second stage, he was the son of Niyog by a relation or a priest appointed to procreate him on the wife. In the third stage, he being the only son of his father, he was permitted to be shared by his brother who would have formerly been entitled to the Niyog company of his wife and who, therefore, was entitled to a share in his brother's son, even though begotten by him without his assistance.[4] In the fourth and present stage, he is merely the son of two fathers, whether these be brothers or not and the only condition required for their joint paternity is that they should, before the adoption, have agreed to treat the son as the common son of both. Such an agreement may be express or implied,[5] but it cannot be presumed from the mere fact that the adopter was the full brother of the father.[6] Not only the brothers but their widows may adopt a Dvamushyayan.[7]

654. Though the practice of filial partnership is on the wane, the reported cases show that it is not yet dead, and amongst certain people, as in the case of Nambudri Brahmins of Malabar, it appears to be the usual form of adoption.[8] It is practised amongst Lingayats, whether the brothers are joint or divided,[9] and in the Southern districts of the

(1) Datt. Mim. VI-41 (Suth.), 85; Datt. Ch. 1-28 (Suth.), 114.

(2) Datt. Ch. 1, 28 (Suth.), 144.

(3) Shumshere Mall v. Dilraj, 2 Beng. S.R. 216 : 6 I.D. (O.S.) 523.

(4) So Manu, (IX-182): "If among several brothers of the whole blood one has son born, Manu pronounces them all fathers of male issue by means of that son." There is no such presumption now for the simple reason that there can be no partnership in a wife.

(5) Wooma Dei v. Golcoolanund, 3 C. 587 (598) P.C.; Behari Lal v. Shib Lal, 26 A. 472; Mohna Mal v. Mala Mal, 89 I.C. 688 : (1925) L. 623; Laxmi v. Shrinivas, 41 B. 315 (341, 342).

(6) Nil Madhab v. Bishwambur, 13 I.A. 85 (102); Laxmipatrao v. Venkatesh, 41 B. 315 (340, 341); Huchrao v. Bhimrao, 42 B. 277 (279), in which 41 B. 315 is followed and cited as an authority for an express agreement, but that case does not support the view that the agreement should be express.

(7) Krishna v. Parameshri, 25 B. 537.

(8) Vasudevan v. Secretary of State, 11 M. 157 (167, 179).

(9) Basava v. Lingangauda, 19 B. 455; Chenava v. Basangavda, 21 B. 105.

Bombay presidency[1] and is not unknown in Bengal,[2] the United[3] and the Central Provinces,[4] though it is held to be unknown in the Punjab.[5]

655. Though Dvamushyayan is, ordinarily, confined to the adoption of a brother's son, still this is not necessary, for any two persons, may agree to hold a son in common,[6] provided they follow the forms and conditions which are the same as in the Dattak adoption.[7]

656. A peculiar custom was proved to exist amongst the Pandas of Gaya, whose son on adoption continues to retain his rights in his natural family.[8]

Customary Dvamushyayan.

57. A Dvamushyayan son is entitled to inherit in both the families of his natural and adoptive fathers.[9]

Customary Dvamushyayan.

657. Analogous Law.—The Dvamushyayan son's right of inheritance to his two fathers is thus set out in the Dattak Chandrika:—

"The son given, who is a Dvamushyayan, if both his adoptive and natural fathers have no other male issue, takes the whole estate of both; one adopted, where legitimate issue of the adopter existed, does not participate in the estate of the adopter; but a legitimate son, being born, to the natural father subsequent to the adoption, the adopted son takes half of the share of a legitimate son. If, however, such issue be subsequently born to the adopter, the adopted son in question takes half of the share which is prescribed by law for an adopted son, exclusively related to his adoptive father, where legitimate issue may be subsequently born to that person."[10]

If both his fathers have legitimate sons, he offers no oblation to either but takes "a quarter of the share allotted to a legitimate son of his adoptive father."[11]

658. The Dvamushyayan son being the son of two fathers, it follows that he possesses all the rights and is equally subject to all the obligations of a son in the two families. But as regards his status in his adoptive father's household, his position is different to that of a Dattak son, since his own sons revert to his natural family.[12]

His own mother and his adoptive mother remain his heir and may succeed to him in the absence of nearer heirs.[13]

Proof of adoption.

58 (1) He who relies upon an adoption must prove it.[14]

(2) Where an adoption has the effect of disinheriting the natural heirs, it must be proved by such cogent evidence as is sufficient to prove its factum and validity and not merely its probability, due regard being had to all the circumstances, including—

---

(1) Steele, L.C., pp. 45, 47, 183; 384; Basava v. Lingangauda, 19 B. 428 (466, 467); Krishna v. Parameshri, 25 B. 537 (543).

(2) Nil Madhab v. Bishumber, 13 M. I.A. 85 (100, 101).

(3) Behari Lal v. Shib Lal, 26 A. 472.

(4) Laxmi Bai v. Shri Krishna, (1877) C. P. L. R., Pt. 8, No. 50.

(5) Mohana Mal v. Mala Mal, 489 I.C. 688 : (1925) L. 823.

(6) Sutherland's Synopsis, 5th Head; Datt. Mim.; VI-41 (before quoted); Datt. Ch., II-36.

(7) Krishna v. Parameshri, 25 B. 537.

(8) Luchman Lal v. Kanhayalal, 22 C. 609 P.C.

(9) Datt. Chan. V-33; Wooma Dayee v. Gokulanand, 3 C. 587 (598) P.C.

(10) Datt. Chand., V-33.

(11) Mayukh, Ch. 4, S. V., §§ 24-26 citing Vashisth quoted in Mit. II-1-55, (Mandik), p. 60.

(12) Wooma Dayee v. Gokoolanund, 3 C. 587 (598) P.C.

(13) Behari Lal v. Shib Lal, 26 A. 472; Basappa v. Gurlingava, 57 B. 74 (80).

(14) Lal Harihar v. Bajrang, (1937) P.C. 242; Kishori Lal v. Chunnilal, 31 A. 116 (135) P.C.; Lal Kuar v. Chiranji Lal, 32 A. 104 (115) P.C.

(a) its antecedent and attendant probability,[1]

(b) the existence of a writing,[2]

(c) the conduct of the parties before and since the alleged adoption[3] and

(d) its publicity,[4]

and where the adopter is an illiterate widow—

(e) the assent, intention and inclination of her husband,[5]

(f) the receipt by her of independent advice,[6] and

(g) the effect of the adoption upon her rights.[7]

(3) Provided that where an adoption has been acted upon for a considerable time without dispute, the court may, upon proof of its factum, presume its validity.[8]

Illustration.

A, a young illiterate pardanashin widow, has for her adviser her husband's cousin B. She adopts his son C. C sues for possession. The burden is on C to prove that A has not been unduly influenced by B to adop him.[9]

659. Analogous Law.—It has been seen that both marriage and legitimacy may be conclusively presumed (§ 28 and comm.) from certain facts and that they need not then be proved. Law recognizes these relationships as natural and the institutions of marriage and sonship as common to all mankind. And consequently, it presumes what it regards as being in consonance with approved usage. But adoption stands on a different footing. It is a mere local relic of an old obsolete institution, deriving its nourishment and support from tradition and usage. When asserted, it has, therefore, to be proved like any other fact. There is no presumption in its favour,[10] and on the other hand, in the case of a sonless man there is no presumption against it, though the degree of proof required to disinherit the natural heirs is naturally very high.[11]

Standard of Proof.

660. As adoption implies the introduction of a stranger into the family and requires no writing or registration to complete it, the courts enjoin a very high degree of proof akin to that necessary to establish a nuncupative will.[12] So Lord Wynford, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, regretted that an adoption could be proved by parol testimony of witnesses[13] and added: "But, although neither written acknowledgments,

---

(1) Huradhun v. Muthoranath, 4 M. I.A. 414 (425).

(2) Sootrugun v. Sabitra, 5 W.R. 109 P.C.

(3) Chandra Kumar v. Narpat Singh, 29 A. 184 (195) P.C. and cases cited post.

(4) Ajabh Singh v. Nanaban, 3 C.W. N. 130 P.C.

(5) Kishori Lal v. Chunni Lal, 31 A. 116 P.C.; Pudum Singh v. Ooodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350 (356, 357).

(6) Bayabai v. Bala, 7 B.H.C.R. (App.) 1 (20).

(7) Ib.

(8) Jagadamba v. Dhakhina, 13 C. 308 (321) P.C.; Anand Rav v. Ganesh, 7 B.H.C.R. (App.) 33 (35) and cases cited post. See also S. 90 Indian Evidence Act.

(9) Gangu v. Chandrabhagabai, 32 B. 275.

(10) Kishorilal v. Chunnilal, 31 A. 116 (135) P.C.; Lal Kunwar v. Chiranji Lal, 32 A. 104 (115) P.C.; Raja Gopala v. Nattu, 34 M. 329 (332); Venkata v. Papayya, (1913) M.W.N. 828 : 22 I.C. 737.

(11) Sutroogun v. Sabitra, 5 W. R. 109 P.C., cited and followed in Diwakar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 (210) P.C.; Lal Bahadur v. Bijai Bahadur, 52 A. 1 (7) P.C.; Padmarav v. Fakira, (1931) P.C. 84.

(12) Imrit Koonwar v. Roop Narain, 6 C.P.L.R. 76.

(13) Sutroogun v. Sabitra, 5 W. R. 109 P.C.

nor the performance of any religious ceremonies are essential to the validity of adoption, such acknowledgments are usually given, such ceremonies observed and notices given of the time when adoptions are to take place, in all families of distinction, such as those of Zemindars and opulent Brahmins. Wherever those have been omitted, it behoves this court to regard with extreme suspicion the proof offered in support of an adoption. I would say that in no case the rights of wives and daughters should be transferred to strangers or to more remote relations, unless the fact of adoption, by which this transfer is effected be proved, by evidence free from all suspicion of fraud, and so consistent and probable as to give no occasion for a doubt of its truth.[1] In this connection it is well to note that even the sacred texts required that the adoption, before it is made, shall be intimated to the king,[2] a formality, which, though not now insisted upon, is nevertheless not wholly ignored, since one object of giving intimation to the king was to give the fact publicity, and this is now given by the registration of an adoption deed, the mutation entry and the like.

No Presumption in favour of Adoption.

661. It is, sometimes, said that a childless Hindu, anxious to be delivered from the torments of hell, is naturally anxious to adopt a son to free him therefrom,[3] and that, therefore, there is a prima facie presumption in favour of an adoption. But these remarks occur with reference to a second adoption, their Lordships holding that if a man felt a necessity for one adoption, there was a probability that on the death of the first adopted son, he would make another adoption, but this is very far from supporting a general presumption. As their Lordships observed in a later case: "Much has been said of the old presumption which arises from the religious duty which is upon every childless Hindu to adopt a son. Their Lordships do not deny the force of that presumption, but they cannot shut their eyes to the fact that childless Hindus die daily without having fulfilled this obligation, or made provision for its fulfilment after their death."[4] Moreover, in the written authorities that have come under the notice of courts, the reason usually assigned for an adoption is the perpetuation of the lineage and name, and not the propitiation of the forces of darkness in the next regions. The fact that adoptions are still common and customary shows that adoptions are prized and made; the fact that they are not made by all or most sonless men shows that they are not so common as to raise any presumption in their favour. Much must, moreover, depend upon the education and views of the person concerned. The advancement of Western learning has rudely shaken many an old time belief, and even those who nominally remain within the fold of Hinduism must not be too readily assumed to subscribe to its expiring dogmas, or be impressed by the hopes and fears addressed to a primitive people.

---

(1) Sutroogun v. Sabitra, 5 W.R. 109 P.C., cited and followed in Diwakar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 (210) P.C.; Padmarav v. Fakira, 35 C.W.N. 465 : (1931) P.C. 84.

(2) See the texts cited in Hindu Code 3rd Ed., § 810, p. 430.

(3) Hurdhan v. Muthoranatha, 4 M. I.A. 414 (425, 426). To the same effect, Soondur Koomaree v. Gudadhur, 7 M. I.A. 54 (64).

(4) Nil Madhab v. Bishumber, 13 M. I.A. 35 (100); Shri Balusu v. Shri Balusu, 21 A. 460 (477) P.C. : 22 M. 398 (414) P.C.

Evidence of Writing.

662. An adoption is not required by law to be in writing; and if in writing, it is not required to be registered,[1] though an authority to adopt, if conferred by any writing other than a will, must be registered.[2] But an adoption deed, even though it may reserve a portion of the estate to the adopter, need not be registered,[3] still the Privy Council have, from very early times, looked for some writing whether of an adoption deed or entries in the accounts[4] of the statements contemporaneously or almost contemporaneously made to the authorities for mutation of names, the invitations issued to kinsmen and castemen, their replies thereto, and the numerous other occasions, which such an event presents for the coming into existence of writings which are the best evidence of the transaction (§§ 663-665). As such the recital of an adoption, contained in a will, 60 years' old was held sufficient evidence not only of an adoption, but that it was presumably in the usual dattak form.[5]

Antecedent Probabilities.

663. But though a writing furnishes valuable evidence, its value would be greatly enhanced by the presence of antecedent probabilities. The facts that the alleged adopter was sixty-seven years old, and that he had two wives to whom he had long been married, that by neither of them had he ever an issue, and that both of them were past child-bearing age, all these add to the probability of an adoption,[6] as the fact that he was young and had recently married tells against it.[7] But it often happens that when a person is moribund, scheming counsellors hurry to his bedside, prepare deeds and go through a mock-adoption when his mind is inert, if not unconscious, and when he has not the bodily strength to resist such officious importunities. Such was the adoption made to "a dying man almost continually insensible, though occasionally roused to consciousness by loud tones, or by pungent applications to his nostrils, but almost immediately afterwards relapsing into a state of insensibility and when momentarily conscious, with his mind quite inert and instantly fatigued on the slighest exertion."[8]

664. Their Lordships continued: "If the law were to countenance acts of this description (adoption and will), performed at such a time and under such circumstances without the clearest and most cogent evidence to establish their validity, relations and managers would be encouraged to advance their own private notions of what might be advisable to be done for the good of the family, and ascribe acts to a dying man in which he would have been merely passive instrument to prolong their own gain and authority."[9]

---

(1) S. 17, Registration Act; Sakharam v. Madan, 5 B. 232; Vishwanath v. Rahi Bai, 55 B. 103 (109).

(2) 17 (3), Registration Act.

(3) Contra where it is a later deed, or creates a new right in the adopter—Pirsab v. Gurappa, 38 B. 227 (235, 236)

(4) Sootrugun v. Sabitra, 5 W.R. 109 P.C.; Diwarkar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 (205) P.C.

(5) Binda Kuar v. Lalita Prasad, 1936 P.C. 304.

(6) Huradhun v. Muthoranath, 4 M. I.A. 414 (425).

(7) Sarodasoondery v. Tincowry, 1 Hyde 22 (250); Sootrugan v. Sabitra, 5 W.R. 109 P.C.; Diwakar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 (205) P.C.; Padmarav v. Fakira, (1931) P.C. 84.

(8) Tayammal v. Sashachalla, 10 M. I.A. 429 (434).

(9) Tayammal v. Seshachalla, 10 M. I.A. 429 (434, 435).

Pardanashins.

665. These words spoken with reference to a dying man, apply equally to young pardanashin women,[1] who, being illiterate, are too often surrounded by such selfish advisers, and who too often fall a victim to their interested counsels. In their case, no less than in the case of a dying adopter, it devolves on the court to scrutinze all such evidence with jealous care, and if it finds that the adopter was swayed by advice, more than by his convictions, it should not be slow to set aside an adoption which appears to it improvident and involuntary,[2] though the case might be different if the adoption were admitted, or afterwards acted upon.[3]

Publicity.

666. Publicity or notoriety is another element for consideration. Where, for instance, a person was adopted and the fact noted by the Panchayat, who prepared a pedigree in which the adopted son was mentioned, the court held it to amount to sufficient proof of adoption.[4] In one of these cases the question was whether one Sujan had been duly adopted by Fateh. In connection with another dispute in the family, Panchayat was appointed who drew up a report in 1819, which was filed in the collectorate. It contained a reference to Sujan's adoption, but the words were smudged over with ink which the court suspected had been done fraudulently to destroy the force of the finding. The Privy Council considered this a sufficient evidence to establish Sujan's adoption as proved by the family pedigree prepared so far back as 1819.[5] In another case, instituted in 1891, the same high tribunal had to find on the question of one Azmat Singh's adoption, alleged to have taken place about 1681, and the evidence adduced was a copy of a village Wajib-ul-arz, to which was attached a pedigree, in which Azmat was described as an adopted son, added to which, the same fact was mentioned in the Oudh Gazetteer. There was no other evidence. Their Lordships held the adoption valid.[6]

The fact that upon an adoption, the adoptee's name was mutated in the Collector's books is of importance, but the fact that his name was mentioned in the income-tax receipts, power of attorney, bonds or other private instruments is of little value as these documents do not afford sufficient publicity of the fact, being only available to those who are directly interested in them.[7]

Admissions and Conduct.

667. The evidence furnished by conduct is often an invaluable guide in arriving at the truth. The facts the court has to examine in this connection are how far they are consistent or inconsistent with the adoption alleged. If they are continuously consistent only with adoption and inconsistent with non-adoption, then they add to its probability, which would be material in deciding an issue in the conflict

(1) Kishorilal v. Chunilal, 31 A. 116 (121, 122) P.C.

(2) Bayabai v. Bala, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) 1, followed in Somasekharaja v. Subhadramaji, 6 B. 524; Ranganayakamma v. Alwar, 13 M. 214 (221); Kishorilal v. Chunnilal, 31 A. 116 (P.C.).

(3) Chandra Kumar v. Narpat Singh, 29 A. 184 (195) P.C., following Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664 (669); Heane v. Rogers, 9 B. & C. 577 (586); Newton v. Liddiard, 12 Q.B. 926; In re Simpson, 2 Ch.D. 72 (89); Trinidad Ashphalt Co. v. Coryat, (1896) A.C. 587.

(4) Ajabh Singh v. Nanaban, 3 O.W. N. 130 P.C.

(5) Achal Ram v. Hazim Husain, 27 P. A. 271 P.C.

(6) Achal Ram v. Hazim Hussain, 27 A. 271 (290, 291) P.C.

(7) Pudum Singh v. Oodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350 (357-359).

of evidence. If, on the other hand, they are only at times consistent with the factum of adoption, being on other occasions equally opposed to it, then the court would not be right in laying undue stress upon any one set, without considering the counteracting effect of the other.[1] Such facts as the change of name usually made by the adoptee,[2] the mutation of names in the Collector's books in respect of property which the adoptive mother resigns in favour of her adopted son,[3] his statement as such for a long number of years by the adopter and his family,[4] are not the least important. If the adoptions are not followed up by the mutation of names, the mere fact that the adoptee was occasionally described as the son of his adoptive father in a private document such as a power of attorney or in the income-tax receipts or other private instruments, is of little value.[5] The acts and declarations of the widow who is alleged to have made the adoption are important.[6] So is also the conduct of the adopted son in suffering his adoptive mother to retain possession of the property after he came of age,[7] or permitting her name to remain on the revenue records conjointly with his own,[8] or performing the sapinda of his natural father—which is an evidence against his adoption.[9]

668. The court held an adoption proved where, soon after the alleged adoption, the adoptive father's name was entered in the school register under the heading "parent or guardian" against the boy's name and in a partition suit between his natural father and brothers, his rights were ignored and his name was mentioned in the genealogical tree with a bare mention of the adoption.[10] So where the adoptee renounced his rights in his natural family and commenced participating in the rents and profits of the Vatan lands of his adoptive family, the court held the adoption.[11]

Conduct of the Adopter.

669. Rreiterated declaration by a person of his adoption by another, extending over a number of years, if unchallenged or even if not denied, may be sufficient evidence of such adoption.[12] (§ 680). The adopter's conduct towards the adoptee is very relevant in this connection. If the adoption was through "affection", as Manu enjoins, how was the adoptee treated by the adopter, before and since adoption? His relationship to the adopter, the natural affections felt towards him, are all facts which cannot be ignored. Indeed, where a person has for many years lived with his adopter and has been treated by her as her son, the court will not permit her afterwards to turn round and deny the adoption.[13] But the conduct must be unequivocal and only consistent with adoption. It must be naturally prolonged and continuous to

(1) Nil Madhab v. Bishumber, 13 M. I.A. 85 (97, 98).
(2) Diwakar v. Chandran, 44 C. 201 P. C.
(3) Pudum Singh v. Oodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350 (357, 358).
(4) Prem Devi v. Shambhu, 42 A. 382.
(5) Pudum Singh v. Oodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350 (358, 359).
(6) Ib., p. 361.
(7) Pudum Singh v. Oodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350 (364); Prem Devi v. Shambhu, 42 A. 382.
(8) Pudum Singh v. Oodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350 (360).
(9) Durga Baksh v. Brij Raj, (1937) P.C. 512.
(10) Soonkoro v. Soonkoro, 6 M.L.T. 267.
(11) Ram Krishna v. Hari, (1888) B. P. J. 83.
(12) Chandra Shekhar v. Raj Kuwar, (1926) P.C. 91. The judgment is all too megre, but probably implies the statement in the text.
(13) Ganga Prasad v. Budh Sen, 11 I. C. (A.) 27.

give rise to such inference. Moreover, in the case of illiterate pardanashin women, such circumstances might be easily faked, as they were in a case which puzzled the Privy Council, but who eventually threw out the suit, holding that the plaintiff had not been adopted by the defendant. In so holding they animadverted on the fact that the plaintiff who knew best about his adoption had not pledged his oath in favour of his adoption, and that though the ceremony was stated to be a pompous function, no account books traced to plaintiff's possession had been produced. As for the numerous witnesses, their statements were so similarly worded as to suggest that they either possessed supernatural memory or had memorized their evidence. If the plaintiff had been adopted in 1877, then on coming to age in 1883, he did not take possession of the caste and in no way asserted his title thereto. The documents imputed to Lacho were really prepared by her managers who were the plaintiff's father and brother and it was suspicious that while they all mentioned the adoption, they omitted to mention its date. In any case, Mt. Lacho could not be held bound by such collateral recitals even though they were registered and acted upon.[1] In cases their Lordships have reiterated the same view and treated with suspicion contemporaneous applications purporting to be by the adoptive mother as being in reality inspired by the claimant's natural father.[2]

670. In still another case of an adoption to a wealthy Zemindar the same Board, even more emphatically, commented on the absence of any writing which they regarded as a matter of great suspicion, added to which they commented on the fact that the ceremonies were of the briefest character, that the child's name was not changed and that he was never taken to live with his adoptive father or recognized by him in any way. They rejected the evidence of the natural father, despite his high position, on the ground of its improbability and concurred with the court below in holding the alleged adoption not proved.[3] Another case decided by the same high tribunal supports the same view, namely, that the court should be guided not so much by the spoken word as by the inherent probabilities and when these are evenly balanced, the safest course is to rely upon an undoubted admission. (§ 662.)

Admission Shifts Burden.

671. Such admission may be contained in a registered adoption deed, or be the sworn statement in a mutation proceeding, but whatever its form, it is sufficient to shift the burden of proof. So their Lorships held, citing Baron Parke;[4] "What a party himself admits to be true may be presumed to be so." In this case, Makund Singh was alleged to have adopted Kishan Singh. Deeds were filed in which Makund Singh and his father had admitted the fact, as to which the Privy Council said that while a party remains free to explain his own admission, if they remained unexplained, the court could not but use them as proving the fact against the party.

---

(1) Kishorilal v. Chunnilal, 31 A. 116 P.C.

(2) Lal Kunwar v. Chiranji Lal, 32 A. 104 (115) P.C., followed in Diwakar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 (208) P.C.

(3) Diwakar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 P.C.

(4) Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664 (669), followed in Chandra Kunwar v. Nirpat Singh, 29 A. 184 (194, 195) P.C.

672. Proof of Adoption by a Widow.—Where the adoption is alleged to have been made by a wife or widow, the proof of adoption must not only comprise proof of its factum, but also of its validity.[1] In that case, it is not only the authority, whenever necessary, but its exact erms must be strictly proved, since the validity of an adoption, made in pursuance of an authority from the husband, depends upon its terms which must be strictly followed.[2] Even where the widow is possessed of such authority, it may still be a question how far she was inclined to carry it out. If she has, for instance, waited for a considerable period without adoption, the court will require some explanation of the delay, or will doubt the authority.[3] Even where, as in the case of a departed husband in Bombay, the widow has the power to adopt without her husband's authority, evidence of his intention and inclination should afford strong proof of the probability of an adoption, while on the other hand, his disinclination, or refusal, to adopt should equally tend the other way. So it has been held that where there is a permission to adopt, the court will exact slight proof of the performance of ceremonies.[4]

Assent of the Husband.

673. The court looks askance at the adoption by young widows at the suggestion of their managers, relatives or even strangers. In the case of widows of tender years fifteen[5] or seventeen,[6] the conscience of the court has to be satisfied on the question that she was acting as a free agent, and further that she understood, and was made to realize, what difference it would make upon her own rights if she made an adoption. (§§ 684-690.)

Receipt of Independent Advice.

674. The fact that the adopter was an illiterate pardanashin adds to the burden of those upon whom lies the duty of supporting her adoption.[7] It is sometimes said that an adoption once completed must not be viewed with undue severity. But the question of severity does not arise, till the adoption is proved, and is a part of the res gestae of the widow, in which the court seeks for the exercise of that discretion and reflection, without which the form and ceremony are but a tinkling cymbal.[8]

675. It must also be remembered that an adoption is enjoined by law to be made for the benefit of the husband by redeeming his soul and preserving his estate. It is not intended for the benefit of the adoptee. If, therefore, the former purpose had become too remote and no extraneous assistance could achieve the latter purpose, it devolves on the court to enquire why an adoption long delayed had become suddenly so urgent.

Cl. (3) Proviso.

676. Ancient Adoptions.—The rule stated in the proviso is supported by ample authority,[9] and is based on the

(1) Pudam Singh v. Oodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350 (356, 357).
(2) Ib., p. 356.
(3) Dal Bahadur v. Bijai Bahadur, 52 A. 1 (7) P.C.
(4) Radhamadhab v. Radhabullub, 1 Hay 311; Mohendro v. Rookinny, 1 Croyton 42 (45, 46).
(5) Mallan v. Dundapa, (1932) B. 529.
(6) Bayabai v. Bala, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) 1 (20).
(7) Bayabai v. Bala, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) 1 (20, 21); Soondur v. Kishoree Lal, 5 W.R. 246.
(8) Kishorilal v. Chunnilal, 31 A. 116 (121, 122) P.C.
(9) Anand Rav v. Ganesh, 7 B.H.C. R. (App.) 33 (35); Kishen Monee v. Kashee Soonduree, W.R. (F.B.) 106; Rajendro Nath v. Jogendranath, 14 M. I.A. 67 (76, 77); Jagadamba v. Dakhina, 13 C. 308 (321) P.C.; Rupnarain v. Gopal, 36 C. 780 (795) P.C.; Retki v. Lakpati, 20 C.W.N. 19; Mullangi v. Venkatasubbammah, 25 M. L. J. 373; 19 I.C. 740.

impossibility of proving it by any living witness. The same principle runs through S. 90 of the Evidence Act which, in the case therein mentioned, dispenses with their formal proof. Any other rule would penalize an adoption, however old, and howmuchsoever it may have been acquiesced in, or acted upon, by those very persons, who might have been most interested in challenging it. But since there is a danger of inventing an adoption and placing it past challenge, by investing it with imaginary antiquity, law requires that the adoption should have been acted upon without dispute by those who would be most interested in challenging its authenticity. It would then presume that they had either admitted or acquisced in it. From these facts the court may hold its factum proved, and it may then presume its validity. In other words, the question whether an adoption did or did not take place is a pure question of fact which may be proved by evidence, either direct or circumstantial. Where the direct evidence is unobtainable, the court may hold it proved upon a consideration of circumstantial evidence. Such evidence may consist of the admissions and conduct of the parties, some old pedigree[1] or even only a strong and persistent tradition.[2] The factum being thus proved, the court will presume its validity, holding that if the adoption was in fact made, it must have been attended by the performance of all the requisite ceremonies.[3]

677. Adoption by Estoppel.—A party, relying upon an adoption, may hold his adversary estopped from denying it. This plea is, however, only a valuable to a party, if it is shown that, by reason of the adoption, the position of the adopted son has been affected owing to some act or omission on the part of his alleged adopter. If the latter is a man, the adoptee stands on firm ground, but if she be a woman, or a minor, than the court is slow to apply it when it finds her conduct involuntary, or swayed by other influences.

Estoppel by Representation.

678. But where a Mitakshara widow, one Dharam Kunwar, took a boy in adoption, declaring that she had her husband's authority to adopt, and about 18 months afterwards her reversioner sued for a declaration of the invalidity of the adoption, the court held that inasmuch as the boy was given in adoption on Dharam Kunwar's declaration of her husband's authority and married on that footing, she was estopped from disputing the adoption, but the estoppel was held personal to her and did not bind the reversioners.[4] In another case, a young widow, aged 19, had adopted the plaintiff alleging the husband's authority and had his Upanayan performed. She professed to manage the property for him for 18 months, after which she repudiated his adoption, and the court held that since the adoption was in fact invalid, its invalidity could not be cured by any misrepresentation of the widow, and that she was not even estopped from impeaching it on that ground.[5] But this case was distinguished in a later case on the ground that there repudia-

(1) Ajab Singh v. Nanabhan, 25 B. 1 P.C.

(2) Rajendro Nath v. Jogendra Nath, 14 M.I.A. 67.

(3) Har Sankar v. Lal Raghuraj Singh, 29 A. 519 P.C.; Anandrav v. Ganesh, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) 33.

(4) Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh, 30 A. 549; Kannammal v. Virasami, 15 M. 486; Parvatibayamma v. Ramkrishna, 18 M. 145; Parasuramayya v. Venkata, (1927) M.W.N. 311.

(5) Parvathibayamma v. Rama Krishna, 18 M. 145.

tion followed the adoption. If, however, it had been acquiesced in for say 20 or 25 years, then the case would have been quite different.[1] It would thus appear that the court allows an adopter a certain degree of locus penitentiae.

679. Time has a curative effect upon all adoptions, a principle recognized in the law of limitation (§ 684) which permits "only a moderate time within which such delicate and intricate questions as those involved in adoptions shall be brought into dispute."[2] It is sometimes said that no lapse of time can make an invalid adoption valid. This is true. But after a lapse of time, the door of inquiry is closed. And where there has been acquiescence, the court presumes that the adoption must be valid, otherwise the party interested in challenging it would not have suffered it to stand so long. Of course, no estoppel can prevent an enquiry into the truth where an adoption is tainted by fraud, misrepresentation, corruption or collusion.

Estoppel by Acquiescence.

680. But excepting such cases and taking only a normal case, the law is clear, and it was so stated by the Privy Council, that, although the adopted son is bound to prove his title as a fact, if challenged, still where it had been acquiesced in for a long period, say 27 years, every allowance for the absence of evidence to prove such fact was to be favourably entertained, and that the case was analogous to that in which the legitimacy of a person in possession had been acquiesced in for a considerable time and afterwards impeached by a party, who had a right to question the legitimacy, where the defendant in order to defend his status is allowed to invoke against the claimant every presumption which arises from long recognition of his legitimacy by members of his family; and that the case of a Hindu, long recognized as an adopted son, raised even a stronger presumption in favour of the validity of his adoption, arising from the possibility of the loss of his rights in his own family by being adopted into another family.[3] So as regards the adoption of the plaintiff which took place twenty years back, the defendant's father was shown to have been present at the ceremony and afterwards joined with the plaintiff, qua adopted son, in recovering the land from the Patel, obtaining a decree, in execution of which the plaintiff was on the security of the defendant's father put in possession, the court held, the defendant estopped from disputing the adoption by his father's conduct and acquiescence in the plaintiff's title.[4]

681. So as regards the adopter, where it is admitted or proved that the plaintiff was adopted by the defendant, who pleaded her own incapacity as an untonsured widow to invalidate the plaintiff's adoption, the court held her estopped from denying the validity of her own act, after having adopted and acknowledged the plaintiff as her own son, and when the latter might have lost all right in his natural family. "It may be,

(1) Santappayya v. Rangappaya, 18 M. 397 (399).

(2) Jagadamba v. Dakhina, 13 C. 308 (321) P.C., followed in Mohesh Narain v. Taruck Nath, 20 C. 487 (495) P.C.; Kailash Chandra v. Bijay Chandra, 72 I.C. (C.) 680: (1923) C. 18; Ravaji v. Lakshmibai, 11 B. 381 (396); Kannammal v. Virasami, 15 M. 486; Parvatibaiamma v. Rama Krishna, 18 M. 145 (152); Chhote Lal v. Chandrabhan, 45 A. 59 (unchallenged for 48 years); Kanhaya v. Naurang, (1923) L. 374.

(3) Rajendra Nath v. Jogendra Nath, 14 M.I.A. 67 (76, 77); cf. Chandra Shekhar v. Raj Kunwar, (1926) P.C. 91; Sabo Bewa v. Napasun, 2 B.L.R. (App.) 51; Vyas v. Vyas, 24 B. 473; Yamuna v. Dhanna Lal, 114 I.C. (N.) 616.

(4) Chintu v. Dhondu, 11 B.H.C.R. 192 notes; Sadashiv v. Hari, Ib., 190.

that an adoption is not effectual to confer all spiritual benefit upon the manes of the deceased husband, and yet it is effectual to give the boy the civil status of a son to the adopting widow, a status which, like the status of the impotent party to a marriage, voidable on that ground, the widow is by her act estopped from denying."[1] In another case, the plaintiff, a Rani adopted one Balwant Singh in 1899, executed a deed of adoption and got him married, after which she sued him for a declaration of the invalidity of her act, whereupon the Privy Council said: "She has asserted her authority in the most solemn manner under her hand and seal, and her conduct, both before and after that assertion, has been of a like unequivocal character. She could not now be allowed to change her story without grave injustice ensuing to those who have acted in reliance upon her deliberate and repeated representations. The respondent is now severed from his natural family; he has undergone a change of social status which may or may not be beneficial to him, but which has certainly so altered his mode of life as to make a relapse into his former condition a grievous hardship upon him. He and his friends have been driven to expenses in the maintenance of the privileges with which the Rani purported to endow him. He married on the faith of his adoptive mother's word, and no doubt has creditors who have sold him goods or lent him money in like reliance on her good faith. Under these circumstances, the Rani's argument that the doctrine of estoppel does not apply, because the defendant could show no loss or detriment, is without any substance whatever, and she must be held to her word and to the results of her conduct."[2] The same view was taken in another case in which the plaintiff's adoption had been acknowledged and acted upon by his adoptive mother for twenty years, which was held to create an estoppel against her who could not challenge it on the ground of its invalidity,[3] Where the adoptee has his Upanayan performed, or was married in his adopter's family, it involves a definite change of status in law upon which the adopter may be estopped.[4] So also where third parties advance money upon the faith of his adoption. But it is not necessary to formulate a precise plea on the altered position of the adoptee.

Limits of the Rule.

682. There can be no estoppel, unless a party acts with the knowledge of his right and in a manner inconsistent with them. He does not impair his right by merely consenting to a deed which, with or without his consent, was invalid.[5]

683. Estoppel merely creates a personal disqualification affecting only one and one's legal representative. It does not affect the validity of the adoption which may yet be challenged by others (S. 65), claiming by an independent title, though not by the reversioner, if the widow represented the estate.[6]

684. Limitation.—Closely associated with the question of acquiescence is the subject of limitation which limits a party suing for declaring

(1) Ravji v. Lakshmibai, 11 B. 381 (396).

(2) Dharam Kuar v. Balwant Singh, 34 A. 398 (404) P.C., affirming O.A. 30 A. 549; Dharam Prakash v. Kalawati, 50 A. 885.

(3) Santappayya v. Rangappayya, 18 M. 397; Parvatibayamma v. Ram Krishna, 18 M. 145; Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh, 34 A. 398 (404) P.C.

(4) Ib.

(5) Rup Narain v. Gopal, 36 C. 780, (796, 797) P.C.

(6) Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh, 40 A. 593 P.C.; Parvatibayamma v. Rama Krishna, 18 M. 145 (146).

an adoption valid or non-existent and invalid, to six years, calculated, in the former case, from the time "when the rights of the adopted son, as such, are interfered with," and in the latter case, from when the adoption becomes known to the plaintiff.[1] In the first place, it should be added that these articles merely prescribe a period for obtaining a declaration, a relief which is optional to those whose rights are infringed. Consequently, the mere omission to obtain such declaration does not preclude a party from challenging or supporting an adoption in a suit for possession of property.[2]

For Challenging an Adoption.

685. Assuming, however, that a person resorts to the optional remedy here contemplated, and taking first only the case of those who challenge the factum or the validity of an adoption, in will be seen that the starting point for limitation is the knowledge of adoption. It is also the starting point for estoppel and acquiescence. Such knowledge must not necessarily be first hand, though it must be of necessity something more than a floating rumour. The question is one of fact[3] which he who wishes to bring his suit within limitation has to prove. The persons who are interested in maintaining such suits are the adopter and his heirs, and where the adoption is by a widow, her reversioners. Third parties who have become interested in the estate, such as transferees from the alleged adopter, may equally maintain such a suit.[4]

Burden of Proof.

686. The question of the burden of proof in such suits is one of some nicety, and one upon which the courts are not agreed. The Allahabad court holds that the plaintiff who seeks a declaration must establish the invalidity of the defendant's adoption,[5] while the Madras High court maintains the contrary, holding that if the estate had fallen into possession and the plaintiff had to sue for its recovery and the defendant resisted his claim on the ground of his adoption, the burden would unquestionably be on him. Why should then the rule be different if he merely sues for a declaration?[6] But it is submitted, that the two cases are distinguishable, since when the reversioner sues for possession, the title has already become vested in him by law which the defendant has to displace, but till then his interest is merely a spes successionis, and he must follow the ordinary

(1) Lim. Act (IX of 1908), Art. 119.

(2) Ib., Art. 118.

(3) Tirbhuvan v. Rameshar, 28 A. 727 P. C.; Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Naizuddin, 39 C. 418 (432) P. C.; Velaga v. Bandlamudi, 30 M. 308. There was at one time a conflict between the High Courts on the effect of these articles on a suit for possession, the Bombay and Madras High Courts, holding that it became barred; Parvathi v. Saminathan, 20 M. 40; Ratnamasari v. Akilandammal, 26 M. 291; Shrinivas v. Balwant, 37 B. 513; Ramchandra v. Narayan, 27 B. 614; Barot v. Barot, 25 B. 26; Shrinivas v. Hanmant, 24 B. 260, overruling contra in Hari Lal v. Bai Rewa, 21 B. 376; Fannyamma v. Manjayya, 21 B. 159; Padorjirar v. Ramrav, 13 B. 160 also Inda v. Jehangira, (1890) A.W.N. 242. But the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts held contra in Ramchandra v. Ranjit Singh, 27 C. 242 (253-255); Parbhu Lal v. Mylne, 14 C. 401; Baikunta v. Kali Charan, 9 C.W.N. 222; Basudeo v. Gopal, 8 A. 644; Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj, 9 A. 253 (267-269); Nathu Singh v. Gulab Singh, 17 A. 167; Lali v. Murlidhar, 24 A. 195. The latter view is (it is submitted) correct, though the Bombay High Court still maintains its previous view (Srinivas v. Balwant, 37 B. 513), a view upon grounds sufficiently met even by the language of the article.

(4) Yamunabai v. Balshet, 5 Bom. L. R. 584 (587).

(5) S. 3, Lim. Act (IX of 1908); Ayyadorai v. Solai Ammal, 24 M. 405.

(6) Ashrafi v. Rupchand, 30 A. 197.

rule, and would not be entitled to a decree as a matter of course, if the defendant refused to give any evidence.

For Supporting an Adoption.

687. The person primarily entitled to obtain a declaration as to the validity of a person's adoption is the adoptee himself, though others, such as his heirs, and transferees may equally maintain such a suit. The right to sue commences as soon as the adoptee's rights are interfered with, and not merely denied.[1] Again, such a suit, to quote the language of Art. 119 of the Limitation Act, may be brought only "to obtain a declaration that an adoption is valid," that is to say, it must not be a suit to establish the factum but merely its validity.[2] The subject of limitation for possession calls for no reference here, since it follows the general law.

Adoption by Fraud.

688. Again, no estoppel can shut out an enquiry into an adoption, if it was brought about by fraud, corruption, etc., mentioned in Section 46.[3] No person is estopped for merely expressing an opinion which may or may not be correct. An erroneous opinion, given by a person as to the law of adoption, or even that an adoption was valid in law, does not estop him from afterwards disputing its validity.[4] It is only a misrepresentation on a matter of fact that creates an estoppel, though such misrepresentation may have been made innocently under a mistake or misrepresentation.[5] There is no estoppel unless one person causes or permits another to believe in an adoption. If, therefore, A claimed an adopted son of B, and B's true heir, C, did nothing to oppose him, but on the other hand, supported him, A could not hold C estopped, because C had done nothing to alter A's position to his prejudice[6] The facts might be relied upon as an admission, but where C had admitted or denied A's adoption as it suited him, the Privy Council were not prepared to attach any value to them, apart from creating an estoppel which they did not create.[7] Such act may also amount to an acquiescence, but mere acquiescence does not create an estoppel,[8] though it sets limitation in motion,[9] and may, apart from limitation, let in the rule stated in the proviso.

689. Working Rules.—From the foregoing discussion it will be observed that the highest judicial minds are agreed upon the following working rules in determining the question of adoption:—

(1) First and foremost, they require, and look for documentary evidence. If it is wanting, they demand to know why. Its absence leaves a serious hiatus in the case. (§ 663.)

(2) Next to writing, the court pays regard to the admitted facts and circumstances. (§§ 669-671.)

---

(1) Rajagopala v. Nattu, 34 M. 329.

(2) Ningawa v. Ramappa, 28 B. 94.

(3) Sukhbasi Lal v. Guman Singh, 2 A. 366; Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh, 34 A. 398; Chintu v. Dhondu, 11 B.H.C.R. 192-note; Chaitko v. Janaki, 11 B.H.C.R. 199; Ravji v. Lakshmi Bai, 11 B. 381 (396).

(4) Gopee Lall v. Chandrabolee, 19 W. R. 12 (13); Raj Narain v. Universal Life Assurance Co., 7 C. 594; Kuverji v. Babai, 19 B. 374 (390, 391).

(5) Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 20 C. 296 (310) P.C., overruling contra in Ganga Sahai v. Hira Singh, 2 A. 809; Vishnu v. Krishnan, 7 M. 3.

(6) Har Shankar v. Lal Raghuraj Singh, 29 A. 519 (533, 534) P.C.

(7) Ib., p. 534; Peddamuthulaty v. Timma, 2 M. H. C. R. 270 (278); Rajan v. Basuva, ib., p. 428; Uda v. Imamuddin, 1 A. 82; Taruck Chunder v. Hurro Sunker, 22 W.R. 267.

(8) Papamma v. Appa Rao, 16 M. 384 (391); Gurulingaswami v. Ramalakshmammal, 18 M. 53 (60); Vaithilingam v. Murugaian, 37 M. 529.

(9) Ram Rau v. Raja Rau, 2 M. H. C.R. 114.

(3) An admission of adoption is very strong evidence of it against the person admitting it; but it may be explained away.

(4) In the fourth place, they consider the trend of antecedent probabilities.

(5) Believing or disbelieving oral evidence according as it is supported by facts mentioned in the preceding paragraphs.

(6) Failing which, they require clear, cogent, and consistent evidence in support of a right which disappoints the natural heirs.

(7) Where, however, an adoption has been acted upon for a length of time, say at least for twenty or thirty years, without any opposition, the court considers it a sufficient proof of adoption, presuming its validity from its long continuance, and the impossibility of proving its details.

(8) In appraising oral evidence, while regard must necessarily be had to the education, position and character of the witness, his testimony must be judged in the light of probability.

(9) In the case of young ignorant women and those recently afflicted by the death of their husbands, the court must be satisfied that the adoption was not only a voluntary but also a deliberate act justified by the antecedent probabilities, and in the case of pardanashin widows even stronger evidence is necessary.

690. Pleading of Adoption.—It is, of course, an ordinary rule of pleading that no party can be permitted to spring upon his adversary a new plea at the close of the evidence. Where a party generally denied an adoption and it was put in issue and tried, he could not at the close of the evidence be permitted to raise a new plea that the adoption was invalid in law, on the ground that under Hindu Law, there could be no valid adoption of a daughter's son. This is not a pure question of law, for though the prohibition is the general rule, it may be varied by custom, and it was, therefore, held, that a party challenging an adoption could not raise such a mixed plea at a late stage.[1] So following this case, the Madras court declined to entertain a plea on appeal impeaching an adoption on the ground that the adoptee was the younger brother of the adopter.[2]

59. Effect of void adoption. (1) A person whose adoption is for any reason void, acquires no right as an adopted son.[3]

(2) And where a gift is made to such person, described as an adopted son, the adoption failing, the gift also fails,[4] unless it was intended as a gift to a personal designata, and the adoption was not a condition of the gift.[5]

Illustrations.

(a) A bequeathes a legacy "to B whom I have adopted." A directs his wife C to perform the ceremonies and bring up B. C fails to perform the ceremonies and the adoption is invalid. A's bequest takes effect for he had intended to benefit B as a persona designata.[6]

(1) Rup Narain v. Gopal, 36 C. 780 (795) P.C.

(2) Sindigi v. Sindigi, 32 M.L.J. 47: 38 I.C. 164.

(3) Rup Narain v. Gopal, 36 C. 780 (795) P.C.

(4) Fanindra v. Rajeshwar, 11 C. 463 (485) P.C.

(5) Nidhomoni v. Saroda Pershad, 26 W.R. 91 P.C.

(6) Ibid.

(b) But if in the last case, A bequeaths a legacy to B by virtue of B being his adopted son, then on the failure of B's adoption, A's bequest would also fail as A intended to benefit B qua his adopted son.[1]

691. Analogous Law.—The first clause of this section declares the general rule,[2] while the second clause is really a rule of construction. The question whether a gift is intended to benefit a person irrespective of, or on account of, his adoption is a question of intention to be collected from the wording of the instrument. In this respect, the rule follows the English Law.

692. Effect of Invalid Adoption.—Where an adoption is for any reason invalid, the adoptee acquires no right in the family of his adopter. He is as good as if he had never been adopted. His natural rights remain. If there is no adoption, nothing could have been acquired and nothing lost. He has not even the right of maintenance in the family of his adopter.[3] So much is clear. Nor can he claim anything by estoppel. So where a dancing girl adopted a girl for purposes of prostitution, and the adoption failed on the ground of its immoral purpose, the court overruled the plea of estoppel holding that estoppel could not be relied upon to defeat a prohibition on the ground of public policy.[4]

693. Construction of Bequest.—But where a gift or a bequest is made to an adoptee whose adoption fails, the question whether the gift or bequest will, nevertheless, hold good depends upon the donor's intention, the question in such cases being whether the donor intended to benefit the adoptee by reason of his adoption or even independently of it. So where the testator declared in his will that he had loved and brought up one Ardha as his son, who was very much attached to him and his wife, and that he had a mind to give him a share of his estate, but that he had taken him in adoption, and as such bequeathed to him his property, but the adoption failed as there had been no ceremony of giving and taking, the Privy Council held the gift, nevertheless, valid as made to a persona designata, whom the donor intended to take for reasons independent of adoption.[5] Such was also held to be the case where a will was to the following effect: "I declare that I give my property to K, whom I have adopted," followed by the direction, "My wives shall perform the ceremonies according to the Shastras, and bring him up."[6] This case was distinguished by the same Board in a case where the testator declared that he had secretly adopted one Jagadindra whom he authorized to offer oblations of water and pinda, "to me and my ancestors after my death by virtue of your being my adopted son." The adoption being held invalid, their Lordships held, the gift also failed, as the testator had made his gift by virtue of the adoption and not independently of it.[7] Their Lordships followed this case in another case, in which the testator had similarly declared that he had adopted his sister's son seven years ago, adding: "He is my heir and successor (or malik). If, after this agreement, a son is born to me, half the property would be received by him and half by my adopted son." The

(1) Fanindra v. Rajeshwar, 11 C. 463 (485) P.C.

(2) Bawani v. Ambabay, 1 M. H. C. R. 363.

(3) Bawani v. Ambabay, 1 M. H. C. R. 363 (367, 368), followed in Lakshmappa v. Ramava, 12 B.H.C.R. 364 (395); Rajcoomaree v. Nobocoomar, 2 Borr. 137; Kandaiya v. Chokhammal, 28 M.L.T. 106.

(4) Kandaiya v. Chokkammal, 28 M. L.J. 106.

(5) Biraswar v. Ardha Chander, 19 C. 452 (461) P.C.

(6) Nidhoomoni v. Saroda Pershad, 26 W.R. 91 P.C.

(7) Fanindra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 463 (485) P.C.

adoption of a sister's son being held invalid, the Privy Council construed the gift as dependent upon the adoption, since it was declared liable to variation on the birth of a legitimate son.[1] The result would of course have been different if the gift had not been liable to variation.[2]

694. These are comparatively easy cases. But their Lordships were not quite so sure as to what was intended by a will in which the testator had directed the widow of his deceased son to adopt the son of his nephew, to whom he had bequeathed his residuary estate in the following words: "My property which may remain as a residue after all the things in my will have been done, I give to this lad as his inheritance." The controversy centred on the construction of the words, "after all things mentioned in my will have been done," whether they were to be read as qualifying the preceding word "residue," or the following words, "I give," in which case, the gift would be conditional on the adoption which was one of the things mentioned in the will, which was the construction placed on them by the High court, and which their Lordships affirmed, holding the words "very obscure" and the other construction not so clear as to justify disturbance of the decree appealed against.[3] This case illustrates the truth of what was said in another case: "The distinction between what is a description only, and what is the reason or motive of a gift or bequest, may often be very fine, but it is a distinction which must be drawn from the consideration of the language and the surrounding circumstances.[4] A party may implement a construction by his own conduct. Such was the case where a Zemindar, A, with the consent of his wife adopted a son B, and appointed him his heir, after which he married a second wife and made another adoption of C, when his first adopted son B was still alive. He divided the estate between them, and B managed C's estate during his minority. On the adopter's death, B, however, laid claim to the entire estate, alleging that A could not have legally alienated his estate in favour of C or legally adopted him. The Privy Council held C's adoption during B's lifetime invalid. They also held that B's acquiescence in A's partition and in C's possession and his own management of his estate for him during A's life in no way prejudiced his claim, but inasmuch as A could have given a portion of his estate to C, during his lifetime without B's consent, B was bound to deliver to C that portion of A's estate which A could have given to C, if the gift had been inter vivos.[5]

60. (1) The adoption of a person has, from the date of his adoption, the effect of determining all his rights and liabilities in the natural family,[6] but not so as to divest him of any property which may have vested in him prior to that date;[7] provided that in territories subject to the Mayukh school of law, he must relinquish any estate he may have inherited from his natural father.[8]

Effect on natural family.

(1) Lali v. Murlidhar, 28 A. 488 (495, 496) P.C.

(2) Murari Lal v. Kundan Lal, 31 A. 339.

(3) Karamsi v. Karsondas, 23 B. 271 (277-279) P.C.

(4) Fanindra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 463 (484) P.C., cited in Lali v. Murlidhar, 28 A. 495 P.C.

(5) Rungama v. Atchama, 4 M.I.A. 1.

(6) Manu, IX-142, cited in Mit. I-XI-32.

(7) Behari Lal v. Kailash Chunder, 56 C. 1135; Sri Raja Venkata v. Sri Raja Rangayya, 29 M. 437.

(8) Lal Harihar v. Bajrang, (1937) P. C. 242. Dattatraya v. Govind, 40 B. 428.

(2) But no adoption severs the natural relationship of the adopted son with his natural family so as to exempt him from the prohibition which would otherwise bind him as regards marriage and adoption.[1]

695. Analogous Law.—The two rules here stated are the outcome of the view partly embodied in the following texts:—

Manu.—"A given son must never claim[2] the family and estate of his natural father: the funeral cake follows the family and the estate; but of him, who has given away his son, the funeral oblation is extinct."[3]

Vrihat Manu.—"Sons given, purchased and the rest, retain the relation of Sapinda to the natural father as extending to the fifth and seventh degree; like this, their general family, which is also that of their adopted."[4]

The rule that an adopted son cannot be divested of the estate which had already vested in him follows the general rule that an estate once vested cannot be divested.[5] Nor does it disqualify one for adoption.[6]

696. Adoptee's Position in the Natural Family.—An adoption effects a complete severance of the adopted son from his natural family. His adoption is said to operate as a civil death of the adoptee in the natural family and his re-birth in the family of his adopter. But this is scarcely correct. For although adopted into another family, the adopted still retains the property which had vested in him prior to his adoption, which, of course, he could not be permitted to do if he were civilly dead. The question is what property he can retain and what he must forego depends upon the text of Manu already quoted (§ 695) in which occurs a word and a phrase which have given rise to some conflict of views between some cases of the Bombay and the other High Courts. That text declares that upon his adoption, the adopted son shall not "haret" an estate of his natural father. The word "haret" may mean "take" or "claim" and the estate of the natural father may mean, not only such estate over which he has complete disposing power, or merely a coparcenary right, over which his power of disposal is limited. This difficulty does not arise under the Dayabhag law, which recognizes no coparcenary between the father and his sons, and since the word "take" points to futurity and eludes the retention of an estate already taken, it has been held that, since the disqualification to take anything from the estate of the natural father only arises upon his adoption, it follows that both under the Dayabhag as well as under the Mitakshara, the son would retain the estate that has become vested in him either by survivorship, inheritance, gift, devise or otherwise;[7] but the Bombay High Court

(1) Vrihat Manu, cited in Datt. Mim., VI-9 (Suth.) 73; Mootia v. Uppea, (1858) M.S.D.A. 117; Dhanna Mal v. Parmeshri Lal, (1928) L. 9.

(2) Skr. "haret" lit. "take"—25 S. B. E. p. 355. See Kesarbai v. Shivasangji, (1932) B. 654 (658).

(3) IX-142, cited in Mit., I-XI-32; Mayukh, IV-V-21 (Mandlik), 59; Datt. Mim., VI-§6; Datt. Ch. II-8 (Suth.), 72, 119.

(4) Cited in Datt. Mim., VI § 9 (Suth.) 73.

(5) Moniram v. Keri, 5 C. 776 (788) P.C.; Annamah v. Mabbu, 8 M.H.C.R. 108; Venkata v. Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (447-451) (Mitakshara cases), in which the rule here stated and the texts bearing thereon have been fully discussed. O.A. Narasimha v. Parthasarathy, 37 M. 199 P.C. (decided on a different point); Behari Lal v. Kailas Chander, 1 C.W.N. 121 (Dayabhag case); Maroti v. Laxman, 5 N.L.J. 58: 65 I.C. 362; contra in Dattatraya v. Gobind, 40 B. 429 (438), distinguished in Mahableshwar v. Subramanya, 47 B. 542.

(6) Papamma v. Appa Rau, 16 M. 384 (396, 397).

(7) Beharilal v. Kailash Chunder, 1 C.W.N. 121; Shyamcharan v. Sricharan, 56 C. 1135; Sri Raja Venkatta v. Sri Raja Rangayya, 29 M. 437; Ramachandra v. Harischandra, 25 N. 139 (property acquired by partition).

reading the text in the light of Mayukh,[1] have, in some cases, held that such son cannot be permitted to retain an estate not acquired by survivorship or partition,[2] since an estate which he had inherited or which he had succeeded after his father who had died as the sole surviving coparcener was the estate of his natural father which he must surrender up to his father's natural heirs upon his adoption.[3]

697. In Bombay, where the adoption of a married man having a son is permitted, it is held that on the adoption of such father, though the wife as part of him follows into the new family, and though she was then enciente, the son born to her would be the son of the adopted family,[4] still the ante-adoption son does not pass with his father into the new family; but remains a member of, and retains his rights in his own family.[5]

698. Apart from the effect of adoption upon vested rights, it is unquestionable that, from the moment of his adoption, the adoptee loses all future interest he may acquire in his own family and vice versa.[6] His severance from his natural family is so complete that no mutual rights as to succession to property can arise between them, so that, while he cannot inherit to any of his natural relations, the latter equally cannot inherit to him. His heirs are his new sapindas of the adoptive family, his own relations of his natural family being placed outside the catena of his heirs as such,[7] so that on his adoption, the persons who inherit to him are naturally his own heirs and not those of his father.[8]

699. An adopted son, on adoption, ceases to be liable for the debts or other obligations for which he would have been liable as a member of his natural family, except, of course, such debts and obligations for which he may be liable by reason of the property which he may have inherited or acquired before his adoption.[9]

Marriage and Adoption.

700. The adopted son is a mere substitute for a real son, and as such, he has, by usage, acquired a filial status and rights in his adoptive family. The creation of such a jural relationship does not sever the tie of blood which binds him to his natural family. He cannot, therefore, marry in his natural family within the prohibited degrees, nor can he adopt from that family a boy whom he would not have adopted if he had remained in that family.[10] But on this question usage may have something to say.

(1) Ch. IV S. 5, Pl. 22, 23 quoted in Kesarbai v. Shivsangji, (1932) B. 654 (659). There is nothing special in these texts to support the Bombay view.

(2) Mahableshwar v. Subramanya, 47 B. 542; Manikbai v. Gokuldas, 49 B. 520.

(3) Dattatraya v. Govind, 40 B. 428; Mahableshwar v. Subramanya, 47 B. 542; Kesarbai v. Shivsangji, (1932) B. 654 (661, 662) dissenting from Ramchandra v. Manubai, 43 B. 774, in which Scott, C.J. and Hayward, J. would divest him of all estate howsoever and whensoever acquired on the ground that adoption should be treated as the adoptee's civil death in the natural and rebirth in the adopted family.

(4) Kalgavda v. Somappa, 33 B. 669.

(5) Advi v. Fakirappa, 42 B. 547; Kesarbai v. Shivsangji, (1932) B. 654.

(6) Duttnaraen v. Ajeet Singh, 1 Beng. S. R. 26; 6 I.D. (O. S.) 20; Srinivasa v. Kuppan, 1 M.H.C.R. 180; Muthayya v. Minakshi, 25 M. 394; Venkata v. Rangayya, 29 M. 437; Mahableshwar v. Subramanya, 47 B. 542; Maroti v. Laxman, 5 N.L.J. 58: 65 I.C. 362, cf. Moni Ram v. Keri Kolitani, 5 C. 776 P.C.

(7) Tewari Raghunath v. Subhadra, 3 Luck. 76 P.C. : (1928) P.C. 87 : 55 I.A. 139, Muthayya v. Minakshi, 25 M. 394; Bhau Saheb v. Ramgauda, 25 Bom. L.R. 813.

(8) Manik Bai v. Gokul Das, 49 B. 520.

(9) Pranvullubh v. Dookritu, (1824) Beng. S. R. 4; Kashee Pershad v. Bunseedhur, 4 N.W.P.S.D.A. 343.

(10) Mootia v. Uppea, (1858) M.S.D. A. 117; Dhanna Mal v. Parmeshri Lal, (1928) L. 9.

61. Rights in the adopted family. In the absence of a natural son, an adopted son acquires all the rights and is subject to all the liabilities of a natural son in the family of his adoptive father, including the right of lineal and collateral inheritance.[1]

701. Analogous Law.—The theory of adoption implies a complete change of paternity, and an adopted son must, in all respects, be considered as having been begotten by his adoptive father.[2] It is now settled that the adopted son possesses in the family of his adopter the same status and rights as an auras (or lawfully begotten) son,[3] being as such, entitled to enforce a partition against his adoptive father of his coparceners, and to inherit both lineally and collaterally to his adoptive relations,[4] except in a few instances to be presently considered. As Mitter, J. observed: "According to Hindu Law, an adopted son occupies the same position, and has the same rights and privileges in the family of the adopter as the legitimate son, except in a few specified instances, which have been clearly and carefully noted and defined by writers on the subject of adoption. The theory of adoption depends upon the principle of a complete severance of the child adopted from the family, in which he is born, both in respect of the paternal and the maternal line, and his complete substitution into the adopter's family, as if he were born in it."[5]

702. The property inherited by the adopted son from his adoptive father would be ancestral or self-acquired according to the nature of the property inherited by him. It is not in the nature of a gift to the son, but is his inheritance.[6]

703. He is the adopted son of both his adoptive father and of his wife whether she consented to his adoption or not. Consequently, he succeeds both to him and to her[7] because a son adopted by the father becomes also the son of his wife, even though the adoption might have been made when the wife was dead[8] or she being then living, without her consent or in spite of her opposition, the reason being the identity of such son's rights with those of the real son. As such, he would inherit to her

---

(1) Pratab Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 P.C.

(2) Narasammal v. Balaramacharlu, 1 M.H.C.R. 420; Pratab Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 P.C.

(3) Sumboo Chunder v. Narain, 3 Knapp 55; Pudmacoomari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P.C.; Kali Komul v. Uma Shunker, 6 C. 256 (259, 260) F. B. O. A. Uma Shunker v. Kali Komul, 10 C. 232 P.C.; Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 (287, 288) P.C., reversing Bachoo v. Nagindas, 16 Bom.L.R. 263; Pratab Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 P.C.

(4) Sumboo Chunder v. Narain, 8 C. 302 P.C.; Uma Shunker v. Kali Komul, 6 C. 256 (259, 260) F.B., O.A. Kali Komul v. Uma Shunker, 10 C. 232 P. C.; Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 (287, 288) P.C., reversing Bachoo v. Nagindas, 16 Bom.L.R. 263.

(5) Uma Shunker v. Kali Komul, 6 C. 256 (259, 260) F.B., affirmed O.A. Kali Komul v. Uma Shunker, 10 C. 232 P.C., approved in Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 (288) P.C.

(6) Heera Singh v. Buryar Singh, 1 Agra 256.

(7) Sham Kuar v. Gaya Din, 1 A. 255 F.B.; Gunga Mya v. Kishen Kishore, 3 Beng. S.R. 128; Gunga Pershad v. Brijessuree, (1859) S.D.A.B. 109; Puddo Kumara v. Juggut Kishore, 5 C. 615; Uma Sunker v. Kali Komul, 6 C. 256 (263) F.B.O.A. Kali Komul v. Uma Shunker, 10 C. 232 P.C., approved in Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 (288) P. C., overruling contra in Morun Mose v. Bejoy, W.R. (A. N.) 121; Chinarama Krishna v. Minatchi, 7 M. H.C.R. 245; Sundarammal v. Venkatasubba, 49 M. 941.

(8) Sundaramma v. Venkatasubba, 49 M. 941; Sowntharapandian v. Peria Veeru, 56 M. 759 (765) F.B.

own stridhan and to her other relations.[1] The case, however, is different where there are more than one wife, in which case, the son becomes only the son of the wife who had conjoined in the adoption.[2] So when one S, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara school, married four wives in succession, and in conjunction with his first wife, by whom he had no issue he adopted a son H, after which he had a son G by his second wife: S predeceased his fourth wife, M having had no issue by her. On M dying intestate, both H and G were held equally entitled to inherit M's stridhan as the sapindas of S.[3]

704. Adoptee's Rights in his Adopter's Family.—It has now been settled by a series of rulings of the Privy Council, that except in the cases and to the extent expressly limited by the texts, the rights and liabilities of an adopted son are exactly identical with those of a natural born son, that is to say, so far as regards rights, he is entitled to inherit to his adoptive father, and the latter's natural or adoptive father, grandfather and his other more distant lineal ancestors. He is equally entitled to inherit to his father's wife who is treated as his adoptive mother, whether she took part in his adoption or not, and to her relations, such as her father and brothers.[4] And conversely, both the adoptive father and mother and their relations are entitled to inherit to him.[5]

Collateral Succession.

705. Similarly, he is entitled to inherit to their relations collaterally, such as their brothers, sons, and other collateral relations.[6] So where a legitimate and adopted son survive a father and the legitimate son afterwards dies the adopted son takes the whole property by survivorship.[7] So he is entitled to succeed to his father's daughter's son[8] his father's brother's son,[9] paternal uncle,[10] father's first[11] or third cousin[12] and grandfather's first cousin.[13] So an adopted son of one daughter will share equally with the natural son of another daughter in the inheritance left by his natural grandfather.[14]

706. Where a man takes a son in adoption after the death of his first wife, the adopted son becomes a step-brother of a daughter by the first wife. The adopted son becomes the full son of the wife, joining in

(1) Sundaramma v. Venkatasubba, 49 M. 941; Sowntharapandian v. Peria Veeru, 56 M. 759 F.B.

(2) Venkata v. Parthasarathy, 37 M. 199 (220) P.C.; Annapurni v. Forbes, 23 M. 1 (9) P.C., approving Kasheeaburee v. Greeshchunder, (1864) W.R. (Sup. Vol.) 71.

(3) Gangadhar v. Hiralal, 43 C. 944; Joy Kishore v. Panchoon, 4 C.L.R. 531; Surjokant v. Mohesh, 9 C. 70.

(4) Datt. Mim., 1-§-22; Sundaramma v. Venkatasubba, 49 M. 941 (945).

(5) Kali Komul v. Uma Shunker, 10 C. 232 P.C.; Radha Prasad v. Ranee Moni, 33 C. 947; Gangadhar v. Hiralal, 43 C. 944; Partab Singh v. Agarsingh, 43 B. 778 P.C.; Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270, distinguished in Vankamamidi v. Vankamamidi, 38 M.L.T. 86 (89), in which contra in Narasimappa v. Chinnakeanchappa, 38 I.C. (M.) 244, dissented from.

(6) Padma Kumari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P.C.; Mithila law the same, Chandeshwar v. Bisheswar, 5 Pat. 777 (850); contra in the Punjab, Tirath Ram v. Kahan Devi, 1 L. 588; 60 I.C. 101.

(7) Rungamma v. Atchamma, 4 M. I. A. 1 (103); Sudanund v. Bonomallee, Marsh 317.

(8) Padma Kumari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P.C.

(9) Bamundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M.I.A. 169; Harekchand v. Bejoy Chand, 9 C.W. N. 795.

(10) Lokenath v. Shamasoondaree, (1858) S.D.A.B. 1863.

(11) Sumbhoochunder v. Narain, 5 W. R. 100 P.C.

(12) Dino Nath v. Gopal, 6 C. L. R. 379.

(13) Mokundo v. Bykunt, 6 C. 289.

(14) Tara Mohun v. Kripa Moyee, 9 W.R. 423; Uma Shankker v. Kali Komal, 6 C. 256 (259, 260) F. B. followed in Surjokant v. Mohesh Chunder, 9 C. 70.

the adoption, and the stepson of the other.[1] And so an adopted son by one wife is entitled to inherit the stridhan of another wife equally with the legitimate son of a third wife as his predeceased father's sapindas,[2] So an adopted son of the maternal grandfather of a deceased man, though the gotra into which he was adopted was not the same as the latter's was an heir nearer to him than such maternal grandfather's grandnephew.[3]

Rights commence with Adoption.

707. Such rights, however only arise on adoption. Even in the case of an adoption by the widow, though the adoption by her is to her husband, still the adoptee's rights do not relate back to the death of the husband[4] except, it is said, in the case of a trading partnership where the adopted son takes the place of the deceased as from the date of his death,[5] thus preventing its automatic dissolution.[6]

Time when the Rights arise.

62. (1) Save as otherwise provided in clause (3), the rights of an adopted son arise at adoption.[7]

(2) An adopted son cannot dispute an alienation made by the adoptive father before his adoption; and on his adoption he would be bound by an alienation or contracts made by his adoptive father or any other manager of the family to the same extent as a natural son.[8]

Relating back of rights, when adopter a woman.

(3) The rights of a son adopted by a widow do not relate back to the death of her husband,[9] except in the following cases, and to the following extent, namely:—

(a) His adoption relates back to the death of her husband for the purpose of continuing a family trading partnership of which he was a member;[10]

(b) He divests the coparcenary interest of the husband which has become vested in another by survivorship;[11]

---

(1) Gunomani v. Devi, 54 I. C. (C.) 897.

(2) Surjokant v. Mohesh Chunder, 9 C. 70; Raja v. Subbaraya, 7 M. 253.

(3) Joy Kashore v. Penchooi, 4 C. L.R. 538; Gangadhar v. Hiralal, 43 C. 944.

(4) Pudma Kumari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P.C.

(5) Bamundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M.I.A. 169; Harekchand v. Bejoychand, 9 C.W. N. 795.

(6) S. 253 (10), Contract Act (IX of 1872); Kopurchand v. Narainjainall, (1897) P.R. 20.

(7) Collector of Madura v. Motoo Ramalinga, 12 M.I.A. 397 (443); Bamundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M.I.A. 169 (180) Girdharilall v. Kantoo Lal, 22 W.R. 56 P.C.; Raghunadha (Sri) v. Brozo Kishore, 1 M. 69 P.C.; Krishnarav v. Rangrav, 4 B. H. C. R. (A.C.) 1 (4); Kustur Bhavani v. Appa, 5 B. 621 (628, 629); Rambhat v. Lakshman, 5 B. 630 (637); Goura v. Chummun, W.R. (S. N.) 340; Lakshman v. Radhabai, 11 B. 609; Moro Narayan v. Balaji, 19 B. 809 (815); Ramakrishna v. Tripurabai, 33 B. 88 (92).

(8) Rangamma v. Atchama, 4 M.I.A. 1; Raghunada (Sri) v. Brozo Kishore, 1 M. 69 P.C.; Venkata v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 P.C.; Surendra v. Kala, 12 C.W.N. 668; Sudanand v. Bonomalee, 2 Hay 205; Purshotam v. Vasudev, 8 B.H. C. R. (O. C.) 196.

(9) Kishenmunee v. Oodwant, 3 H. S.D. 220 (304); 6 I.D. (O. S.) 902; Ramkishen v. Srimuttee, 3 B.S.R. 367 (489); 6 I.D. (O. S.) 1038; Bamundoss v. Mt. Tarinee, (1850) B.S.D. 533 F. B. affirmed O.A. 7 M.I.A. 169; Narain Mal v. Kooer Narain, 5 C. 251; Rambhat v. Lakshman, 5 B. 630; Lakshman v. Radhabai, 11 B. 609; Antaji v. Dattaji, 19 B. 36; Narayen v. Balaji, 19 B. 809; Ramkrishna v. Tripurabai, 33 B. 88; Ambika v. Dwarka, 30 A. 95.

(10) Haroor Mohomed, (In re), 14 B. 189.

(11) Bachoo v. Mankorebai, 29 B. 51, O.A. 31 B. 373 P.C.

(c) He may set aside an antecedent gift of her husband's property made by her, and in the case of other alienations, he may dispute their propriety if unsupported by legal necessity or benefit.[1]

Clause (1).

708. Analogous Law.—The rules here stated are really illustrative of the general rule declaratory of the rights of an adopted son. (§ 50.) As he is the image of the natural son, his rights and liabilities are also identical. This is so as regards clause (1) which is amply supported by authorities. And so are the other clauses.

709. So far as regards the adoptive father, it is now settled that the adopted son only acquires his right as son from the moment of his adoption. What those rights are must depend upon the personal law to which the family is subject. For instance, since there is no distinction between ancestral and self-acquired property in Bengal, where the father possesses the absolute right of disposal, and since the same right is possessed by the Mitakshara father in respect of his self-acquired property, it follows that an adoptive father may dispose of all such property by a gift inter vivos[2] or by will,[3] even if it should have the effect of completely disinheriting his adopted son with whom he makes no implied contract that he will not make a will[4] or refrain from exercising his legal right of disposing of his property at his pleasure.[5] But if there has been a previous express agreement restricting his right, made in consideration of the adoption with the parent of the adopted son, he would be bound by it. But he is then bound because of the contract and not because of the adoption. In this view, it is, of course, clear that an adopted son in a Mitakshara family becomes a coparcener in the joint family property of his adoptive father from the moment of his adoption.[6] And if the property be his father's ancestral property, it becomes his ancestral property in which he takes the same vested interest from his adoption as a natural son would, from his birth.[7] (§§ 701-702.)

Clause (2).

710. Consequently, he cannot, any more than the auras son, question the propriety of his father's prior alienation, or the subsequent alienation of his property, which his natural son could not question. Hence the Bengal father may dispose of all his property,[8] and the Mitakshara father his self-acquired property by an act inter vivos[9] or by will,[10] and thus disinherit his adopted son. The adopted son is, of course, equally bound by the contracts and other obligations of his adoptive father to which his natural son would be subject. But he is not bound by any condition that his natural father may have acceded to as contingent upon

(1) See foot-note (9) at p. 255.

(2) Rungama v. Atchama, 4 M.I.A. 1.

(3) Sadanund v. Bonomalee, 2 Hay 205; Purshotam v. Vasudev, 8 B.H.C. R. (O.C.) 196.

(4) Venkata v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 P.C.

(5) Surendra v. Kala, 12 C. W. N. 668.

(6) Sumboo Chunder v. Naraini, 5 W. R. 100 P.C., followed in Pudma Coomari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P.C.; Kali Komul v. Uma Shunder, 10 C. 232 P.C.; Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 (287) P. C.; Gangadhar v. Hiralal, 43 C. 944.

(7) Bambhat v. Lakshman, 5 B. 630 (635).

(8) Venkata v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 P.C.; Surendra v. Kala, 12 C.W.N. 668.

(9) Rungama v. Atchama, 4 M.I.A. 1.

(10) Purshotam v. Vasudev, 8 B.H.C. R. (O.C.) 196; Sudanand v. Bonomalee, 2 Hay. 205; Venkata Narasimha v. Subba Rao, 46 M. 300 (316).

his adoption, unless it is sanctioned by custom; otherwise an arrangement by which the right of the adopted son is curtailed after adoption is ineffectual to defeat his legal right. Where, therefore, in consequence of an agreement made with his natural father, the adoptive father made certain dispositions of property to take effect after his adoption, the Privy Council held the dispositions invalid as contrary to Hindu Law.[1]

Clause (3).

711. Retrospective Rights.—Except in the cases mentioned in this clause the adopted son acquires rights only as from the moment of his adoption. Where, therefore, the widow had made an adoption after surrendering her estate to her daughter, the adopted son cannot avoid the surrender.[2]

Mother's Alienations.

712. In such cases, the adopted son cannot question the propriety of his adoptive father's previous alienations; he is held to possess that right when the adoption is by the widow.[3] And where there have been two adoptions, the fact that the first adopted son had failed to question an alienation does not preclude him from so doing, because he, as the second adoptee, is in no way the representative of the first.[4]

713. It follows from the fact that adoption to a person by his widow does not relate back to his death, except for certain purposes mentioned in the last section, that an adopted son, no more than an after-born son S. 162 (2) can question the propriety of a prior alienation of his adoptive father. Consequently, where he bequeathed full rights in his ancestral estate to his wife and by the same will authorised her to make an adoption, whereupon she adopted a boy, providing, however, in the adoption that the adopted boy shall only succeed to the estate on her death, the court held that the adoptive son could not challenge the bequest on the ground that his adoption related back to the testator's demise, and that on his death the bequest being void the estate became vested in him.[5] But, of course, in such a case, apart from the husband's bequest, the condition imposed by the widow would be void.[6]

Clause (3) (a).

714. Effect on Trading Partnership.—Under the ordinary law a firm of partnership dissolves upon the death of a partner and his heir does not ipso facto become its member, since the continuance of a partnership depends upon mutual consent and confidence of the partners.[7] These incidents, however, do not apply to an ancient family trade in which the partnership continues unaffected by the deaths of old members and the births of new once.[8] As such, a partnership, of which the father was a member, would

(1) Krishnamurthi v. Krishnamurthi, 50 M. 508 (528) P.C.

(2) Rama v. Dhondi, 47 B. 678.

(3) Hanmant v. Krishna, 49 B. 604 (606, 607), distinguishing Bhoobun Moyee v. Ram Kishore, 10 M.I.A. 279.

(4) Ib., 607, 608.

(5) Durji v. Kanhaiya Lal, 49 A. 579 (586, 587), following Vinayak v. Govindrao, 6 B.H.C.R. 224; Lakshmi v. Subramanya, 12 M. 490; Narayansami v. Ramasami, 14 M. 172; Ganpati v. Savitri, 21 M. 10; G. V. Narasimha Rao v. Nyapathi Subba Rao, 46 M. 300; Harendra, v. Shibo, 3 I.C. (C.) 378.

(6) Krishnamurthi v. Krishnamurthi, 50 M. 508 (527, 528) P.C., reversing O. A. 49 M.L.J. 252: 85 I. C. 882 (1925) M. 932.

(7) Sokkanadha v. Sokkanadha, 28 M. 344; Ramanathan v. Yegappa, 30 M.L.J. 241.

(8) Haroon Mahomed, (In re), 14 B. 189; in Lutchmanen v. Siva, 26 C. 349 (354), Sale, J., observed that a member by birth can only become a member of such partnership by a consentient act on the part of himself and the partners. But these remarks were obiter and made with reference to the joinder of parties, as such, followed in Lalji v. Keshowji, 37 B. 340; Anant Ram v. Channulal, 25 A. 378.

continue in spite of his death, his son taking his father's place, whether then living or posthumous. As such, if a son was afterwards adopted, his adoption relates back to the death of the father, so that the partnership is deemed to continue with him added as a partner from the date of the father's demise.[1]

715. Right of Survivorship.—In a Mitakshara family, an adoption is deemed to be a new birth of the adopted son in the family of his adoptive father with this difference that his right of survivorship in coparcenary property relates back to the death of his adoptive father.

Clause (3) (b).

716. Right to Challenge Prior Alienations.—In a joint Mitakshara family, an adoption by the widow has necessarily the effect of divesting the coparceners of her husband's interest which had devolved on them by survivorship.[2] So, where an impartiable Zemindari had devolved on the undivided brother of the deceased holder, an adoption by the latter's widow was held to divest the brother in favour of the adopted son.[3] A fortiori, the widow may, by her adoption, prevent a maintenance grant made to the male descendants of a junior line from lapsing to the grantor.[4] But here the adoption was made immediately after the death of the grantor, and the Privy Council were careful to point out that the case might be different, "if a Hindu widow lies by for a considerable time and makes no adoption, and the property comes into the possession of some one who would take it in the absence of a son, natural or adopted, and such person were to create rights in such property within his competency whilst in possession."[5] The adopted son is as much bound by the contracts made, and the obligations incurred, by his adoptive father as an auras son. So where the deceased had died after agreeing to sell his property to defendant and his widow executed the conveyance, after which she adopted the plaintiff who sued to eject the defendant, it was held that the plaintiff was no better off than the deceased to whom he had been adopted, and that he could not do what his adopter was incompetent to do, viz., to set aside her own conveyance.[6]

717. But since a widow's estate is limited and controlled by the reversioners, she cannot be permitted to make an adoption to defeat her reversioner's expectancy while remaining irresponsible for her waste and improper alienation to her adopted son. If the law were otherwise, adoption would be an effective camouflage to mask her misdeeds. The rule was admitted as far back as 1858 by the Privy Council who observed: "The son when adopted became the undoubted heir; and it was, of course, correct doctrine that no sale made by a widow, who possesses only a very restricted life interest in the estate could have been good against any ultimate heir, whether an adopted son or otherwise, unless made under certain circumstances of strict necessity."[7]

718. His Rights against his Adoptive Mother.—The adopted son acquires no larger rights against his adoptive mother. In point of time

(1) Kapurchand v. Narainjan Lal, (1897) P.R. 20.
(2) Chandra v. Gojarabai, 14 B. 463.
(3) Sri Viranda v. Sri Brojo, 1 M. 69 P.C.; Bachoo v. Mankorebai, 29 B. 51 O.A. 31 B. 373 P.C.
(4) Pratab Singh v. Agar Singh, 43 B. 778 (794) P.C.
(5) Ib., pp. 794, 795.
(6) Laxman v. Bhavan Singh, 23 Bom.L.R. 55.
(7) Bamundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M.I.A. 169 (180); Lakshman v. Radhabai, 11 B. 609; Moro v. Balaji, 19 B. 809; Ramkrishna v. Tripurabai, 33 B. 88 (95); Vaidyanatha v. Savithri, 41 M. 75 F. B., overruling contra in Sreeramulu v. Kristamma, 26 M. 143.

he is deemed to be born into his adoptive father's family at the moment of his adoption. But since the female owner's power of alienation is limited, and might be challenged by a reversioner who has merely a contingency, the adopted son, who acquires a vested estate with his adoption, is equally entitled to challenge it. But neither one nor the other can challenge a transaction within the competency of the widow. In other words, the adopted son can only attack a prior alienation made by his adoptive mother, if it is unsupported by legal necessity. In an old case, it was suggested that the widow, possessing the power to adopt must be deemed to be enceinte so that the right of the adopted son would relate back to the death of his adoptive father.[1] But the Privy Council held, that there was no justification for ante-dating an adoption and that the right of the adopted son only accrued upon his adoption.[2] Except in the cases mentioned in this clause, the adopted son acquires right only as from the moment of his adoption. Where, therefore, the widow had made an adoption after surrendering her estate to her daughter, the adopted son cannot avoid the surrender.[3]

719. From what has been stated above it is clear that the rule only applies to a case where the adopted son is in competition with the after-born son of the same father. If, therefore, of two brothers, one adopts a son and another has a natural son, the two being the sons of two brothers will share equally on partition.[4] The same rule of equality would extend to their sons, son's sons, and son's son's sons, that is to say, it will extend to all and every relation except an adopted son of the adopted. So in a competition between an adopted son D, of a natural born son B and the latter's brother C, that is to say the adopted son D, and his uncle C, the two share equally both on partition and inheritance, because since the adopted son's father B was a natural son of his father A, and so was his uncle C the two would take equally and so would the adopted son D as representing his father B. But if his father B was himself an adopted son, then since B could not have taken a share equal to C's, it follows that his adopted son D cannot take more than his father B. In other words in such a competition, D's share is only liable to reduction if his father was himself an adopted son, but not otherwise.[5] Since the rights of an adopted son, are settled to be those of a natural son, it follows that like a natural son, the adopted son becomes a member of the joint family, taking therein a vested interest as if he had been born therein from the moment of his adoption.

63. (1) Except in the case of a Shudra,[6] the rights of an adopted son are, on the birth of an aurus son, limited as follows:—

Adoptee's rights limited by auras son.

(2) He loses all rights to the performance of religious ceremonies;

(1) Kishen Munee v. Oodwunt, 3 B. S.D. 220 (304): 6 I.D. (O.C.) 902; Ramkishen v. Srimutee, 3 B.S.D. 367 (489): 6 I.D. (O.S.) 1038.

(2) Tarinee v. Bamun Das, 6 B.S. D.A. 533 F.B.: 10 I.D. (O.S.) 435 affirmed O. A. Bamun Doss v. Tarinee, 7 M.I.A. 169 (206).

(3) Rama v. Dhondi, 47 B. 678.

(4) Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 P. C.; overruling Raghubanund v. Sodhu Churn, 4 C. 425 and following Tara Mohun v. Kripa Moyee, 9 W.R. 423; Dinonath v. Gopal Churn, 8 C.L.R. 57.

(5) Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 (284, 285) P.C.

(6) Arumilli v. Arumilli, 44 M. 656 P.C.

(3) He is not entitled to succeed to an impartible estate in preference to the auras son;

(4) His right of inheritance, in other cases, is reduced to a fourth share of the natural son.[1]

720. Analogous Law.—The reduction of the rights of an adopted son, in competition with an after-born legitimate son, is based on the following textual authority:—

Vashisth.—"When a son has been adopted, if a legitimate son is afterwards born, the son given shares a fourth part."[2]

The difference between the Bengal and the Benares school on the share of the adopted son arises from a difference in the reading of the above text of Vashisth.[3]

Reason for different views.

721. All the schools proceed upon the text of Vashisth, before quoted. The difference of opinion between them arises from the different readings of the same text, and the meaning of the ambiguous expression "shares a fourth part," which may mean either (a) a fourth of the whole, or (b) a fourth part of what he would have received if he were a natural son, or (c) a fourth part of the natural son's share. According to the first view the dattak gets one-fourth of the whole estate, leaving the remainder to be appropriated by the natural son or if there be more than one son, to be divided amongst them.[4] According to the second view, the dattak takes one-fourth of what he would have taken if a legitimate son, i.e., 1|4 of 1|2=1|8; while, according to the last view, he takes 1|4 of a legitimate son's share, i.e., if the latter gets 4 the former gets 1 or 1|5 of the whole. Thus if the property be valued at 40, the dattak's share according to each view will be 10, 5 or 8 respectively. Each of these views has found its supporters. Sir Thomas Strange and the early writers favoured the first view,[5] while Nand Pandit argues in favour of the second view,[6] but recent opinion[7] inclines to the third view. It is contended that the first view cannot be correct, because in that case the adopted son would get a fourth of the estate while the remaining three-fourths may have to be divided amongst as many or more natural sons, which would be inconsistent with the spirit of Hindu Law, which places the secondary son in a lower position than the auras son. Both the Bombay and the Calcutta Courts, therefore, agree in rejecting the first interpretation.[8] They equally reject the

(1) Vashisth, XV-9, 14 S. B. E. 76. See the conflict of opinion in comm. post.

(2) XV-9, 14 S. B. E. 76; quoted in Mit., 1-XI-24, with the following comment on a "son given": "Here the mention of a son given is intended for an indication of others also, as the son bought, son made by adoption, and son self-given and the rest; for they are equally adopted as sons." Vashisth's verse is cited, without comment, in Datt. Mim., X-1 (Suth.), 106; Datt. Ch., II-II (Suth.) II-II-118.

(3) "Shares a fourth part" being read as "Shares of third part" in Dayabhag, X-13. The other text is followed in Madan Parijat, Vir Mitrodaya and others; Cole. Note to Mit., 1-XI-25.

(4) So held in Parmanand v. Sheo Charndas, 2 L. 69.

(5) 1 Str. H.L. 99; Wilson's Works, V. 52; 1 Wm. Macn. 70; 2 Wm. Macn. 184; F. Macn. 137; Madhaviya Dayavibhag (Burnell's Tr.) 28; Taramohun v. Kripa Moyee, 9 W.R. 423; Rukhal v. Chunilal, 16 B. 347; Preag Singh v. Ajoodya, 4 M.S.R. 96: 1 Mor. Dig. 306

(6) Datt. Mim., V-40.

(7) Birbhadra v. Kalpataru, 1 C. L. J. 388 (392, 393), following Giriappa v. Ningapa, 17 B. 100; Ayyavu v. Niladatchi, 1 M.H.C.R. 45; Venkatamidi v. Venkatamidi, 38 M.L.J. 86 (89).

(8) Birbhadra v. Kalpataru, 1 C.L. J. 388 (392); Giriapa v. Ningapa, 17 B. 100 dissenting from Raghubanund v. Sadhu Churn, 4 C. 425 since overruled in Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 P.C.; Tukaram v. Ramchandra, 49 B. 672.

second interpretation as strained and unnatural; but now agree on the third which is also supported by some cases of the other courts.[1] And except in the case of Shudra[2] where the adopted son shares equally with an auras son subsequently born, the same rule governs partition between an adopted and an auras son.[3]

722. So again where a person was a member of a partnership at the time of his death, such partnership is not dissolved by reason of his death, if his widow makes a valid adoption, in which case, his adoption would relate back to the death of her husband.[4]

Shudra Son Excepted.

723. The rule stated excepts the case of a Shudra in whose cases the rule of Dattak Chandrika that on a partition of the joint family property of a Shudra family, an adopted son is entitled to share equally with the legitimate son born to the adoptive father subsequently to an adoption applies and has been upheld by the Privy Council.[5]

Agreement not to adopt is invalid.

64. (1) An agreement by a person not to exercise his spiritual right of adoption is invalid.[6]

No specific relief in adoption.

(2) No suit lies for the specific performance of an agreement to adopt, the breach of which may, however, be redressed by damages.[7]

724. Agreement against Adoption.—The question whether a man can make a lawful agreement against exercising his spiritual right of adoption has been raised, but not yet decided, though if the question had to be decided, it is evident that it would have been decided in the negative. For it seems obvious that, since adoption is a spiritual act, it cannot be surrendered from secular motive. In one case, the holder of an impartible estate, subject to the Mitakshara law, who had a son, entered into an agreement with his undivided brother that neither he nor his son should make an adoption and that, in order that the estate should remain in possession of blood-relations, the brother too should never adopt a son. The zemindar had no occasion to adopt, but his son did, whereupon the Privy Council held that the agreement against any adoption by the son was invalid and that the further clause that if the

(1) Dhondo v. Appaji, (1893) B. P. J. 398; Giriapa v. Ningapa, 17 B. 100, without reference to the earlier decisions in Hanmant v. Bhimacharaya, 12 B. 105; Rukhab v. Chunilal, 16 B. 347, in which the Court allotted him one-third of the share of a natural son; Ayyavu v. Niladatchi, 1 M.H.C.R. 45.

(2) Arumilli v. Arumilli, 44 M. 656 P. C., overruling Gopalam v. Gopalaraghavulu, 40 M. 632; Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270, following Tara Kolmu v. Kripa Moyee, 9 W.R. 423; Dinonath v. Gopal, 8 C.L.R. 57; Sumboo v. Narain, 5 W.R. 100 P.C.; Kali Komul v. Uma Sunker, 6 C. 256 (259, 260) F.B. O.A. 10 C. 232 P.C., overruling contra in Raghubanund v. Sadhu Charn, 4 C. 425. To the same effect, Raja v. Subbraya, 7 M. 253, followed in Baramanund v. Krishna Charan, 14 C.L.J. 183 (187); Asita v. Nirode Mohan, 20 C. W.N. 901; Pratab Singh v. Agarsingji, 43 B. 778 (792) P. C.

(3) Raja v. Subbraya, 7 M. 253 followed in Baramanund v. Krishna Charan, 14 C.L.J. 183 (187); Asita v. Nirode Mohan, 20 C.W.N. 901, approved in Arumilli v. Arumilli, 44 M. 656 P.C., overruling Gopalam v. Venkataraghavulu, 40 M. 632; Raghubanund v. Sadhu Charan, 4 C. 425.

(4) Kapur Chand v. Narainjan Lal, (1897) P.R. 20.

(5) Arumilli v. Arumilli, 44 M. 656 P.C., approving Raja v. Subbraya, 7 M. 253; Baramanund v. Krishna, 14 C. L.J. 183; Asita v. Nirode, 20 C.W.N. 901, overruling contra in Karuturi v. Karuturi, 40 M. 632; Venkamamidi v. Venkamamidi, 43 M. 398.

(6) Suria Rau v. Raja of Pittapur, 9 M. 499 P.C.

(7) S. 21 (b) Specific Relief Act (I of 1877).

son should adopt, the son so adopted should not inherit was equally invalid in that it purported to alter the law of descent.[1] But this does not mean that the father has no power to make a reasonable stipulation controlling his right of adoption. For example, where the father in a Dayabhaga case had devised his estate to his son on condition that he does not make an adoption before he attains the age of eighteenth year, upto which period he was to remain in charge of his testamentary guardian, the condition was upheld, not because it was a prohibition against adoption, but because the father had thereby merely postponed the Hindu age of minority for a period of two years. In other words, while the father could not alter the son's general right of adoption, he was well within his right to guide and control his discretion.[2] An agreement by the widow not to adopt in consideration of her receiving two villages for herself is naturally void as being a sale of her spiritual duty for mercenary motive.[3]

725. In one case the parties had agreed not to adopt, against which agreement the defendant was about to make an adoption. The plaintiff sued her for an injunction restraining her from making an adoption and prayed for an interim injunction as the adoption was to take place the next day. The court, however, refused it, holding that the court should be cautious in restraining an adoption, the result of which might be serious to the party restrained.[4] The fact that the breach of such contract is redressable in pecuniary compensation is sufficient to prevent a party from obtaining an injunction.[5]

Clause (2).

726. There can be no suit for the specific performance of a contract to marry, or to adopt,[6] as both depend upon the volition of the parties, and its breach may be otherwise redressed.[7]

Effect of acquiescence on an invalid adoption.

65. (1) An invalid adoption cannot be validated by a subsequent consent,[8] though the person so consenting may be estopped from denying it; but there can be no estoppel unless there is such a course of acquiescence in treating the adopted boy as a member of the adopted family that it will be impossible to restore him to his original position in the natural family.[9]

(2) Mere acquiescence or even presence at the adoption does not necessarily amount to an estoppel.[10]

727. Analogous Law.—This section involves three propositions: (i) that the invalidity of an adoption cannot be cured by the subsequent consent of those whose consent was pre-requisite to its validity,[11] (ii) that no acquiescence in an invalid adoption can make an invalid adoption

(1) Suria Rau v. Raja of Pittapur, 9 M. 499 (505) P.C. cf. Assur v. Ratan bai, 13 M. 56.

(2) Harrosoondery v. Cowar, 1 Fulton 393 (396) 1 I.D. (O.S.) 877 (879).

(3) Jagannath v. Kunj Behari, 49 I. C. (M.) 929 (936).

(4) Assur v. Ratan Bai, 13 B. 56.

(5) S. 54 (c), Specific Relief Act (I of 1877).

(6) S. 21 (b), Spec. Rel. Act (I of 1877).

(7) The contrary stated in Sreenarayan v. Kishen Soondery, (1873) 11 B.L. R. 171 (188) P.C., must be taken as overruled by the statute law.

(8) Konvidi v. Venkataswami, 32 M. L.J. 119; Adivi v. Nidamarty, 33 M. 228; Babanna v. Parava, 50 B. 815.

(9) Vaithilingam v. Murugaian, 37 M. 529.

(10) Papamma v. Appa Rau, 16 M. 388 (391); Shyam Charan v. Prafulla, 19 C.W.N. 882.

(11) Konvidi v. Venkataswami, 32 M. L.J. 119; Adivi v. Nidamarty, 33 M. 228; Babanna v. Parava, 50 B. 815.

valid, and (iii) no acquiescence short of estoppel, precludes one from disputing it.[1]

728. Effect of Consent on Adoption.—It is an established rule that consent cannot cure the invalidity of an adoption. So where the consent of the husband's kinsmen is necessary to empower the widow to adopt, an adoption made by her without such consent cannot be validated by their subsequent ratification. Even if the kinsmen whose consent was a pre-requisite were present at the adoption it does not amount to either consent or acquiescence.[2] Even where the acquiescence has continued for even as long as 50 years, it would not validate the adoption, though it may estop the party if his acquiescence had led the adoptee to abandon his rights to the property in his natural family and render his service in that of his quasi-adoptive father.[3] The equitable doctrine of laches and acquiescence does not apply to suits for which the Legislature has prescribed a limitation.[4] A legal title cannot be displaced by mere acquiescence, laches or delay. The fact that a person did not protest does not prove his acquiescence.[5]

Acquiescence No Bar.

729. In any case, acquiescence is never a ground for depriving a person of his legal rights unless the acquiescence amounts to estoppel. Silence is not acquiescence, unless one was under a legal duty to speak.[6] There is a difference between acquiescence before the act and after it is completed. In the first case, it affords evidence of consent,[7] but in the other case, it may amount to waiver of a right, but a waiver must be an intentional act done with the knowledge of one's right.[8] Mere delay is not waiver, and apart from limitation, it does not deprive one of his rights.[9] There can be no acquiescence unless one is cognizant of one's right to dispute it.[10] and where both parties equally knew the facts, there is neither estoppel nor acquiescence.[11]

730. Estoppel.—But where for a long series of years a person has acquiesced in the adoption of another, and the latter has in consequence lost all rights in his natural family, it may then be a case in which, while the adoption remains invalid, the court may hold a party estopped from showing its invalidity on the ground that it would be inequitable to permit him to show the contrary when he has by his own conduct induced another to alter his position to his disadvantage to which he can no longer be restored.[12] Such a case must, however, be brought within the principle stated in S. 115 of the Evidence Act (§§ 677-682).

---

(1) Vaithilingam v. Murugaian, 37 M. 529.

(2) Papamma v. Appa Rau, 16 M. 388 (391); Gurulingaswami v. Ramalakshamma, 14 M. 53 (58); Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau, ib., p. 145.

(3) Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan, 7 M.H.C.R. 250; Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau, 18 M. 145 (151, 152).

(4) Rama Rau v. Raja Rau, 2 M. H. C.R. 114; Peddamuthlaty v. Timma Reddy, ib., p. 270 (273); Baruck Chunder v. Huro Sunkur, 22 W.R. 267; Rahmatullah v. Secretary of State, (1913) P.R. 63: 18 I.C. 799.

(5) Rajan v. Basuva, 2 M. H. C. R. 428.

(6) Chadwick v. Manning, (1896) A. C. 231 (238); Bindu v. Bugli, (1909) P. R. 73: 2 I.C. 814; Shyama Charan v. Prafulla, 19 C.W.N. 882.

(7) Duke of Leeds v. Amherst, 2 Phillips, 117: 78 R.R. 47.

(8) Darnby v. L. C. & D. Ry. Co., L. R. 2 H. L. 43 (60); Shyama Charan v. Prafulla, 19 C.W.N. 882 (886).

(9) Shyama Charan v. Prafulla, 19 C. W.N. 882 (886).

(10) Papamma v. Appa Rau, 16 M. 384 (391); Shyama Charan v. Prafulla, 19 C.W.N. 882 (886).

(11) Prosonna Kumar v. Srikantha, 40 C. 173.

(12) Vaithilingam v. Murugaian, 37 M. 529.

Customary adoptions.

Jain adoption.

66. (1) A Jain adoption requires no other ceremony beyond that of the gift and its acceptance,[1]

(2) The Jain widow is entitled to make an adoption without the express or implied authority of her husband;[2] or of his kinsmen, and irrespective of whether the property she has inherited from her husband was his self-acquired or ancestral property.[3]

(3) A person of any age,[4] whether he is an orphan,[5] or is, married and has children of his own,[6] and irrespective of his relationship to the adopter,[7] is eligible for adoption.

Jain Ceremony.

731. Analogous Law.—The Jains acknowledge the authority of a Digest of their laws contained in a work known as the "Bhadrababu Samhita", stated to have been compiled in the third century B.C., which gives elaborate ceremonies attending a Jain adoption, but they were never regarded as indispensable, and the only necessary formality required is that stated in the section. But it does not preclude the Jains from adopting in the Dattak form.[8]

Members of the Jain community are to be found scattered all over India. As such, they have naturally assimilated local customs as regards the ceremonies and rituals of adoption. But as a rule, the two ceremonies, which this community everywhere regards as essential, are the giving and taking and the tying of the father's turban on to the son-to-be. This is intended to symbolize the transfer of paternal authority from the one head to another. The ceremony of the giving and taking is, of course, indispensible in all adoptions, and these ceremonies are concluded with the distribution of cocoanuts and the other tokens of rejoicing.

732. Jain Adoption.—It has already been seen that the Jains, though forming a sect of dissenters, are classed as Hindus (§§ 203-204). But though this important community is nominally classed as Hindu, its law of adoption has, nevertheless, none of the religious associations of the orthodox faith; adoption in this case, is a purely secular institution.[9] and signifies nothing more than the appointment of an heir.[10] For instance, a Jain widow is entitled to adopt without any authority, express or implied, of her husband.[11] And as regards the adopted son, she is free to adopt even one who is married, and has children of his

(1) Asharfi Kunwar v. Rup Chand, 30 A. 197, O.A., Rup Chand v. Jambu Prasad, 32 A. 247 P.C.

(2) Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 P.C.

(3) Banarsi Das v. Sumat Prasad, 58 A. 1019; Sunder Das v. Baldeo Singh. 14 L. 78.

(4) Rup Chand v. Jambu Parsad, 32 A. 247 P.C.; Dhamraj v. Soni Bai, 52 C. 482 P.C.; Sheo Kuar Bai v. Jeoraj, (1921) P.C. 77.

(5) Parshotam v. Venichand, 45 B. 751; Chimanlal v. Harichand, 40 C. 879 P.C.; Dhomraj v. Soni Bai, 30 C.W.N. 601 P.C.

(6) Padmacoomari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P.C.; Rup Chand v. Jambu Prasad, Ib.

(7) Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 P.C.

(8) Gopimal v. Pannalal, 72 I.C. (L.) 424.

(9) Ashrafi Kunwar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 197, O.A. Rupchand v. Jambu Prasad, 32 A. 247 P.C.

(10) Bhagwan Das v. Rajmul, 10 B.H. C.R. 241 (262); Ashrafi Kunwar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 197, O.A. Rupchand v. Jambu Prasad, 32 A. 247 P.C.

(11) Bhadrabahu Samhita (J. L. Jain) pp. 40, 41; Gobindan v. Camahchand, (1833) S.D.A.B. 276; Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 6 N.W.P.H.C.R. 382; O. A. 1 A. 688 P.C.; Ashrafi Kunwar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 197 O.A. Rupchand v. Jambu Prasad, 32 A. 247 P.C.; Sheo Kuar v. Jeoraj, 25 C.W.N. 273 P. C.

own.[1] The Jains are subject to no prohibition as regards the relationship of the adoptee,[2] being free to adopt a sister's son,[3] a daughter's son,[4] or the husband's brother,[5] and there seems no objection to the adoption of even an orphan, if permitted by local usage.[6] And even as regards the ceremony of giving and taking, it has been held that if this is not possible, it would suffice, if there is such symbolical delivery, as is sufficient to indicate the change of status,[7] which may be effected by the mere tying of a turban round the head of the person to be adopted, in the presence of the punchas and the invited guests.[8] But this does not mean that there should be no giving and taking, which still remains the indispensable ceremony in this, as in all other, adoptions.[9]

733. A Jain retains his custom of adoption even upon his conversion to Vaishnavism,[10] and the same custom applies equally to Jains of all sects whether Agarwal, Churiwal, Khandewal or Oswal.[11] But in Bombay, the Hindu rule that the husband's power of adoption cannot be delegated to any one else except his widow, holds good.[12] And the rule that, as between two or more co-widows, the right to adopt belongs to the senior widow, applies equally everywhere to them.[13]

734. Agarwals.—The Agarwal Banias would also seem to treat an affiliation as adoption. Such was held to be the case of the Agarwal Bania of Zira in the Punjab, in which the adoption of an orphan and a married man was upheld on the ground that the caste was, as regards adoption, not subject to Hindu Law, and that an unequivocal declaration by the adopting father that a boy had been adopted, and the subsequent treatment of that boy as the adopted son, sufficed to constitute a valid adoption.[14]

No right to collateral succession.

67. In the absence of custom to the contrary, a Jain adoption, as such, confers on the adoptee no right to collateral succession.[15] affirming O.A. Jeoraj v. Sheo Kuar, 66 I.C. (N.) 65; Manikchand v. Jagat Sattani, 17 C. 518; contra in Bobbaldi v. Eramma, 50 M. 228 (held, custom must be proved; but, submitted, it is notorious).

(1) Pudmacoomari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P.C.; Ashrafi Kunwar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 197 O.A. Rupchand v. Jambu Prasad, 32 A. 247 P.C.; Hasan Ali v. Naga Mal, 1 A. 288; Jamuna Bai v. Juhar Mal, 56 I.C. (N.) 81.

(2) Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 P.C.; Hassan Ali v. Nagamal, 1 A. 288; Lakhmichand v. Gatto Bai, 8 A. 319; Ashrafi Kuar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 127 O.A. Rupchand v. Jambu Prasad, 32 A. 247 P.C.

(3) Hassan Ali v. Nagammal, 1 A. 288; Lakhmichand v. Gatto, 8 A. 319.

(4) Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 6 N.W.P. H.C.R. 382; O. A. 7 A. 688 (704) P. C.

(5) Nanakchand v. Munnalal, (1909) P.R. 95.

(6) Parshotam v. Venichand, 45 B. 751 Basant Singh v. Brij Raj, 57 A. 494 P. C.

(7) Sheo Kuar v. Jeoraj, 25 C.W.N. 273 P.C. affirming O.A. Jeoraj v. Sheo Kuar, 66 I.C. (N.) 65.

(8) Dhanraj v. Soni Bai, 52 C. 482 P. C.

(9) Jamunabai v. Juarmal, 56 I.C. (N.) 81; Sheo Kuar v. Jeoraj, 25 C.W. N. 273 P.C. affirming O.A. Jeoraj v. Sheo Kuar, 66 I.C. (N.) 65.

(10) Manikchand v. Jagat Sattani, 17 C. 518.

(11) Harnath Pershad v. Mandil Dass, 27 C. 379; Manikchand v. Jagat Sattani, 17 C. 518; Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 P.C.; Govind Nath v. Gulal, 5 S. D. A. B. 276.

(12) Bhagwan Das v. Romul, 10 B.H. C.R. 241; Amava v. Mahadganda, 22 B. 416.

(13) Ashrafi Kunwar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 297, O. A. Rupchand v. Jambu Pershad, 32 A. 147 P.C.

(14) Chiman Lal v. Harichand, 40 C. 879 P.C.; Dhomraj v. Soni Bai, 30 C. W. N. 601 P.C.; (1925) P.C. 118.

(15) Semble in Dhanraj v. Soni Bai, 52 C. 482 (495) P.C.

735. Analogous Law.—Since a Jain adoption amounts to the mere appointment of an heir, he is prima facie not entitled to collateral succession, unless so authorised by custom.[1] The fact is that the custom which sanctions such adoption, being a departure from the normal law, must equally define the extent of the departure.

Kritrim adoption.

68. (1) The husband or the wife may adopt a Kritrim son to himself or herself, either jointly or separately[2] in accordance with the following rules:—

(a) The adopter must have no son, grandson or great grandson living at the time of adoption;[3]

(b) The adoptee may be adult and married;[4]

(c) Both the adoptee and his parents must consent to the adoption;[5]

(d) The husband or the wife may adopt jointly, or they may each adopt a separate son;[6]

(e) The son so adopted is the son of the adopter, even if she be the wife or the widow;[7]

(f) Any relation, or a stranger may be so adopted;[8]

(g) The wife or the widow may adopt a son in her own right, and without the assent of her husband or his kinsmen.

(2) Such an adoption can only be made in the Mithila Province and the districts adjoining it and elsewhere if permitted by custom.

Illustration

A is the father of B. B adopts A as his Kritrim son. The adoption is valid.

736. Analogous Law.—"Kritrim"[9] means "artificial" "fictitious," "acquired and not natural," and a Kritrim son is, therefore, an artificial or an adopted son, and is one of the twelve kinds of sons once recognized by Hindu Law. (§ 56). Formerly, he was a grown-up man adopted without the consent of his natural parents. The Kritrim, or a son made, was one destitute of his parents, but capable of discriminating between right and wrong, who being attracted by another's wealth accepted his proposal to be his son. As such, a Kritrim is scarcely distinguished from another classic son, the "Svayamdatt," or the son self-given, since they were both orphans, and the only difference between them was that, in the one case, the proposal to adopt proceeded from the adopter,

---

(1) Semble in Dhanraj v. Sonni Bai, 52 C. 482 (495) P.C.

(2) Ooman Dutt v. Kunhia Singh, (1822) 3 B.S.R. 192: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 820 (828).

(3) Ooman Dut v. Kunhia Singh, (1822) 3 B.S.R. 192 (199): 6 I.C. (O.S.) 820 (826).

(4) Ooman Dut v. Kunhia Singh, (1822) 3 B.S.R. 192: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 820.

(5) Chowdree Parmessur v. Hanooman, 6 B.S.R. 235 : 7 I.D. (O.S.) 843; Luchmun Lall v. Mohun Lall, 16 W.R. 179.

(6) Collector of Tirhoot v. Huropershad, 7 W.R. 500.

(7) Chowdhree Purmessur v. Hanooman, 6 B.S.R. 235 : 7 I.D. (O.S.) 843.

(8) Ib.

(9) Also called karta for short; to be distinguished from a krecta son, which means a purchased son.

in the other from the adoptee. But the Svayamdatt son is now obsolete,[1] and the Kritrim has become confined to the narrow limits of Mithila. It is unknown in the Punjab.[2] Another son, the "Kreeta," one acquired by purchase, has entirely fallen into disfavour as savouring of slavery.[3]

737. There remains only the Kritrim son, and the sphere of his influence is, as already stated, limited, but the rules governing him are simple, and are those enumerated in the section, which is drawn from the undernoted authorities.[4] In this respect, usage has overridden the Shastras which fettered the creation of a Kritrim with the same restrictions as applied to the Dattak son.[5] But in his adoption, the Kritrim has lost his status, since, as will be presently seen, he can no longer inherit to any one except his adoptive father, though he is given the solatium of retaining his own right of inheritance in his natural family.

738. A question arises whether in Mithila, where the practice prevails, the Kritrim has superseded the Dattak, or it merely supplements it. It would seem that a Mithila woman has no right to adopt in the usual form even with the previous sanction of her husband,[6] and while there appear no reasons why a man may not make a Dattak adoption in Mithila,[7] the simplicity of the Kritrim has probably made the regular adoption a weak competitor.

739. But a Kritrim son must not be supposed to be a secular adoption, since he is adopted to perform the obsequies of his adoptive parents, and suffers from the sin of omitting them,[8] although no ceremony is required to make a Kritrim. All that the adopter need say or imply is, "Be thou my son," to which the Kritrim son replies, "I am become son."[9] And there is no prohibition of any kind as to the relationship. Even a father or brother may be so adopted.[10] The only essential qualification is that the adopter and the adoptee must be of the same caste.[11]

740. A Mithila widow has no power of adoption to her husband with or without his consent. Any authority given by him will not, therefore, confer on her any power of adoption as it would be illegal. She can, however, adopt a boy to herself. But as already stated the son so adopted becomes her own son and not the son of her husband. He has no right to inherit her husband's estate, and a fortiori has no right of collateral succession. Even where the father adopts him in the Kritrim and not in the Dattak form, it merely creates a personal relationship between

---

(1) Bashetiappa v. Shivlingappa, 10 B.H.C.R. 268.

(2) Shev Deo v. Dwarka Das, (1933) L. 1050.

(3) Eshan Kishore v. Hurish Chunder, 21 W.R. 381.

(4) Ooman Dutt v. Kunhia Singh, 3 B.S.R. 192 : 6 I.D. (O.S.) 820 (828); Chorodree Parmessur v. Hanooman, 6 B.S.R. 235: 7 I.D. (O.S.) 843; Luchman Lal v. Mahan Lall, 16 W.R. 179; Collector of Tirhoot v. Huro Pershad, 7 W. R. 500.

(5) Mit., I-11-15; Virmitroday, 177; Datt. Mim., V-41-50; Vivad Ratnakar, (B.A.S. Ed.), 541; Vivad Chintamani, pp. 278-288.

(6) 1 Macnanghten's H.L., 95-100; Vivad-Chint., 74-75; Chandreshwar v. Bisheshwar, 5 Pat. 737 (746).

(7) Chandreshwar v. Bisheshwar, 5 Pat. 737 (746, 747); Binda Kuwar v. Lalita Prasad, (1936) P.C. 304.

(8) Ooman Dut v. Kunhia Singh, 3 B.S.R. 192: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 820 (823).

(9) Ib., p. 824.

(10) Ib., 825; contra in Runjeet Singh v. Narain Singh, 2 B.S.R. 315 (316) : 6 I.D. (O.S.) 597 (598). An elder brother cannot be adopted, but the authority cited in Datt. Mim. which states the general law).

(11) Purmessur v. Hanooman Chowdhree, 6 B.S.R. 234 : 7 I.D. (O.S.) 843 (852).

him and his adoptive father and the adopted son succeeds only to his estate.[1]

Incidence of a Kritrim Adoption.

69. A Kritrim adoption is subject to the following incidents:—

(1) The adoption is concluded by contract, no ceremony being necessary;[2]

(2) There is no restriction as to the qualification of the adoptee except that he should be of the same caste as the adopter;[3]

(3) For the purpose of marriage his sapinda relationship in the family of his adopter extends only to three degrees;[4]

(4) He does not assume the surname of his adoptive father.[5]

741. Analogous Law.—The Kritrim[6] son of old was recognized subsidiary son like the "Swayamdatt" or "self-given" son, from whom he was scarcely distinguishable except that the Kritrim was an orphan and was hired by the wealth of his adopter to accept his proposal to become his son, while a Swayamdatt was one who, being abandoned by his parents, did the same. Both these sons have long since become obsolete; and the Kritrim son whose adoption is recognized in Tirhut is quite a modern institution engrafted on the old texts and said to flow from the absolute incompetency of a widow to adopt to her deceased husband.[7] "The practice (says Mr. Colebrooke) of adopting sons given by their parents was there abolished by Shridutt and Pratihast, although the latter had been himself adopted in that manner. Their motive was lest a child already recognized in one family, being again registered in another, a confusion of families should thence ensue."[8]

742. The Dattak adoption, having thus become obsolete[9] a substitute had to be found, and it is thus justified by Vachaspati Misra,[10] an author of paramount authority in the Mithila country, in his Dwaita Nirnai as follows:—

"Its purpose, for the man that he may be excluded from the hell denominated 'put'; for the woman, that some one may exist, capable of performing her right of Sapindas, or association with departed ancestors. Should individuals, capable of promoting these objects exist, a son must not be adopted."[11]

The right of the widow to adopt a son of her own is justified on the ground that he is necessary for the performance of her Sapindi Karan or the rite of association with departed ancestors, the observance of which on the 11th day from her death exempts the other relatives, who are unable to celebrate such ceremony, from observing in her honour (as otherwise they would have to do) twelve monthly funeral repasts.

---

(1) Jiwan Mal v. Jamna Das, (1911) P.L.R. 67 : 10 I.C. 822.

(2) 2 W. Macn. H.L. Case 16, pp. 173, 174.

(3) Purmessur v. Hanooman, 6 B.S.R. 235 : 7 I.D. (O.S.) 843.

(4) Suth. Note, p. 162.

(5) Srenarain v. Lallut Narain, 2 Beng. S.R. 29 : 6 I.D. (O.S.) 380 (381).

(6) Skt. Krit., Made; a son made.

(7) Datt. Mim. 1-16 (Suth.), 4.

(8) Mr. Sutherland questions the correctness of Mr. Colebrooke's statement.—See Note 15 to his Datt. Mim. (Suth.) pp. 160, 161.

(9) Nund Ram v. Kashee Pande, 3 Beng. S.R. 310 : 6 I.D. (O.S.) 906. It is still permissible; Chandreshwar v. Bisheswar, 5 Pat. 777.

(10) 2 W. Macn. H.L., Case 26 pp. 173, 174, in which the Pandits hold the Kritrim adoption to be "in consonance to the doctrines of the learned Vachaspati Misra and others, whose works are current in Mithila."

(11) Suth. Note 5 to Datt. Mim., pp. 156, 157.

743. The ceremony of Kritrim (vulgarly called Karta) putra is thus described by Rudradhar in his Sudhvivek, a treatise on Kritrim adoption: "At an auspicious time, the adopter of a son, having bathed, addressing the person to be adopted, who has bathed, and to whom he has given some acceptable chattel, says. 'Be my son.' He replies, 'I am become your son.' This giving some chattel to him arises merely from custom. It is not necessary to the adoption. The assent of both parties is only requisite, and a set form of speech is not essential."[1]

Ceremony.

744. Incidents of Kritrim Adoption.—There can be no adoption in any but the Kritrim form in Mithila. The leading features of this adoption present such a striking contrast with the orthodox Dattak adoption, in vogue in the rest of the country, that it is apt to be looked upon as no adoption at all, but a kind of affiliation which persists everywhere in spite of the law against it.

745. The first essential feature of Kritrim adoption is that the Hindu widow may adopt a son to herself with or without the consent of her husband, but in either case, she can only adopt to herself and in no case does her adoptee succeed to any but her exclusive property. The consent of the husband does not make his wife's adoptee his own. Similarly, the husband may adopt a son to himself, and in that case he remains his own son, the relationship so created being in such case personal to the contracting parties:[2] the son so adopted will not be considered the grandson of his adopter's father, nor will his own son be considered as the grandson of his adopter.

Widow may Adopt.

746. No relationship obtains between the Kritrim son and the father of the adopter, from which it may be inferred that such adopted son is not entitled to inherit to him, and a fortiori to his adopter's collaterals. The adoptee is not considered a member of the adopter's family. He does not assume the surname of his adopter, or forfeit his claim to his own family.[3]

Relationship Personal.

747. No ceremonies are necessary to complete this adoption which is completed by contract, the adopter agreeing to take the adoptee and the latter offering himself in adoption.[4] If he is a minor and cannot give him away, then the consent of his parents is necessary.[5] (§ 743).

Adoption Completed by Contract.

748. There is no restriction on account of age,[6] or the previous marriage,[7] or relationship of the candidate for Kritrim adoption, the only condition necessary being that the adopter and the adoptee must

Age and Relationship Immaterial.

(1) Sutherland's Note 16 to Datt. Mim., p. 161.

(2) Srenarain v. Lallut Narain, 2 Ben. S.R. 29 : 6 I.D. (O.S.) 380 (381); Collector of Tirhut v. Huropershad, 7 W. R. 500; Shiboo Koeree v. Jogun Singh, 8 W.R. 155.

(3) Ib., p. 158.

(4) 1 W. Macn. H.L., p. 83; Luchmun v. Mohunlall, 16 W.R. 179 (180).

(5) 2 W. Mac. H.L., Case 16, pp. 173, 174.

(6) Ooman Dutt v. Kunhia, 3 Beng. S. R. 192 : 6 I.D. (O.S.) 820; Shibkore v. Joogun, 8 W.R. 155 (158).

(7) Ooman Dutt v. Kunhia, 3 Beng. S. R. 192 (199): 6 I.D. (O.S.) 800 (825): 1 W. Macn. p. 64. The fact that a man may adopt his own father shows that age, relationship and marriage are equally immaterial.

belong to the same caste;[1] otherwise, his previous marriage, or the fact, that he is the only son or the sister's[2] or daughter's son of the adopter is no obstacle in the way of his eligibility. In fact, according to the "Dwaita Parishisth" of Keshab Misra a man is free to adopt his own brother and even his own father,[3] and this is not merely a Pandit's fancy for, he says: "When a father, a brother, or the like has been adopted as a son, the invocation to the adopter at solemn obsequies is by his new relation of father, not by that of son or brother."[4]

70. A Kritrim son becomes entitled to the following rights in consequence of his adoption:—

Rights of Kritrim son.

(1) He succeeds both to his father and the adopter;[5]

(2) He acquires no relationship with his adopter's father;[6]

(3) He does not succeed to his adopter's collaterals;[7]

(4) If adopted by the wife or the widow, he succeeds to her exclusive property having no right in her husband's estate.[8]

749. Analogous Law.—All the incidents enumerated in the section and supported by authorities, flow from the fact that this form of adoption creates only a personal relationship between the contracting parties. A Kritrim, like a Dvamushyayan son, is really a son of two fathers. When he contracts himself to be the son of his brother, he does not cease to belong to his natural family, in which he continues to enjoy his ordinary rights. And being the son of two fathers, he inherits to both and is entitled to perform the obsequies of both his natural and adoptive parents. But his relationship is personal to his adopter. Consequently, he acquires no right of inheritance to the adopter's father, wife or husband,[9] even though the latter may have permitted the adoption.[10] The case is, of course, different where they jointly make the adoption, in which case he stands in the relation of son to both, and is heir to the estate of both.[11]

71. Nothing in this chapter shall be deemed to invalidate an adoption otherwise authorised by custom.[12]

Saving of other adoption.

---

(1) Parmessur v. Hunooman, 6 B.S.R. 234 : 7 I.D. (O.S.) 843 (852).

(2) Purmessur v. Hanooman, 6 Beng. S.R. 234 : 7 I.D. (O.S.) 843.

(3)1 W. Macn. H.L., p. 64; Ooman Dut v. Kunhia, 3 Beng.S.R. 192 (199): 6 I.D. (O.S.) 820 (825). In Ranjeet Singh v. Obhya Narain, 2 Beng. S.R. 315: 6 I.D. (O.S.) 597, the Pandit in the Mithila case erroneously relying on Boudhyayan opined against the adoption of an elder brother. The case being an adoption recognized by law, and not merely an affiliation extant in spite of the law, a Kritrim adoption once completed is as irrevocable as any other adoption.

(4) Cited in Ooman Dut v. Kunhia, 3 Beng.S.R. 192 (199) : 6 I.D. (O.S.) 820 (825).

(5) 1 Macnaughten's Hindu Law, Ch. VI, 76; Collector of Tirhoot v. Huro Pershad, 7 W.R. 500; Andale v. Secretary of State, 3 M.L.J. 242.

(6) Juswant Singh v. Dooleechand, 25 W.R. 255 (258); cf. Mela Singh v. Gurdas, 3 L. 362 F.B.

(7) Boolee Singh v. Bussunt, 8 W.R. 155; Sree Narain v. Bhya Jha, 2 B.S.R. 29 : 6 I.D. (O.S.) 380; Baij Nath v. Shamboo, (1908) P.L.R. 113.

(8) Sree Narain v. Bhya Jha, 2 B.S.R. 29 (34) : 6 I.D. (O.S.) 380 (384); Collector of Tirhoot v. Huro Pershad, 7 W.R. 500; Boolee Singh v. Bussunt, 8 W.R. 155 (Authorities reviewed).

(9) Collector of Tirhoot v. Huro Pershad, 7 W.R. 500; Boolee Singh v. Bussant, 8 W.R. 155.

(10) Sree Narayan v. Bhya Jha, 2 B.S.R. 29 : I.D. (O.S.) 380.

(11) Sree Narain v. Bhya Jha, 2 S.R.B. 29 (34) : 6 I.C. (O.S.) 380 (384).

(12) Mhd. Umar Khan v. M. Niazuddin, 39 C. 418 (432) P.C.; Elahya v. Kunha, (1871) P.R. No. 12; Abdulla v. Sunda, 11 I.C. (Ajmere) 670; Machh Bai v. Hirbai, 35 B. 264.

750. Analogous Law.—Adoption is an ancient institution not merely confined to the Hindus. (§ 11-12.) As such, it still survives amongst the various races as a part of their customary law, and, as such, it is still practised by the Hindu converts to Mahomedanism in the Punjab and elsewhere.[1] But Mahomedan Law, as such, recognizes no adoption, and consequently, apart from custom, an adoption, if made in fact, carries with it no right of inheritance.[2]

The Parsis[3] and the Burmese Buddhists still retain their institutions of adoption, the former being more allied to the Dattak, while the latter is merely an affiliation of a child of either sex.[4]

But both these instances are those of adoptions by non-Hindus not subject to Hindu Law. They have been here mentioned, as adoption is now essentially a Hindu institution, and in their case, as in the case of Hindu converts, it is the prototype of their present-day customs. Apart from them, however, custom has varied the normal incidents of adoption in the case of the Jains and the residents of Mithila, while in Southern India, it has taken the form of Illatom adoption or the adoption of a son-in-law; and elsewhere, especially amongst the dancing women, the adoption of a daughter has become customary.

Adoption of Daughters and of Illatom Sons-in-Law.

751. The custom of the adoption of daughters by dancing girls has long been customary in India and is recognized by Hindu Law. The fact that the girls so adopted are brought up to a life of prostitution does not appear to have stood in the way of legalizing the custom,[5] though it may amount to abuse of authority, and may, as such, be punishable under S. 366 of the Indian Penal Code.[6] As far back as 1864 Holloway, J., followed the rule laid down by Sir Thomas Strange that a dancing girl could adopt a daughter,[7] and in the earlier cases in which she was held entitled to succeed to her mother,[8] he said: "Precedents not indeed numerous but uniform have recognized rights of property and of inheritance between the prostitute and her offspring." He went on to hold that the gains of a prostitute were gains of her "Science", and so constituted her self-acquisition, if she had not learnt dancing at the expense of her family.[9] The ethical objection was no doubt raised, but it was met with the reply that prostitution was recognized and regulated by Hindu Law.[10] The adoption of the Illatom son-in-law in Madras[11] and amongst the Mahomedan agricultural classes of the Punjab (§ 750) is equally validated by custom, though in that case the adoption is virtually an appointment

(1) Vide foot-note 12 at p. 270.
(2) Mhd. Umar Khan v. M. Niazuddin, 39 C. 418 (432) P.C.
(3) Hemabaee v. Punjeabhaee, 5 W.R. 102 P.C.; Jehangir v. Kaikhusru, 13 Bom.L.R. 141.
(4) Ma Me Gale v. Ma Sa Yi, 32 C. 219 P.C.
(5) Venku v. Mahalinga, 11 M. 393 (396); Ghasiti v. Umras Jan, 21 C. 149 (156) P.C.; Veeranna v. Sarasiratnam, (1936) M. 639.
(6) This amendment of the Penal Code was introduced by the present writer to suppress the practice of Devadasis—See 2 Penal Law, (5th Ed.) § 4168, p. 1207.
(7) Manual §§ 98, 99.
(8) Tara Manee v. Motee, 7 S.D.A. R. 273; Strange, Manual, § 363.
(9) Chalakonda v. Chalakonda, 2 M. H.C.R. 56 (75, 77).
(10) Ib., explained in Venku v. Mahalinga, 11 M. 393 (396, 397).
(11) Nalluri v. Kamepalli, 42 M. 805 P. C.; Chenchamma v. Subbayya, 9 M. 114 (116); Gangayya v. Mahalakshmi, 10 M. 90 (92).

of the heir, which need not be attended by any ceremony.[1] Such quasi-adoptions are customary in the Punjab; but their effect is to create a purely personal relationship, resembling the Kritrim form of adoption, with the result that it does not affect any one beyond the immediate parties concerned. The appointed heir does not succeed as the grandson of the appointer's father, nor his son as the grandson of the appointer, unless, of course, there is a special custom to this effect."[2]

752. Local Variations.—Hindus, otherwise subject to the orthodox law of adoption, are found to have adopted variations which relate to (a) the relationship created by adoption; (b) removal of the Niyog and other restrictions as to the previous relationship of the adoptee, his age and marriage; (c) the ceremonies; (d) and the rights created by the adoption. As to (a), custom has restored the adoption of daughter and legalised that of a son-in-law; as to (b), custom has removed the orthodox restrictions against the adoption of the sister's and daughter's son, that of a married man and one whose ceremony of Upanayan has been performed; as to (c), custom has dispensed with all ceremonies except only that of the giving and taking, and even that has been held to be in some cases unnecessary; as to (d), the local variations, ordinarily, limit the rights created by adoptions to those personal between the adopter and adoptee, the latter being ineligible to lineal or collateral succession. But amongst the Jains, though the restrictions have been removed, the adoptee retains all the rights of a Dattak son. And yet they differ even upon the essential ceremony of the giving and taking. The adoption of a chela amongst Gharbari (house-holder) Gosavis as an alternative to the Dattak adoption is customary,[3] while the adoption of a son-in-law is customary both in certain districts of the Madras Presidency (§§ 750, 751), and in the Punjab amongst Mahomedan converts. The former, known as Illatom, will be more fully dealt with in the sequal. A son-in-law so adopted takes the place of a son for inheritance from the adopter; but otherwise he does not acquire any right of lineal or collateral succession. The adoption of daughter was anciently customary but has now become obsolete, and remains only extant with the unfortunate class of women popularly known as the dancing girls. (§ 751). Custom has broadened the base of no other relationship by adoption.

753. As regards the ceremonies, apart from those superseded by customs, the general tendency is to reduce them to the modicum of simplicity, so much so that even the giving and taking is at times held to be unnecessary. The ceremony was absent in the case of the Agarwal Banias of Zira (Punjab), amongst whom an unequivocal declaration of adoption, followed by the treatment of that boy as an adopted son, was held to suffice to constitute a valid adoption.[4] These Agarwals may have been Jains, but the same rule is said to apply to the Brahmins and Khatris of the Punjab.[5] In fact, the non-observance of the usual custom does not vitiate any adoption in the Punjab,[6] and amongst Jats[7] and

(1) Buta v. Nur Muhammad, (1878) P.R. 70; Jewa v. Karm Buksh, (1878) P.R. 80; Najibulla v. Nadir, (1881) P.R. 120; Ghulam Hussain v. Fatteh, (1884) P.R. 102; Niaz Ali v. Ahmad Din, (1882) P.R. 109.

(2) Mela Singh v. Gurdas, 3 L. 362 F.B.

(3) Harigir v. Anand Bharti, (1925) P.C. 127: 88 I.C. 343: 21 N.L.R. 127.

(4) Chiman Lal v. Hari Chand, 40 C. 879 (889, 890) P.C.

(5) Ib., p. 885.

(6) Ichnu v. Saudagor, (1894) P.R. No. 138; Kharak Singh v. Rupa Singh, (1883) P.R. No. 96.

(7) Jeeram v. Manphal, (1892) P.R. No. 4.

Lahore[1] any person, regardless of kinship and age, might be adopted by a mere expression of an intention accompanied by treatment,[2] but the relationship so created is merely personal and entitles the adopted son to succeed only to the estate of his adoptive father.[3] Many of the Punjab tribes, e.g., the Jats, retain the option of adopting in the dattak form, which gives the son the unfettered right of lineal and collateral succession, or in the customary form, when the relationship it creates is merely personal and limited to the adopter.[4]

753. But while there is a considerable laxity regarding the requisite ceremony constituting adoption amongst the various tribes in the Punjab, there are tribes, such as the Hindu Rajputs of Laddu gotra, inhabiting the Una tahsil of Hoshiarpur,[5] amongst whom adoption itself is forbidden, and a similar custom was set up as applicable to the Chandasama Gameti Garasias of the Bombay Presidency.[6]

So again, in the Punjab,[7] and elsewhere,[8] the adoption of the sister's[9] and daughter's son[10] is legalized by tribal customs, and in the Punjab, its legality is even presumed.[11]

From all this it will be seen that there is not a single rule of an orthodox adoption, which may not be, and has not been, varied by tribal and local customs. But it is doubtful if a mere family custom would suffice to defeat the general law.

754. As regards proof of such variations, the evidence must be evidence that proves the custom at variance with the general law; but such evidence may be supplemented or treated as sufficient, as it was, where an entry in the wajib-ul-arz had contained the records of the custom of widow's adoption even in the absence of the authority of their husband.[12] Such right of adoption was found proved in the case of Maheshri widows of their separate husbands.[13]

Adoption of a Daughter.

755. Though possessing ample sacred authority in support of the custom,[14] the adoption of a daughter does not appear to have been ever popular with the Hindus and in course of time, it fell into desuetude, till it now survives only in the case of

(1) Chanda v. Akbar, (1909) P.R. No. 49: 2 I.C. 91.

(2) Gurbacha v. Bujha, (1911) P.L.R. 99.

(3) Jiwan Mal v. Jamna Das, (1911) P.L.R. 67; Bhuggat Singh v. Boodho, (1867) P.R. No. 51.

(4) Bhagwan Singh v. Gurdial Singh, (1906) P.L.R. 80.

(5) Bishen Singh v. Amir Chand, (1894) P.R. No. 13.

(6) Verabhai v. Hiraba, 27 B. 492 P. C.

(7) Lalu v. Fetteh Singh, (1899) P. R. No. 18.

(8) Chainsukh v. Parbati, 14 A. 53.

(9) Mootsuddee v. Lajwantee, (1867) P.R. No. 24; Mya Dass v. Saw Un, (1867) P.R. No. 83; Harri Singh v. Gulaba, (1874) P.R.No. 50.

(10) Harri Singh v. Gulaba, (1874) P. R.No. 50; Hira v. Dharmo, (1872) P.R. No. 26; Dhami Ram v. Man Kour, (1873) P.R.No. 13.

(11) Manga v. Sihan, (1881) P. R. No. 66; Hoshnaqi v. Jaimal Singh, (1881) P.R. No. 57.

(12) Bishwanath Singh v. Jugal Kishore, 50 I.A. 179: 1923 P. C. 90.

(13) Mathura Das v. Srikissen, 27 C. L.J. 517: 44 I.C. (C.) 5 distinguishing Gopi Kishen v. Gopi Kishen, 27 I. C. (L.) 79 in which the custom was not pleaded; Kalu Ram v. Piari Lal, 1 L. 92.

(14) "The daughter given resembling the legitimate daughter is a substitute for a son." Datt. Mim., VII-31 (Suth.) p. 98. Nand Pandit supports his view by citing a considerable array of authorities favouring her adoption—See Sec. VII devoted to that topic. (Suth.), pp. 91-100. Nowab Ray v. Bhuguttee, 6 Beng. S.R. 4: 7 I.D. (O. S.) 669 (see authorities in support cited at pp. 675-678); daughter cannot be adopted in the Punjab, Jamadar (In re), (1931) L. 399. See General introduction, § 11.

women of an unfortunate class who are suffered to take daughters in adoption. (§ 751.) But the present tendency of the law is to discourage such adoption. In Bombay, the court refused to uphold such an adoption by a Brahmin, holding it to be opposed to Mayukh,[1] and the Madras court has held it equally inapplicable to a family man,[2] while even as regards prostitutes and dancing girls, the courts differ as to the legality of their adoptions of daughters. Both in Calcutta and in some cases in Bombay, such adoptions are held illegal on the ground that an adoption by a woman can only be to her husband and as these adopters have no husbands, they cannot adopt to themselves.[3] But the Madras High Court upheld such adoptions as sanctioned by usage,[4] though if their purpose be immoral, they cannot be tolerated.[5] And this view has also prevailed in some cases in Bombay.[6]

Illatom Adoption.

756. No other relationship, except that of a son or in very limited cases, of a daughter, can be ordinarily created by adoption. One cannot, for instance, adopt a person to be one's grandson, great grandson, brother or a nephew. The only deviation from this rule is the adoption of a son-in-law which has become rooted in the districts of Bellary, Cuddapah, Kurnool, Nellore, and the North and South Arcot Districts of the Madras Presidency.[7] This is locally known as the custom of illatom, and is quite independent of the adoption of a son, since its object is merely secular, and the rules of Hindu Law do not apply to it,[8] though such adoption is also ordinarily made by a person who has no son living at the time, though he may have any number of daughters.[9] But amongst certain families, such as those belonging to the Kumma and Reddi castes, the existence of a natural son to an undivided brother would appear to offer no obstacle to such adoption.[10] and it does not prevent the subsequent adoption of a dattak son.[11] The illatom son-in-law counts as a son, and has the same rights as the aurus son, sharing equally with him on partition.[12] Among the Reddis or the Kapu caste of Nellore he is allowed even to continue his connection with his natural family, being a preferential heir to his natural father's divided brother[13] while the members of his natural family continue their right of succession to him.[14] The illatom father-in-law may, during his life-time, deal with the property as he chooses, and his sons have no right by birth in such property.[15] On his death it passes to his heirs in the

(1) Ganga Bai v. Ananta, 13 B. 690.
(2) Guddati v. Ganapati, 23 M.L.J. 493.
(3) Hancower v. Hancower, 2 Mor. Dig. 133; Narendra v. Dinanalli, 36 C. 824; Mathura v. Esu, 4 B. 545; Tara v. Nana, 14 B. 90 (92); Hira v. Radha, 37 B. 116.
(4) Venku v. Mahalinga, 11 M. 393; Muttukannu v. Paramasami, 12 M. 214; Sivasangu v. Minal, Ib., 277.
(5) Kamakshi v. Ramasami, 19 M. 127; Kandaiya v. Chokkammal, 28 M.L.T. 106: 59 I.C. (M.) 214; contra where purpose not immoral, Shanmugam v. Krishnaveni, (1931) M.W.N. 288.
(6) Manjamma v. Seshagiri Rao, 26 B. 491 (496).
(7) Hanumantamma v. Rami, 4 M. 272 (283).
(8) Nalluri v. Kamepalli, 42 M. 805 P.C.; Subba Rao v. Mahalakshmamma, 54 M. 27 (55).
(9) Hanumantamma v. Rami, 4 M. 272 (283); contra in Nalluri v. Kamepalli, 26 I.C. (M.) 54 (the existence of a natural son is no bar to Illatom adoption).
(10) Nalluri v. Kamepalli, 42 M. 805 (811, 812) P.C.
(11) Chanchamma v. Subbaya, 9 M. 114 (115).
(12) Hanumantamma v. Rami, 4 M. 272 (283); Chanchamma v. Subbaya, 9 M. 114 (116).
(13) Balarami v. Pera, 6 M. 267.
(14) Balarami v. Pera, 6 M. 267; Ramkrishna v. Subbakka, 12 M. 442.
(15) Challa v. Challa, 7 M.H.C.R. 25.

same way as self-acquired property, the heirs of the adopter having no right to it.[1] Where he lives with the adopted son, there may be any coparcenership between the two and there is no right of survivorship.[2] The relationship of illatom commences as soon as a person is admitted into the family, with a view to marrying him to the daughter of the taker, though the marriage may take place after the latter's death.[3] Since an illatom adoption though recognized, is based on custom, it follows that the claim founded on that relationship cannot be made good unless the relationship itself is strictly proved.[4]

Kritrim Adoption in the Punjab and Burma.

757. The simplified Kritrim which merely created a personal relationship between the adopter and adoptee has become customary both in the Punjab[5] and Burma[6] where its incidents are mainly those of the Mithila Kritrim, viz, the adoptee becomes the son of the adopter but can claim no relationship beyond him, and cannot succeed to any one save his own adopter. He has no right of collateral succession. Similar adoptions are practised by the Gayawal[7] and the Nambudri Brahmins.[8]

758. Punjab Adoptions.—For the rest, though adoptions in the Punjab are not outside the reach of the Mitakshara, still, in the matter of adoption, as indeed, in several other matters, elsewhere reserved for decision by the personal law, it is almost entirely controlled by customs, both tribal and territorial, many of which are recorded in the Riwaz-i-am, which is followed in preference to the Shastric law.[9] As such, the Jats of the Delhi District can adopt an orphan.[10]

759. In the Punjab, where the appointment of an heir is customary, it is held to create a purely personal relationship resembling the Kritrim form of adoption with the result that it does not affect any one beyond the parties thereto. The appointed heir does not succeed as the grandson of the appointer's father, nor his son as the grandson of the appointer, unless, of course, there is a special custom to this effect.[11]

760. Burmese and Parsi Adoptions.—Both the Burmese and the Parsi laws of adoption still maintain some relic of the Dattak adoption, but otherwise they are indistinguishable from secular affiliation.[12]

---

(1) Challa v. Challa, 7 M.H.C.R. 25; Ramkrishna v. Subbakka, 12 M. 442 (444).

(2) Chanchamma v. Subbaya, 9 M. 114 (116).

(3) Venkoyalapati v. Nagendla, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 193: 11 I. C. 25; Vachoora v. Vachoora, 13 M.L.T. 113: 18 I.C. 698.

(4) Pattya v. Venkamma, 17 M.L.T. 393: 29 I.C. 54.

(5) Baijnath v. Shamboo, (1908) P. W.R. 53; Jiwanmal v. Jamna Das, (1913) P.W.R. 232: 10 I.C. 822.

(6) Mashwe v. Mashwe, (1910) 4 Bur. L.R. 158: 11 I.C. 776.

(7) Lachman v. Kanhaya, 22 C. 609 P. C.

(8) Subramanyan v. Parameswaram, 11 M. 116 (124).

(9) Basant Singh v. Brij Raj, 57 A. 494 (509) P.C.

(10) Ib.

(11) Mela Singh v. Gurudas, 3 L. 362 F.B.

(12) For fuller details, see Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), §§ 932, 933, pp. 489, 490.

CHAPTER VI.

MINORITY AND GUARDIANSHIP.

761. Topical Introduction.—The law of guardianship is a branch of the law of trusts[1] and is based on the principle that infants, being of immature intellect and imperfect discretion, are incapable of exercising any civil right or performing civil duties, and their interests, consequently, require to be protected by the recognition and appointment of a guardian to their person or property, or both.

762. All laws recognize this incapacity, and the necessity for protection. And all laws accept the parents as the natural guardians of their offspring. Of these, however, the father has an almost absolute right to the guardianship of his children of both sexes. This is the relic of his old patria potestas, which enabled him to own, sell, or kill his own offspring. But this can only be by analogy, for when the father exercised his patria potestas, his minor children had no individual rights or property. They were merely his chattels. Their individual rights are of later growth. Consequently, the Hindu law givers do not recognize any absolute rights of guardianship in any one, the sovereign being entrusted with the guardianship of all minors,[2] and entitled to appoint any person as their guardian.[3] But, nevertheless, the parental power and authority was a fact which the Courts could not ignore, and following the broad analogy of their pristine rights, their claim to guardianship of their children was never contested. And as between them, the father, as the head of the family and its breadwinner, was held to possess an absolute right. But his present power, though nominally absolute, is limited by his capacity of which the court, as representative of the sovereign, is the sole judge. Next to the father stands the mother. Other things being equal, she has a preferable claim and, according to a decision, even a better claim for the guardianship of her minor daughter than the father.[4] But as will be presently seen, this was the exceptional case of a Kulin father with his numerous wives. In normal cases, the courts recognize the father's right as stronger than that of any other relation, and in a competition between the father and the mother, the former starts with a clear advantage which the latter has to meet. Apart from the parents no other relation has any right in the same degree. Hindu Law, no doubt, favours the paternal over the maternal relations, and this is never left out of account. But the welfare and wishes of the minor are then accounted as of a greater moment.

---

(1) Beanfort (Duke) v. Berty, 1 P. Wms. 703 (705); Mathew v. Brise, 14 Beav. 341 (345); aliter—agency; Cave v. Mackenzie, 46 L.J.Ch. 564.

(2) Manu, VIII-27; Dig., 574, 575; Ram Bunse v. Soobh Koonwaree, 7 W. R. 321 (325); Bunseedhur v. Bindeseree, 10 M.I.A. 454; Besant v. Narayaniah, 38 M. 807 (819) P.C.; Jago v. Oodal, 4 N.L.R. 20.

(3) Muthu Veerappa v. Ponnuswami, (1911) M.W.N. 561: 13 I.C. 16.

(4) Modhoosoodun v. Jadub Chunder, 3 W.R. 194.

763. The law of guardianship is now codified in an Act,[1] which, however, does not affect the personal law of the Hindus so far as it relates to the power of appointing a guardian, but otherwise it controls his appointment.

Of Minority.

Age of majority.

72. (1) In matters relating to marriage, divorce, dower, and adoption, a person attains the age of majority at the commencement on completion of his sixteenth year;[2] otherwise, except in the cases hereinafter provided, he attains it on completion of the eighteenth year.[3]

(2) Every minor of whose person or property a guardian has been appointed or declared under the Guardians and Wards Act, and every minor whose property is under the superintendence of a Court of Wards, attains his majority on completion of his twenty-first year.[4]

764. Analogous Law.—This section is a summary of the Hindu Law as codified and saved by the Indian Majority Act. Clause (1) reproduces the saving clause (2) of the Act[5] and states what is now regarded as the age of majority under Hindu Law.

765. The saving clause in the Indian Majority Act was, of course, inserted out of respect to the personal laws of the Hindus and Mahomedans, which it has been the policy of the Government to leave unmolested.

Hindu Law of Majority.

The only textual rule to be found on the subject of Hindu majority is the following:—

Manu.—"The property of a student and of an infant, whether by descent or otherwise, let the King hold in his custody, until the owner shall have ended his studentship, or until his infancy shall have ceased in his sixteenth year."[6]

According to this rule, the infancy of a minor "ceases in his sixteenth year." But the phrase is vague and might mean either upon entering the sixteenth year,[7] or upon its completion,[8] and there is authority for either view. The Dayabhag school favouring the former and the Mitakshara school the latter.[9] When Manu enacted the rule, women were incapable of holding property or entering upon a course of studentship.

No doubt a period has been prescribed for the termination of the age of studentship and infancy, but as has been pointed out before, that period is strictly speaking inapplicable to women who are declared ineligible for religious studies, and whose perpetual dependence upon men is consistenly insisted upon.

These are the inherent defects of the Hindu system, and failing a direct

(1) VII of 1890.

(2) Jamoona v. Bamasoondari, 1 C. 289 (295) P.C.; Amarendra v. Sanatan, 12 Pat. 642 (660) P.C.; Mothoomohan v. Soorendro, 1 C. 108 F.B.; Venkataswami v. Sathiraju, 40 M. 925 (928, 929).

(3) S. 2, Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875).

(4) S. 3, Ib.

(5) IX of 1875.

(6) Manu, VIII-27; IX-146; 190, 191.

(7) 1 Dig. 293; 1 Dig. 115; Dayabhag, III-1-17-Note; Datt. Mim., IV-47; 1 W. Macn. 103; 2 W. Macn. 220, 288-Note; Lachman v. Rupchand, (1831) 5 B.S.D. R. 136: 7 I.D. (O.C.) 436; Luckheenarain v. Mudhoosoodun, (1853) 9 B.S.D.A. 505: 13 I.D. (O.S.) 382; Sheebsunker v. Manakchunder, (1859) B.S.D.A. 885; Dehomoyee v. Juggessur, 1 W.R. 75; Monsoor Ali v. Ramdayal, 3 W.R. 50; Callychurn v. Bunggobutty, 19 W.R. 110 F.B.

(8) 1 W.Macn.H.L., 103: 1 Str.H.L. 72: 2 Str. H.L. 76, 77, 80; Lachman v. Rupchand, 5 S.D.A.B. 136; Govind Nath v. Gulalchand, 5 B.S.R. 322; Shivji v. Datu, 12 B.H.C.R. 281 (290).

(9) Ramesh Chandra v. Maharaja Birendra, (1925) C. 513 (514, 515).

rule, some limitation had to be fixed, which the courts have, in several cases, fixed as stated in clause (1).

766. Clause (1) of this section is saved in section 2, and clause (2) is abstracted from section 3 of the Majority Act, which prescribes a uniform age of majority applicable to all minors including Hindus who are, however, declared exempt from that Act in matters affecting marriage, divorce, dower and adoption, thereby impliedly reserving to them for those purposes their own personal law of majority, if any. Now, since the Majority Act applies to other cases including guardianship, it follows that a person may be still a minor under the Majority Act, and yet a major under his personal law, and therefore, free to enter into the four excepted transactions, viz., marriage, divorce, dower and adoption. Since the saving clause does not exempt guardianship and wills, it follows that a minor under the Act can neither make a will nor can he act as a guardian. Under section 3 of the Majority Act, the normal age of majority for every person, irrespective of nationality or religion, is reached on completion of the eighteenth year, except (a) where before completion of that age, a guardian is appointed or declared under the Guardians and Wards Act; or (b) the management of his estate is assumed by the Court of Wards, in which cases, the age of majority is extended by another three years. It will be seen that this extended nonage does not continue where a guardian is appointed otherwise than by a court of Justice. Consequently, where a guardian is appointed by the will of the father, it does not extend that period, nor, of course, is it extended by the existence of a natural guardian. This may sometimes lead to awkward results. Since a guardian may be younger than his ward, and while the former may be a major, the latter may still be a minor. It has been held that if the guardian is "appointed" or "declared by the court," the period of majority is postponed even if the guardian should resign or cease to act.[1] Such appointment or declaration must be under section 7 (1) of the Guardians and Wards Act.[2] Where, therefore, the Court merely granted letters of administration to the de facto guardian of a minor in respect of an estate under section 13 of the Probate and Administration Act,[3] or appoints merely a guardian ad litem for the purpose of a suit, the period of majority is not postponed.

Hindu Age of Majority.

767. In calculating the age of a minor, the day on which a person is born and the day on which he completes his eighteenth year, or twenty-first year, as the case may be, are both counted in computing his age of majority. So if A be born a minute before midnight of 1st January 1900 and die a minute after the 31st December 1918 he would have died a major, for he had attained eighteen years of age at midnight of the 31st December, although really 48 hours short of two minutes will be wanting from the instant of his birth. This is in accordance with the rule that law generally ignores fractions of a day.

Mode of Calculation.

73. Guardian means a person having the care of the person of another, or of his property, or of both.[4]

"Guardian" defined.

768. Analogous Law.—This definition is adopted from Section 4 (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act[5] where it is limited to a minor. But

(1) Sadholal v. Murlidhar, 29 A. 672 F.B.
(2) VIII of 1890.
(3) V of 1881; Ganeshilal v. Surajmal, (1906) P.R. 89.
(4) S. 4 (a), Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890).
(5) VIII of 1890.

since a Hindu husband is the natural guardian of his wife, the definition here has been enlarged to include such guardianship.

769. Guardian and Trustee.—A guardianship is, sometimes, spoken of as a sacred trust, but this is only so as regards the nature of the obligations necessary for the discharge of the two offices, but the powers of the guardian and the trustee are not co-extensive, those of the guardian being more limited than those of the latter. A guardian can alienate only in cases of necessity or for an evident advantage of his ward, while the trustee is empowered to deal with the property in any case he considers reasonable and proper.[1]

74. (1) A guardian may be natural, de facto, testamentary, or one appointed by the court.

Four classes of guardians.

(2) A natural guardian is one who is entitled, under the personal law, to which he is subject, to act as the guardian by virtue of his relationship to the minor.[2]

(3) A de facto guardian is one who, though not entitled to act as the lawful guardian, nevertheless so acts, and who, thereupon, acquires all the rights, and is subject to all the liabilities, of a legal guardian.[3]

(4) A testamentary guardian is one so appointed by the father in his will for his children.

(5) The court may appoint or declare a guardian in accordance with the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act,[4] or the High Court might do so in the exercise of its inherent power. The guardian so appointed may be called the certificated guardian.

(1) Of Natural Guardians.

75. The following relations are the natural guardians of the person and property of a minor in the order mentioned below, namely:—

Natural Guardian.

(a) The father;[5]
(b) The mother;[6]
(c) The paternal relations;[7]
(d) The maternal relations.[8]

770. Analogous Law.—The term "Natural Guardian" has already been defined in the previous section. The father is, by reason of his patria potestas, unquestionably the most preferential guardian of all his minor children legitimate or illegitimate,[9] male and unmarried female, and is, as such, entitled both to the custody of their person and property. This right, now clearly crystallized by the case-law, was but faintly adumbrated in the sacred terts.[10]

Natural Guardian.

---

(1) Subbiah v. Rangia, 7 M.L.J. 191; Trusts Act (II of 1882), S. 36.

(2) Thayammal v. Kuppanna, 38 M. 1125; Purushottam v. Brindavana, (1931) M. 597.

(3) Hunooman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (412, 413).

(4) VIII of 1890.

(5) Kalidas v. Subbamma, 7 M. 29; Nanabhai v. Janardan, 12 B. 110; Shamlal v. Bindo, 26 A. 594.

(6) Bhiko v. Chamela, 2 C.W.N. 191.

(7) Kristo Kissore v. Kader Moye, 2 C.L.R. 583.

(8) 1 Macn. H.L. 103, 104; 1 Str. H. L. 71; Kristo Kissore v. Kader Moye, 2 C.L.R. 583; Bhiko v. Chamela, 2 C.W. N. 191; Thayammal v. Kuppanna, 38 M. 1125.

(9) Premkuar v. Banarai Das, 15 L. 630.

(10) Manu, VIII-299; IX-3, 4.

771. In all Smritis the position of the father as the head and guardian of his minor children is taken for granted. But the mother's right to the guardianship of her minor children is of later growth, since the absolute dependence of woman in the ancient Hindu household, left no room for assigning her any duties for the protection of her own children, which was left to other male members. Her right may be said to have sprung into being by force of the jus naturale given effect to by the courts[1] and under the Mithila Law, her right is in this respect even superior to that of the father.[2] But, ordinarily, the father has the right paramount to the custody of his minor children,[3] after whom the mother,[4] the paternal relations,[5] and the maternal relations[6] come in varying degrees of right. But there is no Shastric authority in support of their claim, which rests on the nearness of their relationship to the minor, and their presumed regard for him.

772. Father's Rights.—Of all relations the father is by right the best entitled to the guardianship of his minor children both male and female, subject only to two conditions, namely, that the children must be his, though not legitimate[7] and the female child unmarried; since upon her marriage his patria potestas passes from him to her husband. But until her actual marriage, the authority remains with the father, even though she is betrothed,[8] and on her childless widowhood the court in one case preferred her own father to her husband's relations to be her guardian.[9] The father does not lose his right to the guardianship of his children by his loss of caste,[10] though he might perhaps forfeit his right by permanently renouncing the world by entering a holy order.[11] But the facts that he is indigent, diseased or leading an immoral life,[12] do not suffice to vacate his authority, though these facts may qualify fitness in a case in which the court has to declare or appoint a guardian.

Clause (a).

773. With these necessary qualifications the father may be said to possess the best claim to act as guardian of his minor children;[13] and con-

(1) Danappa, In re, 1 B.H.C.R. 134; Chanvirapa v. Danava, 19 B. 593; Bhikuo v. Chamela, 2 C.W.N. 191; Sundar v. Bennud Ram, 4 C. 76.

(2) Jussoda v. Netyalall, 5 C. 43.

(3) Hemnanth (Re), 1 Hyde 111; Soobh Piarthee Lal v. Soobah, 7 W.R. 73; Kalidas v. Subbamma, 7 M. 29; Nanabhai v. Janardhan, 12 B. 110; Shamlal v. Bindo, 26 A. 594.

(4) Bhikoo v. Chamela, 2 C.W.N. 191.

(5) Kristo Kissore v. Kader Moye, 2 C.L.R. 583.

(6) 1 Macn.H.L. 103, 104: 1 Str.H. L. 71; Kristo Kissore v. Kader Moye, 2 C.L.R. 583; Bhiko v. Chamela, 2 C. W.N. 191; Thayammal v. Kuppanna, 38 M. 1125.

(7) Premkuar v. Banarsi Das, 15 L. 630.

(8) Ram Singh v. Bhugwan, (1866) P. R. 101.

(9) Tataram v. Ramcharan, 33 A. 222.

(10) Act XXI of 1850; Q. v. Bezonji Perry's O.C. 91; Muchoo v. Arzoon, 5 W. R. 235; Kanabi Ram v. Biddya Ram, I A. 549; Kanlesra v. Jorai, 28 A. 233; Sham Singh v. Santabai, 25 B. 551 (555); Putlabai v. Mahadu, 33 B. 107.

(11) Ishwar Chunder Surma*, (In re), (1850) B.S.D.A. 471.

(12) Kali Das v. Subbamma, 7 M. 29.

(13) S. 19 (b), Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890); Lachmi Narayan v. Balaram, 2 Pat.L.J. 190; 39 I.C. 662; Bindaji v. Mathura, 30 B. 152; Mahabaleswar v. Ramchandra, 38 B. 94; Deba Nand v. Anandmani, 43 A. 213; Albrecht v. Jellamma, 22 M.L.J. 247 (248): 13 I.C. 453: Alagappa v. Mangathai, 40 M. 672; Moosala v. Kotamarti, 44 M. 189; contra in Chidambaram v. Subbayya, 41 M. 561 F.B.; Rungabhai v. Paurusami, 21 I.C. (M.) 848; Subramania v. Ammayee, (1915) M.W.N. 414: 29 I.C. 740; Albrecht v. Jellamma, 22 M. L.J. 247: 13 I.C. 453 (same under Buddhist Law) Mathlin v. Maung Po, 8 Bur.L.T. 73: 29 I.C. 980.

sequently the court has on jurisdiction to appoint or declare him as such; nor can he seek such appointment or declaration; though some one else may, in supersession to him and on proof of his unfitness. But this is only so as regards the person of his minor children which term includes both his natural and adopted son.[1] But the court did not regard a Kulin Brahmin with his numerous wives whom he visited after lengthened absence whom the court as such natural guardian as the mother of their daughter.[2] It seems that under the Mithila Law the mother is the acknowledged guardian of all her children, whether male or female.[3]

Adoptive Father v. Natural Father.

774. As already stated, a boy on adoption completely passes into the family of his adoptive father, who is then his natural preferential guardian even against his natural father, who with the adoption resigns all his parental connection, control and authority, but where, in the absence of the adoptive father, the natural father acted for his son and effected a compromise on his behalf and for his benefit, the court held the compromise good as the natural father was a proper guardian to assert the right of his son as adopted heir against a rival claimant.[4] In another case, the claim of the natural father, was, on the death of the adoptive father, sustained in preference to the latter's relations and even daughters, on the ground of his natural affection for his child.[5]

Illegitimate Children.

775. An illegitimate child is, in the eye of the law, nobody's child, and the natural guardian of such children is their mother,[6] unless the child was born in continuous concubinage, when, probably, the ordinary rule would apply.[7] But as observed by Lord Herschell: "It is no longer important to enquire what are the rights of the mother in relation to an illegitimate child at common law. All the courts are now governed by equitable rules, and empowered to exercise equitable jurisdiction."[8] In other words, the question in such cases is not whether the mother should possess the child, but what would be for the benefit of the child. Consequently, though the mother is the guardian of her illegitimate children, the court would not consign them to her care if she is leading an immoral life, and is likely to corrupt their morals.[9] On the other hand, where the child is too young to be removed from her care, the court would tolerate her guardianship till it can safely place it in better hands.

English and Hindu Laws how far identical.

776. The English and Hindu Laws of guardianship to a large extent coincide. Both under the Hindu Law and the English Law, the father is the guardian by nature of his minor children, and at common law, he is entitled to the custody of them against all

(1) Lakshmibai v. Shridhar, 3 B. 1; Sree Narain v. Kishen Soondery, 11 B.L.R. 171 (191) P.C.; Nogendro v. Kishensoondery, 19 W.R. 133 (139) P.C.; Moosalakant v. Kotamarti, 40 M.L.J. 46: 62 I.C. 437.

(2) Modhoosoodun v. Jadub Chunder, 3 W.R. 194.

(3) Jussoda v. Lallah Nettya Lall, 5 C. 43.

(4) Nirvanaya v. Nirvanaya, 9 B. 365 (367).

(5) Ganga Prasad v. Nara Kanta, 15 C.W.N. 558: 7 I.C. 234.

(6) Venkamma v. Savitramma, 12 M. 67 (68, 69); Saithri, In re, 16 B. 307 (317); Moneya v. Felix Slym, 5 Bur.L.T. 164: 17 I.C. 986.

(7) Prem Kuar v. Banarsi Das, 15 L. 630.

(8) Barnardo v. McHugh, (1891) A. C. 388 (398).

(9) Venkamma v. Savitramma, 12 M. 671; In re, G (Infants), (1889) 1 Ch. 719.

the world, including even the mother.[1] And so under both laws, on the death of the father, the mother is the natural guardian of her children, but at law, she has no right to interfere with them against a testamentary guardian appointed by the father.[2] Equally under both laws the mother is prima facie the natural guardian of her illegitimate children, and, therefore, under ordinary circumstances, entitled to their custody,[3] and thus her right must be recognized unless there are strong grounds for displacing her.[4] But it is not an absolute right; nor can she transfer her right to another person.[5] It is not the practice of the court in either country to appoint or declare a guardian of a minor who has no separate property of his own.[6] In England, the Guardianship and Infants Act, 1886[7] now regulates the appointment of guardians as the Guardians and Wards Act[8] regulates their appointment here. In both countries, the common law has been brought under the control of the statute, and the leading principles of English Law will be found to have crept into the rules which the courts now enforce as the acknowledged rules of Hindu Law. And this was to be expected, since Hindu Law has no developed system of guardianship, and English Law naturally fills in the void as embodying the rules of justice, equity and good conscience.

777. Mother's Right.—Next to the father, the mother[9] is entitled to the guardianship of her minor children and of their property,[10] but unlike the father, she does not possess the power of appointment. Her customary or statutory remarriage does not necessarily deprive her of the guardianship of her son,[11]

Clause (b).

---

(1) Wellesley v. Duke of Beaufort, (1827) 2 Russ. 21: 38 E.R. 236.

(2) Eyre v. Countess of Shaftesbury, (1722) 2 P. Wms. 103 (115): 24 E.R. 659.

(3) Darcys (In re), (1860) 11 Ir. R. 298.

(4) R. v. Nash, 10 Q.B.D. 454; Barnardo v. McHugh, (1891) A.C. 388 (399).

(5) Ullee, In re, 53 L.T. 711.

(6) Humphreys v. Polak, (1891) 2 K. B. 385.

(7) 49 & 50 Vict., C. 27, S. 3 (1).

(8) Act VIII of 1890.

(9) 1 Mac.H.L., Ch. VII, p. 103; Ib., Ch. VII, p. 205; Doe v. Doorgapersaud, 2 Mor. Dig. 49: 3 I.D. (O.S.) 801 (802): Kooldeep Narain v. Rajbunsee, 7 B.S.R. 467: 8 I.D. (O.S.) 354 (356); Bunseedhur v. Bindeseree, 10 M.I.A. 454 (471, 472), in which step-mother's right to guardianship of her step-son's estate was assumed; Pirthee Lal v. Doorgalal, 7 W. R. 73 (75); Ramdheen v. Ram Ruttun, 10 W.R. 425; Soonder Narain v. Bennud Ram, 4 C. 76; Manishankar v. Muli, 12 B. 686; Honapa v. Mhalpai, 15 B. 259; Murari v. Tayana, 20 B. 286 (288); Namasevayam v. Annamalai, 4 M.H.C.R. 339 (343); Doraisami v. Nondisami, 38 M. 118; Kanlesra v. Jora Kasundan, 28 A. 233 (235); Bachchan Singh v. Kamta Prasad, 32 A. 392; Collector v. Umrao Singh, 13 A.L.J. 437: 29 I.C. 220; Swarath Ram v. Ram Ballabh, 47 A. 784; Madho Singh v. Mhd. Ibrahim, 1 C.P.L.R. 72; Birdhi Chand v. Marian Bi, 3 C.P.L.R. 86; Sitaram v. Tukia, 6 C.P.L.R. 15; Tanto v. Gajadhar, 1 N. 129 (130); Jago v. Oodal, 4 N. 20; contra in Husen v. Rajaram, 10 N. 133; Vithu v. Devidas, 15 N. 55.

(10) Bunseedhar v. Bindeshree, 10 M. I.A. 454 (471, 472); Murari v. Tayana, 20 B. 286 (288); Doraisami v. Nondisami, 38 M. 118; Honapa v. Mhalpai, 15 B. 259; Manishankar v. Bai Muli, 12 B. 686; Bachchan Singh v. Kanta Prasad, 32 A. 392; Madho Singh v. Mhd. Ibrahim, 1 C.P.L.R. 72; Birdhi Chand v. Marian Bi, 3 C.P.L.R. 86.

(11) Ganga Prasad v. Ramasrey, 38 C. 862; Bindo v. Sham Lal, 29 A. 210; Acho v. Acha, 35 M. 728; Bhalton Prasad v. Ram Chandra, 4 Pat.L.W. 373: 45 I.C. 253; Nur Bibi v. Mohran, (1887) P.R. 44; Fatima v. Rani, (1915) P.L.R. 101: 28 I.C. 507; Ambo v. Ganga Sahai, (1913) P.L.R. 193; Indi v. Ghania, 53 I.C. (L.) 783; Ram Labhai v. Durga Das, 15 L. 28; Jago v. Godel, 4 N.L.R. 20, contra in Chironji v. Punam, 48 I.C. (N.) 75; Ranganaiki v. Ramanuja, 35 M. 728; Jiwani v. Mala Ram 3 L. 29.

though the court may apply a different rule if she has young daughters and a strange step-father,[1] or if she was leading an immoral life.[2]

778. The fact that the mother is illiterate[3] or a paradanashin is no objection to her eligibility,[4] unless it will interfere with her duties, e.g., if she is a young widow, or only a step-mother, and the estate is large which will have to be managed by her father,—who is himself in embarrassed circumstances, and there is a reasonable fear of the estate being squandered.[5] It would seem that, apart from the guardianship of her minor daughters, she has the right to be consulted in the selection of a bridegroom, and that she may even effect a valid marriage even in the presence of a paternal grandfather, even though the latter is not shewn to have neglected his duties,[6] and such marriage may be valid even though it was contracted without the father's consent.[7]

779. The guardianship of the mother is in the nature of a trust which she cannot part in favour of another, though if by parting with her child to be brought up by another as his own child, she would not be restored to its custody, if she is found to be without means, and the change of custody would not be in the child's interest.[8]

Step-mother.

780. As to the step-mother's right of guardianship, Manu declares: "If among all the wives of the same husband, one bring forth a male child, Manu has declared them all, by means of that son, to be mothers of male issue."[9] Following this verse it was held in some old cases that a step-mother is the legal guardian of her step-son in preference to the paternal uncle,[10] though in a Bengal case, her right was generally doubted and denied in preference to the paternal grand-mother.[11] But it has since been held that a step-mother is a competent guardian,[12] though the contrary has also been held elsewhere.[13]

Clause (c).

781. Paternal Relations.—Next to the parents, the right of guardianship is said to vest in the paternal relations of the minor in preference to his maternal relations,[14] but neither has any paramount right, and the court is free to appoint any one it considers competent to take the place of the child's parent.[15] So it was observed: "In fact, the main question for the court

(1) Bindo v. Shamlal, 29 A. 210.

(2) Venkamma v. Savitramma, 12 M. 67 (68, 69); following R. v. Clarke, 7 E. & B. 186; Skinner v. Orde, 14 M.I.A. 309; Harman v. Partalu, (1911) P.L.R. 67.

(3) Nikharennesia (In re), 20 C.W. N. 663: 33 I.C. 918.

(4) Jaiwanti, v. Gajadhar, 38 C. 783.

(5) Sundarmani v. Gokulanand, 18 C. W.N. 160: 16 I.C. 900.

(6) Ranganaikammal v. Ramanuja, 35 M. 728; Ram Kore v. Jamnadas, 37 B. 18; Mayadevi v. Ramchand, (1916) P.R. 20; 31 I.C. 184; Indi v. Ghania, 53 I.C. 783.

(7) Mulchand v. Bhudhia, 22 B. 812.

(8) Peterson v. Shave, 24 C.W.N. 711: 56 I.C. 242; Pollard v. Rouse, 33 M. 288.

(9) Manu, IX-188.

(10) Lukmee v. Umar Chand, 2 B.S. D.R. 14; Nunko Lal v. Sohodra, 1827 S.D.A.N.W.P. 115; Vyavastha Darpan, p. 563; W. Mac.H.L., 103, following the first case.

(11) Ram Bunsee v. Soobh Koonwaree, 7 W.R. 321 (325).

(12) Bunseedhur v. Bindeseree, 10 M. I.A. 454 (471, 472), in which the step-mother's right to act as guardian was not questioned; Sundarmani v. Gokulanand, 18 C.W.N. 160 (163); Mukthu Veerappa v. Ponnuswami, 22 M.L.J. 68: 13 I.C. 16; Venkatasami v. Muthusami, 34 M.L.J. 177: 45 I.C. 942; Jago v. Oodal, 4 N. 20; contra in Vithu v. Devi Das, 15 N.L.R. 55.

(13) Vithu v. Devi Das, 15 N.L.R. 55.

(14) Gulbai (Re), 32 B. 50.

(15) Kristo Kissore Neoghy v. Kadermoye, 2 C.L.R. 583.

to consider in the case of the unfortunate minors who have lost their natural guardians is, who amongst the relations, or for the matter of that, friends of the minors, can you select who will supply as nearly as possible the place of their lost parent or parents."[1] But the nearness of relationship of the guardian to the minor is always germane to the discussion, because near relations feel natural love and affection for the minor which insures his welfare.[2] As such, the minor's elder brother ranks next in affection after the parents and he is placed in a class apart from the rest of his paternal relations.[3]

Brother.

782. Maternal Relations.—After the brother, the paternal lineal relations, and after them the maternal lineal relations are held qualified to act as guardians. But their claim is so slender that the court does not weigh it in golden scales, placing before it the broad question, which amongst the several claimants would treat the minor kindly, and study his welfare, in short, who will be his best appointed parent.

Clause (d).

783. Consequently, the courts have preferred a maternal grandmother to a paternal grandfather,[4] and a father's mother to a paternal granduncle,[5] a maternal uncle to a paternal uncle,[6] a maternal grandmother to a paternal grandfather's brother[7] a mother's sister to a father's brother,[8] in all of which the court regarded welfare of the minor as more important than the propinquity of the claimants. It was also pointed out that, except the parents of the minor, no other relation had the same legal right to be a guardian of the minor whose welfare must be the paramount consideration for the court, though due regard will always be paid to the rights of blood relations, and failing them, to other relations who, by reason of their kinship, are likely to take more care of the minor than mere strangers who, however, are not wholly disqualified on that account.

True test: Welfare of Minor.

Marriage and loss of caste no disqualification.

76. (1) Neither re-marriage,[9] conversion[10] nor loss of caste[11] is any disqualification to act as a guardian.

(2) Where a Hindu child becomes converted to an alien faith, it is for the court to consider whether it would be for the welfare of the child that it should be restored to its parents.[12]

---

(1) Kulbai (Re), 32 B. 50 (54), following Bindo v. Sham Lal, 29 A. 210.

(2) Kristo Kissore Neoghy v. Kadermoye, 2 C.L.R. 583 (586); Bhikno v. Chamela, 2 C.W.N. 191.

(3) 1 Mac.H.L. 103, (104); 1 Str.H. L., 71; Kristo Kissore Neoghy v. Kadermoye, 2 C.L.R. 583; Bhikno v. Chamela, 2 C.W.N. 191; Thayammal v. Kuppanna, 38 M. 1125.

(4) Ambo v. Ganga Sahai, (1913) P. L.R. 193: 18 I.C. 141.

(5) Venkatasan v. Ethirajammah, 5 M.L.T. 208: 4 I.C. 1117.

(6) Baijnath v. Emp., 1 O.L.J. 416: 25 I.C. 840.

(7) Buta v. Bhagan, (1913) P.W.R. 45: 19 I.C. 609.

(8) Fulkumari v. Buah Singh, 18 C. W.N. 1198: 25 I.C. 112.

(9) Ganga Prasad v. Ramasrey, 38 C. 862; Bindo v. Sham Lal, 29 A. 210; Acho v. Acha, 35 M. 728; Ram Labhai v. Durga Das, 15 L. 28; Subramania v. Ammayee, (1915) M.W.N. 414: 29 I.C. (M.) 740, following Audiappa v. Nallendran, 22 M. L.J. 442: 29 I.C. (M.) 5: 5 W.R. 235.

(10) Muchoo v. Arzoon, 5 W.R. 235.

(11) Act XXI of 1850.

(12) Saithri (in the matter of), 16 B. 307; Joshi Assam (in the matter of); 23 C. 290; Mokoond v. Nabodip, 25 C. 881; Sarat Chandra v. Forman, 12 A. 213.

784. Analogous Law.—All the facts mentioned in the section would have been insuperable obstacles to guardianship under Hindu Law, but they have all been removed by the Caste Disabilities Removal Act, 1850, which has abrogated any law or usage in force in British India, which inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property by reason of his or her renouncing or having been excluded from the communion of any religion or being deprived of caste.[1]

Re-marriage of Father.

785. It has been there seen that the father has the inherent right to the guardianship of his children, both male and female, and that that right cannot be ignored merely because he has re-married[2] or has forsaken his religion.[3] This is undoubtedly the law.[4] But the fact that the fathtr has been re-married or become a convert to an alien faith cannot be altogether ignored, if his right to guardianship is challenged in court. The question would be solved not with reference to its legality but with reference to its propriety in a given case.[5]

If, for instance, the child is a daughter and the father had practically abandoned it, having lived apart from its mother whose relations had brought her up, the court, though conceding the father's legal right, may yet deem it expedient that his daughter should not be torn away from her familiar surroundings to be placed in the strange company of a step-mother. (§ 780).

His Conversion.

786. So again where the father becomes a convert to Mahomedanism or Christianity, he does not forfeit his paternal right of guardianship, of which he can be deprived only if the court is satisfied "not only that it has the means of acting safely and efficiently, but also that the father has so conducted himself, or has shown himself, to be a person of such a description, or is placed in such a position as to render it, not merely better for the children, but essential to their safety or to their welfare, in some very serious and important respect, that his rights should be treated as lost or suspended."[6] So where the daughter of a Chinaman was delivered by the father to a Mrs. Allen whose husband was a Chinese Christian and who herself was a Christian, the court on the application of the father for the custody of his child, refused to accede to his prayer, holding that, though as father he was the natural guardian of the child, her moral and intellectual well-being required that she should not leave the family in which she was treated as a daughter of the house.[7] In another case, the plaintiff, originally a Hindu, abandoned his family residence and left his minor son in the custody of his grandfather, a Hindu, on whose death, the son began to live with his maternal uncle. He applied for custody and his application was refused by his paternal and maternal uncles. It appeared that the father was not well off, being dependent upon a Mission for his support, that he had practically abandoned the son, who being aged 12 or 13 expressed a desire

(1) XXI of 1850; Muchoo v. Arzoon, 5 W.R. 235; Kanhai Ram v. Biddya, 1 A. 549; Kubera v. Jirai, 28 A. 233; Gul Mohamed v. Wajirlugam, (1901) P.L.R. 167.

(2) Subramania v. Ammayee, (1915) A.W.N. 414: 29 I.C. (M.) 740, following, Audiappa v. Nallendran, 22 M.L.J. 442: 29 I.C. (M.) 5: 5 W.R. 235.

(3) Muchoo v. Arzoon, 5 W.R. 235.

(4) Narayen v. Luxmeebaee, (1850-1) Morris S.R. 61; Sham Singh v. Santa Bai, 25 B. 551 (555) Muchoo v. Arzoon, 5 W.R. 235.

(5) Muthuverappa v. Ponnuswami, 22 M.L.J. 68: 13 I.C. (M.) 16; Ganga v. Kausilla, 11 A.L.J. 209: 19 I.C. 65.

(6) Per Knight-Bruce, V.C., in Fynn, In re, cited with approval in In re, Joshy Assam, 23 C. 290 (297, 298).

(7) In re, Joshy Assam, 23 C. 290 (297, 298).

against his conversion to Christianity, which appeared to be the father's ulterior motive for getting himself appointed as his guardian which the court refused, holding "that the father must be regarded as having abdicated his strict legal parental rights, and that it would be a capricious, if not cruel resumption of his paternal authority, if he could now compel his child to be brought up henceforth as a Christian which admittedly would be the result of handing over the child to the custody of his father."[1]

787. In following this rule, the court does not contravene any rule of Hindu Law, for there is no rule on the subject in that law which remains unrepealed by the Caste Disabilities Removal Act,[2] but follows the rule of equity taking its guidance from the English Law, which is on this subject based upon the natural principles of justice and right.[3]

Mother's Re-marriage and Conversion.

788. The analogies furnished by the father apply with even greater force to the case of the mother, whose right to the guardianship of her children is not equal to that of the father. But her re-marriage is equally no insuperable obstacle to the assumption of her duties as the natural guardian of her children. (§ 777.) But it cannot be forgotten that by her re-marriage she herself passes into another control, and the question is how far her own subjection to martial control will affect the performance of her obligations towards the children of her former husband. If, for instance, her children are of the female sex and are already in the safe keeping of other relations, the court will not order the removal as a matter of course merely on assertion of the legal right of the mother to their lawful guardianship, unless it is convinced that the removal would be for their good. (§ 777.)

The same rule applies to where she is converted to another religion. That fact does not in the slightest degree impair her right, but if the Court apprehends that she is demanding their custody with a view to convert them, the Court may demand a satisfactory assurance that she would not get her minor children converted, and otherwise place her on terms.[4]

Converted Child.

789. The religion which a child is presumed to follow is the religion of its father. If he was a Christian then the child must be brought up as a Christian. So the Privy Council said: "A child in India under ordinary circumstances, must be presumed to have his father's religion and his corresponding civil and social status and it is, therefore ordinarily and in the absence of controlling circumstances, the duty of a guardian to train his infant ward in such religion."[5]

The religion of the father here does not mean the religion which he might have newly adopted,[6] but the religion which was his established religion.

---

(1) Mookond v. Nobodip, 25 C. 881 (886).

(2) Act, XXI of 1850.

(3) Saithri, (In re), 16 B. 307 (323); Besant v. Narayaniah, 38 M. 807 (819) P.C.

(4) Dwijapada v. Bailean, 20 C.W.N. 608.

(5) Skinner v. Orde, 14 M.I.A. 309 (323); but this is only the ordinary rule; In re Clarke, 21 Ch.D. 817; In re Naven, (1891) 2 Ch. 299; and the Court may depart from it for sufficient reason: In re McGrath, (1893) 1 Ch. 143 (149).

(6) Radhi Bai v. Vessanamal, 11 S.L.R. 17: 41 I.C. 571.

790. So where the Hindu father had entrusted his minor daughter to a missionary by whom she was baptized at his instance and brought up for three years, after which the father died and the mother applied for her guardianship, the court, in rejecting the mother's application, held that it was for the father to say in what religion his children should be brought up, and that it would not be for the minor's welfare to accede to the mother's prayer for the guardianship of her daughter, who had for three years been in charge of a Christian missionary and had been educated and brought up as a Christian.[1] A converse case was presented to a Calcutta Bench in which the father, having become a convert to Christianity, applied for the guardianship of his minor son aged 12 or 13 years, who expressed a preference to remain a Hindu, and with his maternal uncle, whereupon the court refused the father's application for guardianship.[2] Two questions determine the course the court would take in such cases.

Clause 2.

If the child is old enough to make an election as to the custody in which it should like to be, then it is delivered into that custody; otherwise, the court has to decide as to what would be its best advantage.[3]

77. (1) The natural guardian of a minor's property possesses the power to transfer any portion of the minor's property in case of necessity or for the benefit of the estate;[4]

Natural guardian's right.

(2) Provided that where the property comprises a family trade, the guardian has the power to transfer or pledge the property and credit of the firm for the ordinary purposes of that trade.[5]

791. Analogous Law.—The powers of the natural guardian of a minor's estate are closely comparable to those of the manager (other than the father) of a joint Mitakshara family. In the one case, the guardian, as in the other, the manager, is entitled to mortgage or sell the estate if justified by necessity or benefit.[6] Whether manager or not, the father is, however, further entitled by reason of a text to alienate the joint property for the payment of his antecedent debts.[7]

792. Clause (2) is an exception, and is justified by the nature of the business which brings the minor in trade relations with the world at large, who, in their ordinary commercial dealings, cannot be expected to investigate the status of the family and its requirements on each occasion. This was clearly pointed out by Sausse, C.J., of Bombay in a case,[8] which

---

(1) Albrecht v. Bathe, 22 M.L.J. 247: 13 I.C. (M.) 453.

(2) Mokoond v. Nobodip, 26 C. 881 (886).

(3) Saithri (In re), 16 B. 307; Sarat Chandra v. Forman, 12 A. 213; Reade v. Krishna, 9 M. 391; Besant v. Narayaniah, 38 M. 807 P.C.

(4) Hunooman Pershad v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393.

(5) Ram Lal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App.) 51.

(6) Hunooman Pershad v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Gharibullah v. Khalaksingh, 25 A. 407 P.C.; Hurry Mohun v. Gonesh Chunder, 10 C. 823 F.B.; Nandan v. Harikishen, 3 A. 535; Bhemsingh v. Luchho, (1882) A.W.N. 70; Moharund v. Nafur Mondul, 25 C. 823; Nanti Chundar v. Bisheshwar, 25 C. 505; Rash Moni v. Soorjakanta, 32 C. 832. There is no distinction in principle between a mortgage or a sale; Mohammd v. Nafur Mondul, 25 C. 820 (825).

(7) S. 159.

(8) Ram Lal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App.) 51.

is now considered a leading case on the subject, and as such, has been since continuously followed.[1]

793. But the powers of a certificated guardian are not the same, but very much less, as enacted in S. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act.[2] He cannot without the previous permission of the court transfer any part of the property of the ward or lease it for a term exceeding five years, or for any term extending more than one year beyond the date on which the ward will cease to be a minor.[3] In a case in which the manager of a joint Mitakshara family was also the certificated guardian, the court held that his appointment by the court could not detract from his legal powers as manager, and that if he alienated the minor's property without leave of the court, the alienation would not be invalid, because it was made without leave, since by agreeing to become a certificated guardian, he did not cease to be the manager of the joint property.[4] But such a case is not likely to occur now, since it is no longer competent to the court to appoint a guardian in respect of a mere coparcenary interest.

What is legal necessity and benefit.

794. The question what constitutes a legal necessity is one which must depend upon the facts of each case. The performance of the father's funeral rites,[5] the payments of the father's debts,[6] the marriage expenses of the minor, and the purchase of jewels for bridal presents[7] the repairs to his property,[8] and maintenance of the minor,[9] are all instances of such necessity, to which many more could be added. So the guardian may alienate property for the benefit of the estate.[10] Where the mother entered into a contract for the sale of her minor son's immoveable property and the son having subsequently died, the mother succeeded to him as his heir, whereupon the other party sued her for specific performance of her contract of sale, the court threw out the suit holding that as the mother had no right to sell except for a legal necessity—and it was found against the plaintiff—and as she did not purport to sell the property as her own, the principle underlying S. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act was inapplicable, and the plaintiff had no equity which he could enforce against her in respect of a contract made by her for her minor son.[11]

795. The minor is bound when the transfer made on his behalf was either necessary or beneficial to him. A transfer may be necessary though it may not be beneficial to the minor as where his estate is sold to pay off an antecedent debt of the father or other debts incurred for purposes

---

(1) Joykisto v. Nityanund, 3 C. 738; Morrison v. Verchoyele, 6 C.W.N. 429; Sanka v. Bank of Burma, 21 M.L.J. 620: 11 I.C. 79 (and cases cited therein); Bishamber v. Fatehlal, 29 A. 176; Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72; Ram Pertab v. Fooli Bai, 20 B. 767.

(2) VIII of 1890.

(3) Ib.: in Adhar Chand v. Kirtibash, 6 I.C. 638, the obiter to the contrary overlooks this distinction.

(4) Ram Autar Singh v. Chowdhuri Nursingh, 3 C.L.J. 12; Sham Das v. Umerdin, 11 L. 312, F.B.

(5) Nath Ram v. Chhagan, 14 B. 562.

(6) Murari v. Tayana, 20 B. 286.

(7) Kankipati v. Racherla, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 477.

(8) Adhar Chandra v. Kirtibash, 12 C.L.J. 586: 6 I.C. 638; Hurry Mohun v. Ganesh Chunder, 10 C. 823 (829) F.B.

(9) Soonder Narain v. Benud Ram, 4 C. 76.

(10) Mohamund v. Nafur Mondul, 26 C. 820 (822); Rajani Kanta v. Abinash Chandra, 2 I.C. (C.) 366.

(11) Rash Moni v. Surjakanta, 32 C. 832 (836).

which the law regards as creating a just charge on the estate.[1] So a transfer may be beneficial to the minor though it may not be necessary.[2]

S. 38, T. P. Act, Compromise.

796. Moreover, the rule here stated is subject to the provisions of other laws; e.g., S. 38 of the Transfer of Property Act.[3]

The guardian is equally entitled to make a compromise on behalf of his ward.[4]

Clause (2).

797. Liability of a Trading Firm.—The general rules and restrictions applicable to persons dealing with a minor or with his property do not apply to a case where the minor inherits an interest in a trading partnership. In such cases, the rule first laid down by Sausse, C.J.,[5] and consistently since followed,[6] defines the exact powers of the guardian or manager of such minor's property in the following terms:—

"Ancestral trade, like other Hindu property, will descend upon the members of a Hindu undivided family; and we think that such a family can, by its manager, or its adult members, acting as managers, enter into copartnership with a stranger.

"In carrying on such a trade, infant members of the undivided family will be bound by all acts of the manager, or the adult members acting as managers, which are necessarily incident to, and flowing out of, the carrying on of that trade, whether it be singly or with a copartner.

"The power of a manager to carry on a family trade necessarily implies a power to pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purposes of that trade. Third parties, in the ordinary course of bona fide trade dealings, should not be held bound to investigate the status of the family represented by the manager, whilst dealing with him on the credit of the family property.

"Were such a power not implied, property in a family trade, which is recognized by Hindu Law to be a valuable inheritance, would become practically valueless to the other members of an undivided family wherever an infant was concerned, for no one would deal with a manager, if the minor were to be at liberty on coming of age to challenge, as against third parties, the trade transactions which took place during his minority.

"The general benefit of the undivided family is considered by Hindu Law to be paramount to any individual interest, and the recognition of a trade, as inheritable property, renders it necessary for the general benefit of the family that the protection, which the Hindu Law generally extends to the interests of a minor, should be so far trenched upon as to bind him by acts of the family manager, necessary for the carrying on, and consequent

(1) Kaihur Singh v. Roop Singh, 3 N.W.P.H.C.R. 4; Hanuman Persaud v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Babaji v. Krishnajee, 2 B. 666; Sucaram v. Kalidas, 18 B. 631; Arunachala v. Chidambara, 13 M.L.J. 223.

(2) Vembu Iyer v. Srinivasa, 17 I.C. 609.

(3) Rajani Kanta v. Abinash Chandra, 2 I.C. 366.

(4) Sarabjit v. Indarjit, 27 A. 203 (250); Nirvanaya v. Nirvanaya, 9 B. 365; Natesa v. Rama, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 145: 10 I.C. (M.) 221.

(5) Ram Lal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B.H. C.R. (App.) 51 (71, 72).

(6) Joykisto v. Nityanund, 3 C. 738; Morrison v. Verchoyele, 6 C.W.N. 429; Sanka v. Bank of Burma, 21 M.L.J. 620; 11 I.C. 79 (and cases cited therein); Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72; Bishambhar v. Fatch Lal, 29 A. 176; Jhiti Bai v. Jejmah, 13 N.L.R. 109.

preservation of, that family property; but that infringement is not to be carried beyond the actual necessity of the case."

798. It has been, however, pointed in later cases that in such cases the liability of the minor must be confined to the extent of his interest in the firm and that his liability should not be extended to himself personally or to his other property unconnected with the firm.[1]

The subject will be found more fully set out in the sequel (S. 144).

799. The natural guardian of a minor must not enter into speculative or hazardous enterprises on behalf of his ward. And though he is entitled to continue the business of his ward, he must carry it on as a man of ordinary prudence avoiding obvious risks and probable losses. The minor's father in a case was a money-lender. His guardian continued the business, lending money to insolvent persons without security and subscribing to the capital of a new company. It appeared that, in the course of the money-lending business, he had to lend money to persons who failed but there was no proof of any misconduct or want of care or prudence. It was held that inasmuch as the guardian had acted to the best of his ability, the minor could not hold him liable for losses suffered by him by reason of his guardian's failure to recover the debts advanced, but as regards his subscription to the capital of a new Mill Company, the success of which was a mere matter of speculation, he had acted beyond the scope of his authority and the minor was entitled to recover Rs. 10,000 which he had subscribed to the capital in exchange for the shares which were made over to the guardian.[2]

78. Transfer by guardian when voidable.

(1) A transfer made by the guardian may be avoided by the minor, if it is wholly[3] or partially unsupported by necessity, or was not for the benefit of the estate:

(2) Provided that in the case of partial necessity or benefit, the alienee is entitled to restitution of the money paid for such necessity or benefit.[4]

(3) Provided further that where the bulk of the consideration is supported by legal necessity, the court may, instead of setting aside the transfer, order payment to the transferor of such consideration as is not supported by necessity or benefit.[5]

800. Analogous Law.—This section deals with two classes of transfers: (a) that made without any legal necessity, and (b) that which is to some extent supported by legal necessity. In the former case, the minor is entitled to avoid the sale and he is subject to no equity to refund the consideration paid to his guardian on his account.[6] In the latter case however, he is equitably bound to restore the benefit received by him[7] which may be charged on the estate he sues to recover from the transferee.[8]

(1) Sanka v. Bank of Burma, 21 M.L.J. 620: 11 I.C. 79.

(2) Bansidhar v. Ganpatlal, 3 C.P.L. R. 95.

(3) Hunooman Persaud Panday v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (421); Bunseedhur v. Bindeseree, 10 M.I.A. 454 (474).

(4) S. 41, Specific Relief Act (I of 1877); Bunseedhur v. Bindesseree, 10 M.I.A. 454 (474).

(5) S. 41, Specific Relief Act (I of 1877).

(6) Humooman Persaud Panday v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (421); Bunseedhur v. Bindeseree, 10 M.I.A. 454 (474).

(7) S. 41, Specific Relief Act (I of 1877); Bunseedhur v. Bindesseree, 10 M.I.A. 454 (474).

(8) Bukshun v. Doothin, 12 W.R. 337: Pranchandra v. Karunamay, 15 W.R. 268; Kesar (Bai) v. Ganga, 8 B.H.C.

A transfer by a certificated guardian is subject to the provisions of S. 31 of the Guardians and Wards Act.[1]

801. Restitution.—In either case where the transfer is set aside, the question arises and is covered by S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act,[2] which enacts that "on adjudging the cancellation of an instrument, the court may require the party to whom such relief is granted to make any compensation to the other which justice may require."

802. The question then is what is the requirement of justice in such a case of cancellation. Now, a consideration for a sale may (a) be wholly paid, or (b) partially paid, the balance being payable and not paid; (c) it may be paid for necessity which is not proved, or, (d) is only partially proved; and lastly (e) it may be paid by a transferee bona fide after due enquiry, being satisfied that it was necessary, though in fact, it was not necessary.

803. In cases (a) and (b) where the whole or part of the consideration has been paid and the transfer is set aside, there can be no question of restitution if no part of the consideration was supported by necessity and there was no inquiry as mentioned in case (e). There is then no equity, since the transfer is wholly void and the transferee has to thank himself if he loses both the property and his money too; for he knew that he was merely dealing with a guardian and it was his duty to inquire into the necessity of the transfer. If, however, he did inquire and paid the money bona fide, being satisfied that the transfer was necessary, then the equitable rule enacted in S. 38 of the Transfer of Property Act[3] would come into play, and even if there was no necessity the court might still uphold his transfer.[4] But assuming that there was no inquiry and no necessity justifying the transfer to its full extent, then the court may or may not cancel the transfer. If for instance, the bulk of the consideration was utilized for purposes binding on the minor, the court would not cancel the transfer, though it will decree the sum paid otherwise than for legal necessity. Such was held to be the case where out of the consideration of Rs. 1,300 necessity was proved to the extent of Rs. 1,022.[5] But where out of the total consideration of Rs. 1,425 only a little more than a moiety was paid for necessity and the purchaser had given the vendor a promissory note for Rs. 525, and Rs. 138 were not proved to have been spent on a purpose binding on the minor's estate, the court set aside the whole sale conditional on the plaintiff paying to the vendee Rs. 762.[6] In another case, the court charged the debt against the land purchased for the minor.[7] In decreeing restitution the Court may award interest at a reasonable rate.[8]

R. (A.C.) 81; Mirga Pana v. Saiad Sadik, 7 N.W.P.H.C.R. 201; Kuvarji v. Moti, 3 B. 234; Dattaram v. Vinayak, 28 B. 181 (192); Sivaya v. Munisami, 22 M. 289; Jagar Nath v. Lalta Prasad, 31 A. 221 (227).

(1) VIII of 1890: Tejpal v. Ganga, 25 A. 59; Giriraj v. Kazi Hamid Ali, 9 A. 340; Nizamuddin v. Anandi Prasad, 18 A. 373 (375).

(2) I of 1877.

(3) IV of 1882.

(4) See Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.).

(5) Thalagara v. Thalagara, 27 M.L.J. 132: 26 I.C. 178.

(6) Rukmani v. Muthammal, (1915) M.W.N. 8: 26 I.C. 489; Kattapa v. Deivasigamani, (1913) M.W.N. 795: 18 I.C. 27.

(7) Jeladi v. Ponduri, 47 M. 449.

(8) Nur Baksh v. Rukum Singh, 8 A. L.J. 764: 11 I.C. 764: Muhamad Ismail v. Gaur Prashad, (1916) P.R. 24; Manashram v. Ahmed Hoosein, 20 C.W.N. 63: 37 I.C. 380.

304. This is, of course, an equitable relief which the transferee may forfeit unless he had acted bona fide.[1] If he had colluded with the guardian or purchased the minor's estate at an undervalue, the court will refuse him the benefit of restitution. On the other hand, he need make no inquiry at all where the money is paid by him for a transfer duly sanctioned by the District Judge under S. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act,[2] or which is otherwise proved to have been justified by necessity. Where a transfer does not affect the minor's interest, the latter cannot be heard to complain on the ground that it was made with reference to his property. So where the guardian mortgaged his property to the defendant and then sold the equity of redemption to the plaintiff who sued to redeem the prior mortgage, the court held that the minor could not complain of the sale to the plaintiff as not being for his benefit as his interest was not concerned.[3] But this case does not appear to have been correctly decided, for the sale of the equity of redemption was the sale of the minor's property in which the minor was certainly concerned and the propriety of which he was entitled to challenge.

805. Limitation.—The question of limitation applicable to a minor suing to set aside a transfer made by his guardian is governed by Art. 44 or Art. 91 of the Limitation Act[4] which allows him 3 years from the date the ward attains majority. The applicability of the shorter period of limitation, prescribed in Art. 44 depends upon what is meant by the word "guardian" and upon the nature of the transfer made by him, that is, whether it is voidable or void, for if it is the latter, then the transfer being a nullity there is no necessity to avoid it,[5] but since the possession of the transferee would, in such a case, be adverse, the minor must sue to set it aside within the ordinary period prescribed in Art. 144 enlarged to the extent allowed in S. 6. Now, since a guardian is entitled to alienate his ward's property only in the case of necessity, or when it is for the minor's benefit, it follows that this must again depend upon the personal law of the party to whom that provision is applied. In the case of a Mahomedan, where the elder brother of a minor devisee mortgaged his property and it was found that the brother was not authorized either by the will or by the Mahomedan Law to act as a guardian of the minor, the Privy Council held the mortgage a nullity and one which the minor was not bound to set aside within the period provided in Art. 44. This article would be obviously inapplicable, and if so, the only other article applicable would be Art. 144. There would be a varying period of limitation even in the case of a Hindu according as the transfer is wholly or partially unsupported by legal necessity, since in the former case, the guardian, being wholly incompetent to convey his ward's estate, the transfer would be void and not voidable merely, as in the other case, where it is only partially unsupported by legal necessity.

806. Again, where such guardian is also a coparcenary manager, the same question may assume a greater importance. But these distinctions would be immaterial if regard is had to the fact that a transfer, whoever might have made it for a minor, is only voidable at his instance on proof of certain facts without which it is as much good against the minor as

(1) Sultan Singh v. Hashmat, (1915) P.R. 109: 29 I.C. 804.
(2) Akhil Chandra v. Girish Chandra, 21 C.W.N. 864: 41 I.C. 302.
(3) Vithoba v. Sakharam, 4 C.P.L.R. 128.
(4) IX of 1908.
(5) Hanooman Pershad v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad, 34 A. 213 P.C.

against a third party.[1] But this is not conclusive, since the question still remains whether an alienation by the manager can be regarded as an alienation qua guardian within the meaning of Art. 44 of the Limitation Act. That it cannot be so regarded, appears to be the view of the Privy Council,[2] though in some earlier cases that Article was held to be applicable.[3]

807. But though it is clear that the authority of a guardian is more limited than of a karta or manager of a joint Mitakshara family, still since they have both the same right of alienation, the question of limitation does not depend upon the distinction that exists between a manager and any other guardian, but on the language of Art. 44. But of course, a transfer purported to be made by one who professes to be a guardian but is neither a de facto nor a de jure guardian would necessarily be a nullity and the minor is not bound to set it aside before recovering possession of his property.[4] Such would be the case where the alienation is made by a coparcener who is not the manager.[5] The question of limitation may be considered from the following standpoints: (a) Where the transfer is made by a relation such as a coparcener but who is not a karta of the family or guardian of the minor; (b) Where the transfer is made by a de facto guardian authorized to transfer for necessity, but who had transferred in fact without any necessity; (c) Where such transfer is made not by the guardian but by the manager of a coparcenary of which the minor was at the time a member; and (d) Where it is made by either the karta or the guardian for partial necessity.

808. In case (a) it is now settled by the Privy Council that the transfer is a nullity and the minor, is therefore, not bound to cancel it either under Art. 44 or 91, and that his suit is subject to the ordinary limitation prescribed in Art. 144 enlarged to the extent provided in S. 6.[6] But the courts are not agreed as to the limitation applicable in the other cases. In case (b) it has been held in some cases that the transfer is equally void, and that, therefore, it need not be set aside,[7] whereas it has been held in others that the transfer is, in every case, good till it is avoided by the minor, and that therefore, it is voidable and not void and as such, the minor is, as regards limitation, subject to Art. 44 or Art. 91.[8] It must be con-

(1) Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmed Ali, 34 A. 213 (222, 223) P.C.; Imambandi v. Mutasuddi, 45 C. 878 (903) P.C.; Sardar Shah v. Haji, (1908) P.L.R. 182; Rajab Ali v. Wajir Ali, 1 Pat.L.J. 188, 34 I.C. (P.) 85.

(2) Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash, 48 A. 152 (158) P.C.; Anandappa v. Totappa, 17 Bom.L.R. 1137; Dwyanu v. Vishnu, 27 Bom.L.R. 495: 87 I.C. 721; Thayammal v. Kupanna, 38 M. 1125; Unni v. Kunchiamma, 14 M. 426; Kamakshi v. Ramasami, 7 M.L.J. 131; Hussan v. Raja Ram, 10 N.L.R. 133: 26 I.C. 813; Asaram v. Ratan Singh, 12 N.L.R. 12: 32 I.C. 242.

(3) Doraiswami v. Nondiswami, 38 M. 118; Arumugam v. Pandigam, 40 M.L.J. 475: 62 I.C. 630; Brojendra v. Prosunna Kumar, 24 C.W.N. 1016: 59 I.C. 589; Fakirappa v. Radiappa, 42 B. 626; Kolhu v. Bel Singh, 17 N.L.R. 183: 66 I.C. 303: (1922) N. 201.

(4) Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad, 34 A. 213 P.C.

(5) Banwarilal v. Daya Sunker, 13 C.W.N. 815.

(6) Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad, 34 A. 213 P.C.; Banwarilal v. Daya Sunker, 13 C.W.N. 815; Sardar Shah v. Haji, (1908) P.L.R. 182; Rajab Ali v. Wazir Ali, 34 I.C. (P.) 85: 1 Pat.L.J. 188.

(7) Kamakshi v. Ramasami, 7 M.L.J. 131; Unni v. Kunchi, 14 M. 26; Ramansar v. Raghubar, 5 A. 490; Lal Hurro Prasad v. Dasaruth, 25 A. 909; Abdul Rahman v. Sukh Dayal, 28 A. 30 (32); Bachchan Singh v. Kamta Prasad, 32 A. 392; Kalyansingh v. Pitambur, 13 A.L.J. 94; Shree Shankar v. Ram Shewak, 24 C. 77 (Art. 91 inapplicable); Balappa v. Chanbasappa, 17 Bom.L.R. 1134; Husen v. Rajaram, 10 N.L.R. 133; Asaram v. Ratansingh, 12 N.L.R. 12; Thayammal v. Kuppanna, 38 M. 1125.

(8) Satish Chunder v. Chunder Kant, fessed that in some of these cases[1] the distinction between the unauthorizad transfer of a guardian and the transfer of an unauthorized guardian was not kept in view, but it is a distinction which cannot be ignored. Nor is the distinction between a mere guardian and a karta on this point immaterial.[2] As regards case (d) the courts are agreed on the shorter limitation on the ground that since the authority to transfer depends on the necessity or benefit, its insufficiency may make the transfer voidable, being improper; but it cannot render it null and void ab initio.

Natural guardian may contract or compromise.

79. The guardian of a minor may enter into a contract or compromise[3] on behalf of his ward, acknowledge his debt before it is barred by time[4] and do all other acts which are reasonable and proper for the protection of his property and for his benefit.[5]

809. Analogous Law.—The powers of a Karta of a joint Mitakshara family must be distinguished from those of a guardian and of the latter, when he is a de facto guardian and when he is appointed by a will or by the court. Both the natural and de facto guardians possess far larger powers than the certificated guardian whose powers are defined by S. 27 and limited by S. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act. But for the special limitation, all the three would possess the same powers. He is entitled to make any contract or compromise on behalf of his ward provided it was necessary and done in the bona fide interest of the ward.[6]

Promissory Note Acknowledgment.

810. As such, the guardian is entitled to execute or renew a promissory note on behalf of his ward, and acknowledge any liability not barred by limitation.[7] He is also now, declared to be "the agent duly authorized" for the purpose of Ss. 20 and 21 of the Limitation Act.[8]

811. To a certain extent the powers of a de facto and a de jure guardian are identical.[9] Both must, generally speaking, deal with the ward's property, as a man of ordinary prudence would deal with it, if it were his own, and they may do all acts which are reasonable and proper for the realization, protection or benefit of the property[10] or of the minor[11]

---

3 C.W.N. 278; Shama Chundra v. Godadhar, 13 C.L.J. 277; Krishna Dhoni v. Bhagowan, 34 I.C. (C) 188; Ranga Reddi v. Narayana, 28 M. 1811; Vemul Pallai v. Maganti, 49 M. 768.

(1) Thayammal v. Kuppanna, 38 M. 1125 (1126).

(2) Mahableshwar v. Ramchandra, 38 B. 98.

(3) Hurry Mohan v. Ganesh Chunder, 10 C. 823 (829, 830) F.B.; Nirvanaya v. Nirvanaya, 9 B. 365.

(4) S. 21 Lim. Act (IX of 1908).

(5) Hurry Mohan v. Ganesh Chunder, 10 C. 823 F.B.; Subramania v. Arumuga, 26 M. 330; Sundararaja v. Pattana, 17 M. 306; Sonu v. Dhondu, 28 B. 330; Krishna v. Nagamani, 39 M. 915; Nirvanaya v. Nirvanaya, 9 B. 365 (a case of compromise).

(6) Hurry Mohan v. Ganesh Chunder, 10 C. 823 (829, 830) F.B. Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das, 50 B. 969 F.B., test of a prudent owner dealing with his own property—dissented from in Hemraj v. Nathu, 59 B. 525 F.B.—benefit of the minor is the true test for which the application of the money is not to be disregarded.

(7) Sobhanadri v. Sriramulu, 17 M. 221; Kailasa v. Ponnukannu, 18 M. 456; Chinnaya v. Gurunatham, 5 M. 169 F.B.; Subramania v. Arumuga, 26 M. 330; Muthuswami v. Annamalai, (1937) M. 1; Nathuram v. Shoma, 14 B. 562; Amrit v. Manik, 10 B. 512; Annapagauda v. Sangadigyappa, 26 B. 221; Bati Maharani v. Collector, 17 A. 198.

(8) Act IX of 1908, Annapagauda v. Sangadigyappa,, 26 B. 221 (234).

(9) Tulsidas v. Vaghela, 57 B. 40 F. B.; Seetharamanna v. Appiah, 49 M. 768 obiter Mahomedan Law—Imambandi v. Mutsuddi, 45 C. 878 P.C., explained in Seetharamanna v. Appiah, 49 M. 768 (772).

(10) S. 27, Guardians and Wards Act, (VIII of 1890).

(11) Hemraj v. Nathu, 59 B. 525 F. B. (application of the money material).

or for the maintenance of their ward.[1] The guardian is entitled to borrow money on the credit of his ward's estate for any purpose binding on the minor, such as for instance, the performance of the funeral rites of his father[2] or to pay off his father's debts,[3] to marry and maintain the minor, to purchase jewels to be presented to the minor's wife during marriage,[4] and in fact, on any of the heads of what is known as legal necessity.[5] But he cannot make his ward personally liable by a simple contract debt, nor can such debt be recovered out of his estate unless it is charged[6] except where it is incurred for the minor's necessaries, or is a trade debt which is subject to a different rule.[7] A guardian of a minor cannot bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it.[8] But where the guardian acquires new property by borrowing a loan, the minor cannot keep the property and repudiate the loan.[9] A purchased certain properties out of monies belonging to a common fund in which B had a share, the latter permitted A to use the money on condition that it should be repaid with interest, failing which A should transfer to him a proportionate share of the property purchased out of common fund. On A's failure to repay the money, which had become timebarred, B sued A and a minor member of his family for specific performance of A's agreement. The minor pleaded A's incompetency to make the contract so as to bind his interest in the joint property, but the court decreed the claim holding that he could not be heard to repudiate A's contract when he has had the benefit of the new property acquired by A for a period of 12 years. If the contract had affected joint family property, his interest therein could not have been so affected, but, being a new acquisition, he could not retain the benefit and repudiate the contract, the specific performance of which was decreed.[10]

812. Minor's Necessaries.—The guardian is empowered to bind the minor personally by contracts entered into for necessaries of the minor or of his estate.[11] Such liability is not affected by the fact that the loans were advanced at the instance of the guardian. "His contract on his behalf might be ineffectual like one entered into by himself, but the liability to discharge debts incurred for necessaries would remain. The necessity for them would determine whether or not he was bound to repay them, and not we think the reasonable belief of the borrower that they were for necessary purposes."[12] Where the promise is to pay money which has been expended for necessaries, the estate of the minor may be liable not on the promise but because the money had been supplied.[13]

---

(1) Nandan Singh v. Harkishen Singh, 3 A. 535.

(2) Nathu Ram v. Chhagan, 14 B. 562.

(3) Murari v. Tayana, 20 B. 286.

(4) Kankipati v. Racherla, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 477.

(5) Padma Krishna v. Nagamani, 39 M. 915; Suchit v. Harnandan Singh, 12 Pat. 112.

(6) Ranmalsinghji v. Vadilal, 20 B. 61; Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320.

(7) Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320 (329); Ram Partap v. Foolibai, 20 B. 767; Sakrabhai v. Maganlal, 26 B. 206 F.B.; Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72; Jhijibai v. Tejmal, 13 N.L.R. 100 (110, 111).

(8) Batchu v. Vajula, 36 M.L.J. 29 F.B.; Padma Krishna v. Nagamani, 39 M. 915; Subramania v. Arumuga, 26 M. 330; Tukaram v. Ramchandra, 20 B. 767; Surendra Nath v. Atal Chandra, 34 C. 892.

(9) Sohan Lal v. Atal Nath, 56 A. 142 (157).

(10) Sohanlal v. Atal Nath, 56 A. 142 (157).

(11) Contract Act, (X of 1872), S. 68; Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320 (323, 324).

(12) Ranmalsinghji v. Vadilal, 20 B. 61; Juggessur v. Nilambur, 3 W.R. 217; Bhawal Singh v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320 (323).

(13) Sundararaja v. Pattanathusami, 17 M. 336; Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320 (328).

813. The term "necessaries" must be understood with reference to Hindu Law. For instance, the marriage of a sister is "necessary" within the meaning of Hindu Law for which a minor's estate would be liable for the payment of money borrowed from another.[1] To a Hindu marriage is a prime necessity, and a samskar (a religious sacrament)[2] the expense of which is a charge on the inheritance.

Meaning of Necessaries.

814. Guardian may Acknowledge Debt.—Though the guardian cannot revive a barred debt,[3] he is competent to acknowledge it on behalf of his ward before it becomes time-barred.[4] His authority to revive a barred debt depends upon the language of S. 25 of the Contract Act which enforces "a promise made in writing and signed by the person to be charged therewith, or by his agent generally or specially authorized in that behalf to pay wholly or in part a debt, of which the creditor might have enforced payment, but for the law of limitation of suits."[5] The position then depends upon whether the guardian is the minor's agent "generally or specially authorized" to promise to pay barred debts. Even where he is the manager of a joint family, he would appear to possess no power to revive such debt,[6] and a fortiori, a guardian cannot possess such power. [Cf. Section 132, post.]

The guardian cannot acknowledge a debt on behalf of his ward after he is dead.[7]

80. A guardian cannot contract in the name of a ward, so as to impose on him a personal liability.[8]

Personal contract by guardian.

Explanation.*—Nothing herein applies to the acknowledgment of liability made by the guardian on behalf of his ward[9] or a liability arising by way of indemnity or otherwise than under the contract.[10]

Illustrations.

(a) A the guardian of his minor ward B executes a bond for him. B is not liable.

(b) But if, in the last illustration, the bond was executed for necessaries supplied to the minor, the latter's estate would be liable, not under the bond, but by way of reimbursement, as provided in section 68 of the Indian Contract Act.

(c) A executes a hundi on behalf his ward B in the ordinary course of B's ancestral business as banker. B's estate is liable, being a trade debt which carries with it mutual right and obligation incident to such business.[11]

(d) A executes a bond in favour of C for a sum of money necessary to pay a paramount charge on his ward B's estate. B's estate is liable to C, as A was entitled to indemnity for saving B's estate from forfeiture or sale, and C was entitled to be subrogated to A's right.

---

(1) Nandan Prasad v. Ajudhia Prasad, 32 A. 325 (328) F.B.; Vaikuntam v. Kallabhiran, 23 M. 512.

(2) Kameswara v. Veeracharlu, 34 M. 422.

(3) Virrappa v. Muthusami, 7 M.L.T. 383; Subhanarayana v. Narendra, 19 M. 255; Bramhadin v. Ram Lakhan, 3 O.W.N. 980.

(4) S. 21, Lim. Act; Sobhanadri v. Sriramulu, 17 M. 221; Subramania v. Arumuga, 26 M. 330; Annapagauda v. Sangadigyappa, 26 B. 221; Bhawal v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320 (324); Narendra v. Raicharan, 29 C. 647; dissenting from contra in Wajbun v. Kadir Buksh, 13 C. 292.

(5) S. 25 (3), Contract Act.

(6) Chinnaya v. Gurunatham, 5 M. 169 F.B.; Daikat v. Appaji, 20 B. 155; Gopalnarain v. Muddomutty, 14 B.L.R. 21. But an executor or an administrator possesses such authority—Tilakchand v. Jitamal, 10 B.H.C.R. 206; Jethibai v. Putlibai, 14 Bom.L.R. 1020 (1027).

(7) Yellappa v. Desayappa, 13 B. 218, (in which the Nazir had acknowledged a debt after his ward was dead).

(8) Waghela v. Sheikh Masludin, 11 B. 551, P.C.

(9) Annappa Gauda v. Sangadigyappa, 26 B. 221 F.B.

(10) Ramajogayya v. Jagannathan, 42 M. 185 F.B.; see illus. (e).

(11) Satyanarayana v. Mallayya, 58 M. 735 F.B.

(e) A executes a bond in favour of C for a sum of money necessary to pay for his ward B's sister's marriage. B's estate is liable to C on an obligation arising under his personal law to pay for the marriage of his sister.[1]

815. Analogous Law.—This rule is based upon a decision of the Privy Council[2] decided upon the following facts: The guardian mother, on behalf of her minor son, sold certain villages rent free, personally covenanting both for herself and for her minor son, to indemnify the purchaser should any one disturb the purchaser, or should the Government assess any rent on the property sold. The Government having assessed the villages to revenue and cesses, the purchaser sued the minor after he came of age upon the covenant, and his defence was that his guardian could not legally enter into any covenant so as to make him at any time personally liable—a contention which the Privy Council upheld, holding that it was so under the English Law, and as there was no rule of Hindu Law, "the matter must be decided by equity and good conscience, generally interpreted to mean the rules of English Law, if found applicable to Indian society and circumstances." They then added: "They conceive that it would be a very improper thing to allow the guardian to make covenants in the name of his ward, so as to impose a personal liability upon the ward, and they hold that in this case the guardian exceeded her power so far as she purported to bind her ward."[3] The same principle underlay the decision in another case in which one Ganga, father of a boy, delivered him to one Durga who promised to educate him and appoint him his heir. He brought him up and dying intestate, his widow contested his right to inherit, and the Privy Council upheld her contention holding that there was no completed contract between Ganga and Durga, as Ganga could not make an agreement which should legally bind his son on attaining majority to remain with Durga, which was the sole consideration for Durga's promise to constitute him his heir.[4] But in such a case, where a minor comes to court to have an account taken as between himself and an agent, the latter is entitled to deduct the advances made to the guardian for the benefit of the minor.[5]

816. Limits of the Rule.—In another case, the Privy Council held that it was not "within the competence of a manager of a minor's estate or within the competence of a guardian of a minor to bind the minor or the minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property," and that as the minor was not bound by the contract, there was no mutuality, and that the minor, on reaching majority, could not obtain specific performance of the contract.[6] This case does not extend the doctrine of incapacity to contract any further than illustrating the rule that a minor is not only not liable on his guardian's contract made on his behalf, but he is not entitled to ratify it on attaining majority. Such contract is, in short, void and not merely voidable at the option of the minor.

817. Then, again, even a contract in which a minor is only jointly liable would be enforceable, though not personally against the minor. Such was the case of the defendants, some of whom were minors who had agreed to let their interest to the plaintiffs, who sued them all for specific perform-

(1) Ramajogayya v. Jagannadhan, 42 M. 185 (196) F.B.

(2) Waghela v. Shekh Masludin, 11 B. 551 P.C.; Tukeeram v. Ramachandra, 2 N.L.R. 25; Jhitbai v. Tajmai, 13 N. L.R. 109; Kashi Prasad v. Akleshwar, 58 I.C. (P.) 22; Rajkumar v. Mirza, 5 Pat.L.J. 239: 55 I.C. 214.

(3) Waghela v. Shekh Masludin, 11 B. 551 (556) P.C.

(4) Lala Narain v. Lala Ramanuj, 20 A. 209 P.C.

(5) Surendra Nath v. Atul Chandra, 34 C. 892 (895).

(6) Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin, 39 C. 232 (237) P.C.

ance, which the court decreed holding the contract good and for the benefit of the minor.[1] It would seem that the rule does not invalidate contracts made in the ordinary course of management of the ward's property, relating thereto.[2] The rule means no more than this that the guardian cannot make any contract so as to impose on his ward a personal liability and not that he cannot do any act entailing such liability on his ward. And even as regards his contract, while the disqualification remains, the ward may yet be liable, not under the contract, but independently of it, as where the promise is to pay money which has been expended for necessaries, in which case the estate of the minor may be liable, not on the promise, but because the money has been supplied[3] (§ 813).

818. Apart from such obligation it is now settled that a minor inheriting an ancestral trading business will be bound by contracts made by his guardian or manager of the business on behalf of his firm to the extent of the assets of the business.[4] This liability is no exception to the rule that a guardian has no power to bind his ward by a personal contract. It is in the nature of indemnity to the guardian who becomes personally liable on his contract which is transferred to his creditors. This is based on the principle of subrogation which permits the creditor to step into the shoes of the guardian to enforce the right which the latter had against the minor's estate. But a guardian must not invest the manager with powers larger than are reasonably proper for carrying on the business; and where, as a consequence of giving such powers, the guardian has become involved in liablity for the fraud of the agent, the guardian has no right of indemnity against the assets of the minor, nor are the creditors entitled to claim such right through the guardian.[5] On the same principle, money borrowed by the guardian for the payment of land revenue for which the minor was liable as lambardar, was held to be legally recoverable from the minor's estate, although he was not personally liable therefor.[6] So in a simple mortgage executed by the guardian of a minor, it was held competent to the court to pass a supplementary personal decree in accordance with the provisions of Or. XXXIV, Rule 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure limiting its execution to his assets.[7]

Then again, while the guardian may not contract there is nothing to prevent him from acknowledging a debt due from the minor and it is agreed that he can do so.[8] (§ 830).

819. Though the guardian cannot enter into a personal covenant on behalf of his ward, there is no law to prevent him from charging his estate.[9]

Charge distinguished.

Karta or guardian of coparcenary.

81. (1) Where the minor is a member of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, the father, and in his absence, the elder brother or other senior male member of the family, is entitled to the manage-

(1) Lal Gopal v. Khoroorian Zemindari, 16 C.W.N. 297: 13 I.C. 673.

(2) Mg. Po Thwe v. Ma Baw, 4 Bur. L.J. 272: 13 I.C. 373.

(3) Walter v. Everard, (1891) 2 Q.B. 369; Ranmal Singh v. Vadilal, 20 B. 61; Juggessur v. Nilambur, 3 W.R. 217; followed in Bhawal v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320 (328); Sundararaja v. Pattanathusami, 17 M. 306.

(4) Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma, 35 M. 692; Sanyasi v. Krishnadhan, 49 C. 560 P.C.

(5) Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma, 35 M. 692; Ramajagayya v. Jagannadhan, 42 M. 185 (191, 192) F.B.

(6) Umar Hayet v. Devi Das, (1910) P.W.R. 5: 5 I.C. 590.

(7) Jiwan Das v. Janki, 65 I.C. (N.) 53.

(8) Annapagauda v. Sangadigyappa, 26 B. 221 (232) F.B.

(9) Ranmalshingji v. Vadi Lal, 20 B. 61 (74); Jagannath v. Mirza, 5 Pat.L.J. 239: 55 I.C. 214.

ment of the whole coparcenary property including the minor's interest.[1]

(2). But there is nothing in the Mitakshara law to preclude the appointment of a guardian of the person of such minor,[2] though not of his property by the court.

820. Analogous Law.—It will be seen from S. 88 that a guardian can be appointed only of the separate property of a minor. As a member of a Mitakshara joint family, a minor coparcener has no separate property of his own for which a guardian could be appointed. Being a member of the joint family his property is subject to the law of the management of coparcenary property. So long as he remains joint he is bound to submit to its joint management. Even if the property be mismanaged, the remedy is a suit for partition,[3] and not the appointment of a guardian of his interest. As the Privy Council observed: "It has been well settled by a long series of decisions in India that a guardian of the property of an infant cannot properly be appointed in respect of the infant's interest in the property of an undivided Mitakshara family. And in their Lordships' opinion those decisions are clearly right, on the plain ground that the interest of a member of such a family is not individual property at all and that, therefore, a guardian, if appointed, would have nothing to do with the family property"[4] (§ 857).

821. But of course, there is nothing in law to prevent the court from appointing a guardian of the person of a minor,[5] although he may continue to be a member of the joint family. And in two cases, the court even appointed the Mitakshara father as the guardian of the minor son's property, though the latter had no property of his own, in order to enable the father to realize better value for the property he was about to sell. But such appointment was justified in the exercise of the Court's inherent jurisdiction, and independently of the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act.[6]

Clause (2).

As to the rights and liabilities of a manager, see post under "Joint Family."

82. (1) The husband is the lawful guardian of his minor wife and is entitled to require her to live with him irrespective of her infancy.[7]

Husband his wife's guardian.

(2) After the husband's death, the guardianship of her person devolves on the husband's relations in preference to her paternal relations.[8]

---

(1) Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh, 25 A. 407 (416) P.C.

(2) Virupakshappa v. Nilgangava, 19 B. 309 F.B.; Brijbhukandas v. Ghashiram, 59 B. 316 F.B.

(3) Mahadev v. Loshman, 19 B. 99.

(4) Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh, 25 A. 407 (416) P.C.; Jhabbu Singh v. Ganga Bishan, 17 A. 529; Bandhu Prasad v. Dhirai, 20 A. 400; Gurja v. Moher Singh, (1896) A.W.N. 30; Jagannath v. Chunnilal, (1933) A. 180; Sham Kuar v. Mohanwnda, 19 C. 301; Virupakshappa v. Nilgangava, 19 B. 309 (where all the previous cases on the point are referred to); Bindajee v. Mathurabai, 30 B. 152; Ramachandra v. Krishnarao, 32 B. 259; Kajigar v. Maru, 32 M. 139; Murlidhar v. Harilal, (1906) P.L.R. 165; contra in Manilall, (In re), 25 B. 353, which must now be deemed to be overruled by the Privy Council.

(5) Virupakshappa v. Nilgangava, 19 B. 390; Jambagathachi v. Mannarsami, 11 M.L.W. 596: 57 I.C. 678.

(6) Mani Dall Hurgovan, (In re), 25 B. 353; Hari Narain Das, (In re), 5 O.C. 141 (144).

(7) Manu, IX-2, 3; Navanit Lal v. Purushottam, 50 B. 268.

(8) Narad, XIII-28, 29; Kesar v. Ganga, 8 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 31.

822. Analogous Law.—Both Manu and Narad declare the dependence of the wife upon her husband and his own paternal relations.[1] The husband's right to guardianship of his wife was recognized by the early text writers,[2] and cases.[3] Even in one later case the High Court reversed the District Judge's appointment of the widow's brother and appointed her husband's sister's son as her guardian in consonance with Hindu Law.[4] But the court now is not likely to yield to a priori legal right without reference to the welfare of the minor.[5]

823. The husband, even if he be a minor,[6] is the lawful guardian of his minor wife in preference to her parents[7] and other relations, unless he is precluded by the usage of his caste from such a custody until his wife attains puberty.[8] This is the established rule of Hindu Law,[9] and is recognized in the Guardians and Wards Act.[10]

824. Clause (2) is consequential on her renouncing her father's gotra and becoming affiliated as a member of her husband's family.[11] The subject has already been considered on the preceding pages to which the discussion here must be regarded as merely supplementary.

825. Though the husband has naturally the right of guardianship over his wife, it is a right which might, at any moment, be challenged by an application made under the Guardians and Wards Act, when the question of his unfitness must be considered by the court. Where the husband has failed to obtain the custody of his wife by civil suit he should not be appointed a guardian as it would then give the husband relief in a summary proceeding which he had failed to obtain in a regular suit.[12]

826. In this case, the wife aged 16 who had become a convert to Mahomedanism refused to return to her Hindu husband who failed in a suit to obtain restitution of conjugal rights. He thereupon resorted to an application under the Guardians and Wards Act, but the Court refused to assist him in evading the consequence of a decree by appointing him the guardian of his wife's person, which, it held, would be otherwise not in the interests of either party and would, on the other hand, lead to mutual unhappiness, since the wife would be treated as an outcast in her husband's home, and the husband was not likely to extend to her the affection, which, as a wife, she had the right to expect.[13]

(2) Of De facto Guardians.

83. A person, not a de jure guardian, who, being interested in the minor, assumes charge of his property for purpose of management, possesses the same

Powers of a de facto guardian.

(1) See § 770 ante Manu, IX-2, 3; Narad XIII, 28, 29; 33 S.B.E. 196 cited in Dayabhag XI-64, (Quoted in Hindu Code, 3rd Ed., § 974, p. 510).

(2) Mac. H.L., II-203.

(3) Kishen Mohan v. Khetter Moni, 2 Hay 196; Kisar v. Gunga, 20 W.R. 207; Navanti Lal v. Purushottam, 50 B. 268.

(4) Khudi Ram v. Bonwarilal, 16 C. 584.

(5) Navanti Lal v. Purushottam, 50 B. 268.

(6) S. 21, Guardians and Wards Act, (VIII of 1890).

(7) Amba v. Shrinivasa, 26 C.W.N. 369 P.C.: 68 I.C. 754.

(8) Such is the practice in the Madras Presidency; Armuga v. Viraraghava, 24 M. 753.

(9) Sumtosh v. Gera Pattuck, 23 W. R. 22; Katteeram v. Gendhenee, ib., p. 178: Boolchand v. Janokee, 24 W.R. 228: 25 W.R. 386; Surjyamoni v. Kal Kanta, 28 C. 37 (45).

(10) Ss. 19 (a), 21, Guardians and Wards Act, (VIII of 1890).

(11) Mac.H.L., Vol. I, Ch. VII; Vol. II, Ch. VII; Kesar v. Ganga, 8 B.H. C.R. (A.C.) 31; Khater Monee v. Kishen Mohun, 2 Hay 195; Khudi Ram v. Bonwarilal, 16 C. 584.

(12) Bhagwana v. Ramchand, (1911) P.L.R. 231: 11 I.C. 145.

(13) Bhagwana v. Ramchand, (1911) P.L.R. 231: 11 I.C. 145.

rights of alienation thereof as a de jure guardian.[1]

Illustrations.

(a) A, the natural guardian of a minor B, alienates his property for legal necessity or for the benefit of B or of his estate. The alienation binds B.

(b) A, a distant relation of the minor, B acts as his guardian, and as such; alienates his property for legal necessity or for the benefit of B or of his estate. The alienation binds B.[2]

827. Analogous Law.—All guardians may be classed as—

GUARDIAN.

De Jure. De facto.

(1) Natural.
(2) Testamentary.
(3) Certificated.

The rights and duties of a certificated guardian are those specified in sections 20-37 of the Guardians and Wards Act. But those of the other three, namely, natural, testamentary and a de facto guardian are limited by Hindu Law, which (except as regards the father) permits of an alienation made by them on his behalf for legal necessity or benefit of the minor or of his estate. As the Privy Council observed in a leading case: "Under the Hindu Law, the right of a bona fide incumbrancer who has taken from a de facto manager a charge on lands created honestly, for the purpose of saving the estate, or for the benefit of the estate, is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge, had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager) affected by the want of union of the de facto with the de jure title."[3]

Mahomedan Law Different.

828. It will be observed that in this respect Mahomedan Law offers no analogy, but rather presents a contrast; since under that law a de facto guardian has no recognized position, being regarded as no better than an intermeddler who may, as such, incur liability; but can confer no right by his alienation of his ward's property. The one inquires who made the alienation; the other why it was made. As the Privy Council observed: "It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the elder brothers were de facto guardians of the respondent, and as such, were entitled to sell his property, provided that the sale was in order to pay his debts and was, therefore, necessary in his interest. It is difficult to see how the situation of an unauthorized guardian is bettered by describing him as a de facto guardian. He may by his de facto guardianship assume important responsibilities in relation to the minor's property, but he cannot thereby clothe himself with legal power to sell it."[4] But their Lordships were careful to observe that they were not deciding whether a sale by a de facto guardian, if made for

(1) Hunooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393.

(2) Kundan Lal v. Beni Prasad, 13 L. 399; Sheo Govind v. Ram Adhin, 8 Luck. 182.

(3) Hanooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (412, 413); Amrit v. Manik, 10 B.H.C.R. 79; Keshav v. Daulat Ram, (1891) B.P.J. 147; Arunachala v. Chidambara, 13 M.L. J. 223; Adhar Chandra v. Kirtibash, 12 C.L.J. 586: 6 I.C. 638; Gunga Pershad v. Phool Singh, 10 W.R. 106; Dorab Ally v. Abdool Azeez, 4 C. 229; Ram Chunder v. Brojonath, 4 C. 929 F.B.; Mohanund v. Mafur Mondul, 26 C. 820; Thayammal v. Kuppanna, 38 M. 1125; Kalliappa v. Deivasigamani, (1913) M. W.N. 795: 18 I.C. 27; Omar Hayat v. Devi Das, (1910) P.W.R. 5: 5 I.C. 590; Jago v. Oodal, 4 N.L.R. 20 (24).

(4) Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali, 34 A. 213 (222) P.C.; followed in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi, 45 C. 878 (892) P.C. necessity, or for the payment of an ancestral debt affecting the minor's property, and if beneficial to the minor, was altogether void or merely voidable.[1] But it was assumed that it would be either one or the other, merely because the transfer, though supported by necessity, was made by an unauthorized person. This distinction between the two systems appears to have been ignored in some cases in which an alienation by a Hindu de facto guardian was treated as ipso facto void.[2] But the different structure of Hindu society with its joint family, unknown to Mahomedan Law, gives to a de facto guardian of a minor a position identical with that acknowledged in a de jure guardian.[3] Where the latter is the father, he, moreover, possesses greater right of alienation, in that he is permitted even greater latitude, and may transfer his son's estate for his own antecedent debts, not illegal or immoral. The subject is a part of the joint family law and will have to be discussed more in detail in the sequel (Ss. 149-169).

829. Personal Rights.—But this is so only as regards the minor's property. As regards his personal rights, e.g., his marriage, the de facto guardian has not the same power as his de jure guardian. And so it has been held that the father of a married minor girl, being neither her natural nor legal guardian, cannot act as her "representative" within the meaning of S. 32 (b) of the Registration Act, so that any deed of the minor presented by him for registration and registered is not validly registered.[4]

830. Acknowledgment by De Facto Guardian.—As the status of a de facto guardian is recognized by law, he must be deemed to be a "legal guardian" within the meaning of S. 21 (1) of the Limitation Act; and as such, he can enlarge limitation by his payment or acknowledgment.[5] In one case it was held that a payment made by the eldest brother of certain minors could not save limitation, when their mother, their natural guardian, was alive.[6] But a minor may have both a natural and a de facto guardian, in which case they would be both classed as legal guardians within the meaning of law.

831. Officious Intermeddler Excepted.—The position assigned by Hindu Law to a de facto guardian does not extend beyond a relation or friend interested in the minor, who from love and affection to him assumes superintendence of his estate. It excludes an officious intermeddler with his estate. In the Privy Council case, the de facto guardian was the mother of the minor Zemindar who denied her competency to mortgage his estate, and even averred that, being a pardanashin lady with no business experience, her affairs were practically in the hands of her agents who treated the Zemindari as if it were her own, and who, describing herself as "proprietor" and "heir," charged the estate, from which her son, on

(1) Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali, 34 A. 213 (222) P.C.

(2) Husen v. Rajaram, 10 N.L.R. 133: 26 I.C. 813; Sunder v. Shiaman, 68 I.C. (L.) 731, following Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali, 34 A. 213 P.C.; Mayna Bibi v. Banku Behari, 29 C. 473, (both cases of Mahomedan de facto guardians).

(3) Hanooman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Vemulapallai v. Maganti, 49 M. 768; Bai Kunthi v. Adhar Chandra, 92 I.C. 727; (1926) C. 653; Kesheo v. Jagannath, 22 N.L.R. 5, F.B., 92 I.C. 121: (1926) N. 81, (powers of alienation qua de facto manager). But may not the management be only an incident of guardianship? Sheikh Muhamed v. Ramchandra, 90 I.C. (N.) 74; Lalchand v. Narhar, 89 I.C. (N.) 896; Narayan v. Dharma, (1925) N. 134; Lakhmichand v. Khushaldas, 18 S.L.R. 230: (1925) S. 330.

(4) Amba v. Shrinivas, 26 C.W.N. 369 P.C.

(5) Tirupayya v. Mullidi, 25 M.L.J. 428: 19 I.C. 362.

(6) Bireshar v. Ambica Charan, 45 C. 630 (633, 634) a de facto guardian is "guardian" within the meaning of Ss. 4 attaining majority sought exoneration, whereupon the Privy Council said: "Had the Rani intruded into the estate wrongfully, and even practised deception upon the Court of Wards, by putting forth a case of joint proprietorship in order to defeat the claim of a Court of Wards to the worship, it would not follow that those acts, however wrong, would defeat the claim of the incumbrancer. The objection, then, to the Rani's assumption of proprietorship, in order to get the management into her hands does not really go to the root of the matter, nor necessarily invalidates the charge."[1] In other cases, the de facto manager was a relation, e.g., the mother,[2] the stepmother,[3] or the grandmother[4] but relationship is not necessary. For instance, the father is not necessarily the legal guardian of his illegitimate child but his de facto guardianship could not be repudiated on that ground. On the same ground, the guardianship of the natural father of an adopted son,[5] or of a married female would be easily recognized.

But a person who is not attached to the minor by ties of affection or other recognized affinity, but assumes charge of his estate, is no better than an intermeddler with his estate, for which he would be accountable to him as a trustee de son tort for the period of his intermeddling.[6]

832. De Facto Guardian's Power.—The powers of a natural and a de facto guardian are said to be the same as those of a legal guardian[7] (§§ 793, 809). But in order to vest a person with the right of a de facto guardian, there must be some course of conduct in that capacity, otherwise a person who has for several years never intermeddled with the property of his ward, but suddenly takes upon himself to sell his property, cannot be described his de facto guardian, since he is merely his guardian ad hoc.[8] Any act done by a de facto guardian would be equally binding on the minor if it is supported by necessity or benefit of the minor.[9] Such for instance, would be an alienation made by the guardian for repairs of the minor's property or other case of proved necessity.[10]

Guardian must act as such.

84. A guardian cannot bind his ward by an act not purported to be done on his behalf.[11]

---

(2) and 7 (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act, Wallace Sitha Boi v. Wallace Radha Boi, 36 M.L.J. 189: 51 I.C. 236.

(1) Hanooman Pershad Pandey v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (413).

(2) Soonder v. Bennud, 4 C. 76; Arumugum Chetty v. Vellaichami, 37 M. 38.

(3) Jago v. Oodal, 4 N.L.R. 20 (24, 25).

(4) Mohamud v. Nafur Mondul, 26 C. 820. In Odhar Chandra v. Kirtibash, 12 C.L.J. 586: 6 I.C. 638, the alienation was by the grandmother of a married female whose husband was her de jure guardian.

(5) Ganga Prasad v. Hara Kanta, 15 C.W.N. 558: 7 I.C. 234.

(6) Cf. Baroda Prosad v. Gajendra Nath, 13 C.W.N. 537: 1 I.C. 289; Dhanpat v. Mahesh Nath, 24 C.W.N. 752: 57 I.C. 805; Damodar v. Dayal, 11 Bom.L.R. 1187: 4 I.C. 283.

(7) Adhar Chandra v. Kirtibash, 12 C. L.J. 586. (588); 6 I.C. 638; Sham Chandra v. Gadadhar, 13 C.L.J. 277; Mahomedan Law different—Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali, 34 A. 213 (222) P.C.; Ganpat v. Bissessor Lal, 8 N.L.J. 110: (1923) N. 230; Tulsidas v. Vaghela Raisingji, 57 B. 40 F.B.

(8) Harilal v. Gordhan, 51 B. 1040.

(9) Amrit v. Manik, 12 B.H.C.R. 79; Keshav v. Doulat Khan, (1891) B.P.J. 147; Arunachala v. Chidambara, 13 M.L.J. 223; Siddick v. Mhd. Hushum, (1916) M.W.N. 341: 37 I.C. 728; Arumugum v. Vellaichami, 37 M. 38; Adhar Chandra v. Kirtibash, 12 C.L.J. 586; 6 I.C. 638; Kundan Lal v. Beni Pershad, 13 L. 399.

(10) Adhar Chandra v. Kirtibash, 12 C. L.J. 586; Muthusami v. Annamalai, (1937) M. 1.

(11) Indu Chunder v. Radha Kishore, 19 C. 507 (513) P.C.

833. Analogous Law.—This rule is founded on the principle that a guardian cannot be permitted to act on his own account with the chance of transferring his obligations to the minor if he finds it to his advantage to do so.[1] Such was the case of the mother who had taken a lease, which she surrendered during the minority of her adopted son, against whom the lessor sued for its rent. It did not appear that the mother had taken the lease qua guardian of her minor son. The suit against the son was launched on the ground that he had ratified it on coming of age which could not be proved. The Privy Council held that the plaintiff could not bind the minor on the ground that he had taken the lease through his mother, because the mother's Kabuliyat did not purport to be on his behalf, or to bind his estate.[2]

834. The fact that his estate had been benefited by the transaction is immaterial, for, as observed by the Privy Council: "It is not in every case in which a man has been benefited by the money of another, that an obligation to repay that money arises. The question is not to be determined by nice considerations of what may be fair or proper according to the highest morality. To support such a suit there must be an obligation, express or implied, to repay."[3] But the principle of this case only applies to cases where it is doubtful in which capacity the guardian had purported to act. Where, therefore, the guardian had no estate of his own, the court held that the conveyance could not be impeached on the ground that the guardian had omitted to mention that he was acting for his ward.[4] But the contrary has been laid down in other cases in which it has been held as established law that a guardian cannot bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it.[5] If, therefore, the bond was executed by the guardian in his own name, and it was sought to prove that it had been executed for the minor, the court held that it was not open to it to go behind the terms of the bond for the purpose of construing it: "In our opinion, when a third person enters into dealing with the guardian of a minor, and advances money for necessaries of the minor or for the benefit of the estate, and takes a bond for the debt from the guardian, the responsibility rests on him to take care that the bond is so drawn as to render the estate of the minor in law liable for the debt."[6]

835. The rule must then be merely confined to cases of uncertainty, and not to those of defective conveyancing; that is to say, cases in which though the transaction was nominally with the guardian in his own name, but it was in reality with him as representative of the minor.[7]

836. Guardian's Tort.—The minor is not, of course, liable for a tort committed by his guardian, unless it is committed in connection with the management and for the benefit of his estate.[8]

---

(1) Indu Chunder v. Radha Kishore, 19 C. 507 (513) P.C.

(2) Indu Chunder v. Radha Kishore, 19 C. 507 (512, 513) P.C. To the same effect. Gadgappa v. Apaji, 3 B. 237 (240).

(3) Ram Tutvel Singh v. Biseswar, 23 W.R. 305, cited and applied in Gadgappa v. Apaji, 3 B. 237 (240); Babur Ali v. Sookeea, 13 W.R. 63.

(4) Murari v. Tayana, 20 B. 286; Ghasi Ram v. Binia, 1 N.L.R. 66.

(5) Ranmalsingji v. Vadilal, 20 B. 61; Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320 (329).

(6) Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320 (329).

(7) Hanooman Persad Panday v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (412); Girja Nath v. Upendra Nath, 20 I.C. (C.) 241; contra Arumugam v. Vellaichami, 37 M. 38.

(8) Maharaj v. Paresh Nath, 31 C. 839; Sunu v. Dhondu, 28 B. 330.

(3) Of Testamentary Guardians.

Father's power to appoint guardian by will.

85. (1) A Hindu father may, by his will, appoint one or more persons to act as a guardian or guardians of his children after his death in respect of his separate property; and in so doing, he may exclude even the mother from her natural guardianship.[1] The mother, however, has not a similar power to appoint a guardian by will, though the court may pay regard to her wishes so expressed.[2]

(2) Where more than one person are appointed guardians, unless the contrary is expressed or necessarily implied, it is competent to any of them to accept the office though the others may disclaim, or die.[3]

(3) Any guardian accepting office cannot resign at will.[4]

Explanation.—A father has no power to appoint a testamentary guardian of his coparcenary property even where he was then the sole surviving adult coparcener.[5]

837. Analogous Law.—The law of wills is novel to Hindu Law and has arisen out of the law of gifts. The father's power to appoint a guardian by will is, consequently, based on no textual authority, but is one corollary of his acknowledged parental power over his own children established by a long series of cases.[6] But in Madras, it was held that the father had no testamentary right to appoint a guardian to his son's joint estate over which he had then no power of disposal;[7] and that right cannot be exercised in respect of coparcenary property even where he is the sole surviving coparcener.[8] It is recognized that this may lead to inconvenience, and in the absence of any prohibition in Hindu law, it had swayed the court in acknowledging the validity of such appointment;[9] but the Bombay Full Bench have treated inconvenience as fit for removal by the Legislature and not by court.[10]

838. It has been stated before that Hindu Law regards the father, the son and the grandson as really a single person and the father's tes-

---

(1) Debanand v. Anandmani, 43 A. 213; Budhilal v. Morarji, 31 B. 413.

(2) Venkayya v. Venkata, 21 M. 401.

(3) This clause is drawn from English law, being applicable to Hindus; Eyre v. Shaftsbury (Countess), 2 P.Wms. 102 (107).

(4) Drawn from English law, being equally applicable to Hindus; Spencer v. Chesterfield (Earl) Amb, 146; Grays, Minors, (Re), (1891) 27 L.R.Ir. 609; A guardian may however disclaim before acceptance, Ex parte Champney, 1 Dick 350; O'Keefe v. Casey, 1 Sch. & Lef. 106.

(5) Chidambaram v. Rangaswami, 41 M. 561 F.B.; followed in Brij Bhukan Das v. Damodar, 59 B. 316 F.B.

(6) Railukhee v. Gokool, 13 M.I.A. 209; Pirthee Lal v. Doorgalal, 7 W.R. 73 (75); Bindaji v. Mathura, 30 B. 152; Durga v. Neelanumd, 7 W.R. 74; Budhi Lal v. Murarji, 31 B. 413; Ramchandra v. Krishna, 32 B. 259; Mahabaleshwar v. Ramchandra, 38 B. 94 (103); Chidambaram v. Veerappa, 22 M.L.J. 380: 43 I.C. 865; Moosala v. Kotamarti, 44 M. 189; Deba Nand v. Anand Mani, 43 A. 213; contra Chidambaram v. Rangasamy, 41 M. 561 F.B.; Deba Nand v. Anand Mani, 43 M. 213.

(7) Moosala v. Katamanti, 40 M.L.J. 46; Subbarayudu v. Subbanna, 47 M.L.J. 765; Kanagasabbai v. Ponnusami, 21 I.C. (M.) 848; Alagappa v. Mangathai, 40 M. 672; Chidambaram v. Rangaswami, 41 M. 561 F.B.

(8) Chidambaram v. Rangaswami, 41 M. 561 F.B. followed in Brij Bhukan Das v. Ghasi Ram, 59 B. 316 F.B.

(9) Mahableshwar v. Ram Chandra, 38 B. 94.

(10) Brij Bhukan Das v. Ghasi Ram, 59 B. 316 (336) F.B., overruling; Mahableshwar v. Ramchandra, Ibid.

tamentary power of appointment may be treated as arising out of his right of management which he may provide for against his son's minority after his demise. The same power may be defended on the basis of justice, equity, and good conscience, in a matter upon which Hindu Law is silent. In any case, it is conceded, even in Madras, that the father's wishes are prima facie entitled to consideration, and may only be ignored if the paramount benefit of the minor warrants it. It is equally established that this power is inherent only in the father. It is not possessed by the mother,[1] and even as to the father, it is a power of nomination which he can only exercise in his will to take effect after his death. He cannot substitute another person to be a guardian in his place during his lifetime.[2] A person cannot appoint a guardian for any other relation, e.g., a nephew.[3] And since as regards his capacity to make a will he is subject to the Indian Majority Act, it follows that he must be an adult within the meaning of that Act, before he is competent to give such testamentary directions.[4] Where, moreover, the father was himself subject to the Guardians and Wards Act,[5] then his incapacity to make a will or appoint a guardian for his children would be further prolonged till he has completed his 21st year.[6]

839. A father may, it is apprehended, appoint a guardian not only in respect of every child born, but one en ventre sa mere at his death, whether born or conceived before or after the date of appointment,[7] and the guardianship may be limited for any period before the minor attains his majority. But if the minor be a female, her guardianship will, ordinarily, cease on her marriage when her guardianship is naturally transferred to her husband.

840. Delegation of Authority.—The natural guardian may delegate his authority within limits. Where he allows another to assume complete control over the minor and his estate, the latter becomes a de facto guardian, but there is no delegation, which implies the transfer of his power to another to act for him to the extent of his transferred authority. So far as the alienation of the minor's estate is concerned, the question of the status of the transferor is not so material as the question of necessity. But in the exercise of personal rights, such as adoption or marriage, the question of delegation is material, for it has already been seen to what extent this is permissible by law.

841. The parents and natural guardians have at times to place their ward under the care and control of others for the purpose of education and training, in which case, the delegate assumes jurisdiction over the ward to the extent incidental to that purpose. Such delegation is revocable at any time, and must be revoked if it is used to the detriment of the children. The court within whose jurisdiction the children are found may equally revoke it, if sufficient cause is shown for its interference, especially when the parents have put it out of their power to interfere themselves for the protection of their children by sending them touring round the world in

---

(1) Venkayya v. Venkata, 21 M. 401.
(2) Besant v. Narayaniah, 38 M. 807 P.C.
(3) Dhanpat Ram v. Prem Singh, (1911) P.L.R. 220: 12 I.C. 452.
(4) Harduari Lal v. Gomi, 8 A.L.J. 385, followed in Golab v. Thakore Lal, 36 B. 622.
(5) Act VIII of 1890.
(6) Harduari Lal v. Gomi, 8 A.L.J. 385.
(7) 17 Halsbury's L.E., 124.

charge of a stranger. In exercising its power, the court will consider not only the physical, but also the moral, and religious welfare of the child, construing the term "welfare" in its largest possible sense and doing what a wise parent, acting in the true interest of the child, would or ought to do.[1]

An agent appointed by the guardian is responsible to the latter. He is not, however, liable to account to the minor for his acts as agent on the principle of trustee de son tort which does not apply to him.[2]

(4) Of Certificated Guardians.

Appointment or declaration of a guardian by Court.

86. (1) Any relation or friend of a minor, or the Collector of the District in which the minor resides or has any property, may apply to the court for the appointment or declaration of a guardian, and the court may, on being satisfied that it would be for the welfare of the minor, subject to the rules herein stated, appoint or declare a guardian:[3]

(2) Where a guardian has been validly appointed by the father in his will, the court may not appoint or declare any other person as a guardian, until he has been removed for any of the reasons stated in S. 39 of the Guardians and Wards Act:[4]

(3) Where any parent, and in the case of a married female, her husband, is available, the court may not appoint any other guardian unless it finds that the parent or the husband, as the case may be, is unfit to discharge the obligations of that office:[5]

(4) Provided that in the case of other relations, the court will pay due regard to their natural claims to guardianship and may appoint any of them, or any other person found best fitted to promote the minor's welfare:[6]

(5) Provided further that where the minor has attained sufficient maturity of intelligence and discretion, it will consult him and pay due regard to his choice of a guardian but will not be bound to appoint his nominee if it finds any other person better fitted to promote his welfare:[7]

(6) An order passed by the court acting under the Guardians and Wards Act is final, and cannot be contested by suit or otherwise.[8]

842. Analogous Law.—Both the English and Hindu Laws declare the sovereign as the guardian of all infants.[9] The authority of the sovereign is now exercised by the courts whose authority, being quasi parental,[10] must be used in the best interest of the minor, whose welfare should be its paramount concern, subject only to the legal rights of persons whom the law acknowledges as the natural or preferential guardians.[11] But, in this respect, the Guardians and Wards Act is stated to have modified the pre-existing rule of Hindu Law which recognized an absolute

(1) Pollard v. Rouse, 33 M. 288. As to jurisdiction of the court, see Besant v. Narayaniah, 38 M. 807 P.C.
(2) Ramanathan v. Muthia, 43 M. 429.
(3) S. 8, Guardians and Wards Act.
(4) Ib., Ss. 6 and 7.
(5) Ib., S. 19, Bhikno v. Chamela, 2 C.W.N. 191.
(6) Ib., S. 17.
(7) Ib., S. 17.
(8) Ib. S. 48.
(9) Manu, VIII-27.
(10) Skinner v. Orde, 14 M.I.A. 309 (329).
(11) Basanta v. Chedilal, 40 C. 241; Joshy Asam, In re, 23 C. 290.

right in the father and the mother. The law now qualifies this absolute right by subordinating it to the minor's welfare.[1] But, nevertheless, it cannot ignore their claim. Their predominant right still remains, though, if they be unfit, the court is free to supersede them for a sufficient reason. But this is, in view of the statutory enactment, merely reduced to a rule of practice.

843. The Act merely saves the personal law so far as it relates to an appointment by the father,[2] and recognizes the predominant claims of the father and the husband whom it cannot appoint or declare, because they are the natural guardians, and in their place, it cannot appoint another guardian, unless they are declared to be unfit.[3] Clause (1) is based on S. 8; clause (2) on Ss. 6 and 7 (3); clause (3) partially on S. 19, and the rest on case-law; clauses (4) and (5) on S. 17, and clause (6) on S. 48 of the Guardians and Wards Act.[4]

844. The Guardians and Wards Act saves from its operation the Hindu personal law so far as it relates to any power to appoint a guardian of a minor's person or property, or both. It does not save any rule which, apart from appointment, vests the right of guardianship of one person over another. Consequently, it is competent to the court to remove a natural guardian, even though the father, and appoint another in his place,[5] the result being that a guardian may be appointed under the personal law independently of the Act or under the Act; but unless there has been such appointment, any party may have recourse to the provisions of the Act for such appointment. Now, since the right to appoint a guardian, apart from the Act, is held only to reside in the father when making a will, it follows that his right to appoint a guardian is only then absolute: otherwise the guardian, whoever he be, is always liable to be superseded by an appointment by the court under the Act.

Parents' claims.

845. But both under the Hindu as well as under the English Law, the claims of the parents to guardianship of their children are regarded as absolute. Consequently, where they are alive, their legal claims must be considered, and though they may be rejected for sufficient reason, they cannot be ignored. As between the parents, the father has undoubtedly an absolute right and the Act recognizes this fact in enacting that he must be appointed the guardian, unless he is found to be unfit. The Act does not define this term, but it is apparent that this unfitness must be relative to his duties as the guardian of his minor son.

Such has been held to be the case where the father had practically deserted his religion, and his object was to get his child converted to Christianity,[6] or where the father had got the child converted to Christianity and the mother after three years, applied with the object of getting her to renounce Christianity.[7]

846. Declaration or Appointment of Guardian.—The law of guardians is now consolidated in the Guardians and Wards Act, which

(1) Bhikno v. Chamela, 2 C.W.N. 191; Murari Lal v. Saraswati, 86 I.C. 226: 88 I.C. 576: (1925) L. 358.
(2) S. 6, Act VIII of 1890.
(3) Ib., S. 19.
(4) Act VIII of 1890.
(5) Bindo v. Shamal, 29 A. 210.
(6) Mokoondlal v. Nobodip, 25 C. 881.
(7) Albrecht v. Bathee. 22 M.L.J. 247: 13 I.C. 453.

supersedes Hindu Law so far as it is not expressly or by necessary implication saved by it. The limits of this saving clause are set out in the last paragraph. Apart from those express exemptions, S. 17 enacts that "in appointing or declaring a guardian of a minor, the court shall, subject to the provisions of this section, be guided by what, consistently with the law to which the minor is subject, appears in the circumstances to be for the welfare of the minor." In other words, while the court has to pay due regard to the welfare of the minor it must do so "consistently with the law to which the minor is subject," which means that its order must not ignore the claims of the minor's legal guardians, though it is not bound to treat them as sacrosanct.

Clause (1).

847. Clause (1) is drawn from S. 8 of the Guardians and Wards Act,[1] which empowers any person desirous of being or claiming to be the guardian of the minor, or by any relative or friend of the minor, or the Collector of the District or other local area, within which the minor ordinarily resides or in which he has property, or the Collector, having authority, with respect to the class to which the minor belongs, to apply for the declaration or appointment of a guardian of his person or property, or both. This section disqualifies the court to appoint a guardian suo motu by requiring that its jurisdiction in the matter does not come into play unless it is moved by an application made under S. 7. Again, no application can be made under this section for the appointment of a guardian of the minor's property, unless he has some property of his own.[2] Consequently, no guardian is possible of a minor's coparcenary interest in the joint property of a Mitakshara family[3] (§ 847). Otherwise, the court may either declare a guardian, that is to say, declare a natural guardian to be a guardian under the Act, or it may appoint one. In either case, the certificated guardian must thenceforward act in accordance with the provisions of the Act.[4] The fact that he is also a natural guardian does not enlarge his statutory powers which supersede and qualify his natural rights.

848. It will be observed that the court is not bound to declare or appoint a guardian in every case, even though it is moved to do so. It is only empowered to act if it considers that its interference would be for the welfare of the minor. If this is once made clear, the fact that the minor had already a guardian, even so qualified as the father or the mother, would not prevent it from exercising its powers. The absolute right of the father and the mother has so far been subordinated by the Act to the minor's welfare.[5]

Clause (2).

849. Removal of Guardian.—But at the same time, the Act safeguards the parental right of the minor and provides that where a guardian has been validly appointed by the father by his will, the court shall not declare or appoint any other guardian until the former has been removed for any of the reasons stated in S. 39 of the Act,[6] or the will is found to be invalid.[7]

(1) Act VIII of 1890.
(2) Ib., S. 84.
(3) S. 81, ante.
(4) As to which see Ss. 24-37 of the Act VIII of 1890.
(5) Bhikno v. Chamela, 2 C.W.N. 191.
(6) Ss. 6, 7 (3) and 39, Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890); Besant v. Narayaniah, 38 M. 807 P.C.; Subramanya v. Ammayee, (1914) M.W.N. 414; 29 I.C. 740.
(7) Shahu v. Hapoja, 17 B. 560.

In so framing the Act, the intention of the Legislature was to recognize the testamentary guardian as prima facie qualified,[1] and unless he is removed for incapacity or abuse of his trust the court should not supersede him by appointing another guardian.

Clause (3).

850. Parent or Husband.—Following the same policy, the court must give effect to the personal law which recognizes the parents and husband of a married minor female as the minor's natural guardians who must be formally removed for unfitness before the court can declare or appoint any other guardian.

Father's Unfitness.

851. The unfitness of the father to be the guardian of his minor children must not be judged by the fact that some other person was better able to maintain and educate them. The question in this case is not whether the child would be better taken care of by another, but only in what way and to what extent the father had neglected his children. If he has habitually ill-treated, neglected or deserted them, waived his right or abdicated his office, by consigning them to another person for their maintenance or education, then the court will not assist the father in enforcing his parental right of custody and control, if it will be to the detriment of the child, or interfere with its education or be averse to its expressed wishes.[2] But the fact that the father, a goldsmith by caste, was keeping a concubine in his house is no ground for refusing him the guardianship of his children as that circumstance, though an objection, was not so serious and grave as to justify the supersession of the father's legal right.[3] In one case, after anxious consideration, an Allahabad Bench upheld the father's right to the guardianship of his daughter 11 years old whom he was about to marry to an old impotent man of seventy years.[4] But this case should not be regarded as a precedent.

Then again, on the rule that a right once vested cannot be divested, the Madras High Court negatived the right of the father who had renounced the world by becoming a Sanyasi, returning to his household to claim the custody of his daughters aged 14 and 16 with a view to prevent their early marriages.[5]

Grounds for Unfitness.

A person, otherwise eligible, cannot be condemned as unfit on the ground of his extreme youth,[6] or old age. The unfitness must be found by proving specific acts of mismanagement.[7]

Meaning of "Welfare."

852. The term "welfare" is used in this connection in its larger sense as implying a child's intellectual, physical, moral and religious well being.[8] But the ties of affection should not be disregarded as they are generally conducive to its well-being.[9]

(1) Sami Row v. Elivatha, 16 M.L.J. 357.
(2) Joshy Assam, In re, 23 C. 290 (296); Mokoond Lal v. Nobodip, 25 C. 881; Besant v. Narayaniah, 38 M. 807 P.C.
(3) Kalidas v. Subbamma, 7 M. 2.
(4) Kanhai Ram v. Biddya Ram, 1 A. 552.
(5) Muthuswami v. Narayana, 21 M. L.J. 202: 3 I.C. 393 (397).
(6) Rangubai v. Gopal, 5 Bom.L.R. 542.
(7) Rindabai v. Girdharlal, 4 Bom.L. R. 799.
(8) McGrath, In re, (1893) 1 Ch. 143 (148).
(9) Act VIII of 1890.

853. Choice of a Guardian.—After the parents the court cannot ignore the natural claims of other relations, though it is not bound to view them with the same solicitude.[1] And in a choice between fitness and propinquity, in the appointment of a guardian for the minor the former must prevail; the welfare of the child is the paramount consideration and should not be subordinated to the requirements of the law to which the minor is subject.[2]

Clause (4).

854. Minor When Consulted.—This clause is drawn from S. 17 (3) of the Guardians and Wards Act.[3] The court must in each case judge whether the minor is old enough to form an intelligent preference. A boy aged 14 and of course a girl aged 16, are old enough to form an intelligent preference which is strongly entitled to consideration.[4] And the court has given effect to the wishes of a boy aged 12 or 13 who preferred to live with his Hindu uncles to his father who had become converted to Christianity.[5]

Clause (5).

855. Finality of Court's Order.—The order of the court declaring or appointing or refusing to declare or appoint a guardian is appealable to the High Court,[6] which may otherwise exercise its general power of revision.[7] But such order cannot be otherwise contested by suit or by review.[8]

Clause (6).

87. One person may be appointed guardian of the person and another of the property: and two or more persons may be so appointed joint guardians of the person or of the property, or of both.[9]

Joint guardians of persons and property.

88. It is not competent to the court to appoint a guardian in respect of the property of a minor, or of an otherwise disqualified member of a joint family, of which he has no present separate possession.[10]

Court's jurisdiction when limited.

Illustrations.

(a) A is a minor member of a Mitakshara joint family. The manager of the family being his guardian, the court has no power to appoint another as A's guardian.[11]

(b) A is a minor. He has a title to his estate but no possession. The court cannot appoint a guardian in respect of such estate.[12]

856. Analogous Law.—This section lays down a general principle, that there cannot be a guardian of a minor's estate when it is not in his

(1) Palku v. Budh Singh, 18 C.W.N. 1198: 25 I.C. 112.

(2) S. 17, Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890); Neroda v. Bholanath, 26 I.C. (C.) 300.

(3) Act VIII of 1890.

(4) Saithri, (In re), 16 B. 307; followed in Batoolal v. Ekstrand, 12 N.L.R. 35.

(5) Mokoond Lal v. Nobodip Chunder, 25 C. 881; Joshy Assam, (In re), 23 C. 290; Albrecht v. Jellamma, 22 M.L.J. 247.

(6) S. 47, Act VIII of 1890.

(7) Ib., S. 48.

(8) Farid v. Mitho, (1906) P.R. 143; Ralla v. Manglan, (1912) P.R. 116: 15 I.C. 559; Nagina Singh v. Sunder, (1916) P.W.R. 24: 33 I.C. 987.

(9) Abstracted from S. 15, Guardians and Wards Act.

(10) Gharibullah v. Khallak Singh, 25 A. 407 (416) P.C.

(11) Ib.

(12) Marquis of Salisbury, In re L.R. 20 Eq. 527 (528).

possession. Consequently, as observed later, the court has no power to appoint a guardian in respect of the property of an undivided Hindu coparcener[1] (§ 857). As Sir G. Jessel, M.R., observed: "I doubt whether the court has any power of its own to appoint a guardian of the estate of an infant whose estate is not in possession, the jurisdiction existing for the sole purpose of taking care of an infant's present property."[2] Following this case, it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a guardian of the estate of a minor where it was in the actual possession of trustees on his behalf, and the minor had no interest in the property beyond that of a beneficiary until he came of age, and that if the trustees misbehaved, it was open to the minor to obtain redress in a regular suit.[3] The same view has been followed in Calcutta in a case in which the minor's estate had become vested in the executor of his father's will, whereupon the court held that no guardian of the property of the minor could be appointed so long as the executorship continued.[4]

857. Minor Coparcener.—In a joint Mitakshara family, the father and in his absence, the senior member is the manager and, as such, the guardian of the interests of its several coparceners. On the death of the father, the mother becomes entitled to the guardianship of her children, but she is not entitled to the guardianship in respect of their proprietary interest in the joint family (§ 847).

A guardian can only be appointed in respect of the minor's separate property. Where, therefore, he possesses only a coparcenary interest in the property of a joint Mitakshara family, no guardian is possible "on the plain ground that the interest of a member of such family is not individual property at all, and that, therefore, a guardian, if appointed, would have nothing to do with the family property."[5] In this view it is possible to appoint a guardian of all the joint property when all the coparceners are minors,[6] or the minor's property is prima facie separate, though his separation be disputed.[7] In the former case, as soon as any coparcener comes of age, the guardian must be removed, and all the joint property handed over to him, notwithstanding the fact that the other coparceners are

---

(1) Gharibullah v. Khallak Singh, 25 A. 407 (416) P.C.

(2) Marquis of Salisbury, In re, L.R. 20 Eq. 527 (528).

(3) Ashrafi Kuar v. Jai Narain, 6 I. C. (A.) 861.

(4) Ganga Prasad v. Hara Kanta, 15 C.W.N. 558.

(5) Gharibullah v. Khalaksingh, (1903) 25 A. 407 (416) P.C.; Alkajikar v. Naru, 35 M.L.J. 504: 34 I.C. 766; Kajikar Lakshmi v. Maru Devi, 32 M. 139; Ramkishen v. Beli Ram, (1910) P. R. 23: 5 I.C. 887; Murlidhar v. Harilal, (1906) P.L.R. 165; Kuri v. Bhanna Mal, (1909) P.R. 43: 1 I.C. 745; Virupakshappa v. Nilgangava, 19 B. 309 F. B.; Govind v. Moro, (1875) B.P.J. 261; Sakaram v. Motiram, (1881) B.P.J. 24; Vyankatrav v. Mahadev, (1882) B.P.J. 226; Samatsang v. Bavaji, (1882) B.P. J. 404; Chhagan v. Ramchandra, (1886) B.P.J. 275; Sheo Nundun v. Ghunsam, 21 W.R. 143; Ajhola v. Digambur, 23 W.R. 206; Gourah v. Gujadhur, 5 C. 219 (220); Sham Kuar v. Mahanda, 19 C. 301; Salikram v. Janka, 40 C. 269; Gurja v. Mohersingh, 16 A.W.N. 31; Mahanand v. Dasreth, 46 I.C. 815; Gourah v. Goujodhur, 5 C. 219; contra in Babaji v. Sheshgiri, 6 B. 593; Manilal, (In re), 25 B. 353. This case was followed per Greaves, J., in Hari Narain Das, (In re), 50 C. 141 (144), in wheih the Court was held to possess the jurisdiction to appoint a guardian in special cases. But in neither of these cases was the Privy Council case cited or considered.

(6) Sandoui v. Kamalakant, 15 I.C. (C.) 434.

(7) Gurappa v. Tayawa, 40 B. 513.

minors.[1] In the latter case the procedure of the Guardians and Wards Act being only summary, it is competent to the party aggrieved by the order to sue and show that the property in respect of which the court has appointed a guardian, is still joint, and he may recover it as such.[2]

858. No Separate Possession.—A minor coparcener may hold possession of an item of the joint family property, e.g., a house for convenience of enjoyment or residence. But since his possession is the possession of the family, and not exclusive, it would not justify the appointment of a guardian. This is in consonance with the rule of law that in a joint family the manager—and he alone—is entitled to possession of the joint estate, and no coparcener, major or minor, can arrogate to himself the right of separate possession and enjoyment of any item of the joint property. His possession, if any, by arrangement or acquiescence is peaceful, but is neither exclusive nor adverse to the other coparceners. If he is dissatisfied with this arrangement he has his remedy in partition.

859. "Otherwise Disqualified Member."—The reason applicable to a minor applies equally to a joint member otherwise disqualified, e.g., one suffering from lunacy.[3]

Lunatic.

89. A guardian of the minor's person has the right to the custody of his ward during the period of his guardianship.[4]

Right to custody.

860. Analogous Law.—This is in accordance with S. 24 of the Guardians and Wards Act which enacts as follows:—

"A guardian of the person of a ward is charged with the custody of the ward and must look to his support, health and education, and such other matters as the law to which the ward is subject requires."

The next section empowers the court to restore the guardian's custody enforcing it, if necessary, by arrest of the ward and delivery to his guardian.

861. Apart from the Act, the natural guardian is entitled to the custody of his ward.[5] The Act has merely transferred to the court general powers to be exercised for the protection of the welfare and well-being of children.[6] Even apart from the Act, the High Court has, in its equitable jurisdiction, authority to interfere with the legal right of the guardian, even if he is the father, if he be an improper person.[7]

862. The question whether the guardian of a minor's person can enforce his right of custody of the minor by suit or an application under the Guardians and Wards Act has led to some conflict, it being held in some cases that such custody can be only obtained by an application made under the Act and Suit for custody.

---

(1) Virupakshappa v. Nilgangava, 16 B. 309 F.B.; Bindaji v. Mathurabai, 30 B. 150 (156); Ramachandra v. Krishnarao, 32 B. 252; Samdani v. Kamala Kanta, 15 I.C. (C.) 424.

(2) Gurappa v. Tayawa, 40 B. 513.

(3) Parmadube v. Mahadeo, 49 I.C. (Pat.) 907.

(4) S. 24, Guardians and Wards Act.

(5) Holmes, (In re), 1 Hyde. 99; Carran, (In re), 1 Hyde. 143.

(6) Joshy Assam, (In re), 23 C. 290.

(7) Carran, (In re), 1 Hyde 143; Bhikus Koer v. Chamela, 2 C.W.N. 191.

not by a suit,[1] which the other cases hold to be equally maintainable.[2] Of course, after the ward is once delivered into the guardian's custody, the court possesses the power to restore him into it.[3] But the question arises regarding his first delivery. It seems that no suit will lie for the custody of a minor, the only remedy being by an application under the Guardians and Wards Act, which was intended by the Legislature to be a complete code defining the rights and remedies of guardians and wards. The father is, therefore, not entitled to sue as guardian of the infant child, detained by the defendant who is the maternal grandmother of the child.[4] In an application under the Act, the court has to decide the question of custody with reference to the welfare of the minor irrespective of its age. "The practice in such cases is that if the children be of a proper age, the court gives them their election as to the custody in which they will be; if not, the court takes care that they be delivered into proper custody."[5]

90. The appointment of a guardian by court has the effect of cancelling a guardian otherwise appointed or constituted.[6]

Appointed guardian supersedes others.

Illustrations.

(a) A is a minor. The court appoints his eldest brother C as the guardian of his person and property. B the father who was his natural guardian until C's appointment, ceases to possess over A's person and property any right as such guardian.

(b) A the father of his minor son is appointed by the court as the guardian of his person and property. On his appointment A ceases to be his natural guardian and possesses only such rights and is liable to the extent provided in the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890).

863. Analogous Law.—The appointment of a guardian by court under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act[7] implies the removal of one not so appointed. If the ward had then a natural[8] or any other de facto guardian,[9] they would both vacate their office with the appointment of a certificated guardian; and it follows that as soon as a guardian is appointed by court, no other person can legally bind the minor's estate.[10] And if the person so appointed was his natural guardian his powers as such are reduced to those which he can exercise under the Act. He cannot be heard to defend a transaction on the ground that he was the natural guardian of his ward.

91. A transaction entered into with a minor is only voidable at the option of the minor.[11]

Minor's privilege is personal.

864. Analogous Law.—It has been held that minority is a personal privilege, and no one dealing with a minor can object to a transaction on

(1) Shamlal v. Bindo, 26 A. 594; Utma Kuar v. Bhagawanta, 37 A. 515; Ghasita v. Wazira, (1897) P.R. 10 F.B.

(2) Sharifu v. Munakan, 25 B. 574; Achratlal v. Chimanlal, 40 B. 600.

(3) S. 25, Act VIII of 1890; Dayabhai v. Parvati, 39 B. 438.

(4) Sham Lal v. Bindo, 26 A. 594; Ghasita v. Mazvia, (1896) P.R. 41 F.B.

(5) K. v. Grenwhill, 4 A. and E. 624 (639-642); Saithri, (In re), 16 B. 307 (cases reviewed).

(6) Ramchander v. Chhedalal, 2 A.L.J. 460 (64); Arumugam v. Vellaichami, 37 M. 38.

(7) Ibid.

(8) Ram Chander v. Chhedalal, 2 A. L.J. 460 (464); Arumugam v. Vellaichami, 37 M. 38; Krishnamurthi v. Parvathi, 6 M.L.W. 760: 42 I.C. 505; Hanuman v. Ganesh Prasad, 50 I.C. (N.) 580.

(9) Sitha Bai v. Radho Bai, 36 M.L. J. 189: 51 I.C. 238.

(10) Arumugam v. Vellaichami, 37 M. 38.

(11) Hari Ram v. Jitam Ram, 3 B.L. R. (A.C.) 426; Sashi Bhushan v. Jadu Nath, 11 C. 552; Mahamed Arif v. Saraswati Debya, 18 C. 256.

the ground of his incompetency, except the minor himself.[1] So where the minor conveyed his property to the plaintiff, after which the minor died and was succeeded by his father as his heir, the plaintiff sued for a declaration of his title against the father who pleaded the invalidity of his sale on the ground of the minority of his son, but the court held that the plea was one open only to the minor and could not be availed of by his heir.[2] Where the guardian enters into a contract prejudicial to a minor, the latter is entitled to sue him through his next friend.[3]

Minor's Fraud.

865. The question whether a minor is precluded from obtaining relief on a contract induced by him by a fraudulent statement that he was of age, is one which has often been agitated in the courts of this country with varying results. In some cases it was held that the minor was estopped under S. 115 of the Evidence Act,[4] while in others there was held to be no estoppel, the word "person" in S. 115 of the Evidence Act being construed to refer to one sui juris and not to a mere minor. This view has now been affirmed by the Privy Council in a colonial appeal from Penang, when their Lordships adopted the rule laid down by the King's Bench in a case to which they referred for their guiding principle.[5] In the English case, the plaintiff a moneylender had sued a minor for recovery of £400 and £75 for interest, on the ground that the defendant had contracted the loan by fraudulently representing himself to be of full age at the time. In dismissing the claim Lord Sumner passed in review the entire case-law on the subject, the result of which may be thus stated: (i) that where a minor has, by a fraudulent misstatement of his age, induced another to lend him money, the court cannot order its recovery on the ground of fraud, since the rule as to infant's immunity was made to safeguard the weakness of infant at large, even though here and there a juvenile knave skipped through; (ii) that, nevertheless, wherever it is possible to order restitution, the court will strive to effect it; where, for instance, the money can be traced to the possession of the minor, the court will order its return; (iii) and that apart from restitution, it cannot decree the claim ex contractu either on the ground of estoppel or fraud or other overwhelming equity destroying the privilege of infancy.[6]

Minor's liability under decree.

92. (1) A minor is bound by the result of a suit to which he was a party, if he was properly represented therein:[7]

(2) Provided that, if any decree be passed on a compromise, such compromise must be sanctioned by the court:[8]

(3) Provided further that no decree obtained by consent has any effect against the minor, unless it was consented to by his natural or certificated guardian:[9]

---

(1) Ibid.

(2) Mahamed Arif v. Saraswatie, 18 C. 259; Vithoba v. Sakaram, 4 C.P.L.R. 128; contra in Deedchand v. Chandkhan, 11 N.L.R. 1 (3).

(3) Abdulla v. Ramdas, 2 N.L.R. 146.

(4) I of 1872.

(5) Leslie, Ltd. v. Sheill, (1914) 3 K. B. 607; followed in Mahamed v. Yech, 21 C.W.N. 257 (265) P.C.: 39 I.C. 401: 43 I.A. 256.

(6) Lestle, Ltd. v. Sheill, (1914) 3 K.B. 607.

(7) Karamali v. Rahimbhoy, 13 B. 137.

(8) Or. XXXII, R. 6.

(9) Or. XXXII, R. 7 (1).

(4) But no decree so obtained has any effect against him if it was secured by the fraud or misconduct of such guardian.[1]

Clause (1).

866. Analogous Law.—A suit may be instituted by a minor through his next friend. It is not necessary that he should sue only through his guardian, though it is the ordinary rule.[2] Where he is a defendant it is cast on the plaintiff to sue him through a guardian who must be appointed for that purpose by the court.[3] Ordinarily, it will appoint a certificated guardian[4] and in his absence the natural guardian[5] and failing him, any other person fit and willing to act as his guardian. Such person is designated the guardian ad litem and is then, for the conduct of the suit, subject to the provisions of Or. XXXII of the Code of Civil Procedure; and the direction of the Judge as therein stated. A suit relating to the estate or person of a minor, and for his benefit, has the effect of making him a ward of court, and no act can be done affecting the property of the minor unless under the express or implied direction of the court itself.[6]

867. Effect of Such Decree.—A decree obtained by fraud, and one brought about by the misconduct or negligence of the guardian, do not stand on the same footing; since fraud vitiates all transactions and so it does a decree which is void being a nullity. As Willes, J., said that "a judgment or decree obtained by fraud upon a court binds not such court, nor any other, and its nullity upon this ground, though it has not been set aside or reversed may be alleged in a collateral proceeding."[7] But all fraud does not render a decree nugatory. It is only so when the fraud is practised on the court and there is a total want of jurisdiction. Fraud in the proceedings giving rise to a mere irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction is insufficient.[8] So is the proof of misconduct or negligence on the part of the guardian.[9] The decree so obtained is only voidable but not void.

The effect of a suit on the rights of a minor, not properly represented, belongs to the domain of general law to which reference should be made for further information.

The decree passed against the minor is subject to the provisions of that order final and as binding upon him as if he were an adult.

Clauses (2) and (3).

868. No guardian ad litem can compromise a suit without the leave of the court,[10] expressly recorded in the proceedings.[11] "Any such agreement or compromise entered into without the leave of the court so recorded shall be voidable against all parties other than the minor."[12] These provisions are

(1) Ram Autar v. Mumtaz Ali, 24 C. 853 P.C.
(2) Or. XXXII, R. 4 (2), C.P.C.
(3) Ib., Or. XXXII, R. 3.
(4) Ib., Or. XXXII, R. 3.
(5) Ib., Or. XXXII, Rr. 3 (4) and 4 (2).
(6) Karamali v. Rahimbhoy, 13 B. 137; followed in Doraswami v. Thungasamy, 27 M. 377 (378).
(7) R. v. Saddlers' Co., 10 H.L.C. 404 (431); 11 E.R. 1983; see S. 44, Evidence Act; Hari Krishna v. Umesh Chandra, (1921) Pat. 209: 62 I.C. 962 F. B.; Krishna v. Ramamurti, 16 M. 198: Srirangammal v. Sandammal, 23 M. 216 (218, 219); Barkatunnissa v. Fazal Haq, 26 A. 272.
(8) Rajwant Prasad v. Ram Ratan, 37 A. 485 P.C.
(9) Krishna v. Bhagaban, 34 I.C. (C.) 188; Gottepati v. Gottepati, 27 M.L.J. 486: 26 I.C. 16.
(10) Or. XXXII, R. 6 (1).
(11) Or. XXXII, R. 7, as to which see Prag Das v. Girdhar Das, 28 A. 35; Lakhmana v. Chinnathambi, 24 M. 326; Atmaram v. Bhila, 15 Bom.L.R. 223; 19 I.C. 424.
(12) Or. XXXII, R. 7 (2).

embodied in clauses (2) and (3). The guardian cannot consent to a decree or relinquish the minor's rights thereby secured without considering his benefit. The minor is not bound by such decree or compromise.[1]

Clause (4).

869. Clause (4) is based on the general principle of law which protects minors and other disqualified persons against the fraud, misconduct or negligence of their guardians.[2] But this rule should not be extended to guardians who are also managers of a joint Mitakshara family in which the minor has no separate interest. In such a case, the fact that he is joined as a necessary party does not entitle him to open a decree obtained against the joint family, unless there was anything to show that the other members had colluded to defraud him.[3]

---

(1) Ganesha v. Tuljaram, 36 M. 295 P.C.; Venkata v. Tuljaram, 45 M. 298 (304) P.C.

(2) Ram Autar v. Mumtaz Ali, 24 C. 853 P.C.; Rameshwar v. Ram Bahadur, 34 C. 70 P.C.

(3) Rameshwar v. Ram Bahadur, 34 C. 70 P.C.; Daya Shankar v. Hublal, 37 A. 105; Madari v. Har Dayal, 13 O.C. 158; 7 I.C. 538; Amarpal Singh v. Chhabraj, 11 I.C. (O.) 105; Ajudhia v. Mahabir, 22 I.C. (O.) 923.

CHAPTER VII.

LAW OF MAINTENANCE.

870. Topical Introduction.—The law of maintenance is not based on any contract, but is evolved out of the right in property to which a person was prima facie entitled, but which he became disqualified from sharing, by reason of the nature of the estate, or his own disqualification, whether personal or sexual. Being thus excluded from participation in the estate, law afforded him the solatium of maintenance. The right of maintenance is, thus, not dependent on near relationship but on the existence, in the hands of the heir, of property upon which all dependent members of a joint family lay a claim.[1] Even where there is no joint family, the law of necessity enjoins on a certain person by reason of his jural relationship to another, the duty of maintaining him. Such is the duty of the husband and the father. It is the duty of the State to protect its infant population and that duty it casts upon those who are primarily responsible for bringing them into existence. This is the underlying principle of S. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Apart from that enactment, Hindu Law recognizes the necessity of maintenance founded upon the dictates of natural justice, sometimes supported by the theory of co-ownership,[2] personal identity,[3] moral duty,[4] or relationship, but in all cases it is ultimately traceable to the original fount of jus naturale, which the wisdom and experience of mankind has taught to be the best for the community, and the underlying principles of which are visible in the framework of the jurisprudence of every nation.

871. The close connection of maintenance with the law of person and property is everywhere visible in Hindu Law. In the second stage of social evolution, when the patriarchal family became transformed into a joint family, the growth of individual rights developed and altered the early notions of property. As it became divisible, it was seen that an equal division was not possible, both because the rights of all members were not equal, as also because some members were not equal, and also because some members by reason of their sex or deformity had not the same claim as others who contributed to the wealth and strength of the joint family. Subordinate rights became thus recognized, which, in some cases, naturally took the shape of maintenance grants, either as a substitute or as a solatium for the greater right to property. But being still a right which was intimately allied to the right of property, it became spoken of as a charge thereupon. But as legal concepts became more defined, it was perceived that a right might be closely connected with land and yet be separate from it. Such is the history of all debts, which at one time were regarded as charged both on the debtor and his land, till their relation to

(1) Ramabai v. Trimbok, 9 B. H. C.R. 283; Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 573; Apaji v. Gangabai, ib., p. 632; Gopikabai v. Dattatray, 24 B. 386 (392, 393).

(2) Jamna v. Machul Sahu, 2 A. 315 (317).

(3) Srenath v. Probodh Chunder, 11 C.L.J. 580: 6 I.C. 244.

(4) Sidessury v. Janardhan, 29 C. 557.

him and his land became more defined. Maintenance was also so regarded at one time. But it was then perceived that it did not possess even the certainty of a debt; for till its amount was ascertained and fixed, it was not even a debt. But even in the abstract, a claim for maintenance is no more a charge on property than the expenses of marriage, or other religious ceremonies. Debts due by a deceased person stand higher than other claims upon his estate, and yet debts are no charge upon specific property, unless expressly so made by a bond or a decree.[1] Nevertheless, being a right obtained in lieu of a right in property, it was an appropriate subject of a charge, and one which bears same relation to property. In the case of the wife, Yadnavalkya fixed one-third of the husband's estate as an appropriate solatium to a deserted wife by way of maintenance,[2] but as will be seen presently, such rigid necessity was fixed without regard being had to the demands of other claimants upon it. The law of maintenance is, consequently, almost wholly the law of leading principles, deducible from the decided cases, and these will now be set out.

93. A person is personally bound to maintain the following persons,[3] namely:—

Personal obligation to maintain certain relations.

(a) his wife so long as she remains under his roof and protection, or lives apart for a just cause;

(b) his minor sons, whether legitimate or illegitimate;

(c) his unmarried daughters;

(d) his aged father and mother.

872. Analogous Law.—The law of maintenance has been developed from the scanty texts, which enjoin on the father to support his sons, and on the first born to support his younger brothers,[4] while the husband is enjoined to maintain his wife, and the sons their aged parents.[5]

873. The wife's right to maintenance belongs to the law relating to husband and wife and has been already set out in that connexion (S. 27). Ordinarily, she is entitled to maintenance as she is liable to live with, and under the protection of, her husband and her right is not dependent upon any property or share possessed by him.[6] If she abandons him for a just cause, such as the leprosy of her husband,[7] his habitual cruelty or neglect[8] endangering her health or personal safety, then she

(a) The Wife.

(1) Beer Chunder v. Raj Coomar, 9 C. 535 (555).

(2) Ch. 1-76 (Mandlik), p. 171; Mayukh, XX (Mandlik), p. 153.

(3) Manu, IX-10, 8, Digest, Book V, Ch. VI, p. 400, cited and followed in Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 592 (597).

(4) Manu IX-10, 8, quoted in the Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), 1057, pp. 544, 545.

(5) Ib. see also Digest VIII-38; Narad XIII-25, 26; 33 S.B.E., pp. 195, 196 (quoted in Hindu Code, 3rd Ed., 1057, p. 545).

(6) Premkuvar v. Bhika, 5 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 209; Bangaramma v. Bramhaze, 31 M. 338; Unnamalai v. Official Assignee, 103 I.C. (M.) 869; Shinappaya v. Rajamma, 45 M. 812; Sher Singh v. Sham Kuar, 108 I.C. 175: 1928 L. 502.

(7) Sri Raja Bommade Vara v. Naganna, 87 I.C. 571: (1925) M. 757; reversed on facts Naganna v. Rajya, (1928) P.C. 187.

(8) Ude Singh v. Daulat Kuar, 16 L. 892.

would be entitled even to a separate maintenance.[1] But an occasional outburst of temper or assault does not justify her in deserting her husband. The fact that the husband had married another wife is no ground for leaving him;[2] still less will she be justified in leaving him in order to live in adultery.[3] On the other hand, if she lives with her husband, she is entitled to maintenance even though she be unchaste.[4] If a wife after leaving her husband without just cause is willing to return to live with him, but he declines to receive her, he must allow her a separate maintenance so long as she is willing, and he is not.[5]

874. The question whether her right is conditional and contingent upon her chastity admits of no doubt,[6] since the husband is entitled to condone her act and maintain her so long as she lives under his protection, or to turn her out, in which case she is not entitled to sue for maintenance from her husband, if at the time of the suit she is living in adultery and persists in that vicious course.[7] This was a case in which the wife, though she had not given birth to an illegitimate child was still actually living in adultery at the time of her suit. If, however, she had withdrawn from her vicious course when she sued, then she could not be deprived of maintenance on the ground of her unchastity[8] (§ 908).

875. The wife may live apart from her husband for a just cause already set out (§ 873). Is she is justified in living apart she is equally justified in receiving a separate maintenance from her husband. It was so held in a case where the wife refused to reside with her husband because he was suffering from virulent leprosy.[9]

876. Concubine.—See S. 95.

877. The right of a legitimate son to maintenance during his minority against his father is both provided in S. 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and is also supported by Hindu Law.[10] But upon attaining his majority, the son cannot enforce this right against his father's self-acquired property[11] though he can do so against his father's ancestral estate.[12] Where the son has the right of maintenance, it is not forfeited by reason of his disobedience or refusal to live with his father. It may be a good ground for reducing the amount to the minimum, but it is no ground for discontinuing it altogether.[13]

(b) Legitimate Sons.

(1) Kullyanessuree v. Dwarka Nath, 6 W.R. 116; Sita Nath v. Haimbutty, 24 W.R. 377; Matangini v. Jogendra, 10 C. 34; Sidlingapa v. Sidava, 2 B. 634; Shinappaya v. Rajamma, 45 M. 812.

(2) Virasami v. Appasami, 1 M.H.C.R. 375.

(3) Illata v. Illata, 1 M.H.C.R. 372.

(4) Parami v. Mahadevi, 34 B. 278.

(5) Subhadramma v. Narasimhaswami, 57 M. 1003; Yeshodabai v. Lal Talobashet, (1886) B.P.J. 231; Sita Devi v. Gopi Saran, (1928) Pat. 375.

(6) The texts speak of the "virtuous wife" as entitled to maintenance—Yad. II-140, 142; Mitak. II-10; Dayabhag V-10, 11; Mayukh, II-1-9; Vishnu, XV-32, 34; Dayakram Sangrah, III-7-17; Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 (785) P.C.; Chirukala v. Chirukala, 23 M.L.J. 289; but see Sathyabhama v. Kesaracharya, 39 M. 658 (660) (she is entitled to have maintenance).

(7) Devi v. Daulata, 39 A. 234, following Subhayya v. Bhavani, 24 I.C. (M.) 390.

(8) Kandasami v. Murugammal, 19 M. 6; Subhayya v. Bhavani, 24 I.C. (M.) 390; Parami v. Mahadevi, 34 B. 278; Sita Devi v. Gopal Saran, (1928) Pat. 376.

(9) Shinappaya v. Rajamma, 45 M. 812.

(10) Manu, IX-108; Chanvirgouda v. The District Magistrate, 51 B. 120 (case of a lunatic son).

(11) Amma Kannu v. Appu, 11 M. 91.

(12) Sardul Singh v. Partab Singh, (1877) P.R. 46; Futteh Singh v. Shera Singh, (1868) P.R. 84; contra Budawa v. Gurdit Singh, (1870) P.R. 65.

(13) Sardul Singh v. Partab Singh, (1877) P.R. 46.

Illegitimate Sons.

878. Similarly, the right of an illegitimate son to maintenance against his natural father is now equally recognized by S. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as it is supported by Hindu Law,[1] and is settled by the Privy Council.[2] This right exists whether the father belongs to a regenerate caste, or is a Shudra, though in the latter case, the son is even entitled to inheritance.[3] The right to maintenance is not altered because the illegitimate son is by an adulterous intercourse,[4] or was begotten on a female slave or on a concubine.[5] Under the Mitakshara law, his right is lifelong in recognition of his status as a member of his father's family, and by reason of his exclusion from inheritance among the regenerate classes.[6] But it is conditional upon his obedience to the head of the family—"If he be docile," says Vidnyaneshwar;[7] "provided he be not disobedient," says Mitra Misra. Quoting these texts, the Allahabad High Court said: "Obedience to the head of the family, not the age of the illegitimate descendant, or his capacity to earn his own livelihood, is the test by which under Hindu Law, the continuance of the right to receive maintenance must be decided. Till the illegitimate sons reach full age, this test cannot be applied; but thereafter it cannot be ignored; what constitutes docility or disobedience in the sense of the texts, is a question the answer to which is not easy. We think that on attaining full age, the respondents must, as a condition of receiving maintenance from the estate of Manji Lal (the father), render to the head of the family such reasonable service as is ordinarily rendered by cadets of a family in that station of life to which the parties belong."[8] This is a personal right and cannot be devised or inherited.[9]

Illegitimate Son by a Non-Hindu Woman.

879. The Criminal Procedure Code makes no distinction between the illegitimate son of a Hindu mother, and one born of a non-Hindu mother, but a claim made under that Code must conform to its provisions, and is limited as to the amount therein specified. But apart from the Code, the illegitimate son of a Hindu father and a non-Hindu mother has no right to maintenance. Such has been the view of the court in a case where the son was born of a Mahomedan[10] or a Christian concubine.[11]

Adopted Son.

880. Though an adopted son has the same right of maintenance as a legitimate son, no such right can be claimed if the adoption is found to be invalid. As pointed out by Sir Michael Westropp, C. J.: "An invalid adoption

(1) Sukharam v. Ram, 1 B.H.C.R. 191; Muthusamy v. Venkatasubha, 2 M.H.C.R. 293.

(2) Choturya v. Saheb Purhulad Syn, 7 M.I.A. 18; Parichat v. Zalim Singh, 3 C. 214; Roshan Singh v. Balwant Singh, 21 A. 191 P.C.; Raoji v. Kunji Lal, 54 B. 455 P.C.; Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan, 50 M. 340; Natarajan v. Muthia Chetty, 22 M.L.W. 650.

(3) Pandaya v. Pali, 1 M.H.C.R. 478 affirmed O.A. Inderan v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I.A. 141; Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan, 50 M. 1 P.C.

(4) Subramanya v. Velu, 20 M.L.J. 350: 5 I.C. 919; Kuppa v. Singaravelu, 8 M. 325; Viraramamurthi v. Singaravelu, 1 M. 306.

(5) Rahi v. Govind, 1 B. 97; Sarusuti v. Manu, 2 A. 134 (136); Hargobind v. Dharumsingh, 6 A. 329 (332, 333) where the texts are cited.

(6) Ananthaya v. Vishnu, 17 M. 160; Motichand v. Chandra Bai, 26 Bom. L. R. 488: (1924) B. 421.

(7) Mitakshara, Ch. I-11, 12.

(8) Hargobind v. Dharamsingh, 6 A. 329 (335) P.C.

(9) Balwant Singh v. Roshan Singh, 18 A. 253, O.A. Roshansingh v. Balwant Singh, 22 A. 191 (197) P.C.

(10) Addoyto v. Woojan, 4 C.L.R. 154; Haidri v. Narindra, 1 Luck. 184: (1926) L. 294.

(11) Lingappa v. Esudason, 27 M. 10 (15).

works nothing. It leaves the alleged adoptee precisely in the same position which he occupied before the ceremony, no matter how formally it may have been celebrated."[1]

Chela.

881. The chela who possesses the status of a son has, on the analogy of a son, the right of maintenance against his guru, provided that the latter is not an ascetic, and follows the life of a householder, though it is said, he must show that he has been deprived of procuring his ordinary means of livelihood.[2] But this is by no means necessary in every case, since the question must depend upon the nature of the guru's estate and his status and the nature of his relationship to his chela and the custom or usage, if any, determining their rights.

(c) Unmarried Daughter.

882. The unmarried daughter has a legal claim to be maintained by her father and out of his estate,[3] but except in the case of a Shudra,[4] an illegitimate daughter, though possessing a legal claim against the father, has no such claim to maintenance out of his estate.[5]

(d) Aged Parents.

883. The liability to maintain one's parents is clear both from the text[6] as also the decided cases,[7] and is independent of inherited assets.

Married Daughter.

884. The obligation to maintain the daughter rests upon the parental duty to maintain his own offspring. And in the case of an unmarried daughter, this obligation descends to the heir who is equally bound to maintain her.[8] But as soon as the daughter is married, the obligation to maintain her is transferred to the husband. And on his death, she is entitled to be maintained out of his estate. Even if she be in indigent circumstances, she has no right to be maintained out of her deceased father's estate unless she can show that she continued after her marriage to be dependent member of her father's family with those whom he was legally or morally bound to maintain. She is, however, in no case entitled to separate maintenance out of the estate of her father in the hands of his heirs.[9] But of course, illegitimate daughters have no such right of maintenance.[10]

Sister.

885. An unmarried and widowed destitute sister must be maintained by the heir, out of the assets of the joint family. Even where the sister is a discarded

---

(1) Laksamappa v. Ramava, 12 B.H. C.R. 364 (397); Dalpat Singhji v. Raisinghi, 17 Bom. L.R. 566.

(2) Narain Dass v. Mahtab, 7 W.R. 137.

(3) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I.A. 141 (159); Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B.H. C.R. 283; Mangal v. Rukhmini, 23 B. 291; Jamna v. Machul, 2 A. 315; Tulsha v. Gopal Rai, 6 A. 263; Mansha v. Jiwan Mal, ib., p. 617 (621).

(4) Natarajan v. Muthia, 22 M.L.W. 650.

(5) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 13 M.I.A. 141 (159); Vellaiyappa v. Natarajan, 50 M. 340; Rahi v. Govind, 1 B. 97 (102); Parvathi v. Ganpat Rao, 18 B. 177 (183); Saraswati v. Kashi Ram, 4 C.P.L.R. 43; Bhayalal v. Churaman, 9 C.P.L.R. 38 but contra in Salu v. Hari, (1877) B.P.J. 34 (case of Shudra).

(6) Manu, VIII-389; see other texts cited in Savitri Bai v. Laxmi Bai, 2 B. 592 (597).

(7) Prankoonwar v. Deokoonwar, 1 Borr. (2nd Ed.) 404; Dai v. Purshotum; Ib., p. 453; Savitri Bai v. Laxmi Bai, 2 B. 573; Koobai v. Ramabai, ib., p. 592; Subharaya v. Subhakka, 8 M. 236; Veeranna v. Subamma, (1926) M.W.N. 921.

(8) Mangal v. Rukhmini, 23 B. 291.

(9) Mokhoda v. Nand Lall, 27 C. 555 O.A. 28 C. 278 (288); Siddessury v. Janardan, 29 C. 557.

(10) Parvati v. Ganpat Rao, 18 B. 177 (183); Bhayalal v. Sunderia, 9 C.P.L.R. 38.

wife, old and infirm, she has the same claim for maintenance as a widowed sister.[1]

Son's Widow and Grandchildren.

886. Though the father is personally bound to maintain his children, he is not bound to maintain his son's widow or his grandchildren,[2] though if maintained, their maintenance is held to be a legitimate ground of necessity,[3] and it has been held that on the death of the father-in-law, his estate might be justly charged to defray the marriage expenses of his grand-daughter.[4]

Step-son and the Step-mother.

887. Similarly, a Hindu is under no personal obligation to maintain his step-son or the step-mother.[5] The obligation to maintain the step-mother depends upon the condition that the son has inherited available assets from his father.[6]

Son-in-law.

888. The son-in-law has, of course, no claim to maintenance by his father-in-law, though in a case his claim based on an implied contract was upheld on the ground that he had lived in his father-in-law's as his Gharjamai (resident son-in-law).[7]

Brother.

889. There is again no such obligation to maintain a brother, even though a minor, though, of course, in a joint family the elder brother as manager is charged with the maintenance of all coparceners and other relations as stated in the sequel.

Husband's conversion immaterial.

94. A wife, who is entitled to maintenance, does not forfeit her right by her husband's conversion to another faith.[8]

890. Analogous Law.—The right to maintenance arises out of the jural relationship between the husband and the wife created by marriage, which is not dissolved by reason of conversion to another faith, though the converted husband may dissolve his marriage under the provisions of the Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act,[9] but till such dissolution, he remains bound by the tie of marriage, and its attendant obligations, one of which is the maintenance of his spouse.[10]

Mistress's right to maintenance.

95. No mistress of a Hindu has any right of maintenance unless she was his continuous and faithful mistress until his death, in which case she becomes entitled to maintenance out of the estate in the hands of his heirs, so long as she remains chaste.

---

(1) Ruttun Singh v. Chundan, (1866) P.R. 80.

(2) Savitri Bai v. Laxmi Bai, 2 B. 574 F.B.; overruling contra in Udaram v. Sonkabai, 10 B.H.C.R. 483; Kalu v. Kashi Bai, 7 B. 127; Khettar Moni v. Kashinath, 2 B.L.R. (A.C.) 15 F.B.; Manmohini Dasi v. Balak Chandra, 8 B. L.R. 22; Nilmoney v. Hingu Lall, 5 C. 256.

(3) Chumun Lal v. Gunput Lall, 16 W.R. 52.

(4) Ramcoomar v. Inchmonyi, 6 C. 36 (39).

(5) Daya v. Natha, 9 B. 279 (284); Hamangini v. Kedar Nath, 16 C. 758 (765) P.C.

(6) Daya v. Nath, 9 B. 279; Sukh Dial v. Ram Ditti, (1874) P.R. No. 31; Thakur Prasad v. Bhagabati, 1 C.L.J. 142.

(7) Govind v. Radha Ballabh, 15 C.W. N. 205; 7 I.C. 118.

(8) 4 M.H.C.R. (App.) 8.

(9) XXI of 1866.

(10) 4 M.H.C.R. (App.) 8.

891. Analogous Law.—The following texts support this right:—

Mitakshara.—"Heirless property or wealth which is without an heir to succeed to, goes to the king or becomes the property of the sovereign, deducting however a subsistence for the females as well as the funeral charges, that is, excluding or setting apart a sufficiency for the food and raiment of the women."[1]

Mayukh.—"Except in the case of Brahmins, a king (when succeeding to the estate of an heirless person) who is attentive to his duty should give something as maintenance to the women (Stri) of the deceased. This is the law of inheritance declared; both these have reference to concubines, because the term used is not Patni (married wife).[2]

This relates to women kept in concubinage, for the term employed is "females" (Yoshid). The text of Narad likewise relates to concubines, since the word there used is "women" (Stri).

892. The wife has a legal status and has consequently legal rights and obligations. The concubine is reprobated by law, and she has, therefore, no right of any kind against her paramour, as she can stay with him or leave him at her pleasure.[3] But concubines were common in Vedic India, and their right to maintenance is recognized out of the paramour's estate, whether ancestral or self-acquired on his death, if she was faithful to him till then.[4] All concubines, even though permanent are not, however, entitled to claim maintenance as of right, since such right only belongs to those of the Hindu faith. A Mahomedan or a Christian concubine has no such right.[5]

893. Concubine's Right of Maintenance.—The rules governing the maintenance of concubines may be thus stated: (i) No concubine has any right to maintenance against her paramour during his lifetime;[6] (ii) an occasional concubine[7] or even a continuous one has no right if she was discarded by her paramour before his death;[8] and (iii) her maintenance is contingent upon her continuous chastity,[9] though she need not live in the house of her paramour;[10] nor (iv) need her relationship be known to his family.[11] So a widow who has remarried in the lifetime of her first husband without his consent, is not the legal wife of the second husband, and upon his death she would be entitled only to maintenance as a concubine,[12] and not even that if she was only his mistress.[13] Such was also held to be the case where a Brahmin woman had married a Shudra, which being a marriage not recognized by law or usage, her status was held to be no better than that of a concubine entitling her to maintenance only as such, dependent upon her

(1) Mit., Ch. II., Sect. I, §§ 27, 28. In the original अवरुध् (Avrudh), which etymologically means women "obstructed, detained or confined,"—hence a permanent concubine—Nagubai v. Monghibai, 50 B. 604 (614, 615) P.C.; Haidri v. Nariandra, 1 Luck. 184: (1926) L. 294.

(2) Mayukh (Mandlik), p. 78.

(3) Nigareddi v. Lakshmana, 26 B. 163.

(4) Nigareddi v. Lakshmana, 26 B. 163; Yeshwantrao v. Kashi Bai, 12 B. 26; Panchapekasa v. Kanaka, 23 M.L.J. 455: 42 I.C. 344.

(5) Haidri v. Nariandra, 1 Luck. 184: (1926) L. 294.

(6) Sikhi v. Venkatasamy, 8 M.H.C. R. 144; Ramanarasu v. Buchamma, 23 M. 282; Ningareddi v. Lakshmana, 26 B. 163 (167, 168); Chandra Kunwar v. Rukmin, 9 O.L.J. 60; Rab Prasad v. Chhote Munwar, (1937) O. 29.

(7) Ramanarasu v. Buchamma, 23 M. 282.

(8) Ibid.

(9) Yashvantrao v. Kashi Bai, 12 B. 26.

(10) Nagubai v. Monghibai, 50 B. 604 P.C.

(11) Dayawati v. Kesaribai, (1934) B. 218.

(12) Khemkor v. Umishankar, 10 B.H. C.R. 381; Salu v. Hari, (1877) B.P.J. 34.

(13) Anandilal v. Chandree Bai, 48 B. 203.

continuous connection with her husband.[1] The fact that the concubine has a son by her paramour does not improve her claim to maintenance for herself.[2] On the other hand, her claim cannot be resisted on the ground that she did not live in the house of the deceased, but had kept a house of her own, or that she had previously been in the keeping of another man, or that her connection with the deceased was adulterous.[3]

Manager's duty to maintain.

96. (1) The manager of a joint Mitakshara family is bound to maintain all male members of the family, their wives and their children,[4] and on the death of any of the male members, he is bound to maintain his widow and his children.[5]

(2) The obligation is commensurate only with the possession of family property.

(3) The same principles apply to cases governed by the Dayabhag Law.[6]

(4) The holder of an impartible estate is bound to maintain all those who are customarily entitled to maintenance.[7]

894. Analogous Law.—The unit of Hindu society is the joint family comprising a patriarch, his wives, his unmarried daughters, and his sons with their wives and descendants. This social group had in ancient times a common dwelling, and they lived, ate, worshipped their gods, and enjoyed their estate in common.[8] The rights of the subordinate members have now become recognized, but there still remain those whose rights have either not been reduced to possession or have no present rights at all (§§ 892, 887). The obligation to maintain all such relations lies on the manager of a Mitakshara family or on the father of a Dayabhag household. But this obligation is not personal, but confined to him as the manager of the joint estate, or in the case of a Dayabhag family, to the head of a family in which all the other members have a contingent interest. These and their wives are entitled to maintenance, since it is a principle of Hindu Law that an heir succeeding to any property takes it for the spiritual benefit of the late proprietor, and is under a legal obligation to maintain persons whom the late proprietor was morally bound to support. It is immaterial whether the property so inherited is movable or immovable. In each case, it must be determined whether, having regard to the relationship, the means and other circumstances of the party claiming maintenance, the late proprietor was morally bound, according to Hindu Law and customs and practice of the people, to maintain that party.[9] As such, the rule applies equally to cases whether subject to the Mitakshara or the Dayabhag school of law. The question in

(1) Kashi v. Jamna Das, 14 Bom. L. R. 547, contra Ramachandra v. Hanamnaik, 60 B. 75; Shudra cannot keep a Brahmin mistress, but dasi may be of any caste though a son by her may not be eligible for inheritance.

(2) Sikhi v. Venkatasamy, 8 M.H.C.R. 144.

(3) Nagubai v. Monghibai, 50 B. 604 P.C.; overruling O.A. Monghibai v. Nagubai, 47 B. 401.

(4) Manu, Ch. 9, Sect. 108; Narada, Ch. 13, Ss. 26, 27, 28, 33; Vaikuntam v. Kallabiran, 23 M. 512 (516).

(5) Bhagwan Singh v. (Mt.) Kewal Kuwar, 8 L. 360.

(6) Kamini Dasi v. Chandra, 17 C. 373.

(7) Raja Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 P.C., affirming O.A. Raja Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 38 M. 396.

(8) Antiquities of India, p. 109.

(9) Kashee Nath v. Khettur Monee, 9 W.R. 413 O.A. Khettur Mani v. Kashi Nath, 10 W.R. 89 F.B.; Kamini Dasi v. Chandra, 17 C. 373 (376, 377); Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194.

each case being: Has the relation any moral claim to maintenance, the moral claim being as regards maintenance, treated as a legal claim which the courts would enforce?[1] As such, the relations mentioned in S. 87 have undoubtedly such claim. But there are others whose claim to maintenance is recognized, though it is dependent upon the existence of ancestral property.

Widow.

895. The widow of a coparcener is entitled to be maintained out of her husband's estate in the hands of his surviving coparceners or heirs, even though she may have been deserted by the husband.[2] But she has no such right if her husband left no assets,[3] or if she is leading an unchaste life;[4] otherwise, she is not bound to reside with her husband's relatives.[5] A Hindu widow must, in the first instance, look for her maintenance to her husband's family[6] failing which she may claim it from his father or out of his inherited estate. But the widow has no legal claim to maintenance out of the self-acquired property of her father-in-law.[7] But as soon as that property descends to his heirs, e.g., his sons, the latter become legally bound to maintain the widow to the same extent as if they had inherited ancestral property. This result is supported on the ground that since the father-in-law was morally bound to support his daughter-in-law, and the discharge of this moral obligation by the son is conducive to his father's spiritual benefit, the moral obligation of the father ripens into a legal obligation as against the son who inherits his father's estate.[8] And the same obligation would continue even if the estate descends on the father-in-law's widow, since she is equally bound by the same rule.[9] But there may be cases in which even the father-in-law may be held bound to maintain her out of his self-acquired property. As Norman, J., observed: "If she resides in the house of her father-in-law and is an infant, and for that or other reasons, is unable to maintain herself, there may be and probably is, both according to Hindu Law, and equity and good consience, a legal obligation on the part of the father-in-law, who has taken upon himself the care of her person and the charge of entertaining her as a member of his family, and on whose protection she is dependent, to provide her with food and the actual necessaries of life."[10]

---

(1) Kamini Dasi v. Chandra, 17 C. 373 (377, 378).

(2) Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B.H.C.R. 283; Savitri Bai v. Laxmi Bai, 2 B. 573 F.B.; Gangabai v. Sitaram, 1 A. 170 F.B.; Amrita Lal v. Manick Lall, 27 C. 551; Narasimham v. Venkatasubamma, 55 M. 752.

(3) S. 92; Srinivasa v. Lakshmi, 54 M.L.J. 530: (1928) M. 216; Ganseh v. Yemunabai, (1878) B.P.J. 130; Sakharam v. Janki Bai, (1878) B.P.J. 139.

(4) Srinivasa v. Lakshmi, 54 M.L.J. 530: (1928) M. 216.

(5) Ekradeshwari v. Homeshwar, 8 Pat. 840 P.C.; Harku Singh v. Nanda Kuar, (1885) 5 A.W.N. 164; Daulta Kauri v. Meghu, 15 A. 382; Vishnu v. Manjamma, 9 B. 108; Nagamma v. Virabadra, 17 M. 392; Rama Nath v. Rajommoni, 17 C. 674.

(6) Makhada v. Nundolal, 28 C. 278.

(7) Rajmoney v. Shibchander, 2 Hyde. 103; Khettramani v. Kashinath, 10 W.R. 89 F.B.; Savitri Bai v. Laxmi Bai, 2 B. 573 F.B.; Gangabai v. Sitaram, 7 B. 127; Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 (205, 206) F.B.

(8) Rajani Kant v. Sajani Sundari, 58 C. 745, O.A. 61 C. 221 (224, 225) P.C., (Dayabagh Case); Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 (208) F.B.; Kamini Dasi v. Chandra, 17 C. 373; Devi Pershad v. Gunwanti, 22 B. 410; Rangammal v. Sechammal, 22 M. 303.

(9) Rajani Kant v. Sajani Sundari, 58 C. 745, O.A.: 61 C. 221 (224, 225) P.C.; Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 F.B.; Yamunabai v. Manubai, 23 B. 608.

(10) Khettur Mani v. Kashi Nath, 10 W.R. 89 (95) F.B.; Meenakshi v. Rama, 37 M. 396 (402).

Daughter-in-law.

896. The right of the widow of a predeceased son to maintenance out of the ancestral property, devolving on her father-in-law, is unquestioned; but he is also, though only morally, bound to maintain such daughter-in-law out of his self-acquired property,[1] such moral obligation ripening into a legal obligation in the hands of his heir,[2] even though he takes it by gift or devise,[3] though in such case, the Bombay High Court would exonerate the heir on the ground that the liability is textual, and descends only to the heir qua heir, and not to him when he takes in any other character.[4]

Grandmother.

897. The grandmother is entitled to maintenance. As Sir William Macnaughten says: "She has a right to participate in all the comforts which are enjoined by the family in its undivided estate, and a legal as well as natural claim to that protection which may be derived from a union of her descendants. If, therefore, she is deprived of such advantages, it is but just she should be enabled to take care of herself, and not be obliged to go from door to door for her support."[5]

Holder of an Impartible Estate.

898. The manager of a joint family property being liable to maintain all its members, it follows that the same obligation cannot rest on one who, by reason of the impartibility of the estate, becomes entitled to exclude the other members.[6] In other words, since there can be no coparcenership in impartible estate, no member of the holder's family has, apart from custom, any right to maintenance. As such, the sons undoubtedly possess such right, and custom in their case is so well-known that it need not be proved. But the same customary right cannot be presumed in the case of a grandson, and there is no invariable or certain custom that any below the first generation from the last holder can claim maintenance as of right. Apart however, from custom, no one has any claim to maintenance by reason of his relationship to the owner. As the Privy Council said:—"An impartible zemindari is the creature of custom, and it is of its essence that no coparcenary exists. This being so, the basis of the claim is gone, inasmuch as it is founded on the consideration that the plaintiff is a person who, if the zemindari were not impartible, would be entitled as of right to maintenance. There is no claim based on personal relationship."[7]

Sister-in-law.

899. It was at one time laid down that a person was legally bound to maintain his brother's destitute widow independently of all questions regarding union or separation or the existence of ancestral or self-acquired property,[8] but it is now settled that these cases go too far and that the

(1) Khetur Mani v. Kashi Nath, 10 W.R. 89 (95) F.B.; Meenakshi v. Rama, 37 M. 396 (402).

(2) Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 (208) F.B.; Kamini v. Chandra, 17 C. 373; Devi Persad v. Gunwanti, 22 B. 410; Rangammal v. Sechammal, 22 M. 303; Jai Nand v. Mt. Paran, 4 Luck. 491 F.B.

(3) Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 F.B.; Gopal Chandra v. Kadambini, (1924) C. 364; Laxmi Bai v. Sambha, 27 N.L.R. 347; Babo v. Bolo, (1933) Pesh. 61.

(4) Parvati v. Tarwadi, 25 B. 263; Bhagirathi v. Dwarka, (1933) B. 135.

(5) H. L. Partition cited in Puddum Mookhee v. Rayee Monee, 12 W.R. 409; Rayee Monee v. Puddum Mookhee, 13 W.R. 66.

(6) Nilmoney v. Hingoolal, 5 C. 256, Vencatachala Reddiar v. Vencatachella, 7 M.L.T. 31: 4 I.C. 302.

(7) Rama Rao v. Raja of Pithapur, 39 M. 396 affirmed O.A. 41 M. 78. P.C. following Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 24 M. 147 (155) P.C.; Nilmony v. Hingoo Lal, 5 C. 256 (259) P.C.

(8) Laxmi v. Lakshmidas, 1 B.H.C. R. 13; Chandrabhagabai v. Khashi Nath, liability of a person to maintain his brother's widow is dependent upon the existence of assets inherited by him from his father or her husband.[1]

Maintenance of disqualified heir.

97. Where a son or other heir is excluded from inheritance by reason of disability, he is entitled to maintain himself and his family out of the property which he would have inherited, but for his disability.[2]

900. Analogous Law.—The right of the disqualified heir and his family for maintenance, is not only expressly provided by the following text, but is one which the courts would have enforced as a matter of justice, even if there had been no text in favour of it:—

Manu.—201. "Eunuchs and outcasts, persons born blind or deaf, madmen, idiots, the dumb and such as have lost the use of a limb are excluded from share of the heritage."

202. "But it is just, that the heir who knows his duty should give all of them food and raiment for life without stint according to the best of his power; he who gives them nothing sinks assuredly to a region of punishment."[3]

901. Maintenance of a Disqualified Heir.—The text only provides for the maintenance of the excluded heir. But his family, which has the right of maintenance against him, has equally the same right against his estate from the enjoyment of which he is excluded by reason of his personal disqualifications. It cannot affect their primary right of maintenance.[4] As the Privy Council observed:—"The right of maintenance, so far as is founded on or is inseparable from the right of coparcenary, begins where coparcenary begins and ceases where coparcenary ceases."[5] Consequently, a member of a joint family, who could not sue for partition without the consent of certain other members of that family, was upon his being driven out of the family held entitled to maintenance out of the family property.[6]

Widow's right to maintenance.

98. (1) The widow who does not succeed to the estate of her husband as his heir is entitled to maintenance out of her husband's separate property,[7] or out of the property in which he was a coparcener at the time of his death.[8]

(2) Save and except as above, she has no absolute right of maintenance.

---

2 B.H.C.R. 323; Timmappa v. Parameshriamma, 5 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 140; Chandrabhagabai v. Parameshriamma, 5 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 130; Udaram v. Sonkabai, 10 B.H.C.R. 483.

(1) Prankoonwar v. Deokoonwar, 1 Borr. 404 (2nd Ed.); Dai v. Purshotum, Ib., p. 453; Sheo Bai v. Gowreenund, 2 Borr. 323 (2nd Ed.); Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B.H.C.R. 283; Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 573 (623) F.B.; Rango v. Yamunabai, 3 B. 44; Yamunabai v. Manubai, 23 B. 608 (612, 613).

(2) Manu, IX-201, 202; Mit., Ch. II, S. 10-1, 3, 6. See Comm.

(3) Manu, IX-201, 202; Mitak., Ch. II, S. 10-1, 3, 6.

(4) Mitak., Ch. II, S. 10, 12-15; Mayukh, Ch. IV, Sec. 11-12; 3 Dig. 483; Dai v. Purshotum, 1 Borr. 453 (2nd Ed.); Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 573 (591) F.B.; Ram Soonder v. Ram Sahye, 8 C. 919; Rama Rao v. Raja of Pithapur, 41 M. 778 P.C., affirming O.A. 39 M. 396.

(5) Rama Rao v. Raja of Pithapur, 41 M. 778 (784) P.C.

(6) Bhupal v. Tavanappa, 46 B. 435.

(7) Bhagabai v. Kannailal, 8 B.L.R. 225; Brinda v. Radhica, 11 C. 492; Narmadabai v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99 (106).

(8) Golab Koonwar v. Collector, 4 M.I.A. 246 (258).

(3) Her right of maintenance is not forfeited by reason of her having lived apart from her husband in his lifetime without any justifying cause.[1]

(4) The widow does not forfeit her right of maintenance by reason of her living apart from her husband's relations unless she does so for immoral or improper purposes.[2]

(5) Continued chastity is a condition precedent to the widow's right to maintenance. But she is allowed a locus penitentiae so that if she reforms and leads a continent life, she becomes entitled to at least a starving maintenance.[3]

(6) Maintenance is not a charge upon the estate, but may be so made by contract or a court's decree.[4]

902. Analogous Law.—The general rule stated in clause (1) has long since been settled,[5] it being held that the widow is entitled to maintenance out of the whole of the estate in which her husband was interested as owner,[6] or coparcener,[7] though he may have been personally disqualified from inheritance,[8] whether she possesses property of her own or not, since it is an absolute right due to her membership of the family, and does not depend upon her necessity arising from her want of other means to herself, nor lose by her failure to demand it for a long time, though it may be taken into consideration in awarding arrears.[9] At a partition made by the husband during his lifetime between his sons, his wife was at one time entitled to an equal share with his sons. In course of time this right became lost, but in lieu thereof her absolute claim to maintenance has become established.[10] (§§ 894, 895, 912, 929).

Clause (1).

903. Though the widow has no absolute right of maintenance except as provided in clause (1), the court is entitled to award her maintenance if equity and justice so demand it.[11] (S. 102).

Clause (2).

(1) Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B.H.C.R. 283; Savitribai v. Laxmibai, 2 B. 573 (588) F.B.

(2) Pirthi Singh v. Raj Kuar, 20 W.R. 21 P.C.; Ekradeshwari v. Homeshwar, 8 Pat. 840 (850) P.C.

(3) Parami v. Mahadevi, 34 B. 273 (283); Satyabhama v. Kesavacharya, 39 M. 658; Ram Nath v. Rajanimoni, 17 C. 674 (679).

(4) See S. 107.

(5) Shib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad, 4 N.W.P.H.C.R. 63 (71); Bhagabati v. Kannailal, 8 B.L.R. 225; Brinda v. Radhica, 11 C. 492 (494); Narbadabai v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99 (106); Subharayulu v. Kamalavallithayaramma, 35 M. 147.

(6) Bhagabati v. Kannailal, 8 B.L.R. 225; Brinda v. Radhica, 11 C. 492 (494); Narbadabai v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99 (106).

(7) Golab Koonwar v. Collector, 4 M.I.A. 246 (258); Sheo Dyal v. Judoonath, 9 W.R. 61 (67); Hema v. Ajoodhya, 24 W.R. 474; Devi Prasad v. Gunwanti, 22 C. 410; Meherban v. Sheo Kunwar, 1 Agra 106; Shib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad, 4 N.W.P.H.C.R. 63; Lalti Kuar v. Ganga Bishem, 7 N.W.P.H.C.R. 261; Becha v. Mothina, 23 A. 86; Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B.H.C.R. 283; Amrit v. Manik, 12 B.H.C.R. 79; Savitribai v. Luxmibai, 2 B. 573 (582); Adhibai v. Cursandas, 11 B. 199; Manjappa v. Lakshmi, 15 B. 234; Jankibai v. Shrinivas, 38 B. 120; Visalatchi v. Annasamy, 5 M.H.C.R. 150; Subramania v. Kaliani, 7 M.H.C.R. 226; Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45; Rattamma v. Seshachalam, 52 M. L.J. 520: 101 I.C. 806: (1927) M. 502.

(8) Mit., Ch. II, S. X-5; Dayabhag, Ch. V-II, 14, 16; Smriti Chand, Ch. V-10-14, 20.

(9) Ramarayudu v. Sitalakshmamma, (1937) M. 915 (916).

(10) Lingayya v. Kanakamma, 38 M. 153; dissenting from contra in Ramavati v. Manjhari, 4 C.L.J. 74; Radhabai v. Ragho, (1878) B.P.J. 292.

(11) Khetter Monee v. Kasheenath, 10 W.R. 89 (95) F.B.; Meenakshi v. Rama, 37 M. 396 (402).

Clause (3).

904. It has already been stated that since the widow's right of maintenance arising out of the jural relations of the family is in lieu of her share, the mere fact that she had lived apart from her husband is no ground for disqualifying her for maintenance.[1]

Clause (4).

905. Still less is she disentitled merely because she chooses to live apart from her husband's relation, unless, she does so for immoral or improper purposes.[2] But in strict contemplation of law it is in the husband's family that the widow ought to reside.[3] And where the family property is insufficient for separate maintenance, the court may insist upon her maintenance in the family. So if she is a minor, her husband's relations are her natural guardians and she should live with them. So again, if the husband had expressly directed her to be maintained in the family, she cannot claim separate maintenance without a just cause.[4] Such cause might be furnished by the cruelty and ill-treatment to which she was subjected in her husband's home or her own desire to end her days in a sacred place, or any other cause which the court regards as valid and sufficient.

Clause (5).

906. This clause is based on the undernoted decisions,[5] though there are also cases to the contrary.[6]

This condition cannot be read into an agreement assigning certain income for her maintenance.[7]

Clause (6).

907. The following text also bears on the subject of maintenance conditional upon continence :—

Narad.—"Among brothers, if any one die without issue, or enter a religious order, the rest of the brethren divide his wealth, except the wife's separate property. Let them allow a maintenance to his women for life, provided these preserve unsullied the bed of their lord. But if they behave otherwise, the brethren may resume their allowance."[8]

---

(1) Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B.H.C.R. 283; Savitribai v. Laximibai, 2 B. 573 (588) F.B.; Sri Raja Bommadevara v. Naganna, 87 I.C. 571: (1935) M. 737.

(2) Pirthee Singh v. Raj Kower, 20 W.R. 21 P.C.; Ekradeshwari v. Homeshwar, 8 Pat. 840 (850) P.C.; Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 (421) P.C.; Kasturbai v. Shivajiram, 3 B. 372 dissenting from Rango v. Yamunabai, 3 B. 44; Gopibai v. Lakshmidas, 14 B. 490; Chandrabhagabai v. Kashinath, 2 B.H.C.R. 341; Parvati Bai v. Chatru, 13 Bom. L.R. 1022; Bai Appibi v. Khimji, (1936) B. 138; Mokhada v. Nundolall, 28 C. 278 (287); Siddessury v. Janardan, 29 C. 557; Ahollya v. Muckee Lonee, 6 W.R. 37; Visalatchi v. Annasamy, 5 M.H.C.R. 150; Surampalli v. Surampalli, 31 M. 338; Srinivasa v. Lakshmi, 54 M.L.J. 530: (1928) M. 216; Umrit Kowaree v. Kider Nath, 3 Agra 182; Sham Devi v. Mohan Lal, 15 L. 591.

(3) Raghunada v. Brozo Kishore, 1 M. 69 (81) P.C.

(4) Vyavastha Chandrika, 261, followed in Mulji v. Ujam, 13 B. 218 (220); Girianna v. Honamma, 15 B. 236.

(5) Parami v. Mahadevi, 34 B. 273 (283); Honamma v. Timanabhat, 1 B. 559; Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya, 39 M. 658; Romanath v. Rajonimoni, 17 C. 674 (679); Ram Kuwar v. Bhagwanta, 56 A. 392 (Rs. 15 given out of an estate paying Rs. 3,500 as land revenue.)

(6) Valu v. Ganga, 7 B. 84; in Visalatchi v. Annasamy, 5 M. H. C. R. 150, the question was considered as unsettled.

(7) Lakshmi Chand v. Mt. Anandi, (1935) P.C. 180 overruling (1933) A. 130.

(8) Narad, XIII-25, 26; cited in Dayabhag, XI-48.

Continued chastity is the condition precedent to the enjoyment of the right. Any lapse from virtue imperils her right to her former maintenance. But whether she is then entitled to starving maintenance is a question upon which there have been divergent opinions. On this subject there are three possible views and each of them has found supporters. The first view is that with her unchastity her allowance should be reduced but not cancelled altogether. The second view is that it is forfeited altogether; while the third view favours its suspension with the possibility of its resumption upon the widow reforming her ways.[1]

Starving maintenance.

908. According to the latest view of the Bombay High court, unchastity is a good ground for reducing maintenance to a starving allowance and may justify even its complete withdrawal.[2] But if the widow afterwards reforms and is repentant, she is entitled to a bare allowance.[3] So, on a review of the texts, Chandavarkar, J., said: "The general rule to be gathered from these is that a Hindu wife cannot be absolutely abandoned by her husband. If she is leading an unchaste life, he is bound to keep her in the house under restraint and provide her with food and raiment just sufficient to support life; she is not entitled to any other right. If, however, she repents, returns to purity and performs expiatory rites, she becomes entitled to all conjugal and social rights unless her adultery was with a man of a lower caste, in which case, after expiation, she can claim no more than bare maintenance and residence."[4] This is one view, the other being that the widow's right to maintenance is dependent upon her continence and if she turns unchaste, then her allowance may be resumed.[5] The question whether a maintenance grant settled by the husband upon his wife on his death is resumable by reason of her subsequent unchastity depends upon whether chastity is a condition precedent to its continuance. If it is, then the grant would be forfeited. But if it is not, then it cannot be resumed.[6] Of course, such a term may be a part of the grant in which case the question is one of construction. So where the widow's claim was compromised by her husband's brother transferring her some land for her maintenance, it was held that the grant could not be resumed upon her unchastity, since if it were the intention it could have been so provided in the deed.[7] But accordng to the Madras view, such a term is implied in every grant for maintenance.[8]

---

(1) Shibi v. Jodh Singh, 14 L. 759.

(2) Bhikubai v. Hariba, 49 B. 459 (472), following Roma Nath v. Rajonimoni, 17 C. 674; Valu v. Ganga, 7 B. 84; Vishnu v. Mangamma, 9 B. 108.

(3) Bhikubai v. Hariba, 49 B. 459 (472) following Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya, 39 M. 658.

(4) Parami v. Mahadevi, 34 B. 278 (283); Honamma v. Timanabhat, 1 B. 559; Roma Nath v. Rajonimoni, 17 C. 674; Kandasami v. Murugammal, 19 M. 6; Ram Kunwar v. Bhagwanta, 56 A. 392; Nagammal v. Chokki, 3 Mys. L.J. 266.

(5) Valu v. Ganga, 7 B. 84; Vishnu v. Mangamma, 9 B. 108; Muthammal v. Kamakshy, 2 M. H.C.R. 337; Sinthayee v. Thanakapudayan, 4 M.H.C.R. 183; Visalatchi v. Annaswamy, 5 M.H.C.R. 150; Nagamma v. Virabhadra, 17 M. 392; Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya, 39 M. 658; Shibbi (Mt.) v. Johr Singh, 14 L. 759; Debi v. Doulta, 39 A. 234; Laxmi Bai v. Vishwanath, 16 N.L.R. 140 (151): 58 I.C. 860.

(6) Parami v. Mahadevi, 34 B. 278; Bhupsingh v. Luchman, 26 A. 321.

(7) Bhupsingh v. Lachman, 26 A. 321 (325); Luchmichand v. Anandi, (1935) P.C. 180.

(8) Sathyabhama v. Keshavacharya, 39 M. 658.

Pleading of Unchastity.

909. Whatever may be the effect of unchastity upon the widow's right to maintenance, there can be no doubt that he who raises that plea is bound to prove it by clear and cogent evidence, and not merely by evidence which points to a vague suspicion which might be easily fastened upon a young widow by interested and jealous relatives or neighbours, or such as is easy to arouse by idle gossip. In one case, after the close of the plaintiff's case the defendant had applied for leave to amend his pleading so as to raise the issue about the plaintiff's unchastity which the defendant averred had just then come to their knowledge. The trial judge refused leave and the Privy Council upheld the refusal, the more so as the decree contained a dum casta clause.[1]

Clause (6).

910. The maintenance of a widow is commonly spoken of as a charge on her husband's estate, but it is only so in the sense that that estate is the primary fund out of which it is payable: otherwise it is not such a charge as is defined in S. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act,[2] though it may be so made by an agreement,[3] will,[4] or a decree.[5]

When widow disentitled to maintenance.

99. The widow has no right of maintenance in the following cases:—

(1) If she has sufficient stridhan, or other means of support, from the income of which she can maintain herself;[6]

(2) If she had once received sufficient allotment for her maintenance which she has since dissipated;[7]

(3) If she is remarried;[8]

(4) If she is leading an unchaste life;[9]

(5) If she is living apart from her husband's family for immoral or improper reasons, or without a just cause.[10]

911. Analogous Law.—All the clauses of this section are drawn from the decided cases.

Clause (1).

912. Under the first clause, no female can claim a separate maintenance if she is possessed of sufficient stridhan or other source of certain income from which she is able to maintain herself.[11] Such was held to be the case where the

---

(1) Dum casta vixerit, "so long as she shall remain chaste"; Saboo v. Ayeshabai, 27 B. 485 P.C.

(2) Bharatpur State v. Gopal, 24 A. 160 (163); Sorolah v. Bhoobun Mohun, 15 C. 292 (307); Digambari v. Dhankumari, 10 C.W.N. 1074; Sham Lal v. Banna, 4 A. 296; Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22 A. 326; Venkatrummal v. Andhuppa, 6 M. 130; Ramanadan v. Rangammal, 12 M. 260 (272); Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45 (49); Parvati v. Shrinivas, 23 Bom. L.R. 110: 55 I.C. 531; Daulat v. Champa, 55 I.C. 28; Jamma Bhai v. Balakrishna, 53 M.L.J. 176: 102 I.C. 101.

(3) S. 100, Transfer of Property Act, Juggernath v. Odhiranee, 20 W.R. 126; Lakshman v. Sarasvatibai, 12 B. H. C. R. 69 (75); Yamnabai v. Nanabai, 12 Bom. L.R. 1075; Mahalakshmamma v. Venkataratnamma, 6 M. 83 (86); Baghirathi v. Anantha, 17 M. 268.

(4) Baharilaji v. Rajbai, 23 B. 342.

(5) Manshadevi v. Jiwanmal, 6 A. 617 (621); Krishna v. Sinnaponnu, 16 M.L.T. 551: 25 I.C. 759.

(6) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415.

(7) Savitribai v. Laxmi Bai, 2 B. 573 (583) F.B.; Gun Joshi v. Sagoona, 2 Borr. 404 (416).

(8) S. 2, Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act, contra Allahabad, see comm. § 914.

(9) Pirthee Singh v. Raj Kuar, 12 Beng. L.R. 238 (247) P.C.: 20 W.R. 21 P.C.; Moni Ram v. Keri, 5 C. 776 (783) P.C.

(10) Pirthee Singh v. Raj Kuar, 12 Beng. L.R. 238 (247): 20 W.R. 21 P.C.

(11) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 P.C.; Golvi Bai v. Lakhmidas, 14 B. 490.

widow had inherited considerable property from her father.[1] It has been already stated that where such property exists but is insufficient for her maintenance, then it will be taken into consideration in fixing the amount. But in doing so, her jewels and other non-productive property must be excluded.[2] And so must be the precarious income that she might be making on account of the charity of her relations or by the performance of menial work unsuitable to her rank and position.

Clause (2).

913. The mere gift of property by the husband does not deprive the widow of her right of maintenance.[3] But where the widow had received her full share of maintenance and squandered it, she was held not entitled to charge again the estate for another share of further maintenance. It would be against reason and a premium upon extravagance to hold that she would be so entitled.[4]

Clause (3).

914. Then again if the widow gets remarried she forfeits all right to maintenance out of her deceased husband's estate,[5] unless, it is said, she belongs to a class amongst whom remarriage was customary, independently of the enabling Act, in which case remarriage does not deprive the widow of her maintenance.[6] But it is submitted, that even amongst the Shudras where remarriages are customary, the effect of remarriage is to dissolve the relationship between the widow and the family of her first husband, and as the right of maintenance is founded on relationship, it must cease with the relationship put an end to by remarriage. This is the view of the other courts, though the Allahabad court had to maintain the contrary by reason of its adhesion to the stare decisis.[7]

Concubine's maintenance.

915. The general principles here set out equally apply to a continuous concubine,[8] and other females.

Widow's right of residence.

100 The widow is as of right entitled to reside in the family dwelling house.[9] This right cannot be defeated by a sale of the house to a purchaser with notice.[10] Even in the case of a purchaser without notice, she cannot be evicted unless she is provided with another residence.[11] But she has no such right where the sale is contracted by the husband[12] or is for her husband's debt[13] or is for any other debt binding upon her.[14]

(1) Ramawati v. Manjihari, 4 C.L.J. 74.

(2) Shib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad, 4 N.W.P.H.C.R. 63; Chandrabhagabai v. Kashinath, 2 B.H.C.R. 341; Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 573 F.B.; Joytara v. Ramhari, 10 C. 638; Shyama Bai v. Purushottam Das, 90 I.C. 124: (1925) M. 645.

(3) Joytara v. Ramhari, 10 C. 638.

(4) Savitri Bai v. Laxmi Bai, 2 B. 573 (583) F.B.; Gun Joshi v. Sagoona, 2 Borr. 404 (446).

(5) S. 2, Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act; Matungini v. Ram Rutton, 19 C. 289; Rasul v. Ram Sarun, 22 C. 589; Mahamed Umar v. Man Kuar, 21 C.W.N. 906; Vithu v. Govinda, 22 B. 321; Panchappa v. Sangambaswa, 24 B. 87; Murugayi v. Viramakali, 1 M. 226.

(6) Bhola Umar v. Kansilla, 55 A. 24 F.B.; Har Saran v. Nandi, 11 A. 330; Dharamdar v. Nand Lal, (1889) A.W.N. 78; Rangit v. Radha Rani, 20 A. 476; Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla, 31 A. 161 (165).

(7) Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla, 31 A. 161 (165); Bhola Umar v. Kansilla, 55 A. 24 F.B.

(8) Panchapakesa v. Kanaka, 33 M.L.J. 455: 42 I.C. 344.

(9) Devkore v. Sammukharam, 13 B. 101.

(10) Dalsukharam v. Lallubhai, 7 B. 282; Gauri v. Chandramani, 1 A. 262; Talemand v. Rukmina, 3 A. 353; Venkatammal v. Andayappa, 6 M. 130.

(11) Mangala v. Dinanath, 4 B.L.R. (O.C.) 72.

(12) Manilal v. Bai Tara, 17 B. 398.

(13) Venkatammal v. Andyappa, 6 M. 130; distinguished in Ramanandan v. Rangammal, 12 M. 260 F.B.; Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45; Manilal v. Bai Tara, 17 B. 398.

(14) Johurra v. Shreegopal, 1 C. 470 (475).

916. Analogous Law.—The widow's right of residence in the family dwelling house has been established by a necessary deduction drawn from a passage of Katyayan that "except his whole estate and his dwelling house, what remains after the food and clothing of his family, a man may give away whatever it be, whether fixed or moveable; otherwise it may not be given."[1] Referring to this passage, Sir Barnes Peacock said: "The meaning of that passage is, that he must not give away his whole estate without providing food and clothing for his family, and that he must reserve one house, without which he himself or his family might want a dwelling. . . . The most difficult question is whether the passage of Katyayan, which says that a dwelling house may not be given, is a mere moral precept or a restriction on a man's right to convey. It seems to me at present that it is a restriction, and not a mere moral precept, and that the son and heir of the father has not such a right in the dwelling of the family that he can at once, of his own pleasure, turn out all the females of the family, or sell it or give the purchaser a right to turn them out."[2] This was the case in which the adopted son had sold the house to a purchaser who sued to eject his adoptive mother but the court held that the purchaser had no such right at least without providing some other suitable dwelling. This case has been followed in the other courts and establishes the widow's right of residence in the family house which she can maintain even against a transferee with or without notice of her right.[3]

917. Strictly speaking, the owner is, according to Katyayan's text, legally, incompetent to sell the family dwelling house. If, therefore, he sells it, the purchaser acquires no title in law. But inasmuch as the prohibition to sell is coupled with the reason that the house should be preserved for the residence of the family, the courts modify the prohibition to that extent by requiring the purchaser to provide another suitable residence for the females of the family before taking possession of the house. But this is in the nature of an equitable concession to which the purchaser with notice or a volunteer with or without notice is not entitled.[4]

918. Widow's Right of Residence.—The widow is entitled as of right to reside in the dwelling house of her husband,[5] though she is not bound to reside therein if she is subjected to cruelty or ill usage. As the Privy Council observed: "If a widow from any other cause than unchaste purposes, ceased to reside in her husband's family and takes up her abode in her parent's family, her rights are not forfeited."[6] This is the right possessed equally by the widows of all coparceners,[7] and those whose husbands had that right. This right, however, cannot be

(1) Cited in 2 Dig. 133.
(2) Mangala v. Dinanath, 12 W.R. 35 (36, 37).
(3) Mangala v. Dinanath, 12 W.R. (O. C.) 35; followed in Gouri v. Chandramani, 1 A. 262; Talemand v. Rukmina, 3 A. 353; Venkatammal v. Andyappa, 6 M. 130; Dalsukharam v. Lallubhai, 7 B. 282 (286).
(4) Imam v. Balamma, 12 M. 334; Rayawa v. Shivayaogappa, 18 B. 679.
(5) Prankoonwar v. Devkoonwar, 1 Borr. 364; Kumla v. Muneeshanker, 2 Borr. 687; Parvati v. Kisansingh, 6 B. 567; Dalsukhram v. Lallu Bhai, 7 B. 282; Devkore v. Sanmukhram, 13 B. 101; Mangala v. Dinanath, 4 B.L.R. (O.C.) 72; Gouri v. Chandramani, 1 A. 262; Talemand v. Rukmina, 3 A. 353.
(6) Jadumani v. Kheytramohan, Sirkar's Vyavastha Darpan (2nd Ed.), 384; Pirthee Singh v. Raj Koer, 20 W.R. 21 P.C.; Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 P.C.; Parvatibai v. Chatru, 13 Bom. L.R. 1023.
(7) Ganpatrao v. Shivprasad, 4 Bom. L.R. 355.

enlarged by demanding on the death of the husband, a specified portion of the dwelling house for the purpose of separate residence. Nor can it be curtailed to anything less than what her husband may have prescribed in his will. So where he provided that his wife shall have the right to live in the three-storeyed portion of a certain house, she was held entitled to the whole of that portion for her life.[1] Her right of residence cannot be defeated by offering her a separate house to live in on the ground of her quarrelsomeness.[2]

Right against transferees with notice.

919. Her right of residence may be enforced by her not only against the members of her husband's family, but also against their transferees with notice of her right. The right of itself does not create any charge on the family house, though it is a right in rem as regards the house, which she is entitled to enforce against all comers possessing notice of her right.[3]

Right against transferee without notice.

920. Even where the transferee takes without notice of her right he cannot eject her from the dwelling house in which she lived at the time of her husband's death without providing her with another suitable residence.[4] This is the necessary outcome of Katyayan's text previously quoted and discussed (§§ 916, 918).

Husband's bona fide transfer excepted.

921. Her right of residence cannot be defeated by any transfer made even by the husband in fraud of her rights, though it is a right which is not paramount to the necessity of the family, for which the house may be sold to a purchaser conferring on him a right to eject the widow, even though he should have taken with notice of her right.[5]

Or any transfer for necessity.

922. So again, she must subordinate her right to a transfer by whomsoever made for a family necessity.[6] So the house must go with the rest of the family assets on the manager's insolvency due to losses incurred in a family business.[7] And generally, the house may be sold for any purpose which would justify the sale of any other family property.[8]

Rule applied to unmarried daughters and sisters.

923. The rule applicable to the widow would appear to extend equally to the unmarried daughter and sister who also possess the right of residence in the family house. So an auction-purchaser of an ancestral house sold in execution of a money decree passed on a personal debt of the mother, who inherited the property

(1) Ananda Prashad v. Ambika Prashad, 53 C. 948 P.C.

(2) Devkore v. Sunmukhram, 13 B. 101 (105).

(3) Dalsukhram v. Lallubhai, 7 B. 282 (286).

(4) Mangala v. Dinanath, 12 W.R. (O. C.) 35.

(5) Nana v. Rama, (1886) B.P.J. 252; Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 B. 494 (511, 514); Dalsukhram v. Lallubhai, 7 B. 282; Mani Lal v. Tara, 17 B. 398; Ganga Bai v. Janki Bai, 45 B. 337; Ramanandan v. Rungammal, 12 M. 260; Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45.

(6) Champa v. Official Receiver, 15 L. 9.

(7) Johurra v. Sreegopal, 1 C. 470 (475).

(8) S. 39, Transfer of Property Act (V of 1882); Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45; Nihal Devi v. Shib Dial, (1907) P.R. 37; Thamardas v. Gani, 4 S.L.R. 978: 10 I.C. 905; Kanta Mohini v. Nanchora, 35 I.C. (C.) 566.

as heir to her son was held disentitled to oust the unmarried sister of the latter who resided therein.[1]

No forfeiture on loss of caste.

101 Mere loss of caste does not deprive a person of his right to maintenance.[2]

924. Analogous Law.—Maintenance is a right, and since no right is affected by the forfeiture of caste by reason of the Caste Disabilities Removal Act,[3] it follows that a mere loss of caste of a person by reason of his conversion or otherwise is no ground for depriving him of maintenance.

102. (1) The widow is entitled to such maintenance as would enable her to live with the same degree of comfort and with the same reasonable luxury of life as she had in her husband's life-time.[4]

Amount of Maintenance.

(2) Subject as above, in fixing the amount, regard must be had to the following facts,[5] namely,—

(a) the income of the entire estate,[6]
(b) the position and the status of the deceased husband,[7]
(c) the value of the estate,[8]
(d) the stridhan in her possession,[9] and
(e) her reasonable wants;[10]

(3) Provided that the amount of maintenance shall, in no case, exceed the annual profits of the share to which the husband would have been entitled on partition.[11]

Explanation.—The rule herein stated applies mutatis mutandis to the maintenance of other female relations.[12]

925. Analogous Law.—The only text bearing on the quantum of maintenance is as follows:—

Yadnyavalkya.—"He who forsakes a wife, though obedient to his commands, diligent in household management, mother of an excellent son, and speaking kindly, shall be compelled to pay the third part of his wealth, or, if poor, to provide a maintenance for that wife."[13]

But this precept is merely illustrative of the right and has never been literally enforced, the Courts having laid down rules for their own guidance in this matter, which are summarized in the section.

926. Amount of Maintenance.—Maintenance does not imply merely the cost of food and raiment. It implies a provision for all wants having regard to the position, status and income of the family and

Clause (1).

(1) Suryanarayana v. Balasubramania, 43 M. 635.
(2) Caste Disabilities Removal Act, (XXI of 1850).
(3) XXI of 1850.
(4) Ekradeshwari v. Homeshwar, 8 Pat. 840 (846) P.C.; Rajani Kant v. Sajani Sundari, 61 C. 221 P.C.
(5) Ekradeshwari v. Homeshwar, 8 P. 840 P.C.
(6) Nitto Kissoree v. Jogendra Nath, 5 I.A. 55; 3 Suth. P.C. 505.
(7) Ibid.
(8) Tagore v. Tagore, 9 Beng. L.R. 377 (413).
(9) Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 573 (584) F.B.; Kishori Mohun v. Moni Mohun, 12 C. 165 (167).
(10) Nitto Kishoree v. Jogendra Nath, 5 I.A. 55; 3 Suth P.C. 505.
(11) Madhavrao v. Gangabai, 2 B. 639; Adhibai v. Cursondas, 11 B. 199 (209); Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45; Shib Doyee v. Doorga, 4 N.W.P.H.C.R. 63 (72).
(12) Sobhanadramma v. Varahalaxmi, 57 M. 1003, following Ekradeshwari v. Homeshwar, 8 Pat. 840 P.C., (a case of a deserted wife); Mahesh v. Dirgapal, 21 A. 232 (234); Tagore v. Tagore, 9 Beng. L.R. 377 (413).
(13) Ch. IV-76 (Mandlik), p. 171, cited in 2 Dig. 420; Mayukh, Ch. XX-1 (Mandlik), p. 153.

the claims of other persons thereto. As observed in a case:—"Where a widow has asked for separate maintenance, you look first at the mode of life of the family during her husband's lifetime, and you try to find out what amount will be sufficient to allow the widow to live, as far as may be consistently, with the position of a widow in something like the same degree of comfort and with the same reasonable luxury of life as she had in her husband's lifetime.[1] Then you see what the husband's estate is, and you also see how far that estate is sufficient to supply her with maintenance on this scale, without doing injustice to the other members of the family who also have their rights as heirs, or their rights to maintenance out of the estate."[2] The same principle governs the cases of other claimants to maintenance.[3]

Clause (2).

927. In estimating the amount of maintenance which should be allowed to a Hindu widow out of her husband's estate, regard should be had to the estate as gauged by the annual income derivable therefrom, to the position and status both of the deceased, and of the widow,[4] to the class or community to which the family belongs[5] and the expenses involved by the religious and other duties which she has to discharge.[6] So in a case where the widow sued her husband's uncle, the holder of an impartible Raj, for maintenance, upon the finding that the income of the estate was Rs. 22,000 per annum, the court decreed the widow a maintenance allowance of Rs. 3,000 per annum, charging it upon the Raj estate. In fixing this sum, the court took into consideration the fact that the parties were high caste Kshatriyas, and the widow was entitled to maintain herself in comfort and maintain a position suitable to her rank. The fact that the widow was childless in no degree altered her right to maintenance, or differentiated the principles upon which maintenance should be calculated.[7] It was pointed out that if the widow had only been fortunate enough not to lose her husband, he would have inherited the estate, and he would have been the owner of an income of Rs. 22,000 per annum. The fact that she lost her husband was no ground for sentimental considerations, but nevertheless, she was entitled to adequate provision sufficient to make her life, as far as possible, one of comfort.

928. While however, the widow is entitled to be suitably maintained, this does not mean that she should be maintained in the same state as her husband would have maintained her. So where there were other claimants for maintenance and there were debts, the court held Rs. 800 per annum sufficient to maintain a widow out of an estate, the net income from which was Rs. 10,000.[8] But in fixing a sum for maintenance, the court is not to be influenced by the Shastric injunction that the widow is to live the life of austerity, semi-starvation and wretchedness, since it is a matter of

(1) Ekradeshwari v. Homeshwar, 8 Pat. 840 (846) P.C.; Rajani Kant v. Sajani Sundari, 61 C. 221 P.C., affirming O.A. 58 C. 745.

(2) Karoonamoyee v. Administrator-General, 9 C.W.N. 651 (652, 653).

(3) Mahesh Partab Singh v. Dirgpal Singh, 21 A. 232.

(4) Nitto Kissore (Sreemutty) v. Jogendra Nath, 5 I.A. 55: 3 Suth. P.C. 505.

(5) Adhibai v. Cursandas, 11 B. 199 (210); Srinivasa v. Lakshmi, 54 M.L.J. 530: (1928) M. 216; Punchakshara v. Pattammal, (1927) M. 865.

(6) Baisni v. Rup Singh, 12 A. 558; Rangathayee v. Nelimunisami, 21 M.L.J. 706: 10 I.C. 110; Srinivasa v. Lakshmi, 54 M.L.J. 530: (1928) M. 216; Rukhma v. Rango Bai, 1 C.P.L.R. 33; Ronno v. Laxmi, (1877) C.P.S.C., Pt., VIII-72; Raja Ratansingh v. Ram Beni Bae, 1 N. L.R. 33.

(7) Baisni v. Rup Singh, 12 A. 558 (561); Dalel v. Ambika, 25 A. 266 (270).

(8) Kaleepersaid v. Kupoor, 4 W.R. 65.

religious or ceremonial observance rather than of law.[1]

929. In assessing the amount the court is not entitled to take into consideration the value of her jewels or other unproductive property in her hands, if they constitute her stridhan, and although forming part of her husband's estate, are suitable to the position of the family in society.[2] But it is submitted, and it has been held, that in assessing the amount the court is bound to take into consideration the stridhan possessed by the claimant[3] (§§ 902, 929, 935).

930. Where the court found that the widow—a pardanashin lady—needed a servant, and allowed her Rs. 150 per annum on that ground, the High Court reversed the order of the District Judge who, while admitting the necessity, had reduced the allowance on the ground that she could share that cost with a friend.[4]

931. The amount which the widow is entitled to recover is not only that required for her food, clothes and residence, but also that necessary for her comfort and the maintenance of her position,[5] as also the performance of religious and other ceremonies, e.g., the shradh of her husband, the pilgrimage to Gaya and the performance of other rites necessary for the beatitude of her deceased husband, and her own salvation (§ 935).

Clause (3).

932. Limits of her Right.—Theoretically there is no limit as regards the amount which a woman may recover by way of maintenance. But in practice, this amount is never allowed to exceed the profits of the share to which the husband would have been entitled on partition, if living.[6] "A Hindu wife's right to maintenance has been attributed to a kind of identity with her husband in proprietary right, though her right may be of quite a subordinate character, but it is by virtue of this right that she gets a share equal to that of a son when partition takes place at the instance of male members."[7] While the claim of the widow for maintenance is, as already stated, subject to the maximum amount which represents the annual income from her husband's estate or interest, it is also said to be subject to the rule that, ordinarily, it should not fall much less than one-third of such interest.[8]

933. Conditional Maintenance.—Although the Shastras enjoin on the widow the duty of residing with her husband's relatives, it is only a moral precept which the courts do not insist on as a condition of her receiving maintenance. But though she is free to choose her own residence, there are two limitations upon her choice: (a) if her husband has directed that she shall be maintained in the family house, she is not entitled

(1) Hurry Mohan Roy v. Nyantara, 25 W.R. 474 (476); Promotho v. Nagendra Bala, 12 C.W.N. 808; 8 C.L.J. 489 (496); Umrit v. Kidernath, 3 Agra 182; Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 P.C.; Ram Chandra v. Sagunabai, 4 B. 261.

(2) Shib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad, 4 N.W.P.H.C.R. 63; Shyam Bhai v. Purushottam Das, (1925) M. 645 (659).

(3) Per Westropp, C.J., in Savitribai v. Luxmibai, 2 B. 573 (584) F.B.; Mahadrao v. Gangabai, ib., p. 639; Jodoonath v. Brijonath, 12 B.L.R. 386; Kishori Mohun Ghose v. Moni Mohun, 12 C. 165 (167); Poorendra v. Hemangini, 36 C. 75 (84).

(4) Krishnabai v. Babaji, (1805) B.P.J. 444.

(5) Srinivasa v. Lakshmi, 54 M.L.J. 530: (1928) M. 216.

(6) Mahadrav v. Gangabai, 2 B. 639; Adhibai v. Cursandas, 11 Bom. 199 (209); Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45 (49); Shib Doyee v. Doorga, 4 N.W.P.H.C.R. 63 (72).

(7) Srinath v. Probodh Chunder, 11 C.L.J. 580 (587); Jamna v. Machul, 2 A. 315.

(8) Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B.H.C.R. 283 followed in Adhibai v. Cursandas, 11 B. 199 (209, 210).

to maintenance if she resides elsewhere, without cause;[1] (b) in no case can she take up a separate residence for the purpose of unchastity.[2] Again, where the family property is insufficient to admit of an allotment of separate mainenance[3] then the court may allot to her a portion of the land, not exceeding one-third, whatever may its value.[4] Such was the case of the widow who sued the defendants who were the widows of her husband's brothers for maintenance. The court found that the income from the family lands averaged only Rs. 40 per annum, and thereupon the court assigned to the plaintiff one-third of the vacant site for her residence, but declined to award her separate maintenance.[5]

934. The husband is not entitled to limit his widow's maintenance by will, since the right is paramount or superior to his power of testamentary disposition.[6] She was in a subordinate sense a co-owner with him in the property, and her right to maintenance is, in a limited way, a charge on his property.[7] But of course, though neither she nor the court is bound by the allowance so fixed, it is, nevertheless, entitled to great weight as evidence of what a lady in the position of his widow should need.[8]

935. It has already been seen that her stridhan and other property which yields no income cannot be taken into account in fixing her allowance (§ 929). But the court cannot ignore her stridhan and other sources of her certain income, since these circumstances, and even the position and conduct of the claimant, may reduce the maintenance.[9] Such would be the case, if the widow had lived apart for purposes of immorality, or if she had concealed a portion of her husband's assets. But the court is not justified in punishing the claimant by reducing her allowance, for making vexatious defences in the suit.[10]

Change of maintenance.

103. The amount of maintenance is liable to variation with the change of circumstances of the family and the value of the estate.[11]

936. Analogous Law.—The amount of maintenance must naturally bear close relation to the income of the estate and the necessities of the claimant from time to time.[12] It is consequently liable to be increased

(1) Vyavastha Darpan, 310; cited in Pirthee Singh v. Raj Koer, 12 B.L.R. 238 (243) P.C.; Ananda Prashad v. Ambika Prashad, 53 C. 948 P.C.; Mulji v. Ujam, 13 B. 213; Goki Bai v. Lakshmi Das, 14 B. 490 (496, 497); Giranna v. Honama, 15 B. 236.

(2) Kasturbai v. Shivajiram, 3 B. 372; Romanath v. Rajomni, 17 C. 674; Bhoba Tarini v. Peary Lall, 24 C. 646.

(3) Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 573; Kasturbai v. Shivajiram, 3 B. 372; Ramachandra v. Saguna Bai, 4 B. 261 (263); Godavaribai v. Saguna Bai, 22 B. 52.

(4) Godavaribai v. Saguna Bai, 22 B. 52.

(5) Promotho v. Nagendra Bala, 12 C.W.N. 808: 8 C.L.J. 489 (497).

(6) Restriction 1 of Sch. III of the Indian Succession Act, 1925. Promotho v. Nagendra Bala, 12 C.W.N. 808: 8 C.L.J. 489 (497) citing Jamna v. Machul, 2 A. 315; Becha v. Mothini, 23 A. 86; contra Joytara v. Ramhari, 10 C. 638; Kaki Narasamma v. Venkataraju, 93 I.C. 686: (1926) M. 534; Mahasabht v. Anna Sohan Lal, 104 I.C. 119: (1927) R. 256.

(7) Promotho v. Nagendra Bala, 12 C.W.N. 808: 8 C.L.J. 489; Srinath v. Probodh Chunder, 11 C.L.J. 580: 6 I.C. 244.

(8) Promotho v. Nagendra Bala, 12 C. W.N. 808: 8 C.L.J. 489 (498).

(9) Tagore v. Tagore, 18 W.R. 359 (373) P.C.; Laxmi Bai v. Vishwanath, 16 N.L.R. 140: 58 I.C. 860.

(10) Nitto Kishore v. Jogendra, L.R. 5 I.A. 55.

(11) Ibid.

(12) Ibid.; Devi Persad v. Gunwanti, 22 C. 410; Ratnamala v. Kamakshaya, 31 C.L.J. 351: 57 I.C. 9; Narhar v. Dirgnath, 2 A. 407; Basini v. Rupsingh, 12 A. 558; Ramabhai, v. Trimbak, 9 B.H.C.R. 283; Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 573 F.B.; Apaji v. Gangabai, ib., p. 632; Gopika Bai v. Dattatraya, 24 B. 386 (392, 393).

or decreased or discontinued altogether according to circumstances.[1] Even where maintenance is awarded by a decree which contains no clause as it should, in favour of modification according to change of circumstances, that condition is to be implied and it is competent to any party, to maintain a separate suit for its enhancement or reduction.[2]

937. Case for Increase.—A case for increased maintenance may be justified not only on the ground that, since the decree, the value of the estate had greatly increased, or apart from any such increase, there has been a material increase in the cost of living which renders the money allowance insufficient to give the widow the means of maintenance suitable to her decree and the circumstances of the family.[3]

938. Case for Reduction.—To raise a case for reduction, it is necessary to show that the value of the estate upon which maintenance was charged had been reduced not by any default of the holder or of those through whom he claims, but by the act of God and owing to circumstances beyond his control.[4] In such a case, a sum fixed even by a compromise of the widow's claim to the estate is liable to variation.[5]

939. But where in a suit for the reduction of maintenance, the court found "that the reduction of income was entirely due to the laches of the plaintiffs themselves, having been brought about by acts of fraud, undertaken with a view to defeat the defendant's lawful claim," the High Court threw out the suit for reduction holding that the plaintiff could not be permitted to take advantage of his own laches.[6] A case for reduction must be founded upon circumstances anterior to the suit. The fact that the widow had made a vexatious claim is no ground for reducing maintenance by way of punishment.[7] It would seem that the court is loath to modify an allowance except upon a clear case calling for its interference. It will not act upon vague and indefinite assertions.[8] So, again, there must be substantial grounds for reduction. Any reduction in the family income will not justify reduction of maintenance. So where in a case the court had awarded Rs. 25 per mensem for maintenance and Rs. 2-8 for residence out of an estate valued at Rs. 35,000 in which the widow's husband's share would have stood at Rs. 8,750; about Rs. 3,000 of the estate was held in the Post Office Savings Bank which allowed 3½ per cent. interest subsequently reduced, whereupon the plaintiff sued for a corresponding reduction. But the court held that cause insufficient to modify the decree.[9] In another case, the court refused to discriminate between the widow with a son and one without, holding that the question in each case was what was a reasonable sum to be awarded, due regard

(1) Sreeram v. Puddomookhee, 9 W.R. 152; Nubo Gopal v. Amrit, 24 W.R. 428; Gopika Bai v. Dattatraya, 24 B. 386; Sansar Chand v. Shanti, 96 I.C. 255: (1926) L. 539; Kewal Ram v. Isri Bai, 93 I.C. 353: (1926) S. 135.

(2) Vijaya v. Sripathi, 8 M. 94; Bangaru v. Vijayamachi, 22 M. 175; Rukabai v. Ganda Bai, 1 A. 594; Mootilal v. Bai Kasi, 17 B. 45; Gopikabai v. Dattatraya, 24 B. 386, 392; Laxmi Bai v. Vishwanath, 16 N.L.R. 140: 58 I.C. 860; Bhagwanti v. Mani Ram, (1925) L. 543; contra where grant made in her own right; Lakhmi Chand v. Anandi, (1935) P.C. 180, 181.

(3) Bangaru v. Vijayamachi, 22 M. 175; Bhuttacharjee v. Puddomookhee, 9 W.R. 152.

(4) Greeschund v. Sumbhoo, 5 W.R. 98 (99) P.C.

(5) Rajender v. Pulto Soondry, 5 C.L. R. 18 (20); to the same effect Vijaya v. Sripathi, 8 M. 94; Subramaniam v. Vembammal, 14 M.L.J. 339; Ruka Bai v. Ganda Bai, 1 A. 594; Narhar Singh v. Dirgnath, 2 A. 407; Munna v. Kabutra, (1881) A.W.N. 12.

(6) Munna v. Kubutra, (1881) A.W.N. 12.

(7) Nitto Kishoree v. Jogendro, L.R. 6 I.A. 55.

(8) Greeschund v. Shumbhoo, 5 W.R. 98 (99) P.C.

(9) Bhagirathi Bai v. Ravji, (1896) B. P.J. 694.

being had to all the circumstances of the case.[1] Where maintenance is fixed by an instrument for life, it is a question of construction and intention whether it was fixed without advertence to the increase or decrease necessitated by altered circumstances.[2]

940. Case for Suspension.—So the widow's right for maintenance may be suspended if she has become possessed of sufficient means of her own. It was so held in a Mitakshara case in which she had been allowed maintenance from her husband's coparceners who obtained his property by right of survivorship. Subsequently she inherited property worth at least 2 lacs from her father, whereupon the court dismissed her suit for arrears for maintenance holding that by common law the right to maintenance was one accruing from time to time according to the wants and exigencies of the widow.[3]

Priority of debts.

104. Debts due from the family take precedence over a widow's claim for maintenance.[4]

941. Analogous Law.—Maintenance has, sometimes, been loosely spoken of as a charge on the family assets.[5] But it is now settled that a mere claim to maintenance, though justifying a charge, does not of itself amount to a charge on the property from which maintenance is payable.[6] It, therefore, follows that if it is not charged by a contract or decree it might be defeated by an alienation made for family necessity and in the case of a trading firm in payment of its debts without reference to any necessity.[7] And even as an unsecured claim, the debts of the family take precedence over maintenance[8] on the ground that such debts were equally binding upon her.[9] Consequently, she cannot enforce her right to maintenance against a purchaser of the family property sold for such debts,[10] even though he had notice.[11]

---

(1) Narahar Singh v. Dirgnath, 2 A. 407.

(2) Subramanian v. Vembammal, 14 M. L.J. 339.

(3) Ramawati v. Manjhari, 4 C.L.J. 74 (78) following Narayan Rao v. Rama Bai, 3 B. 415 P.C.; Goki Bai v. Lakhmidas, 14 B. 490.

(4) Sham Lall v. Banna, 4 A. 296 (300); Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45; Jawahar v. Pardumant, 14 L. 399, and cases cited in f.n. 10, infra.

(5) Khakro v. Jhoomucklall, 13 W.R. 263; Tarunginee v. Dwarkanath, 20 W.R. 196; Har Dayal v. Radhan, (1871) P.R. 7; Heeralal v. Kaunssilah, 2 Agra 42.

(6) Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22 A. 326; Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei, 24 A. 160; Beer Chunder v. Raj Coomar, 9 C. 537; Digambari v. Dhanak Kumari, 10 C. W.N. 1074; Kuleda v. Jageshar, 27 C. 194; Mahalakshamma v. Venkatarathnamma, 6 M. 83; Mutiah v. Virammal, 10 M. 283 F.B.; Bhagirathi v. Anantha, 17 M. 268; Parvathi v. Shrinivas, 22 Bom. L. R. 110: 55 I.C. (B.) 531; Daulat v. Champa, 55 I.C. 28. See this question fully discussed in Gour's Law of Transfer, (6th Ed.), 695-703.

(7) Ramlal v. Lakmichand, 1 B. H. C.R. (App.) 51; Johurra v. Sree Gopal, 1 C. 470; Joykisto v. Nityanund, 3 C. 738; Bemola v. Mohun, 5 C. 792; Ram Partab v. Fooli Bai, 20 B. 767; Bishahar v. Fateh Lal, 29 A. 176; Ragunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72; Morrison v. Verchyoele, 6 C.W.N. 429.

(8) Sham Lall v. Banna, 4 A. 296 (300); Gur Dyal v. Kaunsilla, 5 A. 367; Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45; Jawahar v. Parduman, 14 L. 399.

(9) Adhiranee v. Shona Molee, 1 C. 365; Natchiarammal v. Gopalkrishna, 2 M. 126; Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45; Jamnabai v. Nanabhai, 12 Bom. L.R. 1075.

(10) Adhiranee v. Shona Malee, 1 C. 365; Johurra v. Sree Gopal, ib., p. 470; Soorja Koer v. Nath Baksh Singh, 11 C. 102; Lakshman v. Satyabhamboi, 2 B. 494; Balsukhram v. Lallubhai, 7 B. 282; Natchiarammal v. Gopalakrishna, 2 M. 126; Venkatammal v. Audyappa, 6 M. 130; Ramanadan v. Rangammal, 12 M. 260 F.B.; Shamlal v. Banna, 4 A. 269 (299) F.B.; Jamna v. Machul, 2 A. 315; Gur Dyal v. Kaunsilla, 5 A. 367.

(11) Daulat v. Champa, 55 I.C. 28.

Maintenance a personal right.

105. (1) The right to maintenance is a personal right and cannot be transferred.[1]

(2) A right to maintenance cannot be attached in execution of a decree, though arrears of maintenance may be so attached or transferred.[2]

942. Analogous Law.—The right to maintenance was at one time spoken of as a charge on the estate[3] but it is now clear since the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, which has defined a charge for the first time,[4] that it is not so unless it is fixed and charged on a specific portion of the estate by contract or decree.[5] Even prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act it was held in several cases that maintenance merely created a personal right and did not enure against a bona fide transferee without notice.[6] though it could be enforced against one who took with notice.[7] The correct view, and one which accords with the statutory law, must be that maintenance, as such, merely creates a personal right, which might be secured by a charge, but till it is so secured, it is no more than a claim enforceable in any of the ways open to an unsecured creditor, and as such, subject to all the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act regarding a claim against a transferee with notice of the claim and of the fact that a transfer was made to defeat or defraud a person of his rights[8] but not otherwise. In other words, apart from fraud, such a claim does not avail against a bona fide transferee for value, even though he had notice of the claim.[9] On the other hand, it would be enforceable against a volunteer without notice.[10]

The law is now embodied in S. 39 of the Transfer of Property Act, see S. 101.

943. Maintenance Right Untransferable.—The right of a widow to maintenance and residence is a personal right, and is, as such, from its very nature, untransferable[11] for the husband's or heir's duty of maintaining the wife or the widow is one which he cannot owe to another.[12] But though this is true of a right,[13] the arrears of maintenance may be transferred,[14] attached and sold as soon as they become debts, i.e., are ascertained and fixed[15] but not till then[16] and where property is given in lieu

(1) Narmada v. Mahadev, 5 B. 99 (103, 104); Annapurni v. Swaminatha, 34 M. 7; Subroya v. Krishna, 46 M. 659 F.B.; Tara Sundari v. Sarodacharan, 12 C.L.J. 146; contra Asad Ali v. Haidar Ali, 12 C.L.J. 130.

(2) S. 60, Cl. (n), C. P. Code, Haridas v. Baroda, 27 C. 38; see comm.

(3) Heeralal v. Kausillah, 2 Agra 42; Ramchandra v. Savitribai, 4 B.H.C.R. (A. C.) 73.

(4) Tarunginee v. Dwarkanath, 20 W.R. 196.

(5) Coomara v. Venkataswara, 5 M.H. C.R. 405; Subramania v. Kaliani, 7 M.H. C.R. 226.

(6) Mutuswamy v. Vencataswara, 12 M.I.A. 203; Lakshman v. Sarasvatibai, 12 B.H.C.R. 69; Anund Moyee v. Gopal Munder, (1864) W.R. 310; Bhagabati v. Kanai Lall, 17 W.R. 433 note; Jugger Nath v. Odhiranee, 20 W.R. 120; Adhiranee v. Shona Malee, 1 C. 365.

(7) Geluck Chunder v. Obilia, 25 W. R. 100.

(8) S. 53, Transfer of Property Act. Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei, 24 A. 160; Beharilalji (Shri) v. Rajbai, 23 B. 342.

(9) Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22 A. 326; Beer Chunder v. Raj Coomar, 9 C. 435; Seerja v. Koer Nath Buksh Singh, 11 C. 102; Bank Bai v. Bilase, (1877) P.R. 14.

(10) Jamna v. Machul, 2 A. 315.

(11) Narbada v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99 (103, 104); Annapurni v. Swaminatha, 34 M. 7; Subraya v. Krishna, 46 M. 659 F.B.; Tara Sundari v. Saroda Charan, 12 C.L.J. 146; contra in Asad Ali v. Haidar Ali, 12 C.L.J. 130.

(12) Bhurub Chunder v. Nubo Chunder, 5 W.R. 111; Annapurni v. Swaminathan, 6 I.C. (M.) 439; Narbada v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99 (104); see the subject further discussed in 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), § 233.

(13) S. 60 (n), C. P. Code.

(14) Endori v. Venkata Chainula, 33 M. 80.

(15) Rajarav v. Nanarav, 11 B. 528 (533), contra Gulab Kuar v. Bansidhar, 15 A. 371.

(16) Ramabai v. Ganesh, (1876) B.P.J. 188; Tuffazul Hoosein v. Raghunath, 7 of maintenance it is prima facie alienable during the life time of the grantee.[1]

106. (1) The right of maintenance of a female relation cannot be defeated by a person disposing of his property by gift or devise and it may be enforced against the donee[2] or devisee,[3] as the case may be, with or without notice.

Maintenance cannot be defeated by Gift or Devise.

(2) But such right is not enforceable against a bona fide transferee for valuable consideration without notice of the claim or right[4] or a transferee, with or without notice, for consideration supported by legal necessity[5] or for a purpose binding on the family.[6]

Explanation.—The right of residence of a female relation is liable to be defeated in the same circumstances as the right of maintenance, provided that no transfer, even if made for legal necessity or benefit of the family, can defeat the right of residence, if it was made to defeat, or in fraud of, her right; and the transferee had taken with notice thereof.[7]

Illustration.

A a Hindu transfers Sultanpur to his sister-in-law B, in lieu of her claim against him for maintenance in virtue of his having become entitled to her deceased husband's property, and agrees with her that, if she is dispossessed of Sultanpur, A will transfer to her an equal area out of such of several other specified villages in his possession as she may elect. A sells the specified villages to C, who buys in good faith, without notice of the agreement. B is dispossessed of Sultanpur. She has no claim on the villages tranferred to C.

944. Analogous Law.—This section merely carries the provisions of S. 39 of the Transfer of Property Act a step further in that it protects a right though it may not be ascertained and its amount made payable from the profits of immoveable property, "and whether the right is enforced against a transferee" or a "devisee." But in other respects this rule must be regarded as merely supplementary to that enacted in S. 39 of the Transfer of Property Act.

945. Transfer in Fraud of Maintenance.—This section is intended to crystallize the rule of Hindu law, which is much wider than that assumed in S. 39 of the Transfer of Property Act, the terms of which do not protect that right to the extent it is entitled to protection under that law, since while S. 39 is limited to a right realizable out of the profits of immoveable property, a claim for maintenance is enforceable otherwise than out of such profits, since it may have to be met by sale of such property itself. Secondly, under the statute the claim is only enforceable against a gratuitous transferee or one without notice, but under Hindu law, it is equally enforceable against the

---

B.L.R. 187; Bhyrub Chunder v. Nubo Chunder, 5 W.R. 111; Kashee Shuree v. Ganesh Chunder, 6 W.R. (M. R.) 64; Hoymobutty v. Keroona, 8 W.R. 41.

(1) Dhup Nath v. Ram Charita, 54 A. 366.

(2) Narmadi v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99 (108, 109); Ramcharan v. Jusooda, 2 Agra 134.

(3) Krishna Rao v. Bhagwant Rao, 2 Bom. L.R. 1082.

(4) S. 39, T. P. Act, 1882.

(5) Suriyanarayana v. Balasubramania, 43 M. 635; Mani Lal v. Bai Tara, 17 B. 398, (Burden on the claimant to show necessity); Asu Debi v. Bashi Ram, 56 I.C. 198; Bhagat Ram v. Sahib Devi, 3 L. 55.

(6) Champa v. Official Receiver, 15 L. 9.

(7) Venkatammal v. Andyappa, 6 M. 130; Gauri v. Chandramani, 1 A. 262; Talemand v. Rukmina, 3 A. 353.

devisee[1] or one taking a part of the estate by partition, both transactions being outside the scope of the Transfer of Property Act. Again, such claim is, in some cases, enforceable against any property in the hands of the male member of the family, whether the property be ancestral or self-acquired,[2] but the extent to which it is enforceable depends not so much upon the claim as upon its character and the relationship between the two parties.

946. Widow's Claim Against Transferee.—It is settled that the widow's claim for maintenance and residence in the family house may be enforced not only against the heir but equally against a donee or devisee. It may, in fact, be enforced against all transferees with or without consideration except a transferee without notice of her claim or against a purchaser for a family necessity in which case the question of notice does not arise.[3] Assuming, however, that he is not such a purchaser, the question then arises when is the transferee deemed to have such notice. From the trend of decided cases it is apparent that the notice spoken of in this connection is such notice as is defined in the Transfer of Property Act[4] and the Trusts Act.[5] Accordingly, it has been held that where the transferee purchases out of an ample estate there is no need for him to enquire. But if he purchases out of a small and insufficient estate, it is his duty to enquire from what property the widow is receiving her maintenance. If he fails to so enquire and purchases the estate, he will be deemed to have had notice of the fact which he could have ascertained by enquiry.[6]

Explanation.

947. The right of maintenance and residence is a right by no means as good, or even comparable with, that of a coparcener, and is, therefore, liable to be defeated in the same circumstances as a coparcenary right, with this difference that a right of residence, being tangible, a transferee, taking with intent to defeat or defraud it, cannot be permitted to do so. Otherwise the dual right is a floating right, and till it is crystallized by the creation of a charge is liable to be destroyed with the higher right of coparcenership, and even where the special rules of Hindu law do not apply, still the equitable rule enacted in S. 39 of the T. P. Act suffices to protect a transferee for consideration without notice.

Transfer Pendente Lite.

948. A transfer made during the pendency of a suit in which a charge on specific property is claimed, is, of course, subject to the doctrine of lis pendens enunciated in S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act.[7]

Charge for maintenance.

107. Maintenance is payable out of, and may be charged on, any property of the person personally liable for it; otherwise it may be charged on, and is payable

---

(1) Ram Churn v. Jusooda, 2 Agra 134; Narbadi v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99 (108, 109).

(2) Krishna Rao v. Bhagwant Rao, 2 Bom. L.R. 1082.

(3) Suriyanarayana v. Balasubramania, 43 M. 635; Mani Lal v. Bai Tara, 17 B. 398 (Burden on the claimant to show want of necessity); Asa Debi v. Bashi Ram, 56 I.C. 198; Bhagat Ram v. Sahib Devi, 3 L. 55.

(4) S. 3 of Act IV of 1882.

(5) S. 3 of Act II of 1882.

(6) Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 B. 494.

(7) Dose Thimmamma v. Krishna, 29 M. 508 following Bazayat Hoosain v. Doolichund, 4 C. 402 (409) P.C. out of, the joint family or inherited property according to the nature of the right.

949. Analogous Law.—The question to what extent, if at all, maintenance is a charge on the estate, has been often considered and by no means satisfactorily decided in several cases. Prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, the word "charge" was a loose expression used to convey not only a definite incumbrance but a fund out of which a claim is payable. Hindu Law does not discriminate between these two notions of a charge.[1] But the fact that it provides for maintenance of disqualified heirs and others out of the property has naturally led to the view that maintenance must be a charge upon the estate. And this view was enunciated in several cases,[2] though the contrary was equally maintained in others.[3] 1882, the Transfer of Property Act, for the first time formulated a definition of the term "charge" as akin to mortgage, and though even the Privy Council have since spoken of the maintenance of a mother as a "charge upon the whole estate,"[4] still it is clear from the context that what their Lordships implied by that expression is no more than that it was a burden upon the estate as against the sons and not a charge in the statutory sense of the term. Such a claim is, to use the language of the Madras High Court, no more than "a mere equity to a provision,"[5] and whether it is an equitable charge or not, the fact remains that in its effect it does not possess all the attributes of a charge as described in the Transfer of Property Act. And even as a debt it has no precedence over other debts of the family.[6]

950. This is conceded in the very cases in which maintenance is held to constitute a charge upon the inheritance. In 1877 Sir Raymond West had to consider the nature of the burden created by maintenance upon the estate, and upon a review of the texts and earlier cases, laid down, that such a claim did not operate as a charge upon the inheritance, unless it was reduced to certainty by a legal transaction,[7] and that it was not a burden on the estate in the hands of a purchaser with or without notice for a consideration binding upon the family.[8] But in another case, Westropp, C.J., held past and future maintenance to be a charge on her husband's estate in possession of her step-sons.[9] So it has been held in Madras that a purchaser of the family house for value cannot eject the mother of the judgment-debtor, unless the sale bound her interest.[10] Where maintenance of the widow is to be charged on what would be her husband's share or estate, since if it is charged on the entire estate of the heir it would place an undue fetter on his power of alienation.[11]

951. But this is an uncertain fact and whatever may be the widow's right of residence, it does not solve the real difficulty. Is the right to

(1) See the authorities set out and discussed per Westropp, C.J., in Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 B. 494 (503).

(2) Ramachandra v. Savitribai, 2 Agra 42; Lakshman v. Sarasvatibai, 12 B.H.C. R. 69 (71); Golab Koonwar v. Collector, 4 M.I.A. 246; explained in Lakshman v. Sarasvatibai, 12 B.H.C.R. 69; Guga v. Administrator-General, 2 I.J. (N.S.) 124.

(3) Nistarini v. Makhan Lal, 9 B.L.R. 27; Mangala v. Dina Nath, 4 B.L.R. (O. C.) 27, following Prankoonwar v. Devkoonwar, 1 Borr. 404; Bhagabati v. Kanailal, 8 B.L.R. 225.

(4) Hemangini v. Kedarnath, 16 C. 758 (766) P.C.

(5) Lakho v. Lachman, 94 I.C. 181: (1926) L. 241.

(6) Kalpagathachi v. Ganpathi, 3 M. 184 (191).

(7) Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 B. 494 (521).

(8) Ibid.

(9) Narbada Bai v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99.

(10) Ramanadan v. Rangammal, 12 M. 260 (272) F.B.

(11) Ramarayudu v. Sitalakshmamma, (1937) M. 915 (918).

maintenance a charge on the general estate? If so it must be subject to all its incidents as now defined in the Transfer of Property Act. If it is not a charge in this sense, but is a charge in some other and more limited sense, then that term will have to be again defined and its incidents set out with specific reference to its meaning in this connection. For the present it will suffice to state that maintenance is not a charge on the inheritance within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act, inasmuch as it is not secured thereon by any rule of Hindu Law so as to have the same effect as a mortgage.[1] But it is a right which is a fit one to be charged upon the estate, inasmuch as it is a right which is a good substitute for ownership and is in fact closely allied thereto. And it has been held that when it is so charged it would take precedence of other charges,[2] except for a claim which is paramount thereto.[3] As such, where it is specifically charged on some property it is necessarily payable thereout; but on that property being exhausted, the charge holder is entitled to execute her decree against the other properties of the judgment-debtor, provided they are otherwise liable for maintenance, without obtaining a supplementary decree as provided in O. XXXIV, R. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure.[4]

952. Maintenance Grants.—The question whether a maintenance grant enures for the life of the grantee, or of the grantor or for ever, depends upon the nature of the right and claim, the character of the estate, the sex of the grantee and the terms and incidents of the grant. A grant by a male to a female relation is presumably held to be a grant only for her maintenance and as such terminable with her life.[5] But where the grantee is a male, the fact that the grant purports to be and is expressly declared to be for maintenance does not carry with it any limitation. Such a grant may be perpetual or precarious. It depends upon its terms. The fact that the grantor is the holder of an impartible estate does not limit his right to carve out maintenance grants enuring beyond his own lifetime. Such is the babuana grant which is a grant for maintenance of the grantee and his family descendible to his male descendants,[6] with the reversionary right in the grantor on failure of heirs.[7] An agreement by a person to pay certain allowance for the maintenance of his son-in-law is valid and creates a liability in the nature of a debt which may be recovered out of the estate in possession of his son and grandson.[8]

Suit for maintenance.

108. A person entitled to maintenance may sue for a declaration of his right, and combine therewith a claim for past and future maintenance, with or without a charge to be created on any property liable to the claim.

953. Analogous Law.—It being settled that a right to maintenance as such, creates no charge on any specific property, it follows that a per-

(1) Shamlal v. Banwa, 14 A. 296; Ramkunwar v. Ram Daia, 22 A. 326; Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei, 24 A. 160 (163); Digambari v. Dhan Kumari, 10 C.W.N. 1074; Venkatammal v. Audyappa, 6 M. 130; Ramanadan v. Rangammal, 12 M. 260 (271, 272) F.B.; Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45 (49); Parvati v. Shrinivas, 22 Bom. L.R. 110: 55 I.C. 531; Daulat v. Champa, 55 I.C. 28.

(2) Somasundaram v. Unnamalai, (1920) M.W.N. 458.

(3) Asa Debi v. Basbi Ram, 56 I.C. 198.

(4) Sia Shachari v. Ram Kishori, 2 Pat. 796.

(5) Sorabjit v. Indrajit, 2 A.L.J. 720; Kasho Prasad v. Madho Prasad, 3 Pat. 880.

(6) Durgadut v. Rameshwar, 36 C. 943 P.C.

(7) Ramchandra v. Muliwan, 33 C. 1158.

(8) Madhusudan v. Ramji, 5 Pat. L.J. 516: 57 I.C. 341.

son entitled to maintenance may or may not sue only for maintenance, since he may also claim that any sum decreed on that account shall be secured by a charge declared on a specified property, out of which it is legally payable. As such, a right must depend upon the nature of the estate and the claimant's right thereto, the decision of the question must depend upon the nature of the relationship of the plaintiff to the party sued. For instance, the right of the wife to maintenance against the husband stands on a different footing to the claim of his widow against his heirs. And similarly, the right of a disqualified heir is to be distinguished from that of the junior member of the family of the holder of impartible property. In the case of the wife suing for maintenance, the question that arises is whether she has made out a case for maintenance at all, and at any rate, for a separate maintenance. If she has, then the court has to consider the further question whether the demands of justice require that her claim should be further protected by a charge on her husband's estate. So far as this rule is concerned, it is intended to set out the nature of the claim that is possible in law. The plaintiff may sue for arrears of maintenance, in which case the court may have to ascertain the rate at which it should be allowed. Consequently in a case where this has not been previously agreed upon, the proper course would seem to be one for the settlement of the right and a decree charging the sum decreed for past and future maintenance upon the estate. A mere personal decree for maintenance does not create a charge[1] and is subject to all the uncertainties of such a decree. From the fact that maintenance is regarded as arising out of a subordinate co-ownership in the estate, it is eminently a case in which the court will charge the estate unless some very strong reasons appear to the contrary.

954. Cause of Action.—A suit for maintenance by the wife against the husband will not lie in the absence of any allegation that the husband has refused or has ceased to maintain her.[2] In any case, the plaintiff must have no means for her maintenance. So where the plaintiff sued for maintenance and it appeared that she was then in possession of funds belonging to her husband's family estate sufficient to maintain her for five years, the court threw out her suit on the ground that no cause of action had accrued to her inasmuch as the court could not decree a claim in anticipation of her wants.[3] It has, sometimes, been said that there is no cause of action for maintenance, unless there is a demand and refusal, but maintenance cannot be refused on that account.[4] At any rate, the mere withholding of maintenance is sufficient and it amounts to a refusal.[5] This question was considered by the Privy Council in a case in which the plaintiff's failure to prove a wrongful withholding was argued as disentitling the plaintiff to maintain a suit, but their Lordships negatived the contention, holding that "if the defendant had been misled into the belief that the claim for maintenance was abandoned and had, in consequence, not set aside any portion of his annual income to meet such a claim, he would have had a good defence to the present action. But, without some such ground of defence, it is impossible to hold that the younger brothers of the defendant had forfeited an undoubted right

(1) Brinda v. Radhika, 11 C. 492.
(2) Punnabibi v. Radhakissan, 31 C. 476.
(3) Dattatraya v. Rakhamabai, 33 B. 50.
(4) Jivi v. Ramji, 3 B. 207; Narayanrao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 (421) P.C., in which the point was disposed of even on the assumption that refusal was necessary; Ambabai v. Ramchandra, (1895) B.P.J. 44; Parwati Bai v. Chhatru, 36 B. 131; Bangu Bai v. Subaj, 36 B. 383.
(5) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 (421) P.C. contra in Motilal v. Kashi, 17 B. 45 overruled in Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 24 M. 147 (156) P.C.

merely because they were, in the first instance, advised to institute a wrong suit and did not claim their maintenance, as it fell due.[1] In other words, apart from any surprise or prejudice to the defendant, the mere failure of the plaintiff to prove a refusal or withholding does not imperil his suit.

Limitation.

955. But since the denial of a right is a starting point for limitation,[2] it is necessary that it should be stated by the plaintiff, at least in answer to the plea of limitation, since it is an established rule that when the defendant pleads limitation to a suit it lies on the plaintiff to show that it is in time. If, therefore, in such a case the plaintiff fails to prove the defendant's denial within 12 years, then his suit would be barred by time.[3] On the other hand, the defendant may show that he had denied the right more than 12 years before suit which would suffice to defeat the claim otherwise maintainable.

956. Provisions for Maintenance.—In a suit for maintenance, the cause of action may arise under the common law or under a contract or provision of a will. It is the duty of the plaintiff to state in what right he claims to maintain the suit. A widow, with a right of maintenance reserved under a will, is entitled to contest its factum. Under S. 50 of the Probate and Administration Act[4] the amount of maintenance fixed by the husband testator himself, if not a nominal amount, and not fixed contrary to any provision of Hindu Law, cannot be varied by the court. But a widow cannot be deprived of her right of maintenance by any provision in the will denying her right or excluding her by devising the property to another. But the husband is entitled to provide for reasonable restrictions as to her residence which she is bound to obey, unless she has "just cause" to the contrary. So where the testator had devised a monthly allowance of Rs. 125 to his widow on condition that she lived in his houses "at Madhupur or Benares", and it appeared that the house at Madhupur was unfit for human habitation, while his house at Benares was in the occupation of his concubines, the court held it to be a just cause on the part of the wife for not complying with that provision of the will, and as her residence elsewhere necessitated a larger expenditure, it raised the testamentary allowance of Rs. 125 to Rs. 320, making it a charge on the estate.[5] In another case, the widow of a predeceased son was awarded maintenance of Rs. 140 per mensem, payable by the father and son belonging to a trading family who possessed an estate worth 4 lacs and made an annual income of Rs. 12,000.[6]

Where a charge is created by agreement or will, the plaintiff may sue to enforce the charge or abandon it and sue merely for a money decree.

957. Recovery of Arrears.—It is not in the discretion of the court to refuse arrears, as it is a legal right, and the only discretion it possesses is in fixing the amount.[7] It may be recovered for any period not exceeding

(1) Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 24 M. 147 (157) P.C.

(2) Art. 129, Limitation Act; Ude Singh v. Daulat Kuar, 16 L. 892 (900)—a case of delay not of limitation.

(3) As to the law under the Limitation Act, XIV of 1852 and IX of 1871, see Jivi v. Ramji, 3 B. 207 (209); Chhaganlal v. Bupubhai, 5 B. 68.

(4) Brinda v. Radhika, 11 C. 492 (494).

(5) Promotho v. Nagendra Bala, 8 C.L.J. 489 (498, 499): 12 C.W.N. 808.

(6) Pushpa v. Raghaviah, 15 M.L.J. 95: 23 I.C. 413.

(7) Lakshmiamma v. Subhammal, (1893) B.P.J. 387; Ambabai v. Ramchandra,

12 years.[1] In a suit for arrears there is no necessity, though it is advisable, to prove the withholding of the amount. But a formal demand and refusal need not be proved, and the failure to prove the withholding or refusal is of itself no ground for refusal to decree the claim,[2] unless the defendants can plead and prove surprise or prejudice, as that, if they had known of the demand, they would have made provision for its payment[3] and that, from the absence of demand, they had reason to believe that the right had been waived or abandoned, as where the widow was living with her well-to-do father out of her husband's family and did not make any demand for a considerable period.[4] But where, in such a case, the plaintiff had lived with her father-in-law for several years, but demanded maintenance only for 3 years before suit, but claimed it for 6 years, the court allowed it only for 3 years on the ground that she had been living with her father and had not made any demand before 3 years.[5] Adverting to this case, the Privy Council said: "In that case the learned Judges of the High Court of Bombay admitted that a withholding of maintenance might be proved otherwise than by a demand or refusal, and if they intended moreover to decide that non-payment of maintenance when due, does not constitute prima facie proof of such withholding, their Lordships are unable to agree with the decision."[6]

No release.

958. A widow cannot release her claim to future maintenance.[7] At any rate he who relies upon such release must prove its execution in the same circumstances as would bind a minor. But a woman may waive her claim to arrears of maintenance and a defendant, pleading such waiver, must show not only that the plaintiff had agreed to waive her right but also that she had led the defendant to believe as a reasonable man that she would not claim arrears.[8] Waiver of right to maintenance cannot be inferred from separate residence. There must be justifiable grounds for the defendant's belief that the plaintiff had abandoned her right to have maintenance, and the defendant must, in consequence, have not set aside any portion of the income to meet such claim.[9] The removal of the widow from the husband's home by her relations is not by itself sufficient to establish waiver.[10]

(1895) B.P.J. 44; Pirthee Singh v. Raj Koer, 20 W.R. 21 P.C. affirming 2 N.W.P. H.C.R. 170; Venkopadhyaya v. Kavari, 2 M.H.C.R. 36; Sinthayee v. Thanakaudapyan, 4 M.H.C.R. 183; Sobhanadramma v. Varahalakshmi, 57 M. 1003 (1010) contra Karbasappa v. Kallava, 43 B. 66. The general remarks were obiter, as the decree of the lower court awarding arrears for 6 years at Rs. 75 per cent. was maintained.

(1) Art. 128, Limitation Act; Venkopadyaya v. Kavari, 2 M.H.C.R. 36; Subramania v. Kaliani, 7 M.H.C.R. 226; Jivi v. Ramji, 3 Bom. 207; Narbadabai v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99.

(2) Parvati v. Chatru, 36 B. 131; Karbasappa v. Kallava, 43 B. 66; Bholi v. Chimni, (1919) P.R. 147; 55 I.C. 2: Subramania v. Muthammal, 21 M.L.J. 482: 9 I.C. 614; Rangathai v. Nelli, 21 M.L.J. 706: 10 I.C. 110; Sobhanadramma v. Varahalakshmi, 57 M. 1003 (1010).

(3) Mallikarjuna v. Durga Prasad, 17 M. 362, O.A. Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 24 M. 147 P.C.; Subramania v. Muthammal, 21 M.L.J. 482: 9 I.C. 614; Parvatibai v. Chatru, 36 B. 131.

(4) Seshamma v. Subharayudu, 18 M. 403.

(5) Motilal v. Kashi, 17 B. 45.

(6) Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 24 M. 147 (155, 156) P.C.; followed in Sobhanadramma v. Varahalakshmi, 57 M. 1003 (1010).

(7) Bhyrub v. Nubo Chunder, 5 W.R. 111; Narbada v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99 (104); Gangabai v. Krishnaji, (1879) B.P.J. 2; Annapurni v. Swaminathan, 6 I.C. (M.) 439.

(8) Subramania v. Muthammal, 21 M. L.J. 482: 9 I.C. 614; Manikka v. Soubagiammal, 27 M.L.J. 291: 25 I.C. 897.

(9) Pushpavali v. Raghaviah, 15 M.L. J. 95; 23 I.C. 413.

(10) Rangathai v. Nelli, 21 M.L.J. 706: 10 I.C. 110; Subramania v. Muthammal, 21 M.L.J. 482: 9 I.C. 614.

Rate of arrears.

959. Ordinarily, the court should allow arrears at the same rate as future maintenance.[1] But it is not an inflexible rule and the court has discretion to decree her claim according to her wants and exigencies.[2] If the widow has supported herself in the past without incurring any debt, then there is no occasion to grant maintenance, "since the right of a widow to maintenance is one occurring from time to time according to her wants and exigencies."[3] But upon this point the courts are at variance, since the Madras Court upholds the widow's right to maintenance by reason of her interest in land[4] while the Calcutta and Bombay courts ground it upon her necessity.[5]

960. Defence in a Maintenance Suit.—Besides the usual defences available to a defendant, a suit for maintenance may be defended on the ground that the plaintiff had already received a share of the property in lieu of her right. But the mere fact that the husband had made a gift of stridhan is not equivalent to a provision for maintenance.[6] The defendant may also plead plaintiff's unchastity as disentitling her to maintenance[7] and no court will decree a claim made by one found steeped in vice at the time of the suit.[8] Even after the decree, the defendant may maintain another suit for its cancellation or modification on that account.[9] The question whether remarriage is a ground for forfeiture of maintenance has been already considered (§ 914). But it is always a good defence, since a remarried woman has the first claim upon her husband for maintenance and she who claims maintenance must preserve unsullied the bed of her lord.[10]

961. Where the husband had left an express direction in his will that his widow is to be maintained in his own house, it is a defence to a suit by the widow, who has left that house to make a home of her own. She may override her husband's wishes for a just cause,[11] but if she fails to plead and prove such cause she will lose her action. It is within the competence of the testator to impose suitable restrictions when providing for maintenance, and it is upon the court to consider whether the restriction is unreasonable or such as it should not give effect to.[12]

962. No suit for maintenance will lie so long as the plaintiff has in her possession an unexpended balance of her husband's property,[13] or property otherwise inherited as from her father[14] sufficient to maintain her for the period for which she claims. Though it is the duty of the wife to live with her husband, and of his widow to live with his family, it is not a sine qua non to her maintenance. Even the wife may live

(1) Raghubans v. Bhagwant, 21 A. 183; Karbasappa v. Kallava, 43 B. 823.
(2) Rangu v. Sinhaji, 39 B. 383; Karbasappa v. Kallava, 43 B. 66.
(3) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 P.C.; Rangubai v. Subaji, 36 B. 383.
(4) Lingayya v. Kanakamma, 36 M. 153 followed in Utharankat v. Utharankat, 30 I.C. (M.) 897; Manikha v. Sobagia, 27 M. L.J. 291: 25 I.C. 897.
(5) Siddessury v. Janardhan, 29 C. 557; Krishna v. Broja, 25 C.W.N. 403; Rangu v. Sinhaji, 36 B. 383.
(6) Jaytara v. Rambari, 10 C. 638.
(7) Vishnu v. Manjamma, 9 B. 108; Daulata v. Meghu, 15 A. 382; Nagamma v. Virabhadra, 17 M. 392.
(8) Debi Saran v. Daulata, 39 A. 234.
(9) Vishnu v. Manjamma, 9 B. 108.
(10) See § 907.
(11) Bidhu Mudhi v. Satischandra, 9 I.C. (C.) 534.
(12) Kannu v. Parvaty, (1890) B.P.J. 182.
(13) Ramawati v. Manghari, 4 C.L.J. 74.
(14) Sita Bai v. Ramchandra, 12 Bom. L.R. 373.

apart from her husband if driven to adopt this course by his cruelty and immorality,[1] or if she is deserted by her husband.[2] An when she becomes a widow she is entitled to live apart at her own discretion, provided only she does not do so for the purpose of unchastity or for any other improper purpose.[3]

963. Charge for Maintenance.—Hindu Law recognizes the creation of a charge on the property for the payment of the annual maintenance which is called a "Nibandh" or corrody.[4] But maintenance of itself is a personal right, and is not as such a charge on the property, unless a charge thereon is formally created. It is, however, a fit claim to be so charged.[5] Not only the property in the hands of her husband's co-parceners but also that in possession of their transferees who have taken with notice of her claim may be so charged,[6] the only exception being a transferee for consideration paid for a purpose paramount to the charge, e.g., legal necessity.[7] A maintenance-charge has, of course, priority over the other debts due by the last owner.[8] (§ 951).

Parties to a maintenance suit.

109. (1) A suit by the widow for maintenance may be brought against all or any of the heirs in possession of the estate liable to the claim:[9]

(2) But if the suit be to declare or enforce a charge then all persons interested in the estate must be joined.[10]

964. Analogous Law.—The nature of the claim made must determine the persons arrayed as defendants. If the suit is to enforce a pre-existing charge then the rule as to the joinder of parties laid down in Or. XXXIV, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure should apply. If, on the other hand, the suit is one for maintenance to be charged upon the estate, even then persons interested in the estate should be made parties. But if the suit relate merely to a money claim, then the plaintiff is entitled to sue any one through whom he can reach the estate ultimately liable to his claim. If, for instance, the claim is made against the joint family, then a suit might be instituted only against the manager who represents it. But in point of law the plaintiff is not bound to implead all persons equally liable to her claim[11] though they will be all liable to contribute,[12] and may, if so desired by the defendant, be impleaded as party defendants.

---

(1) Pirthee Singh v. Raj Kooer, 20 W.R. 21 P.C.

(2) Sita Bai v. Ramchandra, 12 Bom. L.R. 373; Ude Singh v. Mt. Daulat Kuar, 15 L. 892.

(3) Pirthee Singh v. Raj Kooer, 20 W.R. 21 P.C.; Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 (421) P.C.; Kassurbai v. Shivajiram, 3 B. 372 (contra in Rungo v. Yamunabai, 3 B. 44, dissented from); Surampalli v. Surampalli, 31 M. 338; Mokhada v. Nundo Lall, 28 C. 278 (287); Siddessury v. Janardhan, 29 C. 537.

(4) Rajeshwar v. Sundara, 42 M. 581 P.C.

(5) Ekradeshwar v. Ganeshwari, 42 C. 582 (607) P.C.; Daulat Ram v. Champa, (1920) P.W.R. 32; 55 I.C. 28: Somasundaram v. Unnamalai. 43 M. 800: Sowbaaia v. Manika, 33 M.L.J. 601: 42 I.C. 975.

(6) Kuloda v. Jogeshar, 27 C. 194; Manika v. Ellappa, 19 M. 271; Dose v. Krishna, 29 M. 508.

(7) Sham Lal v. Banna, 4 A. 296 (298) F.B.; Gurudayal v. Kaunsila, 5 A. 367; Lakshman v. Satyabhama, 2 B. 494.

(8) Somasundaram v. Unnamalai, 43 M. 800.

(9) Ramchandra v. Savitri Bai, 4 B.H. C.R. 73.

(10) O. XXXIV, R. 1, C. P. Code.

(11) Ramchandra v. Savitri Bai, 4 B.H. C.R. 73; explained in Nistarini v. Makhanlal, 9 B.L.R. 11 (27). But the case is one of doubtful authority for it assumes that maintenance is a charge and as such only the eldest brother need be sued, which is contrary to Or. XXXIV, R. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code.

(12) Ramchandra v. Savitri Bai, 4 B.H. C.R. 73.

Maintenance Decree.

110. (1) A decree for maintenance must fix dates for the periodical payments of the amounts decreed, giving directions for its execution, and where it is charged on any estate, it must contain directions for a sale of the property charged, so far as may be, in accordance with Order XXXIV, Rules 4 and 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

(2) A decree charging any property for maintenance may be executed in accordance with the law regulating the enforcement of a charge.

Form of Decree.

965. Analogous Law.—A decree for maintenance differs from an ordinary money or mortgage decree in that it provides for the satisfaction of a periodically-recurring right, and is, as such, executable from time to time. It must be self-contained and provide for every contingency of satisfaction and non-satisfaction, partial and complete, and where it is charged on any estate it must provide for its sale in case of non-payment of the amount thereby charged.

966. The following form should suffice in ordinary cases: This suit coming on this day, etc., it is hereby declared as follows:—

(1) That the defendant do pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 50 on or before the 15th day of October, 1928 and thereafter the same amount every year on or before the same date during the lifetime of the said plaintiff or until the further orders of this Court.

(2) That the defendant do also pay Rs. on account of the arrears of maintenance on or before the date aforesaid and if the said payment be delayed then the amount so due shall carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum until payment.

(3) That as a security for the due discharge of the said amounts hereinbefore ordered to be paid by the said defendant to the said plaintiff the undermentioned property be and is hereby charged and will continue to be so charged till it is discharged by an order of this Court.

(4) That in the event of the defendant failing to pay all or any portion of the said amount hereby charged, the plaintiff shall be entitled to apply for a decree absolute for sale of the property so charged and she may so apply from time to time as the occasion may arise on each default being made in payment of the amount of maintenance hereby decreed.

(5) That the defendant will provide suitable residence to the plaintiff in his family-house, and should the plaintiff be for any sufficient reason dissatisfied with it, she will be entitled to demand from the defendant another suitable residence, or in lieu thereof, recover Rs. 36 per annum in addition to the sum hereinbefore fixed for her maintenance which shall be deemed to be enhanced to that extent for the purpose of recovery from the property charged.

967. It has been suggested by Parsons, J., that in "decrees where maintenance is awarded, courts should insert words which would enable them, on application, to set aside or modify their orders, as circumstances might require, and in such cases the remedy would be the more appropriate one by application under the leave reserved."[1] But it is submitted that this is a course, which, if adopted, would detract from the finality of a decree, and would, on the other hand, be a standing invitation to contest it, every time that it comes up for execution. It would unnecessarily delay recovery, and it may neutralize its effect upon the parties who are presumed to abide by its terms till it is set aside or modified in a separate suit which the contestant might otherwise never institute.

(1) Gopika Bai v. Dattatraya, 24 B. 386 (390).

968. There cannot be a decree merely declaratory of the plaintiff's right of maintenance without determining its amount. Even where the plaintiff sues for such declaration the court as a court of Equity is bound to enquire into and afford the plaintiff adequate relief.[1] The decree which merely declares the right of maintenance is not capable of execution.[2] The court should discourage a multiplicity of suits for the maintenance of one person and should, if possible, make a complete decree providing for past and future maintenance.[3]

969. Maintenance Decree.—A decree for maintenance without charging any estate may be executed in the manner of an ordinary money decree. It creates no priority over other similar decrees. Such a decree becomes executable from time to time as therein provided and if it fails to specify the dates of payment, as where it merely awards payment "of Rs. 36 every year" the decree being dated 7th September 1865, then that amount would be payable on the 7th September of every year: "The decree was as to each year's annuity, to be regarded as speaking of the day upon which for that year it became operative, and separately for each year."[4] In other words, such a decree is a composite decree comprising as it does annual decrees for payment of specific sums, and if, therefore, there is no execution for any number of years, it would not bar execution of the decree for subsequent years.[5]

Without Charging an Estate.

970. Charge Decree.—As regards a charge decree it must be framed in accordance with the provisions of S. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act and Order XXXIV, rules 4 and 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Such a decree is little distinguishable from a simple mortgage decree. It must, however, be so framed as to be capable of execution without further suit. Where the charge extends to several properties in the hands of different members, it should not apportion the amount charged on them, but should declare a general charge on all of them,[6] unless of course, the claimant agrees to the apportionment of her claim.

111. A suit for a declaration of a right of maintenance must be brought within 12 years from the time when the right is denied,[7] and a suit for arrears within the same period from the time when the arrears are payable.[8]

Limitation for recovery.

971. Analogous Law.—The limitation for maintenance suits is subject to Articles 128 and 129 of the Limitation Act which allow 12 years for a suit "for arrears of maintenance" from "when the arrears are payable" and in a suit for a declaration of a right to maintenance the same period from "when the right is denied."

(1) Or. VII, R. 7, C.P.C.; Nistarini v. Mukhun Lall, 17 W.R. 432 (439); Eshanchunder v. Shama Churn, 11 M.I.A. 7; Mhd. Zahoor Ali v. Rutta Koer, 7 M.I.A. 468.

(2) Venkamma v. Aitamma, 12 M. 183.

(3) Per Westropp, C.J., in Lakhman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 B. 494 (497, 498), followed in Vishnu v. Manjamma, 9 B. 108 (110).

(4) Lakshmi Bai v. Madhavrav, 12 B. 65 (67).

(5) Ashutosh v. Lukhemonio, 19 C. 139 F.B.

(6) Sarasuti v. Nandan, 60 I.C. (A.) 99.

(7) Art. 128, Sch. I, Limitation Act, 1908.

(8) Art. 129, Ibid.

Starting Point.

972. Limitation.—A suit for maintenance contemplated in Articles 128 and 129 of the Limitation Act may be a suit for a declaration of one's right to maintenance, as well as for the recovery of arrears. In either case, law allows 12 years for the suit, but the starting point in the first case is most material. That point is reached only when the right is denied and not when it accrues. For instance, the widow may acquire a right to maintenance on the death of her husband, but limitation does not commence to run against her as from that date. She may not care to put her right in suit or she may have other means of maintenance, in which case her suit would be thrown out as premature, as was the suit of the lady who had in her possession funds sufficient for her maintenance for five years on the ground that the court was not in a position to forecast events or to anticipate the position of affairs five years later.[1]

973. It will be noticed that limitation counts only from the moment of refusal. Now, since there may be a demand without refusal, and a refusal without demand, the fact that is material is not so much the demand as the refusal. But since ordinarily a refusal implies and is preceded by a demand, the two together contribute the plaintiff's cause of action. The denial of the right must be unqualified. Mere non-payment is not such a denial,[2] and it does not entitle the claimant to sue.[3] Her right to maintenance is one accruing from time to time according to her wants and exigencies. The fact that she had not received it for some time does not prejudice her when her wants and exigencies oblige her to demand it.[4] "A statute of limitation might do much harm if it should force widows to claim their strict rights, and commence litigation which, but for the purpose of keeping alive their claim, would not be necessary or desirable."[5]

974. Claim for Arrears.—Though the period of limitation for maintenance commences from the date of refusal, that for arrears counts from when they were payable, and since they are ordinarily and presumably payable every year, it follows that arrears for twelve years may always be recovered if they are otherwise recoverable,[6] even if a suit for declaration contemplated in Article 129 be barred.[7] A decree declaring a person's future right to maintenance must declare the sum recoverable periodically and it may then be executed at any time within 12 years.[8]

975. Suit on Contract.—The larger limitation prescribed in Articles 128 and 129 of the Limitation Act has been held to apply only to a suit instituted on the basis of Hindu Law, and not to one instituted on the basis of a contract for maintenance, which would be subject to the shorter limitation prescribed in Article 115 or 120.[9]

---

(1) Dattatraya v. Rukmabai, 33 B. 50.

(2) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 P.C.; Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 24 M. 147, P.C.

(3) Punna Bibe v. Radha, 31 C. 476 (479).

(4) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 P.C.; Siddessury v. Janardhan, 29 C. 557 (568).

(5) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 (420) P.C.

(6) Venkopadhyaya v. Kavari, 2 M.H. C.R. 36; Sinthayee v. Thanakapudayee, 4 M.H.C.R. 183; Jivi v. Ramji, 3 B. 207; Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 (420) P.C.; Siddessury v. Janardhan, 29 C. 557 (572) contra Jeewun v. Putto, (1871) P. R. 67 was wrongly decided.

(7) Ratnamasari v. Akilandammal, 26 M. 261 (313) F.B.

(8) Narendra v. Nalini, 26 I.C. (C.) 939.

(9) Girjanund v. Sailajanund, 23 C. 645 (663, 664).

CHAPTER VIII.

THE JOINT FAMILY.

976. Topical Introduction.—It has been already seen (§§ 1, 16, 17) that the primitive social group was the patriarchal family in which the father owned all the members and things comprised in the family. There was then no distinction between his wives, sons and slaves and his cattle. They were all equally his property.

977. The next stage was reached when the patriarch, instead of being the proprietor of them all, became their representative. This altered conception of familial rights necessarily involved recognition of some rights in its component members. When this stage was reached, the patriarchal family became the joint family. In the one the patriarch possessed all the rights, the other members had neither any individuality of their own, nor possessed any capacity to possess any rights or property, in the other, the members had acquired rights to the same extent as the patriarch lost them. Both in India as in Rome, the primary social unit was the family. In both places the father originally exercised the power of life and death over his children and dependents. All their acquisitions belonged to him. But the filial revolt against this paternal mastery had the inevitable result of curtailing the proprietary privileges of the parent.[1]

978. The Secularization of law and the speedy growth of individualism, fostered by the establishment of free institutions, very soon made the joint family system and its allied institution a memory of the past. But in India, the growth of individualism was halting owing to the persistence of sacerdotal authority and its alliance with temporal power. In Rome, the early secularization of law led to its development. In India, its merger with religion has paralyzed its growth. As such, the joint family system in India of to-day is the survival of a ruder age for which no parallel now exists in the Western countries. But at one time, some two thousand years ago, such families were a part of the social system of many ancient peoples, in which the father or the manager wielded the same power over the junior members of his household as the father or the manager of a joint Mitakshara family possesses at the present day. He could modify their personal condition at pleasure; he could give a wife to his son; he could give his daughter in marriage; he could transfer them to another family by adoption. And all this the Hindu father can do to-day. Similarly, as regards the right of property, the modern Hindu Law bears a close analogy to the laws of ancient Rome. Under both these systems, the father or the manager possesses certain rights both over the person and the property of the other members of the joint family. His rights over their persons entitle him to act as the guardian of all minor males and all minor females except as regards their peculium or stridhan.

---

(1) See Maine Ancient Law, p. 141.

He arranges for their marriage and provides them with maintenance. He may, subject to the rules already set out, give away his son in adoption and thereby terminate his interest in the joint family.

As regards their property he is entitled to manage it, represent them in suits, incur debts and transfer the joint property for the purpose of family necessity.

979. In the original conception of a joint family, the family, would consist of the aggregate of individuals, without reference to their relationship. But in course of time it became limited to those who were born therein or who became its members by affiliation or marriage. The members of the family will necessarily fluctuate from time to time, not only added to by births and diminished by deaths, but added to by marriages and adoptions and diminished by the same process. The members of this fluctuating body are, however a corporate body with a traditional head and manager who exercises over them his modified patria potestas and is the protector of its women, the guardian of its infants and the representative and accredited spokesman of them all.

980. The strength of the joint family lies in the joint family property. Without such property a joint family is conceivable but then its jointness would have no meaning, since such families may possess certain personal rights in common, but they are comparatively of little account. The importance of a joint family, therefore, lies in the fact that it possesses all its property in common. As such, members have mutual rights and obligations with reference to it. But while Hindu Law postulates and presumes the existence of joint family, it does not either postulate or presume the existence of joint family property, the result being that where a member of a joint family sues another in respect of any property admittedly in possession of the family, he starts with no presumption in his favour as to its jointness. If he alleges it is joint he must prove it. But here the fact that he is a member of a joint family may assist him. For it may be that he is unable to prove that the property is joint by any direct evidence. In that case, if he establishes a nucleus of joint property, then, another rule of Hindu Law would again come into play, namely, that whatever is acquired with the aid of joint funds becomes joint property.

981. The law of joint property and partition fills an important, though diminishingly important, place in Hindu Law. It has been the subject of prolonged controversies and many of its points have not even yet emerged from that cloud land. But the differences themselves have not become crystillized into distinct principles so that there is no difficulty in stating their leading principles in a codified form. Both the terms "joint property" and the "right of survivorship" do not belong to Hindu Law, but have now become an integral part of it. They are terms applicable to the English real property which furnished to the early European writers apt analogies drawn from their own system. In course of time the analogy was forgotten and the singularly inappropriate terms such as "joint tenants" and "tenants in common" began to be used as if they were a part of the Hindu system. It is, of course, well-known that under the feudal system, which still prevails in England, all land belongs to the Crown and the utmost that a tenant is capable of holding is a tenancy in freehold. But in India, land may be, and is usually held by, private owners. Consequently, when an English lawyer speaks of a "joint tenant" or a "tenant in common" of land held by several owners, he is merely using an expression not to define the extent of his right in the land but merely to define its incidents. There is, of course, much in common between an English joint tenant and a Hindu coparcener, since while they differ as to the mode of their creation, they closely correspond as to the mode of their enjoyment and devolution. For instance, (1) the estates held under both are of the same duration, or nature and quantity of interest, (2) joint tenant as well as coparceners are both entitled to possession over the whole of the joint property, and (3) if one member dies, his right passes to the rest by survivorship. The beneficial acts of one of them respecting the joint estate enure equally to the advantage of all.

982. But here the analogy ends. For while the joint tenancy can only be created by a deed or will, it is one of the modes for destroying the Hindu coparcenary which can only arise by birth. Then again, while the interest of a joint tenant must extend over the whole with equal intensity, it is the very reverse in a Hindu coparcenary where the quantity of interest is ever fluctuating with the births, adoptions, renunciations and deaths of other coparceners. Since a joint tenancy is created by a deed or will, it may be created in favour of two strangers, whereas such a thing is impossible under Hindu Law.

983. Analogies drawn from the English Law of Real Property are apt to be misleading, and however useful they might have been at one time to grasp the leading principles of Hindu coparcenership, they belong to two different systems which are both radically different in their inception and effect. For instance, the tendency of English Law is towards separation of property and interest, whereas that of the Hindu Law is towards jointness, so that while the moment the three unities of title, time and extent are destroyed, the joint tenancy becomes a tenancy in common, whereas under Hindu Law, an estate separate in the hands of the father immediately becomes joint upon its inheritance by his sons.

984. Again, the wife and children of the joint tenant have not any right of maintenance which is accorded to the wife and children of a coparcener. And the fact is, that apart from the common attributes already stated, they have nothing else in common. But the terms "joint tenants" and "tenants-in-common" have unfortunately become too deeply embeded into the Anglo-Indian Law to be altogether ignored, though their constant misuse is apt to engender confusion in understanding the meaning of legal concepts which now require no mnemonic aid for study.

985. The joint family is at times spoken of as a corporation,[1] but it is a corporation in the sense that it has a perpetual existence but a corporation is a creature of statute, while a coparcenership is a creature of common law. The corporation, as such, is a judicial person, having a collective existence and rights. So is a coparcenership. But there the analogy ends. A corporation is subject to fluctuations in its membership due to other causes than a coparcenary body. Any one may join a corporation; but no one can do so in a coparcenary which is an aggregate of relations born and to be born into the family. Again a member of a corporation cannot dissolve it all at will, which a coparcener may do by forcing a partition which is acknowledged to be his vested right.

(1) Chuckun Lall v. Poran Chunder, 9 W.R. 483 (484); Sokkanadha v. Sokkanadha, 28 M. 344 (345).

986. Similarly, the manager of a joint family is often spoken of as a trustee. And so Lord Lindley, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in a case held, that the manager was "not the agent of the members of the family so as to make them liable to be sued as if they were the principals of the manager. The relation of such a person is not that of principal or agent, or of partners; it is much more like that of trustee and cestui que trust."[1]

987. But this was, again, merely a simile and it should not be pushed too far. As will be presently seen, the joint family possesses peculiar incidents of its own and its manager similarly possesses certain rights and powers which are in some respects the survival of his plenary powers, which he enjoyed in the patriarchal age, which in so far as they have been curtailed by the growing rights of the junior members, they may be at times those of a trustee, guardian and even an agent; but his complex powers cannot be more compendiously described otherwise than by setting them out in detail.

988. Both the Mitakshara as well as the Dayabhag families are joint and have coparceners. But their incidents differ. For instance, while the Mitakshara coparcener is entitled to the right of survivorship, no such right can be claimed by a Dayabhag coparcener. This is again indicated by the borrowed phraseology of English Law, the one being designated joint tenants and the other, tenants-in-common. Again the right of the Mitakshara coparcener arises on his birth, while the right of the Dayabhag coparcener arises on the death of his father, leading to far reaching results as regards the right of the father. Under the Mitakshara law, he is merely a manager of the joint estate and his rights are limited by those of his son and other coparceners, whereas under the Dayabhag, the father is the absolute owner of all his estate, whether self-acquired or ancestral, and he can deal with it in any manner he likes irrespective of the consent of his sons.[2] Again, the vested right of the Mitakshara coparcener entitles him to call for the partition of his share, but the Dayabhag son having no vested interest in his patrimony, has no right to any partition against his father, who, may, however, make a partition if he so chooses, and in that case, he is entitled to a double share of the son.

989. Again, since the Dayabhag father is the owner of his estate he is entitled to transfer or bequeath it to any one he likes by his will.[3] Then as regards the extent of the coparcener's right, while under the Mitakshara, it is distributed over the whole estate, that under the Dayabhag is restricted to that fraction of the property which he would get on partition. In other words, while the share of the Mitakshara coparcener is neither fixed nor defined, that of the Dayabhag coparcener is both.[4] On the death of the father the right in the one case passes to the son by

(1) Annamalai v. Murugasa, 26 M. 544 (553) P.C.; to the same effect, Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 (447, 448) P.C.; Chuckun Lall v. Pooran Chunder, 9 W.R. 483 (484); to the same effect, Garu Savank v. Narayan, 7 B. 467.

(2) Dharma Das v. Amulyadhan, 33 C. 1119 (1124).

(3) Debendra v. Brojendra, 17 C. 886.

(4) Soorjemoney v. Denobundoo, 6 M. I.A. 526 (553); Rajkishore v. Gobind, 1 C. 27 P.C.; Sheo Soondary v. Pirthee Singh, 4 I.A. 147.

survivorship, in the other case by inheritance or devise. On the death of the father the sons may call for a partition or remain joint. In that case the coparcenary will be subject to the rules applicable to the Mitakshara coparcenary as regards its management and the rights of the manager and the coparceners, inter se,[1] with this difference that while the right of the Mitakshara coparcener to alienate his share for value is not universally conceded, and his right to alienate otherwise is universally denied, the Dayabhag coparcener, having his share fixed, is free to device or transfer it for or without consideration. He may further sue or be sued individually in respect of his share. But he cannot, without partition, appropriate any portion of it to his exclusive use or enjoyment.

990. The law of joint family may be classified under four heads: (i) the joint family, its constitution, and property, (ii) the rights and duties of its manager, (iii) the rights and duties of coparceners, inter se, and (iv) in relations to strangers.

It is discussed in this order in the sequel.

112. In this and the next three following chapters, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context—

Joint Family: Father: Son: Issue: Coparcener.

"Joint family" means a joint family of all members lineally descended from a common ancestor including their wives and unmarried daughters.[2]

"Father," wherever used, includes also the paternal grandfather and the paternal great-grandfather by legitimate descent or by valid adoption:

"Son" includes also the paternal grandson and the paternal great-grandson in the male line by legitimate descent or by valid adoption:[3]

"Issue" means and includes the son, the paternal grandson, and the paternal great-grandson by legitimate descent or by valid adoption.[4]

"Coparcener" means a male member of the joint family entitled to a share of the joint property:[5] and

"Joint property" means the joint property of such persons.

991. Analogous Law.—A Hindu joint family consists not only of the males descended from a common ancestor with a common residence, food and worship, but also their wives and unmarried daughters. As such, such family may consist of only a single male and his wife and daughters.[6] Male members entitled to a share of the joint property are called its "coparceners" while all property jointly held by them, or out of which the female members have their right of maintenance, is their joint family property. (§§ 120, 121). A coparcener who ceases to be entitled to a share, whether by reason of the fact that his share has been attached and sold or that he has already acquired it by partition or renounced it as a consequence of this irrevocable retirement from the family by taking to

(1) Abhayachandra v. Pyari Mohan, 13 W.R. 75 F.B.; Dwarka Nath v. Bungshi, 9 C.W.N. 882.
(2) See S. 120.
(3) Rutcheputty v. Rajunder, 2 M.I. I. 132 (156, 157, 167); Masitullah v. Damodar, 48 A. 518 (525) P.C.; Ananda v. Nownit, 9 C. 315 (319).
(4) Ib.
(5) See S. 121.
(6) Vedathanni v. Commissioner, Income-Tax, 56 M.L.; followed in Commissioner, Income-tax v. Gomedally, (1935) B. 412.

monastic life[1] ceases to be a coparcener. Hindu Law regards the son, the son's son and the son's son's son as in reality the same person in different bodies.[2] As such, the three take by their birth the wealth and the spiritual debts of their three ancestors. So the term "putra" is used in the Sanskrit texts in that generic sense as comprising the next three male descendants. In this chapter, this term has been eschewed as liable to be misunderstood. But its definition here is intended to obviate misapprehension of the texts quoted.

992. It is well to add that Hindu Law recognizes the existence of the issue not only from the moment of his birth, but from the moment of his conception. Consequently, whenever the law declares any right as accruing to the son, the latter becomes entitled to enforce his right if he was en ventre sa mère at the date of the accrual of his cause of action. For example, though the father's improper alienation may not be challenged by an after-born son, it can be challenged if the son was then en ventre sa mere.[3] So in the cases of succession, partition and will, a son in the womb is regarded as one in esse.[4] But it is said that an unborn child, though treated as born when it is for its benefit to be so considered, is not ordinarily so regarded as born for the benefit of third persons.[5]

Ancestral property defined.

113. (1) "Ancestral property" means property which a person inherits from his father, or father's father, or father's father's father.[6]

(2) All property acquired out of the income of such property.

993. Analogous Law.—The under-noted texts[7] have since been rendered obsolete by legislation[8] and judicial pronouncements.[9]

The second clause states the general rule that accretions and accumulations follow the corpus;[10] Accessorium sequitur sum principale. But this rule may be varied by custom.[11]

(1) Property inherited from Father, etc.

994. What is Ancestral Property?—The term "ancestral property" is a technical term, and bears a special meaning as denoting only such property as a person inherits from his father, father's father, and father's father's father.[12] But he must

(1) Krishnaji v. Hanmareddi, 58 A. 536 (540).

(2) Ratcheputty v. Rajunder, 2 M. I. A. 132 (156, 157, 167); Ananda v. Nownit, 9 C. 315 (319); Masitullah v. Damodar, 48 A. 518 (525) P.C.

(3) Kalidas v. Krishna, 2 B.L.R. 103 F.B.; Sabapathi v. Somasundaram, 16 M. 76; Datla v. Gattem, 27 M.L.J. 580 : 26 I.C. 61; Deo Narayan v. Ganga Prasad, 13 A.L.J. 69 : 26 I.C. 871; Parasram v. Lakshmichand, 57 I.C. (N.) 578; Dwarka v. Krishna, 2 L. 114; Busum v. Dasarathi, 34 C.L.J. 323.

(4) Hanumant v. Bhimacharya, 12 B. 105; Minakshi v. Virappa, 8 M. 89.

(5) Busum v. Dasarathi, 34 C.L.J. 323.

(6) Attar Singh v. Thakur Singh, 35 C. 1139 P.C.; Venkata v. Court of Wards, 23 M. 383 P.C.; Mhd. Husain Khan v. Krishva, I.L.R. (1937) A. 655 (663) P.C. Bishmanalli v. Gangadaer, (1917) Pat. 356.

(7) Yad. II-121; Mitak. I, I, 27.

(8) Hindu Gains of Learning Act (XXX of 1930).

(9) Attar Singh v. Thakur Singh, 35 C. 1139 P.C. and cases cited post.

(10) Umrithnath v. Goureenath, 13 M. I.A. 542 (546); Sudanund v. Soorjoo, 11 W.R. 346; Krishnappa v. Ramaswamy, 8 M.H.C.R. 25.

(11) Nawabuddin v. Kami, (1901) P. R. 12.

(12) Attar Singh v. Thakur Singh, 35 C. 1139 P.C.; Venkata v. Court of Wards, 23 M. 383 P.C.; Mhd. Husain Khan v. Krishva, I.L.R. (1937) A. 655 (663) P.C.; Bishmanalli v. Gangadaer, (1917) Pat. 356.

acquire it by descent, and not by devise or a gift inter vivos. Property so acquired would be the donee's or devisee's self-acquired and not ancestral property.[1] It is not necessary that the property which the son acquires from his ancestor should be "ancestral" in the hands of the latter. For it may be his own acquisition, or it may have been acquired by him by descent or devise. The mode of its acquisition is immaterial except for the purpose of his own enjoyment. The position is then this. A man may possess property, partly inherited, partly devised and partly his own separate acquisition. As to the first, his right of disposition is controlled by his issue, since it is his ancestral property. As to the second, his issue have no vested right and the property, though it may have been acquired from his ancestor, does not, by reason of the mode of his acquisition, bear upon it the impress of "ancestral property." It is, so long as he is alive, his self-acquisition, and as such indistinguishable from his property of the third class, which is the product of his own unaided industry. It will be thus seen how all property in the hands of a Hindu has a constant tendency to become ancestral property, and the only means of preventing it from assuming that character is to gift or devise it, while it remains a separate property.

995. There is, however, another possibility for the ancestral property to lose its character, which it does when it is not inherited by the son, grandson or great-grandson, but by or through a female, a collateral, an uncle, a brother,[2] nephew, or the like. So property acquired from a mother's father or mother's grandfather or the maternal grandfather after the mother's death[3] is not ancestral property.[4] In such cases the property though obtained by descent is in the hands of the heir his separate property. Sanskrit text-writers speak of the former as Apratibandh, or unobstructed property, and of the latter, as Sapratibandh, or obstructed property, implying that in the one case, the heir has a vested interest, while in the other it is merely contingent and dependent upon the failure of issue. These terms will be further considered in the sequel. (§§ 1199, 1200, 1201.)

996. For the purpose of ancestral property it is immaterial whether the issue was born before or after its acquisition by descent, provided that it vested in him some time. But as regards the father's separate property, if the son predeceased the father it would not be ancestral property in the hands of his heir. This may be illustrated by the following case: A father with two sons A and B had self-acquired property. A predeceased his father leaving a widow, and upon his father's death, B took the property. A's widow claimed maintenance out of it as ancestral property. The court admitted that in any question between B and his sons, it would be ancestral property. But it was not so as regards A. During his lifetime the property was absolutely at the disposal of the father. As regards A, it was neither ancestral nor coparcenary property, and on his death his widow had no higher claim over it than her husband. Her rights were not enlarged by its change of character when it reached the hands of B.[5] But suppose in this case, the property in the

(1) Jug Mohan Das v. Mangal Das, 10 B. 528 (554, 578).
(2) Gurumurthi v. Gurammal, 32 M. 86 (88).
(3) Shantee v. Abhai Singh, (1931) L. 708.
(4) Mhd. Husain v. Kishva Nandan, I.L.R. (1937) A. 655 P.C.; Jamna Prasad v. Ram Partap, 29 A. 667 (669); Bhishwanath v. Gajadhar, (1917) Pat. 146.
(5) Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 (198) F.B.

hands of the father had not been his self-acquisition but ancestral property, then the widow's claim for maintenance would have stood upon a higher ground, for her husband would then have had a vested interest in his father's property, of which he could have forced a partition even during his father's lifetime.[1]

Clause (2). Accretions to Ancestral Property.

997. Secondly, any accretion made to the ancestral property becomes also ancestral, though this rule is held to be subject to customary law in the Punjab.[2] But such accretion must be made with the aid of ancestral property.[3] If it is so acquired, it becomes incorporated with the ancestral property and the son acquires equally a vested right thereto, whether he was born before or after the accretion is made.[4] The question what "aid" the ancestral property should give, so as to make all acquisitions made accretions to it, has been considered in several cases in which it is laid down that it must be material and not merely nominal.[5] The mere fact that a person had received his general education out of the ancestral funds is not enough to make all his subsequent acquisitions ancestral.[6] So the Privy Council denounced as a startling proposition of law "that if a member of a joint Hindu family receives any education whatever from the joint funds, he becomes for ever incapable of acquiring, by his own skill and industry, any separate property."[7]

Such accessions ordinarily comprise properties purchased out of the income received from ancestral property.[8]

But ancestral property recovered by a person as by purchase from a stranger loses its character as ancestral property in accordance with an express text of the Mitakshara.[9]

998. In one case, one Paras Das, the head and manager of a joint family banking business, owning a large amount of joint ancestral property, sued for the recovery of certain property which he claimed to inherit by collateral succession. He borrowed some Rs. 9,000 out of the joint fund for the expenses of the litigation, but this money he repaid in the course of a year without interest. The litigation ended in a compromise in favour of the manager, and the question being raised that the property so acquired had become an accretion to the joint property of the family, the court held that it was no accretion, merely because the manager had utilized a portion of the balance of the family's banking business which would have otherwise lain dormant: "The joint estate suffered no appreciable detriment by the transaction and it would

---

(1) Devi Pershad v. Gunwanti, 22 C. 410 (415).

(2) Nawabuddin v. Kami, (1901) P. R. 12.

(3) Gur Charanlall v. Badri Narain, 17 A.W.N. 187; Sufa Chund v. Hemraj, (1869) P.R. 59.

(4) Jugmohan Das v. Mangal Das, 10 B. 528.

(5) Ram Pershad v. Sheochurn, 10 M. I.A. 490 (505).

(6) Dhunookdharee v. Gunpat Lall, 10 W.R. 122; Krishnaji v. Moro, 15 B. 32.

(7) Pauliem v. Pauliem, 1 M. 252 (261) P.C.; Chala Konda v. Chala Konda, 2 M.H.C.R. 56 (76); Mancha v. Narotam Das, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 1 (6); Lakshman v. Jamnabai, 6 P. 225 (241) (case of a Vakil); Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy, 13 B. 534 (545, 548); Krishnaji v. Moro, 15 B. 32 (37); Dwarka Prasad v. Jamna Das, 13 Bom.L.R. 133 (137).

(8) Bissessur v. Lachmessur, 5 C.L.R. 477 P.C.; Sudanand v. Bonamalee, 6 W.R. 258; Bono v. Bolee, 8 W.R. 182.

(9) Cited in Balakee v. Court of Wards, 14 W.R. 34.

be, we think, unduly extending the principles of Hindu Law applicable to acquisitions by the aid of joint funds or joint exertions, if we were to hold that the property which came to Paras Das from a collateral branch of the family became joint family property."[1] In another case, the plaintiff, his brother and his father, all living in union, purchased a house, the price of which they raised by pledging the ornaments of their wives. The sale-deed was taken in the name of the father. The ornaments were redeemed by the plaintiff alone out of his own earnings, and he returned the ornaments of his father and brother. On a partition, this house was allotted to the plaintiff who pulled it down and adding to its site by purchasing some more land, he built a new house. It was attached in execution of a decree against the plaintiff's son to which the plaintiff objected. Parsons and Ranade, JJ., admitted his objection but on different grounds. Parsons, J., held that as the house had been acquired with the assistance of joint family, it became joint but not ancestral property, and that, therefore, on its allotment in a partition to the plaintiff, it became his self-acquired property, in which his son had no vested interest. Ranade, J., however, held that the house did not become the plaintiff's self-acquired property because it had been allotted to him in a family partition, but he upheld the plaintiff's claim on an assignment which he had taken from his son.[2]

999. Burden of Proof.—There is of course no presumption that any property in possession of a member of a joint family is his ancestral property. That it is so must be proved like any other fact. As will be presently seen, Hindu Law presumes that a family is joint; but the presumption does not go any further. For instance, it does not extend to the presumption that all its members possess joint property, and a fortiori that any of them possesses ancestral property.[3]

Joint property defined.

114. (1) The joint property of a joint family comprises the following property, namely:—

(a) Ancestral property inherited by a member of the family from a direct male ancestor not exceeding three degrees higher than himself;[4]

(b) Acquisitions to the property made with the help of joint ancestral property;[5]

(c) Save as provided by the next section, property acquired by members of the joint family.[6]

---

(1) Bachho v. Dharam Das, 28 A. 347 (355).

(2) Khandubai v. Pirbhai, 2 Bom.L.R. 76.

(3) Shadi Lal v. Lal Bahadur, (1933) P.C. 85; Attar Singh v. Thakur Singh, 35 C. 1039 P.C., followed in Fateh v. Imamuddin, 2 L.L.J. 188; see S. 113 (1).

(4) Chelikani (Raja) v. Chelikani, 5 M. 678 P.C.; Kuruppai v. Shankarnarayan, 27 M. 82; Vyatinath v. Yeggia, ib., 300 (312, 314); see S. 113 (2).

(5) Radhakant v. Nazina, 45 C. 733 P.C.; Methasam v. Rewachand, 45 C. 666 P.C.

(6) Laximon v. Mullar Row, 2 Kn. 60 (63); Prit Koer v. Mahadeo, 22 C. 85 P.C.; Soshi Kumar v. Chandra Kumar, 35 C.L.J. 348 (354); Ram Ghulam v. Ram Behari, 18 A. 90; Gopal v. Jawand Singh, (1919) P.W.R. 30 : 49 I.C. 1007; Lala Jagan v. Mathura Prasad, 39 I.C. (O.) 498; Muniswami v. Maruthammal, 34 M. 211.

(d) Save as provided by the next section, property acquired with the help of the nucleus of ancestral property:[1]

(e) Property which, though separately acquired, is thrown into the common stock.[2]

(2) Such property may be called coparcenary property;

(3) And members of the family possessing a share therein may be called coparceners.

1000. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by case law. The terms "Joint property," "Joint family property" and "Joint ancestral family property" are generally used to designate property which belongs to the members of the family. But these three terms do not always convey the same thing. As pointed out by Beaman, J., the term "joint property" connotes to an English lawyer merely the sense it bears in English Law, namely, that the property is held by any two or more persons jointly, and its characteristic is survivorship. But in India, the term "joint property" conveys a good deal more, since it means that it is the property of members of a joint Hindu family. Then again, the term "joint family property" is not the same thing as the term "joint ancestral property" since family property may be joint as in clauses (b) to (e) without being ancestral, and it may be ancestral without being joint. There must have been a nucleus of joint family property before joint ancestral property can come into existence. Because the word "ancestral" connotes descent and therefore, of course, its pre-existence. Such nucleus is, however, by no means necessary for a joint family property.

The courts draw some distinction between these two species of property, holding that, in joint ancestral property, the members acquire a right by birth; whereas no such presumption is made in respect of property which is merely joint without being ancestral. But there is really no real difference between the two. As Beaman, J., said: "Bating all presumptions, I state as my opinion without much fear of serious contradiction, that where property is admitted or poved to have been joint family property, it is subject to exactly the same legal incidents in every respect as property which is admitted or proved to be ancestral joint family property."[3]

Clause (a). Joint Ancestral Property.

1001. Then again joint ancestral property is not the same thing as "ancestral property" which means property which a person inherits from a direct male ancestor not more than three degrees higher than himself, that is to say, from his father, his father's father, and his father's father's father. Property inherited by him from his other relations is his separate property. The essential feature of the one is that if the person inheriting it has sons, grandsons or great-grandsons, they all become joint owners with him, whereas in the case of the other, they acquire no such interest. In other words, the son of the heir of unobstructed heritage acquires in his father's inheritance an interest by birth, so that his power of alienation is subject to his rights, whereas in property which he has inherited by obstructed succession he has the same unrestricted right of alienation as he possesses over his self-acquisitions.[1] This distinction is conveyed by the text-writers by designating the two properties as apratibandh or sapratibandh, terms which have been translated as unobstructed and obstructed, but which connote the same sense as the terms "vested" and "contingent" of English Law.

(1) Methasam v. Rewachand, 45 C. 666 P.C.; Gobinda v. Radha, 31 A. 477.

(2) Radhakant v. Nazina, 45 C. 733 P. C.; Shibaprasad v. Prayagkumari, 59 C. 1399 (1416, 1418) P.C.; Laldas v. Motibai, 10 Bom.L.R. 175 (177); Hari Das v. Velji, 16 Bom.L.R. 584 : 20 I.C. 476; Indat Shai v. Shiam Bahadur, 17 C.W.N. 509 P.C. : 17 I.C. 760 P.C.; Chelasami v. Chelasami, (1922) M.W.N. 487 : (1922) M. 423.

(3) Karsandas v. Gangabai, 32 B. 479 (491).

"Apratibandh" and "Sapratibandh" Properties.

These terms are thus explained in the Mitakshara: "Heritage is of two sorts: unobstructed (apratibandh) or liable to obstruction (sapratibandh). The wealth of the father or of the paternal grandfather becomes the property of his sons or of his grandsons in the right of their being his sons or grandsons, and that is an inheritance not liable to obstruction. But property devolves on parents (or uncles), brothers and the rest, upon the demise of the owner, if there be no male issue, and thus the actual existence of the son and the survival of the owner are impediments to the succession; and on their ceasing, the property devolves on the successor in right of his being uncle or brother. This is an inheritance subject to obstruction. The same holds good in respect of their sons and other descendants."[2]

Nilkanth describes the same terms as follows:

"Where the life of the owner of the property or that of his sons, etc., is interposed, the wealth is called obstructed heritage (sapratibandh); for example the wealth of uncles and the like; but where ownership accrues to sons, etc., from relationship to the owner, without the necessity of having recourse to other means of acquiring wealth, that is unobstructed heritage (apratibandh); for example, the father's wealth."[3]

Dayabhaga.

1002. This division of heritage is not recognized by Jimut Vahan according to whom the right to succession accrues only on the death of the previous owner.[4] The result being as previously stated, that while the heir in Bengal has the unrestricted right of alienation uncontrolled by his son, the heir under the Mitakshara cannot alienate his unobstructed heritage without reference to the rights of his issue. For this reason property acquired by unobstructed heritage is called "ancestral property" and whereas property acquired otherwise, as by inheritance, from any other relation, such as an ancestor more than three degrees remote, or from or through a female, as for instance, a daughter's son, a collateral relation or from a maternal ancestor is not ancestral property nor are the heirs or male descendants coparceners with him in respect of such property.[5]

It will be thus seen that property which may be self-acquired of the father will become ancestral upon its inheritance by his son,[6] and such ancestral property must necessarily be coparcenary as regards his own

(1) Nund Coomar v. Ruzeeooddeen, 18 W.R. 477; Rayadar, (In re), 3 M.H.C. R. 455; Jawahir v. Guyan Singh, 4 Agra 78. The rule is the same whether the son be one by adoption; Babu v. Ratnoji, 21 B. 319 (325).

(2) Mit. I-I-3; see these terms explained per Couch, C.J., in Nund Coomar v. Ruzeeooddeen, 18 W.R. 477.

(3) Mayukh, IV-II-2 (Mandlik), p. 37.

(4) Mandlik's H.L., 359, 360.

(5) Nund Coomar v. Ruzeeooddeen, 18 W.R. 477; Gurumurthi v. Gurammal, 32 M. 88; Mhd. Husain v. Kisva, I.L.R. (1937) A. 655.

(6) Ram Narain v. Pertum Singh, 20 W.R. 189; Chaturbhooj v. Dharamsi, 9 B. 438 (450).

issue, though it is not so as regards his own collaterals, since they have not interest in it by birth.[1]

Both the terms, "ancestral property" as well as "coparcenary property" are thus technical terms and bear a special meaning at variance with their etymological sense.

What Ancestral Property Comprises.

1003. "Ancestral property" not only includes the property inherited from an ancestor, as previously stated, but by accession it includes all the profits therefrom which may have been added to the corpus.[2] So where a person blended in his account profits made from ancestral and those made from his self-acquired property, the court held that augmentations which blended, as they accrued, with the original estate partook of the character of that estate.[3] All property acquired out of the income of ancestral property is itself ancestral, whether acquired before or after the birth of a son.[4]

Clause (b).

1004. It is now settled that in order to stamp a property acquired with the aid of joint property with that character the aid must be substantial and not merely illusory.[5] If, suppose, a coparcener errects a substantial house costing Rs. 30,000 on an ancestral site upon which stood a thatched house which had fallen into disrepair, it would not on that account become the joint property of the family.[6] The case would, however, be different if the building was erected in spite of the protest of the other coparceners.[7]

Clause (c).

1005. Joint Acquisition.—The question whether property acquired by members of a joint family without the aid of ancestral nucleus would be their joint or the self-acquired property is not free from doubt. In one case Birdwood, J., held it to be the self-acquired property;[8] but this case has been dissented from in a case in which the contrary was held possible if the property was treated as joint family property, which would be presumed from the mere fact of their jointness as members of a joint family.[9] In this view the question resolves itself into one of presumption which may, however, be rebutted.

Property may become joint if it is acquired by the joint exertions of the members of the joint family, though there be no nucleus to assist in its acquisitions.[10] Such property becomes joint property of the family and not only of those who acquire it. Nor can they set up amongst themselves a sub-coparcenary for the purpose of acquiring and

(1) Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 (198); Gurumurthi v. Gurammal, 32 M. 88 (90).

(2) Goroo Churn v. Golukmoney, Fult. 166; Lakshman v. Jamnabai, 6 B. 225; Mahomed Siddick v. Haji Ahmed, 10 B. 11 (16).

(3) Mahomed Siddick v. Haji Ahmed, 10 B. 11 (16, 17); Tulsamma v. Guntupalli, 48 M. 597.

(4) Jugmohan Das v. Mangal Das, 10 B. 528.

(5) Babubhai v. Ujamlal, I.L.R. (1937) B. 708, following C. Sankaranarayana v. Tangaratna, (1930) M. 662.

(6) Peria Karuppan v. Arunachelam, 50 M. 582 (587), following Vithoba v. Hariba, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 54; Upendra Nath v. Umesh Chunder, 12 C. L.J. 25.

(7) Subbiah v. Gundlapudi, 46 M. 104, explained in Peria Karuppan v. Arunachelam, 50 M. 582 (589).

(8) Chatturbhooj v. Dharamsi, 9 B. 438 (445).

(9) Haridas v. Devkuvar, 50 B. 443 (448), following Laldas v. Motibai, 10 Bom.L.R. 175; Karsondas v. Gangabai, 32 B. 479, dissenting from contra in Chatturbhooj v. Dharamsi, 9 B. 438 (445); Krishnamurthi v. Seetama, (1937) M. 29 (30, 31).

(10) Haridas v. Devkuvarbai, 50 B. 443.

enjoying the result of their joint labour to the exclusion of other members. As Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., said, a joint undivided Hindu family is purely a creature of Hindu Law and cannot be created by act of parties save in so far as the act of adoption may have that effect.[1]

Clause (d).

1006. It has already been seen that property acquired with the help of nucleus of joint property becomes joint only when the joint nucleus is substantial and not merely nominal.

For further commentary, see under next section.

Clause (e).

1007. Property Blended.—Separate property may become joint if it is "blended" or "thrown into the common stock." Where a member of a joint family blends his self-acquired property with property of the joint family, either by bringing his self-acquired property into joint family account, or by bringing joint family property into his separate account, all the property so blended becomes joint family property.[2] But where it is denied that any property is joint, the burden of proving it to be so will naturally be upon him who asserts it. The question when property is "blended" or "thrown into the common stock" does not depend upon physical blending or intermixture, since this may be impossible. What those words mean is merely this that the member, by his own volition and intention treats his separate acquisition as joint, waiving or surrendering his own special right in it as separate property. It is a question of intention manifested by his acts and conduct,[3] as also the acts and conduct of his coparceners. No consideration of motive is required or need be proved to establish this mode of jointness; since members of a joint family, it may be, out of affection and regard for one another, desire to treat their individual acquisitions as joint. As already observed, the question is one of intention, deducible from the words, act and conduct of the parties. But in this connection, the two principles may at times be in conflict. The one is whether the conduct points to the blending, and the other whether it is not a mere evidence of affection and kindness from which no inference detrimental to the rights of a person could be fairly drawn. If two relations having some such property of their own blend it and treat it as joint, the case presents no difficulty; but if a relation having little or nothing to offer is treated by another with kindness, it could not of itself be regarded as amounting to the admission of his coparcenary right. As the Privy Council in one case remarked: "It would not be reasonable or conducive to the peace and welfare of families to construe acts, done out of kindness and affection, to the disadvantage of the doer of them by inferring a gift when it is plain that no gift could have been intended."[4] There is, of course, no presumption in favour of blending. On the other hand, there is presumption that property of which a person is in possession is his self-

(1) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149.

(2) Rajni Kanta v. Jaga Mohan, 50 C. 439 (444, 445) P.C., followed in Shibaprasad v. Prayagkumari, 59 C. 1399 (1418) P.C.; but see Atar Singh v. Thakur Singh, 35 C. 1039 (1045, 1046) P.C., to the same effect, Chabil Das v. Ram Das, 11 Bom.L.R. 606 (613), following Lal Bahadur v. Kanhai Lal, 29 A. 244 P.C; cf. S. 66, Trusts Act (II of 1882).

(3) Atar Singh v. Thakur Singh, 35 C. 1039 (1046) P.C.

(4) Muddun Gopal v. Khikhinda, 18 C. 341 P.C.; Janki Nath v. Janki Nath, 2 A.L.J. 223.

acquisition.[1] Consequently, he who sets up blending must prove it.[2] There is of course no blending where all moneys are kept in one bank, but the parties concerned have separate accounts.[3]

Property treated as joint.

1008. Blending refers to properties, whether ancestral or self-acquired, but property acquired by the joint labours of two or more members of a joint family may still become joint, if they intend that it shall be so treated. In the one case, there might be blending without intention, in the other there must be proof of intention on the part of the acquirers. There is still another case, in which property owned or acquired by one member might become joint, if he intends that it shall be so treated. In this case, there is need of a greater caution in not too readily inferring jointness from an act of mere affection and kindness, since the characteristic of this property consists not in the contribution of joint labour to its acquisition, as in the conduct of one against whom the right is claimed. An extreme case of this kind arose where one N had four sons—A, B, C and D—all residents of the village of Dongre in the Ratnagiri District where they had a small house, but no lands or other property. About 40 years ago one of them A, left his native village and set up a school at Bhynder in the Thana District where he afterwards opened a shop and commenced trading in salt. A year or two later, his brother B joined him, opened a school in a neighbouring village and commenced to act as broker at Bhynder where he died leaving the defendant then a year old. Later on he was removed to his native village and on coming of age he managed his household business. Two other brothers C and D later on joined A and assisted him in his business. All the three A, C and D used to remit money to their parents at Dongre where their children were married. C and his sons then separated in mess and sued A and his sons, D and B's son for partition, in which B's son equally claimed a quarter share. A defended the suit on the ground of his separate acquisition but on the decree being passed against him, he did not appeal. The claim of B's son was rejected, but the High Court decreed his claim on the ground that he had been treated by his brothers as a member of the joint family, like one of their own sons, and that he had been placed in management of their family property and dealings at Dongre. The court held that the right to share did not depend upon the establishment of the fact of actual help having been rendered at the principal place of business. The fact that B's son was treated as standing in the place of his father B and served the common interests of the family by staying at home to look after the household with the consent of all the three brothers entitled him to a share which was decreed.[4]

1009. It will be observed that in this case emphasis was laid more on the contribution of labour than on the fact of treatment. So it has been observed in another case: "For the formation of a coparcenary in Hindu Law such a nucleus is not absolutely necessary, provided the persons constituting it stand in the relation of father and son or other relationship requisite for a coparcenary system, and these persons by living, messing and worshipping together and throwing all the property

(1) S. 110, Evidence Act.
(2) Hemchandra v. Matilal, 60 C. 1253. (A Dayabhaga Case.)
(3) Nutbehari v. Nanilal, (1937) P.C. 61.
(4) Raghunath v. Mahadev, (1896) B. P.J. 503. To the same effect, Krishnaji v. Moro, 15 B. 32; Muddun Gopal v. Khikhinda Koer, 18 C. 341 (348) P.C.

jointly into one common stock manifest their intention to deal with one another and with outsiders as members of a coparcenary system under the Hindu Law.[1] It must not be an act merely done out of kindnesss and affection.[2] (§ 1007.) A case on the other side of the line was decided by their Lordships, in which one Ram Narain, a junior member of joint family, had, as a pleader, amassed a fortune, out of which he purchased properties at Hardoi in the name of his son-in-law, the husband of his only child. He maintained an omnibus account book in which he blended his professional earnings with his receipts and payments on account of joint properties from 1864-90, when he became manager of the joint family. In 1889 he had made a statement to the effect that he had gifted the Hardoi villages to his son-in-law. On his death in 1900, the question arising whether the properties gifted were his self-acquisitions, the Privy Council held that they were so, and in upholding the gift they were influenced by the fact that Ram Narain had abundant moneys of his own to purchase those villages and that "the fact that he blended those that were not otherwise used does not mean that every entry of a purchase in the book is an entry of the transaction so dealt with, that it must be garded as joint property."[3] In other words, the entry in the books was merely a piece of evidence to prove a fact which might otherwise be disproved.

1010. No Blending.—To create a title upon the ground that the owner of a property threw it into the common stock abandoning his exclusive title in favour of his brothers, it is necessary for the latter to show a clear intention on the part of the owner to abandon his separate rights and throw it into the common stock.[4] Such was the case in which the evidence showed that the names of the brothers of a single donee under a deed of gift had been entered in the revenue papers along with his own, that on certain occasions the donee associated with his brothers in suits relating to the property in question, and that the donees made certain payments out of the income of the property to his brothers; but the court held that these facts did not support an inference as a matter of law that the donee had thrown the property gifted to him into the common stock, or that the donee was estopped from questioning his brother's rights.[5] Such was the case of one Kuldip who treated his younger brother Sadhu Ram, who was born deaf and dumb and so incapable of inheriting property, as if he had been under no incapacity. His name was entered as joint owner in the revenue record, and documents were issued and taken in his name. For a number of years his case had been treated by the family as one which might be cured. Ultimately there being no hope of his cure, a family arrangement was entered into by which he was set aside as disqualified. Sadhu Ram's collateral sued for his estate. The High Court upheld the claim on the ground that Kuldip had by his conduct admitted Sadhu Ram's title and that it was good even as a family arrangement or by virtue of the law of limitation. But their judgment was reversed by the Privy Council who held that acts of kindness should not be construed into acts to the disadvantage of the doer and that Kuldip's conduct was throughout that of a brother who

(1) Lal Das v. Moti Bai, 10 Bom. L. R. 175 (177).

(2) Muddun Gopal v. Khikhinda Koer, 18 C. 341 (348) P.C.; Janki Nath v. Janki Nath, 2 A.L.J. 223.

(3) Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal, 40 A. 159 (173) P.C.

(4) Dharam Chand v. Amba, (1898) B.P.J. 308.

(5) Muddun Gopal v. Khikhinda Koer, 18 C. 341 P.C.; Uma Shankar v. Aisha Khatun, 45 A. 729.

was anxious to secure to his younger brother the share to which he would have been entitled if not disqualified: "Kuldip naturally and properly treated this afflicted brother as a member of the family and entitled to equal rights until it became absolutely clear that his malady was incurable. Their Lordships think that it would not be reasonable or conducive to the peace and welfare of families to construe acts done out of kindness and affection to the disadvantage of the doer of them, by inferring a gift when it is plain that no gift could have been intended."[1]

1011. In another case, the plaintiff sued the defendant, his paternal uncle for possession of the impartible estate of which the plaintiff's deceased brother had been the last holder. On his death the defendant took possession of the estate and sat upon the gaddi with the plaintiff's consent and his name was duly recorded in mutation proceedings. He afterwards sued to eject the defendant who relied upon the plaintiff's conduct and mutation in his favour as displacing his title. Their Lordships held that the mutation did not amount to a transfer, nor did it create an estoppel against him in that the plaintiff made no misrepresentation to the defendant altering his position in any way to his prejudice, nor was there anything in the transaction to create a trust, though it might have set in motion the bar of limitation which was not sufficient to displace his title. Turning next to the plaintiff's admissions their Lordships said: "It is not now contended that the mutation operated as a transfer. It would be absurd to suppose that the plaintiff made any misrepresentation to the defendant; neither was the situation of the defendant altered in any way to his prejudice. No consideration was given by the defendant, nor is there anything in the transaction to create a trust. Possibly, it might have given the defendant a possession on which time would run; but if so, time has not run long enough to create a bar.... A gratuitous admission may be withdrawn unless there is some obligation not to withdraw it; and there is not here any title on which such an admission can rest. If then there is no transfer, no estoppel, no bar by time, no trust, why should not the plaintiff assert his legal rights, whatever he may, in ignorance of the facts or in deference to his uncle or for any other cause not injurious to the defendant, have admitted."[2]

But this was a case of Moslems not subject to the joint family law. But in the case of a Hindu family where a self-acquisition might be made a part of joint property, an admission before the Settlement Officer was treated by their Lordships as altering the incidents of a separate estate.[3]

The same view guided their Lordships' decision in another case where they found the acquirer to have blended his income with that of the joint family.[4]

1012. The mere blending of two accounts with a common banker does not have that legal effect if the relations keep separate accounts, and the

---

(1) Muddun Gopal v. Khikhinda Koer, 18 C. 341 (348) P.C.

(2) Muhammad Imam Ali v. Hussian Khan, 26 C. 81 (100, 101) P.C.

(3) Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, 32 A. 415 (426) P.C.

(4) Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiyalal, 29 A. 244 (255) P.C., distinguished in Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal, 40 A. 159 (164) P.C.

blending is more due to convenience rather than the intention to obliterate evidence of separateness.[1]

1013. Government grant.—Property acquired from a grant from Government is unquestionably self-acquired,[2] unless it was merely restoration of a confiscated grant intended to be for the benefit of the family[3] or is a grant made in consideration of the services rendered by the family or at its expense. But a party cannot sue Government for the modification of its grant.[4] By an order of Government known as Lord Canning's Proclamation of 1858, all property in the soil of Oudh was confiscated by Government, out of which an estate was transferred to one Gouri Shanker, the head of a banking firm which had supported Government in suppressing the mutiny. In holding that the grant enured for the benefit of his family, the Privy Council said: "As regards that part of the property granted to Gouri Shankar which, if any, was not previously part of the family estates, it cannot be held to have been the separate self-acquired property of Gouri Shanker within the meaning of Hindu Law. It was granted as a reward for loyalty and for the support and assistance rendered to British officers; such services as those referred to in Gouri Shanker's petition could not have been rendered without the use of funds which must be presumed to have been those of the joint family."[5] So where an estate was allowed to continue in possession of its manager, and was at the settlement, granted to "the loyal members of his family," the Privy Council held the grant to be for the grantee's family generally, and not to any persons as persona designata.[6] The question whether a Government grant was personal to the grantee or to him and his family is one of construction and intention to be inferred from the terms of the grant and its surrounding circumstances.[7] It may be that the grant is personal. Even then it is open to the grantee to treat it as a joint family asset and it becomes so if the grantee constitutes himself as trustee for his family[8] or by a family arrangement[9] or by a family custom.[10]

1014. Impartible Estate.—The law of joint family as necessarily modified by the law of the impartibility of an estate would be found set out in Chapter XVI.

---

(1) Nutbehari v. Nanilal, (1937) P.C. 61 (66), approving Periakaruppan v. Arunachelam, 50 M. 582 (591, 592).

(2) Katama Nachiar v. Rajah of Shivagunga, 9 M. I. A. 543 (610); Beer Pertab v. Rajender, 12 M.I.A. 1 (34), followed in Ram Nundun v. Janki Koer, 29 C. 828 (851) P.C.; Sookraj v. Government, 14 M.I.A. 112; Bahu Rani v. Rajendra, 8 Luck. 121 P. C.; Hurpershad v. Sheo Dyal, 26 W.R. 55 P. C.; Brij Indar v. Janki, 5 I.A. 1; Shere Bahadur v. Dario, 3 C. 645; Jagannatha v. Ramabhadra, 11 M. 480; Mallan v. Purshothama, 12 M. 287; Subbaraya v. Kamu, 23 M. 47; Gunnaiyan v. Kamachi, 26 M. 339 (and cases cited); Poona v. Nirpat Singh, 2 C.P.L.R. 133.

(3) Hurpershad v. Sheo Dyal, 26 W. R. 55; Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, 32 A. 415 P.C.; Beer Pertab Singh v. Rajendar, 12 M.I.A. 1 (37); Sookraj v. v. Government, 14 M.I.A. 112 (125); Narayana v. Chengalamma, 10 M. 1 (8) P.C. (really a case of release of its reversionary rights by the Crown); Ram Nundun v. Janki Koer, 29 C. 828 P.C.

(4) East India Co. v. Syed Ally, 7 M. I.A. 555 (578).

(5) Hurpershad v. Sheo Dyal, 26 W. R. 55 (58) P.C.

(6) Govindrao v. Sita Ram, 21 A. 53 P.C.

(7) Baijnath v. Tej Bali Singh, 38 A. 590 (608).

(8) Sookraj v. Government, 14 M. I. A. 112 (127); Hardeo Bux v. Jawahir Singh, 3 C. 522 (538) P.C.; Shere Bahadur v. Darbao Kuar, 3 C. 645 (652) P.C.; Ramanand v. Raghunath, 8 C. 769 (782) P.C.

(9) Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, 32 A. 415 (426) P.C.; Periasami v. Periasami, 1 M. 312 P.C.

(10) Bhujangrav v. Malojirav, 5 B. H.C.R. 161 (169); Madhavrav v. Atmaram, 15 B. 519 (524).

Acquisition under father's will.

1015. Where the father gifts or devises his ancestral property to his son, he cannot impart to the donee more than what he has got, and as such, his gift or devise does not convert the property, ancestral in the hands of the father, to self-acquired property in the hands of the son. But where the property he donates or bequeaths is self-acquired property, the question whether it assumes that character in the hands of the son had been, at one time, the subject of sharp textual[1] and judicial conflict[2] upon which the Privy Council remained non-committal,[3] but this conflict has now been set at rest by the force of the Legislature that has placed all gifts and devises under the statute law.[4]

Self-acquired property defined.

115. (1) The following property constitutes the self-acquisition of a member of a joint family:—

(a) Property acquired by inheritance from a lineal ancestor more than three degrees remote or from a collateral or from or through a female relation;[5]

(b) Property acquired by gift or devise;[6]

(c) Property acquired without detriment to the joint estate;[7]

(d) Property which is the gains of learning or science, except that saved by S. 4 of the Hindu Gains of Learning Act, 1930;[8]

(e) Property which by its nature or extent or the mode of its acquisition is incapable of joint ownership.

(2) Where self-acquired property is blended with joint property in such a manner that it is impossible to separate the two, the whole may be presumed to be joint property.[9]

Illustrations.

(a) A, a member of a coparcenary, receives the gift of a village from his father-in-law as his marriage dowry. The village is his self-acquisition.

(b) The father of a coparcenary gives half of his self-acquired estate to his son A, and the other half to his daughter B, using appropriate words to convey an absolute estate. The estate is the self-acquisitions of A and the stridhan of B.

(c) A, a member of a coparcenary, insured his life and paid the insurance premia out of his salary. The insurance money is his self-acquisition.[10]

(d) A, who had received a special education out of the joint funds, acquires property out of his savings made in the practice of his business, as a civil servant, vakil, contractor, or an astrologer. The property is his self-acquisition.

(e) A purchased land at a court auction in execution of a decree for money against a coparcenership. It is his self-acquisition, for under S. 66 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code no evidence is admissible to show that the purchase was on account of the joint family.

(f) A member of a coparcenary receives a grant of an impartible estate. The estate is his self-acquisition as by its nature it is incapable of joint ownership.

1016. Analogous Law.—The following texts support this section:—

(1) See Hindu Code, (3rd Ed.), §1221, pp. 609, 610.

(2) Ib., §§ 1229, 1230, pp. 615, 616.

(3) Lal Ram Singh v. Deputy Commissioner, 45 A. 596 (604, 605).

(4) S. 2 (d), Transfer of Property Act; cf. S. 57 of the Succession Act as amended by Act XVIII of 1929, cf. Ib., S. 95.

(5) Mit., Ch. I-I-3.

(6) Mit., Ch. I-I-27; Mit., I, IV, 2 Manu, IX-206. §§ 1015, 1022.

(7) Manu, IX-207; Mit. I-IV, 2, 6

(8) Act XXX of 1930, which came into force on the 25th July, 1930.

(9) § 1007.

(10) Mahadeva v. Rama, 13 M. L. J. 75; Rajamma v. Ramkrishnayya, 29 M. 121.

Manu.—"206. Wealth, however acquired by learning, belongs exclusively to any one of them who acquired it: so does anything given by a friend or received on account of marriage or presented as a mark of respect to a guest."

"207. What a brother has acquired by labour or skill without using the patrimony, he shall not, unless by his free will, put it into parcenary with his brethren since in fact it was acquired by himself."[1]

Narad.—"6. Property gained by valour or belonging to a wife and the gains of science are three kinds of wealth not subject to partition and so is a favour conferred by the father exempt from partition.

"7. When the mother has bestowed a portion of her property on any of her sons from affection, the rule is the same in that case also, for the mother is equal to the father as regards her competence to bestow gifts."[2]

Yadnyavalkya.—"Whatever is acquired by the coparcener himself, without detriment to the father's estate[3] as a present from a friend, or a gift at nuptials does not appertain to the co-heirs. Nor shall he, who recovers hereditary property which had been taken away give it up to the parceners nor what has been gained by science."[4]

"The wealth which is given to one by parents belongs to him alone."[5]

"2. That which had been acquired by the coparcener himself without any detriment to the goods of his father or mother, or which has been received by him from a friend, or obtained by marriage shall not appertain to the co-heirs or brethren. Any property which had descended in succession from ancestors and had been seized by others and remained unrecovered by the father and the rest through inability or for any other cause, he among the sons who recovers it with the acquiescence of the rest shall not give up to the brethren or other co-heirs: the person recovering it shall take such property."

Mitakshara.—"6. Here the phrase 'anything acquired by himself without detriment to the father's estate' must be everywhere understood and it is thus connected with each member of the sentence, what is obtained from a friend without detriment to the paternal estate, what is received in marriage without waste of the patrimony, what is redeemed of the hereditary estate without expenditure of ancestral property, what is gained by science without use of the father's goods consequently obtained from a friend as return of an obligation conferred at the charge of the patrimony, what is received at a marriage concluded in form, termed Asur, or the like, what is recovered of the hereditary estate by the expenditure of the father's goods, what is earned by science acquired at the expense of ancestral wealth, all that must be shared with the whole of the brethren and with the father."[6]

1017. It will be seen from the foregoing quotations that the texts on the subject of self-acquisition are conflicting—one text gives the acquirer all the gains of his learning though not of science, while another gives him only that which he had acquired without detriment to the father's estate. The Mitakshara explains that the latter text underlies the former and that nothing belongs to the acquirer whether acquired by learning or science unless it is acquired without detriment to the patrimony. There was some reason, though not a very strong one, for this distinction, since an education given by the father out of his income stands on a different footing to that given by funds procured by mortgage or sale of his estate. Apart from this, a distinction was made

(1) Manu, IX-206, 207.
(2) Narad, XIII-6, 7.
(3) Includes also the estate of any undivided coparcener.—Smriti Chandrika, VII-28.
(4) II-119, 120, cited and explained in Mit., I-IV,—1-31. Dayabhag likewise devotes a whole chapter to this subject; VI-II-40.
(5) Yad., II-123 (Mandlik), p. 216 Virmitrodaya amplifies this by saying "that any gifts within due bounds made by the father to his separated sons out of affection are not to be disputed by the son born after partition, and that the same rule applies in the case of affectionate gifts by the father to his sons before partition. These gifts are to be considered as the peculiar property of the sons and as such impartible."—I-222, cited Mandlik, p. 216, f.-n.
(6) Mit., I-IV, 2-12.

between "learning" and "science" it being held that a property acquired by one who had merely received a general education stood on a different footing to that acquired by one who had received technical education out of the family funds. But this distinction was artificial and anomalous and was commented on by the Privy Council who said, "In each case the member of the joint family is indebted to the family funds for something; in the former, for the nurture, which has made him strong to labour; in the latter, for the professional education in addition, which has made him also skilled in art. Conversely, the dull coparcener who learns but turns his learning to poor account, must share his gains such as they are, while his brother, who learns without teaching and acquires professional skill by intuition only, keeps his greater gains for himself."[1]

The distinction between a general and a technical education has been eliminated by the legislature which ensures to the acquirer the fruit of all his labour, irrespective of the nature of the education he had received out of the family funds.[2] But the Act omits to resolve other doubts; for one thing it does not expressly repeal the rule as to detriment, while being declaredly not retrospective it will affect only acquisitions made since its enactment and thus while removing one anomaly create another. Further it does not affect the burden of proof which is the source of great hardship to the acquirer's heirs who are called upon to rebut the presumption of jointness of an estate so acquired long after the acquirer is dead.

1018. Both the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag devote a chapter each to the subject of self-acquisition. Their substance is to exempt all acquisitions made without detriment to the joint estate. The rest is merely illustrative and most of the illustrations refer to occupations now no longer pursued. Thus the Dayabhag gives the following list as constituting the "gains of science"[3]:—

(1) Prize for the solution of a difficulty.
(2) Fee for teaching a pupil.
(3) Fee for officiating as a priest.
(4) Prize for solving a scientific question.
(5) Deciding a litigated question.
(6) Prize won in a literary debate.
(7) Prize won in a reading competition.
(8) Games of artists and artizans.
(9) Gambling gains.
(10) Gains of valour and soldier's booty.[4]
(11) Marriage presents.
(12) Personalia.[5]
(13) Books.
(14) House, garden, and the like, constructed on the site of the old family dwelling.
(15) Lost ancestral property, recovered by one's labour, ability and exertion.[6]

Jimut Vahan emphasizes the fact that anything gained by a person as a reward for learning or valour or by the application of knowledge or skill[7] is his own.

---

(1) Gokalchand v. Hukamchand, 2 L. 40 (51) P.C.
(2) Act XXX of 1930 which came into force on the 25th day of July, 1930.
(3) Dayabhag, VI-II, 2-12.
(4) Dayabhag, VI-II, 20.
(5) "Clothes, vehicles, ornaments prepared food, water, woman, and furniture for repose or for meals are declared not liable to distribution."—Ib., § 23.
(6) All the text writers quote similar instances; see Mayukh, IV-IV, §§ 1-4 (Mandlik), pp. 39, 40, 214-216.
(7) Dayabhag, VI-II § 17.

1019. What is a Self-acquisition?—The question when any property acquired by a member of a coparcenary becomes joint property of the family has already been considered. And in considering that question references have been made to cases when such acquisitions fail to become a part of the corpus of the joint estate. But the law of self-acquisition had attained sufficient importance even in the medieval age, when separate chapters were devoted to the subject. It has since assumed much greater importance, and therefore, calls for separate notice. So far as the sacred texts are concerned, their conjoint effect is to put all acquisitions, howsoever made, to the single test—were they made without detriment to the joint estate, which means that if they were made without material draft on the family fund, then they cannot be treated as an accretion to the family estate and must be regarded as the separate property of the coparcener.

Early cases and the Present Rule.

1020. The precepts on the subject of self-acquisition were somewhat narrowly interpreted in the early cases in which the courts were inclined to the view that any assistance from the joint estate, however indirect and inconsiderable, was a "detriment to the estate" within the meaning of the texts, so as to render the product of all such individual effort equally joint property.[1] But it was pointed out that the law must not be divorced from common-sense and the acquirer deprived of his self-acquisition, unless it involved material detriment to the estate, or to put it differently, that all self-acquisitions should be held to belong to the acquirer, unless it could be shown that they were made with the material assistance of the joint fund.[2] Such question was considered with reference to the more general principle whether individual acquisitions could be regarded as accretions to the joint estate. In other words, a coparcener's acquisitions cannot be treated as joint merely because they were the result of a general education imparted to the acquirer at the family expense, but only when he received the special education or training which enabled him to acquire them. The special training given at the family expense and the acquisitions must be interrelated to each other as cause and effect. As the Privy Council observed: "Partly in the hands of the commentators and partly under the decisions of the courts, changes may be traced in the rules laid down with regard to gains of science, and these changes have been in the direction of narrowing the category of partible gains. From maintenance out of

---

(1) Chalakonda v. Chalakonda, 2 M. H.C.R. 56; Gangadharudu v. Durasulu, 7 M.H.C.R. 47; Mancha v. Narotari Das, 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 1.

(2) Nana Narain v. Huree Punth, 9 M.I.A. 96; Pauliem v. Pauliem, 1 M. 252 P.C.; Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiyalal, 29 A. 244 P.C.; Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal, 40 A. 159 P.C.; Sobunslal v. Harbuns Lal, 1 B.S.R. 121; Partab v. Tilakdharee, 1 B.S.R. 236; Koul Nath v. Jagrup, 5 B.S.R. 14; Muddan Gopal v. Ram Buksh, 6 W.R. 71; Bishen Perkash v. Bawa Misser, 10 W.R. 287 O. A. 20 W.R. 137; Rameshwar v. Lachmi Prasad, 7 C.W.N. 688; Subhayya v. Surayya, 10 M. 251; Gunnaiyan v. Kamakshi, 26 M. 339 (353); Tottempudi v. Tottempudi, 27 M. 228; Avayambal v. Kamalambal, 19 M.L.J. 65; Gangabai v. Vamanaji, 2 B.H.C.R. 301; Narottam v. Narsandas, 3 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 6; Purshotam v. Vasudeo, 8 B. H.C.R. (O.C.) 196; Lakshman v. Jamnabai, 6 B. 225 (240, 243); Jugmohandas v. Mangal Das, 10 B. 528 (578, 580); Hanmantapa v. Jivubai, 24 B. 547; Chabildas v. Ramdas, 11 Bom.L.R. 66; Lachmi v. Debi Prasad, 20 A. 435; Durg Dat v. Ganesh Dat, 32 A. 305.

family funds during the period of education, the basis of partibility changed to the receipt of the education itself at the family expense, and then education generally was narrowed to specialised education, which is now the basis.''[1]

Cl. (a) Obstructed Inheritance.

1021. It is agreed that all acquisitions made by what is known as ''obstructed heritage'' must be regarded as falling into this class (§§ 995-1006.). Now, since all inheritance to a male ancestor more than three degrees remote from the heir is an obstructed heritage, it follows that property inherited from an ancestor other than the father, grandfather and the great-grandfather becomes a person's separate property and similarly would be the property, inherited from any collateral such as a brother or a paternal cousin,[2] uncle,[3] grand-uncle and the like; or that inherited from or through a female such as the mother[4] a maternal grandfather[5] maternal great-grandfather, father-in-law[6] or the like[7]

It has already been stated that such property is only the self-acquired property in the hands of the heir, and that it would become joint property in the hands of his own heir, unless it was acquired by a gift or devise (§§ 1015-1022). This is in accordance with clause (b).

Cl. (b) Acquisition by Gift or Devise.

1022. All property from whomsoever acquired by a gift or devise becomes self-acquired property in the hands of the donee or devisee. Consequently, property so obtained even from the father, grandfather or the great-grandfather would be self-acquired, though if the same property be obtained by inheritance, it would be ''ancestral'' and ''joint''[8] (§ 1015.) But, of course, in such a case the question may arise whether the gift or devise was intended to be made to a persona designata or to a family. There is no presumption that such acquisi-

---

(1) Gokal Chand v. Hukkam Chand, 2 L. 40 (51) P.C.; Metharam v. Rewachand, 45 C. 666 P.C.

(2) Rayadur v. Rayadur, 3 M. H. C R. 455; Karuppai v. Sankara, 27 M. 300 F.B. (explaining Venkayyama v. Venkataramanayyama, 25 M. 678 P. C.); Gurumurthi v. Gurammal, 32 M. 88; Timanacharyan v. Balacharya, 4 Bom. L. R. 383; Harihar Pershad v. Bholi Pershad, 6 C.L.J. 383; Hardwar v. Ram Milan, 20 O.C. 271: 42 I.C. 812; Nund Coomar v. Razeeooddeen, 10 B. L. R. 183; Jawahar v. Gayan Singh, 3 Agra 78; Pitamsingh v. Ujagarsingh, 1 A. 652.

(3) Rajkishore v. Madan Gopal, 13 L. 491.

(4) Muttayan v. Zemindar of Sivagiri. 6 M. 1 (16) P.C., reversing contra O. A. from Muttayan v. Virapandia, 3 M. 370 (373); Sivaganga Zemindar v. Lakshmana, 9 M. 188; Saminatha v. Thangathanni 19 M. 70; Chelikhani v. Appa Rau, 20 M. 207 (218); Venkayamma v. Venkataramanayyama, 25 M. 678 P. C.; considered and explained in Karuppai v. Sankaranarayanan, 27 M. 300 (312-315) F.B.; Jogeswar v. Ramachandra, 23 C. 670 (679) P.C.; Parson v. Somli, 36 B. 424; Raj Kishor v. Madan Gopal, 13 L. 491.

(5) Mhd. Husain v. Kisva, I. L. R. (1937) A. 655.

(6) Bcharee Lal v. Lall Chand, 25 W. R. 307.

(7) Adhar Chandra v. Nobin Chandra, 12 C.W.N. 103; Atar Singh v. Thukur Singh, 35 C. 1039 P.C.; Jawahir Singh v. Gayan Singh, 3 Agra 78; Pitamsingh v. Ujagar Singh, 1 A. 651; Nallatambi v. Mukunda, 3 M.H.C.R. 455; Saminatha v. Thangathani, 19 M. 70; Nund Coomar v. Razeeooddeen, 18 W.R. 477; Lochun Singh v. Nemdharee, 20 W.R. 170; Gurumurthi v. Gurammal, 32 M. 88 (90); Parson v. Somi, 14 Bom. L.R. 400; Man Singh v. Nawlakhbatt, 2 Pat. 607 (643).

(8) Jugmohandas v. Mandaldas, 10 B. 528 (551, 574, 577); Diwali v. Braherdas, 26 B. 445; Parsotom Rao v. Janki, 29 A. 354 (363); Kishori v. Mundra, 33 A. 655; contra in Janakiram v. Nagamani, 49 M. 98 (Krishnan, J., contra pp. 113-115); Indoji v. Kothapalli, 54 I.C. (M.) 146.

tion made by a joint member, or even by the head of a joint family[1] is presumably joint. The presumption is the other way[2] If it is to a person for and on behalf of his family, then the property would unquestionably become joint. The question is often one of construction and intention.[3] If, for example, the village is given to A and B jointly without limitation, by words purporting that they were to take it in distinct shares, the result would be, both according to the English as well as the Hindu Law, that they take the whole of the joint property by right of survivorship.[4] (§ 1015.)

1023. So where the father left a will devising one of his three houses to his three sons, adding: "Therefore my three sons shall use and enjoy this house from son to grandson and so on in succession without power to give as gift or sell the same"—and as regards his other two houses, the will provided that out of a total income of Rs. 530 (being the total amount of the income of rent per month) deducting the aforesaid expenses of Rs. 181, "the remaining amount whatever it may be, shall be divided by my executors to my three sons in equal shares... My executors shall divide and give away these properties to my own grandsons being my son's sons after my sons according to their respective shares. My sons shall have no right whatever to give as gift or to sell these properties"; and one of the testators' sons sued for the construction of the will, the court held that as to the first house, it vested absolutely in the three sons as members of a joint Hindu family, and that the law of inheritance in undivided Hindu families applied, and that as to the second and third houses the sons took a limited estate as tenants-in-common in the income of the houses, in the nature of an estate for lives, which would subsist till the death of the last survivor, when the limited estate would come to an end and the provision for the division of the corpus could be carried out; that as to the first house, on any of the donees dying, the other sons would take by survivorship excluding the widow of the deceased and that as to the other two houses, the limited estate of each son would, on his death, pass to his legal representatives, and not to the survivors.[5] In another case, decided by a Full Bench some land had been transferred to his wife and her children in accordance with the nuncupative will of the owner. The family was subject to the Marumakkatayam law under which land was impartible. The court held that as the donor had expressed no intention as to how the properties should be held by the donees, and in the absence of such expression, the presumption was that he intended that they should take them as properties acquired by their branch, or as the exclusive properties of their own branch, with the usual incidents of tarwad property in accordance with the Marumakkatayam usage which governed the donees.[6]

---

(1) Mahaidei v. Bahu, 6 O.L.J. 53; 50 I.C. 180; Battoo Lal v. Himmat Singh, 49 I.C. (O.) 912.

(2) Bahu Rani v. Rajendra, 8 Luck. 121 P.C.; Annamalai v. Subramanian, (1929) P.C. 1.

(3) Radhabai v. Nanarav, 3 B. 151 (153); Ahmedbhoy v. Petit, 11 Bom. L. R. 545; 3 I.C. 124; Viswesra v. Varahanarasimham, (1937) M. 631.

(4) Radhabai v. Nanarav, 3 B. 151 (153); see, now Ss. 106, 107, Succession Act.

(5) Yethirajulu v. Mukunthu, 28 M. 363.

(6) Kunhacha v. Kutti Mami, 16 M. 201 (207) F.B., following Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundhoo, 6 M.I.A. 526; Mahomed Shumsool v. Shewakram, L.R. 2 I.A. 7; Moidin v. Ambu, 16 M. 202, overruling Narayanan v. Kaman, 7 M. 315.

Personal Gift.

1024. Marriage gifts and other friendly offerings are excepted from partition even by the Sanskrit texts[1] which all quote Manu who excepted from partition "anything given by a friend received on account of marriage, or presented as a mark of respect to a guest." So where a person gifted to his son-in-law a shop and business in which the latter employed his brother as a servant, the court had no hesitation in overruling his pretension of jointness on the short ground that what the brother had received as a present from his father-in-law was his self-acquisition,[2] So nuptial gifts to a member of a joint family made out of the joint fund became his separate property.[3] On this principle the court upheld a gift of 8 acres of ancestral land by the father of a joint family possessing 200 acres to his daughter at her marriage.[4]

1025. Separate Property.—The law of self-acquisition is based upon two conflicting texts, the rigour of one of which has been attempted to be relaxed by the Legislature. According to Manu and Yadnyavalkya such property must have been acquired "without detriment to the patrimony"—words which the Mitakshara explains as controlling all modes of acquisitions whether obtained as a gift from a friend or at the time of marriage and the like. As such, "what is earned by science, acquired at the expense of ancestral wealth" is joint and not separate property of the acquirer. But it was overlooked that such acquisition may not have necessarily involved "detriment to the father's estate," if that term implies substantial offtake from it. Then again, the term "science" has occasioned a considerable conflict of opinions though the cases had reduced its limit by holding that term to mean special or technical education as distinct from a mere general education howmuchsoever liberal. The question what is "science" is intrinsically one of fact, though the area of discussion has been steadily narrowed by typical decisions, conclusive of numerous cases. But as the Privy Council remarked, the whole doctrine is not without anomalies and takes no note of the natural talent which more than "science" may have contributed to the acquisition of property.[5] The subject has been further complicated by the existence of two conflicting texts, since side by side with the distinction of learning and science, we have the mere text of Yadnyavalkya limiting self-acquisitions to "whatever is acquired without detriment to the patrimony"—words which the Mitakshara explains as equally applicable to all acquisitions. Consequently, wealth which is the result of a mere general education will not escape partition if it is shown to have been imparted at the detriment of the patrimony. But this refinement was not given effect to by the courts who accepted the simplified doctrine that the "detriment" relates only to the special education, and that in order that the wealth acquired by a joint member should be partible, the acquirer must have not only received special training but received it at the expense

---

(1) Manu, IV-206, quoted supra; to the same effect, Narad, XIII-6-7; 33 S. B.E. 190; Mit., I-IV-2.

(2) Beharee v. Lallchand, 25 W. R. 307; Adhar Chandra v. Nobin Chandra, 12 C.W.N. 103.

(3) Sheo Gobind v. Sham Narain, 7 N.W.P.H.C.R. 75.

(4) Anivilla v. Cherla, 35 M. M. 628; Sundaram v. Krishnaswami, 28 I.C. (M.) 992; Kilambi v. Tirumala, 5 M.L.T. 40: 4 I.C. 1094.

(5) Gokulchand v. Hukamchand, 2 L. 40 (45) P.C.

of the patrimony, which must be substantial and not merely nominal. But in the earlier cases, these limitations do not appear to have been uniformly kept in view.

1026. In one case, the large estate of one Bhao, worth over thirty lacs of rupees made by him as Diwan of the Peshwas was held liable to pass by survivorship, although Bhao had received no more than an elementary education at the expenses of the joint family.[1] It was consequently held that gains of a pleader were partible either because a pleader's learning is not science[2] or because they must be deemed to have been acquired at the family expense, even though it was responsible for no more than a general education.[3] Taking the same strict view, the Madras court held the property of a dancing girl who had learnt singing and dancing at the family expense partible.[4] But in later cases the distinction between a general and a special education was more clearly emphasised while the quantum of aid received from the joint funds was taken as equally material.[5] As such, the property of an astrologer who had received merely a general education out of the joint funds was held to be self-acquired[6] and so were the earnings of an Army contractor[7] a Karkun[8] or a Subordinate Judge,[9] an overseer in the department of Public Works[10] though in a more recent case, the earnings of a member of the Indian Civil Service who had been sent to England for that purpose and maintained for seven years at the family expense were held to be joint.[11] But in this case, their Lordships pointedly referred to the anomalies which this branch of Hindu Law had created, and they did not see why the gains of learning were partible while those of science impartible, since in each case the gains depend not so much upon the nature of the education imparted as upon the intelligence and industry of the acquirer.[12] This distinction has since been eliminated by the Legislature which has excepted the acquisitions of both learning and science from the catena of joint property.[13] Though the burden of proving that it is such acquisition is still on the acquirer or his representative, yet if he was in separate possession, he would be entitled to rely on the presumption of ownership from the fact of his possession provided in S. 110 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Accretions excepted.

1027. From the fact that all self-acquisitions made by a member's individual skill are no longer partible, it follows that all accretions thereto or made therewith a fortiori fall into the same excep-

(1) Laxman v. Malhar Rao, 2 Knapp. 60 : 5 W.R. 67 P.C.

(2) Durvasula v. Durvasula, 7 M.H.C. R. 47; Gangadharudu v. Narasammah, 7 M.H.C.R. 47; Bhagirathi v. Sadashive Rao, (1880) B.P.J. 126; Suraj Narain v. Ratanlal, 40 A. 159 (163) P.C.

(3) Manchha v. Narotamdas, 6 B.H. C.R. (A.C.) 1 (6).

(4) Chalakonda v. Chalakonda, 2 M.H. C.R. 56 (75).

(5) Pauliem v. Pauliem, 1 M. 252 P. C.

(6) Durga v. Ganesh, 32 A. 305 (313).

(7) Lachman v. Debi Prasad, 20 A. 435.

(8) Krishnaji v. Moro, 15 B. 32.

(9) Somasundara v. Ganga Bissen, 28 M. 386 (388).

(10) Lakshman v. Jamnabai, 6 B. 225 dissenting from contra in Laxman v. Malhar, 2 Knapp 60: 5 W.R. 67 P.C. at pp. 243, 244.

(11) Gokul Chand v. Hukumchand, 2 L. 40 P.C.

(12) Ib., p. 51.

(13) Act XXX of 1930, which came into force on the 25th July, 1930.

tion.[1] So it was even previously held that where a coparcener had acquired property with money borrowed upon his sole credit,[2] or on the security of his life policy, the primia of which were paid out of his salary.[3] The same view was taken of compensation paid on the death of a coparcener under the provisions of S. 1 of Fatal Accidents Act.[4]

1028. But inspite of the enactment of the Act, cases would still arise where the question whether an acquisition was not outside the Act. For instance, the question whether the grant of a Jagir to a coparcener would be treated as joint property of the family or the self-acquisition of the acquirer depends not upon the talent of the acquirer as upon the incidents of the tenure and the circumstances attending its grant. Ordinarily, a Jagir is a personal grant not of the soil, but only of the revenue and, as such, it is personal and neither partible nor heritable.[5] But a maintenance grant is not necessarily restricted to the grantor personally. It depends upon its terms.[6] So, again, since the manager is presumably expected to exert his talents for the benefit of the family, the fact that an acquisition was the result of personal skill would not take the case out of the rule.[7] Such are the savings and property purchased therewith by the holder of an impartible estate.[8] Ordinarily, they are the self-acquisitions of the holder,[9] though they may become accretions to the parent estate.

1029. Apart from the obvious self-acquisitions, the question what property acquired by the manager or a coparcener with some help, direct or indirect, from the joint property must be classed as his self-acquisition, at one time, depended upon the construction of textual authority, which had given rise to conflicting decisions due to the use of loose expressions defining such property, now sought to be remedied by the enactment of the Hindu Gains of Learning Act, 1930.[10] The texts describe all property acquired by individual effort, "without detriment to the father's estate" the acquirer's self-acquisition, while Narad unqualifiedly excepts all "gains of science", but Mitakshara declares the qualification general and as applicable to all acquisitions, howsoever made, added to which there was the further complication created by the doctrines of nucleus, accretion and the burden of proof. The combined effect of these doctrines had, at one time, made the court doubt whether there was any clear line of demarcation between property joint and separate in such cases, though in a later case decided in 1831[11] the Privy Council had to consider whether an estate acquired by one Bhao a member of a joint family

---

(1) Boomad Lall v. Dawkee Nandan. 19 W.R. 223.

(2) 2 Macn. H.L. 151, followed in Nursing Das v. Eai Narain Das, 3 N.W. P.H.C.R. 217 (235).

(3) Mahadeva v. Rama, 13 M. L. J. 75; Rajamma v. Ramakrishnayya, 29 M. 121.

(4) Sri Gopal v. Amba Debi, (1914) P.R. 52 : 22 I.C. 846.

(5) Raghoji Rao v. Lakshman Rao, 35 B. 639 P.C.

(6) Muthukumara v. Udayan, 38 M. 387; Secretary of State v. Rashidull Huq, 18 C. L. J. 31: 21 I.C. (C.) 93.

(7) Sheo Dayal v. Judoonath, 9 W.R. 61, (64).

(8) Parbati v. Jagadish Chunder, 29 C. 433 (453) P.C.

(9) Tagore v. Tagore, 18 W.R. 359 (364); Tarkeswari v. Sashishekareswar, 9 C. 952 P.C.; Karistoromoney v. Narendra Krishna, 16 C. 383 P.C.; Parnashashi v. Kalidhan, 38 C. 603 P.C.; Kunhamed v. Kunhanbi, 32 M. 315; Parbati v. Jugdish Chunder, 29 C. 433 (453) P.C.

(10) Act XXX of 1930.

(11) (1831) Luxman Row v. Mulhar Row, 2 Knapp. 60 (64): 5 W.R. 67 P.C.

consisting of himself and his brother, who owned some ancestral fields, became part of the joint estate, which it decided in the affirmative on the ground that Bhao retained his connection with the family fields, though he had acquired his estate worth over 30 lakhs by his service in the Maratha Court as Prime Minister of the Peishwa, where his brother had procured him an appointment. The courts in India had held that jointness being the rule, and separate acquisition an exception to it, the burden lay on Bhao to prove the exception which he was held to have failed to prove. Lord Brougham, L.C., while upholding this finding of the Indian courts, did not fail to confess that he did not feel any great confidence in his judgment.[1] But in a case decided in 1921, their Lordships felt constrained to follow this case holding that the salary of a member of a joint family who had been given special educational training in England, enabling him to enter the Indian Civil Service, was equally liable to pay the family debt along with the rest of his ancestral joint property.[2] These two were no doubt extreme cases, but they sufficed to attract the attention of the Legislature to the unsatisfactory state of the archaic law resulting in the enactment of the declaratory Act known as the Hindu Gains of Learning Act, 1930,[3] which saves all acquisitions whether made before or since the commencement of that Act[4] to be the separate property of the acquirer,[5] irrespective of the aid received by him from the joint property or a member of the joint family.

1030. This Act has, therefore, the effect of overruling a large number of cases in which, following the scriptural texts, the courts had to consider the meaning of "Science" or special education, as distinct from a general education, or partly one and partly the other, which had resulted in numerous conflict of cases[6] and the quantum of aid received from the joint property, and its "detriment" in consequence of such aid.

But the Act does not affect the law where such aid is given from funds borrowed on the security of the family property or any of its members. If, therefore, suppose a joint family pledge their small estate to raise funds to give one of its members a special training, enabling him to enter a lucrative service or calling or start a lucrative business, the old rule would still remain. Then, again, the Act leaves untouched the law relating to nucleus and accretion though it has necessarily the effect of shifting the burden of proof from the acquirer and his heirs to the joint family. Consequently, if the two Privy Council cases, last referred to, had to be redecided they would have resulted in a contrary decision to that given.

1031. The question of burden of proof is a more general question, arising out of the fact of jointness and the presumption arising therefrom which has been the subject of a previous discussion. So far as the gains of learning are concerned, the question of support and use of

---

(1) (1831) Laxman Row v. Malhar Rao, 2 Knapp. 60 (64): 5 W.R. 67 P. C., followed in Gokal Chand v. Hukamchand, 2 L. 40 (49) P.C.

(2) Gokul Chand v. Hukam Chand, 2 L. 40 (49) P.C.

(3) Act XXX of 1930.

(4) The Act came into force on the 25th day of July, 1930.

(5) Ib., S. 3.

(6) For which see Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), §§ 1231-1240, pp. 616-620.

joint family funds applied for imparting learning is statutorily rendered irrelevant, and the sole question is whether the property claimed as self-acquired was the result of or flowed from the acquirer's learning. That fact must be proved by the acquirer, and if any such other property is found in his possession, the court will presume to be his separate property, and the contrary must be proved by him who alleges it.[1]

Clause (2).

1032. Blended Property.—See §§ 1007-1008.

116. "Legal Necessity" and "Benefit" are of two kinds: spiritual and secular.[2]

1033. Analogous Law.—The following text bears on the subject of necessity:—

Vyas.—"Even a single individual may conclude a donation, mortgage, or sale of immoveable property, during a season of distress, for the sake of the family, and especially for pious purposes."[3]

1034. The terms "legal necessity" and "benefit," observed Lord Atkinson, are "general and elastic terms,"[4] and as to the latter, "it is impossible to give a precise definition of it applicable to all cases."[5] The terms necessity and benefit are ordinarily coupled together, but though allied, they are not identical, for an act may be necessary without being advantageous and vice versa. It is, however, quite usual that an act may be both. For example, the payment of Government revenue charged upon an estate is necessary and its mortgage for that purpose advantageous to the estate, since it prevents its extinction by sequestration. Other examples could be multiplied to illustrate the dual result. Such for example, would be a charge incurred to protect an estate from submersion by flood or the altered water-course. On the other hand, an act may be beneficial without being necessary. Such would be the case where an estate is sold solely for the purpose of investing the price in a business bringing in an income larger than that derived from the safer and more stable estate. It is clear that this act, though probably beneficial to the family, is not such as is within the scope of the manager's authority.[6] In other words, it is not "reasonable and proper" within the meaning of the next section. Both the terms "necessity" and "benefit" have thus become terms of art and bear a special significance in Hindu Law.

Consequently, an act may be both necessary and beneficial in the ideal sense of Hindu Law, though in reality it is neither. Such is the performance of a pilgrimage or of a religious ceremony. Apart from such acts, the manager's necessary acts are such as are necessary for the material existence of the undivided family, or for the preservation of the family property.[7]

(1) S. 110, Ev. Act; Rai Shadi Lal Lal v. Lal Bahadur, (1933) P. C. 85; Nutbehari v. Nanilal, (1937) P. C. 61 (66); Narainswami v. Ratnasabapathi, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 906.

(2) Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly, 8 M. I. A. 500 (501).

(3) Mit., I-I-28, 29.

(4) Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 (719) P.C.

(5) Ib., p. 718.

(6) Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 (719) P.C.

(7) Ramlal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B. H. C.R. (App.) 51.

1035. Legal necessity in the abstract must, however, be distinguished from legal necessity in a given case which implies not only that the object upon which money has been spent was proper, but also that it was expended under pressure. As was observed in a leading case: "The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded."[1] For instance, a debt may be incurred for the most approved purpose, but it will not support alienation of family property, if there were other funds available, and even if it would support a loan, it might still be a question whether it would support a loan, the terms of which are onerous.[2] There is no text to cite in support of this section since the classical writers make no distinction between necessity and benefit or attempt to classify them into spiritual and secular. But this classification has received the support of cases which regard the two distinct and as having a direct bearing on the law of alienation of joint property. Legal necessity must then be distinguished from benefit, and the two are again of two kinds: spiritual or secular. It has been said that these terms cannot be precisely defined.[3] It is so and for that reason they cannot be precisely understood. But the difficulty arises not so much from the lack of definition as from the difficulty created in its application to concrete facts. Regarding necessity there is perhaps less scope for vagueness than there is in the case of benefit. But as their instances become multiplied their connotations become more fixed and certain, till a point is reached when all their common attributes become known, and those that still remain unknown play but an insignificant part in relation to the whole.

Necessity implies pressure and whether it is spiritual or secular there must be the presence of pressure, though in the case of spiritual necessity, the pressure is religious. It may be even said to be metaphorical, while in the case of secular necessity the pressure must be real.

1036. The concept "benefit" belongs to a different class from necessity. The pressure, if any, is merely moral, but the obligation in some case would be real especially in case of large estates where the benefit verges on necessity.

117. "Spiritual legal necessoty" defined.

(a) Spiritual legal necessity implies the performance of such spiritual acts which the religion of a person enjoins as obligatory[4]

"Spiritual legal benefit" defined.

(b) It is distinguished from spiritual legal benefit in that while the one is regarded as obligatory the other is merely beneficial without being obligatory.[5]

---

(1) Hanooman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (423, 424).

(2) Nazir Begam v. Raghunath, 41 A. 571 P.C.; Ram Khalawan v. Ram Naresh, 41 A. 609; Ram Bhujawan v. Nathu Ram, 2 Pat. 285 (292) P. C.; Radha Kishan v. Jagsapu, 4 Pat. 19 P.C.

(3) Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 (719) P.C.

(4) See § 1040.

(5) Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 (511) P.C.

1037. Analogous Law.—The following texts bear on the subject:—

Katyayan.—"Whatever is given for a religious purpose or through affection and whatever debt the son has been directed to pay, the same shall be divided when known. There can be no gift from patrimony."

Mayukh.—"The prohibition of sale or other disposition of immoveable property by a widow, without the consent of takers of the heritage is given on (the authority of) Madhav. As for the text of Katyayan: "After the death of the husband, the widow preserving (the honour of the family) should obtain the share of her husband so long as she lives, but she has no ownership therein in respect of (its), gift, mortgage, or sale" that is a prohibition of gift of money to the bandi (bards) charan (triffers) and the like. Gifts for religious or spiritual objects and mortgage, and the like for that purpose, are of course permitted; (as is plain) from the aforementioned text (of Prajapati) commencing with Sthavaram, Jangamam, etc., and from the text of Katyayan: 'A widow always engaged in meritorious observances and fasts constant in the duties of celibacy intent upon restraining (her passioos) and making holy gifts, shall reach the heavenly abodes even if she has no son.'"[1]

Vyvastha Chandrika.—"Without the consent of her husband's reversioners a widow is, however, competent to sell so much, and no more, of his property as may be required for the performance of the indispensable duties (Nitya Karma). If such acts cannot be performed without selling the whole property, the whole may be sold by her for that purpose, because such duties must be performed. But for the performance of an optional religious act (Kamya Karma) she may, without their consent, dispose of only a small portion of the estate.[2]

1038. The classification of "necessity" into spiritual and secular, and its distinction from "benefit" is now well recognised in the cases, and it has a material bearing upon the law of alienation. The distinction between spritual and secular necessity was stated by the Privy Council in a case decided in 1861. Speaking of the disposing power of the widow, their Lordships observed: "For religious or charitable purposes or those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of the husband, she has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely worldly purposes. To support an alienation for the last, she must show necessity."[3] So again, the same high tribunal acknowledged the distinction between such "necessity" and "benefit" in the following words: "There can be no doubt upon a review of the Hindu Law, taken in conjunction with the decided cases, that the Hindu system recognizes two sets of religious acts. One is in connection with the actual obsequies of the deceased, and the periodical performance of the obsequial rites prescribed in the Hindu religious law, which are considered as essential for the salvation of the soul of the deceased. The other relates to acts which, although not essential or obligatory, are still pious observances which conduce to the bliss of the soul. In the later cases, this distinction runs clearly through the views of the learned Judges. The confusion which has arisen in this case arises from mixing up the indispensable or obligatory duty with a pious purpose which, although optional, is spiritually beneficial to the deceased.

"With reference to the first class of acts, the powers of the Hindu female who holds the property are wider than in respect of the acts which are simply pious, and, if performed, are meritorious so far as they

(1) Mayukh (Mandlik, 77, 78 cited and explained in Panachand v. Manohar Lal, 42 B. 136 (143, 144, 152).

(2) Cited and followed in Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari Lal, 44 A. 503 (509, 510) P.C.

(3) Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly, 8 M.I.A. 500 (551); to the same effect, Raj Lukhee Debea v. Gokool Chunder, 13 M.I.A. 209; Sham Sunder Lal v. Acchan Kanwar, 21 A. 71 (83) P.C.; Bijoy Gopal v. Girindra Nath, 41 C. 793 P.C.

conduce to the spiritual benefit of the deceased. In one case, if the income of the property, or the property itself, is not sufficient to cover the expenses, she is entitled to sell the whole of it. In the other case, she can alienate a small portion of the property for the pious or charitable purpose she may have in view."[1]

1039. It will thus be seen that spiritual necessity ranks higher than secular necessity as regards the power of alienation of the widow, daughter or other female heir of her inheritance. To justify an alienation for secular necessity she has to prove pressure, but it is not necessary when spiritual necessity is concerned. It is true that all necessity implies pressure, and even in the case of spiritual necessity there is a pressure, but it is the pressure of religion, and one which is more metaphorical than real. Consequently, if the necessity was spiritual, the question to inquire is not whether there was a pressure upon the estate or whether the alienor had not funds of his own, since such acts are held to be indispensably necessary for the spiritual beatitude of the deceased and it is a charge upon the estate which descends to the heir. Such acts are equally obligatory upon the manager of the joint estate, as on the manager of a religious endowment.

1040. Spiritual Necessity.—The next question is: What acts constitute "spiritual necessity"? It is impossible to enumerate them, since beyond a few observances which are generally regarded as indispensable, there remain others whose necessity must be judged in the light of usage. To the former class belong all the initiatory and funeral ceremonies of all the members of the joint family,[2] including its female members, e.g., the mother and widow of a deceased male-holder[3] the performance of the exequial rites and Shradh,[4] the pilgrimage to Gaya,[5] but not to Benares, since one is the necessary part of the exequial rites, which the other is not. But though a pilgrimage to Gaya to offer pindas for the spiritual benefit of the deceased is an acknowledged necessity, a feast given upon return is not so.[6] So referring to the widow it was said: "Pilgrimages are generally made by a widow with a view to present her husband's funeral obligations at the sacred place visited, and to ensure for his soul the special merit a rising from such presentation.[7] In every case, the question must be whether the pilgrimage was for the spiritual benefit of her husband, in the performance of her duty to his soul, and whether the expenses incurred are reasonable and were made honestly, having regard to the estate, the status of the family and other considerations, which it is customary for Hindus to take into account in accordance with the religious beliefs and usages,"[8] So a pilgrimage to Pandharpur or any

(1) Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 (511) P.C.; affirming O.A. 41 A. 130.

(2) Chuman Lall v. Gunput Lall, 16 W.R. 52; Mahomed v. Shoma, 14 B. 562 (564).

(3) Nand Rani v. Krishna Sahai, (1935) A. 698 F.B.

(4) Chuman Lall v. Gunput Lall, 16 W. R. 52; Mahomed Ashraf v. Brojessure, 19 W.R. 426; Mutteram v. Gopal, 20 W. R. 187.

(5) Junmojoy v. Russomoye, 10 W. R. 209; Mohamed Ashrif v. Brojessure, 19 W.R. 426; Mutteram v. Gopal, 20 W. R. 187; Ganpat v. Tulsiram, 36 B. 88 (90); Srimohan v. Brij Behary, 36 C. 753; contra in Raj Chandra v. Sheshoo, 7 W.R. 146.

(6) Hurromohan v. Auluck Monee, 1 W.R. 252.

(7) Makhan Lal v. Gayan Singh, 8 A. L.J. 13.

(8) Ganput v. Tulsiram, 36 B. 88 (90).

other local Gaya might be considered necessary, and it was so treated in a case.[1]

1041. Spiritual Benefit.—The dividing line between "spiritual necessity" and "spiritual benefit" is narrow but it exists. The test in the two cases is this: Was the act considered by the bulk of the community obligatory or merely optional?[2] Even as regards optional acts, there are some which border on the obligatory and others in which the consensus of opinion would favour larger expenditure than on others. In an old case, the court questioned the Pandits on what they considered to be an allowable alienation and the Pandits reported that they would allow the widow to alien from one to three-sixteenth of her husband's property "for the benefit of his soul," but this opinion does not appear to have been acted on; but on the other hand, it has been disapproved.[3] The general rules which the courts observe on the subject are: (a) that the alienation must comprise only a moderate portion of the estate; (b) that if made by the female heir, it must be conducive to the spiritual benefit of the last male owner, that is to say, if the estate be inherited from the husband[4] or the father[5] it must be conducive to their benefit. She cannot make an alienation which would be conducive to her own spiritual benefit[6] or the benefit of any other relation, e.g., her mother-in law;[7] or is, indeed, to no particular person's benefit, but is otherwise a pious meritorious and a charitable act.[8] A personal gift to one who has assisted the widow[9] or to her own brother[10] is, thus out of question. Regarding the value of the gift, the decided cases show that at least four considerations influence the courts in upholding it: (a) the relationship of the donee, (b) the nature of the gift, (c) its occasion and purpose, and (d) its value.

(a) The Donee.

1042. Of these, the dowry to the daughter takes the highest place. Even as far back as 1820 the Pandits who were asked to report on the character of religious purposes which justified an alienation by the widow reported it to "include dowry to a daughter, building temples for religious worship, digging tank and the like."[11] Of these only the dowry has withstood the test of time. In one case the mother had at the time of her daughter's gowna ceremony gifted to her one house worth Rs. 1,200, out of the

---

(1) Ganput v. Tulsiram, 36 B. 88 at p. 90.

(2) Vupuluri v. Garimilla, 34 M. 288; cited with approval in Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 (512) P.C.

(3) Ramchander v. Gangagobind (1826) 4 B.S.R. 147 (154): 7 I.D. (O.S.) 110 (115); dissented from in Munshi Lal v. Shiv Devi, 4 L. 336 (338).

(4) Rama v. Ranga, 8 M. 522; Lakshminarayan v. Dasu, 11 M. 288; Vupuluri v. Garimilla, 34 M. 288.

(5) Gudimetla v. Bollozu, 23 M.L.J. 233 : 16 I.C. 139.

(6) Puran Dei v. Jai Narain, 4 A. 482, followed in Lakshminarayana v. Dasu, 11 M. 288; Rama v. Ranga, 8 M. 552; Ram Kewal Singh v. Ram Kishore Das, 22 C. 506.

(7) Ram Kewal Singh v. Ram Kishore, 22 C. 506.

(8) Runjeet v. Mhd. Waris, 21 W.R. 49; Kartick Chunder v. Gour Mohun, 1 W.R. 48; Harmange v. Ram Gopal, 17 C.W.N. 782 ; 19 I.C. 417.

(9) Lachmi Prasad v. Jagmohan, 18 C.L.J. 633 ; 22 I.C. 594.

(10) Ram Chunder v. Ganga Gobind, (1826) 4 B.S.R. 147 (154) ; 7 I.D. (O.S.) 110 (115).

(11) Cossinath v. Hurrosondry, 3 I.D. (O.S.) 907, affirmed O.A. Bysack v. Cossinath, 1 I.D. (O.S.) 292 P.C.

three inherited by her from her husband valued at Rs. 3,800. The court upheld the gift as not unreasonable in view of the fact that the donee was her only child,[1] though such a gift, if made to a stranger, would be considered as excessive. It was so held where the widow had made a gift of a fourth portion of her husband's estate to a charitable institution.[2]

(b) The Nature of the Gift.

The second question is the nature of the gift. Hindu Law regards the gift of land as most meritorious. On this ground, the court upheld the gift of a small portion of a Zemindari to a Brahmin for the performance of the funeral and annual shradh of the deceased husband.[3]

(c) Its Occasion and Purpose.

Closely connected with this is its occasion and purpose. It has already been seen that the occasions of initiation, marriage and death are customarily regarded as appropriate to the display of piety. So again, while pilgrimages to certain places are obligatory, pilgrimages and sacrifices by the widow are generally regarded as indirectly beneficial to the husband justifying an alienation of only a small portion of the estate.[4]

(d) Its Value.

As regards value no categorial rule can be formulated since it must depend upon circumstances. The cases, however, emphasise the necessity of moderation. And in this respect the power of the father is larger than that possessed by the manager[5] or the female heir.[6] The question will have to be considered in the sequel.

1043. Father's and Manager's Alienations.—The question of spiritual necessity and spiritual benefit usually arises in connection with the alienations of the female heir because it is the limit of their power. In the case of the father and the manager, this question does not assume the same importance because they wield larger powers of alienations, and in the case of abuse of power, the coparceners aggrieved have their remedy in partition; but this is by no means their only remedy, since they are equally entitled to set aside an improper alienation even though supported by spiritual necessity or benefit. The subject really relates to the power of the manager where the subject will be found discussed in detail.[7]

1044. In considering the question of benefit, a distinction must be made between what might appear immediately beneficial and what might be to the ultimate benefit of the minor or of the estate. The question in such cases would be whether the guardian is justified in disposing of the minor's property in a rising market which might have been left for disposal by the minor himself after attaining majority.[8] Moreover, the term benefit can hardly be held to include cases of speculative development

(1) Churaman v. Gopi Sahu, 37 C. 1 (12); followed in Khub Singh v. Kunj Behari, 44 A. 503 P.C.

(2) Munshi Lal v. Shiv Devi, 4 L. 336.

(3) Lakshminarayan v. Dasu, 11 M. 288; Vuppuluri v. Garimilla, 34 M. 288.

(4) Rama v. Ranga, 8 M. 552.

(5) S. 136.

(6) See "Widows' Estate".

(7) S. 136.

(8) Krishna Chandra v. Ratan Ram, 20 C.W.N. 645 (647), following Radha of the minor's estate[1] or the obtaining of the benefit out of proportion to its cost. The question in this case to ask is: What would have been the probable result if the guardian had not acted in the way he did.[2]

"Secular legal necessity" defined.

118. (1) "Secular legal necessity" implies such pressing requirement of the family or of the estate which the law regards as sufficient justification for contracting a debt, or for the transfer of the joint estate.[3]

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, the following objects constitute such necessity:—

(a) The debt of the father, not illegal or immoral[4] or of the husband;[5]

(b) Payment of rent or revenue assessed on the joint property and all charges of a public nature, accruing due therefrom, in default of payment of which it may be summarily sold;[6]

(c) Payment of a reasonable premium on renewal of a lease and the rent due thereon;

(d) Other charges necessary for the preservation of the property from destruction, deterioration, forfeiture or sale;

(e) The expenses reasonably requisite for the assertion or protection of the title to the property;[7]

(f) Its due management, and the collection of the rents and profits thereof;[8]

(g) The protection and maintenance of coparceners, and of their wives and issues;[9]

(h) The marriage expenses of coparceners[10] and of their daughters;[11]

(i) The performance of indispensable religious or customary duties;[12]

(j) Litigation for the recovery, protection or preservation of the estate;[13]

(k) The cost of defending a member of the joint family in a criminal prosecution.[14]

Persad v. Raj Kooer, 20 W.R. 38; Kalhar Singh v. Roop Singh, 3 N.W. P.H.C.R. 4; Ganap v. Subni, 32 B. 577; Hemraj v. Nathu, 59 B. 525 contra Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das, 50 A. 569 F.B.; Amrejsingh v. Shambu Singh, 55 A. 1 F.B.

(1) Krishna Chandra v. Ratan Ram, 20 C.W.N. 645 (647).

(2) Ishani v. Ganesh, 23 C.W.N. 858 (860).

(3) Hanooman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (421).

(4) Narad, 1-6; Natesayyan v. Ponnusami, 16 M. 99 (104); Ram Ratan v. Basant Bai, 2 L. 263 (269).

(5) Ashutosh v. Chidam, 34 C.W.N. 153, (1930) C. 351; Bhawat v. Nivrathi, 39 B. 113.

(6) Garibullah v. Khalak Singh, 25 A. 407 (415) P.C.; Ganeshi Lal v. Khetra Mohan, 5 Pat. 585 (594) P.C.

(7) Miller v. Ranganath, 12 C. 389. Cf., S. 13, Trusts Act (II of 1882).

(8) See § 1052.

(9) See Ch. VII.

(10) Ganpat v. Tulsi Ram, 13 Bom.L.R. 860; Durga Prasad v. Jewdhari, 62 C. 733.

(11) Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Ram, 32 A. 575 and cases cited post. (§ 1054).

(12) § 1056.

(13) Karimuddin v. Gobind, 31 A. 497 (506) P.C.; Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532 (542).

(14) Beni Ram v. Man Singh, 34 A. 4; Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532 (543); Dhanukdhari v. Rambirich, 1 Pat. 171; Nobinchunder v. Khedar Nath, 6 C.W.N. 648 and cases cited post.

1045. What is "Legal Necessity?"—"Legal necessity" is a term of art and means such objects of necessity as the law considers sufficient to justify the pledging of the family credit. For "necessity" must have reference either to the family members, whether coparceners or not, or to the estate. In either case, it must be judged in the circumstances of each case.[1]

As West, J., said: "Family necessity is an expression that must receive a reasonable construction, and the head of the family and those dealing with him, must in the interest of the family itself, be supported in transactions which, though in themselves diminishing the estate, yet prevent and tend to prevent still greater losses. A reasonable latitude, too, must be allowed for the exercise of the manager's judgment, especially in the case of the father, though this must not be extended so as to free the person dealing with him from the need of all precaution, where a minor son has an interest in the property."[2]

"Legal necessity is of various forms. All the indispensable religious ceremonies, the sacraments, such as marriage and the investiture with the sacred thread, the obsequies, the cremation, the periodical offerings to the manes, the ceremonies customary in the family, the subsistence of the family, the education of the younger members, the payment of the ancestral debts, the giving of presents at particular seasons and on special occasions to the relatives,—these and a thousand other causes of expenditure are constantly cropping up in a fairly prosperous Hindu joint family. All these are, in the strict sense of the word, lawful necessities."[3]

But all expenses considered necessary by the manager do not constitute "legal necessaries" a term which must be confined only to such objects which law recognizes as proper objects for the raising of money on the credit of the joint estate. Naturally, this must depend upon the value and income of the estate, the status and position of the family, the claims upon it and the precedents by which it might be supported. But the leading heads of necessity are now well settled and they will now be examined.

(a) Father's Debts.

1046. According to the Hindu idea the son, grandson and great-grandson are in reality the same person in different bodies. Consequently, the liability of the son is equally a liability of the grandson and of the great-grandson. This is in accordance with Asahaya's interpretation of the following text of Narad:

Narad.—"If a debt has been legitimately inherited by the sons, and left unpaid by them, such debts of the grandfather must be discharged by his grandsons. The liability for it does not include the fourth in descent."

1047. As to this Asahaya says that the term "grandsons" must be taken to relate to the grandsons of the debtor's sons, i.e., to the great-grandsons of the debtor, and that the term "fouth descendant" signifies the fourth in descent from the debtor's sons, i.e., the fifth in descent from the debtor himself. This assumption, he says is necessary in order to reconcile the present rule with the statements of all other legislators, and

(1) K. M. Bhattacharya's Law of the Joint Hindu Family, p. 488.
(2) Babaji v. Krishnaji, 2 B. 666; Ratnam v. Govindarajulu, 2 M. 339.
(3) K. M. Bhattacharaya's Law of the Joint Hindu Family, p. 488.

with Narad's own rule.[1] It is now so settled by the Privy Council who have held the son, the grandson and the great-grandson all equally liable to pay the father's debt.[2] And the rule now accepted as settled, is what is apparent from Narad's words, namely, the father's debt is payable not only by the son and the grandson, but also by his great-grandson. This they are bound to do whether the estate inherited by them be the ancestral or the self-acquired estate of the father[3] but their liability is, in any case, limited to the assets inherited by them; and they are only liable if they were joint with their ancestor, or when the debt for which they are made liable was incurred,[4] and the suit is otherwise in time, that is to say, if the claim could have been enforced against the father if he were alive when the suit was brought, since the cause of action against both is identical.[5] The son is moreover not liable for the father's debt if it can show that it was incurred for illegal or immoral purposes.[6]

1048. The legal debt of the father constitutes a recognized head of necessity. "The sons are under a pious obligation to discharge the just debts of their father, because otherwise he would be liable to be punished in a future state for non-discharge of their debts. Upon any intelligible principle of morality, a debt due by the father by reason of his having retained for himself money, which he was bound to pay to another, would be a debt of the most sacred obligation, and for the non-discharge of which punishment in a future state might be expected to be inflicted, if any. The son is not bound to do anything to relieve his father from the consequences of his own vicious indulgences, but he is surely bound to do that which his father himself would do, were it possible, namely, to restore to those lawfully entitled, money he has unlawfully retained."[7]

All debts of the father are then due from and payable by the son.

Debts recoverble from the estate.

1049. The family is bound to pay all debts recoverable from the estate, that is, such debts as were incurred by the manager, and are chargeable to the joint family which constitute a sufficient necessity, justifying the mortgage or sale of the family estate.[8]

(b) Government Revenue.

(c), Premium or Rent.

1050. The second head of such necessity is the Government revenue due on the joint estate. By the common law, as under the several Land Revenue Acts, the payment of Government revenue is a prime charge on the land[9] and the penalty prescribed for non-payment is either forfeiture or sale. Its payment is, consequently, a recognized head of legal necessity.[10] A

(1) Refers to Narad, 1-6; Vishnu, VI-27, 28; Yadnyavalkya, II, 50; 33 S.B.E. 42.

(2) Masitullah v. Damodar Das, 48 A. 518 (525) P.C.

(3) Hanuman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (421); Girdhari Lal v. Kantool Lall, 14 B.L.R. 187 (197) P.C.

(4) Fakirchand v. Daya Ram, 25 A. 67.

(5) Fakirchand v. Daya Ram, 25 A. 67 (70).

(6) Subramania v. Gopala, 33 M. 308; Naro v. Paragowda, 41 B. 347.

(7) Natesayyan v. Ponnusami, 16 M. 99 (104) followed in Peari Lal v. Chandi, 5 C.L.J. 80 (88); Ram Ratan v. Basant Bai, 2 L. 263 (269).

(8) Soorjoo Pershad v. Krishnan, 1 N.W.P.H.C.R. 46; Lalla Gunput v. Toorun, 16 W.R. 52.

(9) Chatraput v. Grindra, 6 C. 389.

(10) Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh, 25 A. 407 (415) P.C.; Ganeshi Lal v. Khetra Mohan, 5 Pat. 585 (594) P.C.

suit by the co-sharers for contribution stands on the same footing.[1] For the same reason where the property held by the family is a renewable lease, the payment of any premium payable on its renewal and the rent are necessarily a charge on the joint family, since their non-payment equally entails deprivation of the property which even a trustee would be expected to avert.

(d) & (e) Defence Title

1051. Even, a trustee is bound to maintain all such suits and to take such other steps as, regard being had to the nature and amount or value of the trust-property, may be reasonably requisite for the preservation of the trust-property and the assertion or protection of the title thereto.[2] A fortiori the necessity of asserting and protecting the title to joint property is obvious. But of course, the question is one of degree. A costly suit to enforce a forlorn hope or a highly speculative claim would scarcely be classed as a legal necessity. On the other hand, a suit would not be classed as unnecessary merely because it is unsuccessful. The question in such case is: Was the act one justified by ordinary prudence?

(f) Management.

1052. The cost of management of the property and that necessary for the collection of its rents and profits are other cases of obvious necessity, being of the same nature as the cost incurred for the preservation of the property from destruction, deterioration, forfeiture, on sale. It is possible to uphold a permanent lease by a widow in consideration of the lessee marrying her grand-daughter and looking after her in her old age.[3]

(g) Maintenance of co-parceners and their family.

1053. The maintenance of the coparceners follows as a matter of course from the fact that he is joint owner of the estate, and so long as he remains joint, he is entitled to be maintained out of the joint funds. His wife and children have equally the same right. As regards other relations, their right of maintenance depends upon their legal or moral claim upon the family. The subject has already been set out in a preceding chapter,[4] and all persons there mentioned as entitled to maintenance out of the joint family are persons for the maintenance of whom the assets of the family, are liable, and might be validly charged.

The manager is not bound to allow the co-parceners separate maintenance, though he may do so at his discretion. And where he decides to allow them separate maintenance he may equally charge the joint funds with the cost thereof.

(h) Marriage expenses of members.

1054. Betrothal[5] and marriage of the male[6] and female members of the family is another head of legal necessity. As already stated, marriage is a Samskar and religious necessity[7] (§ 389), though not

(1) Ganeshi Lal v. Khettra Mohan, 5 Pat. 585 (594) P.C.

(2) S. 13, Trusts Act (II of 1882).

(3) Rajendra Nath v. Peyari, (1926) C. 854 : 94 I.C. 321.

(4) Ch. VII.

(5) Sundrabai v. Shivnarayan, 32 B. 81 (87), where texts and cases are cited, dissenting from contra in Sundari v. Subramania, 26 M. 505 and Govindarazulu v. Devarabhotla, 27 M. 206, overruled in Gopala v. Venkatanarasa, 37 M. 273 F.B.

(6) Ganpat v. Tulsi Ram, 13 Bom.L.R. 860.

(7) Sundarabai v. Shivnarayana, 32 B. 81; Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Ram, 32 A. 575; Debi Lal v. Nand Kishore, (1922)

when it is contracted in defiance of the law, e.g., the child Marriage Restraint Act.[1] It is the only obligatory ceremony in the case of a Shudra.[2] Consequently, the manager is entitled to burden the estate with the reasonable expenses of the marriage of the co-parceners.[3]

The question is immaterial whether the relation to be married is a female,[4] provided she is a member of the joint family. This is now, settled.

But the Allahabad Court would draw a line after the first marriage, holding the second and subsequent marriages as outside the pale of legal necessity.[5] In strict view of the law this view is right; but it may be doubted whether it is in consonance with modern thought.

1055. The expenses of marriage would include the price paid for the bride, though it may convert the marriage to the Asur form disapproved by the sages. But as already seen, such marriages now obey the economic law of supply and demand and are quite common in places where girls are in deficiency.[6]

(i) Performance of Ceremonies.

1056. The performance of indispensable religious or customary duties is a recognized head of legal necessity. Such are the performance of initiatory,[7] and funeral ceremonies[8] and the performance of the father's exequial rites and Shradh[9] and the pilgrimage to Gaya[10] though not to Benares[11] since one is the necessary part of the exequial rites which the other is not. But though a pilgrimage to Gaya to offer pindas for the spiritual benefit of the deceased is an acknowledged necessity a feast given upon return is not so.[12] So referring to the widow it was said: "Pilgrimages are generally made by a widow with a view to present her husband's funeral obligations at the sacred place visited, and to ensure for his soul the special merit rising from such presentation. In every case the question must be whether the pilgrimage was for the spiri-

---

1 Pat. 266; Gopala v. Venkatanarasa, 37 M. 273 (274) F.B.; overruling contra in Govindarazulu v. Devarabhotla, 27 M. 206; Jai Indra v. Dilraj Kuar, 8 O.L.J. 94 : 61 I.C. 278.

(1) Ramjan v. Chand Mondal, 41 C.W. N. 1176.

(2) Sundarabai v. Shivnarayana, 32 B. 81 (90); Saravana v. Muttayi, 6 M.H. C.R. 371; Mahadeva v. Rama, 13 M.L. J. 75; Kameswari v. Veeracharlu, 34 M. 422; Gopala v. Venkatanarasa, 37 M. 273 F.B.; Narayana v. Ramalinga, 39 M. 587; Garibullah v. Khalaksingh, 25 A. 407 P.C.

(3) Juggessur v. Nilambur, 3 W.R. 217; Durga Prasad v. Jewdhari, 62 C. 733.

(4) Prayag Narain v. Ajudhia, (1848) 7 B.S.R. 602 : 8 I.D. (O.S.) 456; Chuman Lall v. Gunput Lall, 16 W.R. 52; Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Ram, 32 A. 575; Makhan Lal v. Gayan, 8 A.L.J. 13.

(5) Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Ram, 32 A. 575.

(6) Ib.

(7) 2 W. Cac., Ch. XI, case 6, pp. 259, 260; Puran Dai v. Jai Narain, 4 A. 482 (484).

(8) Chumun Lall v. Gunput Lall, 16 W.R. 52; Mahomed Ashruf v. Brojes- 562 (564).

(9) Chuman Lall v. Gunput Lall, 16 W.R. 52; Mahomed Ashraf v. Brojessure, 19 W.R. 426; Mutteram v. Gopal, 20 W.R. 187.

(10) Junmojoy v. Russomoye, 10 W.R. 209; Mohamed Ashruf v. Brojessure, 19 W.R. 426; Mutteram v. Gopal, 20 W. R. 187; Ganpat v. Tulsiram, 36 B. 88 (90); Srimohan v. Brij Behary, 36 C. 753; contra in Raj Chandra v. Sheshoo, 7 W.R. 146.

(11) Hurromohun v. Auluck Monee, 1 W.R. 252.

(12) Makhan Lal v. Gayan Singh, 8 A. L.J. 13.

tual benefit of her husband, in the performance of her duty to his soul, and whether the expenses incurred are reasonable and were made honestly, having regard to the estate, the status of the family, and other considerations which it is customary for Hindus to take into account in accordance with the religious beliefs and usages."[1] So a pilgrimage to Pandharpur or any other local Gaya might be considered necessary, and it was so considered in a case.[2]

1057. The gift of property to the priest of a temple may be a pious act but is not of legal necessity.[3] If the gift be of a small value it may pass muster as a pious gift,[4] but a considerable portion of the estate cannot be alienated for a pious purpose.[5]

(j) Cost of litigation.

1058. Litigation is an evil, but it is a necessary evil, and one which constitutes legal necessity if it is necessary for the recovery, protection or preservation of the estate or of any of its assets,[6] and it may be added, for the defence of its head,[7] or of any of its members.[8] The question was examined by Mahmud, J., who said: "A distinction should be drawn between litigation undertaken to protect the property and litigation the object of which is to obtain a possible benefit for the estate. The former relates to the security of that which has already been acquired. As a general rule, the former class of litigation would no doubt amount to legal necessity; and in regard to the latter classes of litigation, it may be laid down that, if such litigation ends in actual benefit to the estate, any alienation which may have been necessary for prosecuting the litigation would be valid and binding upon the reversioner, on the analogy of the maxim: 'He who enjoys the benefit ought to bear the burden also.' It may be further laid down that in cases where the litigation undertaken by the widow is not undertaken for the benefit of the estate, any alienations made by her for the purpose of prosecuting the litigation are necessarily invalid and do not bind the property. It may even be a question of nicety to determine the exact nature of a litigation when it actually ends in failure. The widow may have been acting with a view to benefit the estate; the creditor may have advanced money to her without any fraudulent intention. But these circumstances alone do not in my judgment warrant the conclusion that the charge created by the widow should bind the property against the reversioners."[9]

1059. In this case the widow had embarked upon a very costly but uncertain claim to recover property to which her husband had an alleged right of succession, but which he had not himself sought to enforce. The

(1) Ganpat v. Tulsi Ram, 36 B. 88 (90).
(2) Ib., p. 90.
(3) Ram Kewal v. Ram Kishore, 22 C. 506.
(4) Cossinath v. Hurrosoondry, 3 I. D. (O. S.) 907, affirming O.A. 1 I. D. (O.S.) 292 P.C.; Mahoda v. Kuleani, 6 I.D. (O.S.) 62 : 1 Mac. S.R. 82; Ram Chunder v. Gangagovind, 7 I.D. (O.S.) 110 : 4 Mac. S.R. 147; Kartick Chunder v. Gour Mohun, 1 W.R. 48; Runjeet v. Mhd. Waris, 21 W.R. 49; Ram Kewal Singh v. Ramkishore, 22 C. 506.
(5) Puran Dai v. Jai Narain, 4 A. 482; Ram Kewal v. Ram Kishore, 22 C. 506.
(6) Karimuddin v. Gobind, 31 A. 497 (506) P.C.; Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532 (542); Grose v. Amirtamoyi, 12 W.R. 13.
(7) Beni Ram v. Man Singh, 34 A. 4 (8).
(8) Ib., p. 7; Hanumat v. Sonadhari, 4 P.L.J. 653 : 52 I.C. (Pat.) 734 (735); Ramalinga v. Muthayyan, 26 M.L.J. 528 : 24 I.C. (M.) 356.
(9) Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532 (543).

court held that the litigation was not for the benefit of the estate, and did not support the mortgage.[1] Even where a suit is necessary, it may not be necessary to mortgage the estate and carry the case to the Privy Council. In this view the court disallowed a mortgage given by the widow as security for costs, even though the husband had deposited it before it was accepted.[2]

As between suits instituted to protect and those instituted to recover an estate the courts hold the first to be necessary while the second unnecessary though they may be for the benefit of the estate.[3]

(k) Cost of defending Members.

1060. The cost of defending the head or any other member[4] of the family, whether the father or any other relation, is held to be a necessity justifying the mortgage or sale of the joint estate[5] being regarded as a pious and necessary act in order to remove the stigma of disgrace upon the whole family consequent upon the conviction of one of its members,[6] though not so (it is said) an expense incurred in bringing the murderer of a coparcener to justice.[7] But it is apparent that every coparcener is entitled to protection and an action whether preventive or punitive may be as much a necessity as any other so recognised.

"Secular benefit" defined.

119. "Secular benefit" includes such protection or preservation or improvement of family estate, or the maintenance, education, or advancement of its members, as may, due regard being had to all circumstances, be considered reasonable and proper.[8]

1061. Analogous Law.—"Legal necessity" and "benefit" are two key words justifying an alienation of coparcenary property. These words are the outcome of the text of Vyas, already cited (§ 1033), from which it will be seen that Vyas justifies an alienation of property (a) in the season of distress; (b) for the sake of the family; and (c) especially for pious purposes. Pious purposes may be obligatory or commendatory, the one constitutes "spiritual necessity", the other "spiritual benefit." These terms will be defined and explained in the next paragraph. Secular legal necessity would fall under Vyas's clause (a) and is defined in section 113, while secular benefit would fall under this clause (b) and is defined in and explained under this section.

1062. As observed by Lord Atkinson, the terms "Legal necessity" and "benefit" were general and elastic terms, and that as regards "bene-

---

(1) Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532 (534, 545).

(2) Phool Koer v. Debi Pershad, 12 W.R. 187.

(3) Roy Mukhun Lall v. Stewart, 18 W.R. 121.

(4) Beni Ram v. Man Singh, 34 A. 4; Hanumat v. Sonadhari, 52 I.C. (Pat.) 734; Premsukh v. Ram Bhujawan, 52 I. C. (Pat.) 964; Dhanukdhari v. Rambirich, 1 Pat. 171, dissenting from Nathu Rai v. Din Dayal, (1917) 2 Pat. L.J. 166.

(5) Beni Ram v. Man Singh, 34 A. 4; contra in Nathu Rai v. Din Dayal, 2 Pat.L.J. 166: 39 I.C. 665, in which, however, there is no discussion; Nobin Chandra v. Khedar Nath, 6 C.W.N. 648.

(6) Dhanukdhari v. Rambirich, 1 Pat. 171 (173, 174); Krishna v. Muthulakshmi, (1934) M. 169, distinguished in Maruthappan v. Nirai Kumathan, (1937) M. 943 (946, 947).

(7) Maruthappan v. Nirai Kumathan, (1937) M. 943.

(8) Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 (714) P.C.; § 1062.

fit" it was impossible to give a precise definition so as to be applicable to all cases.[1] "The preservation, however, of the estate from extinction, the defence against hostile litigation affecting it, the protection of it or portions from injury or deterioration, by inundation, these and such like things would obviously be benefits. The difficulty is to draw the line as to what are, in this connection to be taken as benefits and what not."[2] That necessity and benefit are two concepts distinct and distinguishable from each other is recognized both in the texts as well as in the decided cases. The recovery of an estate from another which the family claimed by succession is a clear case of "benefit" as distinct from necessity.[3] Such is also the case of starting a trade for improving the family fortunes.[4] The older cases, however, do not observe any distinction between legal necessity and benefit, holding the latter as a species of family necessity. So in a leading case[5] the Privy Council said that the alienation would be valid if it was made by the managing member of the family "for legitimate family purposes" and in another case, where the father had contracted a debt to purchase a stock of buffaloes to enable him to start the business of milkman, West, J., held that the debt was contracted to put the father in the way of earning a maintenance, and, therefore, under the pressure of family necessity.[6] On the other hand, in a Calcutta case where the widow had executed a bond for raising funds to prosecute a suit for recovery of certain property, the Lower Court upheld her debt as supported by necessity, but Couch, C.J., said: "That is not a necessity at all, because there was no necessity to institute the suits though it may have been a proper thing for her to do, as being beneficial to her as well as to those who would succeed her in the property.[7]

1063. What is a Benefit.—The distinction between necessity and benefit is now well recognized, though cases must occur in which an act might be justified from the dual stand-point, since an act is sometimes defended as necessary because it is conducive to the spiritual benefit. Even apart from such figurative expression the two terms are sometimes apt to be confused, though they do not exert the same degree of pressure upon the estate.

The distinction between the two was pointed out by Mahmud, J., in a passage already cited.[8]

1064. The question whether anything is a benefit must depend upon the circumstances. A well and a tank are both useful for irrigating land, but whether the manager was justified in charging the estate for the purpose of excavating them is a question which must depend upon circumstances. If the income of the estate was sufficient, he would in no case be entitled to raise funds on the security of the estate to dig them.

---

(1) Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 (714) P.C.

(2) Ib., p. 718.

(3) Roy Mukhun Lal v. Stewart, 18 W.R. 121.

(4) Babaji v. Krishnaji, 2 B. 666; Achhe v. Jawala, (1873) P.R. 67; Ganga v. Khushal, (1876) P.R. 77; Raghunath v. Ruheem, (1869) P.R. 53; Janki Das v. Sanchi Ram, (1871) P.R. 11; Achru v. Merchand, (1879) P.R. 98; Thakusi v. Ganda Mall, (1879) P.R. 78; Hazura v. Chand, (1887) P.R. 87; N. Jamna v. Sardar, (1888) P.R. 93; Charanjit v. Telu Mal, (1888) P.R. 152.

(5) Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.

(6) Babaji v. Krishnaji, 2 B. 666.

(7) Ray Mukhun Lall v. Stewart, 18 W.R. 121 (122), followed in Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532 (543).

(8) Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532 (543); Bhagwan Das v. Mahadeo, 45 A. 390.

If, on the other hand, it was the only means of averting drought and there were no funds, it might be both a benefit and a necessity.[1] In either case, the act would be justified if it is reasonable and proper. If the litigation has ended in recovery of the estate then the end necessarily justifies the means and he who has the benefit, cannot complain of the burden.[2] The construction of a house is not such benefit as to justify the mortgage of the estate,[3] but the purchase of agricultural land the produce of which went to support the family, is not an act of imprudence which the junior or minor members can repudiate as not conducive to their benefit.[4] But in one case the mortgage of family land for the purpose of purchasing new land found unprofitable, was held to be a speculative and improvident transaction not binding on the minor members of the family.[5] In another case, the father was held not entitled to mortgage ancestral estate to pre-empt some property.[6] But the question is one of degree, for the manager's discretion cannot be fettered by a rigid rule that he shall never pledge the family estate to acquire new estate, and that he should have foreseen the result any more than any man of ordinary prudence could have foreseen.[7] So the court decreed a mortgage alleged to be made to acquire a zemindari, though as a matter of fact, it had already been otherwise paid for. The court held the purchase of property as a benefit to the family, and it is so, provided it is not too speculative and improvident.[8]

1065. In one case the widow had mortgaged the property to recover it from the purchaser to whom it had been sold for arrears of road cess. The court disallowed the mortgage holding that as the money was not used to stop the execution, it was not spent to meet a legal necessity.[9] But the question of benefit was not considered. It was perhaps a case where the estate was lost to the family by the widow's negligence. In that case she conferred no benefit on the reversion by her re-purchase of the property which she should never have lost. Where the manager purchases new property out of funds raised by selling or mortgaging the old, the question whether the transaction is beneficial to the family, and as such, binding upon its members, depends upon its reasonableness and propriety, which must be decided with due advertence to all the surrounding circumstances, as to which no hard and fast rule is possible, but inter alia it must be shown (i) that the new lands are at least not inferior in quality and value of the lands; (ii) that though the new lands are not superior in value to the old lands, the family would otherwise gain by the change; and (iii) that the family would not lose by

(1) Makhanlal v. Gayan Singh, 8 A. L.J. 13; Ranjeet Ram v. Mhd. Waris, 21 W.R. 49.

(2) Karimuddin v. Gobind, 31 A. 497 P.C.

(3) Bhogaraju v. Adapalli, 10 M.L.T. 179.

(4) Manna Lal v. Karu Singh, 56 I. C. (C.) 766 P.C., explained in Sadhu v. Brahmadeo, 61 I.C. (Pat.) 20 (22, 23); Kalika v. Shiv Nandan, 63 I.C. (Pat.) 265 (630).

(5) Subramania v. Chidambara, 41 M. L.J. 459; Radha Pershad v. Talook Raj Kuar, 20 W.R. 38.

(6) Shankar v. Bechu, 47 A. 381.

(7) Sheotahal v. Arjun, (1920) Pat. 155; 56 I.C. 879; Tularam v. Tulshi Ram, 42 A. 559; Manulal v. Karu Singh, 56 I. C. (C.) 766 P.C.; Jagmohun v. Prag Aher, 47 A. 452; Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das, 50 A. 969 (F.B.) followed in Sellappa v. Suppan, (1937) M. 906 (912); Auraj Singh v. Shambhu Singh, 55 A. 1 F.B.

(8) Tularam v. Tulshi Ram, 42 A. 559; Bhagwan Das v. Mahadeo, 45 A. 390; Shankar v. Bechu, 47 A. 381.

(9) Sri Mohan v. Brij Behary, 36 C. 753 (757); Kaihur Singh v. Roop Singh, 3 N.W.P.H.C.R. 40.

parting with ancestral lands and purchasing new lands.[1] But it is not a question for the infusion of sentiment into consideration of the question. The question is one of material advantage. It is not often that the managers in this country are willing to barter new lamps for old. Their chronic conservatism is a sufficient safeguard against making any cataclysmic changes in their ancestral domain. But when they are made their conduct must be examined in the cold light of facts.

It will be thus noticed that the term benefit is rather a term of art, implying, as it does, such benefit to the estate or person of the minor as warrants in law the alienation of his property. Instances of such alienations have been given before, such as the sale of a small portion of the estate which was inconvenient and expensive to manage.[2]

1066. No Benefit.—These general considgrations migh be illustrated by reference to a few cases. In one case, the mother took a lease of land and mortgaged the minor's property as security for the due payment of its rent. Rents having fallen into arrears, the landlord sued to enforce the mortgage, but the court held that the transaction was not beneficial to the minor in that the mother had accepted the hazards of a lease by hypothecating the minor's land.[3]

In another case, the Privy Council held the grant of a perpetual lease of land at fixed rent, however adequate that rent may be, at the time of granting them, could not be upheld as a benefit, first because by this means the estate is deprived of the benefit of enhanced rents for all time, and secondly because the leases were made solely to raise capital to embark in the money lending business, calculated to bring in an income larger than that derived from the probably safer and certainly more stable property, namely, the land itself.[4] On the same ground the court could not uphold the sale of land in order to repurchase other land which formerly belonged to the family, but which was not shown to yield more than a mere sentimental satisfaction.[5] Then again, while it would be right to construct a dwelling house it would be wrong to raise its cost by mortgaging the estate.[6]

Proof of Legal Necessity:—See S. 150.

Incidents of a Joint Family.

120. A Hindu family is constituted of the following members,[7] namely:—

Constitution of a Hindu family.

(1) Persons descended from a common ancestor and related to one another as sapindas;[7]

---

(1) Krishnasami (In re), (1912) M. W.N. 167: 13 I.C. 648; Bohru v. Dhuram Singh, 14 I.C. 745.

(2) Krishna Chandra v. Ratan Ram, 20 C.W.N. 645 (647).

(3) Radha Pershad v. Talook Raj Kuar, 20 W.R. 38; Subramania v. Chidambara, 41 M.L.J. 459; Besdeo v. Mhd. Yusaf, 51 A. 285.

(4) Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 (719) P.C., following Shibessoree v. Mothooranath, 13 M.I.A. 270 (275); Mayandi v. Chokalingam, 27 M. 292 (299); Abhiram v. Shyama, 36 C. 1003 (1013).

(5) Kaihur Singh v. Roop Singh, 3 N.W.P.H.C.R. 4 (7).

(6) Bhogaraju v. Adapali, 10 M.L.J. 170.

(7) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (154).

(2) Collateral relations descended from a common ancestor in the male lines;

(3) Persons adopted into the family;

(4) The mother, the wives and widows of the male members, and unmarried daughters.

1067. Analogous Law.—The unit of a Hindu society is not the individual, but the family, and in their mutual relations it is not the individuals but the families that count. Whenever the individuals count, they do only as representing the family. Each individual in a family has to fill his appointed office recognized by immemorial usage.

But what is a family and who are its members? In its primary conception, a family consisted of all the descendants in the male line from a common ancestor, their wives, sons and unmarried daughters. The existence of such a family is still recognized. But in practice, they are split up into smaller aggregates as soon as their number becomes unweildy, and it may then be that the family comprises only a man, his wife or wives, his sons, their wives and children, and their unmarried or widowed daughters.[1] But such a family, though complete in itself, is only a component part of a larger family consisting of all such who are related to one another as sapindas.[2] These, though living apart and possessing separate property, are yet members of the same family in that they are all related through a common ancestor. But a family in this larger sense has no legal attributes. The family to be considered is that which comprises the relations enumerated in the section.[3]

Clause (4).

Since the relations mentioned in clause 4 are entitled to maintenance, a joint family may consist of a single male member with those females who have no right to a share of the corpus, but still are entitled to maintenance therefrom.[4] But this does not imply that every Hindu with wife and unmarried daughters necessarily becomes a member of the joint family, since the question depends upon whether his estate is that of the sole surviving coparcener; otherwise he is its sole owner even though his wife and daughters may be entitled to be maintained by him.

Coparcenary and coparcener defined.

121. (1) A coparcenary is a joint family comprising a common male ancestor with his lineal descendants in the male line not more than three degrees remote from him, or of the last holder of a share of his property.

(2) A coparcener is a male related not more than three degrees remote from a direct ancestor who owned an estate or was entitled to a share therein.

Explanation.—A coparcenary under the Dayabhag law is subject to the variations stated in S. 171.

1068. Analogous Law.—The term "family" as used in connection with Hindu Law is an elastic term and its significance is more often

---

(1) Sudasanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (154).

(2) Karsandass v. Gangabai, 32 B. 479 (493).

(3) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (154); Pakiriswami v. Doraswami, 9 R. 266.

(4) Vedathanni v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 49 M. 1; followed in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Gomedalli, (1935) B. 412.

assumed than defined. Taken as a large concept it would include all persons related to a common ancestor, and as such, the whole world. The term had, therefore, to be limited, and has been limited to the extent stated in the section.

1069. But is clear that even in this family all persons do not possess equal rights. The property which it owns is called "joint family property," but it is a misnomer if it implies possession of any common rights other than the right to maintenance. In the property of such family women possess no share. And even as regards males no relation beyond the son, the grandson and the great-grandson possesses any present right. But this does not mean that other relations have no shares at all. All it means is that given the father alive with his son, grandson and great-grandson, any remoter relation such as the great-grandson has no present right to call for a partition which is the test of his present interest.

1070. Under Hindu Law, the law relating to partition is so intimately connected with the law of inheritance, that they may almost be said to be blended together.[1] The question then arises what relations are entitled to partition? Now, the Mitakshara declares it a settled point that "property in the paternal or grand-paternal estate is by birth."[2] The Mitakshara does not mention the great-grandfather but he is included in the Viramitroday,[3] and is supported by judicial decisions.[4] The principle of coparcenary is co-ordinate with the gift of funeral cakes[5] and as no relation beyond the third (or counting one's self, the fourth) degree can offer them[6] it lies in near collaterals, up to the third degree.[7]

1071. The relations included in this description were graphically described by Nanabhai Haridas, J., in a case[8] in which the plaintiffs and defendants both descendants of one Udhav, a common ancestor, the acquirer of the property, claimed partition. The plaintiffs were beyond and the defendants within the fourth degree from Udhav. The defendants disputed the plaintiff's right to partition on the ground that they were more than three (counting themselves four) degrees remote from Udhav, which the court allowed, supporting its view by examples, from which the following tables are drawn:—

---

(1) Yenumala v. Yenumala, 6 M.H.C.R. 93 (107).

(2) Mit. I-I-27. Colebrooke's error in translating Paitamah पैतामह as "ancestral" is wrong, as the word Paitamah means "grand-paternal"—Jamna Prasad v. Ram Partap, 29 A. 667 (669). The close connection between Partition and Inheritance would be obvious to any one who notices that both the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag which deal with partition and inheritance call it "dayabhag" (or "the partition of heritage"). Katyayan said: "His son includes the great-grandson of the person whose estate is divided because the case of the grandson is considered . . . The meaning is that the partition of heritage extends inclusively to the further degree counting from the proprietor."

(3) Ch. II, Pt. 1, 16; Golap Shastri's Tr. p. 72.

(4) Moro v. Ganesh, 10 B.H.C.R. 444; Yenumala v. Yenumala, 6 M.H.C.R. 93 (107) : Str. H.L. 124.

(5) Devala, cited in 3 Dig. 1 : Str. H.L. 204.

(6) Manu, IX-186.

(7) They are called Sakulyas, i.e., those belonging to the family.

(8) Moro v. Ganesh, 10 B.H.C.R. 444.

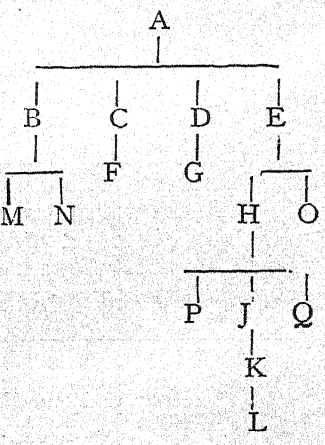
A, the father, acquires an estate. It is his self-acquired property and, therefore, his sons B, C, D and E have no interest by birth, that is, they are not his co-parceners. But suppose they have issues as given in the tree. On the death of A—B, C, D and E become coparceners in A's estate, and so do F, G, and H and so on up to K who is in the fourth degree, from E: but since K's son is beyond that degree he has no right to force a partition, and therefore, he is not a coparcener, but as soon as E dies he will become one. This case illustrates the two rules stated in the section, viz., first, that any coparcener may be beyond the fourth degree removed from the acquirer or the original owner of the property sought to be divided, provided he is not more than four degrees removed from the last owner, however, remote he may be from the original owner thereof. This rule is capable of unlimited expansion.

Secondly, a coparcenary may consist entirely of collateral relations. Such would be the case on the death of A, if the sons of A do not separate.

Coparcenary of several Families.

1072. Again, coparcenary may consist of several families. Take for instance, the last diagram enlarged by further births of male children in the family.



Here, then, there are the following families: (1) A with his four sons, B, C, D and E and their sons and grandsons M, N, F, G, H, O, P, J, Q constitute the main family. (2) Then B with his two sons M and N, C and D with their sons F, G, E with his sons, H, O, grandsons P, J, Q and great-grandson K, and H and J, likewise with their sons and grandson each constitutes a "branch" family. All the families have one common ancestor A and each branch family has its own head being, B, C, D, E, H and J, respectively. On A's death the coparcenary will consist of the four brothers B, C, D and E and their male issue. On the death of B, C and D, the coparcenary will consist of E, his nephews, M, N, F, G and all his own issue, but L will be out of it, but will enter the coparcenary on the death of E.

1073. It is thus apparent that the personell of the coparcenary ever varies by births, adoptions and deaths. Those who are not coparceners to-day may become so to-morrow. Those who are of the coparcenary to-day may go out of it to-morrow by adoption, partition, renunciation, acquiescence[1] disqualification,[2] or death, natural or civil.

---

(1) Manu, IX 207; Mit. II-II, 12; (156). Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 145

(2) Ram Sahye v. Laljee, 8 C. 149.

1074. Hitherto the entire family depicted in the diagram has been considered joint. But suppose some branches of it separate from the rest. In that case, the main family does no longer count. If E separtes from his three brothers by taking one-fourth of his patrimony, then his estate becomes his "ancestral property" in which his issue become coparceners by birth. The branch coparcenary then becomes the main coparcenary and independent of its other branches. But so long as there is no division, the branch families have no legal existence as a separate independent unit; but if they comprise all the members of the branch, or of a sub-branch they can form a distinct and separate corporate unit within the larger corporate unit and hold property as such. Such property may be the self-acquisition or obstructed heritage of a paternal ancestor of that branch, as distinguished from the other branches, which property has come to that branch and that branch alone, or it may be the self-acquisition of one or more individual members of that branch, which, by the act of the parties, has been impressed with the character of joint property owned by that branch and that branch alone to the exclusion of the other branches.[1] So if in the last illustration, should E obtain property from his uncle, or any maternal relation and E and his sons H and O should augment it by their joint labour, the estate so constituted would exclusively belong to that branch, and descend to their issue as an unobstructed heritage.[2]

Cl. (2) Illegitimate son.

1075. The coparceners are, ordinarily, males related to one another and all possessing vested rights. But an illegitimate son of a Shudra has been assigned textually rights which are within limits coparcenary and subject to survivorship. These rights depend upon the texts quoted elsewhere. (§ 302.) Upon their strength it has been held that there may be coparcenary between a legitimate and an illegitimate son with survivorship inter se.[3]

Females excluded.

1076. It has already been stated that women are debarred from the right of enforcing a partition,[4] which is the test of coparcenership,[5] and the fact that certain females are now statutorily empowered to enforce a partition would not otherwise alter their position.[6] Mothers, however, receive a share at partition.[7] But this is the ordinary rule; though its analogy has been extended to the family of dancing girls amongst whom there may be a coparcenary with the right of survivorship,[8] though since the members thereof are all women that analogy cannot be extended to holding that by birth they acquire an interest in the ancestral property[9]

(1) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (155).
(2) Ib., pp. 155, 156.
(3) Sadu v. Baiza, 4 B. 37; approved in Jogendra v. Nityanand, 18 C. 151 P.C.; followed in Vellaiappa v. Natarajan, 55 M. 1 (15) P.C.; Shamu v. Babu Aba, 52 B. 300; Shome Shankar v. Rajesar, 21 A. 99; Packirisamy v. Doraswamy, 9 B. 266 (271).
(4) Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (165) P.C.
(5) Punna v. Radha Kissen, 31 C. 476 (478).
(6) The Hindu Women's Right of Property Act, 1937.
(7) Mit., I-II-9.
(8) Chalakonda v. Chalakonda, 2 M. H.C.R. 56 (58); Kamakshi v. Nagarathnam, 5 M.H.C.R. 161 (166); Official Assignee v. Swornam, 4 M. 330; Venku v. Mahalinga, 11 M. 393; Muthu Kannu v. Paramasami, 12 M. 214.
(9) Kokilambal v. Sundarammal, 8 I. C. 632.

The fact that the dancing girls live by prostitution may place them outside the pale of Hindu society, but it cannot deprive them of the protection of Hindu Law. Moreover, prostitution as a trade is recognized and regulated by Hindu Law.[1]

1077. No Coparcener.—The question whether the son is a coparcener in his father's self-acquired property and what constitutes the latter's self-acquired property are questions upon which there had been some disvergence of opinion. (§§ 1015, 1022.) It has been laid down that property acquired by the father by devise from his paternal relation became ancestral property in his hands, and his sons acquired a right thereto at the moment of their birth.[2] This view has been combated in other cases,[3] in which it has been held that such property would be the self-acquired property and not coparcenary property in the hands of the son, a gift by will being indistinguishable from a gift inter vivos. As to the question whether the son is a coparcener in his father's self-acquisition, there appears also to be some divergence of authorities based upon the text of the Mitakshara, the question being answered in tht affirmative in a case of the Madras High Court[4] though the contrary has been held elsewhere.[5] The question is now set at rest by the Legislature. (§ 1015.) The question becomes material in a case of re-union or where two brothers acquire property by their jont labour and the question of succession to them is raised by the son of one against the widow of the other. The Mitakshara contains some expressions which would seem to favour the persistence of coparcenary even in the joint acquisition of two brothers, but it does not concede to their sons the right of partition and the testamentary power of a person over his self-acquisitions since evolved would be inconsistent with the existence of a coparcenary right in the son. It is then safe to assume that the conception of such right is inconsistent with the son's coparcenership. (§§ 1015,1022.)

No coparcenery by contract.

122. The relation of coparcenership arises by law. It cannot be created by contract.[6]

1078. Analogous Law.—Both a joint family, and its child a coparcenary, are the outcome of the Hindu social evolution, and have as such become definite concepts with their two essential attributes, namely, an undivided family as a corporate body and the possession by it of joint property which is usual, but by no means its primary attribute,[7] since joint family may have had property all of which is lost by fire or flood; but it does not destroy its jointness. "Such corporate body with its heritage, is purely a creature of law and cannot be created by act of

---

(1) Venku v. Mahalinga, 11 M. 393 (396, 397); Vishvanath v. Doraisami, 48 M. 944.

(2) Tara Chand v. Reeb Ram, 3 M. H.C.R. 50; Muddon Gopal v. Ram Buksh, 6 W.R. 71.

(3) Jag Mohandas v. Mangaldas Nathubhoy, 10 B. 528 (546 547, 550, 551, 552 et seq); O. A. per Sargent, C. J., pp. 576 et seq., in which the Mitakshara texts are explained; followed in Parsotam v. Janki Bai, 29 A. 354 (363).

(4) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149.

(5) Jamna Prasad v. Ram Pratap, 29 A. 667 (671), following Chatturbhooj v. Dharamsi, 9 B. 438, dissenting from Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149.

(6) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (154).

(7) Janaki Ram v. Nagamoni, 49 M. 98.

parties, save in so far that by adoption, a stranger may be affiliated as a member of that corporate body. Persons who by birth or adoption are not members of a Hindu family cannot in the absence of custom having the force of law, by mere agreement, become or be made members of a joint family.''[1] Consequently, a father and his illegitimate sons living with him cannot form a joint family;[2] nor can two females living together be so regarded.[3] So where the father and his five sons constituted an undivided family and two of his youngest sons, the plaintiff and the defendant commenced to live together, and one of them, the defendant, commenced business as a railway contractor in which the plaintiff claimed a coparcenary interest on the ground of their relationship and joint interest, from which he wished the court to infer an agreement in favour of their becoming joint coparceners, but the court threw out his suit on the ground that the sub-coparcenership set up by him was unknown to the law, and coult not be created by contract.[4] In another case two brothers being members of a joint Mitakshara family went down to Calcutta and began to work there as coolies. Out of their joint savings they purchased a house. One of them having died the other sued his widow for possession of the house on the ground that he had inherited it by survivorship. But the court threw out his case on the ground that there was no intention to create a coparcenary between themselves by agreement,[5] to which it might have been added that, even if there was, it could not be recognized by law.[6] Such persons could not be regarded as re-united after a division.[7] But where a Shudra executed a writing, stating that he had two illegitimate sons who were like his legitimate sons, with right of heirship, and on his death the sons took his estate and continued to live jointly, it was held that they inherited as joint tenants, so that neither could devise his interest.[8] As women cannot be coparceners, it follows that property acquired by a woman and her husband would belong to both, and on the wife's death, her share would descend according to the rules of inheritance prescribed for stridhan.

Disqualified coparceners.

123. (1) A person who is and has been congenitally a lunatic or idiot is disqualified from coparcenership.

(2) Save as above; no person is so disqualified by reason only of any disease, deformity or physical or mental defect:[9]

(3) Provided that such disqualification is personal only to the coparcener and does not affect his natural issue, though it affects equally his adopted son and the wife.[10]

Exception.—Nothing herein applies to a Dayabhag family in which the textual disabilities still prevail.[11]

(1) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (154).

(2) Shamu v. Babu Aba, 52 B. 300.

(3) Khush Waqt v. Jagannath, (1930) O. 184.

(4) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (157).

(5) Mitil Bouli v. Bhagwan, 35 I.C. (C.) 635.

(6) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (157), commenting on contra in Sham Narain v. Court of Wards, 90 W. R. 197.

(7) Muthu Ram Krishna v. Mari Mathu, 26 M.L.J. 532 : 24 I.C. 363.

(8) Shamu v. Babu, 52 B. 295 (307) explaining Jogendra v. Nityanand, 18 C. 151 (155) P.C.

(9) S. 2 of Hindu Inheritance Removal of Disabilities Act, XII of (1928).

(10) Yad., II-142; Mit., II-X-9, see S. 307.

(11) See § 330.

1079. Analogous Law.—This section is drawn from section 2 of the Hindu Inheritance (Removal of Disabilities) Act, 1928,[1] printed in the Appendix, which overrules the texual rule of Hindu Law which excluded a person from coparcenership or his inheritance by reason of his congenital idiocy, blindness, deafness, and dumbness, and the following defects, though not congenital, if present, when the succession opened, namely, madness, sanious or ulcerous leprosy, permanent lameness, impotency, and other incurable diseases. These disabilities no longer exclude a person from coparcenership or inheritance, the only defects disqualifying him being his congenital lunacy or idiocy.

The reason given in the texts for the exclusion is that these evils are the outcome of his past life and that the sufferer must undo the past by his piety and penance in this life for which the life of the householder is ill-fitted. But this appears to be the priestly rendering of a more practical consideration, which justified their exclusion, namely, that those who could not fight had no reason to share in its booty.

1080. Whatever may be the genesis of the rule, it is now limited by the Legislature to only two cases of congenital lunacy and idiocy. The reason why these disqualifications were sanctioned by the Legislature is that a person bereft of reason can enjoy no right of property and it is society that he should be removed from the incentive to marry and good for society that he should be removed from the incentive to marry and procreate issue. But if he does marry, his son is not deframed of his right of inheritance, the person excluded from inheritance must, however, be maintained since that right has not been abrogated by the Legislature. (§ 97.)

Loss of Coparcenary Rights.

124. (1) A coparcener loses his interest in the coparcenership in the following cases, namely:—

(a) on his adoption (other than in the Dwamushayana form) into another family;[2]

(b) on his withdrawal from the coparcenary, or relinquishing his share therein;[3]

(c) on his alienating his interest for consideration subject to the provisions of section 126;

(d) on the attachment and sale of his interest in execution of a decree passed against him personally;[4]

(e) on the extinction of his interest by adverse possession;[5]

---

(1) Act XII of 1928.

(2) Manu, IX-142; S.B.E. 3355; Yadao v. Namdeo, 49 C. 1 P.C.; Dattatraya v. Govind, 40 B. 429 (433); Sri Raja Venkata v. Sri Raja Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (447) and cases cited in comm. See also S. 60, supra.

(3) Manu, IX-207; Yad., II-117; Shivajirao v. Vasantrao, 33 B. 267 (271); Chandra v. Dampat, 16 A. 369 Sundersanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (156); Anand Rao v. Wasant Rao, 9 Bom.L.R. 595 P.C.

(4) See S. 126.

(5) Suryanarayana v. Tammanna, 25 M. 504; Atma Ram v. Godhu Ram, 14 Lah. 306 (310).

(f) on his voluntary retirement from the world;[1]

(2) A coparcener may otherwise forfeit his right of coparcenary by doing an act or suffering an omission that is incompatible with its continuance.

(3) In cases specified in clauses (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and clause (2) not only the coparcener but his natural issue and all claiming through him forfeit their right, whereas in cases specified in the remaining clauses the forfeiture is personal and does not affect those who claim after, through or under him.

Illustrations.

(a) To cl. (1) (a).—A, B, and C are members of a joint family. B being the son A, the latter gives him in adoption to D. B ceases to be a joint member of the family of A and C. (See § 60.)

(b) To cl. (1) (d)— A and B are coparceners. In execution of a decree obtained against B, A's interest is erroneously seized and sold. A failed to object. On sale of his interest he ceases to be a member of the coparcenary.

(c) To cl. (2).—Of two coparceners A and B, A kills B in sudden fit of temper. He cannot take B's interest by survivorship. (§ 303).

1081. Analogous Law.—While the last section dealt with the forfeiture of coparcenary right, this section deals with the loss of that right in consequence of the act of the coparcener.

1082. Adoption: Alienation and Relinquishment.—The adoption of a coparcener into another family amounts to civil death in his natural family. It has, therefore, the same effect in that it extinguishes his coparcenary interest which enlarges the share of the remaining members.[2] Its voluntary alienation for value is allowed in certain Provinces, its involuntary alienation is possible everywhere, since in a decree obtained against a coparcener his interest in the joint property is liable to sequestration and sale, whereupon the coparcener naturally ceases to possess any interest in the joint family property. Regarding him as a coparcener he is as good as dead. The same result ensues from the relinquishment of his interest. Such relinquishment may again be voluntary or involuntary. It is voluntary if the coparcener leaves the family for good by abandoning the status of a householder. But, of

---

Cl. (b).—S. 122.

Cl. (c).—Syed Taffazzool v. Raghoonath, 14 M.I.A. 40 (50, 51); Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Prasad, 5 C. 148 (174) P.C.; Hardi Narain v. Rudra Prakash, 10 A. 626 (636, 637) P.C.; Ramkishore v. Jainarayan, 40 C. 966 (981) P.C.

Cl. (d).—Gangadhar v. Parashram, 29 B. 300 (304, 305); Jogendra v. Baladeo, 35 C. 961 (968, 969); Kumarappa v. Saminatha, 42 M. 431 (439).

Cl. (e).—Vashisth, XVII-27; Yad. II-137; Mitak., II-10-3; Dayabhag, V, V-11; Mayukh, IV-115; 2 Dig. 525; v. Darp. 10; 1 Str. H.L. 185, 96; Ss. 107 108, Ev. Act.

Cl. (f).—Peddayya v. Ramalingam, 11 M. 406; Shivji Rao v. Vasant Rao, 33 267 (271).

(1) Mit. II-X-3; Vashisth cited in Vivad Chintamani, ch. "Of Partition," §§ 126, 127, 129.

(2) Manu, IX-142, 25 S.B.E. 355; Yadao v. Namdeo, 49 C. 1 P. C.; Dattatraya v. Gobind, 40 B. 429 (433); Sri Rajah Venkata v. Sri Rajah Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (447); Behari Lal v. Kailas Chandra, 1 C.W.N. 121; Maroti v. Luxman, 5 N.L.J. 58.

course, the relinquishment by a coparcener, even the father, of his interest does not affect the interest of his sons.[1]

Clause (1) (a) Adoption.

1083. That a coparcener, upon his adoption into another family, loses all rights in his natural family is clear from what has been stated in S. 54. The only exception to this rule is where the adoption is in the dvamushyayan form, which as a form of adoption is exceptional if not wholly obsolete.

It is only his undivided coparcenary interest of which he is divested; because the enjoyment of it depends upon his jointness. Adoption severs his relationship with the joint family, and therefore, upon his ceasing to be its coparcener, he ceases to retain any interest in the coparcenary property.

Of course, a person does not, upon his adoption, forfeit his share which he has already obtained on partition.[2]

Clause (1) (b) Withdrawal.

1084. Though a coparcenary cannot be created by contract, its continuance depends upon the consensus of the members to remain joint. It is consequently open to any member to withdraw by giving notice of his intention to withdraw therefrom. He may do so by demanding a partition but this is not necessary, since a member may not desire complete severance, being content to determine his status. In that case he may continue joint, but his jointness will thenceforward be that of a co-owner and not that of a coparcener. As such, he would be entitled to call for accounts and receive his share of the profits which, as a coparcener, he could not have done. A mere declaration of a coparcener's intention withdrawing from the coparcenary is enough, but the declaration must be unequivocal. Such a declaration may be express or implied by conduct.[3] (§§ 1320-1322.)

Right of Surrender.

1085. No coparcener can surrender his right to any coparcener he chooses, since such surrender would then be indistinguishable from an alienation or a gift which he is not by the very nature of his tenure entitled to make. All that law permits him to do is to waive or renounce his right in favour of the general body of coparceners.[4] A renunciation in favour of any one of them will be so treated.[5]

Clause 1 (c) (d) Alienation, Voluntary and Involuntary.

1086. That the alienation of a coparcenary interest whether by an act voluntary or involuntary must result in its loss to the coparcener is merely a truism, but the question in this connection arises how far are such alienations permissible. (§ 126.)

(1) Karam Singh v. Surendar Singh, (1931) L. 289.

(2) Mahableshwar v. Subramanya, 47 B. 542; Sri Rajah Venkata v. Sri Rajah Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (447).

(3) See Ch. on "Partition."

(4) Manu, IX-207; Yad., II-117; Shivajirao v. Vasantrao, 33 B. 267 (271); Chandra v. Dampat, 16 A. 369; Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (156); contra in Peddayya v. Ramalingam, 11 M. 406 (407) (submitted—reasoning unsound, since release in favour of one coparcener amounts to an alienation and prejudices the right of others).

(5) Anad Rao v. Wasant Rao, 9 Bom.L.R. 595 P.C., affirming O.A. Wasant Rao v. Anand Rao, 6 Bom.L.R. 925 (947); but see Sivagnana v. Kesalarama, 1 M. 312 (332) P.C.

Clause (1) (e) Adverse Possession.

1087. Adverse possession operates upon all property whether individual or coparcenary. Such possession may be on the part of the manager[1] or other coparceners or a stranger who may exclude the coparceners collectively, directly or through the manager. But where the coparceners are joint, the possession of one is the possession of all and it will require a very strong overt act to render his possession adverse. But nevertheless, such possession is possible; while as regards a stranger who is under no obligation to the coparcenary his possession will be deemed to be prima facie exclusive and adverse.

Clause (1) (f). Asceticism.

1088. The cases on this point are, however, jealous of his right. The Mitakshara merely categorizes "one who has entered into an order of devotion" with "an enemy to his father, a sinner in an inferior degree and a person deaf, dumb, or wanting any organ."[2] The subject will have to be considered in the sequel. (§ 304.)

Clause (2). Cessor on doing an inconsistent act.

1089. Coparceners' Rights.—So long as the family remains joint, every coparcener must necessarily possess certain rights both against the manager as well against his coparceners with reference to the enjoyment of joint property. These rights, however, must be necessarily subject to other laws and to the nature of the estate. Where, for instance, the property is impartible, members of the joint family have no right beyond the customary right of maintenance. So under the Dayabhag law, the sons have no right of partition against their father. The existence and the continuance of a coparcenary depend upon the consensus of the coparceners and upon their fulfilling certain conditions upon which its existence depends. If these conditions are not fulfilled the coparcenership comes to an end so far as regards the member not fulfilling the conditions. What these conditions are is illustrated in the next clause. But the instances there given are necessarily not exhaustive. For example, it is stated in the text with some degree of particularity that a son who is hostile to his father is not entitled to the rights of a coparcenary or to inherit to him. These texts will be the subject of discussion in the sequel. They have been held to imply that before a coparcener or an heir can be excluded from participation, it must be shown that he was in a state of malignant hostility towards the father or other coparceners. (§ 303).

1090. Principle.—Withdrawal from the joint family may result from an act both voluntary and involuntary. Instances of the one are afforded by the withdrawal consequent upon partition, alienation, or relinquishment of the coparcenary interest. Instances of the others are found in the acts which destroy the incident of survivorship of which coparcenary right is a counterpart. Any act entailing permanent deprivation of caste would ordinarily dissolve the coparcenership. It may be that the act of the delinquent is in fact condoned, but if it is an act which is unexpiable in law, the result it leads to cannot be averted. If, suppose, a member, is converted to Christianity or Mahomedanism, the fact that he recants his act and is readmitted into the family would not stay the operation of law, for reconversion to Hinduism is not permissible. Where, however, a member abandons family life and becomes an ascetic, there is nothing to prevent his readmission into the bosom of his family, for in this case the door was always open and the re-entry of the ascetic would not constitute a reunion but the continuance of his joint status which his temporary abandonment of family life had merely interrupted but not destroyed. Such is also the effect of a disqualification due to physical infirmity upon the removal of which the member rejoins his family and becomes entitled to participate in all its benefits. This branch of the law has not been yet fully developed, as cases of desertion from coparcenership are not many, and the few cases in which the question was considered, will be found noticed in the sequel under the law of inheritance. (§ 304.)

(1) Suryanarayana v. Tammanna, 25 M. 504; Atma Ram v. Godhu Ram, 14 L. 306 (310).

(2) Mit., II-X-3; Dayabhag, V-V-II; Mayukh, IV-XI-5 (Mandlik), p. 109.

Outcast.

1091. The effect of outcasting a member upon a joint family requires examination, since the textual rigour has been in part mitigated by the Statute, which renders any forfeiture thereby incurred as unenforceable in law. But this provision merely safeguards his rivht of property. It does not safeguard his status as a coparcener which, according to the texts, ceases upon his becoming an outcast. Such member can demand his share,[1] and that too because of the Statute, but he cannot persist in remaining within the coparcenary, the incidents of which include joint food and joint worship from which he is necessarily excluded. It has already been seen that on his conversion the convert is put upon election. It is open to him to follow the old law, or to renounce it in favour of the new law associated with his new religion. (§§ 245-253.)

Severance upon Statutory Marriage.

1092. It is provided by the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act[2] that the marriage under that Act "of any member of an undivided family who professes the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion shall be deemed to effect his severance from such family." Buddhists have no joint family system; but in the case of Hindus, Sikhs and Jains a marriage under the Act results in the severance of the interest of the person so married from the coparcenary. This is necessary, since succession to the property of such person is regulated by the Succession Act,[3] which is inconsistent with collectivism which is the essence of coparcenary. The property such person takes upon partition becomes his own, though it may have been ancestral: he is then free to dispose of it at his discretion. His own relations can no longer claim it by their right of survivorship, though his own right of succession to them remains unimpaired. All that is destroyed is his dependent posi-

---

(1) If the property is partible, but if it is impartible, e.g., a tarwad, his conversion does not clothe him with a new right to obtain partition (tarwad) of impartible property; Pathumma v. Raman, 44 M. 891 F.B.

(2) S. 22, Act III of 1872, as amended by Act XXX of 1923.

(3) S. 24, Act III of 1872 as amended by Act XXX of 1923.

tion as a coparcener. All that he gains is his individualism which, as a Hindu, he could not have otherwise achieved.

The question whether a person who has contracted a civil marriage outside his own caste or religion, otherwise than under the provisions of the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act, equally ceases to be a member of the coparcenary has not yet been judicially determined, but there can be no doubt that it will also entail the same result, since such a person loses his caste upon such marriage.

1093. It has already been stated that the conversion of a Hindu to another faith such as Brahmoism (§ 205) or Sikhism (§ 202) has not the effect of casting him outside the pale of Hinduism. Nor does the conversion of a Hindu to an alien creed deprive him of any right which he possessed before his conversion. (§ 218.) The question still remains whether by reason of such conversion he ceases to be a member of the coparcenary.[1]

Incidents of coparcenary right.

125 Subject to any law for the time being in force, and the nature of the estate, the interest of every coparcener is subject to the following incidents, namely:—

(1) Every coparcener, with his wife and children, is entitled to joint mess, residence, and worship in the family dwelling house;[2]

(2) He is entitled to joint possession and joint enjoyment of all property comprised in the coparcenership;[3]

(3) Both he and his wife and children are entitled to maintenance and protection out of the coparcenary funds;[4]

(4) He may restrain any illegal or improper acts of the other coparceners in respect of the coparcenary;[5]

(5) Subject to the provisions of the next section and to the extent therein provided, he may alienate his share;[6]

(6) His interest is liable to variation with the members of the coparcenary,[7] but in Bengal it is fixed;

(7) He is, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, entitled to call for the partition of his share;[8]

(8) Except in a suit for partition, he cannot recover the profits of his share or separate possession of any portion of the joint property otherwise than by way of restitution;[9]

(9) His power over his separate and self-acquired property is in no way affected by his interest in the coparcenary.[10]

1094. Analogous Law.—The opening words "subject to any law for the time being in force," save, for instance, the Malabar Law, under which members of a tarwad have no right of partition, as also the Dayabhag law, under which the son has no right of partition, or indeed, any

(1) Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M.I.A. 195 (237, 238); Jogi Reddi v. Chinnabbi, 52 M. 83 (87) P.C.
(2) § 1095.
(3) Ib.
(4) Ch. VII.
(5) § 1702.
(6) See S. 126.
(7) § 1104.
(8) See Chapter on "Partition", S. 179.
(9) Pitchai Pal v. Jarahia, 14 C. 493
(10) § 1106.

other coparcenary right against the father. It would save impartible estates and other property, in respect of which there is no room for the existence of coparcenary rights. For the rest, the section sums up the rights of the coparceners inter se. These rights are equally possessed by the manager qua coparcener.

All the clauses are supported by the authorities undernoted.[1]

These are merely the broad principles which will have to be more closely examined in the chapter on partition.

Clause (1), (2) Joint Possession.

1095. The coparcener is prima facie entitled to joint possession of all and every portion of the joint property. This right flows from the very fact of this jointness. No coparcener is as of right entitled to specific possession of any portion of the joint property. His right is to obtain and maintain joint possession, not necessarily joint enjoyment, for this may not be possible. In the case of coparcenary property joint possession does not imply the assertion of any right beyond those incident to his coparcenership. As against the manager, he with his wife and children are entitled to be maintained and educated and married, and as against the other coparceners, he is entitled to retain joint possession.

1096. Where, however, any of them is allowed separate possession of the property he cannot disturb the status quo if such possession is not in denial of his right but in the enjoyment of his property.[2] He must not usurp separate possession, but must take it consistently with the rights of other coparceners if they acquiesce in it. If, when he takes it, any other coparcener objects, he is entitled to sue for restoration of the status quo ante by obtaining an injunction or joint possession.[3] But if he has acquiesced in it, his only remedy is by a suit for partition.[4] A coparcener cannot sue another for the profits of his separate possession.[5] The separate possession of one coparcener is not adverse to another unless his possession was in assertion of a hostile title or where his possession is from its nature, inconsistent with joint ownership. The fact that one erects a building on joint land does not necessarily constitute an ouster of the other coparceners entitling them to a decree for joint possession. Ouster means dispossession of another in the assertion of a hostile title.[6]

Building on Common Land.

1097. But this implies that the building was acquiesced in, or at least, there was a standing by. Where one coparcener commences to build and the other objects, he is entitled to have the building

(1) Secretary of State v. Kamachee, 7 M.I.A. 476 (537); Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Prasad, 5 C. 148 (165) P.C.; Sankar v. Hardeo, 16 C. 397 (405) P.C.; Homadari v. Ramani, 24 C. 575 F.B.; approved in Bhagwat v. Bipin Behari, 37 C. 918 (927) P.C.; Jagmohan Das v. Mangaldas, 10 B. 528.

(2) Watson & Co. v. Ramchand, 15 C. 10 (21, 22) P.C.; Lachimeshwar Singh v. Manwar, 19 C. 253 (263) P.C.

(3) Rohin Singh v. Hodding, 21 C. 340; Surendra v. Hari Mohon, 33 C. 1201; Bhairon v. Saran Rai, (1904) A.W.N. 106 F.B.; Ramcharan v. Kauleshar, 27 A. 153; Phani Singh v. Nawab Singh, 28 A. 161 (166), following Rahmat v. Salamat, (1901) A.W.N. 48, in which the court merely passed a declaratory decree, but it is submitted, it was not sufficient.

(4) Madan Mohun v. Rajah Ali, 27 C. 223 (227).

(5) Ittappan v. Manavikrama, 21 M. 153 (165, 166).

(6) Basanta v. Mohesh, 18 C.W.N. 328 (331); Durjendra v. Purendra, 11 C.L.J. 889; Israel v. Shamsher, 41 C. 436 (441, 442), in which there is a discussion as to when the Court should grant temporary injunction.

pulled down and the land restored to the status quo ante.[1] In some cases the courts go into the question whether the defendant had appropriated more of the common land than would have come to him on partition[2] but it is submitted, that this is immaterial, since no coparcener can be permitted to appropriate any specific part of the joint property without a partition in which all the coparceners will get their full quantum of the common land, having regard to possession, quality and the amount of their shares.[3] "The law provides a legitimate means by which any co-sharer may obtain partition. The law does not favour one co-sharer, adversely to the other co-sharers, making a partition in his own favour, and selecting the portion of the land he likes by erecting a building upon it."[4] But even where the coparceners have objected at the very start it does not necessarily follow that the court would decree demolition as a matter of course. Before it will do so it must be satisfied not only that there has been an encroachment on the common right, but that the coparcenary rights have been injured and that they cannot be otherwise compensated for.[5]

1098. So where a co-harer had excavated a tank on the joint land which the other co-sharer sued for filling up in order to restore the status quo ante, the court held that, before ordering it, it must be satisfied that the plaintiff had suffered some injury from the encroachment. The term "injury" in this connexion means "something substantial, something that materially affects the position of the parties."[6] The land in this case was described as "fit for cultivation," but the court held it no ground for ordering the refilling of the tank. But the result would probably have been different if the land had been actually under cultivation. In granting or withholding an injunction, the courts exercise a judicial discretion and weigh the amount of substantial mischief done or threatened to the plaintiff, and compare it with that which the injunction, if granted, would inflict upon the defendant.[7] Such was held to be the case where the defendant had converted a common staircase room to his own use and barred the plaintiff's right of access thereto, through his own part of the house,[8] though in a similar case while decreeing the removal of obstruction, the court remarked that it would not have interfered, if there had been acquiescence, abandonment or non-user of the common way.[9] The same view was taken in another case in which the court ordered restoration of the common verandah, which the defendant had pulled down, and which interfered with the plaintiff's enjoyment of the family dwelling house.[10]

1099. So the court will prevent building on joint lands,[11] but it will not interfere after the building is completed.[12] In suits for an injunction relating to joint property the courts in this country follow the practice

(1) Shadi v. Anup Singh, 12 A. 436 F.B., overruling Paras Ram v. Sherjit, 9 A. 661.
(2) Paras Ram v. Sherjit, 9 A. 661.
(3) Shadi v. Anup Singh, 12 A. 436 (437) F.B.
(4) Hajiokhan v. Initea Juddin, 10 A. 115 (116).
(5) Mocury v. Brindabun, 8 C. 708; Biswambhar v. Rajaram, 16 W.R. 14.
(6) Joy Chunder v. Bippro Churn, 14 C. 236 (238).
(7) Shamnugger Jute Factory v. Ram Narain, 14 C. 189 (198); Soshi v. Ganesh, 29 C. 500 (502).
(8) Soshi v. Ganesh, 29 C. 500 (502); Chunder Kant v. Nund Lal, 16 W.R. 277.
(9) Chunder Kant v. Nund Lal, 16 W.R. 277 (278).
(10) Gopee Kishen v. Hemchunder, 13 W.R. 312.
(11) Gooroodass v. Bejoy, 10 W.R. 171.
(12) Dwarkanath v. Gopee Nath, 18 W. R. 14.

of a court of equity in England, limiting the exercise of their jurisdiction to acts of waste, illegitimate use of the family property, or acts amounting to ouster.[1]

1100. The manager may, of course, permit an alienation of joint property which he considers necessary or proper; so, where he had consented to an alienation by a coparcener's widow, it was held to bind his after-born son who was precluded from challenging his authority.[2] He may permit any member to occupy any portion of the joint property. And it is usual and consistent with joint possession that some of the joint owners should be permitted exclusive possession of the joint property for their mutual convenience. Such possession is necessarily permissive and cannot be disturbed during the continuance of joint property by any other member, but may of course be disturbed by all of them or on their behalf by the manager.[3]

1101. The right of the coparcener to his own maintenance as well as the maintenance of his wife and children has already been the subject of discussion in a previous chapter (Ch. VII). The joint family is bound to maintain not only the coparcener and his family but also those who would have legal or moral claim upon him for maintenance. Such are his parents and widowed daughters and unmarried sisters. Even coparceners who are disqualified from inheritance are entitled to assert this right. Coparceners' concubines, if exclusively and continuously kept, become entitled to maintenance out of the joint estate on the death of their paramour.[4]

Clause (3) Maintenance.

The illegitimate sons are also entitled to maintenance[5] which might be secured by a charge on the father's property.[6] While the coparceners is entitled to maintenance for himself and his dependants, he cannot sue for if he is entitled to a share.[7] Consequently, a suit for maintenance would be maintainable only by a minor or disqualified coparceners or in respect of property which is impartible.[8]

But in Madras, a member of a tarwad is held entitled to claim separate maintenance where there is substantial inconvenience in living in the family house either on account of want of room there, or because there are quarrels which make it uncomfortable to a member to live there, where there are several houses belonging to the tarwad and a member lives in one of them, and where the karnavan's conduct has afforded, a valid excuse for a member living away from the tarwad house.[9] The same principle governs a member of a tavazhi.[10]

(1) Anant v. Gopal, 19 B. 269 (270); Bapuji v. Mansukharam, (1893) B.P.J. 552; Sheo Pershad v. Dedab Singh, 20 W.R. 160.

(2) Bhagwan v. Ujagar, (1928) P.C. 20 (so held; semble, could the afterborn son have ever questioned his father's alienation, a fortiori his father's consent thereto?).

(3) Sheo Pershad v. Leelab Singh, 20 W.R. 160.

(4) Mit., II-I-28; Khemkar v. Umia, 10 B.H.C.R. 381; Vranjiabandas v. Yamuna, 12 B.H.C.R. 229.

(5) Mit., I-XII-3; Muttusamy v. Venkata, 2 M. H. C. R. 293, affirmed O.A. 12 M.I.A. 223; Coomara v. Venkateswara, 5 M. H. C. R. 405.

(6) Ananthaya v. Vishnu, 17 M. 160.

(7) Per Westropp, C.J., in Himmat Singh v. Ganpat Singh, 12 B.H.C.R. 94 note (a).

(8) Himat Singh v. Ganpat Singh, 12 B.H.C.R. 94.

(9) Peru v. Ayyapan, 2 M. 282; Nalle Kandiyail v. Chatu, 4 M. 161; Raman v. Iti Mayamina, 9 M.L.J. 153; Mahadevi v. Pammakka, 36 M. 203 (212); Kunchi v. Ammu, 36 M. 591; Muthu v. Gopalan, 26 M. 593.

(10) Naku v. Raghava, 38 M. 79.

1102. Every coparcener possesses the right of restraining other coparceners including the manager, from doing any act which is illegal or improper and prejudicial to their joint interests. So where the manager had contracted to sell the right to cut wood in a forest for Rs. 4,000, secretly stipulating for payment of a like sum to himself, the court cancelled the whole contract, holding that it was the right of a person defrauded by a contract between a manager and a third party to have the contract altogether rescinded. Even as between the parties who have entered into the contract to defraud a third party, the court will not enforce performance.[1] But apart from covin or fraud, the court will not interfere with the discretion of the manager, or an act of a coparcener unless it is done on purpose to create a hostile title against the plaintiff.[2]

Clause (4) He may restrain improper acts.

As regards the right of coparceners to impeach alienations of the joint property, the courts are now bound by the rules which they have laid down for their own guidance. They will be set out under the sections where the subject of improper alienations will also be considered. (§§ 134-135.)

Right to impeach Alienation.

1103. As to right of alienation. see S. 126.

1104. The coparcener's interest is either variable or invariable according to the law to which he is subject. In Bengal, where coparceners hold in quasi-severalty as tenants-in-common with no right of survivorship, the interest of each member is determined on the death of the father and remains fixed up to partition. Under the Mitakshara, however, since coparcenary interest is the birth-right of every male member of the family, that interest is necessarily subject to increase or decrease according to the births, deaths and other circumstances elsewhere set out.

Clause (6) Interest Variable.

So long as the family is joint, a coparcener is necessarily precluded from appropriating any specific portion of the joint property or of its profits, for he has no definite share until partition.[3] But a coparcener may obtain possession in common with a purchaser who has obtained separate possession without partition of specific undivided and unascertained share.[4] Where a coparcener sells his share to a stranger, the latter cannot assume possession of his co-parcener's interest without the consent of the other co-parceners. If he does so, any coparcener may eject him, and he cannot resist his ejectment, since the only right he possesses is to work out his equity in a Clause (8) Can receive no share of profits.

(1) Ravji v. Gangadhar, 4 B. 29 (33), following The Panana Telegraph Co. v. The Indian Rubber Co., L.R. 10 Ch. 515.

(2) Gopee Kishen v. Hemchunder, 13 W.R. 312.

(3) Pithi Pal v. Jorahia, 14 C. 493 P. C.

(4) Nhiku v. Pattu, 8 Bom. L.R. 99 (105), following Pandurang v. Bhaskar, 11 B.H.C.R. 72; Udaram v. Ranu, 11 B.H.C.R. 76; Mahahalaya v. Timmaya, 12 B.H.C.R. 138; Bataji v. Vasudeb, 1 B. 95; Kelappa v. Venkatesa, 2 B. 676; Dugappa v. Venkataramaya, 5 B. 493; Rama Chandra v. Damodhara, 20 B. 467; Paresram v. Murari, 20 B. 569; Nana v. Appa, 20 B. 627; Narainbhai v. Banchod, 26 B. 141; Wahid v. Sajed, 12 A. 556.

suit for general partition.[1] This equity entitled him to his alienor's share existing on the date of his purchase subject only to such equity in favour of the member of the transferor's family as might have been enforceable against his alienor.[2]

Clause (9) Self-acquired Property.

1106. All schools now recognize the right of separate ownership. A coparcener is not disqualified by reason merely of his possession of an interest in joint property from obtaining or acquiring any property of his own.

Alienation of Coparcener's share.

126. (1) A coparcener, other than the manager, or the father; may alienate his coparcenary interest as follows:—

(2) He may alienate[3] or devise[4] his interest, if he was at the moment the sole surviving coparcener; but while his alienation so made cannot be set aside by a son subsequently born[5] or adopted[6] or by his posthumous son[7] his devise would be inoperative even though made with his consent[8] since survivorship being a prior right takes precedence over devise.[9]

(3) A coparcener may alienate his share inter vivos[10] though not by will[11] with the consent express or implied[12] of the other coparceners, including minors, whose consent may be validly given by their fathers[13] or other guardian entitled to alienate their interest.[14]

(4) Save as above a coparcener cannot even surrender his interest to any one or more of his coparceners as distinct from the whole coparcenary.[15]

(5) A male coparcener subject to the Dayabhag law is entitled to alienate his share inter vivos or by will.[16]

---

(1) Venkatarama v. Meeralabi, 18 M. 275; Palani v. Mansakonam, 20 M. 243; Subbe Goundan v. Krishnamachari, 45 M. 449.

(2) Chinnu v. Kalimuthu, 35 M. 47 F.B.; followed in Subbe Goundan v. Krishnamachari, 45 M. 449; Subba Rao v. Ananthanarayana, 23 M. L. J. 64.

(3) Vyas, Dig. 455; Brihaspati cited in Mit. I-I §§ 28, 29; Venkatanarayana v. Subammal, 29 M. 107 (112) P.C.; Bharat Singh v. Jeobodh Lal, (1934) A. 891.

(4) Nagalu and Chmee v. Gopo Nadaraja, 6 M.I.A. 309; Narottam v. Narsandas, 3 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 6.

(5) Lalita Devi v. Ishar Das, 14 L. 178.

(6) Venkatanarayana v. Subhamal, 39 M. 107.

(7) Hanmant v. Bhimacharya, 12 B. 105; Minakshi v. Virappa, 8 M. 89.

(8) Bhikubhai v. Purshottam, 50 B. 558.

(9) Lakshmichand v. Anandi, 48 A. 313 P.C.; Subharani v. Ramamma, 43 M. 824.

(10) Lakhmichand v. Anandi, 58 A. 313 (323) P. C., approving Sadabart v. Foolbash Koer, 3 B.L.R. 31 F.B.; Madho Parshad v. Mehrban Singh, 18 C. 157 (160, 161) P.C. Seetla Sahai v. Thakur Din, 20 I.C. (A.) 247; Budhu Singh v. Kawalnuin, 19 I.C. (A.) 430.

(11) Bhikabhai v. Purshottam, 50 B. 558; Gur Narain v. Gulzarilal, 25 I. C. (O.) 917.

(12) Thakurji v. Nanda Ahir, 55 I.C. (A.) 217; Madho Ram v. Jaya Singh, 52 I.C. (A.) 18; Thakur Din v. Seetla Sahai, 23 I.C. (A.) 530; Mahabir v. Mathura, (1924) O. 138.

(13) Subhrami v. Ramamma, 43 M. 824, approved in Lakmichand v. Anandi, 48 A. 313 (323) P.C.; Baijnath v. Tejbali Singh, 43 A. 228 P.C.

(14) Srinivasa v. Tiruvengada, 55 I. C. (M.) 588; Nagindas v. Mhd. Ysuf, 64 I. C. (A.) 923; Sanka Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma, 35 M. 692 (698).

(15) Kaveramma v. Vishnu, 49 I. C. (M.) 263; Ayavier v. Subramania, 40 I. C. (M.) 205.

(16) Anund Chand v. Bunoja, 1 B.S. R. 153: 6 I. D. (O.S.) 113 (115 f-n.); Kounla Kant v. R. H. N. Graimee, 4 B.S.R. 247: 7 I.D. (O.S.) 184.

(6) A coparcener elsewhere is entitled to alienate his share inter vivos, though not by will[1] in the following cases namely:—

(a) In the provinces of Bombay[2] Madras[3] the Central Provinces and Berar[4] he may alienate it for valuable consideration.[5]

(b) That in Bengal, subject to the Mitakshara law; the United Provinces,[6] Behar, Orissa[7] and the Punjab[8] he may alienate it for legal necessity or pious purposes.

(7) A Coparcener may in a case of emergency alienate joint property, or any part thereof,[9] provided that by so doing he does not encroach on the powers of the manager.[10]

Explanation.—The power of transfer herein permitted does not extend to a mere contract to transfer, of which the obligee cannot obtain specific performance or damages.[11]

Exception.—Nothing herein applies to an involuntary alienation of a coparcener's share by attachment and sale in execution of a decree obtained against him[12] which entitles the purchaser to demand partition of his transferor's share for his benefit, at on a partition claim that the property purchased by him be; as far as possible, allotted to his transferor for his benefit.[13]

Illustrations.

(a) A coparcener bequeaths his share to B with the consent of all his coparceners. The bequest is void.[14]

(1) Gur Narain v. Guzzarilal, 25 I C. (O.) 917 (movables subject to the same rule).

(2) Lakshman v. Ramchandra, 5 B. 48 P.C.; Balgovind v. Narain Lal, 15 A. 339 P.C.; Pandu v. Goma, 43 B. 471; Dularam v. Badaldas, 35 I.C. (S.) 478.

(3) Doraiswami v. Nandisami, 36 M. 118; Ramaswami v. Venkata, 46 M. 815; Davud Seevi v. Ramakrishna, (1923) M. 467; Kota Balbhadra v. Khetra Doss, 36 I.C. (M.) 301.

(4) Syed Kasim v. Jorawar Singh, 49 I.A. 358: (1922) P.C. 353; Dhadabai v. Narayan, (1922) N. 28; Kishanlal v. Nathu, 16 N. 131; Behari Lal v. Hukamchand, 46 I.C. (N.) 754; Hira Ram v. Udhi Ram, 9 N. 74.

(5) Madho Pershad v. Mehrban Singh, 18 C. 157 P.C.; Janki Nath v. Jamini Kant, 22 I.C. (C.) 612 (614).

(6) Lachman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh, 39 A. 500 P.C.; Madho Parshad v. Mehrban Singh, 18 C. 157 (168) P. C.; Lala Ram v. Raghubir Lal, 45 A. 311; Prag Lal v. Rameshwar, 20 I. C. (A.) 921; Malak Chand v. Hiralal, (1937) O. 510.

(7) Debi Lal v. Nankishore, 1 P. 266; Jwala Prasad v. Udit Nath, 37 I. C. (P.) 184.

(8) Munshi Lal v. Sohan Lal, 66 I.C. (L.) 881; Piare Lal v. Ramchand, 11 I. C. (L.) 443.

(9) Thakurji v. Nanda Ahir, 43 A. 560; Nanjuda v. Kishnagaraju, 42 M. 154; Prem Sukh v. Ram Bhujhawan, 52 I.C. (S.) 964.

(10) Ghasitey v. Harprasad, (1937) A. 99; Sarju Prasad v. Ramsaran, (1931) A. 541 (544).

(11) S. 27 (c) Ill. (2), Specific Relief Act; S. 273, Cont. Act (IX of 1872); Bhagwan v. Krishnaji, 44 B. 967 (971); Subha v. Venkatrami, 38 M. 1187; Narayana v. Muthiah, 47 M. 692 (Liability of minors in a trading firm); but see Adikesavan v. Gurunatha, 40 M. 338 F.B. (Notice of the defect of title (immaterial).

(12) Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Madho Pershad v. Mehrban Singh, 18 C. 157 (162) P.C.; Faquir Chand v. Sant Lal, 48 A. 4; Luchmi Narain v. Kunjilal, 16 A. 449; Jagannathan v. Venkata, 53 I. C. (A.) 334; Murugaya v. Ayyadorai. 9 I.C. (M.) 286; Jagannath v. Sham Pandey, 18 I.C. (C.) 819.

(13) Deen Dayal v. Jugodeep Narain, 3 C. 198 (208) P.C.; Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Persad, 5 C. 148 (167) P.C.; Hardi Narain v. Rudet Perkash, 10 C. 626 (636) P.C.; Rakhal Das v. Indubala, (1936) C. 126; Gurlingappa v. Sahu Ramappa, (1931) B. 218; Ganpatrao v. Kanhayalal, 30 N. 149; Jinwarsa v. Gunwant, 31 N. (supp.) 124. (See comm. on the next section.)

(14) Bhikabhai v. Purshotam, 50 B. 558; Gur Narain v. Gulzari Lal, 25 I.C. (O.) 917.

(b) A sells a specific property to B; and his undivided share to C. The sale to B is invalid but that to C is valid.[1]

(c) A makes a gift of his share to his wife. The gift is invalid as contravening the limits stated in clauses (3) and (4).[2]

(d) A is falsely charged of theft. He raises funds for defending himself by mortgaging the family estate, the manager consenting. The mortgage is valid.[3]

(e) A borrows money from B who sues him and obtains a decree, in execution of which he attaches A's share. A dies. B is entitled to bring A's share to sale.[4]

(f) If in the last case if A had mortgaged his share in a village in Behar and then died. Since the mortgage creates a charge even more than an attachment, the mortgagee would be entitled to realize his mortgage money even though the mortgage be not given for legal necessity.[5]

1107. Analogous Law.—The following texts bear the subject of this section:—

Brihaspati (cited in the Mitakshara).—"Even a single individual may conclude a donation, mortgage or sale of family immoveable property during a season of distress for the sake of the family and especially for pious purposes."

Mitakshara (citing the last text).—"The meaning of that text is this: while the sons and grandsons are minors, and incapable of giving their consent to a gift and the like; or while brothers, are so and continue unseparated, even one person, who is capable may conclude a gift, hypothecation, or sale of immovable property, if a calamity affecting the whole family requires it; or the support of the family renders it necessary, or indispensable duties, such as the obsequies of the father or the like, make it unavoidable."[6]

Following this text, it has been held that where the manager was in jail, a mortgage of the family property by four junior co-parceners, for the purpose of defending themselves in a criminal case, was upheld on the ground that it was a case of distress when the junior members could act for the karta.[7]

Vyas.—"A single coparcener ought not, without the consent of his coparcener, to sell or give away immovable property of any sort which the family hold in coparcenary."[8]

"Even a single individual may conclude a donation, mortgage or sale of immovable property during a season of distress, for the sake of the family and especially for pious purposes.[9]

Dayabhag.—"It should not be alleged that by the texts of Vyas[10] .....one person has not power to make a sale or other transfer of such property. For here also (in the very instance of land held in common) as in the case of other goods, there equally exists a property consisting in the power of disposal at pleasure.[11]

Neither the Mitakshara nor the Mayukh contains any reference to the subject under reference. They both, of course, allow,[12] and so does Vyas,[13] the disposal of the family estate in case of necessity; but such dispoal is quite apart, and is not a disposal of a corparcenary interest at the coparcener's pleasure for his own private benefit, which has grown out of the cases.[14]

---

(1) Duvur Subha v. Kakuturn, 38 M. 1187; Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkataramanujulu, 39 M. 265.

(2) Suraj Bani v. Sheo Prasad, 5 C. 148 (166) P.C.

(3) Ib., p. 167.

(4) Rash Behary v. Jaipercash, (1934) Pat. 21

(5) Ibid.

(6) Mit., I-I, §§ 28, 29.

(7) Dhanukdhari v. Rambirich, 1 Pat. 171.

(8) Vyas Dig. 455, cited in Dayabhag Ch. II-27. Mitakshara attributes this text to Brihaspati.

(9) Mit. I-I-28, 29.

(10) Here the text cited is omitted.

(11) Dayabhag, Ch. II, § 27.

(12) Mit., I-I-27, 32; Mayukh, IV-1; §§ 3, 6.

(13) 2 Dig. 189.

(14) Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (166, 177) P.C.

1108. Since a coparcenary right is indeterminate until it is defined by partition, it follows that a coparcener is not, is strict logic, entitled to alienate his right until it is so defined. But in this case, the purchaser's equity has got the better of the coparcenary logic and the courts have permitted alienation of a coparcenary right as provided in clause (6); but not otherwise by gift or devise, without the consent of the other coparceners (§ 1120) since a gift inter vivos or a devise affects their right of survivorship.[1]

A historical retrospect of the law of alienation of a coparcenary interest was given in the last edition of this work.[2] It is now omitted as being of no practical importance in view of the law stated in the section.

1108-A. The right of a coparcener, as distinct from the manager, to alienate joint family property, as distinct from his own share, depends upon a text of Vyas, which the courts have held to comprise three distinct cases of destress, family necessity and piety;[3] a fortiori a coparcener may alienate his own share for legal necessity[4] in the provinces other than those mentioned in clause 6 (a) where an alienation only for valuable consideration is now well recognized. A coparcener may transfer joint family property to save himself from a prosecution, for having no separate funds of his own, he can have recourse to joint funds in a season of distress[5] which with the second head of family purpose is now described as "legal necessity".

Clause (1).

1108-B. Transfer with Consent of Coparceners.—Both according to the text as well as precedents, it is open to any coparcener subject to the Mitakshara restriction, to alien, though not to devise, his share with the consent of the other coparceners.[6] The restriction only applies to a devise[7] of a transfer without consent[8] and without legal necessity or benefit to the family[9] But even with consent, it is not open to one coparcener to will away his share, the reason being that "at the moment of death, the right of survivorship (of other coparcener) is at conflict with the right by devise. Then the title by survivorship, being the prior title, takes precedence to the exclusion of that by devise."[10] Of course, no body of coparceners can, at any time, barter away the right of their successors.

Clause (1).

Since a member of a joint family cannot validly mortgage his undivided share in ancestral property held in coparcenary on his own private account

(1) Lukshman v. Ramchandra, 5 B. 48 P.C.; Bhikabhai v. Purshottam, 50 B. 558; Subbarani v. Ramamma, 43 M. 824; Radha Ram v. Ganga Ram, (1935) L. 661.

(2) See Hindu Code (3rd Ed.), §§ 1346-1360.

(3) Sri Thakurji v. Nanda Ahir, 43 A. 560 (562), following Gopal Chand v. Kunwar Singh, 5 B.S.R. 29: 7 I. D. (O.C.) 355; Raghunath v. Govind Prasad, 8 A. 76 (78) (all three cases of pious gift by the father). Contra Balgovind v. Narain Lal, 15 A. 320; Nabindra v. Sitaram, (1935) Pat. 348, transfer without legal necessity, Puttoolal v. Raghubir, 9 Luck. 237.

(4) Prag Lal v. Rameshwar, 20 I.C. (A.) 921; Mhd. Mizamilullah v. Mithu Lal, 33 A. 783; Munshilal v. Sohan Lal, 66 I.C. (L.) 881; Ramnath v. Ram Harakh, (1924) O. 49.

(5) Prem Sukh Das v. Ram Bhujawan, 52 I.C. (Pat.) 964 (966); Ram Raghubir v. Dip Narain Singh, 46 A. 311.

(6) Madho Pershad v. Mehrban Singh, 18 C. 157 P.C.; Bhikhabhai v. Purshottam, 50 B. 558 (566).

(7) Lakhmichand v. Anadi, 42 M. 581 P.C.; Babu Singh v. Lal Kuer, (1933) A. 830.

(8) Natesa v. Rathai, 19 M.L.J. 62: 4 I.C. 1104.

(9) Sundarlal v. Brijlal, 35 A. 543; Thakur Din v. Seetla Sahai, 12 A.L.J. 52.

(10) Vitla Butten v. Yan-Sinamma, 8 M.H.C.R. 6.

without the consent of his coparceners, it follows that a mortgage by a father of joint family property not made to satisfy an antecedent debt or one for legal necessity or benefit of the family, is not binding even as to his share in the ancestral property comprised in it, and no decree can be passed for the sale of his share under the mortgage.[1] The only course open to the mortgagee is, of course, to sue for the mortgage money and then to attach the property in execution.

Clause (7).

1108-C. According to the state of law in vogue in the provinces mentioned in clause 6 (b) where a coparcener has no power to alienate his own share, except for valuable consideration coupled with legal necessity, the text of Vyas is explained to support his alienation of the family property generally in the three cases of distress, family and pious purposes,[2] though this power is not reconciled with the power of the manager with which it might come into conflict. The text of Vyas upon which this view is supported was, however, written when the powers of the manager had not become clarified, nor has any case been yet reported in which such power has come into conflict with those of the manager. The clause has, however, been added because it is supported by judicial authority which may have to be further considered vis a vis the acknowledged powers of the manager.[3]

1109. Valuable Consideration.—The question what constitutes valuable consideration must be decided with reference to the general law. Past and furture services may amount to sufficient consideration.[4]

1110. Coparcener's Contract.—There can be no doubt that in the parts where a coparcener is permitted to alien his interest, he is necessarily competent to enter into a contract for its alienation which is capable of specific enforcement[5] Even in the provinces which disallow an alienation altogether, it is possible for a coparcenary interest to pass, as where, acting as manager, he professes to contract for the family with a bona fide alienee without notice, and it afterwards appears that his contract qua manager is not enforceable, in which case the court would order conveyance of the transferor's interest, even though it could not have been separately transferred.[6] But in such cases, the coparcenary interest is transferred, not under the contract, though because of it, but as a matter of equity, that he who makes a representation must make it good to the extent he can. As regards the contracts of other coparceners, it is clear that those who are not disqualified to alien their interest, are equally not disqualified to contract for its alienation; but others may profess to transfer or agree to transfer their interest, in which case, the question would be whether they are liable for their breach of contract. A decree for damages, in the first instance, followed up by sale of their interest in execution, is then one relief possible to the alienee. The circumstances giving the obligee the right to recover damages belong to the domain of contracts, and cannot be discussed here.

(1) Juggunnath v. Doobo, 14 W.R. 80.
(2) Sri Thakurji v. Nanda Ahir, 43 A. 560 (562).
(3) Cf. Sarju Prasad v. Ramsaran, (1931) A. 541 (545); Ghasitey v. Har Prasad, 1937 A. 99.
(4) Kali Shankar v. Nawab Singh, 31 A. 507.
(5) S. 27 (c), Ill. (2), Specific Relief Act; Bhagwan v. Krishnaji, 44 B. 967 (971); Subha v. Venkatrani, 38 M. 1187; Narayana v. Muthiah, 47 M. 692 (Liability of minors in a trading firm).
(6) Shama Charan v. Kumed Dasi, 42 I.C. (C.) 378; Kasuri v. Ivamiry, 26 M. 74; contra in Bappu v. Anna Malai, (1923) M. 313.

1111. Involuntary transfer.—These variations only refer to voluntary alienations. They have no application to an involuntary transfer since a corparcenary interest like any other property, may be attached and sell in execution of a decree against a coparcener and the purchaser thereupon acquires the same right to enforce a partition as his vendor had in the joint property.[1] But this he can only do during the lifetime of the judgment-debtor,[2] unless he died after the attachment[3] or was the father, in which case, the pious obligation of the sons to pay their father's debt will entitle the purchaser to work out the rights which he has acquired by means of a partition.[4] But in any other case, the purchaser will, on the death of his vendor, lose the property and his money too.[5]

Explanation.

1112. The question whether such purchaser takes subject to any prior incumbrance created by the debtor depends upon the personal law of the debtor. In Bengal, Bombay, Madras and the Central Provinces where a coparcenary interest may be mortgaged, the purchaser would be naturally bound whether he had or had no notice of the incumbrance, which being valid, creates a right in rem enforceable against all subsequent transferees. But in the other Mitakshara country since such mortgages are invalid, it follows that they create no charge which can have priority over purchases at execution sales made bona fide and without notice of it.[6]

1113. In such a case the mortgagee's remedy is to obtain a decree upon his mortgage and to attach the interest in execution of his decree. Of course, in such cases the mortgagee will only rank as an attaching creditor but that is a contingency which he should have been prepared for when he took the mortgage.[7] Again, in a voluntary sale, the purchaser can insist upon the separation of his vendor's share so as to give him the property he had purchased, and if this is not effected, he may seize his other property on the principle of substituted security now embodied in S. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act or obtain compensation;[8] but in an involuntary sale, though he can insist upon the first, it is his only remedy; and if it is not possible to allot to him the property he had purchased, then he has no remedy against the judgment-debtor for either substituted property or compensation; because in a court sale there is no warranty of title, and the condition of sale applicable to such purchases is caveat emptor.[9]

---

(1) Deen Dyal v. Jug Deep, 3 C. 198 (209) P.C.

(2) Deen Dyal v. Jug Deep, 3 C. 195 (209) P.C.; explained in Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (167) P.C.

(3) Subrao v. Mahadevi, 15 Bom. L. R. 848 : 21 I.C. 330; Murugappa v. Ayyadoray, 9 M.L.T. 96 : 9 I.C. 286; Thadi v. Moola, 16 M. L. T. 123: 24 I. C. 667. In Banwari Lal v. Sheo Sankar, 13 C.W.N. 815 : 1 I.C. 670, the death of the coparcener during the pendency of the suit was held to preserve the purchaser's equity.

(4) Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.

(5) Madho Pershad v. Mehrban Singh, 18 C. 157 (163, 164) P.C.

(6) Balagobind v. Narainlal, 15 A. 339 P.C.

(7) Balgobind v. Narainlal, 15 A. 339 (351, 352) P.C.; Bhagammal v. Chandi Singh, 14 C. 295: 13 I. C. 46, but see Rash Behary v. Jaiperesh, (1934) Pat. 21 (no attachment necessary).

(8) Sabapathi v. Thandavaroya, 43 M. 309 (311); Rangayya v. Subramania, 40 M. 365 F.B.; Manjaya v. Shanmuga, 38 M. 684; Ayyagari v. Ayyagari, 25 M. 690 F.B.

(9) Subapathi v. Thandavaroya, 43 M. 309 (311).

1114. Cancellation of Alienation.— As a coparcener's alienation is not void, but only voidable by his other coparceners, no outsider can sue to set it aside or question it.[1] Even of the other coparceners, those who have expressly, or impliedly, consented to the alienation are estopped from disputing it.[2] A coparcener born at the time of the alienation as well as one born subsequently to it, are both equally entitled to sue to set it aside. But the court will grant relief subject to the equities of the purchaser. Where, therefore, the alienation is set aside, the court should order that the property should be possessed in defined shares and the shares of the transferor should be subject to the lien of the transferee for the return of the purchase money, on the ground that the coparcener must make his share available for payment of his just dues and fulfilment of his obligations.[3] But being worked out in his suit[4] he is merely entitled to a declaration of his right for the severance of which he must institute a suit for general partition.[5] But by his purchase, he acquires merely an equity and no interest in that property.[6] He cannot, therefore, obtain even joint possession.[7] A coparcener mortgagor who afterwards becomes the sole coparcener cannot avail himself of the right of other coparceners to challenge his mortgage on the ground of want of legal necessity.[8] An alienation not in conformity with the provisions of this section is wholly void and can be set aside even by the alienor.[9] Where a member of a joint Mitakshara family executes a deed of sale in respect of a joint property, his coparceners who were not parties to the deed, would be entitled to maintain a suit for recovery of possession within 12 years from the time when the alienee took possession of the property.[10]

Limitation.

A sale in excess of his share by the father or manager is not void, but merely voidable at the instance of other coparceners. (§ 1114.) They are consequently entitled to mesne profits only from the date of the repudiation or of their suit for avoiding the transfer.[11]

1115. The head of a joint Mitakshara family mortgaged in 1886 property belonging to the joint family, but neither for legal necessity nor to pay an antecedent debt. In 1888 the mortgagor sold the same property to a third person. The purchaser remained in possession for

---

(1) Madan Lal v. Chiddu, 53 A. 1; Kharag Narain v. Janki, 16 Pat. 230 (alienor cannot challenge it.)

(2) Mania (Mt.) v. Bhagwatti, (1936) A. 557.

(3) Banwar v. Sheo Shankar, 13 C. W. N. 815: 1 I. C. 670; Ram Sundar v. Barham Deo, 14 C.W.N. 552: 2 I. C. 986.

(4) Subramania v. Padmanabha, 19 M. 267; Iburamsa v. Thiruvenkatasami, 34 M. 369; Subba Goundan v. Krishnamachari, 45 M. 449 (460).

(5) Deen Dayal v. Jugdeep, 3 C. 198 P.C.; Suraj Bansi v. Sheoprasad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Hardi Narain v. Urdeb Perkash, 10 C. 626 (P.C.) explained in Subba Goundan v. Krishnamachari, 45 M. 449 (460, 461); Kandasamy v. Velayutha, 50 M. 320; explaining Ramasami v. Venkatarama, 46 M. 815; contra in Sourimuthu v. Pavadai, 49 M. L. J. 679 dissented from.

(6) Manjaya v. Shanmuga, 38 M. 684.

(7) Pandu v. Goma, 43 B. 472.

(8) Bharat Singh v. Jeobodh Lal, (1934) A. 891; Kharag Narain v. Janki, 16 Pat. 230.

(9) Lachman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh, 39 A. 500 (505) P.C., following Madho Pershad v. Mehrban Singh, 18 C. 157 (163) P.C.; Balwant Singh v. Clancy, 34 A. 296 (306) P.C.; Puttoo Lal v. Raghubir, (1933) O. 535 (539).

(10) Banwari v. Sheo Shanker, 13 C. W.N. 815 : 1 I.C. 670.

(11) Bhirgu Nath v. Narasingh, 39 A. 61; followed in Subhe Goundan v. Krishnamachari, 45 M. 449.

more than twelve years, when the mortgagees instituted a suit for sale on their mortgage. It was held that in view of the fact that the purchaser had acquired a title to the property by adverse possession as against all the members of the family, it was open to him, notwithstanding that his title was originally acquired from the mortgagor alone, to set up as a defence the invalidly of the mortgage.[1]

It is said that the fact that one son has unsuccessfully impeached his fathers's alienation does not deprive the other sons of their right to question it.[2] There can be no res judicata, because the sons do not claim under one and the same title but under an independent title of their own. But if the principle that such suits must be regarded as representative suits, as held by the Privy Council in the case of reversioners, be held to apply equally to coparceners[3] then it is difficult to see why a son's suit should be viewed in any other light.

Right of coparcener's alienee.

127. (1) On an alienation of a coparcener's interest, voluntary or involuntary, made in conformity with the provisions of the last section, the alienee becomes entitled to the right, title and interest of his alienor, accommodated to the nature of the alienation made and the alienor's interest, then; and thereafter subject to the rights of other coparceners.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the above provisions, the general rights acquired by the alienee are as follows:—

(i) He may call for a general partition requiring that the share alienated to him be allotted, if possible, to his alienor and the same transferred to him;[4]

(ii) He may obtain a declaration of his right and may enforce it by way of specific performance of a contract to transfer against his alienor and also damages against him, but the right being personal can only be enforced against the alienor personally, and lapses on his death.[5]

(iii) The alienee's interest is unaffected by any variation in his alienor's share by the subsequent birth or death of another coparcener;[6]

---

(1) Muhammed v. Mithu Lal, 33 A. 783 F.B.

(2) Bhup Kunwar v. Balbir, 44 A. 190 (197).

(3) Venkatnarayana v. Subbamal, 38 M. 406 P.C.; followed in Kesho Prosad v. Sheo Pergash, 44 A. 19.

(4) Byjnath v. Ramoodeen, 21 W. R. 233 P.C.; Mukund v. Balkrishna, 52 B. 8 P.C.; Mhd. Afzallchan v. Abdul Rahman, 13 L. 702 P.C.; Udaram v. Ranu, 11 B.H.C.R. 76; Mararrao v. Sitaram, 23 B. 184; Shivmurtappa v. Virappa, 24 B. 128; Ishrappa v. Krishna, 46 B. 925; Venkatarama v. Meera, 13 M. 275; Palani v. Masalcoman, 20 M. 243; Manjaya v. Shanmuga, 38 M. 684; Shyam Sunder v. Jaganath, 2 Pat. 925.

(5) Mahabalya v. Timaya, 12 B.H.C.R. 138; Babaji v. Vasudev, 1 B. 96; Kallapa v. Venkatesh, 2 B. 676; Dugappa v. Venkatramanaya, 5 B. 495; Balaji v. Ganesh, 5 B. 499 (503); Bhau v. Budha, 50 B. 204; Bhagwan v. Krishnaji, 44 B. 907 (Contract specifically enforced even on the death of the contracting coparcener).

(6) Chinna Pillai v. Kalimutiu, 35 M. 47 F.B.; Naro Gopal v. Paragauda, 41 B. 347 (354); contra in Gurlingapa v. Nandapa, 21 B. 797 (805) dissented from.

(iv) The alienee may attach his alienor's interest in execution of his decree obtained against him, and the right is enforceable against the survivors in case of his alienor's death, but should the latter die before the attachment no cause of action survives to the alienee against the alienor's surviving coparceners;[1]

(v) The alienee's equity is not enforceable against a bona fide transferee without notice of it.[2]

Illustrations.

(a) A sells 2 26 acres of his land to B, out of 4 52 belonging to him and C. A died. B can sue C for partition of the 4.52 acres and claim the allotment to A's share, in the specific land that he had purchased.[3]

(b) A coparcener mortgages his undivided share to B, after which there is a general partition. Since B was not then entitled to possession of A's share, he has no present equity to come into the partition, but must wait till he has foreclosed A, after which he can claim what property A has obtained on the principle of substituted security.[4]

(c) A borrows Rs. 1,000 from B, for which B obtains a decree. In execution, B attaches half of A's undivided share in a coparcenary. A dies. B can bring the attached share to sale, though his unattached half will devolve on his surviving coparceners.[5]

(d) But in the last case if A dies before the attachment, B cannot follow up his share, in the hands of A's survivors.[6]

1116. Analogous Law.—This section is drawn from the cases. It rests on no text of Hindu Law, but on the equitable doctrine that a coparcener's undivided interest is specific, existing and definite,[7] and its purchaser for value should be allowed to stand in his vendor's shoes and work out his rights by a partition.[8] Strictly speaking, such alienation is inconsistent with the strict theory of coparcenership, though the obvious equity in favour of the transferee for value has relaxed the rule and established an exceptional doctrine, in favour of the alienee, which following the general law of transfer, divests the coparcener of his interest in the coparcenary and vests it in his alienee. The transferor's

---

(1) Deen Dyal v. Jugdeep, 3 C. 198 P.C.; Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; Madho Pershad v. Meherban Singh, 18 C. 157 (162, 163) P.C.; Udaram v. Bannu, 11 B.H.C.R. 76; Vithal Das v. Nand Kishore, 23 A. 106; Tagirchand v. Sant Lal, 48 A. 1 (Attachment before judgment suffices); Sankaralinga v. Official Receiver, 49 M.L.J. 616: (1926) M. 72; contra Subrao v. Mahadevi, 38 B. 105; Laxman v. Vinayak, 40 B. 329; Sundarlal v. Roghunandan, 3 Pat. 250 (unless the debtor was the father, grandfather or the great-grandfather).

(2) S. 40, Transfer of Property Act.

(3) Aiyyagari v. Aiyyagari, 25 M. 690 F.B.

(4) Byijnath v. Ramoodeen, 21 W. R. 233 P.C. Md. Afzal Khan v. Abdul Rahman, 13 L. 702 P.C.; Jiswarsa v. Gunwant Rao, 31 N. (Supp.) 124: (1936) N. 34 (37).

(5) Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad, 5 C. 148 P.C.

(6) Ib.

(7) Taffuzzool Hoosein v. Raghoonath, 14 M.I.A. 40 (50).

(8) Deedyal v. Jugdeep Narain, 3 C. 198 P.C., followed in Hardi Narain v. Ruder Perkash, 10 C. 626 (636) P.C.; Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkataramanjulu, 39 M. 265 (268).

subsequent death cannot divest what has already vested.[1] But the question arises whether the enlargement of the coparcener's share by the death of a coparcener would accrue to the alienee as an accretion to his interest.[2] If so, it would logically follow that the coparcener's mimunition of his interest by the subsequent birth of a coparcener should equally diminish the alienee's interest. That the alienee's interest is fixed and immutable from the date of the alienation, and is not fluctuating has been held by the Privy Council,[3] but the mode of its acquisition must necessarily vary according to the nature of his transfer, and procedure he has to adopt to enforce it. If the transfer to him is an out and out sale, he can enforce it by partition that his alienor had the right to do. If it is a mortgage, he has no present right for partition, but may acquire after foreclosure or sale.[4]

1117. "The law as established in Madras and Bombay has been one of gradual growth, founded upon the equity which a purchaser for value has to be allowed to stand in his vendor's shoes, and to work out his rights by means of a partition."[5] This right is however determined by the death of the alienor before partition,[6] and the quantum of interest transferred is taken as that of the alienor at the date of the assignment[7] but, nevertheless, the right the alienee possesses is not a specific right but is in the nature of an equity which can only be enforced on a general partition which the alienee is entitled to sue for,[8] but it is said that if he is negligent and in the meantime his coparcener's interest diminishes by the birth of another, or other coparceners, he must content to take what his alienor had the right to receive on the date of partition.[9] So far as the alienor is concerned, he does not, before partition, cease to be a member of the coparcenership[10] but continues to retain all the rights which attach to his membership including the right to the variation of his share by the birth or death of another member. It has been so held in Bombay, but in Madras, his share is held

---

(1) Rangasami v. Krishnayya, 14 M. 408 (419) F.B.; followed in Aiyyagari v. Aiyyagari, 25 M. 690 (700) F.B.; Chinna Pillai v. Kalimuthu, 35 M. 47 (53) F.B.; Narayan v. Sankar Sah, 53 M. (16) F. B.; Sivaram Murti v. Venkayya, 57 M. 667; Naro v. Paragauda, 41 B. 347 (354, 355).

(2) Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.

(3) Ib.

(4) Byijnath v. Ramoodeen, 1 I. A. 106: 21 W.R. 233 P.C.; Mhd. Afzal Khan v. Abdul Rahman, 13 L. 702 P.C.; Jinwarasa v. Gunwant Rao, 31 N. (Supp.) 124: (1936) N. 34 (37).

(5) Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh, 5 Cal. 148 (166, 167) P. C.; Deen Dyal v. Jug Deep Narain, 3 C. 198 (208) P.C.

(6) Ib., pp. 167, 168; Madho Parshad v. Mehrban Singh, 18 C. 157.

(7) Pandurang v. Bhaskar, 11 B. H. C.R. 72; Naro v. Paragauda, 41 B. 347 (254); Gurlingappa v. Ramappa, (1931) B. 218; Rakhal Das v. Indubala, (1936) C. 126; Aiyyagari v. Aiyyagiri, 25 M. 690 F.B.; Yelumalai v. Srinivasa, 29 M. 294; Chinnu v. Kalimuthu, 35 M. 47 F. B.; contra Sathapathier v. Sivanarayana, 56 M. 534 (545); Ganpatrao v. Kanhayalal, 30 N. 149; Jinwarsa v. Gunwant, 31 N. (Supp.) 124; Ram Kisan v. Damodhar, (1934) N. 108.

(8) Gurlingapa v. Nandapa, 21 B. 797; Naro v. Paragowda, 41 B. 347; Hanmandas v. Valabhdas, 43 B. 17; Gonjakarta v. Nobinchandra, 20 C.W.N. 675: 36 I.C. 294.

(9) Naro Gopal v. Paragauda, 41 B. 347 (354).

(10) Manjaya v. Shanmuga, 38 M. 684 (692); followed in Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkataramanjulu, 39 M. 265 (268); Venkatarao v. Tulija Ram Rao, (1917) 3 M.W.N. 30: 34 I.C. 794.

to be fixed and is not liable to such variation.[1] But it is even there conceded that the purchaser has a mere equity and does not acquire any right in rem thereby becoming a tenant-in-common with the other members and so acquires a right to joint possession[2] or to any mesne profits in respect of his share for the period between the date of his purchase and the date of his suit for partition.[3] If the alienee has been put in possession of any specific property, it is open to the other members to eject him,[4] if necessary, though in Bombay, the court is not bound to turn him out if, while decreeing joint possession or otherwise, the right of the other coparceners can be safeguarded.[5] So it may order that the property should be possessed in defined shares, and the share of the transferor should be subject to the lien of the transferee for the return of the purchase-money, on the ground that the coparcener must make his share available for payment of his just dues and in fulfilment of his obligation.

The question whether a purchaser can, pending his suit for partition, claim joint possession with the other coparceners has been the subject of decisions both by the Bombay and the Madras High courts. That if the purchaser is not a relation but a stranger, the question of joint possession is out of the question, but if he was in possession of the whole, and a coparcener sued to eject him therefrom, the court would maintain status quo declaring the purchaser in possession as a tenant-in-common, pending a partition by the other coparcener.[6] But the question is one of procedure and judicial discretion and the court in Madras would, in such a case, require the alienee to sue for partition and combine the two suits and grant appropriate relief.[7]

It has been stated that the alienee takes subject to the other equities to which he might be found liable. As such, the alienee of one of the sons was held liable to pay out of the property the alienor's debt qua son of his father, which takes precedence of the son's right of partition.[8] The purchaser's claim, being equitable, it will only be decreed subject to the other equities that may claim priority, but the nature and measure of which must depend upon the circumstances of each case. As a rule, the purchaser is not entitled to mesne profits between the date of his purchase and the date of his suit for partition.[9]

---

(1) Iburamsa v. Theruvenkatasami, 34 M. 274; Chinna Pillai v. Kalimuthu, 35 M. 47 F.B., (contra in Rangasami v. Krishnayyan, 14 M. 408 F.B.); followed in Sathapathiar v. Sivanarayana, 56 M. 534 (545); Manjaya v. Shanmuga, 38 M. 684 (692); Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkataramanjulu, 39 M. 265 (268); dissenting from Aiyyagari v. Aiyyagari, 25 M. 690 (698); Subba Rao v. Anantha-narayana, 23 M.L.J. 64, as obiter dicta; Jinwarsa v. Gunwanrao, 31 N. (Supp.) 124: (1936) N. 34.

(2) Pandu v. Goma, 43 B. 472; Kota Balabhadra v. Phetra Doss, 31 M.L.J. 275: 37 I.C. 168; Audimula v. Alamelammal, (1936) 2 M. W. N. 115: 36 I.C. 365; Gurlingappa v. Nandapa, 21 B. 797 (802); Naro v. Paragauda, 41 B. 347

(3) Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkata (354).

ramanjulu, 39 M. 265; following Manjaya v. Shanmuga, 38 M. 648 (692).

(4) Rajaram v. Luchmun, 8 W.R. 15; Ramkishore v. Jainarayan, 40 C. 966 (980) P.C., explained in Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkataramanjulu, 39 M. 266 (269); Banwari Lal v. Sheo Shankar, 13 C. W.N. 815: 1 I.C. 670; Bhau v. Budha, 50 B. 204 (210).

(5) Bhau v. Budha, 50 B. 204 (209, 210).

(6) Bhau v. Budha, 50 B. 204 (211).

(7) Kandasamy v. Velayutha, 50 M. 320.

(8) Venkureddi v. Venkureddi, 50 M. 535 (540) F.B.; Narayan v. Nathaji, 28 B. 201 (208).

(9) Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkata, 39 M. 265; Trimbak v. Pandurang, 44 B. 621.

1118. It should not make an unconditional decree for the purchaser's ejectment.[1] But if the alienor dies before the alienee's suit on his equity, he loses his remedy since his share passes by survivorship to the other co-sharers;[2] and no suit for specific performance of a contract entered into by one deceased member can be enforced against the surviving members.[3] Since the purchaser is only entitled to an equity, it has been held that no suit will lie against the vendor for specific performance of his contract of sale of his undivided co-parcenary interest;[4] but that the court would decree specific performance if his interest is severed and it is the only means of making him fulfil his contract.[5] If this is not possible the purchaser would nevertheless be entitled to recover damage for the breach of contract,[6] which is his only relief if, for any reason, he fails to obtain the specific item of property sold to him and which the court is unable to allot to his alienor.[7] In order to preserve his right the alienee is entitled to sue for a declaratory decree.[8] But if it is possible to work out the alienee's equity in the coparcener's suit to set aside his alienation, the court will not drive the alienee to another suit. So where the plaintiff, the sole surviving coparcener, sued for setting aside an alienation made by another and it appeared that the quantum of alienation was less than the alienor's share in the family property at the time of the alienation, the court dismissed the suit, holding the alienee entitled to retain the property sold to him.[9]

In the alienee's suit for partition, the court is not bound, nor is it indeed entitled to force a general partition. All it has to do is to carve out the share of the alienee,[10] unless a general partition is desired and asked for by all concerned;[11] but so far as the alienee is concerned, he is bound to apply for the separation of his share, if necessary by a general partition.[12] Where, however, the coparcener was divided in status and was enjoying the profits of his share, his alienee would be entitled to claim the same profits from his alienor's other coparceners as from the date of his alienation to him.[13]

1119. Effect of Attachment.—As to the effect of an attachment before and after a decree, it has been held that, if the attachment was made before judgment, Clause (2) (ii).

(1) Banwari Lal v. Sheo Shankar, 13 C.W.N. 815: 1 I.C. 670 (674); Iswardhari v. Narsingh, 1 I.C. (C.) 899.

(2) Madho Prasad v. Mehrban Singh, 18 C. 157 P.C.; Jaganatha v. Shama Pandey, 18 I.C. (C.) 819; Banwari Lal v. Sheo Shankar, 13 C.W.N. 815: 1 I.C. 670 (676) (where coparcener dies after the purchaser's suit, the purchaser's equity stands good); Jwala Prasad v. Udai Nath, (1917) Pat. 27: 37 I.C. 184.

(3) In Nochat v. Kallor Ali, 3 M.L.W. 435: 33 I.C. 696, it was conceded that specific relief would only be given if the contract was found necessary or beneficial.

(4) Janki Nath v. Jamini Kanta, 22 I.C. (C.) 612.

(5) Shama Charan v. Kumad Dasi, 27 C.L.J. 611: 42 I.C. 378; Surja Prasad v. Raj Mohun, 13 C.W.N. 281: 4 I.C. 92; Mohunt Ram v. Barban Deo, 14 C.W.N. 562: 2 I.C. 986.

(6) Abdul Rahman v. Gadunandan, 18 C.L.J. 344: 21 I.C. 528; Gadhu Nandan Singh v. Abdul Rahman, 16 C.W.N. 93: 11 I.C. 892.

(7) Dhada Sahib v. Mahamed Sultan, 44 M. 167.

(8) Kota Balabadra v. Khetra Doss, 16 M.L.T. 229: 25 I.C. 401 O.A.

(9) Ramaswami v. Venkatarama, 46 M. 815.

(10) Murarrao v. Sitaram, 23 B. 184 (187).

(11) Shivmurteppa v. Virappa, 24 B. 128 (130).

(12) Udaram v. Ranu, 11 B.H.C.R. 76; Shivmurteppa v. Virappa, 24 B. 128 (135).

(13) Sivaramamurthi v. Venkayya, 57 M. 667.

followed up by a decree in the coparcener's lifetime, it is a question whether, on the subsequent death of the judgment-debtor, his interest would pass to the survivors. According to the Bombay and Patna Courts it does,[1] but in a later case of the Patna High Court relating to a mortgage, it was held to be a charge and as such continued even after the coparcener's death,[2] and according to the Madras Court the death of the coparcener makes no difference, and attachment before judgment serves the purpose of an attachment in execution of the decree, since no fresh attachment is then necessary.[3] It is submitted that the latter view is sound, since all that the law requires is that the share should have been attached, which gives the decree-holder a right to prosecute his remedy against the property attached.

1120. Right to Partition.—The coparcener has an indefeasible right of partition[4] out of which he may contract himself only to the extent set out elsewhere.[5]

Clause (3).

128. (1) The normal state of a Hindu family is one of jointness in mess and estate.[6]

Presumptions re-joint family and joint property.

(2) As such, it may be presumed that—

(a) such family continues to remain joint until the contrary is shown;[7]

(b) where any property is shown to have been once joint family property, it remains joint until the contrary is shown;[8]

(c) where there is a nucleus from which property may be acquired, any property acquired with its aid by a member is joint property;[9]

(3) Provided that no presumption referred to in the last clause shall be made where it is admitted or proved that there has been separation from the joint family.

(4) There is no presumption that a family because it is joint, possesses joint property, and the burden of proving that any property in possession of a coparcener is joint lies upon him who asserts it.[10]

---

(1) Subrao v. Mahadevi, 38 B. 105; Laxman v. Vinayak, 40 B. 329; Sundarlal v. Raghunandan, 3 Pat. 250 (256) (case obiter, as court found that there was no attachment; still relied on Or. XXXIV, R. 10, Civil Procedure Code).

(2) Rash Behari v. Jaipercash, (1934) Pat. 21.

(3) Or. XXXIV, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code; Baiher Krishna v. Lakshmana, 4 M. 302 (307); Muthusami v. Chinnammal, 26 M.L.J. 517: 24 I.C. (M.) 320; Thadi Ramamurthi v. Moola Kamial, 24 I.C. (M.) 667; Sankaralinga v. Official Receiver, 49 M.L.J. 616: 92 I.C. 504: (1924) M. 72; cf. Raj Chunder v. Isser Chunder, (1865) Bourke (O.C.) 139, followed in Ganu Singh v. Jangi Lal, 20 C. 531 (535).

(4) Mukund v. Balkrishna, 52 B. 8 P.C. and cases cited in f.n. under the clause, supra.

(5) Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 415-417.

(6) Neelikisto v. Beerchunder, 12 M. I.A. 522 (540).

(7) Deo Narain Singh v. Agya Ram, 101 I.C. 249 P.C.: (1927) P.C. 52.

(8) Deo Narain Singh v. Agya Ram, 101 I.C. 249 P.C.: (1927) P.C. 52; Deo Denonath v. Hari Narain, 12 Bom. L.R. 349.

(9) Anand Rao v. Vasant Rao, 5 C.L. J. 338 P.C.; Lall Bahadur v. Kanhaiyalal, 29 A. 244 (254, 255) P.C.

(10) Shadi Lal v. Lal Bahadur, (1933) P.C. 85 (87).

Explanation.—The presumption arising under this section may extend to the property standing in the name of the female members of a joint family in the circumstances stated in the next section.

1121. Analogous Law.—This section states two propositions: (i) that the normal state of a Hindu family is one of jointness, and (ii) that, consequently, all property possessed by it is presumably joint. Both these propositions are based upon the consensus of authorities.[1] They are both merely rules of evidence, creating merely as they do presumptions of jointness in mess and estate which may be rebutted by any one asserting the contrary. This presumption applies to every Hindu family whether subject to the Mitakshara or the Dayabhag school.

1122. It has already been seen that the unit of a Hindu society is a family, and that term, however elastic and at times misleading though it be, has become a definite concept which enters largely into the discussion of all legal questions relating to property and status. It has already been the subject of a previous discussion. Taking the term "family" in its narrower sense, there can be no doubt that its normal state of existence is one of jointness in mess, worship and estate.[2] The family being thus in every respect joint, all that appertains to it is prima facie held in common. This being the rule it gives rise to several presumptions which are, however, all reducible to the two main presumptions set out in Clauses (2) and (4).

1123. The presumption in the fourth clause is a qualified one and does not necessarily flow from the very jointness of the family, since a family may be joint and yet it may possess no property of its own.[3] But if it possesses any joint property the law presumes that all acquisitions made with its aid are also joint property,[4] and the burden of proving that any portion of that property is separate or self-acquired is on the person who alleges it.[5] Clause (1) is taken from a judgment of the Privy Council

---

(1) Riwun Persad v. Radha, 4 M.I.A. 137 (168); Naragunty v. Vengama, 9 M.I.A. 66 (92); Cheetha v. Miheen Lali, 11 M.I.A. 369; Kattama v. Rajah of Sivaganga, 9 M.I.A. 539; Neelkisto v. Beer Chunder, 12 M.I.A. 523 (540); Prit Koer v. Mahadeo, 22 C. 85 (89) P.C.; Bilash Konwar v. Bhawanee, (1864) W.R. 1; Prawnath v. Kashinath, (1864) W.R. 169; Beer Narain v. Teencowria, 1 W.R. 316; Neelmoney v. Ganga Narain, 1 W.R. 334; Muonye v. Lomun, 2 W.R. 288; Bissumbhur v. Suorodhuny, 3 W.R. 21; Bipropershad v. Kenadeyee, 5 W.R. 32; Bhurmchand v. Rajmohishee, 5 W.R. 145; Treelochun v. Raj Kishen, 5 W.R. 214; Lukhun v. Modheemoolkhee, 5 W.R. 278; Sreenath v. Monmohini, 6 W.R. 35; Seoratan v. Gour Behari, 7 W.R. 449; Radham v. Phoolkoomaree, 10 W.R. 28; Govindnath v. Govind Chunder, 10 W.R. 393; Dharoo v. Court of Wards, 11 W.R. 336; Konjbeharee v. Gyadeen, 11 W.R. 361; Parreelal v. Bukhoreelal, 12 W.R. 124; Brijnath v. Srigopal, 12 W.R. 468; Shib Pershad v. Gangamonee, 16 W.R. 291; Indercomar v. Doolal, 18 W.R. 258; Drobo v. Tarachand, 18 W.R. 459; Tarnakchunder v. Jodeshur, 19 W.R. 178; Babulal v. Tuma, 22 W.R. 116; Bhugobutty v. Domun, 24 W.R. 365; Shushee Mohun v. Aukilchandei, 25 W.R. 232; Gane v. Kane, 4 B.H.C.R. (A.) 169; Mancha v. Narotamdas, 6 B.H.C.R. (A. C.) 1; Cassumbhoy v. Ahmadbhoy, 12 B. 280 (309); Parbutty v. Sudabut, 2 Hay 316; Nundram v. Chotoo; 1 Agra 255.

(2) Neel Kisto v. Beerchunder, 12 M.I.A. 523 (540).

(3) Shadi Lal v. Lal Bahadur, (1933) P.C. 85 (87).

(4) Denonath v. Hurry Narain, 12 B.L.R. 349; Gobind Chunder v. Doorga Persaud, 14 B.L.R. 337.

(5) Dhurm Das v. Shama Soondri, 3 M.I.A. 229; Gopee Krist v. Gunga which has since been affirmed in several cases. Delivering the opinion of their Lordships, Lord Chelmsford said: "The normal state of every Hindu family is joint. Presumably, every such family is joint in food, worship and estate. In the absence of proof of division, such is the legal presumption; but the members of the family may sever in all or any of these three things."[1] This rule was first stated by the Pandits to Sir Thomas Strange in 1807, and he re-stated it as follows: "With respect to the proof of disputed partition, though the law favours separation by which religious ceremonies are multiplied, it presumes joint tenancy as the primary state of every Hindu family; and this especially amongst brothers, it being most natural for such to dwell together in unity."[2]

Clause (2) (b) (c).

1124. Presumption of Union.—Assuming however, that a family is normal, and that as such, it is presumably joint, it does not thence follow that it has joint property since there is no presumption that every joint family necessarily possesses joint property.[3] Consequently, unless the nucleus of family property is admitted or proved,[4] the burden of proof of the existence of joint property lies on the claimant. The presumption in favour of the joint family does not obtain in the case of all property, and it is for the claimant to prove the property to be joint (Cl. 4). If, in any case, the plaintiff alleges that any property is joint property, it is for him to prove it, which he may do either by direct evidence proving that fact, or by the indirect evidence of establishing a nucleus and by the application of the rule of Hindu Law that whatever has been acquired with the help of the nucleus becomes impressed with its own character.[5] The question of jointness is not necessarily a question of fact, but may become a question of law if it has to be inferred from the proved facts of the case.[6]

The question arises what must be the value of the nucleus necessary to constitute all acquisitions, made by its aid, joint property. This subject will have to be presently considered.

Persad, 6 M.I.A. 53; Naragunty v. Venkama, 9 M.I.A. 66; Prankishen v. Moothooramohan, 10 M.I.A. 53; Deo Narain v. Agya Ram, 31 C. W. N. 533: 101 I.C. 249: (1927) P.C. 52; Tara Churn v. Jog Narain, 8 W.R. 226; Lalla Sreedhur v. Lalla Madho Pershad, 8 W. R. 294; Prankisto v. Bhageerutee, 20 W. R. 158; Ram Ghulam v. Ram Behari, 18 A. 90; Gajender v. Sardar Singh, 18 A. 176. Johnstone (Mrs.) v. Gopal Singh, 12 L. 546.

(1) Neelkisto v. Beerchunder, 12 M. I.A. 523 (540). To the same effect, Naragunty v. Vengamma, 9 M.I.A. 66; Dhurm Das v. Shama Soondri, 3 M.I. A. 229.

(2) 2 Str. H. L. p. 347; Dhunookdharee v. Shama Sundari, 3 M.I.A. 229; Neelkisto v. Beer Chunder, 12 M.I.A. 523 (540); Radhika v. Dharma, 3 B.L. R. (A. C.) 121; Koonj Beharee v. Khetur Nath, 8 W.R. 270; Taruck Chunder v. Jodeshur, 11 B.L.R. 193 overruling contra Shiv Gulam v. Baram Singh, 1 B.L.R. (A.C.) 164 and dissenting from Khilut Chunder v. Koonj Lall, 11 B.L.R. 194; Sasbheddai v. Boolaram, W.R. (S.N.) 57; Dhunookdharee v. Ganpatlal, 11 B.R. 201.

(3) Shadilal v. Lal Bahadur, (1933) P.C. 85.

(4) Venkataramayya v. Seshamma, I.L.R. (1937) M. 1012. Sankaranarayana v. Tangeratna, (1930) M. 662; Satchidanandam v. Subbarazu, (1930) M.W.N. 1016.

(5) Trailokyanath v. Chintamoney, 30 C.W.N. 588: 95 I.C. 426: (1926) C. 813; Kamla Kant v. Madhoji, 59 B. 573.

(6) Amrit Rao v. Mukund Rao, 53 I. C. 866 P.C.; followed in Sahal Singh v. Salik Ram, 44 A. 602.

Clause (1).

1125. The first clause states a rule expressed to apply only to a family living in a normal state, and one which is joint in all the three respects mentioned therein; that is to say, given a Hindu family of which nothing is known, the law will make the presumption stated in this clause. But such families do not give trouble in practice. The families that do are those which are not normal in the sense that they have severed in one or two of the three essentials of a normal union. For instance, they may have separated in mess or both in mess and worship and the question may then arise how far the presumption is then to prevail. It may be that the fortunes of the whole case depend upon the application of the presumption. The evidence on either side may be negligible or evenly balanced—upon what solid foundation is the court then to rest its decision? If it can be sure that, notwithstanding severance in mess and worship, there still exists a presumption, then it will have something to go upon. But there may be other facts equally destructive of that presumption. As pointed out by Sir Thomas Strange in a passage before cited, and followed by Nanabhai Haridas, J., in a considered judgment,[1] the strength of the presumption varies with the relationship of the parties concerned. The presumption that arises in favour of the brothers living in a state of union is very different to the presumption in favour of the union of cousins, and still less in favour of more distant relations. Then, again, it cannot be forgotten that the presumption of union as a whole is getting daily weaker by the very condition of modern society. As Carnduff, J., rightly observed in a passage already cited: "Jointness is, I imagine, becoming almost daily less and less the rule, and the presumption under consideration is, amid the changing conditions, and in response to the natural demands of a progressive society, steadily losing strength, in the sense that it is more and more rebutted as time advances. It may well be that it will disappear altogether some day, perhaps at no distant date."[2] The education of the people, the growth of intellectual pursuits and the opening of new avenues for the employment of individual enterprise are fast altering the old methods of living and the joint employment and enjoyment of property. But so long as the joint Hindu family continues to preponderate, there would be justification for the legal presumption, which should, nevertheless, be cautiously made, and it must be understood as subject to a counter-presumption which may arise from separate residence, separate messing and separate worship.[3]

1126. In considering then the value of such presumption, several facts are material, while on the other hand many facts are regarded as equally immaterial. So, for instance, where one party alleged jointness, and another separation, the fact that one member possesses a larger share of the family property than others, and the fact that such property has not been shown to be self-acquired, would be a material fact in supporting the case of union.[4] So on the other hand, the fact that members have for a considerable time possessed and enjoyed separate portions of the family property in equal shares would support the case of separation. In one

(1) Moro v. Ganesh, 10 B.H.C.R. 444 (468).

(2) Ganpat v. Balmakund, 18 C.L.J. 548 (549, 550); Gannu Singh v. Bhagwati Koeri, 3 I.C. (C.) 234.

(3) Ram Prasad v. Lukhpati, 30 C. 231 P.C.; Banoo v. Khaseeram, 3 C. 315 P.C.

(4) Koyaloji v. Shiva, (1888) B.P. J. 86.

case, where a brother born deaf and dumb had been for long treated as joint, the Privy Council held it to amount to no recognition of his jointness since such conduct could equally be ascribed to kindness.[1] (§ 1007.)

Mutation and Purchase in Separate Names.

1127. Immaterial Facts.—Revenue entries are relevant under S. 35 of the Evidence Act, but their evidentiary value depends upon circumstances.[2] For instance, since it is not uncommon to mutate names benami or in recognition of the right of maintenance or through mere affection or for luck, mutation of names by a person in favour of another does not amount to relinquishment of the property by one in favour of the other, nor can it be used as evidence of disruption of the joint family.[3] Of course, if such mutation is accompanied by any statements supporting the relinquishment, then they would be relevant as admissions from which relinquishment or even severance may be inferred. So again, the fact that the settlement was made with one member of the family would not negative the rights of other members to a participation in the property so settled, unless, of course, their right was then denied;[4] nor is it necessary for such other members, if living in commensality with the former as joint proprietors to prove that they actually contributed money towards the acquisition of the property.[5] Settlement entries, like the Collector's entries in the mutation register, are made for purposes of revenue and not of title, and they do not suffice to rebut the presumption of jointness or separation.[6] Where commensality is admitted, the mere use of one brother's name in documents relating to the property raises no counter-presumption of exclusive ownership in his favour,[7] nor is his separate possession any evidence of separate acquisition unless such separate possession can prove consent of the other sharers to his keeping a separate account.[8] So again where other facts prove jointness, the mere fact that a certain property was recorded separately in the name of a member is insufficiene to rebut that fact, since in such a case, it will be presumed that the purchase was made out of money derived from joint funds.[9]

(2) Separate Residence.

1128. So again, the mere circumstance that one of several brothers occupied a separate dwelling house would not of itself rebut the presumption of jointness.[10] But that it may have that effect was conceded by the Privy Council in a case in which it was said:

(1) Muddun Gopal v. Khikinda, 18 C. 341 (348).

(2) Nageshwar v. Ganesha, 42 A. 368 P.C.; Gangabai v. Fakirgowda, 54 B. 336 (341, 342).

(3) Cheeta v. Miheen Lall, 11 M.I. A. 369 (380, 381); Chokhey Singh v. Jote Singh, 31 A. 73 (79) P.C.; Harnam Singh v. Lal Rudra, 48 A. 529 P.C.; Bhagwan Kunwar v. Mohan Singh, (1925) P.C. 132: 88 I.C. 385; Shibosoondery v. Rakhal Dass, 1 W.R. 38; Mun Mohinee v. Soodamonee, 3 W. R. 31; Bilash Koonwar v. Bhavanee, (1864) W.R. 1; Srichand v. Surajkuar, 9 I.C. 146.

(4) Yellappa v. Tippannah, 53 B. 213 P.C.; Annamalai v. Subramanian, (1929) P.C. 1; Srinivas v. Evalappa, 45 M. 565 P.C.

(5) Hurosoondaree v. Doorga Doss, 16 W.R. 215.

(6) Bhagwan Kunwar v. Mohan Singh, (1925) P.C. 132 (137, 138).

(7) Kishen Komulsingh v. Janokee, 23 W.R. (F.B.) 31; Deela Singh v. Troofanee, 1 W.R. 307; Gopal v. Jawand, (1919) P.W.R. 30: 49 I.C. 1007.

(8) Lalla Beharee Lall v. Lalla Madho Persaud, 5 W.R. 69; Runjeetsingh v. Madud Ali, 3 Agra 222.

(9) Anund Mohun v. Lama, 1 Hay 374; Mathab Bose v. Soodha, 2 Hay 333; Nuronath v. Goda Kolita, 20 W.R. 342.

(10) Belas Kore v. Bhawanee, Marsh. 641.

"The cesser of commensality is only material to the determination of the issues in the cause, in so far as it removes or qualifies the presumptions which the Hindu Law might otherwise raise, that an acquisition made in the name of an individual son of the family was made by the head of the family and as part of the family estate."[1] Their Lordships then considered that fact along with others and considered their cumulative effect upon the case. Cesser of commensality is then an element which may properly be considered in determining the question whether there has been a partition of joint family property, though it is not conclusive.[2]

(3) Separation in Mess and Residence.

1129. Of course, of all the three facts of jointness, namely jointness, in mess, residence and estate, it often happens that parties usually commence their separation by taking up separate residence. This is necessarily accompanied by separation in mess. The question then arises what is the effect of such separation upon the normal presumption in favour of jointness. Does it neutralize it so far as to leave the party, alleging a jointness thereafter, to prove his case. It has been so held in a case in which the lower court had held the contrary. Adverting to it, the court said: "The Judge is also wrong in saying that no presumption whatever arises of a separation from the fact of an admitted separation in dwelling and food. We would observe that such separation, though not conclusive evidence of a separation in estate, would give rise in Hindu Law to a presumption of separation in estate."[3] And a similar view has been expressed by the Privy Council in the cases already cited.[4] Of course, in such a case it may be that the members have been forced to separate mess and residence owing to discords amongst the female relations which so often force upon the male members not only the course of separation in residence but separation altogether. The question of separate worship is seldom now raised, since the household goods of a family are usually divided upon severance of mess and residence, and even when it is not so, it is an index of least importance in considering the question of separation.

Separate Possession for a long time.

1130. In the foregoing discussion cases have been cited to show how far the court regards single facts such as separate entry in the mutation register, separate possession, and the like as insufficient to rebut the presumption in favour of jointness. These were also cases in which the testimony of those single facts was overborne by other facts which, made for a considerable period, have been held of themselves to destroy the presumption of jointness. So where the members lived apart for several years and during that time or for more than 12

---

(1) Anundee Koonwar v. Khedoo Lal, 14 M.I.A. 412 (422) cited and followed in Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Thakurain, 31 C. 262 (269) P.C.

(2) Anundee Koonwar v. Kedoo Lal, 14 M.I.A. 412, cited and followed in Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Takurain, 31 C. 262 (269) P.C.

(3) Jagun Kooer v. Raghoonundun, 10 W.R. 148 (149); Sherajooddeen v. Horelsingh, 25 W.R. 116 (the judgment does not support the head-note).

(4) Anundee Koonwar v. Khedoo Lal, 14 M.I.A. 412 (422), cited and followed in Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Thakurain, 31 C. 262 (269) P.C. In Banee Madhab v. Bhagobutty, 8 W.R. 270, mere separation in mess held insufficient.

years prior to the institution of a suit for partition, they were found to be in possession of portions of the originally undivided property in the assertion of titles mutually exclusive, the court held that such severance of enjoyment necessarily drew after it a severance of right.[1] This was conceded in a later case in which, however, it was pointed out that, though exclusive possession and enjoyment is cogent evidence of partition, it merely creates a presumption in its favour which may be rebutted by proving that it was due to a family arrangement[2] or convenience of management or enjoyment. But such arrangement if continued for 30 or 40 years would almost certainly be conclusive of a separation.[3] Certain descendants from a common ancestor commenced to live apart without any formal separation. About 11 years after, one of the parties to the separation sued the others for possession of some property in defendant's possession on the ground that it was joint property. The court held that the separation being admitted it was on the plaintiff to establish his allegation and that he could start with no presumption in his favour.[4]

1131. Possession is prima facie evidence of ownership.[5] But of course, such possession must be prima facie exclusive and exhaustive. In the case of joint families, however, the possession of one is the possession of all. Consequently, the presumption, arising from the separate possession of a single member, is neutralized by the counter presumption in favour of jointness. In such a case, therefore, if the plaintiff sues for a partition on the basis of joint property, he must establish his case.

Section 110. Evidence Act.

1132. Clause 2 (a) and (b) are merely consequential, and are supported by the authority of Phear, J., who said: "It is no doubt laid down in many cases that the normal condition of a Hindu family is joint; therefore, starting with the fact of a family being joint, it must be presumed to afterwards remain joint, unless some proof of a subsequent separation is given. Also that where property is shown to have been once joint family property, it is presumed to remain the joint property of all the members of the joint family, until something to the contrary is shown."[6]

Clause (2) (a).

This is in accordance with the principle of S. 114 of the Evidence Act which presumes a thing in accordance with probability. As such, the presumption is peculiarly strong in the case of the sons of one father,[7] but not so strong in the case of step-brothers, and it gets weaker with each degree of distant relationship. Where a party admits a partition on a

---

(1) Yellappa v. Tippanna, 56 I.A. 13: (1929) P.C. 8; Seshapa v. Igapa, (1875) B.P.J. 37.

(2) Atmaram v. Madhavarav, (1880) B.P.J. 311.

(3) Yellappa v. Tippanna, 56 I.A. 13: (1929) P.C. 8 (10); following Robinson v. National Trust Co., (1927) A.C. 515 (520); Vijli v. Magan, (1891) B.P.J. 44; Vishnu v. Ramachandra, (1883) B.P.J. 53; Gurucharya v. Bhimacharya, (1876) B.P.J. 241; Surbussur v. Gossain Doss, 17 W.R. 210.

(4) Badul Singh v. Chuttur Dharee, 9 W.R. 558; Harish Chunder v. Nufur Chunder, 9 W.R. 461.

(5) S. 110, Evidence Act.

(6) Deo Narain Singh v. Agya Ram, 101 I.C. 249: (1927) P.C. 52; Shiv Golam v. Barran Singh, 1 B.L.R. (A.C.) 164 (166); Budha Mal v. Bhagwan Das, (1886) P.R. 86.

(7) Nageshar v. Ganesha, 42 A. 368 P. C.

certain date, it lies on him who alleges a prior partition to prove it, the presumption being that the family was joint before the date of the alleged partition.[1]

Clause (2) (b).

1133. And as a necessary deduction, law equally presumes that not only the joint family, but its joint property continues joint, since the two go together and one cannot be separated without separating the other. But this is merely a presumption applicable to the property proved or presumed to be joint. Where, therefore, the common family house belonging to a joint undivided family having been long ago burnt down, each of the members occupied separate sites and erected their own buildings thereon, they were held to be the separate property of each.[2]

Clause (4).

1134. There is, of course, no presumption that a family, because it is joint, possesses joint property or that any property in possession of a member is presumably joint. Where, therefore, a Hindu father creates a mortgage, it is for the sons of the mortgagor to allege and prove that the property mortgaged by him was joint family property.[3]

Clause (3).

1135. No Presumption Where Separation Admitted.—The presumption of jointness with all its corollaries has however, no application where a separation is once admitted. So where the plaintiff sued on the allegation that his father and defendant had continued joint, while their brother separated from the family, the court held that a separation of the family being once admitted it was on the plaintiff to prove that notwithstanding this separation, his father had remained joint with the defendant.[4] As the Privy Council observed: "There is no presumption when one coparcener separates from the others, that the latter remain united. In many cases it may be necessary, in order to ascertain the share of the outgoing member, to fix the shares in which the other coparceners are or would be entitled to, and in this sense, the separation of one is said to be a virtual separation of all."[5] But this does not mean that the separation of one member has necessarily the effect of the separation of all other members inter se.[6] As their Lordships point out, it may be so in many cases where it is necessary to fix the shares of other members, and then it may virtually amount to a separation of all. But it is submitted that even in such a case, there can be no separation without an intention to separate, and a mere hypothetical allocation of a share for mere computation can never amount

---

(1) Gobind Prasad v. Chattarbhuj, 60 I.C. (Pat.) 482.

(2) Gujjalapadi v. Gujjalapadi, 11 M.L.T. 33: 13 I.C. 113.

(3) Shadi Lal v. Lal Bahadur, (1933) P.C. 85 (87).

(4) Radha Churn v. Kripa Sindhu, 5 C. 474; Swamirayachari v. Heirs of Mudgalachari, (1875) B.P.J. 40; Somungowda v. Bhurmogodda, 1 B.H.C.R. 43; Gopal v. Khande Rao, (1877) B.P.J. 328; Maruti v. Vishvanath, (1877) B.P. J. 347; Uma Shankar v. Bai Ratan, (1873) B.P.J. 217; Badulsingh v. Chutterdharee, 9 W.R. 558; Bannoo v. Kashi Ram, 3 C. 315; Amirchand v. Ghasita, (1882) P.R. 143; Samdas v. Sahib Debi, (1892) P.R. 140; Vaidyanatha v. Aiyasamy, 32 M. 191.

(5) Balabux v. Rukhma Bai, 30 C. 725 (736) P.C.; Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 4 L. 350 P.C.

(6) Ranganatha v. Narayanasami, 31 M. 482; Babaji v. Dattu, 38 B. 64; Ramalinga v. Narayana, 30 M.L.J. 255 P.C.

to anything more than a mere computation unless the allotment of the shares accompanies at least the intention giving the allottee the option to separate or continue joint.[1] But apart from this, the case is a clear authority for the view stated in clause (3), viz., that where once any separation is admitted or proved, it suffices to destroy the general presumption of jointness and its consequential presumptions. But of course, that presumption is not displaced by the mere fact of a separation, when the question is whether the separation took place at a given time material to the case. Where for instance, the question was whether a person died separate or in jointness in 1886, proof of the fact that the members of his family were separate in 1896 would not displace the presumption of jointness ten years earlier.[2]

[For the effect of such separation on the general law of partition, see post, chapter on Partition.]

Clause (2) (c).

1136. As to clause 2 (c), Phear, J., in the case already cited, said: "But on the other hand, there is more than one case which lays down, that the single fact of a family living joint or in commensality, is not enough to raise a presumption in law that property acquired by one individual member of that family is joint property. To render it joint property, the consideration for its purchase must have proceeded either out of ancestral funds, or have been produced out of joint property, or by joint labour. But neither of these alternatives is a matter of legal presumption. It can only be brought to the cognizance of a court of Justice in the same way as any other fact, namely, by evidence. Consequently, whomsoever's interest it is to establish, he must produce the evidence."[3]

1137. It must, however, be noted that this distinction does not appear to have influenced the decision in some earlier cases, where the courts have gone the length of presuming joint ownership even without the proof of nucleus. So Couch, C. J., in one case said: "The presumption of law is that all the property, the family is in possession of, is joint property. The rule that the possession of one of the joint owners is the possession of all would apply to this extent that, if one of them was found to be in possession of any property, the family being presumed to be joint in estate, the presumption would be, not that he was in possession of it as separate property acquired by him, but as a member of a joint family."[4] He then referred to the judgment of Phear, J., on the necessity of a nucleus and dissented from it as being in conflict with the view of the Privy Council.[5] But the Privy Council have since in several cases insisted upon the existence of a nucleus as a condition precedent to any presumption,[6] and it has been

---

(1) Hira Singh v. Manglau, (1928) L. 122; Syed Kasim v. Jorawar Singh, 50 C. 84 P.C.

(2) Bhagwan Kumar v. Mohan Singh, 23 A.L.J. 589: 88 I.C. 385: (1925) P. C. 132.

(3) Shiv Golam v. Barran Singh, 1 B.L.R. (A.C.) 164 (166). This case, however, erroneously cast on the plaintiff the burden of proving that the family was joint. To the same effect, on the necessity of a nucleus; Prankristo v. Bhageerutee, 20 W.R. 158.

(4) Taruck Chunder v. Jodeshur, 11 B.L.R. 193 (200).

(5) Dhurm Das v. Shama Soondari, 3 M.I.A. 229.

(6) Anand Rao v. Vasant Rao, 5 C. L.J. 338 P.C.; Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiyalal, 29 A. 244 (254, 255) P.C.

recognized in several cases,[1] and is held to be equally applicable to the Dayabhag families.[2] It will thus be seen that the clause has not been settled without a contest.

These principles do not, of course, suffice to solve the many perplexing riddles which their presumptions and counter-presumptions present in practice.

They will now have to be considered.

Presumption Only in Normal Family.

1138. What is then a normal Hindu family? It is a family which is in every respect joint—joint in mess, joint in residence, joint in worship, joint in estate, and joint in every other respect. Where such family is found, the presumption is legitimate; since it is a fair inference to make that one must live in the same state in which most of the others belonging to the same community live. But if it is admitted or proved that the family to which the presumption is sought to apply is not a normal family, but one of which some members are not joint in one or more respects, the presumption would naturally weaken, and if it is found that they were separate in most respects, then there would be no room for the application of the presumption at all; since the initial presumption of law in favour of jointness would in such a case be displaced by the counter-presumption of logic that where a person is separate in most respects it is not likely that he would continue joint only in some respects.

This is, sometimes, stated in a different form, namely, that a partition is presumed to be complete, but the two rules are different.

Dayabhag Law.

1139. It will be presently seen that a Dayabhag coparcener is no more than a co-sharer and is, therefore, not subject to any of the disabilities of a Mitakshara coparcener.

Explanation.

1140. Possession of Female Members.—From the fact that women in this country are dependent for their support on their male relatives and have no means of their own, law ordinarily presumes that property standing in their names really belongs to their male relatives. But this is only a presumption which cannot be invariably made and when made, it may be neutralized by other facts and circumstances. The subject will be found discussed under the next section (§§ 1146-1148).

Coparceners' acquisition presumed joint.

129 (1) All acquisitions made by the manager of a joint family in the name of any of its coparceners will be presumed to be made out of its fund and for its benefit.[3]

---

(1) Tarachurn v. Joy Narain, 8 W.R. 226; Banee Madhub v. Bhagaobuty, 8 W. R. 270; Chundro v. Buksh Ali, 11 W.R. 305; Radhika Prasad v. Dharma Dasi, 11 W.R. 499; Ramkristo v. Bhageerutee, 20 W.R. 158; Jagodumba v. Rohinee, 23 W.R. 522; Kunja Behari v. Nemai Chand, 2 I.C. (C.) 526; Kamla Kant v. Madhoji, 59 B. 573; Joa Ram v. Surasti, (1883) P.R. 3.

(2) Ram Nath v. Kusum Kumari, 4 C.L.J. 56; Kunja Behari v. Nemaichand, 2 I.C. (C.) 526 (529).

(3) Dhurm Das v. Shama Soondari, 3 M.I.A. 229; Gopee Krist v. Gunga Persad, 6 M.I.A. 53 (75) followed in Parbat Dasi v. Baikunth Nath, 18 C.W. N. 428: 22 I.C. 51 (53) P.C.; Bhagbut v. Huro Gobind, 20 W.R. 269; Kanshi Ram v. Shankar Das, (1928) L. 397 (409); Nga Tingyi v. Nga Twe Auna, 35 I.C. (R.) 12; Narhar v. Narain, 56 I.C. (N.) 386.

(2) But no such presumption arises where the property stands in the name of a non-coparcener:[1]

Provided, however, that where any property is acquired or held in the name of a dependent near female relation of a coparcener, such as his wife or daughter, the same presumption may be made, if it appears that the acquisition was made out of the funds of the joint family and there appears no ground for believing that it was a provision by or on behalf of the joint family.[2]

1141. Analogous Law.—This section states a rule and its necessary corollary, the rule being that in a Mitakshara family the coparceners being all joint owners, any acquisition made by the manager must be deemed to be made qua manager, on behalf of, and for the benefit of, the family, and the corollary being that such acquisition, if made for or by a non-coparcener, cannot be so presumed, and that a coparcener challenging it as made out of the family funds must prove it like any other fact.

The same rule equally applies to other coparceners;[3] but it is the limit; since in the case of other relations, e.g., the wife, strictly speaking, there is no room for the presumption, because there is no presumption of joint funds,[4] but at the same time, since the wife has ordinarily no funds of her own, that fact suffices to rebut the initial presumption, so that it has been held that a purchase by an Indian husband of property in India in the name of his wife, is presumed to be benami.[5] In the case of purchase in the name of other relations the same presumption cannot be stretched, though owing to the fact that benami is common in India, the initial presumption arising in favour of the apparent owner is susceptible of easy rebuttal by proof that the consideration flowed from another person.[6] But still the fact remains that the initial burden in such cases rests on him who alleges that a transaction was benami.[7]

As there are no coparceners in the Dayabhag system of law, the same presumption cannot be extended to a family governed by that school.

It is a general rule that an apparent title is presumably the real title until the contrary is proved. But in the case of a joint family that rule is necessarily reversed on the ground that since all property held by a joint family is presumably joint, any acquisition by the father or other manager in the name of any of a coparcener must be presumed to be for the joint family.[8]

---

(1) Mg. Po Kin v. Mg. Po Shin, 4 R. 518 (519, 520) P.C.; Bharat v. Mhd. Mahbub Ali, 31 I.C. (A.) 586 O.A. 23 C.W.N. 71: 53 I.C. 54 P.C.; Thanikachala v. Alamelu, 25 I.C. (M.) 153; Abdul v. Mirathayar, 24 I.C. (M.) 10; Durga Prasad v. Pran Krishna, 39 I.C. (B.) 530; Surat Laksmiah v. Kothandarama, 48 M. 605 P.C.

(2) Diwan Ram Bijai v. Indarpal, 26 C. 871 (873) P.C., and cases post.

(3) Venkatarama v. Maruthappa, 86 I.C. 886; (1925) M. 448.

(4) Mg. Po Kin v. Mg. Po Shein, 4 R. 518 P.C.; Hitendra Singh v. Rameshwar Singh, 4 Pat. 510.

(5) Sura Lakshmiah v. Kothandarama, 48 M. 605 P.C.

(6) Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh, 15 C. 20 (23) P.C.; Mhd. Mahbub v. Bharat, 31 I.C. 586, O.A. 23 C.W.N. 321: 53 I.C. 54 P.C.; Bhubanmohini v. Kumudbala, 28 C.W.N. 131; (1924) C. 467; Promode Kumar v. Kali Mohan, 27 C.W.N. 305: 70 I.C. 555: (1923) C. 228; Tirthamayi v. Atikulla, 98 I.C. (C) 129 (132): (1927) C. 140; Mirza Ahmed v. Model Mills, 92 I.C. (N.) 25: (1926) N. 262.

(7) Arab Ali v. Mohmud Ali, 67 I.C. 444; (1922) P.C. 84; Jasoda Lal v. Balaram, 35 C.L.J. 589; 69 I.C. 67.

(8) Dhurm Das v. Shama Soondari, 3 M.I.A. 229; Gopee Krist v. Gungapersad, 6 M.I.A. 53 (75) followed in Parbat Dasi v. Baikunth Nath, 18 C.W.

1142. Acquisition by a Coparcener Presumed Joint.—In view of the presumed jointness of all members of a family, any property found in possession of such member is presumably joint, and the purchaser of such property from him is put on inquiry.[1] This presumption equally extends to property which, having passed out of the family by sale into the hands of a stranger is repurchased by a coparcener.[2]

Such a presumption may, however, be rebutted by showing either that the family had no property, or that it was not joint, or that the acquisition was made by a member out of his separate property, or that it was so acquired with the consent of the coparceners, or that the latter acquiesced in its separate enjoyment as separate property.

1143. Presumption and Mode of Proof.—A coparcener alleging any property to be his self-acquisition must, of course, prove it since it is an exception to the presumed community of estate.[3] Such presumption is not rebutted by the mere proof that the property was purchased or stood in the name of a single member, since the evidence in such cases must prove the source of the purchase money; though the purchaser is not bound to prove particularly as regards each item of property that it had been purchased out of his separate fund. Such proof may be supplied by the acts of his exclusive ownership, if acquiesced in by the other coparceners,[4] when he has merely to prove generally his case without being required to trace the very fund with which each purchase was made, from the time of its acquisition in a given year to the moment when it was paid to the seller of the property. But the claimant must adduce evidence of his possession of separate funds[5] which is the criterion for determining whether the purchase was a self-acquisition or for the joint family.[6] No doubt evidence as to the source of the purchase money is generally the most satisfactory, but it is not indispensable.[7]

N. 428: 22 I.C. 51 (53) P.C.; Kanshi Ram v. Shankar Das, (1928) L. 397 (409).

(1) Shibosoondery v. Rakhal Dass, 1 W.R. 38.

(2) Gooroo Pershad v. Debee Pershad, 6 W.R. 58.

(3) Dhurm Das v. Shama Soondari, 3 M.I.A. 229 (240); Prankishen v. Mothoora Mohun, 10 M.I.A. 403; Cheetha v. Miheen Lall, 11 M.I.A. 369; Bessesur v. Luchmessur, 5 C.L.R. 477 (479); Parbati v. Baikunth Nath, 18 C.W.N. 428 P.C.; Pran Nath v. Kashi Nath, (1864) W.R. 169; Deela Singh v. Toofanee, 1 W.R. 306; Nilmoney v. Gunga Narain, 1 W.R. 334; Gopee Lal v. Bhagwan, 12 W.R. 7; Bodh Singh v. Ganesh, 19 W.R. 306; Heeralal v. Bidyadhur, 21 W.R. 343; Jugodumba v. Rohinee, 23 W.R. 422; Ramphul v. Deg Narayan, 8 C. 517; Narayan v. Anaji, 5 B. 130; Cassumbhoy v. Ahmedbhoy, 12 B. 280 (309); Balaram v. Ramchandra, 22 B. 922; Kanhialal v. Debi Das, 22 A. 141.

(4) Bippra Pershad v. Kena, 3 W.R. 165 (167, 168): 5 W.R. 82; Gane Bhive v. Kane Bhive, 4 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 169; Kanhia Lal v. Debi Das, 22 A. 141.

(5) Dhurm Das v. Shama Soondari, 6 W.R. 43 (44) P.C.; Pran Kishen v. Mothoora, 5 W.R. 11 P.C.; Gopi Krist v. Ganga Pershad, 6 M.I.A. 53; Parbati v. Baikunth Nath, 18 C.W.N. 428 P.C.

(6) Bissessur v. Luchmessur, 5 C.L.R. 477 (479) P.C., following Gopee Krist v. Ganesh Persaud, 6 M.I.A. 53; Cheetha v. Miheen Lal, 11 M.I.A. 369; Yanumala v. Yanumala, 13 M.I.A. 333; Pran Nath v. Kashi Nath, (1864) W.R. 169; Deela Singh v. Toofanee Singh, 1 W.R. 306; Nilmoney v. Gunga Narain, 1 W.R. 334; Beharee v. Madho Pershad, 6 W.R. 69; Gopee Lal v. Bhagwan Dass, 12 W.R. 7; Bodhu Singh v. Ganesh, 19 W.R. 356; Jugodamba v. Rohinee, 23 W.R. 422; Nunsingh v. Narain Das, 26 W.R. 17 P.C., O.A. from 3 N.W.P.H.C.R. (217); Narain v. Anaji, 5 B. 130; Balaram v. Ramchandra, 22 B. 922; Subhayya v. Chellamma, 9 M. 477; Subhayya v. Surayya, 10 M. 251; Ramphul v. Dagnarain, 8 C. 517; Kanhia Lal v. Debi Dass, 22 A. 141.

(7) Dhurm Dass v. Shama Soondari, 3 M.I.A. 229; Dhunookdhari v. Gurpat Lall, 10 W.R. 122; Bhola Nath v. Ajoodhia, 20 W.R. 85.

No Presumption.

1144. But where the joint family is itself of an anomalous character, then the presumption arising in the case of normal family would be correspondingly modified. The Privy Council had to consider the case of one such family where two brothers had separated their transactions by a mutual agreement. Years afterwards one branch sued the other for partition and the question that exercised the courts was whether the property acquired by the defendant's branch was out of the joint property. It was shown that, though the properties were so acquired, for 16 years, the defendants had openly treated them as their exclusive properties, to which the plaintiff's branch took no exception. It was held that the plaintiffs had precluded themselves by their conduct from claiming the properties as joint which they had for so many years suffered the defendants to treat as separate.[1]

Again, such presumption, being founded on the fact of union, there can be no presumption where any property stands in the name of a non-coparcener, such as son-in-law[2] or a female member of the family.[3] As observed in a case: "Where a family lives in coparcenary, the presumption which exists in the case of male members arises from the circumstance that they are coparceners. On the other hand, the ladies are not, in an undivided family, coparceners; whatever property they acquire by inheritance or gift is their separate estate, and although it is not unusual for property to be transferred to the name of a female member to protect it from the creditors of the male members, or to place it beyond the risk of extravagance on the part of the member, such dealings are exceptional and can afford no ground for a general presumption."[4]

Dayabhag.

1145. The presumption of law that, while a family remains joint, all property including acquisitions made in the name of individual members is joint property, has no application to a Dayabhag family in which the father reigns supreme, and the other members have no vested interest in the family property during his lifetime. Nevertheless, the Privy Council have observed no such distinction, but have held that the presumption applies equally to all joint families whether subject to the Mitakshara or the Dayabhag schools of law.[5]

Clause (2).

1146. Purchase by Non-coparcener.—A non-coparcener is like any other owner free to acquire and hold property unfettered by the tie of coparcenership. Consequently, where any property is found in the possession of such person, law will make the usual presumption that he is its sole owner.[6] But this raises the question whether the same presumption can be extended equally to the female members of a joint family, e.g., the wife, or a daughter, who, it is notorious, have seldom any funds of their own. Of course, where it is known that the husband or the father, as the case may be, had made any purchase in the name of his wife or daughter, it is no longer a case for presumption, since that fact alone suffices to establish the benami

(1) Narsingdas v. Narain Dass, 26 W. R. 17 P.C., affirming O.A. 3 N.W.P. H.C.R. 217.
(2) Dossee Monee v. Ramchand, 7 W.R. 249.
(3) Narayana v. Krishna, 8 M. 214.
(4) Ib., p. 218.
(5) Chand Huree v. Narendra Narain, 19 W.R. 231 P.C.; Dhurm Das v. Shama Sundari, 3 M.I.A. 229; Gopee Krist v. Ganga Prasad, 6 M.I.A. 53; Parbati Dasi v. Baikuntha Nath, 18 C.W.N. 428 P.C.: 22 I.C. 51 P.C.
(6) S. 110, Evidence Act.

character of the transaction, unless it is shown to be a gift or a family settlement. As will be seen in the sequel (S. 221), there is no presumption in this country that an Indian, purchasing any property in the name of his wife or child, does so by way of advancement, and consequently, unless the transaction is otherwise explained, it must be presumed to be benami. As their Lordships of the Privy Council observed: "There can be no doubt now that a purchase in India by a native of India of property in India in the name of his wife unexplained by other proved or admitted facts is to be regarded as a benami transaction by which the beneficial interest in the property is in the husband, although the ostensible title is in the wife. The rule of law of England that such a purchase by a husband in England is to be assumed to be a purchase for the advancement of the wife, does not apply in India."[1] At the same time, since women are not debarred the right of holding property in India, any property standing in their name cannot be treated as benami where, therefore, a property was bought apparently by a wife and there was no evidence as to who paid the purchase money, the court held that there was no room for presumption that the purchase had been made by the husband.[2] Consequently, where property is found in possession of a woman of the acquisition of which no account is given, it will be presumed to be her property until the contrary is shown. This presumption is not rebutted by shewing that her husband had died possessed of considerable property; a fortiori, where there is no such evidence.[3]

1147. The rule applicable to the wife applies equally to the mistress, since there is no presumption that a purchase by a person in the name of his mistress, is made for her benefit,[4] though where such property was registered in the name of the woman who was, therefore, the only person equally entitled to collect the rents, the facts that the person, advancing the money, possessed a number of other properties none of which was put in the name of the woman, that the value of the property in the woman's name was very small and that the woman's right to the property was not disputed, until some six years after the man's death, were held to be circumstances sufficient to show that the title passed to the woman.[5] So where a person had brought up a daughter of his wife's relative as his own child, treated her with affection and married her to his cousin at considerable expense, kept her husband as his Khana Damad (resident son-in-law) and purchased a valuable garden and a house in her name with his own money, and treated that property as belonging to her upto the time of her death, it was held that the purchase was really for the benefit of the adopted daughter and not merely benami, and that the transaction was in effect a marriage settlement by way of gift of the money, for which the property was purchased.[6]

1148. A question suggests itself in this connection whether the rule here enunciated is in conflict with the provisions of S. 110 of the Evidence

---

(1) Lakshmiah, v. Kothandarama, 48 M. 605 (608) P.C.; Motivahoo v. Purshotam, 29 B. 306 (314); contra in Abdul Rahim v. Mira Mayar, 24 I.C. (M.) 10; Chellamuthu v. Muthudayar, 17 I.C. (M.) 740; Durga Prasad v. Pran Krishna, 39 I.C. (P.) 530, must be held overruled.

(2) Durga Prasad v. Pran Krishna, 3 Pat.L.W. 341: 39 I.C. (B.) 530; distinguishing Motivahoo v. Purshotam, 29 B. 306 (314).

(3) Diwan Ram Bijai v. Indarpal, 26 C. 871 (873) P.C.; Chowdhrani v. Tariny Kant, 8 C. 545; Ganpat v. Secretary of State, 45 B. 1108; Narayan v. Krishna, 8 M. 214.

(4) Bilas Kunwar v. Dasraj, 37 A. 557 P.C.

(5) Jitan v. Manbarta, 5 I.C. 85.

(6) Inamullah v. Aisha Bi, (1913) P. L.R. 41: 18 I.C. 705.

Act and Art. 144 of the Limitation Act, the effect of which is to raise the presumption of title from mere possession, and since all possession is prima facie exclusive and adverse, it creates a title, where there was none, by the mere efflux of time. Both these points have been answered in the affirmative by the Privy Council.[1]

Alienation of coparcenary property by consent.

130. (1) Any coparcenary property may be alienated by or with the consent of all the coparceners;[2]

(2) Where any of the coparcenary property has been alienated with the consent of the coparceners, those born thereafter are not entitled to impeach its validity;[3]

(3) Where a coparcenary comprises members some of whom are minors, no consent of the adult coparceners can affect their interest beyond furnishing evidence of necessity, which may be rebutted.[4]

(4) Where of several co-parceners some only consent to an alienation, it is valid to the extent of their interest, and their consent may be further evidence of necessity which may, however, be rebutted.[5]

Exception.—Nothing herein applies to property which is otherwise inalienable.

Illustration.

The father sold his ancestral fields and with the proceeds thereof built a family house. The son takes possession of the house, but seeks to avoid the sale of his fields on the ground that it was made without his consent. The son cannot avoid the sale which he must be deemed to have ratified by his conduct.[6]

1149. Analogous Law.—The dim genesis of the section will be found in the undernoted texts.[7]

1150. Principle.—The principle of this section is clear. What belongs to all may be alienated by all or by the consent of all. At any rate, those who join in the alienation and those who concur therein by their act or conduct cannot be afterwards permitted to repudiate their own act. The section may partially operate by contract and partially by force of estoppel.[8] The rule is subject to the disability which the Mitakshara coparcener, according to the Calcutta and Allahabad view, suffers from, in that while his share may be seized and sold in execution of a decree passed against him, it cannot be alienated by him by a voluntary act. This limitation is, however, immaterial to the applicability of the law of estoppel, since his consent to the manager's alienation would, in that case, still furnish prima facie proof of necessity. All authorities appear, however, to be agreed that his consent would not validate a gift or devise not otherwise valid, since the donee or devisee is not a transferee for value and there is no equity in his favour for enlarging the interest for which he has never paid.

---

(1) Jowala Buksh v. Dharam Singh, 10 M.I.A. 511 (528, 529, 535); Shadi Lal v. Lal Bahadur, (1933) P.C. 85; Saraswati Bai v. Waman Rao, 15 C.P. L.R. 3 (6).

(2) Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (165) P.C.

(3) Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad, 47 A. 995.

(4) Kandasami v. Somaskanda, 35 M. 177 (181).

(5) Mit. I-1, §§ 27-29 see § 1154.

(6) Ganga Bai v. Vamanji, 2 B.H.C. R. 301 (305); Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (165) P.C., explained in Biswanath v. Jagdip Narain, 40 C. 342 (350); Kunjan Chetti v. Sidda Pillai, 22 M. 461 (463); Kamakshy v. Chakrapany, 30 M. 452 (453).

(7) Mit., I-1, §§ 28; 32; Vivad Chintamani, pp. 72, 77.

(8) Musiligadu v. Nannigadu, 15 M. L.J. 492; followed in Kandasami v. Somaskanda, 35 M. 177 (181, 182).

1151. Alienation of Joint Property.—Since joint property belongs to the coparceners jointly, it follows that the coparceners are conjointly entitled to alienate it. Since the right of alienation is one incident of ownership, it necessarily vests in the coparceners collectively. It is an obvious truth and has been so affirmed by the Privy Council.[1] Apart from the coparceners, the other person entitled to alienate joint property is its manager. But though it is legally the incident of his management, the circumstances which justify his alienation must, beyond those stated in the next section be such as amount to the express or implied consent of the remaining coparceners. Necessity or consent is then the touchstone of a valid alienation of joint property. But the consent of all coparceners may not be always possible; where some of them are minors, consent is out of question; but where only some of the rest consent, what is its effect? According to the Madras view, "an assent by some alone, though evidence of the propriety of an alienation, will not, in the face of positive proof of its impropriety, suffice to pass their interests, for such assent does not amount to a transfer."[2] In other words, such consent is merely evidence of justifying necessity the value of which is lost in the face of evidence to the contrary. Apart from estoppel, it does not affect the share of the consentient coparcener. But it is submitted that this statement is too wide, since there can scarcely be any doubt that a coparcener who is entitled to alienate his share for value may equally permit its alienation by the manager, and that in the case of such coparcener at least his consent would affect his share. But in order to have that effect, the alienation must be for value and it must relate to the provinces where the coparcener's right of alienation of their undivided coparcenary interest has become recognized. (S. 126.)

1152. In strict principle, even this fact would appear to make no difference. A reversioner is disentitled to alienate his interest, but nevertheless, his consent is held to validate the widow's alienation. It might be said that while the widow and the next reversioner combined represent the whole estate, the manager and a consentient coparcener, when there are others who stand out, do not. But the fact remains that a coparcener everywhere is entitled to dispose of his coparcenary interest in all provinces except the U.P., Behar and Bengal, subject to the Mitakshara, where his interest is nonetheless liable to seizure and sale in execution of a decree obtained against him. In both cases, therefore, his interest is alienable, though the procedure for its sale differs. As such, he possesses something more than a reversioner's contingency and his concurrence in the sale cannot be of less value. That it is evidence of propriety is, however, admitted. But in either case consent dispenses with the proof of necessity.

1153. But here again consent may operate to feed a title by estoppel. Suppose that coparcener in the United Provinces, who is not permitted to alienate his interest, actively assists his father in the sale of the family estate, would he on the father's death be permitted to unravel a transaction which his own complicity has brought about? In such cases, the transferee must, of course, take in good faith. If he takes with notice of the limited powers of his transferor, the fact that his coparcener concurs in

---

(1) Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (165) P.C.

(2) Kandasami v. Somaskanda, 35 M. 177 (181).

the sale would not implement his title, for there can be no estoppel where the transferee knows the truth.[1]

1154. The same rule would appear to apply to a reversioner in respect of an alienation made by a Hindu widow which the reversioner may either assent to or ratify.[2] Of course, a person is not bound by his consent signified conditional upon the consent of the other coparceners,[3] or a consent based upon any other contingency previously disclosed or known to the parties. The consent in such cases is not a free consent so as to give validity to the transaction.[4] An alienation is good if made by the coparceners then existing. Those born thereafter cannot question it.[5] It is, sometimes, said that the coparceners' consent, express or implied, is always necessary to validate an alienation even though supported by legal necessity,[6] though it is reasonable to presume such consent from the presence of necessity.[7] But consent does not appear to be an invariable adjunct of a valid alienation, since an alienation if supported by necessity, would be valid independently of the consent or dissent of the coparceners.[8] The text of the Mitakshara[9] no doubt postulates such consent, but it does so merely as evidence, not the only evidence, of necessity. If, added thereto, there is the consent of adult coparceners, the alienation binds all members of the family including the minor coparceners who are precluded from challenging its validity.[10]

MANAGEMENT OF JOINT FAMILY.

Coparcenary Manager.

131. (1) Except in the case of a trading family, the father,[11] and in his absence, the next senior male relation is the rightful manager of a co-parcenary:

(2) Provided that during the incapacity[12] or absence of the manager or in case of emergency, any other co-parcener may with the express or implied consent of the co-parceners act for him.[13]

1155. Analogous Law.—The father, and in his absence, the other seniormost member of the family is its rightful manager. But the following text provides for a contingency occurring when the manager is absent:—

---

(1) Gur Narayan v. Sheolal Singh, 45 C. 566 P.C.

(2) Prem Sukhdas v. Ram Bhujawan, (1919) Pat. 451: 52 I.C. 964 (969); Subba Goundan v. Krishnamachari, 45 M. 449 (466), dissenting from contra in Kandasami v. Somaskanda, 35 M. 177 (181).

(3) Sivasami v. Sevugan, 25 M. 389.

(4) See this subject discusssed in the chapter on "Woman's Estate".

(5) Buraikchutter v. Greedharee Singh, 9 W.R. 337; Bhagwan v. Ujagar, (1928) P.C. 20.

(6) Mitt., I-I, §§ 27-29; per West, J., in Chimnaji v. Dinkar, 11 B. 320 (324); Kamta v. Bhagirath, 2 O.L.J. 30: 27 I.C. 517; Kamla Prasad v. Nattui, (1922) Pat. 136.

(7) Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (165) P.C.; Biswanath v. Jagdeep Narain, 40 C. 342 (350).

(8) Anant Ram v. Collector, 40 A. 171 (175) P.C.; Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, 46 A. 95 P.C.; Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram, 21 C.W.N. 957 P.C.; Thakurji v. Nanda Ahir, 43 A. 460.

(9) Mit., I-I, §§ 27-29.

(10) Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh, 25 A. 407 (415) P.C.; Miller v. Runga Nath, 12 C. 389; Buraik Chuttar v. Greedharee, 9 W.R. 337; Kandasami v. Somaskanda, 35 M. 177 (181); Chhotiram v. Narayan Das, 11 B. 605; Chimnaji v. Dinkar, 11 B. 320 (324) (position of widow and manager compared, per West, J.).

(11) Surja Prasad v. Golab Chand, 27 C. 724 (743).

(12) Udit Narayan v. Ranglal, 29 C. 797.

(13) Mit. I-I, §§ 28, 29.

1156. Qualified Manager.—The right of the father to manage his family stands above the right of any other relation.[1] It is the survival of the patria potestas. After the father, its management devolves upon the eldest male member of the family, especially the eldest brother. This is the normal rule, but where the person qualified to be the manager of his family lacks the qualification to manage it, its management devolves upon one better qualified.[2] The nature of business of the family often points to the member best fitted to act as the manager. In a banking business, for instance, the father may be superseded by a younger son more adept in the business; while in a trading partnership with several branches, it is usual for a relative to manage each branch subject to, or independently of, the supervision of the head-manager.

But such management is not to be confused with the rights and powers of the karta who manages the orthodox household owning its ancestral lands. He owes his selection to his seniority, not as a matter of coparcenary discretion, for if any coparcener should disagree, his remedy lies in partition.

It will be noted that the section is only declaratory of the rightful manager. It does not exclude the possibility of a junior member acting as such. As a matter of fact, with the spread of education and the more diversified activities of the members of a joint family in these days, the right to the management of family business is not infrequently determined by competency more than by seniority. Where it is so, the de jure manager will exist side by side with the de facto manager, whose powers to pledge the family assets would then be those of an ordinary manager.[3]

1157. Right of Juniors.—Though the karta or manager has a definite status in a joint family, the Mitakshara recognizes the possibility of his absence or incapacity, in which case it allows any coparcener to act for him.[4]

It has even been held that a mortgage of family property by a junior member is not invalid merely because he was not the karta, provided the mortgage was justified by necessity.[5] The necessity in this case was the defence of some of the coparceners of a criminal charge, but it was not shown that the manager was unavailable or unwilling to act. It does not appear to be the law that any coparcener may without reference to the manager alien joint property merely because there was necessity. The use of the term "even" in the Mitakshara text shows that the authority conferred on the junior members was exceptional and exercisable only in case of emergency.

Manager's powers.

132. The manager possesses the following powers:—

---

(1) Surja Prasad v. Golab Chand, 27 C. 724 (743); Gajindra v. Harihar, 12 C.W.N. 687.

(2) Udit Narayan v. Ranglal, 29 C. 797.

(3) Krishna v. Krishnaswami, 23 M. 597 (600); Obelisetti v. Atyan, 41 M.L.J. 554; Dhanukdhari v. Rambirich, 1 Pat. 171 (173); Tara Kiran v. Hari Kishan, 50 A. 447.

(4) Mit., Ch. I-I; § 28.

(5) Dhanukdhari v. Rambirich, (1922) 1 Pat. 171.

(1) He is entitled to be in physical possession of the joint property, and perform, in respect of it, all acts of management;[1]

(2) As such, he may realize and expend its income at his discretion;[2]

(3) He is not accountable to his co-parceners for his management, nor liable to them for his negligence or mis-management;[3]

(4) He becomes, however, so liable if he has fraudulently misappropriated any of its income, or spent it on purposes not binding on the family;[4]

(5) He is entitled to contract debts and alienate or charge the joint estate for legal necessity, or for its benefit, to the extent hereinafter provided;[5]

(6) He is entitled to represent the co-parcenary in all suits and proceedings affecting its interests, to make contracts,[6] give discharges;[7] pass receipts, acknowledge debts, refer to arbitration, compromise any claim or dispute affecting it, and generally to do all such acts as he may consider necessary or for its benefit;

(7) He is the de facto guardian of the coparcenary interest of the minor members of the family.

1158. Analogous Law.—The following texts bear on the powers of the manager:—

Manu.—"By the eldest, at the moment of his birth, the father, having begotten a son, discharges his debt to his own progenitors; the eldest son therefore, ought before partition, to manage the whole patrimony.

"That son alone by whose birth he discharges his debt, and through whom he attains immortality, was begotten from a sense of duty; all the rest are considered by the wise as begotten from love of pleasure.

"Let the father alone support his sons; and the first-born, his younger brothers; and let them behave to the eldest according to law, as children should behave to their father."[8]

---

(1) Baldeo v. Shamlal, 1 A. 77, followed in Jallidar v. Ram Lal, 4 C. 723; Dharm Das v. Amulyadhan, 32 C. 1119 (1131, 1132); Bhiku v. Buttu, 8 Bom.L.R. 99; as to trust property, see Sri Ram v. Sri Gopal, 19 A. 428; Ramanathan v. Murugappa, 27 M. 193 (201); Bhaskori v. Bhaskaram, 31 M. 218; Thandavaroya v. Shunmugam, 32 M. 167.

(2) Damodar Das v. Uttamram, 17 B. 271; Narayan v. Nathaji, 28 B. 201 (208); Balkrishna v. Muthusami, 32 M. 271 contra in Abhaychandra v. Pyari Mohun, 5 B.L.R. 347.

(3) Shookmoy v. Monoharri, 11 C. 684 (694) P.C.; Setrucherla v. Setrucherla, 22 M. 470 P.C.; Tara v. Reele, 3 M.H.C.R. 177; Balakrishna v. Muthusami, 32 M. 271; Bhowani v. Juggernath, 13 C.W.N. 309; Parmeshwar v. Gobind, 43 C. 459 (464, 465); Nonerra v. Gurrav, 5 B. 589; Narayan v. Nathaji, 28 B. 201.

(4) Abaychandra v. Pyari Mohan, 13 W.R. 75 F.B.; Parmeshwar v. Gobind, 43 C. 499; Balakrishna v. Muthusami, 32 M. 271; Damodar Das v. Uttamram, 17 B. 271; Narayan v. Nathaji, 28 B. 201 (208).

(5) Dwarka Nath v. Bungshi, 9 C.W.N. 879; Moheshur v. Kishun Singh, 34 C. 184.

(6) Kishen Pershad v. Har Narain, 33 A. 272 P.C., overruling Alagappa v. Velian, 18 M. 33; Bal Savani v. Narayan, 7 B. 467; Balji v. Keshowji, 37 B. 340; Gopal Das v. Badri Nath, 27 A. 361; Durga Prasad v. Damodar Das, 32 A. 183; Girwar v. Makbunessa, 1 Pat.L.J. 468; Pitam Singh v. Ujagar Singh, 1 A. 651; Ram Kuber v. Ram Dasi, 35 A. 428; Ram Das v. Chabildas, 12 Bom.L.R. 621; Jagan Nath v. Mannulal, 16 A. 231 (family arrangement); Balaji v. Nana, 5 Bom. L.R. 95 (reference to arbitration).

(7) Hanooman Pershad Pandey v. Mt. Baboee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (413); Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh, 25 A. 407 P.C.

(8) Manu, IX-104-108.

Gautam.—"After the father's death, let the sons divide his estate.

"Or, during his lifetime, when the mother is past child bearing, if he desires it.

"Or the whole estate may go to the first-born; and he shall support the rest as a father."[1]

Narad.—"Or the senior brother shall maintain all the junior brothers, like a father, if they wish it, or even the younger brother, if able; the well-being of a family depends on the ability of its head."[2]

"One who being authorized to look after the affairs of the family charges himself with the management (of the family property) shall be supported by his brothers with presents of food, clothing and vehicles."[3]

1159. Manager's Powers.—With the exception of the father, who has an almost absolute right to be the manager of his household, the right of any other relation depends, in the first instance, upon his seniority, but, for its continuance, upon the consent or acquiescence of the other coparceners, who may supersede him or limit his powers. But exercise of his ordinary power does not depend upon any assent or acquiscence of the coparceners. His position is independent of the will of the coparceners.[4] As observed by Mr. Cowell: "When, therefore, we come to define the relation of each member, especially of the managing member, to the joint family and the joint estate, we are brought into contact with a relationship which has no counterpart in English law. Neither the term partner, nor principal, nor agent, nor even a coparcener, will strictly apply."[5] Consequently, while the family remains joint, the powers of the manager cannot be altered by contract so as to affect the very constitution of the coparcenary. This was the ratio decidendi of the case in which three brothers separated from their nephew, the son of their eldest brother, themselves agreeing to remain joint for 12 years after which they were to effect a partition. The eldest of them was to manage the estate and maintain an account of the profit and loss accruing up to that date which was also to be then divided with the corpus. This arrangement was adhered to for the stipulated term of 12 years, after which the youngest brother sued for a partition and profits of his share during the twelve years' term. The manager resisted the claim for accounts, pleading that he was not accountable for past profits, as the family was joint but the Privy Council held that the agreement was not a simple agreement to postpone the partition, but had put the family upon a new footing and that his position during the term, though not that of a trustee, was that of an agent, which made him accountable for his receipts and the expenditure.[6]

1160. The same view was taken in another case, in which, by a family arrangement, the head of the family, a talukdar, was alone to hold the estate by primogeniture, but was accountable to the junior members for their shares of the profits. The Privy Council held this kind of managership entirely unknown to Hindu Law, and observed: "A talukdar, here in question, was in a very peculiar position; the family were living together as a joint family, and in commensality, Anant acting as head and

---

(1) Gautam, XXVIII-1-3; 2 S.B.E.
(2) Narad, XIII-5.
(3) Ib., XIII-34.
(4) Ramanathan v. Murugappa, 27 M. 192 (201); Thandavaroya v. Shunmugam, 32 M. 167 (169, 170); Sri Raman v. Sri Gopal, 19 A. 428.
(5) Tagore Law Lectures, 1870, p. 108; cited and followed in Mhd. Askari v. Radhe Ram, 22 A. 307 (317-321); to the same effect, Thandavaroya v. Shunmugam, 32 M. 167.
(6) Setrucherla v. Setrucherla, 22 M. 470 (475) P.C.

not accounting for the profits, which is the case with an ordinary Hindu family; but still they were living under the most distant agreement that they were entitled, not as in an ordinary joint family but in specific and definite shares. Their Lordships consider that, if the enjoyment of those shares is in any way disturbed, the right to sue for the profits will arise, as well as a right to partition."[1]

1161. The manager, as such, is not entitled to any remuneration for managing the estate, of which he is the joint owner, though there is nothing in law to prevent him from receiving remuneration, if the coparceners agree to pay him.[2] The coparceners cannot limit his authority to manage the family estate by rotation,[3] though the family may place another member in joint management of their estate; and where this has been the practice, the son will, as of right, succeed to the joint managership on the death of his father.[4]

1162. The karta of a Hindu family has been variously described and likened to the manager of an estate, a trustee, or the managing director of a corporation or company. But his position is in some respects unique, for while as manager he must, and does necessarily possess, some of the attributes of a manager and trustee, his status and powers are the result of combined necessity and ancient privilege. They are stated in the several clauses which may now be taken as settled by the preponderance of precedents; and their full effect will now be discussed.

1163. The fact that a person is a manager, does not create any presumption that all his acts are performed in that capacity, since in becoming the manager, he does not cease to act in his individual capacity. As such, he continues to possess all the rights of a coparcener.[5] Where, therefore, all members of a joint family were to have executed a mortgage, which was in fact only executed by the manager, the question was held to be one of intention, whether he had executed it on behalf of all or only as a co-executant. The question is one of fact to be decided upon the circumstances of each case: "If the parties intended that all the members of the family should execute the document, it cannot take effect by reason that the person who alone executed the document, happens to be the managing member, and that the debt is recited to have been incurred for the benefit of the family."[6] In one such case the court held the mortgage incomplete so that it was held to be inoperative even against the individual share of the manager who executed it.[7] This view is justifiable on the ground that a person who undertakes a joint liability cannot be burdened with undivided liability which he never undertook. Even in other cases, as where a negotiable instrument, such as a promissory note, is passed by the karta it is expedient that the instrument should on its face show the persons to be charged.[8] If this is wanting, the plaintiff can only recover on the pro-

---

(1) Shankar v. Hardeo, 16 C. 397 (412, 413) P.C.

(2) Krishnasami v. Rajagopala, 18 M. 73 (86).

(3) Sri Raman v. Sri Gopal, 19 A. 498; Ramnathan v. Marugappa, 27 M. 193 (201); Thandavaroya v. Shunmugam, 32 M. 167 (169).

(4) Purappavanalingam v. Nullasivan, 1 M.H.C.R. 415.

(5) Damodhar v. Damodhar, 1 B.H.C. R. 182.

(6) Sivasami v. Sevugan, 25 M. 389 (393).

(7) Sivasami v. Sevugan, 25 M. 389 (393).

(8) Sadasuk v. Kisan Pershad, 46 C. 663 P.C.

missory note from the manager, though it is open to him to set up an alternative case that the debt was borrowed for the necessity or benefit of the family in which case all its members would be liable.[1]

Manager as Administrator.

1164. If the manager is also the administrator of the estate he cannot exercise power as manager which he is prevented from doing as administrator.[2]

Cl. 1 (a) Possession.

1165. Manager's Right to Possession.—It being clear that no coparcener has any right to separate possession of the coparcenary estate, and all alike being entitled to joint possession and enjoyment, its actual possession and management must vest in the manager. He is entitled to physical possession of the entire joint estate and can consequently eject a coparcener if he has taken exclusive possession of any portion of the joint estate.[3] So where the son had removed himself from the family dwelling-house as he objected to live with his mother-in-law and had taken up a separate residence in a house which used to be rented, the father was held entitled to eject him on the ground that a coparcener was not entitled to exclusive possession of any portion of the joint property.[4] But, of course, the manager cannot eject any one from the joint occupation of the family-house[5] though where the coparcener disturbs by his conduct the peace of the family, he may even exclude him therefrom, if necessary, by an injunction restraining the coparcener from entering upon any portion of the property without the consent of the manager[6] who "has a recognized position of superiority with well-defined rights of management and possession independent of the consent of the other members of the family."[7] The Court will protect his possession even under S. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

1166. But where a coparcener's possession has been acquiesced in for some time by the manager, he cannot be permitted to disturb it in the mere assertion of his right to exclusive possession. Such was the case of a coparcener's possession of a garden which he had beautified at his own expense, but from which the other coparceners wished to eject him out of spite. The court refused to assist them adding: "To do that would be to take away from the defendant the whole advantage of that which he had been allowed so long a time to occupy, and would, in fact, have the effect of constituting the courts a source of annoyance rather than giving plaintiffs any reasonable and necessary relief."[8] The same principle guided the court in maintaining the status quo ante in a case where different co-sharers had been for a considerable time allowed to hold separate portions of the bank of a tank.[9] The manager is, of course, entitled to

(1) Hari Mohan v. Sourendra Nath, 41 C.L.J. 535: 88 I.C. 1025: (1925) C. 1153; Sukhada Kanta v. Joginee-Kanta, 60 C. 1197; Vithal Rao v. Vithal Rao, 25 Bom.L.R. 151: 72 I.C. 242: (1923) B. 244.

(2) Obiter in Ranjit Singh v. Amullya Prasad, 9 C.W.N. 923.

(3) Baldeo v. Shamlal, 1 A. 77, followed in Jallidar Singh v. Ram Lal, 4 C. 723 (724); contra in Raghoba v. Ziboo, 7 N. L.R. 82, overlooks the law of coparcenary.

(4) Baldeo Das v. Shamlal, 1 A. 77 (78); Badri Das v. Ratan Lal, (1892) A. W.N. 35.

(5) Dharma Das v. Amulyadhan, 32 C. 1119 (1131, 1132); Bhiku v. Puttu, 8 Bom.L.R. 99.

(6) Bhaskari v. Bhaskaran, 31 M. 318, (320).

(7) Ib., p. 320.

(8) Collector v. Debnath, 21 W.R. 222.

(9) Surbessur v. Gossain Dass, 17 W. R. 210.

hold the shares of a Joint Stock Company belonging to the joint family, and on the death of one manager another succeeding to him would be legally entitled to have his name registered in the books of the Company.[1]

Cl. (2), (3) Manager not accountable for Current Income.

1167. The manager of a coparcenary is not bound to keep accounts[2] or is accountable to the coparceners for his income and expenditure in the same way as if he were their agent. As previously remarked, he has in the family a position of superiority, and he is left to his own judgment to act according to what he considers best in the interest of the family.[3] Where the discretion of the managing member is exercised bona fide and for the benefit of the estate and the family has the benefit, such discretion should not be narrowly scrutinized.[4] He cannot be held liable for his negligence.[5] He manages the joint estate for the benefit of the family and so long as he does this, he is not under the same obligation to economise or to save as would be the case with a paid agent or trustee: "It is now well settled that when accounts have to be taken with a view to a partition of joint family properties, the account which has to be taken of the entire family property in the hands of the different members is mainly an enquiry into the existing assets. The head of the family cannot in general be called upon to defend the propriety of the past transactions of the family."[6]

This view is supported by the fact that, apart from fraud or misappropriation by the manager, unless something is shown to the contrary, every adult member of an undivided family living in commensality with the manager must be taken to be a participator in and authorizor of all that has been done in the management of the property,[7] and that except where misappropriation is proved, the manager is liable to account only for what he has actually received and not for what he ought to have received.[8]

Cl. (4) Fraud Excepted.

1168. Of course, the manager cannot escape his liability for fraud or gross negligence, nor can he saddle its effect upon his coparceners, unless they have profited by his wrong.[9] The manager's accountability for fraud or misappro-

---

(1) Piari Lal v. Mait Mills, 41 A. 619.

(2) Ram Nath v. Goturam, 44 B. 179, (183); contra in Abhoychunder v. Piaree Mohun, 13 W.R. 75 F.B. (a Dayabhag case, but statement not so limited); cf. Pirthi Pal v. Jowahir, 14 C. 493 (508) P. C. (cannot sue for profits); Arumilli v. Subbarayadu, 44 M. 656 (663) P.C.; Srinivas v. Thiruvengada, 38 M. 556 (except from the date of his exclusion); to the same effect, Balakrishna v. Muthusami, 32 M. 271 (274).

(3) Tara Chand v. Reeb Ram, 3 M.H. C.R. 177 (180).

(4) Ratnam v. Govindrajulu, 2 M. 339.

(5) Raya v. Gopal, 11 I.C. (M.) 666.

(6) Shookmoy v. Monoharri, 11 C. 684 P.C.; Arumilli v. Subbarayadu, 44 M. 656 (663) P.C.; Bhowani v. Juggernath, 13 C.W.N. 309: 3 I.C. 241, following Jug Mohan v. Mangal Das, 10 B. 528 (561, 581); Narayan v. Nathaji, 28 B. 201; Babu v. Dadjirao, (1893) B.P.J. 166; Haridas v. Narotam, 14 Bom.L.R. 237; Parmeshwar v. Gobind, 43 C. 459 (464, 465).

(7) Shookmay v. Monoharri, 11 C. 684 (694) P.C.; Ramabhadra v. Virabadra, 22 M. 470 (475, 476) P.C.; Arumilli v. Subharayadu, 44 M. 656 (663) P.C.

(8) Arumilli v. Subharavadu, 44 M. 656 (663) P.C.; Tammireddi v. Gangireddi, 45 M. 281 (286, 287).

(9) Jai Narain v. Prag Narain, 29 C.W.N. 775 P.C.: (1925) P.C. 11; Obhoy Chunder v. Pearee Mohun, 13 W.R. 75 (79) F.B.; Some v. Dhondu, 28 B. 300.

priation is reserved even in cases in which he is held to be generally unaccountable.[1] But even in such a case no coparcener can sue for account of a portion of joint property or for one or two items. Where he has the right to call for accounts, he must do so of the whole joint property.[2]

Accounts by Agreement.

1169. Again, it is no exception to the general rule that the manager has to account where he has agreed to as he well might in a banking business, or other business carried on in the nature of partnership.[3]

Must account for Admitted Assets.

1170. The manager is, of course, liable to account for all assets of the joint family existing at the time of partition.[4] For this purpose the coparceners are not bound to accept the manager's ipse dixit as to the extent and value of the property. That would be no account at all. He must show what has become of the family property, and if any is alienated, for what purpose and to whom it has been sold, and in fact he must not only state what the family property is but explain what has become of the rest. So where the manager admitted the existence of certain estate, family jewels which were worn by members of the family on special festive occasions, he was held primarily responsible and accountable for them and could not charge the other coparcener with possession of them.[5]

Cl. (5). Contract Debts.

1171. The manager of a joint family, including minor members, is necessarily the guardian of the minor's interest in the joint family; but if he enters into a contract he does so qua guardian of the minor, though he may so describe himself. As such, his contracts stand on a different footing and would be judged by the test of Hindu Law and neither the test of mutuality nor that of benefit to the minor applies to them.[6] As such the manager possesses the power to borrow money for a family purpose in his capacity as manager so as to bind the other members to the extent of their interest in the joint property.[7] But there is no presumption that any loan contracted by a manager in his own name is or has been contracted on behalf of the family[8] or is within his authority[9] or that it is for a family purpose.[10] It is,

---

(1) Parmeshwar v. Gobind, 43 C. 459 (465); Balakrishna v. Muthusami, 35 M. 271 (278); Bhawani Prasad v. Juggernath, 13 C.W.N. 309; Narayan v. Raja Ram, 28 B. 101.

(2) Nowlase v. Lalloee, 22 W.R. 202.

(3) Rungun v. Kassinath, 13 W.R. (F.B.) 76 n.: 3 B.L.R. (O.C.) 1.

(4) Parmeshwar v. Gobind, 43 C. 459 (465).

(5) Venkata v. Bhashyya Karlu, 25 M. 367 (379) P.C.

(6) Hari Charan v. Kaula Rai, 40 I.C. (Pat.) 142 F.B., followed in Dhapo v. Ramchandra, 57 A. 374. Adinarayana v. Venkata, (1937) M. 869.

(7) Chelamayya v. Varadayya, 22 M. 166; Bimala v. Tarasundari, 14 W.R. 480; Aghora Nath v. Girish Chunder, 20 C. 18; Baldeo v. Moburak Ali, 29 C. 583; Haricharan v. Kaulla Rai, 40 I.C. (Pat.) 142 F.B.; Dhapo v. Ramchandra, 57 A. 374.

(8) Sankur v. Goury Pershad, 5 C. 321.

(9) Nagendra v. Ama Chandra, 7 C. W.N. 726; Ganpat Rai v. Munni Lal, 34 A. 135.

(10) Soiru v. Narayan, 18 B. 520; Krishna v. Vasudev, 21 B. 808; Gannat Rai v. Munni Lal, 34 A. 135; Bhura v. Bansrai, (1915) P.W.R. 113; Paras Ram v. Gian Chand, (1919) P.W.R. 48; Ram Dhan v. Ramji, 50 I.C. (L.) 215; Khazana Mal v. Jagannath, 4 L. 200; contra in Brij Lal v. Jaishi Ram, (1915) P.W.R. 106, dissented from.

therefore, on the plaintiff who seeks to bind the other member of the joint family to prove that it is a debt contracted for the benefit, or with their consent or that there was an urgent family necessity therefor.[1]

1172. The question whether junior members of a coparcenary are liable on a promissory note executed by the manager depends upon the character disclosed by him in his note. If he was the manager of a trading family, which traded under a business name, a note by the manager of such business will bind all members of the family, trading under that name.[2] But if the family was not a trading family, then the manager executing a negotiable instrument, like a promissory note, will himself be liable in any case, unless the note shows[3] or the promisee can shew that he had advanced the money on the security of the joint family. In other words, in such a case, the manager has two capacities (a) as a coparcener, and (b) as the manager, and such is also the extent of the liability of the non-disclosed coparceners, and it is in fact in each case whether he had acted in one or the other capacity,[4] and whether it had been executed with the consent, express or implied, previous or post facto, e.g., ratification, in which case they will all be personally liable.[5] But it is said that to make the family liable, its names must appear on the note.[6] Such a course is essential, but its absence does not exonerate the other members, though the latter can then deny the debt or show that it was not incurred or applied so as to bind the family.[7] Even in cases which exclude the possibility of non-disclosed coparceners, it is conceded that the promisee or his assignee may abandon the note and sue the coparcenary on the liability therein secured, in which case, he will have to prove necessity or benefit and recover it as an ordinary debt.[8]

1173. Where the manager contracts a debt, it is open to the creditor to hold him personally liable,[9] or to sue him in his representative capacity,[10] or to sue the whole family as liable to him.[11] Where he elects to sue the

---

(1) Ganpat Rai v. Muni Lal, 34 A. 135; Soiru v. Narayan, 18 B. 520; Krishna v. Vasudev, 21 B. 708; Narayan v. Political Agent, 7 Bom.L.R. 172; Dwaraka Nath v. Bungshi, 9 C.W.N. 879.

(2) Abdul Majid v. Saraswati Bai, (1934) P.C. 1.

(3) Sadasuk v. Kisan Pershad, 46 C. 663 P.C.

(4) Abdul Majid v. Saraswati Bai, (1934) P.C. 1; Siri Kanta v. Sidheswari, 16 Pat. 441; Hari Mohan v. Sourendra Nath, 41 C.L.J. 335: (1925) C. 1153; Sukhadakanta v. Joginikanta, 60 C. 1197; Krishna v. Krishnaswami, 23 M. 597 F.B.

(5) Siri Kant v. Sidheswari, 16 Pat. 441 (451, 452).

(6) Hari Mohan v. Sourendra, (1925) C. 1153; Ram Gopal v. Dhirendra, 54 C. 380 (391); Sita Ram v. Chiman Das, 52 B. 640; Moti Lal v. Punjaji, 29 N.L.R. 312: (1933) N. 160; Jiback Mahto v. Shib Shanker, (1933) Pat. 687; Krishnanand v. Raja Ram, 44 A. 393; Raghunath v. Sri Narain, 45 A. 434; Tikam Chand v. Sudarsan, (1933) Pat. 263; Bhagwan Singh v. Bakshi Ram, (1933) L. 494.

(7) Ram Gopal v. Dhirendra, 54 C. 380; Palukkavandy v. Periakaruppa, 2 I.C. (M.) 203.

(8) Jiback Mahto v. Shib Shanker, (1933) Pat. 687.

(9) Deen Dayal v. Jugdeep Narain, 3 C. 198 P.C.; Jumoona Pershad v. Dignarain, 10 I.C. 7 (8).

(10) Bissessur v. Luchmessuri, 5 C.L.R. 477 P.C.; Deva Singh v. Ram Manohar, 2 A. 746.

(11) Sundar Lal v. Chhitar Mal, 29 A. 1; Dwarka Nath v. Bungshi Chandra, 9 C.W.N. 879; Arumugam v. Sabapathi, 5 M. 12; Subramaniappan v. Subramaniayyan, 5 M. 125; Dasaradhi v. Jodumoni, 5 M. 193; Guruvappa v. Thimma, 10 M. 316; Maruti v. Lilachan, 6 B. 564; Kisansingh v. Moreshwar, 7 B. 91; Babaji v. Dhuri, 9 B. 305; Abilak Roy v. Rubbi, 11 C. 293; Baldeo v. Mobarak Ali, 29 C. 583; Ranjit Singh v. Amullya, 9 C.W.N. 923; Hari Mohan v. Sourendra Nath, 41 C.L.J. 535: 88 I.C. 1025: (1925) C. 1153; Sukhadakanta v. Jogneekania, 60 C. 1197; Ram Ratan v. Lachman Das, 30 A. 460.

manager personally as liable on a contract, he will obtain only a personal decree, in execution of which he is not entitled to bring to sale the right, title and interest of any member except his own judgment-debtor's. If, however, he elects to sue him in his representative character and has obtained a decree in that capacity, he would be entitled to sell the right, title and interest of all or any of the members of the joint family at his discretion.

1174. Lastly, the creditor may implead all members as jointly liable, in which case, a decree might be passed so as to bind them all, should be debt be held recoverable from their estate. The creditor can only choose the first alternative where he has no proof of legal necessity, for in a suit based on the manager's contract, the question of legal necessity would be immaterial and would not affect his liability. It is only when he adopts the second or the third course that he has to adduce proof of the legal necessity or bona fide enquiry. In this respect there is no difference between the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag schools.[1]

1175. There remains the question whether the other coparceners' liability can be enlarged by his subsequent acquiescence. That this is possible has been observed in several cases.[2] The acquiescence of the coparcener is evidence of necessity.[3]

1176. Where the members are liable, their liability would be unlimited and not necessarily limited to their interest in the joint family. This is the necessary consequence of the rule that the manager may acknowledge the liability of the family for the debts which he has properly contracted.[4] The contrary has been held, since the utmost capacity of the manager is to sell the joint estate, he could not by his act bind the coparceners indirectly so as to involve property which he could not have sold directly under any circumstances.[5]

Cl. (5) Alienation for Family Necessity.

1177. Not only is the manager entitled to contract debts, but he is equally entitled to alienate the joint property for family necessity without the consent of the other coparceners. Whether the manager be the father or some other coparcener, his alienation is subject to the following principles:—

(a) The power must be exercised only in case of need.

(b) The matters to be considered are:—

(i) the existence of the pressure,

(ii) the means of adverting it, and

(iii) the benefit to be conferred.

(c) If the lender or purchaser be a party to the mismanagement, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong;

---

(1) Dwarka Nath v. Bungshi Chandra, 9 C.W.N. 879 (882); Sukhadakanta v. Jogineekanta, 60 C. 1197.

(2) Ranjit Singh v. Amullya, 9 C.W.N. 923; Kandasami v. Somaskanta, 7 M.L.J. 165: 5 I.C. 922.

(3) Garibullah v. Khalak Singh, 25 A. 407 (417) P.C.; White v. Risto Chunder Bose, 2 Hay, 557.

(4) Krishna v. Vasudav, 21 B. 808 (815).

(5) Bhaskar v. Vijalal, 17 B. 512; Gosal v. Amarchand, 9 Bom.L.R. 1289 (1292), dissenting from contra in Chalamayya v. Varadayya, 22 M. 166.

(d) Otherwise, the lender or purchaser, unless he acts mala fide, is not affected, though better management might have preserved the estate from debt;

(e) If there is no necessity, the lender or purchaser must have enquired, but—

(f) If he does enquire and acts honestly, the real existence of necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of the transaction, provided the necessity alleged is sufficient and reasonably credited.

(g) The lender or purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the money advanced.[1]

1178. Extent and Limits of his Power.—Apart from the question of necessity, which is the touchstone of all alienators,[2] there remains the question of his discretion within the limits of which the manager may ordinarily alien family property. He is, of course, entitled to dedicate a portion of the joint property with the assent, express or implied, of the other coparceners; but if the property be small, he may dedicate it even without their consent.[3] But he can do so only by an act inter vivos and not by will.[4]

1179. Apart from this, his powers generally are deducible from the leading case of Hanuman Pershad Pandey,[5] in which the Privy Council have laid down the powers and the limits of the manager's authority to alienate or charge a coparcenary estate. These principles have since been enacted as a part of the more general statute which protects a bona fide transferee for value who takes a transfer from the manager after reasonable enquiry into its necessity.[6]

Is the Other Coparceners' Consent Essential?

1180. The question whether the manager has the right to transfer the joint estate or any portion of it in case of necessity on his own authority without consulting his coparceners has been answered in unequivocal terms by the Mitakshara, which states both the rule and an exception to it, the rule being that no man should make a sale or gift of anything without consulting all the sons[7] and the exception being that he may sell or gift it in a season of distress, for the sake of the family and especially for pious purposes.[8] This text was regidly enforced in earlier cases in which the courts were inclined to hold that the manager had no power to alienate the coparcenary property without the express consent of the coparceners. Even the Privy Council were not quite so sure of the correct rule[9] nor were

(1) Hanuman Pershad Pandey v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Ramkrishna v. Ratan Chand, 53 A. 190 P.C.; Chalamayya v. Varadayya, 2 M. 166 (169).

(2) Per Batty, J., in Nathaji v. Sita Ram, 4 Bom.L.R. 587 (591, 592); Kalu v. Barsu, 19 B. 803; Krishnaji v. Sakharam, 3 Bom.L.R. 243; Sheikhchand v. Hiralal, 9 Bom.L.R. 1114; Chinna v. Sada Barka, 12 Bom.L.R. 811; Jagrup v. Ram Sunder, 6 M.L.T. 249; Johurra v. Sree Gopal, 1 C. 470; Sham Narain v. Raghoober, 3 C. 508; Bemala v. Mohun, 5 C. 792; Piare v. Ghasi Ram, (1881) C. P.S.C.Pt. 8 No. 21; Ramlall v. Lakhmi Chand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App.) 51; Trimbak v. Gopalshet, 1 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 27; Tandavaraya v. Valli Ammai, 1 M.H.C.R. 398.

(3) Gangi v. Tammi, 50 M. 421 (425) P.C.

(4) Ib., pp. 435, 426.

(5) Hanuman Pershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393.

(6) S. 38, Transfer of Property Act, for which see 1 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 681-690.

(7) Mit., I-I-27.

(8) Ib., I-I-28, Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 (165) P.C.

(9) Suraj Bansi v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P.C.; citing from Upooroop v. Vandhee, 6 C. 749 (753).

the Indian courts, since there were cases in which the express consent[1] of the coparceners was held essential as also those in which implied consent[2] was held to be sufficient, while there were cases in which the courts seemed to have held neither as absolutely essential.[3] Lastly, there were cases in which the manager's power of alienation without the consent of the coparceners was affirmed.[4]

1181. The state of the law has since been clarified by the later decisions of the Privy Council in which they have upheld the manager's alienation if supported by necessity, in which case, they held that where necessity existed upon an estate it equally rested upon the coparceners as a whole, and it was proper to imply the consent of all of them to that act which such necessity had demanded.[5] In a later case, their Lordships extended this principle equally to the alienation for the benefit of the estate,[6] while as regards the transferee they laid down the principle which accords with the general law as enacted in S. 38 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is true that that section does not directly affect any rule of Hindu Law to the contrary; but the tendency of recent cases is to regard the manager as entitled to transfer the joint estate, either with the consent of the coparceners, or without their consent for legal necessity or benefit of the family. And this appears to be the rule in consonance with the text and the spirit of Hindu Law.

It is said that if the debtor did not borrow money for legal necessity the fact that it was afterwards so applied would not enlarge the liability of other coparceners.[7] But this view appears to be too narrow and unsupported by principles or the precedent quoted for it.

1182. It has already been stated that the term "benefit" includes spiritual benefit (S. 116). The karta is, therefore, entitled to dedicate a portion of the family property for the purpose of religious charity, with the assent, express or implied, of the other coparceners, and if the property be small, he may dedicate it even without their consent, though he can only do so by an act inter vivos and not by will.[8]

1183. The right of the manager to enter into contracts on behalf of the coparcenary is also settled by the Privy Council who said: "The Indian decisions as to the powers of the managing members of an Indian joint family are somewhat conflicting. It is, however, clear that where a business like money-lending has to be carried on in the interest of the family as a whole, the managing members may properly be entrusted with the power of making contracts, giving Clause (6). He can make contracts.

(1) Miller v. Runga Nath, 12 C. 389 (399).

(2) Chhotiram v. Narayan Das, 11 B. 605 (608).

(3) Bishambhar v. Sudasheeb, 1 W.R. 96; Sadabart v. Foolbash, 12 W.R. 1 F. B.

(4) Juggernath v. Doobo, 14 W.R. 80 F.B.; Bunsee Lall v. Achadh, 22 W.R. 552; Phulchand v. Man Singh, 4 A. 309; Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Pershad, 31 A. 176 F.B.

(5) Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 (443) P.C. followed in Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram, 21 C.W.N. 957 P.C.; Karm Chand v. Ram Labhay, 7 L. 476.

(6) Palaniappa v. Sreenath, 40 M. 709 P.C.

(7) Nandan Prasad v. Abdul Aziz, 45 A. 497, following Balwant Singh v. Clancy, 34 A. 296 P.C.; Puttoo Lal v. Raghubir, 9 Luck. 238; Luchman Singh v. Sarnam, 39 A. 500 P.C.

(8) Gangi v. Tammi, 50 M. 421 (425, 426) P.C.

receipts and compromising or discharging claims ordinarily incidental to the business. Without a general power of that sort, it would be impossible for the business to be carried on at all."[1] This power is not affected by the fact that the other coparceners are minors,[2] and in such cases the test to be applied is rather the apparent authority of the manager than the actual necessity of the family.[3]

The entire coparcenery is bound by the manager's contracts, if made within the scope of his authority. But where the contract fails to be binding on the coparcenary, it is within the discretion of the court to grant specific performance in respect only of the manager's share, or award damages.[4] Such discretion would naturally be against specific relief in Bengal, Behar and the United Provinces and the Punjab[5] where a coparcener is not permitted to alien his share even for value. Even in Bengal, the rule of practice may be overborne by the rule of equity; as where a coparcener has contracted to sell a share of the joint property to plaintiff, representing that he had authority to do so, in which case the court would decree specific performance if the share allotted to him would suffice to fulfil the rontract.[6] In a suit for specific performance against a coparcener, other coparceners are not necessary parties, unless there has been, since the contract, a partition and fraudulent design against the alienee.[7]

Pass Receipts.

1184. The power to make contracts necessarily implies the power to discharge it, and the Privy Council have in the case last cited ruled that he has the power to pass receipts as a necessary incident of management. As such, he alone can give discharge so as to bind his minor coparceners within the meaning of S. 7 of the Limitation Act.[8]

Compromise and Refer to Arbitration.

1185. Such are also the powers to compromise claims or refer them to arbitration.[9] So where a person sued the joint family for a share therein, and the father as manager compromised his suit by giving him a share, the court held that in the absence of collusion or fraud, the compromise bound the joint family,[10] and this case was followed in another case in which it was held that it was competent to the father in his capacity of manager to refer to arbitration the partition of the joint family property and the award made on such a reference, would, if in other respects valid, be binding on the sons.[11] The same rule

(1) Kishen Prasad v. Har Narayan Singh, 33 A. 272 (276) P.C.; Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72; Uma Kant v. Martand, (1933) B. 245.

(2) Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72 (87); Dhopo v. Ramchandra, 57 A. 374.

(3) Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72 (86).

(4) Janki Nath v. Jaimini Kanta, 22 I. C. (C). 612; Jadhu Nandan v. Abdul Rahman, 16 C.W.N. 93: 11 I.C. 892, O.A.; Abdul Rahman v. Jadumandan, 18 C.L.J. 344; 21 I.C. 528, citing Lumley v. Ravenscroft, L.R. 1 Q.B. 683.

(5) Seetla Sahai v. Thakur Din, 11 A.L.J. 456: 20 I.C. 247.

(6) Shama Charan v. Kumed Dasi, 27 C.L.J. 611: 42 I.C. 378.

(7) Rungayya v. Subramania, 40 M. 365.

(8) Suptu v. Sakharam, 30 Bom.L.R. 537.

(9) Kishen Prasad v. Har Narayan Singh, 33 A. 272 (276) P.C.; Pitam Singh v. Ujagar Singh, 1 A. 651; Jagannath v. Madulal, 16 A. 231 (233); Ram Dayal v. Moti Ram, 10 N.L.R. 74 (76).

(10) Pitam Singh v. Ujagar Singh, 1 A. 651 (655).

(11) Jaganath v. Madulal, 16 A. 231 (233), followed in Ram Dayal v. Moti Ram, 10 N.L.R. 74 (76); Jagannath v. Kanhialal, 6 I.C. (A.) 123; Pulliah v. Varadarajulu, 31 M. 474 (compromise by reversioner).

applies equally to a manager other than the father; and it is immaterial that some of the members were minors, provided the reference was to their benefit.[1] But, of course, where a reference is made to arbitration during the pendency of the suit to which any party is a minor, then the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to minors must be adhered to. Consequently, where a suit was compromised by the father as the guardian ad litem of his son and the court had not expressly sanctioned it as required by O. XXXII, R. 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no decree passed thereon was held to be of any force against the minor who was entitled to avoid it,[2] though the compromise would be binding upon other parties.

A compromise otherwise good, cannot be impugned by a party on the ground that he had made it under a misapprehension as to his rights[3] since it is of the essence of a compromise that the dispute is settled without examining its merits.[4]

The manager may settle a dispute by the special oath of his adversary administered under the provisions of the Oaths Act.[5]

Cannot Start New Business.

1186. While the manager, as such, is entitled to carry on an ancestral family business, he cannot start a new business. If he wishes to start one, he can only do so with the consent of the adult coparceners.[6] But even then his liability to the minor members remains. If the venture was successful it will stand supported on the ground of "benefit." But if it fails the minors may call upon the manager to bear the losses of his own enterprise if it proved too speculative and hazardous. The question in this and similar cases is not what the manager did; but whether it was justified as a prudent act of management (§ 144.).

Acknowledge Debts Not Barred.

1187. The power of the manager to contract debts carries with it the necessary power to acknowledge them. As such, it has been held that the manager is an agent for the purpose of S. 19 of the Limitation Act, and may, as such, acknowledge debts on behalf of the joint family whether consisting of adult or minor members;[7] and any payment by a manager would be a payment by an agent duly authorized within the meaning of S. 20 of the Limitation Act.[8] But, of course, the manager can only enlarge

(1) Balaji v. Nana, 27 B. 287; Chinna v. Ganga, 9 M.L.T. 34; Romon v. Hurrolal, 19 C. 334; Jai Nath v. Kamala, 7 I.C. (C.) 31.

(2) O. 32, R. 7, C.P.C.; Jamna Bai v. Vasanta, 39 M. 409 P.C.; Ganesh Row v. Tulja Ram, 36 M. 295 P.C.

(3) Venkatagiri v. Subharayadu, 34 I. C. (M.) 491.

(4) Pulliah v. Varadarajulu, 31 M. 474.

(5) Samu v. Swaminatha, 16 M.L.J. 163; 25 I.C. 221, followed in Jijimba v. Saginram, 22 M.L.J. 45: 14 I.C. 374, holding Thimappaya v. Lakshminarayana, 6 M. 284, as no longer good law.

(6) Tammireddi v. Gangireddi, 45 M. 128 (190), following Morrison v. Verschoyle, 6 C.W.N. 429; Abdur Rahman v. Hussain, 37 M.L.J. 316.

(7) See S. 21, Cl. (1), added in Act IX of 1908; Chennayya v. Gurunatham, 5 M. 169 F.B.; Sobhanadri v. Sriramulu, 17 M. 221; Kailasa v. Ponnukannu, 18 M. 456; Subramania v. Arumuga, 26 M. 330; Chidambaram v. Ramaswami, 26 I.C. (M.) 911; Bhasker v. Vijalal, 17 B. 512; Ranmalsinghji v. Vadilal, 20 B. 61; Annapagauda v. Sangadigyapa, 26 B. 221 F.B. (acknowledgment by a certificated guardian); Narendra v. Raicharan, 29 C. 647; Sarada Charan v. Durgaram, 37 C. 461; Har Prasad v. Bakshi, 19 C.W.N. 860: 31 I.C. (C.) 30; Hari Mohan v. Sourendra Nath, 41 C.L.J. 535: 88 I.C. 1025: (1925) C. 1153; Ramcharan v. Gaya Prasad, 30 A. 422 F.B.; (contra in Kumarasami v. Palanayappa, 1 M. 385;) Wajibun v. Kadir Baksh, 13 C. 292; Chhato v. Bilto, 26 C. 53, is no longer good law, in view of the amended section.

(8) S. 21, Cl. (1), added in Act IX of 1908; Sukhamoni v. Ishan Chunder, 25 C.

limitation in respect of debts contracted by him for the joint family. He cannot do so in respect of the debts contracted by the members individually.[1]

Barred Debts.

1188. The manager has, however, no authority to acknowledge, except as against himself, a debt already barred by time.[2] This view is supported by the view that since the manager can only bind the family by his act which is necessary or beneficial to its interest and the acknowledgment of a barred debt cannot be so regarded, his acknowledgment of such a debt is beyond his power.

Father's Barred Debts.

1189. Though the manager, as such, may possess no power to revive a debt by an agreement to repay it after it has become barred by time,[3] such power is possessed by the father when he is the manager as against his sons, who are bound to pay their father's debts, only if they are not illegal or immoral, a liability which does not extend to any other relation beyond the point of necessity and benefit to the family.[4]

Manager can give discharge.

1190. The manager is competent to give a valid discharge, within the meaning of S. 7 of the Limitation Act, of a claim on behalf of himself and his coparceners, whether adults or minors, without the concurrence of the minor members so as to set limitation in motion against them.[5] He is held entitled to consent to an alienation by a coparcener's widow so as to bind his subsequently born son.[6] But he cannot forego a substantial portion of the family debt without cause; if he does so, it does not discharge the debtor, from whom the other coparceners may recover it.[7]

Clause (6).

1191. Manager's Right of Suit.—That the manager may possess the right to represent the family in a suit affecting the joint family has been now conceded by the Privy Council who said: "Is there any principle of law, or any custom applicable to a case like this, according to which the managing member of a Hindu joint family entrusted with the management of a business must be held incompetent to enforce at law the ordinary business contracts they are entitled to make or discharge in their own names. The defendant is, of course, entitled to insist on all the persons with whom he expressly contracted being made parties to the suit."[8]

---

844 (852) P.C.; Sarodacharan v. Durga Ram, 37 C. 461; Ramcharan v. Gaya Prasad, 30 A. 422 F.B.; Chidambaram v. Ramaswami, 26 I.C. (M.) 911.

(1) Narayana v. Venkataramana, 25 M. 220 (234) F.B.

(2) Ib.

(3) Gopal Narain v. Kuddomutty, 14 B.L.R. 21; Chinnaya v. Gurumatham, 5 M. 169 F.B.; Kumara v. Pala, 5 M. 385; Kondappa v. Subba, 13 M. 189; Dinkar v. Appaji, 20 B. 155; Naranji v. Bhagvandas, (1881) B.P.J. 238; Wajibun v. Kadir, 13 C. 292; Indar Singh v. Sarju Singh, 8 A.L.J. 1099; Dalip Singh v. Kundan Lal, 35 A. 207; Sadhu v. Brahmades, 61 I.C. (Pat.) 20 contra in Rama v. Viswanatha, 41 M.L.J. 567 (he has the power).

(4) S. 159 Commen.; Dalip Singh v. Kundan Lal, 35 A. 207.

(5) Surju Prasad v. Khwahish Ali, 4 A. 512; Vigneswara v. Bapayya, 16 M. 436; Sadulla v. Bhana Mal, (1882) P.R. 58; Harihar Pershad v. Bholi Pershad, 6 C.L.J. 383 (393); Banwarilal v. Sheo Shankar, 8 I.C. (C.) 670.

(6) Bhagwan v. Ujagar, (1928) P.C. 20.

(7) Dasratha v. Narasa, 51 M. 484.

(8) Kishen Prasad v. Har Narain, 33 A. 272 (279) P.C.; Sheo Shankar v. Jaddo, 36 A. 363 P.C.; also see 2 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 2680-2684.

And in another case, they said: "There seems to be no doubt upon the Indian decisions (from which their Lordships see no reason to dissent) that there are occasions, including foreclosure actions, when the managers of a joint Hindu family so effectively represent all other members of the family that the family as a whole is bound."[1]

1192. The question then arises: What are these occasions? It appears to be agreed that in respect of all contracts made by the manager he has unquestionably the right to sue by himself, though the contract may have been made by him in his capacity as manager of the joint family. In such a case there is a privity of contract between him and his obligee entitling him to sue. But though this is his right, it is equally the right of the defendant to insist upon the joinder of all persons who are entitled to enforce the contract and the court should then implead them. There is no question of limitation, since the manager alone is competent to act and other members are merely joined ex majore cautela.

1193. But if the defendant does not object, the decree will bind the joint family, and the junior members cannot complain that they were not parties to the suit, since they were sufficiently represented by the manager.[2] But in certain courts, e.g., in Bombay, as a matter of practice, the manager joins all his coparceners in suits affecting the coparcenary,[3] and until recently there was a conflict of opinion as to the power of the manager to maintain a suit in his own name without impleading his coparceners, some courts holding such suits incompetent[4] while others holding them maintaintble.[5] In some cases, the courts seek to distinguish the case of the father and any other manager, holding that while the former may, the latter cannot, bind the family by any decree passed against him[6] but the Privy Council have held that apart from certain textual powers possessed by the father, such distinction has no legal support.[7] Since the manager alone can sue for the joint family debt, no coparcener can maintain a suit to obtain a refund of the money deposited by him to avert an attachment of his coparcenary share,[8] unless, of course, it was his self-acquisition.

1194. Manager De Facto Guardian.—It has already been seen that the manager of a joint family is the de facto guardian of all minor coparceners for the protection of whose interest no guardian can be appointed either under the Guardians and Wards Act,[9] or by the High Court in the Clause (7).

---

(1) Kishan Prasad v. Har Narayan Singh, 33 A. 272 (276, 277) P.C., overruling Alagappa v. Vellianchetti, 18 M. 33 (Form immaterial) Ram Kishan v. Ganga Ram, 12 L. 428.

(2) Sheo Shankar v. Jaddo, 36 A. 383 (386, 387) P.C., affirming O.A. Jaddo v. Sheo Shankar, 33 A. 71; Jogendro v. Fumindro, 14 M.I.A. 367 (376); Bessesur v. Luchmessur Singh, 5 C.L.R. 477 P.C.

(3) Kashi Nath v. Chimnaji, 30 B. 477 (486).

(4) Kuttusheri v. Vallotill, 3 M. 234; Alagappa v. Vellian, 18 M. 33 (36), overruled in Kishan Prasad v. Har Narayan Singh, 33 A. 272 P.C.; Angamuthu v. Kolandavelu, 23 M. 190; Hari Gopal, v. Gokaldas, 12 B. 158; Balkrishna v. Moro, 21 B. 154.

(5) Arunachalla v. Vythialinga, 6 M. 27; Ramayya v. Venkataratnam, 17 M. 122; Girwar v. Makbunessa, 1 Pat.L.J. 468.

(6) Madusudan v. Bhau, 15 Bom.L.R. 36 (40); Laxman v. Vinayak, 40 B. 329.

(7) Suraj Bunsi v. Sheo Persad, 5 C. 148 (165) P.C..

(8) Muthusami v. Angayakannu, 11 M.L.W. 115: 54 I.C. (M.) 807.

(9) Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh, 25 A. 407 P.C.; Virupakshappa v. Nilgan- exercise of its inherent power.[1] The only cases in which the appointment of another guardian is possible have already been considered (§ 863).

In all other cases, the manager of the joint family is the de facto guardian of all minors and is as such entitled to all the rights as he is subject to all the liabilities of a guardian.

[For the manager's separate business, see §§ 1220-1222].

Coparcener's liability for Manager's debts.

133. A Coparcener is liable to the extent of his interest in the coparcenary property for all debts incurred and alienations of the coparcenary property made by the manager:—

(a) where the debt is incurred or the alienation made expressly or impliedly by him as such for legal necessity or benefit as defined in Sections 111-114.[2]

(b) where the creditor or alienee, after reasonable inquiry, in good faith believes that the debt was so incurred or the alienation was so made.[3]

Explanation 1.—If the debt was incurred or the alienation made for legal necessity or benefit, the fact that the transaction had been precipitated by the previous mismanagement of the manager does not affect the creditor or the alienee, unless he was himself a party to such mismanagement.[4]

Explanation 2.—There is no presumption that the debt incurred or the alienation made by the manager was just and proper so as to bind the coparceners.[5]

Explanation 3.—Nothing herein precludes a coparcener from making himself or being made otherwise liable, by his act or omission, conjointly with or apart from the manager.[6]

1195. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by case-law. The power of the manager to contract debts so as to bind the coparceners to the extent of their interest in the coparcenary property is limited, though it may be enlarged by their consent; otherwise his power cannot be exercised except in the case of necessity or for the benefit of the family or of its members. As the Privy Council observed in the leading case which settled the law on the subject: "It (the power) can only be exercised rightly in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. But where, in the particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make, in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the preceding mismanagement of the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the gava, 19 B. 309; Bindaji v. Mothurabai, 30 B. 152; Shamkuar v. Mohanunda, 19 C. 301; Jhabbu Singh v. Ganga Bishan, 17 A. 529.

---

(1) Manilal, (In re), 25 B. 353; Jairam, (In re), 16 B. 634; Jagannath, (In re), 19 B. 96.

(2) Hanooman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393; Lala Amarnath v. Achan Kuar, 14 A. 420 P.C.; Ram Krishna v. Ratan Chand, 53 A. 190 P.C.; Nowrutton v. Baboo Bonree, 6 W.R. 193; Chalamayya v. Varadayya, 22 M. 166.

(3) Ibid.

(4) Hanooman Persaud v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (423); Mahabeer v. Joobha, 16 W.R. 221; Sheoraj v. Nuckchedi, 14 W.R. 72; Sikherchund v. Dulputty, 5 C. 363.

(5) Partab Bahadur v. Chitpal Singh, 19 C. 174 P.C.; Bhura v. Banarsi, (1915) P.L.R. 174; Mela Mal v. Gori, 3 L. 288 (293); Sotan Ram v. Parduman, 8 L. 673.

(6) S. 41, Transfer of Property Act; see 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), 754-765.

particular instance, is the thing to be regarded. Their Lordships think that the lender is bound to enquire into the necessities of the loan, and to satisfy himself as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the manager is acting in the particular instance, for the benefit of the estate. But they think that if he does so enquire, and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged, sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of the charge, and they do not think that under such circumstances he is bound to see to the application of the money."[1]

1196. All these principles are enunciated in the section which, however, applies only to a normal family, and not a trading family, the manager of which possesses necessarily large powers as stated in S. 144. So again, the powers of the manager may be implemented by the act or conduct of one or more of the coparceners who might be bound by it. But these are exceptional cases, and eliminating them for the present, the power of the manager is limited by necessity or benefit (§ 1043). In some cases anything that constitutes a "necessity" would also constitute a "benefit," but it is obvious that the two concepts are different since the discharge of a legal, moral or spiritual obligation may be a pressing necessity though it cannot be described as necessarily beneficial to the family or the estate (S. 116).

Explanation 3.

1197. Personal Liability.—Where a manager professes to act as manager his liability is not personal. But where he makes representations both he[2] and his successor-in-office[3] are bound to make them good or they will be mulcted in damages. But where the manager makes an agreement to purchase immovable property and then dies, his agreement may[4] or may not[5] be specifically enforceable against the surviving coparceners according to whether it was or was not supported by legal necessity. Apart from legal necessity they might be liable under the general law, e.g., Ss. 41 and 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, or under S. 115 of the Evidence Act or under some other principle of law, e.g., S. 73 of the Contract Act[6] or S. 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act. It has accordingly been held that a manager who has agreed to sell immovable property of himself and the minor coparceners becomes personally liable for damages for failure to perform the contract when it is found not binding on the minors. The same liability attaches to the coparceners other than the manager who make or aid in the formation of a contract. Members of a coparcenary cannot retain the benefit and at the same time repudiate the transaction by means of which the benefit has been conferred.[7]

Decree against the father or the manager.

1198. It is now settled that where a father or other manager is sued as a representative of a family, the other members of the family must be held to be substantially parties to the suit through such manager. The fact that they are not parties eo nomine will not render them any the less parties to the suit.[8]

---

(1) Hanooman Persaud Panday v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (423).

(2) Adikesawan v. Gurunath, 40 M. 388 F.B.

(3) Girwar Narain v. Makbunissa, 1 Pat. L.J. 468: 36 I.C. 542.

(4) Bappu v. Annamalai, 44 M.L.J. 226: (1923) M. 313.

(5) Shunmugam v. Subha Reddi, 31 I. C. (M.) 1.

(6) Adikesawan v. Gurunatha, 40 M. 338 (348) F.B.; Nabin Chandra v. Krishna Barana, 38 C. 458; Ranchhod v. Manmohandas, 32 B. 165.

(7) Jado Singh v. Nathu Singh, 48 A. 592.

(8) Venkatanarayana v. Somaraju, (1937) M. 880 (903) F.B.

134. An alienation by the manager of joint property without legal necessity is not void, but only voidable at the instance of the coparceners affected thereby.[1]

Manager's alienation, voidable only.

1199. Analogous Law.—Since the manager represents the joint property and can alienate it with the consent of the other coparceners,[2] it follows that his alienation is ordinarily presumed to be made on behalf of all the coparceners, who may affirm or repudiate it if not otherwise valid,[3] which means that such alienation is not void, but only voidable at the instance of coparceners whose interests are affected thereby.[4] It was so held in a case in which the father had made a gift of some coparcenary property to his wife, constituting her an absolute owner. His only coparcener was his son, who died without challenging it during the father's lifetime. On his death the donee (his mother) mortgaged it to the defendant, whereupon the plaintiffs who were her next reversioners sued for a declaration that the gift was not binding on them after the mortgagor's death, but the court dismissed their suit holding that the mortgagor's title if defective could only have been attacked by the coparcener who died without challenging it. "The interests of the plaintiffs were in no way affected by the deed of gift when it took place. They had no right in the property whatever during the lifetime of either Mahabir (the father, or, his son). It would be giving a great and unwarranted extension of the rights of reversioners as hitherto understood to allow them the right to challenge an alienation under the circumstances found in the present case."[5]

From the fact that the manager's alienation without necessity is voidable and not void, it follows that the coparcener repudiating such alienation becomes entitled to mesne profits only from the date of his repudiation of the alienation and not from the date it was made,[6] and the purchaser's suit for refund of the price paid by him for such sale would be subject to Article 97 of the Limitation Act, the starting point for which is not the date of the decree for his ouster but the date of his actual dispossession.[7]

An improper alienation by one coparcener may be set aside by another, but strictly speaking, this is all he is entitled to;[8] but if his suit is a representative suit, and he impleads or represents the other coparceners, the court may set aside the alienation, subject to such equity as the alienee may be found entitled to.[9]

---

(1) Jagesar v. Deo Dat, 45 A. 654, following Subba Goundan v. Krishnamachari, 45 M. 449; Sankara v. Ummer, 46 M. 449; Sheo Ghulam v. Badri Narain, 11 A.L.J. 798; Madan Lal v. Chidda, 53 A. 21.

(2) Sheo Ghulam v. Badri Narain Lal, 11 A.L.J. 798.

(3) Subramania v. Padmanaba, 19 M. 267; Iburamisa v. Thervenkatasami, 34 M. 269; Subba Goundan v. Krishnamachari, 45 M. 449 (460).

(4) Jagesar v. Deo Dat, 45 A. 654, following Subba Goundan v. Krishnamachari, 45 M. 449; Sankara v. Ummer, 46 M. 449; Sheo Ghulam v. Badri Narain, 11 A.L.J. 798; Madan Lal v. Chidda, 53 A. 21.

(5) Jagesar v. Deo Dat, 45 A. 654 (656).

(6) Subba Goundan v. Krishnamachari, 45 M. 449 (465, 466), dissenting from contra in Kandasami v. Somaskanda, 35 M. 177, following Bhirgu Nath v. Narsingh, 39 A. 61.

(7) Sankara v. Ummer, 46 M. 40, distinguishing Jusouru v. Pirthichand, 46 C. 670 (687) P.C., following Sukmoy v. Shashi Bhushan, 10 I.C. (C.) 486; Meenakshi v. Krishna, 32 I.C. (M.) 176; Ramchander v. Tohfah Bharti, 26 A. 519; Subbaroya v. Rajagopala, 38 M. 887.

(8) Shyam Sunder v. Jaganath, 2 Pat. 925.

(9) Bunwari Lal v. Daya Sunkar, 13 C.W.N. 815; Mahanath v. Barhamdeo, 14 C.W.N. 532, explained in Shyam Sunder v. Jaganath, 2 Pat. 925 (927, 928).

135. Where an alienation is found to be in excess of the requirements of legal necessity or benefit, or in the case of the father's alienation also of an antecedent debt, it may, except as otherwise provided, be set aside or upheld in accordance with the following rules:—

Equity arising on partial necessity.

(a) Where it is justified by all but an inconsiderable part of the consideration, the court may uphold the whole alienation presuming it as so justified, or place the alienee upon term;[1]

(b) Where it is only partially so justified, the alienation will be set aside upon the alienee being reimbursed the consideration found supported by legal necessity or benefit, and the cost of improvements, if any, made by him:

Provided that no person, who is not a bona fide alienee for valuable consideration without notice, can claim such equity to compensation.[2]

(c) But before impeaching a transaction, the court will pay due regard to the lapse of time and all attendant circumstances.[3]

1200. Analogous Law.—This section is now supported by the under noted cases.[4] It is necessarily subject to other provisions. For instance, the reversioner who had consented to the alienation cannot afterwards claim to set it aside. And similarly, where the alienee was a privy to the transfer being made without legal necessity, he cannot claim the equitable relief by way of restitution. If, however, the alienee is a bona fide transferee without notice and the reversioner has not by his consent or acquiescence, encouraged or ratified his transfer, then the rules set out in this section apply. They have no application when the transfer is wholly supported[5] or unsupported by consideration.[6]

1201. But they apply to an excessive sale for necessity, in which case the question whether the sale should be affirmed or its consideration refunded depends upon the excess. The question what failure of consideration, as warranted by necessity, justifies the cancellation of a sale cannot be treated as a matter of arithmetical calculation as several considerations have to be taken into account. One thing is certain that the mere fact that a small faction, say ten, fifteen or twenty per cent. of the consideration is found unsupported by necessity, is not necessarily decisive of the question. On this point, the conflict between Indian cases has now been set at rest by a series of decisions of the Privy Council, affirming the principle embodied in clause (a) of this section. In one of the cases, the Privy Council have reviewed the Indian case-law on the subject.[7] In this case the defendant had purchased a share in a zemindari of Rs. 3,500 of which Rs. 3,000 was found supported by necessity. The Allahad Court had cancelled the sale on payment to the defend-

(1) Girdhari Lal v. Kantoo Lal, 14 B.L.R. 187 P.C.: 6 W.R. 56; Nadai v. Nainar, 27 C.W.N. 365 P.C.: 74 I.C. 604; Sri Krishna v. Nathu Ram, 49 A. 149 P.C., overruling Dwarka Ram v. Jhulai Pande, 45 A. 429; Daulat v. Sankatha Prasad, 47 A. 355; Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal, 8 L. 597 P.C.; V. E. A. E. M. Firm v. Mg. Ba, (1927) P.C. 237; Suraj Bhan Singh v. Shah Chain Sukh, 53 M.L.J. 300 P.C.: 32 C.W.N. 117; Ulfat Rai v. Tej Narayan, 8 L. 362; Durgaprasad v. Jewdhari, 62 C. 733.

(2) Deputy Commissioner v. Khanjan Singh, 29 A. 331 (338) P.C. See S. 51, Transfer of Property Act.

(3) § 1578.

(4) Vide f.n. (1) to (3).

(5) Raghubar v. Akhtar, 6 A.L.J. 366.

(6) Vijbhukhan v. Dayaram, 32 B. 32; Janki v. Madhu, 9 Bom. L.R. 710; Hari v. Bajrang, 13 C.W.N. 544: 11 I.C. 434.

(7) Sri Krishna Das v. Nathu, 49 A. 149 (161) P.C.

ant of Rs. 3,000 within 6 months. The defendant appealed to the Privy Council, who reversed the order of the High Court, holding that the sale was for an adequate consideration. In so holding their Lordships followed an earlier decision of their Board in which a Hindu widow had sold property for Rs. 5,300 in order to pay off only Rs. 4,588 due on two mortgages executed by her husband.[1] In other cases their Lordships upheld sales for Rs. 43,500 and Rs. 20,000, to satisfy pre-existing debts for the amount of Rs. 38,000[2] and Rs. 17,000 respectively.[3] They, however, set aside the sale where the widow had sold her heritage for Rs. 7,080 due under a decree and interest thereon and for a first advance of Rs. 7,280 of which there was no proof of either payment or necessity. In cancelling the sale their Lordships ordered the refund of Rs. 7,080 which alone was found paid for necessity.[4] In another case, they set aside a sale by a dissipated and extravagant manager, worth Rs. 1,10,000, for only Rs. 84,257, in addition to which the purchaser paid the vendor a sum of Rs. 25,000. The High Court upheld the sale, but the Privy Council held that the High Court had no power to make a fresh contract for the parties and set aside the sale ordering refund of Rs. 85,000 with 9% simple interest.[5] Of course, in considering this question the court cannot overlook the fact that it would be manifestly impossible and possibly prejudicial to the interest of the estate if the manager were to be held bound, in every instance, to sell property for exactly the sum required for necessity. So where the widow permanently leased a tank for a premium of Rs. 174, reserving the annual rent of 8 annas only to pay off the debt of Rs. 100 the court upheld the lease holding it as supported by necessity.[6] Even where the necessity did not exceed Rs. 7,775, the court upheld the sale of a house for Rs. 19,500 on the ground that it was not saleable piecemeal.[7] Again, proof that the bulk of the consideration was supported by legal necessity may be evidence that the remainder was also presumably so supported. A mere failure to prove any part of the consideration as supported by necessity, is not necessarily tantamount to proof that it was unsupported by it.[8]

1202. Alienation for Partial Necessity.—Where, however, an alienation is found to be not justified by substantial necessity as already indicated the relief to be awarded to the party would depend upon the question of necessity and the equity to which the alienee may be entitled. The several questions which enter into the consideration of this question are (a) the nature of the alienation made,[9] (b) time, (c) the sex and the status of the alienor, (d) the nature of necessity, (e) the enquiries made by

(1) Medai v. Nainar, 27 C.W.N. 365 P.C.: 74 I.C. 604.

(2) Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal, 8 L. 597 P.C.

(3) V. E. A. E. M. Firm v. Mg. Ba, (1927) P.C. 237; Suraj Bhan Singh v. Shah Chain Sukh, 53 M.L.J. 300 P.C., (consideration Rs. 19,000, legal necessity Rs. 17,378).

(4) Deputy Commissioner v. Khanjan Singh, 29 A. 331 (338) P.C.; Jai Singh v. Darbara Singh, 6 L. 137 (three-fourths supported by legal necessity and transfer challenged after twenty years); Durga Prasad v. Jewdhari, 62 C. 733.

(5) Nagappa v. Brahadambal, 58 M. 350 P.C.

(6) Felaram v. Pragalanand, 14 C.W.N. 895: 6 I.C. 207.

(7) Balkrishna v. Hiralal, 41 A. 338; Gokharam v. Sham Lal, 3 L. 426; following Chatranarayan v. Uma Kunwari, 1 B.L.R. 201; Felaram v. Pragalanand, 6 I.C. (L.) 207; Namankal v. Har Bhagwan, 2 L. 357; Kannu v. Amrithammal, 26 I.C. (M.) 418.

(8) Jai Singh v. Darbara Singh, 6 L. 137 (three-fourths supported by legal necessity and transfer challenged after 20 years); Durgaprasad v. Jewdhari, 62 C. 733.

(9) Jai Indra v. Khairati Lal, 4 Luck. 107; Dwarka Ram v. Bakshi, 14 the alienee, (f) the price paid, and (g) the improvements, if any, made by him.

Case for Terms.

1203. A case for terms may arise under S. 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, to which reference must be made for further information.[1] It may also arise where the alienee, whether a purchaser or not, has advanced money which, though supported by necessity, has been alienated for a grossly inadequate consideration, or the transaction cannot be upheld or set aside without awarding compensation. The cases on the point present infinite variety, and though they cannot all be reduced to a principle, they are nevertheless, all intended to thwart transparent injustice.

1204. No Mesne Profits.—Where the alienation is partially supported by legal necessity, the alienee cannot be held to be wrongfully in possession, and consequently, he cannot be mulcted in mesne profits,[2] and in any case, even if allowed, the court should set them off against interest on the outlay to which the alienee, on his transfer, is entitled. The latter is equally entitled to a claim of reasonable compensation for improvements of the property which enhance its value.[3]

As to proof of legal necessity see S. 150.

Manager's customary gifts.

136. The manager is entitled to make such gifts or presents either to the members of the family or strangers as are usual or customary;[4]

(2) And the father,[5] and in his absence, the mother[6] has in this respect even a larger discretion, being entitled to make it at any time to a reasonable extent.[7]

1205. Analogous Law.—This section is supported by the following texts:—

Brihaspati.—"Even a single individual may include a donation, mortgage or sale of immovable property during a season of distress for the sake of the family and especially for pious purposes."

Mitakshara.—"Therefore, it is a settled point that property in the paternal or ancestral estate is by birth; although the father have independent power in the disposal of effects other than immovables for indispensable acts of duty, and for purposes prescribed by texts of law, as gifts through affection, support of the family, relief from distress, and so forth, he is subject to the control of the sons and the rest in regard to the immovable estate whether acquired by himself or inherited from his father or other predecessor."[8]

"The meaning of this text is this: While the sons and grandsons are minors and incapable of giving their consent to a gift or the like; or while brothers are so and continue unseparated, even one person who is capable may conclude a gift, hypothecation or sale, of immovable property if a calamity affecting the whole family require it or the support of the family render it necessary, or indispensable duties, such as the obsequies of the father or the like make it unavoidable."[9]

Viramitroday.—"Gifts by the parents out of favour of affection should be guided by propriety but not by caprice."[10]

Pat. 595 (609) (a mortgage may be justified, though not a sale) Distg. Hitendra v. Sukhdev, 8 Pat. 558.

(1) See 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (6th Ed.), §§ 891-914.

(2) Banwari Lal v. Mahesh, 41 A. 61 (68) P.C.

(3) Bhagwat Dayal v. Ram Ratan, 20 A.L.J. 26 P.C.: 65 I.C. 69 P.C.

(4) Mit., I-I-27, 28, 29.

(5) Bacho v. Mankorabai, 31 B. 373 P. C.; Ramalinga v. Narayana, 45 M. 489 P.C.; Sundararamayya v. Sitamma, 35 M. 459.

(6) Churaman v. Gopi, 37 C. 1.

(7) Bachoo v. Mankorebai, 31 B. 373 P.C.; Ramalinga v. Narayana, 45 M. 489 (495) P.C.

(8) Brihaspati, cited in Ratnakar and Mitakshara, I-I-28.

(9) Mit., I-I-27, 28, 29; Mayukh, IV-VII, §§ 11-13.

(10) Ch. VII, S. 5.

Clause (1).

1206. Manager's Gift.—The manager's power to make a gift is necessarily limited and circumscribed by the requirements of religious or customary necessity. Though he has the power to make ordinary gifts or presents on suitable occasions either to the members of the family or to strangers, this power must be confined to such occasions as are usual and to such presents as are customary.[1] For example, though a gift may be justified, if made at the time of the marriage, the same gift cannot be upheld if its making is deferred for so long a time as to suggest that it was merely an excuse.[2] No gift can be made unless it is justified by necessity or the performance of any pious duty obligatory on the family or its coparceners. If it is so justified, the fact that the members were minors, or that it was made without their consent, or in spite of their objection,[3] would be no ground for invalidating it.[4] But, of course, the gift must be commensurate with the object and purpose of the gift and the means of the family. So where the father as head of the joint family owning property worth about ten to fifteen lakhs made a gift of Rs. 20,000 to his only daughter out of the income of the property as her marriage dowry two years after the marriage, Tyabji, J., disallowed it on the ground that it should have been made at the time of the marriage, but on appeal, it was held that as the gift was comparatively small and made out of the income, it should be upheld as a parential gift made through affection, such a gift being allowed by the texts, and this view was upheld by the Privy Council.[5]

But no coparcener is bound to submit to a gift made for an illegal purpose, as where the father gave Rs. 8,000 to the mother of the adopted boy to induce her consent to his adoption.[6] Nor can the manager (even though he be the father) make a will in respect of any part of joint property.[7]

Clause (2).

1207. Parent's Gift.—The father, as the senior head of the family, possesses larger powers of gift than any other manager. He is entitled to make "gifts through affection" to his children, or to the son-in-law[8] and where such gifts are inconsiderable, or reasonable in the circumstances of the case,[9] the courts uphold them even though they might consist of ancestral immovable property. On this ground gifts of land made to the daughter[10] or the son-in-law on the occasion of the daughter's marriage, by the father[11] or the mother[12] have been upheld as in consonance with the spirit of Hindu Law. In one of these cases it was argued that the gift of land was opposed

(1) Bachoo v. Kushaldas, 4 Bom. L. R. 883 (890), reversed O.A. Bachoo v. Mankorebai, 29 B. 51, affirmed O.A. 31 B. 373 P.C.

(2) Ganga v. Prithi Pal, 2 A. 635 (638); Bachoo v. Kushaldas, 4 Bom. L. R. 883 (889, 890); Perumal v. Ramalinga, 3 M.H.C.R. 76 (81) (gift made five years after the marriage).

(3) Imperial Bank v. Maya Devi, 16 L. 714.

(4) Kalu v. Barsu, 15 B. 803; Imperial Bank v. Maya Devi, 16 L. 714.

(5) Bachoo v. Kushaldas, 4 Bom. L. R. 883, reversed O.A. Bachoo v. Mankorebai, 29 B. 51 affirmed O.A. 31 B. 373 (380) P.C.

(6) Sita Ram v. Harihar, 35 B. 169.

(7) Lalta Prasad v. Mahadea, 42 A. 461.

(8) Ramasami v. Vengidusami, 22 M. 113; Sundram v. Krishnasami, 28 I.C. 992.

(9) Ramalinga v. Narayana, 45 M. 489 (495) P.C.

(10) Ramalinga v. Narayana, 45 M. 489 (494, 495) P.C., (in which a gift to the daughter worth Rs. 8,000 was upheld but its proportion to the entire estate is not stated); Haridas v. Devkuarbai, 50 B. 443; contra Junnappa v. Chimmava, 59 B. 459.

(11) Sundararamayya v. Sitamma, 35 M. 628, approved in Ramalinga v. Narayana, 45 M. 489 (491) P.C.; Kudatamma v. Narasimha, 17 M.L.J. 528.

(12) Churaman v. Gopi, 37 C. 1.

to the express texts, to which the court replied: "When the necessity of the gift is recognized, it seems unreasonable in these days to make its validity depend upon the nature of the property, upon the question whether it is movable or immovable."[1] This case was followed in another case in which the court upheld the father's alienation not only upon the ground that it was reasonable but further on the ground that as the daughter was living with her father in old age taking care of him, it was an alienation supported by consideration.[2] But there is no such consideration necessary to uphold the father's gift, since both the father and the manager unquestionably possess the right of making a gift of moveable[3] or immovable property within reasonable limits to the daughter or other near female members of the family.

1208. A gift by a father, of all his interest in the family property, in favour of his only son, being supported by natural love and affection, may be upheld as a relinquishment which may be effective, though it may not be in favour of all coparceners. It need not, of course, be supported by any consideration.[4] he gift of family property with the consent of the then existing coparceners, of course, stands on an altogether different footing. So where the undivided parternal grandfather of a minor gave a portion of the family property (about 30 per cent. in value of the whole) to his third wife and daughters with the consent of his grandson's widowed mother, the court held the gift binding on the grandson, adding: "It is clear that it was open to the grandfather if he had chosen and without any one's consent, to effect a partition and leave the whole of his half share to his third wife and her daughters, and it was, in our opinion, clearly for the benefit of the minor and his guardian to avoid an eventuality so injurious to his interests by consenting to the alienation effected by Exhibit I."[5]

Gifts by other Coparceners.

1209. Gifts to female relations on the occasion of their marriage are supported even when made by a coparcener other than the father. Such was the case of a gift made by the brother to his sister who had been married during the lifetime of the father who gave her or her husband no property at the time of marriage. The father had made no promise of any gift. It was held however, that there was a strong moral obligation on the father to make a gift out of the joint family property on the occasion of the marriage either to the daughter or son-in-law as a provision for them, and the gift which in the circumstances of the case was an eminently reasonable one, was not in excess of the power of the brother, though he was not even the managing member at the time of the marriage.[6]

1210. Gift or Maintenance.—Though the section deals with religious and ceremonious gifts, it would not be amiss to mention that the manager may equally transfer a small portion of the joint estate for the mainten-

(1) Sundararamayya v. Sitamma, 35 M. 628 (630); Narayana v. Ramalinga, 39 M. 587 (591); contra in Kamakshi v. Chakrapany, 30 M. 452.

(2) Narayana v. Ramalinga, 39 M. 587 (590, 591), affirmed O.A. 45 M. 489 P.C.; Kilambi v. Tirumala, 5 M.L.T. 40: 4 I.C. 1094.

(3) Ramalinga v. Narayana, 45 M. 489 P.C.

(4) Thangavelu v. Doraisami, 27 M.L.J. 272: 26 I.C. 211.

(5) Arunachala v. Sumpurnathachi, 27 M.L.J. 485, followed in Patra v. Srinivasa, 40 M. 1122 (1126).

(6) Mit., I-VII-6-14, cited and followed in Ramaswami v. Venguduswami, 22 M. 213; Kudatamma v. Narasimha, 17 M. L.T. 528; followed in Sundararamayya v. Sitamma, 35 M. 628 (630); Churaman v. Gopi, 37 C. 1; Kilambi v. Tirumala, 5 M.L.T. 40: 4 I.C. 1094.

ance and marriage of a female relation. So where the manager transferred land measuring 3.22 acres of land valued at Rs. 1,000 to his step-sister for her maintenance and marriage and it was contended that such an alienation was beyond the capacity of the manager, the court overruled the contention holding that it was within the competence of the manager to transfer by an outright gift a small portion of the family property by way of a provision for maintenance.[1]

1211. Gift to Charity.—Hindu Law commends the making of gifts "for pious purposes,"[2] and where such gifts are customary, they will be upheld. So the court upheld the gift of a small piece of land on the occasion of the father's funeral.[3] It was held that such gift being in the nature of a dedication did not require to be made by a registered deed, nor was it necessary that it should be made to a definite donee, real or ideal, since its object is to benefit the public in whom the spirit of God reposes.[4]

1212. Quantum of Gift.—Though Hindu Law allows religious and charitable gifts, it also takes care to prescribe that the giver must be just to his people while he is generous to the donee.

As a matter of fact, the gift the court allows, must be small and reasonable and it must not cripple the coparcenary estate. In a Calcutta case, the court upheld the gift of about a third of the father's estate by his widow to her daughter on the occasion of her gowna ceremony.[5] But this is probably an extreme limit. Ordinarily, such gifts relate to much smaller properties. The question cannot be reduced to a set formula as it must necessarily depend on the nature and extent of the corpus; the nature and extent of the gift, and whether it is made out of the corpus or only out of the current income. Where it is made out of the income, it is strong ground for upholding it. But even where it is carved out of the corpus, the court will only uphold it, if due regard being had to all the circumstances of the family, it is not unreasonable. So the court in one case upheld a grant of 3.22 acres of land valued at Rs. 1000 out of 22 acres of the family lands and no debts[6] in the circumstances already stated. In another case the managing father had increased the family estate out of his own acquisitions valued at Rs. 17,000 and a business which yielded Rs. 2,000 annually. Finding great difficulty in getting his daughters married, he negotiated for the marriage of one of them to his sister's son and conveyed to his daughter and his sister two shops and a house worth Rs. 1,500. The court upheld the gift as inconsiderable in view of his own additions to the family estate and the necessity which promoted the gift.[7]

1213. In another case the court upheld the gift of 8 acres of ancestral land to the daughter after her marriage, out of 200 acres possessed by the family,[8] while the manager's gift of a tenth of the family lands to the daughter of a coparcener was upheld by the same court as binding

---

(1) Seeni v. Angamuthu, (1912) 1 M. W.N. 99: 13 I.C. 802; Seethaiah v. Mutyalu, (1931) M. 106 (Gift to the brother's widow.)

(2) Mit., I-I § 28.

(3) Pallayya v. Ramavadhanulu, 13 M. L.J. 364; Ramalinga v. Sivachidambara, 42 M. 440 (445); Tammireddy v. Gangireddy, 45 M. 281; Narasimha v. Venkatalingum, 50 M. 687 F.B.

(4) Ibid., p. 448.

(5) Churaman v. Gopi, 37 C. 12.

(6) Seeni v. Angamuthu, 13 I.C. (M.) 802.

(7) Sabapathy v. Ponnusamy, 28 I.C. 365.

(8) Sundararamayya v. Sitamma, 35 M. 628, followed in Patra v. Srinivasa, 40 M. 1122 (1126); Subba Naicker, (In re), 2 M.L.W. 754: 30 I.C. 781.

upon all the coparceners. It was contended that the gift was unduly large and that, however justifiable when made by the father, it could not be made by any other manager, but the court overruled both contentions.[1]

1214. Where Gift Set Aside.—It must be remembered that the manager's power to make customary gifts is a curtailment of the coparcenary rights which is only tolerated because such gifts besides being usual and customary, are inconsiderable. The manager cannot in the guise of such a gift transfer a considerable portion of the joint estate to his wife and daughters. Such a transfer would be a serious encroachment on the rights of other coparceners and an abuse of power which may be impeached by any coparceners.[2] Such was the gift by the two brothers of their land to the plantiff as worshipper of the god "Sri Satguru" which the court set aside in its entirety because the gift was invalid and unsupported by the purpose for which joint family property may be alienated, and as to the alienors, they were incompetent to alienate their shares without consideration.[3]

Of course, a gift of immovable property must be made in writing registered in conformity with the requirements of S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act; otherwise, it might be set aside as invalid in law.[4]

Manager's fraud.

137. No manager can exercise his power in fraud of the co-parceners.[5]

1215. Analogous Law.—This principle is deducible from the texts already cited (§ 1205). Even the father cannot defraud his son under the mask of a pious gift to an idol.[6]

(1) Subba Naicker, (In re), 2 M.L.W. 754: 30 I.C. 78.
(2) Kamakshi v. Chakrapany, 30 M. 452; Chinnaya v. Collector, 8 M.L.T. 290.
(3) Kalu v. Barsu, 19 B. 803.
(4) Ibid.
(5) Raghunath v. Govind, 8 A. 76.
(6) Ibid.

CHAPTER IX.

(THE TRADING JOINT FAMILY.)

138. (1) Where a joint Hindu family carries on an ancestral trade, it becomes a trading family and is then governed—not by the rules of co-parcenership, but by the co-parcenary rules as modified by the incidents and exigencies of trade.[1]

Ancestral Trading family.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, such incidents are as follows:—

(a) An ancestral family trade devolves upon members of a joint undivided family[2] and the partnership is not dissolved by the death of any of the members, nor can any one of the partners, when severing his connection with the business, demand an account of past profits and losses:[3]

(b) Any member may be appointed the accredited manager and agent of the firm;[4]

(c) Such manager or agent may carry on the trading business of the firm;

(d) And for that purpose, he may pledge the credit of the joint family;[5]

(e) He is not accountable to them for past profits and losses;[6]

(f) He is entitled to contract debts and alienate property so as to bind the other members in the circumstances and to the extent provided in section 140.[7]

1216. Analogous Law.—A joint Hindu family, carrying on an ancestral trade may be regarded as a trading firm, and as such, is subject to the ordinary law of partnership, or it may still continue to possess all the rights and incidents of a joint Hindu family. It may again be that such a family may carry on its trading business in partnership with a stranger, or that only some of its members might with capital, which is not family property, embark upon such an enterprise on their own account, or in partnership with others. But it is clear that in such cases, the rules of

---

(1) Vedilal v. Shah Kushal, 27 B. 157 (160); Gangayya v. Venkatarayaliah, 41 M. 454.
(2) Sacrabai v. Maganlal, 26 B. 206 (218) F.B. citing Mit.
(3) Ganpat v. Annaji, 23 B. 144.
(4) Ramsebuk v. Ramlal, 6 C. 815.
(5) Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72.
(6) Ganpat v. Annaji, 23 B. 144.
(7) Ramlal v. Lakshichand, 1 B.H.C. R. (App). 51.

joint family cannot apply to the exclusion of the law of partnership.[1] It is only when the family as a whole or through any of its members, continues an ancestral trade out of its joint family funds, that it is subject to the law of joint family, necessarily accommodated to that of partnership.[2]

If the law were otherwise, the birth of a son[3] or the death of any member of the family[4] would have had the effect of dissolving the partnership, and if it was to continue, it could only be by a fresh agreement made each time that there was a birth or death in the family.

1217. But the very contrary is expressly laid down in the Mitakshara as applicable to trading partnerships:

Clause (a). "When one of those who trade in partnership goes abroad and dies, then his share shall be taken by his descendents, such as sons, etc., bhandhus and sapindas, and in default of them, all by the King."[5] Then again, while partners as such are mutually accountable to one another for past profits and losses[6] partners under the rule are not so accountable.[7] Under the Hindu Law, a joint family which carries on its trade handed down from its ancestors, becomes a trading family, trade being one of its kulachars or family practice, which attracts to itself all the necessary incidents of trade,[8] without which the trade may not be able to continue. It is indeed evident that a trading business must enter into many transactions, purchase and sell property and borrow money which cannot all conform to the narrower rules applicable to the management of a joint family. They cannot possess all the facilities of a trader and yet be not subject to the rules which make those facilities possible. They cannot be permitted to contract with the outside public in the course of that trade and then refer to their personal laws for evading their liabilities. Where, therefore, a minor was the sole survivor of such partnership, his guardian is entitled to carry on an ancestral trade on behalf of the minor who will be bound by all acts of the guardian necessarily incidental to or flowing out of the carrying on of the trade.[9] So while in the case of a normal family, the managing member can only contract debts for the necessity or benefit of the joint family and the creditor is bound to enquire into the purpose of the loan,[10] no such limit can be placed on the borrowing power of the managing member of a family trade, and the rule is, that he possesses an implied authority to contract debts for its purpose and the creditor is not bound to enquire into the

---

(1) Vedilal v. Shah Kushlal, 27 B. 157 (160); Sawammal v. Punnammal, 2 S.L.R. 13; Rupchand v. Basanta, (1889) P.R. 102; Honda Ram v. Desu Ram, (1888) P.R. 162; Ram Prasad v. Rattan Chand, 10 P.L.R. 321.

(2) Ramanatham v. Yegappa, 30 M.L. J. 241: 32 I.C. 427; Gangayya v. Venkatarayaliah, 41 M. 454.

(3) Cf. S. 31, Partnership Act (IX of 1932).

(4) S. 42 (c), Partnership Act (IX of 1932).

(5) Mit. cited in Sakrabai v. Manganlal, 26 B. 206 (218) F.B. This fact was overlooked in Latchmanen v. Sivaprakasa, 26 C. 349 (354) which was, moreover, decided on the question whether an infant member should not join as a co-plaintiff; Narain Das v. Ralli Bros., (1915) P.R. 61: 31 I.C. 45.

(6) S. 13 (b), Partnership Act (IX of 1932).

(7) Ganpat v. Annaji, 23 B. 144.

(8) Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72.

(9) Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72 (79); Ram Partab v. Foolibai, 22 B. 767 (778); Ramlal v. Lakmichand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App.) 51; Jaykisto v. Nittyanund, 3 C. 738.

(10) Humooman Pershad v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 398; distinguished in Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72 (75, 76).

purpose of the debt in order to bind the whole family thereby, because that power is incidental to and is necessary for, the very existence of the family trade.

1218. Where any coparcener is a minor the ordinary rule is that his share in the family property is liable for debts contracted by his managing coparcener for any family purpose or any purpose incidental to it. If the family is a trading firm, that rule is varied and his share becomes liable for debts incurred for trading purposes and any purpose incidental to it. Consequently, where the manager drew hundis in the name of his firm without the knowledge of other members of the firm and without any advantage to the firm, it was held that the drawee and his endorsee were entitled to hold the firm liable and bind its minor member's share without proof of any necessity or benefit to the minor.[1] Persons dealing with the manager of a trading firm are not affected by his dishonesty and the fact that the coparcener affected is a minor, is immaterial.[2]

1219. It is not even necessary that the junior member should be impleaded in the suit,[3] but of course, a suit on behalf of the firm must be instituted by or against its manager. Any other member cannot sue without impleading all the members.[4] In the ordinary joint family, the father, and in his absence, the senior member is the manager. But in a trading partnership, this is unnecessary, since the family may authorize any one of its members to act as their agent in any business transaction, subject to the same rule that when a joint family or any members of it carry on trade in partnership and contract with the outside public in the course of that trade, they have no greater privileges than any other traders. If they are really partners, they must be bound by the same rules for enforcing their contracts in courts of law as the members of any other partnership.[5]

These general principles may now be examined and illustrated in detail.

1220. Ancestral and new trade.—It has been held in Madras that, since the father is an "ancestor" of his son, trade started by him becomes an ancestral trade in the hands of the son.[6] A trade may be "ancestral", though it may have ceased for a time and restarted under a different name and in partnership with a stranger, and speculative business added.[7]

---

(1) Bank of Bombay v. Raghunathji, 10 Bom. L.R. 668, affirmed O.A. Raganathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72 (81); Ramlal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App.) 51 (61, 62); Johurra v. Sri Gopal, 1 C. 470; Joykisto v. Nittyanund, 3 C. 738; Bemola v. Mohun, 5 C. 792; Ramsebuk v. Ramlal, 6 C. 815; Sheoprasad v. Saheblal, 20 C. 453; Luchmanen v. Siva Prakasa, 26 B. 349; Morrison v. Verchoyel, 6 C.W.N. 429; Pulukkavandey v. Periyakaruppa, 2 I.C. (M.) 203; Sankakrishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma, 21 M. L.J. 620: 11 I.C. 79.

(2) Mulchand v. Sadhu Singh, (1893) P.R. 59.

(3) Lutchmanen v. Sivaprakasa, 26 C. 349; Shamrathi v. Kishanpershad, 29 A. 311; contra in Damodhardass v. Vishendass, 4 S.L.R. 2: 7 I.C. 584.

(4) Jugal Kishore v. Tudasi Ram, 8 A. 264.

(5) Ramsebuk v. Ramlal, 6 C. 815 (826, 827). But taken as a statement of law as to the necessity of impleading all partners, this case is superseded by Order XXX, C.P.C.

(6) Venkatasami v. Palaniappa, 52 M. 227 (231); contra Motisahu v. Dwarka, 150 I.C. (Pat.) 881; Jagdishprasad v. Ambashankar, (1934) B. 324 (alienation supported as for an antecedent debt.)

(7) Sri Thakur Ramkrishna v. Ratanchand, 53 A. 190 (201) P.C.; Damodaran v. Bansilal, 51 M. 711 P.C.

The manager, and indeed, any member of a coparcenary may start a new business either in partnership with another coparcener, or an outsider, in which case the business so started will be his own and subject to the general law of partnership, and not a joint family business, much less an ancient business, unless such business was financed by the family funds or sustained by the family credit. The question whether a business is ancient or joint or an ordinary partnership is then a question of fact which must be determined on the facts of each case. In the case of Vaishya families, whose caste is in itself an index of their vocation, little or no evidence would be probably needed to show that the family is a trader by profession and its trade ancestral. But in other cases evidence is necessary.

1221. A family carrying on an ancient trade need not necessarily carry on the same trade, since a trading family is nonetheless a trading family, even though it may have changed its trade and may have changed it from time to time. The essence of the question lies in that it is a family which has trade as one of its occupations not necessarily its sole occupation. If the ostensible partner be the manager, the other coparceners are as to the stranger partners in the position of strangers and cannot call for dissolution of the partnership or the taking of partnership accounts, since there is no contract or priority between them, even though the entire assets of the joint family might be available to the creditors of the firm. "The managing member of an undivided family though he has the power of representing the interests of the other members is not their agent in the strict sense of the term so as to clothe the other members of the family with all the rights of principals in respect of contracts entered into by their agent."[1] But as to the manager they are like sub-partners, and the manager is as to them in the position of a trustee.[2]

1222. The manager of a joint family is not bound to expend all his energies in the management of the joint property; like any other coparcener he is free to start a trade on his own account, whether alone or in partnership with another, whether a coparcener or a stranger, and so long as he does not use the family funds or credit for that purpose, he is not accountable to it for his profit so made, as indeed, the family is not liable.[3] But upon his insolvency, if he is the father, not only his own share but that of his son whether, major or minor, will pass to the Official Assignee or the Receiver, as the case may be,[4] though the Assignee or the Receiver is in no better position than the father regarding the sale of the son's interest.[5]

Female Manager.

1223. While the right of a woman, who has inherited as a limited owner the estate of the deceased male owner, to continue the trade, whether his ancestral or

---

(1) Gangayya v. Venkataramiah, 41 M. 454 (456); Sokkanadha v. Sokkanadha, 28 M. 344; Ramanathan v. Yegappa, 32 I.C. (M.) 427; Vedilal v. Shah Khushal, 27 B. 157; Kharidar v. Daya Kishan, 43 A. 116; Gokalchand v. Hukam Chand, 2 L. 40 (49) P.C.

(2) Annamalai v. Murugesa, 26 M. 554 (553) P.C.

(3) Kharidar v. Dayakishan, 43 A. 116.

(4) Official Receiver v. Ramachandrappa, 52 M. 246; Official Receiver v. Chaiman Lal, (1930) L. 645.

(5) Sat Narain v. Beharilal, 6 L. 1 (22) P.C.; Gopalkrishnayya v. Gopalan, 51 M. 342; Official Assignee v. Ramchandra, Ib., 417; Official Receiver v. Ramchandrappa, 52 M. 246; Sankaran v. Narasimhulu, 50 M. 135; Om Prakash v. Moti Ram, 48 A. 400 (contra Allahabad Bank v. Bhagwandas, ib., 343, submitted unsound); Sitaram v. Beniprasad, 47 A. 263; Bhawani v. Om Chiena, 44 A. 316.

one started by him, is undoubted, her sex and the condition of her perpetual dependence preclude her from starting a new trade or even continuing an old one, if it involves personal attention, which she is unable to give or risks which her estate is unable to bear, since if she mismanages the business, the reversioner may restrain her for waste and may even dispossess her. But within these limits she is entitled to continue the business which she has inherited and may acquire and dispose of property which she has acquired in the ordinary course of business.[1] Of course, as the income from such estate is her own she is free to invest it in a business of her own, provided she does not blend the two estates or their income or offer security of one to finance the other. But this apart, as she is generally entitled to alienate her heritage for "necessity"; any alienation made and moneys borrowed would have to be put to the touchstone of trade necessity, and any such debts, left unpaid by her, will on her death be payable by the reversioner even though they be uncharged on the estate.[2] But in such case, the onus is on the transferee or the creditor to show that the alienation of the inherited estate was justified by prudence and the debt was such as any prudent business man might have incurred, failing which he must prove bona fide inquiry as he is required to do when dealing with a limited owner.[3]

Minor Manager.

1224. The same rule applies where an ancestral trade descends upon a minor as the sole member of the family and the ancestral trade is carried on under the minor's natural guardian for the benefit of the minor. The minor will be bound by all the acts of the guardian necessarily incidental to or flowing out of the carrying out of the trade.[4] In such case, the rule that a guardian cannot bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it cannot apply.[5]

Cl. (b). Manager.

1225. In an ordinary joint family, the office of the manager is determined by his age and hereditary rights and not necessary by his competency. In a trading family, such a course, if permitted, might lead to disastrous results. Consequently, it is settled that the manager of a trading family may be such person as the family appoints or holds out as its accredited representative.[6] He need not be the conventional karta of the Hindu household. It may be that such karta may regulate the internal management of his household but in its trade relations with the outside world, the manager might be quite a different person. This is a question of fact to be decided upon the facts of each case.

Cl. (c). His Powers.

1226. Such manager has all the powers necessary for the purpose of carrying on a family trade. But he must professedly act in that capacity. Where he borrows money on promissory notes, executed in his own name, and not in the name of the firm, there is no presumption that the borrowing was for

---

(1) Pahalwan Singh v. Jiwan Das, 42 A. 109.

(2) Sakhrabhai v. Maganlal, 26 B. 206 (213, 214, 219) F.B.; explaining Sham Sundar v. Achhan Kunwar, 21 A. 471 P.C.; Lala Amarnath v. Rani Achan Kuar, 14 A. 420 (428, 429) P.C.

(3) See Ch. on "widow's estate."

(4) Rampratab v. Foolibai, 20 B. 767; Jhilibai v. Tejmal, 13 N. 109.

(5) Ibid.

(6) Ramsebuk v. Ramlal, 6 C. 815; Ramgopal v. Luchminarain, (1937) C. 396.

the purpose of joint family business and the lender must prove that the money was required for the family business.[1] When, therefore, the manager of a family firm mortgaged certain family properties by a mortgage deed, which showed that the debt was to be recovered from him personally, from all kinds of goods and property belonging to him, but the manager signed the mortgage as owner of the firm, in a suit by the mortgagee against the manager and his minor coparceners, it was held that the mortgage did not bind the undivided property of the family and nothing could pass beyond the property specifically mortgaged.[2] It was further held (it is submitted wrongly) that even as regards the mortgaged property, the interest of the minors therein was not liable for the debt unless the plaintiff proved that when he lent the money, he reasonably believed that it was required for the family business. That this is by no means necessary was decided by the same court in a later case in which it was held that a minor was liable to the extent of his share in the firm on bills or notes drawn by the manager in the name of the firm, but in fraud of it, and for purposes unconnected with it.[3] In so holding, Chandavarkar, J., said: "In carrying on such a trade, infant members of the undivided family will be bound by all acts of the manager (or the adult member acting as the manager) which are necessarily incidental to or flowing out of the carrying on of that trade. . . . The power of a manager to carry on a family trade necessarily implies a power to pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purpose of the trade."[4] So Sausse, C.J., observed in another case: "Third parties in the ordinary course of bona fide trade dealings, should not be held bound to investigate the status of the family, whilst dealing with him on the credit of the family property."[5]

1227. But of course the family firm is only liable for the debts incurred by the manager acting for the family. It will not be liable for the manager's debts, incurred under circumstances which would not bind any other partnership. Consequently, while the firm is liable for all acts done by the manager in the ordinary course of his duties and within the scope of his authority, it cannot be held liable for a fraud committed by the manager outside the scope of his authority and wholly unconnected with his business.[6] As Wiles, J., observed: "With respect to the question whether a principal is answerable for the act of his agent in the course of his master's business and for his master's benefit, no sensible distinction can be drawn between the case of fraud and the case of any other wrong. The general rule is, that the master is answerable for every such wrong of his servant or agent as is committed in the course of his service

---

(1) Abdul Majid v. Saraswati, (1934) P.C. 4.

(2) Nathabai v. Ranchoddas, (1893) B. P.J. 297; Khasidar v. Dayakishan, 18 A. L.J. 937: 58 I.C. 765.

(3) Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72.

(4) Ib., In Vithal v. Shivappa, 47 B. 637 (641), Macleod, C.J., thought Chandavarkar, J.'s statement as to the liability of minors on a negotiable instrument executed by the manager "far too wide" though he justified the judgment on the facts of the case. Krishnanand v. Rajaram, 20 A.L.J. 233: 66 I.C. 150.

(5) Ramlal v. Lakmichand, 1 B.H.C. R. (App.) 51. To the same effect Johurra v. Sri Gopal, 1 C. 470 (475); Sakrabai v. Maganlal, 26 B. 206; Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal, 8 L. 597 P.C.; Kishen Pershad v. Har Narain, 33 A. 272 P.C.; Lakshmichand v. Khushaldas, 18 S.L.R. 230: 88 I.C. 116: (1925) S. 330.

(6) Morrison v. Verschoyle, 6 C.W.N. 429.

and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master be proved."[1]

Cl. (d). He may Pledge the Family Credit.

1228. As such, the manager may pledge the credit of joint family to its uttermost and it is immaterial that there are minor[2] and widow[3] to be maintained. Neither the one nor the other has any precedence over his trade debts which may be realized out of the family assets without reference to the doctrine of necessity or benefit in the one case, and of the duty of maintenance and residence in the other. As Sausse, C.J., put it: "Were such a power not implied, property in a family trade, which is recognized by the Hindu Law to be a valuable inheritance, would become practically valueless to the other members of an undivided family wherever an infant was concerned. For no one would deal with a manager if the minor were to be at liberty, on coming of age, to challenge as against third parties, trade transactions which took place during his minority."[4]

1229. But, of course, the debts must be debts, incurred by the manager, for his firm and ostensibly for its benefit, though the creditor cannot be called upon to prove it,[5] since there is no presumption that money borrowed by the manager on a promissory note, executed in his own name, is on behalf of the family, or for the purposes of the joint family business, which the creditor is bound to prove.[6]

1230. The family is not liable for losses incurred by the manager in a speculative business of his own. His powers are to carry on the ancestral trade of the family and not to embark upon speculative transactions unconnected with the family and entainling great risk.[7] So where the manager borrowed money on a promissory note for the business of a toddy shop, carried on by him as agent of a third party, for which he was paid a fixed monthly salary, it was held, that the mere fact that the family may have benefited by the monthly salary allowed to the manager, or that the loan enabled the agency of the manager to continue, did not make it a loan for the benefit of the family so as to make the members of the family liable.[8] The debt here was not incurred even professedly for the family, nor was the toddy shop a family business. If however, in such a case the manager had professed to borrow for the family and misapplied the proceeds to his toddy business, then the result would have been different.[9] But of course, where a person acts as a manager of two firms, it is upon persons dealing with him to ascertain for which firm he was at the moment acting. And while, under the Hindu Law, it is open to the members of a

---

(1) Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank, L.R. 2 Exch. 259.

(2) Shri Thakur Ramkrishna v. Ratanchand, 53 A. 190 (205) P.C.; Joykisto v. Nityanund, 3 C. 738; Sheo Pershad v. Saheblal, 20 C. 453; Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal, 8 L. 597 P.C.

(3) Johurra v. Sree Gopal, 1 C. 470; Bishni v. U. Hamchand, (1935) L. 533.

(4) Ramlal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B.H.C. R. (App.) 15; Morrison v. Verschoyle, 6 C.W.N. 429 (458).

(5) Mahabir v. Amla Prasad, 46 A. 364; Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal, 8 L. 597 (603) P.C.; Abdul Majid v. Saraswati, 61 I.A. 90: (1934) P.C. 4.

(6) Mahabir v. Amla Prasad, 46 A. 364.

(7) Benares Bank v. Hari Narain, 54 A. 564 P.C.; Morrison v. Verschoyle, 6 C.W.N. 429; Ramnath v. Chiranji Lal, 57 A. 605, F.B.

(8) Pullukavandy v. Periyakaruppa, 2 I.C. (M.) 203.

(9) Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72.

family to claim under certain circumstances the benefits arising from a business carried on by one of the members, still, until this is done, or until the business is in some way adopted as an asset of the family, no liability can be imposed on the other members for the debts of the business.[1]

Cl. (e). Not Accountable for Past Profits.

1231. The manager of a family firm is not accountable to the family for past profits and losses[2] though he would so in a case of pure partnership.[3] The reason of this rule is that a joint family still remains a joint family and in its internal management the rights and liabilities of the members remain unaffected by reason of the fact that it carries on a family trade. As there is ordinarily, no right to call for past accounts in a joint family inter se, so the right of the members is not enlarged by the nature of the business of the family.

Cl. (f). Major and Minor Members Equally Liable.

1232. On the other hand, from the very nature of the business, there can be no discrimination between the adult and minor members of the family. They share alike the profits and bear alike the losses incident to the joint trade not to the extent of their share in the business but to the extent of their share in the whole family property including the assets of the business.[4]

Transactions incidental to Business.

1233. The question then arises: What are the actual necessities of the case and by what tests are they to be decided? It was admitted that "it is not easy to draw a well defined line between what is, and what is not incidental to the carrying on of a trade."[5] In the case from which these extracts are quoted, the surviving partners of a firm, in the absence of a representative of a deceased partner, had adjusted the partnership accounts and had agreed to hand over a portion of the partnership property to one of the partners in compromise of his claim. The property so delivered was ancestral, and the court held that the transfer of partnership property was not an act necessarily incidental to the carrying on of a trade but should be left to be governed by the law applicable to the ordinary dealings with the manager of an undivided family when the interests of an infant memfiber are concerned.[6]

Bound by Manager's Fraud.

1234. Apart, however, from such re-adjustment of rights and liabilities inter se, no member of a trading firm, whether adult or minor, can repudiate a debt incurred by the manager, acting on behalf of the firm, even though it be done with intent to defraud it. It was so held in a case in which the manager of a coparcenary trading firm of a joint Hindu family had signed some promissory notes in the name of his ancestral firm to accommodate his friend with funds without consulting his munim and without any advantage to his own firm. In short, he saddled upon his firm a gratuitous liability from which the firm could gain nothing

(1) Macleod v. Manikchand, 3 Bom.L.R. 144.

(2) Ganpat v. Annaji, 23 B. 144.

(3) S. 13 (e), Partnership Act (IX of 1932).

(4) Ramlal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B.H.C. R. (App.) 51; Samalbai v. Someshur, 5 B. 38; Rampartab v. Foolibai, 20 B. 767 (778, 779); Sakrabai v. Maganlal, 25 B. 206 (and cases there cited); Topanmal v. Menghomal, 4 S.L.R. 260: 10 I.C. 978; Morrison v. Verschoyle, 6 C.W.N. 420; Thamanna v. Akarapu, 38 M.L.J. 55: 55 I.C. 64.

(5) Ramlal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B.H.C. R. (App.) 51 (62), followed in Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72.

(6) Ibid.

and still it was held that the firm was liable, though as regards the minor, his liability was restricted to the extent of his share.[1] A similar question arose in Madras when it was further pointed out that the liability must be restricted to the minor's share in the business but could not be extended to his other property.[2] As was observed in another case: "As regards the other property in the hands of a coparcener, no other coparcener, whether he be the manager or not, has any title whatever. The legal individuality of a coparcener is not merged in the manager so far as the coparcener's self-acquired or other separate property is concerned."[3] Of course, the case would have been different, if in such a case, the manager had himself defrauded the firm, as where he had entered into a transaction with himself with intent to defraud the firm, of which he was a member.[4]

1235. In the cases decided under the old Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 there was a conflict of views as to who were necessary or proper plaintiffs in a suit instituted on behalf of a trading partnership. In some cases, the managing partner was held competent to sue,[5] while in others his competency was questioned.[6] The subject has now been much simplified by the addition of O. XXX in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, which prescribes a special procedure for the institution of such suits. The right of suit would now seem to be subject to the following[7] rules: (i) a person who enters into a contract in his own personal name is entitled to sue alone.[8] (ii) where it is entered into the name of a trading firm, all members must ordinarily join, but (iii) where such firm is a joint family, then the rule of Hindu Law permits the manager to sue in his representative capacity on behalf of the family as regards its property.[9]

Cannot Start New Business, when a Family Business.

1236. It has already been stated that while the manager, as such, is entitled to carry on an ancestral family business, he cannot start a new business. If he wishes to start one, he can only do so with the consent,[10] or at least acquiescence,[11] of the adult coparceners. But even then his liability to the minor members remains. If the venture was successful, it will stand supported on the ground of

(1) Raghunathji v. Bank of Bambay, 34 B. 72; Jai Narain v. Prag Narain, 85 I.C. 2: 29 C.W.N. 755: (1925) P.C. 11; Jhiti Bai v. Tejmal, 13 N. 109.

(2) Sanka v. Bank of Burmah, 21 M.L.J. 620: 11 I.C. 79; Johurra v. Sree Gopal, 1 C. 470; Joykisto v. Nittyanund, 3 C. 738; Chalamayya v. Varadayya, 22 M. 167; Bishambhar v. Fateh Lal, 29 A. 176 (183); Chalamayya v. Varadayya, 22 M. 166.

(3) Chalamayya v. Varadayya, 22 M. 166 (168).

(4) Sanka v. Bank of Burmah, 21 M.L.J. 620: 11 I.C. 79.

(5) Lutchmanen v. Siva Prakasa, 26 C. 349; Gansavani v. Narayan, 7 B. 467; Jagabhai v. Vijbhukandas, 11 B. 37 (41); Hari v. Gokuldas, 12 B. 158; Guruvayya v. Dattatraya, 28 B. 11 (19); Kashinath v. Chimnaji, 30 B. 477 (486).

(6) Kalidos v. Nathu, 7 B. 217; Balkrishna v. Municipality of Mahad, 10 B. 32; Imamuddin v. Liladhar, 14 A. 524; Shamrathisingh v. Kishen Pershad, 29 A. 311; Damodhar Doss v. Vishen Doss, 4 S.L.R. 2: 7 I.C. 584; Kottusheri v. Vallotil, 3 M. 234; Alagappa v. Vellion, 18 M. 33; Angamuthu v. Kolandavelu, 23 M. 190; Seshan v. Veera, 32 M. 284; Ramsebuk v. Ramlal, 6 C. 815.

(7) Kisan Prasad v. Harnarain, 33 A. 272 (278) P.C.; Jahabhai v. Bustomji, 9 B. 311; Anant Ram v. Channulal, 25 A. 378 (383); Ganput v. Balmakund, 13 I.C. (C.) 206.

(8) Damodhar Das v. Vishen Das, 4 S.L.R. 2: 7 I.C. 584 (587).

(9) Sawanmal v. Pinnumal, 2 S.L.R. 13; Rupchand v. Basanta, (1889) P.R. 102; Macleod v. Manikchand, 3 Bom.L.R. 144; Vadilal v. Sheikhushal, 27 B. 257.

(10) Tammireddi v. Gangi Reddi, 45 M. 281 (290) following Morrison v. Verschoyle, 6 C.W.N. 429; Abdur Rahman v. Hussain, 37 M.L.J. 316.

(11) Tarrireddi v. Gangi, Reddi, 45 M. 281 (290, 291); Inspector Singh v. Kharak Singh, 50 A. 776 (790); Tada Bulli v. Gangireddy, 42 M.L.J. 570.

"benefit." But if it fails, the minors may call upon the manager to bear the losses of his own enterprise if it proved too speculative and hazardous. The question in this and similar cases is not what the manager did; but whether it was justified as a prudent act of management, and consented to by the other coparceners. As the Privy Council observed: "The distinction between an ancestral business and one started like the present, after the death of the ancestor as a source of partnership relations, is patent. In the one case these relations result by operation of law from a succession on the death of an ancestor to an established business, with its benefits and obligations. In the other, they rest ultimately on the contractual arrangement between the parties."[1] (§§ 1257, 1258).

1237. Exceptional Cases.—It has already been postulated that the special rules modifying the generel law of joint family property only apply to a trading family. They have no application to cases where there is no joint family, or where only some members of the family enter into a trading partnership to the exclusion of others,[2] or in partnership with outsiders[3] which must be subject to the ordinary law of partnership. Such was held to be the case of a partnership between the uncle and his nephew who did not form members of a joint family or continue its business but had started one on their own account.[4] Of course, one or more members of a joint family may start a trading business and afterwards admit his other coparcener into the business impressing upon it the character of a joint family business.[5] Even then it would fail to be an ancestral trade to which the peculiar incidents, before set out, apply. Even where the family starts a new trade it is presumed to be with the consent of all adult coparceners who are liable to the same extent as if the trade were ancestral; the only difference being as regards the minors whose shares cannot be held liable without reference to legal necessity or benefit. Where, however, the new business has developed out[6] of the old or is on the same lines, it is scarcely distinguishable from an ancient business for which all are equally bound. Two or more groups separate for the profitable carrying on of a joint business may each pledge the family credit.[7]

Except where only certain members trade.

1238. Rules Applicable to Kutchi Memons.—The special rules and incidents applicable to Hindu family firms have been held to apply equally to Kutchi Memons who, like the Hindus, possess therein the right of survivorship and the death of a member has not the effect of dissolving the firm.[8]

139 (1) In a joint family, comprising the father and his sons, the father may alienate the family property, whether ancestral or joint, for a business, whether new or old, so as to bind the sons' interest therein, whether they be adults or minors.[9]

Father's alienation for family business.

(1) Sanyasi v. Krishnadhan, 49 C. 560 (567, 568) P.C.; Benares Bank v. Hari Narain, 54 A. 564 P.C. explained in Ram Nath v. Chiranji Lal, 57 A. 605 (610, 611) F.B.; Amraj v. Shambhu, 55 A. 1 F.B.

(2) Ram Prasad v. Rattan Chand, 10 P.L.R. 321; Sokhanadha v. Sokhanadha, 28 M. 344.

(3) Macleod v. Manickchand, 3 Bom. L.R. 144.

(4) Nihal Devi v. Kishore Chand, (1910) P.R. 97; 8 I.C. 999.

(5) Haji Noor Mahomed v. Macleod, 9 Bom.L.R. 274; Haroon Mahomed, (In re), 14 B. 189.

(6) Krishnadhan v. Sanyasi, 23 C.W.N. 500 (504).

(7) Ram Gopal v. Luchminarain, (1937) C. 396.

(8) Haroon Mahomed (In re), 14 B. 189.

(9) Achuteramayya v. Ratnajee, 49 M. 211; Venkatasami v. Palaniappa, 52 M. 227; Annabhat v. Shivappa, 52 B. 376.

(2) But an alienation of joint property by the manager for the purpose of a new business binds only him and the other adult members who have assented or acquiesced in the new business. In such case, the share of the minor coparceners are not liable unless they have ratified the act on their attaining majority.[1]

Effect of an alienation by the Manager.

140. (1) Where a business old or new is continued by the manager acting on behalf of the family, his relation with an outsider, whether an alienee partner or credit dealing with him in the ordinary course of business, being contractual, both the manager and the outsider are entitled to the same rights and are subject to the same obligations as flow from their contractual relationship.[2]

Trade in partnership with an outsider.

(2) As such, even where the manager takes in an outside partner in a family business, it does not suffice to create any contract or privity between the other members and the outsider subjecting either to any rights or obligations as flow from the relationship of partners:[3]

No privity with an outsider.

(3) As such, the relationship of the manager and the other members of the family is akin to that of a partner and the sub-partners under him, though, as such, they do not acquire any rights inter se apart from their membership of the joint family.[4]

Relation of members inter se.

(4) As such, on the death of the manager the partnership with the outsider is ipso facto dissolved; since the manager succeeding to the deceased cannot take his place and continue the partnership without the assent of the outside partner.[5]

Effect of death of the Manager.

(5) On the other hand, the outsider cannot recover from them losses out of their estate apart from their interest in the joint family.[6]

Recovery of losses.

